4. Naturally the messianic element in the NT faith in Christ and in the NT confession of Christ is inseparable from that event which, in the witness of the NT, is called the → resurrection of Jesus from the dead. Jesus' resurrection is reckoned as his resurrection as Christ/messiah (cf. Acts 2:31 with 1 Cor. 15:4, and also Rom. 1:4). It appears everywhere as something done by God to the crucified and buried Jesus (cf. Acts 2:36) and moreover as his vindication by God himself (cf. Rom. 6:7 ff.; 1 Tim. 3:16). It is fully consistent, therefore, that in Jesus' statements about his suffering, the announcement of his death is always accompanied by that of his resurrection. This is not so much intended to discredit the opponents who refused to believe him and delivered him up to death on the cross as to secure his messiahship, which seemed to be disproved by his death on the cross (cf. Lk. 24:26 with 24:19 ff.). One should not, therefore, underestimate the fact that the resurrection event, however it may be interpreted historically, has its proper place in Jesus' messiahship. The fact that the passage of the gospel into a non-Jewish environment made no difference to this is so significant, because it not only illustrates how a Christian church consisting of former Jews and former Gentiles understood itself, but in general it sheds a great deal of light on that church's relationship to history. In a formal way the church's consciousness of the special nature of its own origins in a historically unique event is here bound into a confession. This involves, however, not only the so-called Jesus of history in his unchangeable historical form. It also expresses a permanent affirmation of the spiritual heritage common to all Christians in "Old Testament" history and revelation, and at the same time decisively renounces all unhistorical religiosity and preaching. What Paul writes in Rom. 9–11 about the relation of the Christian church to Judaism presupposes a confident reliance upon the messiahship of Jesus which God has legitimated just as much as does the expectation of a new heaven and a new earth in Rev. (cf. especially 5:1 ff.; 22:16). This is linked to the risen and exalted Jesus (cf. Rev. 1:5, 18), or the certainty that the coming of the → kingdom of God is linked with Jesus as the Christ (Acts 28:31; Lk. 17:20 f.). To this extent the whole of Christian preaching, which is conceived in principle in the NT as a unity but carried out in detail in a variety of forms, has its source and its centre everywhere in the messiahship of Jesus which God has confirmed.

5. Finally, the formula Iēsous Christos leads to the question whether the linking of Jesus' name with the title of messianic dignity and honour was the work of his church, in which it expressed its eschatological faith, or whether in any way Jesus himself was responsible for it. This poses the problem of Jesus' messianic consciousness. Since it cannot be dealt with here in the necessary breadth, some few reflections may all the same lead to the indispensable minimum of conclusions which are demanded.

(a) Since historical criticism began to occupy itself with the NT Gospels and the tradition handled by the evangelists, it has always been maintained that the sources are not sufficient to confirm the statement that Jesus himself had a messianic consciousness. To support this view scholars today point not only to the kerygmatic character of even the accounts of Jesus' examination before the Sanhedrin with his confession of messiahship, but also to the fact that one of the two main synoptic sources, the so-called sayings source Q contains nothing that attributes messiahship to Jesus, With respect to both reasons, however, one must now recommend caution. On the one hand, even today Q still rests on a working hypothesis. On the other hand, there is still the need to explain how the kerygma by itself arrived at the idea of having Jesus represent himself to the Sanhedrin as the messiah if he and his disciples did not regard him as the messiah during his lifetime. All the same one should reckon with the possibility, on the evidence of the tradition that is available to us, that Jesus himself neither developed a specific messianic programme nor, and this is of the greatest importance, referred to himself in any form as messiah. According to the narrative tradition, he simply permitted people to attribute to him messianic titles like "Son of David" (Mk. 10:47 f. etc.; → Son), without adopting an attitude of agreement or of denial towards them. Furthermore, the picture of Jesus which is reflected in the tradition when critically analysed, leads us to suppose that he conformed to none of the traditional messianic descriptions. Thus he called in question by his person the attachment to himself of the current messianic expectation of a political saviour-king, by his own followers. This appears to extend to the correctness of all contemporary messianic expectations. Even an event like Peter's so-called confession at Caesarea Philippi (Matt. 16:13–23; Mk. 8:27–33; Lk. 9:18–22), accepting its historical reliability, does not take us fundamentally beyond this conclusion. It boils down to the fact that the events connected with his passion and Easter would have been bound to appear quite differently in the tradition, if at any point in time Jesus had given precise information about himself, where his messiahship was concerned. Finally one must add to the picture that has already been drawn the fact that the tradition does not allow Jesus to triumph over death and the grave as the man he was, but, in the case of his resurrection, makes him the object of a mysterious direct action on the part of God. Moreover, the tradition is never in the position to reveal this mystery, nor is it ever inclined to. The result, without abandoning oneself to an exaggerated scepticism with regard to the sources, is a fairly unanimous picture. It is described, very imperfectly and in an unbalanced fashion, by the ambiguous phrase, the messianic secret. Nevertheless, the phrase still points in a direction in which the answer to the question posed at the outset is to be found.

(b) The problem can only be properly understood, i.e. as it was in the tradition and by Jesus himself, when account is taken of the fact that Jesus' whole ministry was deliberately concentrated on his immediate surroundings and within this especially on his disciples. This means that one cannot talk of him apart from them, and in particular that one cannot ask questions about his self-consciousness, whatever form it took, without reference to them. This is all the more necessary in view of the rôle of his disciples in the things "concerning Jesus of Nazareth" (Lk. 24:19), which may not have been a very significant episode but which all the same was an episode. As the quoted passage itself suggests, the category of prophet which has recently been invoked again though with strong qualifications to help define Jesus' self-consciousness (cf. E. Käsemann, "The Problem of the Historical Jesus", Essays on New Testament Themes, 1964, 15–47), would never have sufficed to divest the history of Jesus of its episodic character, if it had stopped at his death. It cannot be mere coincidence that the tradition contains no suggestion that he himself used this category or the idea of his inspiration in connection with his own person, or that he passed it on to his followers. In the mouth of the disciples on the Emmaus road it is just as much the writer's own attempt to understand Jesus as are the other attempts in the tradition (cf. Mk. 6:14 ff. par. Matt. 14:1 f.; Lk. 9:7 f.). For its part, the tradition makes clear that as far as it is concerned the only proper attitude towards Jesus is that which the whole NT calls pistis, → faith which involves simple trust. What is really remarkable about Jesus' dealings with his disciples is that he sought right from the beginning and continually thereafter to bring them into this attitude which, because it leads of necessity to a particular kind of behaviour, contradicts any mere theory about him and indeed radically excludes it. The disciples themselves did not finally achieve this attitude or behaviour until after the Easter events. Nevertheless, it must be the person of Jesus and the impression that the disciples received from him which were responsible for the association of this attitude with the use of the category of messiah. But then we can only deal with impressions which they received from the Jesus of history during his lifetime (cf. Lk. 24:32). This must be reckoned to exclude the possibility that the situation created by Easter was appropriate for laying down the foundation of a messianic theory about Jesus. The new situation did not encourage the development of ideas but final personal decisions and corresponding actions. This could only come about if the picture of the risen Jesus and that of the earthly Jesus were not contradictory but mutually interpretative on the ground of their connection with him.

(c) The result, therefore, is that the remaining questions about Jesus' self-consciousness or self-understanding in relation to the category of messiahship must be shown from the tradition itself to be wrongly posed. The only question to ask would be about the traits in the person of Jesus which predisposed his disciples after Easter to see no alternative to formulating their faith in him in the way they did, in the context of the messianic hope of their people as it was expressed in the scriptures and the traditions. The question is all the more important as the preaching of the messiah by its reference to the office of the king of salvation, contained particular elements predisposing it to become the crystallizing point of christology. Nevertheless, this touches on a range of problems which cannot be dealt with here. Enough has been said to show that it was the mystery of the person of Jesus which was responsible for the disciples feeling themselves confronted by the question of the messiah in the earthly Jesus. On the basis of their encounters with the risen Jesus, the disciples finally answered it by the confession that he was the messiah and that in him God has fulfilled his → promise to the house of → David and to → Israel of salvation for the whole of mankind in a manner that is nevertheless only accessible to faith.

(d) Naturally the name Jesus Christ means more to Christianity than the messianic status of a certain Jesus of Nazareth, in whom God fulfilled his promises to the fathers. Every aspect of the salvation which God has intended for and bestowed upon the world is, for the whole of the NT, bound up in Jesus, in so far as he is the Christ. In Jesus as the one who is the Christ "the whole fullness of deity dwells bodily" (Col. 2:9; → Fullness) for the salvation of all those who put their trust in him and appropriate to themselves the fruit of his death and resurrection (Rom. 4:24 f.). To express this a single title like Messiah or Christ is just not sufficient. Therefore, when the NT kerygma expounds the salvation bound up in Christ, it makes use of other titles of honour which are appropriate to the particular reference. These emphasize in turn the side of his person or of his work on which the particular title depends, like → Son of God, → Lord or also our Lord, Saviour (→ Redemption, art. sōzō), mediator (→ Covenant, art. mesitēs). Nevertheless, if Christ has been transformed from a title of honour to a part of Jesus' name, this corresponds to the essential feature in his historical appearance which at the same time must be reckoned as the condition of his whole work as mediator of salvation: his obedient submission to God's will as manifested in the process of God's self-revelation in the history of the people of Israel. To this extent Jesus' affirmation of his messiahship, whether or not it was explicitly announced, is for the whole kerygma the presupposition of his path to the cross. It is equally the presupposition of his resurrection and exaltation on God's part. This element in Jesus' messiahship, central for christology, is represented nowhere in the NT as clearly and at the same time as comprehensively as in the christological hymn which Paul introduced into his letter to the Philippians (Phil. 2:5 ff.; → Empty, art. kenos). Here he describes Jesus' path via the incarnation, the life of obedience and the death of obedience on the cross to the resurrection and to exaltation at God's side as the path of Christ Jesus, i.e. of that messiah who is identical with Jesus of Nazareth.

K. H. Rengstorf

Χριστιανός — Χριστιανός (Christianos), Christian.

The identification of the messiah with Jesus of Nazareth brought the disciples the name Christianoi. Compared with other names for the followers of Jesus, like disciple or believer, the word is quite rare in the NT. By its whole formation it is a word which defines the one to whom it is applied as belonging to the party of a certain Christos, very much as Hērōdianos is a technical term for the followers of Herod (Mk. 3:6; 12:13; Matt. 22:16). Its use also presupposes that for the Gk. environment of developing Christianity christos had taken on the meaning of a proper name, a process which would have been facilitated by the resemblance to the name Chrēstos, pronounced Christos. According to Acts 11:26, Christianos was first used for Christians in Syrian Antioch. This passage, like the two others in which the word occurs in the NT (Acts 26:28; 1 Pet. 4:16), leads us to suppose that, being applied to Christians by outsiders, it contained an element of ridicule and that in this it did not differ from the description Nazarēnos or Nazōraios (see above). Like it and like many other names formed in the same way, it soon clearly became a name which those called by it felt honoured to bear. K. H. Rengstorf

→ Anoint, → Birth, → Confess, → God, → Present, → Proclamation, → Resurrection, → Son, → Spirit, → War, Revolution

On Jesus and the Quest of the Historical Jesus:
(a). P. Althaus, The So-Called Kerygma and the Historical Jesus, 1959; C. C. Anderson, Critical Quests of Jesus, 1969; and The Historical Jesus: A Continuing Quest, 1972; H. Anderson, Jesus and Christian Origins, 1964; C. K. Barrett, Jesus and the Gospel Tradition, 1967; H.-W. Bartsch, ed., Kerygma and Myth: A Theological Debate, Volumes I and II combined with enlarged Bibliography, 1972; F. W. Beare, The Earliest Records of Jesus, 1962; G. K. A. Bell, and A. Deissmann, eds., Mysterium Christi: Christological Studies by British and German Theologians, 1930, see especially Deissmann's essay on "The Name 'Jesus' ", 3–30; E. Best, The Temptation and the Passion: The Markan Soteriology, Society for New Testament Studies Monograph Series 2, 1965; G. Bornkamm, Jesus of Nazareth, 1960; J. Bowker, Jesus and the Pharisees, 1973; C. E. Braaten and R. A. Harrisville, eds., The Historical Jesus and the Kerygmatic Christ: Essays on the New Quest of the Historical Jesus, 1964; S. G. F. Brandon, Jesus and the Zealots, 1967; C. Brown, Jesus in European Protestant Theology 1778–1860: A Study of Trends in Theological Method, (Dissertation, Bristol) 1969; R. E. Brown, "The Problem of the Virginal Conception of Jesus", Theological Studies, 33, 1972, 3–34 (reprinted in The Virginal Conception & Bodily Resurrection of Jesus, 1973); F. F. Bruce, "History and the Gospel", Faith and Thought 93, 1964, 121–45; New Testament History, 1969; Jesus and Christian Origins outside the New Testament, 1974; and "Myth and History", in C. Brown, ed., History, Criticism and Faith: Four Exploratory Studies, 1976, 79–100; R. Bultmann, Jesus and the Word, 1934; and Jesus Christ and Mythology, 1958; H. J. Cadbury, The Peril of Modernizing Jesus, 1937; E. C. Colwell, Jesus and the Gospel, 1963; H. Conzelmann, Jesus: The classic article from RGG^{3} expanded and updated, 1973; O. Cullmann, Jesus and the Revolutionaries, 1970; G. Dalman, Jesus-Jeshua, 1929; and The Words of Jesus, Considered in the Light of Post-Biblical Jewish Writings and the Aramaic Language, 1902; H. Daniel-Rops, Jesus in his Time, 1955; M. Dibelius, Jesus, 1949; C. H. Dodd, History and the Gospel, 1938; The Founder of Christianity, 1970; and "The Portrait of Jesus in John and the Synoptics", in W. R. Farmer, C. F. D. Moule, and R. R. Niebuhr, eds., Christian History and Interpretation: Studies Presented to John Knox, 1967, 183–98; F. G. Downing, The Church and Jesus: A Study in History, Philosophy and Theology, 1968; J. D. G. Dunn, "Jesus – Flesh and Spirit: An Exposition of Romans I. 3–4", JTS New Series 24, 1973, 40–68; "The Messianic Secret in Mark", TB 21, 1970, 92–117; and Jesus and the Spirit, 1975; G. Ebeling, "Jesus and Faith" and "The Question of the Historical Jesus and the Problem of Christology", Word and Faith, 1963, 201–46 and 288–304; A. Edersheim, The Life and Times of Jesus the Messiah, I–II, 1881; W. R. Farmer, The Synoptic Problem: A Critical Analysis, 1964; and "An Historical Essay on the Humanity of Jesus Christ", in W. R. Farmer, C. F. D. Moule and R. R. Niebuhr, eds., op. cit. 101–26; W. Foerster, Iēsous, TDNT III 284–93; R. T. France, "The Authenticity of the Sayings of Jesus", in C. Brown, ed., op. cit.; and Jesus and the Old Testament, 1971; J. W. Fraser, Jesus and Paul: Paul as Interpreter of Jesus from Harnack to Kümmel 1974; E. Fuchs, Studies of the Historical Jesus, 1964; R. H. Fuller, The Mission and Achievement of Jesus, 1954; E. J. Goodspeed, A Life of Jesus, 1967; L. Goppelt, Jesus, Paul and Judaism: An Introduction to New Testament Theology, 1964; R. M. Grant, The Earliest Lives of Jesus, 1961; J. J. Gunther, "The Family of Jesus", EQ 46, 1974, 25–41; D. Guthrie, Jesus the Messiah, 1972; and "Jesus Christ", ZPEB III 497–583; C. Gore, Jesus of Nazareth, 1929; B. Gustafsson, "The Oldest Graffiti in the History of the Church?" NTS 3, 1956–57, 65–69; F. Hahn, Mission in the New Testament, 1963; A. C. Headlam, The Life and Teaching of Jesus the Christ, 1923; C. F. H. Henry, ed., Jesus of Nazareth: Saviour and Lord, 1966; A. J. B. Higgins, Jesus and the Son of Man, 1964; and The Tradition about Jesus, 1969; M. D. Hooker, "Christology and Methodology", NTS 17, 1970–71, 480–87; A. M. Hunter, Interpreting the New Testament, 1900–1950, 1951; and The Work and Words of Jesus, 1954; J. Jeremias, The Unknown Sayings of Jesus, 1957; and New Testament Theology, I, The Proclamation of Jesus, 1971; J. Jocz, The Jewish People and Jesus Christ, 1951^{2}; M. Kähler, The So-called Historical Jesus and the Historic Biblical Christ, 1964; E. Käsemann, "The Problem of the Historical Jesus", Essays on New Testament Themes, 1964, 15–47; L. E. Keck, A Future for the Historical Jesus, 1972; J. N. D. Kelly, Early Christian Creeds, 1972^{3}; and Early Christian Doctrines, 1968^{4}; J. Klausner, Jesus of Nazareth, 1929; W. G. Kümmel, The New Testament: The History of the Investigation of its Problems, 1973; G. E. Ladd, A Theology of the New Testament, 1975, 13–309; X. Léon-Dufour, The Gospels and the Jesus of History, 1968; H. K. McArthur, ed., In Search of the Historical Jesus, 1970; H. Z. Maccoby, "Jesus and Barabbas", NTS 16, 1969–70, 55–60; C. C. McCown, The Search for the Real Jesus, A Century of Historical Study, 1940; H. D. A. Major, T. W. Manson and C. J. Wright, The Mission and Message of Jesus: An Exposition of the Gospels in the Light of Modern Research, 1937; T. W. Manson, The Teaching of Jesus, 1935^{2}; The Sayings of Jesus, 1950; The Servant-Messiah, 1953; "Materials for a Life of Jesus", Studies in the Gospels and Epistles, edited by M. Black, 1962, 3–145; and "The Life of Jesus; some tendencies in present-day research", in W. D. Davies and D. Daube eds., The Background of the New Testament and its Eschatology. In Honour of Charles Harold Dodd, 1956, 211–21; C. F. D. Moule, "Jesus in New Testament Kerygma", in O. Böcher and K. Haacker, eds., Verborum Veritas: Festschrift für Gustav Stählin, 1970, 15–26; F. Mussner, The Historical Jesus in the Gospel of St. John, 1967; S. Neill, The Interpretation of the New Testament, 1861–1961, 1964; R. C. Nevius, "The Use of the Definite Article with 'Jesus' in the Fourth Gospel", NTS 12, 1965–66, 81–5; G. Ogg, The Chronology of the Public Ministry of Jesus, 1940; G. Parrinder, Jesus in the Qur'an, 1965; N. Perrin, Rediscovering the Teaching of Jesus, 1967; J. Peter, Finding the Historical Jesus, 1965; J. Reumann, Jesus in the Church's Gospels: Modern Scholarship and the Earliest Sources, 1970; N. H. Ridderbos, Paul and Jesus, 1958; H. Riesenfeld, "The Gospel Tradition and its Beginnings", in The Gospels Reconsidered. A Selection of Papers read at the International Congress on the Four Gospels in 1957, 1960, 131–53 (reprinted in The Gospel Tradition, 1971); J. M. Robinson, The Problem of History in Mark, 1957; and The New Quest of the Historical Jesus, 1959; J. Rohde, Rediscovering the Teaching of the Evangelists, 1968; W. Sanday, Outlines of the Life of Christ, 1905; and The Life of Christ in Recent Research, 1907; F. Schleiermacher, The Life of Jesus, (1832) 1975; U. J. Schultz, ed., Jesus in His Time, 1971; A. Schweitzer, The Quest of the Historical Jesus: A Critical Study of its Progress from Reimarus to Wrede, 1954[3]; and The Psychiatric Study of Jesus, 1968; E. Schweizer, "Mark's Contribution to the Quest of the Historical Jesus", NTS 10, 1963–64, 421–32; and Jesus, 1971; G. N. Stanton, Jesus of Nazareth in New Testament Preaching, 1974; E. Stauffer, Jesus and his Story, 1960; N. B. Stonehouse, Origins of the Synoptic Gospels: Some Basic Questions, 1964; D. F. Strauss, The Life of Jesus Critically Examined (ET 1846), ed., P. C. Hodgson, 1973; E. L. Sukenik, "The Earliest Records of Christianity", American Journal of Archaeology, 51, 1947, 351–65; cf. with J. P. Kane, "By No means 'The Earliest Records of Christianity' ", Palestine Exploration Quarterly, 103, 1971, 103–8; E. F. Sutcliffe, A Two Year Public Ministry, 1938; E. Trocmé, Jesus and his Contemporaries, 1973; F. T. Trotter, ed., Jesus and the Historian. Written in Honour of Ernst Cadman Colwell, 1968; V. Taylor, The Names of Jesus, 1953; The Life and Ministry of Jesus, 1954; and "Does the New Testament Call Jesus 'God'?", New Testament Essays, 1970, 83–89; H. E. W. Turner, Jesus Master and Lord, 1953; and Jesus the Christ, 1976; G. Vermes, Jesus the Jew, 1973; A. Vögtle, "Jesus Christ", EBT II 419–37; A. W. Wainwright, "The Confession 'Jesus is God' in the New Testament", SJT 10, 1957, 274–99; H. G. Wood, Jesus in the Twentieth Century, 1960; W. Wrede, The Messianic Secret, ET 1971; H. Zahrnt, The Historical Jesus, 1963.

(b). H.-W. Bartsch, "Theologie und Geschichte in der Überlieferung vom Leben Jesu" EvTh 32, 128 ff.; W. Beilner, Christus und die Pharisäer 1959; P. Biehl, "Zur Frage nach dem historischen Jesus", ThR Neue Folge 24, 1956–57, 54 ff.; J. Blank, Jesus von Nazareth, 1972; F.-M. Braun, Jesus Christus in Geschichte und Kritik, 1950; H. Braun, Jesus, Themen der Theologie 1, 1970; F. Büchsel, Jesus, 1947; M. Craveri, Das Leben des Jesus von Nazareth, 1970; N. A. Dahl, "Der historische Jesus als geschichtswissenschaftliches und theologisches Problem", KuD 1, 1955, 104 ff., E. Fuchs, Jesus. Wort und Tat, 1970; J. R. Geiselmann, "Der Glaube an Jesus Christus: Mythos oder Geschichte", ThR 126, 1946, 257–77 and 418–39, H. Gollwitzer, "Zur Frage der 'Sündlosigkeit Jesu' ", EvTh 31, 1971, 496 ff.; E. Grässer, A. Strobel, R. C. Tannehill, W. Eltester, Jesus in Nazareth, BZNW 40, 1972; W. Grundmann, Die Geschichte Jesu Christi, 1957; E. Haenchen, "Vom Wandel des Jesusbildes in der frühen Gemeinde" in O. Böcher and K. Haacker, eds., op. cit., 3–14; E. Jüngel, Paulus und Jesus, Hermeneutische Untersuchungen zur Theologie 2, 1962; K. Kertelge, Rückfrage nach Jesus: Zur Methodik und Bedeutung der Frage nach dem historischen Jesus, 1974; H. W. Kuhn, "Der irdische Jesus bei Paulus als traditionsgeschichtliches und theologisches Problem", ZTK 67, 1970, 295 ff.; W. G. Kümmel, "Jesusforschung seit 1950", ThR Neue Folge 31, 1966, 15 ff. and 289 ff.; O. Kuss, " 'Bruder Jesus'. Zur 'Heimholung' des Jesus von Nazareth in das Judentum", Münchener theologische Zeitschrift 23, 1972, 284 ff.; F. Lentzen-Deis, "Der Glaube Jesu", Trierer Theologische Zeitschrift 80, 1971, 141 ff.; E. Lohse, "Die Frage nach dem historischen Jesus in der gegenwärtigen neutestamentlichen Forschung", TLZ 87, 1962, 162–74; and Die Geschichte des Leidens und Sterbens Jesus Christi, 1964; T. Lorenzmeier, "Wider das Dogma von der Sündlosigkeit Jesu", EvTh 31, 1971, 452 ff.; M. Machoveč, Jesus für Atheisten, 1972; W. Marxsen, "Zur Frage nach dem historischen Jesus", TLZ 87, 1962, 575–80; K. Niederwimmer, Jesus, 1968; B. Rigaux, "L'Historicité de Jésus devant l'exégèse récente", RB 65, 1958, 481–522; J. Roloff, Das Kerygma und der irdische Jesus, 1970; and "Auf der Suche nach einem neuen Jesusbild", TLZ 98, 1973, 561 ff.; F. J. Schierse, ed., Jesus von Nazareth, 1972; R. Schippers, Jezus Christus in het historisch Onderzoek, 1969; G. Schneider, Die Frage nach Jesus, 1971; J. Schneider, "Der Beitrag der Urgemeinde zur Jesus-Überlieferung im Lichte der neuesten Forschung", TLZ 87, 1962, 401 ff.; F. Schnider, Jesus der Prophet, 1975; H. Schürmann, Das Geheimnis Jesus, 1972; E. Sjöberg, Der verborgene Menschensohn in den Evangelien, 1955; A. Schweitzer, Geschichte der Leben-Jesu-Forschung, 1951[6] (fuller than ET The Quest of the Historical Jesus); W. Trilling, Fragen zur Geschichtlichkeit Jesu, 1967[2]; A. Vögtle, "Jesus Christus", LTK V 619–53; and "Exegetische Erwägungen zum Wissen und Selbstbewusstsein Jesu", Gott in Welt, II, 1964, 608–66.

On Nazarene and Nazareth:
(a). W. F. Albright, "The Names 'Nazareth' and 'Nazoraean' ", JBL 45, 1946, 397 ff.; M. Black, An Aramaic Aproach to the Gospels and Acts, 1967[3], 197 ff.; The Scrolls and Christian Origins: Studies in the Jewish Background of the New Testament, 1961, 70 ff.; F. F. Bruce, Commentary on the Book of Acts, NLC 1954, 69 f., 465; E. Grässer, "Jesus in Nazareth (Mark VI. 1–6a): Notes on the Redaction and Theology of St Mark", NTS 16, 1969–70, 1–23; R. H. Gundry, The Use of the Old Testament in St Matthew's Gospel, 1967, 97–104; D. Hill, The Gospel of Matthew, 1972, 86 ff.; C. Kopp, The Holy Places of the Gospels, 1963, 49–86; B. Lindars, New Testament Apologetic, 1961, 195 f.; G. F. Moore, "Nazarene and Nazareth", in F. J. Foakes Jackson and K. Lake, eds., The Beginnings of Christianity, I, 1920, 426–32; W. O. E. Oesterley, "Nazarene and Nazareth", ExpT 52, 1940–41, 410 ff.; H. H. Schaeder, Nazarēnos, Nazōraios, TDNT IV 874–79; K. Stendahl, The School of St. Matthew and its Use of the Old Testament, 1969[2], 103 f., 198 ff.
(b). P. Benoit, L'Évangile selon Saint Matthieu, 1961, 46; P. Bonnard, L'Évangile selon Saint Matthieu, 1963, 30; B. Gärtner, Die rätselhaften Termini Nazoräer und Iskariot, 1957; E. Lohmeyer, Galiläa und Jerusalem, FRLANT 52, 1936; E. Schweizer, "Er wird Nazoräer heissen", Neotestamentica: Deutsche und englische Aufsätze 1951–63, 1963, 51–55; R. Stiehl, "Aramäisch als Weltsprache" in Beiträge zur Geschichte der Alten Welt, I 1964, 74.

On Christ:
(a). J. A. Allan, "The 'In Christ' Formula in Ephesians", NTS 5, 1958–59, 54–62; A. W. Argyle, The Christ of the New Testament, 1952; D. E. Aune, "A Note on Jesus' Messianic Consciousness and 11Q Melchizedek", EQ 45, 1973, 161–65; D. M. Baillie, God was in Christ: An Essay on Incarnation and Atonement, 1961[2]; H. Berkhof, Christ the Meaning of History, 1966; G. C. Berkouwer, The Person of Christ, 1954; M. Black, "The Christological Use of the Old Testament in the New Testament", NTS 18, 1971–72, 1–14; and A Survey of Christological Thought, 1872–1972, The Croall Centenary Lecture, 1972; H. Boers, "Jesus and the Christian Faith: New Testament Christology since Bousset's Kyrios Christos", JBL 89, 1971, 451–56; D. Bonhoeffer, Christology, 1966; W. Bousset, Kyrios Christos: A History of the Belief in Christ from the Beginnings of Christianity to Irenaeus, 1970; W. H. Brownlee, "Messianic Motifs of Qumran and the New Testament", NTS 3, 1955–56, 12–30; and The Meaning of the Qumran Scrolls for the Bible, 1964; E. Brunner, The Mediator: A Study of the Central Doctrine of the Christian Faith, 1934; R. Bultmann, Theology of the New Testament, I, 1952, II, 1955; "Christ the End of the Law" and "The Christological Confession of the World Council of Churches", in Essays, 1955, 36–66 and 273–90; "On the Question of Christology", "The Significance of the Historical Jesus for the Theology of Paul", and "The Christology of the New Testament", in Faith and Understanding, 1969, 116–44, 220–46 and 262–85; R. E. Brown, Jesus God and Man: Modern Biblical Reflections, 1968; R. P. Casey, "The Earliest Christologies", JTS New Series 9, 1958, 253–77; S. Cave, The Doctrine of the Person of Christ, 1925; L. Cerfaux, Christ in the Theology of St. Paul, 1959; Concilium I, 2, 1966 (whole issue devoted to Catholic reappraisal of aspects of christology); R. G. Crawford, "Is Christ inferior to God?", EQ 1971, 43, 203–9; J. M. Creed, The Divinity of Jesus Christ: A Study in the History of Christian Doctrine since Kant, 1938; O. Cullmann, Christ and Time: The Primitive Christian Conception of Time and History, 1951; The Christology of the New Testament, 1963[2]; and Salvation in History, 1967; D. Cupitt, Christ and the Hiddenness of God, 1971; N. A. Dahl, "Christ, Creation and the Church", in W. D. Davies and D. Daube, eds., op. cit., 422–43; E. Dinkler, "Peter's Confession and the 'Satan' Saying: The Problem of Jesus' Messiahship", in J. M. Robinson, ed., The Future of Our Religious Past: Essays in Honour of Rudolf Bultmann, 1971, 169–202; R. Eisler, The Messiah Jesus and John the Baptist according to Flavius Josephus' Recently Discovered 'Capture of Jerusalem' and the Other Jewish and Christian Sources, 1931; F. V. Filson, Jesus Christ the Risen Lord, 1956; P. T. Forsyth, The Person and Place of Jesus Christ, 1909; R. T. Fortna, "Christology in the Fourth Gospel: Redaction Critical Perspectives", NTS 21, 1974–75, 489–504; H. W. Frei, The Identity of Jesus Christ: The Hermeneutical Bases of Dogmatic Theology, 1975; R. H. Fuller, The Foundations of New Testament Christology, 1965; L. Gaston, "The Messiah of Israel as Teacher of the Gentiles", Interpretation 29, 1975, 24–40; T. F. Glasson, "The Uniqueness of Christ: The New Testament Witness", EQ 43, 1971, 25–35; F. Gogarten, Christ the Crisis, 1970; A. Grillmeier, Christ in Christian Tradition, 1975²; W. Grundmann, F. Hesse, M. de Jonge, A. S. van der Woude, chriō etc., TDNT IX 493–581; F. Hahn, The Titles of Jesus in Christology, 1969; A. T. Hanson, Jesus Christ in the Old Testament, 1965; "The Reproach and Vindication of the Messiah" and "Christ the First Fruits, Christ the Tree", in Studies in Paul's Technique and Theology, 1974, 13–51 and 104–25; and Grace and Truth: A Study in the Doctrine of the Incarnation, 1975; K. Heim, Jesus the Lord: The Sovereign Authority of Jesus and Gods' Revelation in Christ, 1959; G. S. Hendry, The Gospel of the Incarnation, 1959; M. Hengel, The Son of God: The Origin of Christology and the History of Jewish-Hellenistic Religion, 1976; J. Hick, "The Christology of D. M. Baillie", SJT 11, 1958, 1–12; A. J. B. Higgins, "The Priestly Messiah", NTS 13, 1966–67, 211–39; and Jesus and the Son of Man, 1965; J. W. Jack, The Historic Christ, 1933; E. G. Jay, Son of Man, Son of God, 1965; S. Katz, "Christology – A Jewish View", SJT 24, 1971, 184–200; L. E. Keck, "Mark 3 7–12 and Mark's Christology", JBL 84, 1965, 341 ff.; J. D. Kingsbury, Matthew; Structure, Christology, and Kingdom, 1975; J. Klausner, From Jesus to Paul, 1944; and The Messianic Idea in Israel, 1956; J. Knox, The Humanity and Divinity of Christ: A Study of Pattern in Christology, 1967; W. Kramer, Christ, Lord, Son of God, 1966; W. G. Kümmel, Promise and Fulfilment: The Eschatological Message of Jesus, 1961²; E. D. La Touche, The Person of Christ in Modern Thought, 1912; B. Lindars and S. S. Smalley, Christ and Spirit in the New Testament. In Honour of Charles Francis Digby Moule, 1973; R. N. Longenecker, The Christology of Early Jewish Christianity, 1970; H. R. Mackintosh, The Doctrine of the Person of Christ, 1912; J. McIntyre, The Shape of Christology, 1966; T. W. Manson, The Servant-Messiah, 1953; W. Manson, Jesus the Messiah. The Synoptic Tradition of the Revelation of God in Christ: With Special Reference to Form-Criticism, 1943; I. H. Marshall, "The Development of Christology in the Early Church", TB 18, 1967, 77–93; and The Origins of New Testament Christology, 1976; B. A. Mastin, "A Neglected Feature of the Christology of the Fourth Gospel", NTS 22, 1975–76, 32–51; S. Mowinckel, He That Cometh, 1956; J. Obersteiner, "Messianism", EBT II 575–82; R. L. Ottley, The Doctrine of the Incarnation, 1929⁷; W. Pannenberg, Jesus – God and Man, 1968; T. H. L. Parker, ed., Essays in Christology for Karl Barth, 1956; N. Perrin, A Modern Pilgrimage in New Testament Christology, 1974; N. Pittenger, Christology Reconsidered, 1970; N. Pittenger, ed., Christ for Us Today, 1967; T. E. Pollard, Johannine Christology and the Early Church, 1970; A. E. J. Rawlinson, The New Testament Doctrine of Christ, 1926; A. E. J. Rawlinson, ed., Essays on the Trinity and Incarnation, 1928; H. M. Relton, A Study in Christology, 1917; H. Riesenfeld, "The Mythological Background of New Testament Christology", in W. D. Davies and D. Daube, eds., op. cit., 81–95; J. A. T. Robinson, Jesus and his Coming: the Emergence of a Doctrine, 1957; "The Most Primitive Christology of All?", Twelve New Testament Studies, 1962, 139–53; and The Human Face of God, 1973; L. Sabourin, The Names and Titles of Jesus: Themes of Biblical Theology, 1967; R. Schnackenburg, "The Gnostic Myth of the Redeemer and the Johannine Christology", in The Gospel according to St. John, I, 1968, 543–57; H. J. Schoeps, The Jewish-Christian Argument: A History of Theologies in Conflict, 1965; G. Scholem, The Messianic Idea in Judaism, 1971; E. Schweizer, Lordship and Discipleship, 1960; E. M. Sidebottom, The Christ of the Fourth Gospel in the Light of First-Century Thought, 1961; C. Simonson, The Christology of the Faith and Order Movement, 1972; L. B. Smedes, The Incarnation: Trends in Modern Anglican Thought, 1953; D. Sölle, Christ the Representative: An Essay in Theology after the 'Death of God', 1967; S. W. Sykes and J. P. Clayton, eds., Christ, Faith and History, 1972; V. Taylor, The Person of Christ in the New Testament Teaching, 1958; H. E. Tödt, The Son of Man in the Synoptic Tradition, 1965; W. C. van Unnik, "Jesus the Christ", NTS 8, 1961–62, 101–16; A. R. Vine, An Approach to Christology, 1948; W. Vischer, The Witness of The Old Testament to Christ, 1949; B. B. Warfield, The Lord of Glory, 1907; and The Person and Work of Christ, 1950.

(b) H. R. Balz, Methodische Probleme der neutestamentlichen Christologie, WMANT 25, 1967; H.-W. Bartsch, "Wie redete die frühe Christenheit von Jesus Christus?", KidZ 19, 1964, 58 ff.; J. Becker, "Wunder und Christologie", NTS 16, 1969–70, 130–48; K. Berger, "Zum traditionsgeschichtlichen Hintergrund christologischer Hoheitstitel", NTS 17, 1970–71, 391–425; "Die königlichen Messiastraditionen des Neuen Testaments", NTS 20, 1973–74, 1–44; and "Zum Problem der Messianität Jesu", ZTK 71, 1974, 1 ff.; O. Betz, "Die Frage nach dem messianischen Bewusstsein Jesu", NovT 6, 1963, 20 ff.; J. Blank, Krisis. Untersuchungen zur johanneischen Christologie und Eschatologie, 1964; O. Böcher, Christus Exorcista: Dämonismus und Taufe im Neuen Testament, 1972; T. Boman, Die Jesus-Überlieferung im Lichte der neuren Volkskunde, 1967; C. Burger, Jesus als Davidsohn, FRLANT 98, 1970; H. Dembowski, "Jesus Christus – Herr der Götter," EvTh 29, 1969, 572 ff.; O. Eissfeldt, "Christus", RAC II 1250 ff.; E. Fascher, "Christologie oder Theologie? Bemerkungen zu O. Cullmanns Christologie des Neuen Testaments", TLZ 87, 1962, 882–910; G. Friedrich, "Jesus Christus", BHHW II 859 ff.; J. Gnilka, "War Jesus Revolutionär?", BuL 12, 1971, 67 ff.; A. Grillmeier and H. Bacht, eds., Das Konzil von Chalkedon, I–III, 1951; E. Güttgemanns, "Christos in 1. Kor. 15, 3b – Titel oder Eigenname?", EvTh 28, 1968, 533 ff.; U. Hedinger, "Christus und die Götter Griechenlands", EvTh 30, 1970, 97 ff.; E. Haenchen, "Die frühe Christologie", ZTK 63, 1966, 145 ff.; I. Herrmann, Kyrios und Pneuma, 1961; B. van Iersel, "Der Sohn" in den synoptischen Jesusworten, Supplements to NovT 3, 1964²; J. Jeremias, "Artikelloses Christos. Zur Ursprache von 1. Kor. 15, 3b–5", ZNW 57, 1966, 211 ff.; H. Karpp, "Christennamen", RAC II 1114 ff., U. Kellermann, Messias und Gesetz, BSt 61, 1972; H. Kessler, Die theologische Bedeutung des Todes Jesus, 1971²; E. Kränkl, Jesus der Knecht Gottes, 1972; W. G. Kümmel et al., Jesus Christus: Das Christusverständnis im Wandel der Zeiten, Eine Ringvorlesung der Theologischen Fakultät der Universität Marburg, Marburger theologische Studien 1, 1963; E. Larsson, Christus als Vorbild, 1962; F. M. T. de Liagre Böhl et al., "Messias", *RGG*³ IV 900 ff.; G Lindeskog, "Christuskerygma und Jesustradition", NovT 5, 1962, 144–56; E. Lohmeyer, Gottesknecht und Davidssohn, FRLANT 61, 1953²; R. Maddox, "Methodenfragen in der Menschensohnforschung", EvTh 32, 1972, 143 ff.; H. J. Margull, "Tod Jesu und Schmerz Gottes", in Leben angesichts des Todes. H. Thielicke zum 60. Geburtstag, 1968; W. Marxsen, Anfangsprobleme der Christologie, 1960; C. Maurer, "Das Messiasgeheimnis des Markusevangeliums", NTS 14, 1967–68; 515–26; U. B. Müller, Messias und Menschensohn in jüdischen Apokalypsen und in der Offenbarung Johannes, Studien zum Neuen Testament 6, 1972; F. Neugebauer, "Das Paulinische 'in Christo' ", NTS 4, 1957–58, 124–38; and, Jesus der Menschensohn, AzTh 50, 1972; R. Pesch, Jesu ureigene Taten? Ein Beitrag zur Wunderfrage, Quaestiones Disputatae 52, 1970; E. Peterson, "Christianus", in Frühkirche, Judentum und Gnosis, 1959, 64 ff.; P. Pokorny, "Jesus, Glaube, Christologie", ThZ 18, 1962, 268–82; K. H. Rengstorf, Die Auferstehung Jesu, 1967⁵, 129 ff.; K. H. Rengstorf and S. von Kortzfleisch, Kirche und Synagoge, I, 1968, 23 ff.; M. Rese, Alttestamentliche Motive in der Christologie des Lukas, (Dissertation, Bonn) 1965; H. Ristow and K. Matthiae, eds., Der historische Jesus und der kerygmatische Christus, 1960; L. Ruppert, Jesus als der leidende Gerechte?, 1972; K. L. Schmidt, Jesus Christus im Zeugnis der Heiligen Schrift und der Kirche, 1936; W. Schmithals, Jesus in der Verkündigung der Kirche, 1972; N. Scholl, Jesus – nur ein Mensch? 1971; D. F. Strauss, Der Christus des Glaubens und Jesus der Geschichte, (1865) Texte zur Kirchen- und Theologiegeschichte 14, 1971; G. Strecker, "Die historische und theologische Problematik der Jesusfrage", EvTh 29, 1969, 453 ff.; K. Schubart, Der historische Jesus und der Christus unseres Glaubens, 1962; G. Sevenster, W. Pannenberg and P. Althaus, "Christologie", RGG I 1745–89; W. Thüsing, Die Erhöhung und Verherrlichkeit Jesu im Johannes-Evangelium, 1960; and Per Christum in Deum, NTAbh 1, 1968²; P. Vielhauer, "Zur Frage der christologischen Hoheitstitel", TLZ 8, 1965, 569 ff.; and "Ein Weg zur neutestamentlichen Christologie?", EvTh 25, 1965, 24 ff. (reprinted in Aufsätze zum Neuen Testament, 1965, 141 ff.); and "Erwägungen zur Christologie des Markusevangeliums" (in Aufsätze Zum Neuen Testament, 199 ff.); A. Vögtle, Messias und Gottesohn, Theologische Perspektiven, 1971; P. G. Wacker, "Christus ohne Kirche?" ThG 64, 1974, 1 ff.

Join, Cleave to

κολλάομαι

κολλάομαι (kollaomai), join, cleave to, stick to; προσκολλάομαι (proskollaomai), cleave to, stick to.

CL kollaomai, found from Pindar onwards, is a cognate of kolla, glue (Hdt. onwards) and means to glue in contrast to nailing, to join together tightly.

Literal examples are gluing a broken pot, to glue inlay work of gold and ivory, to steep barley in water, to close a wound (Galen). It is also used of the penetration of poison into a body (Hippocrates). Metaphorically it occurs in the phrase kekollētai genos pros ata, the uniting of humanity in a delusion (Aesch., Agamemnon 1566). The compound proskollaomai means to stick to.

OT 1. The LXX uses both words predominantly to render Heb. dāḇaq, cling, cleave to, and once each for nāḡa' (hiph.), nāḡaš, nāṣar, and rāḇaṣ. The basic meaning can be found in Pss. 22:15 (MT 22:16); 137:6; Job 29:10; Lam. 4:4, where the tongue cleaves to the gums for thirst. Similarly it can be said that → leprosy, pestilence or diseases cleave to a person (2 Ki. 5:27; Deut. 28:21, 60).

2. It frequently means to join someone, to cleave to him (e.g. Ruth. 2:8, 21; 2 Sam. 20:2; Pss. 101:3[MT 101:4]; 119:31; Job 41:15; 41:9; 1 Macc. 3:2; 6:21).

3. It also is used of the permanent relationship of man and woman (Gen. 2:24). As is shown by 1 Esd. 4:20 ("A man leaves his own father, who brought him up, and his own country, and cleaves to his wife"), it refers to more than the sexual union of man and wife and extends to the whole relationship. Because Solomon "clung" to foreign wives (1 Ki. 11:2) he came under their religious influence. "The man who consorts [kollōmenos] with harlots" (Sir. 19:2) comes under an influence inconsistent with wisdom.

4. The contrast is union with God. "You shall fear the Lord your God; you shall serve him and cleave to him" (Deut. 10:20; cf. 6:13; 2 Ki. 18:6; Sir. 2:3; Jer. 13:11). The stress here is on inner union with God in contrast to the cultic and legal one of the context.

NT kollaomai is found in the NT only in the pass. or mid., and follows the usage of the LXX.

1. The basic meaning is found in Lk. 10:11, "The dust . . . that clings [kollēthenta] to our feet"; cf. also Rev. 18:5 lit. "her sins cleaved to her [ekollēthēsan] high up to heaven" (cf. Jer. 51:9 [LXX 28:9]; contrast TDNT III 822).

2. The commonest usage is to join someone, to be near: the prodigal son joined himself to foreign citizens (Lk. 15:15); Philip joined the chariot of the Ethiopian (Acts 8:29); Paul tried to join the church (Acts 9:26); some who had joined Paul came to faith (Acts 17:34); though the people of Jerusalem held the Christians in high honour, no non-Christian ventured to join them (Acts 5:13); it was reprehensible for a Jew to "associate with" (kollasthai) anyone of another nation (allophylos), i.e. heathens (Acts 10:28), because they did not have the → law.

3. Matt. 19:5 and Eph. 5:31 both quote Gen. 2:24 (→ Marriage; → Divorce).

(a) Matt. 19:5: marriage is indissoluble, because in it two persons become one living being. This refers to the relationship of the partners and not merely the sexual union (contrast TDNT III 822).

(b) Eph. 5:31: Christ left his Father to be completely with his bride, the ekklēsia (→ Church) and to begin a new life with her (sarka mian, one → flesh). Just as in Ezek. 16, the husband here comes as sōtēr, saviour (Eph. 5:23). His wife – the new → people of God – is decked with imperishable riches (Eph. 5:26 f.; cf. Ezek. 16:10–13). The marriage relationship is a "great mystery" which reflects the relationship of Christ and the church (Eph. 5:32).

4. The believer's union with God necessitates that he must detest the evil and "hold fast to what is good" (Rom. 12:9). Since with his body he is a member of the → body of Christ, he cannot become one body, a human unity, with a harlot. For "he who is united with the Lord becomes one spirit with him" (1 Cor. 6:17). He should also live in this Spirit, and perfectly imitate the actions and revelation of his Lord. But if he unites himself with a harlot, he will become like her (1 Cor. 6:16). The one who has sexual relations with a harlot is not committing a purely physical act which does not touch the spirit. The whole man reveals himself in all that he does. He who unites himself to a harlot has a common existence with her. There is no purely sexual sin. The spirit of the brothel and the Spirit of Christ mutually exclude one another. H. Seebass

→ Disciple, → Discipline, → Divorce, → Marriage

E. Best, One Body in Christ, 1955; A. Isaksson, Marriage and Ministry in the New Temple, 1965, 18 ff. and passim; J. A. T. Robinson, The Body: A Study in Pauline Theology, SBT 5, 1952; J. P. Sampley, 'And the Two Shall Become One Flesh': A Study of Traditions in Ephesians 5:21–33, Society for New Testament Studies Monograph Series 16, 1971; K. L. Schmidt, kollaō, proskollaō, TDNT III 822 f.

Jonah

'Iωνᾶς

'Iωνᾶς (Iōnas), Heb. yônâh, Jonah.

The NT references to Jonah are exhausted by those passages in which Jesus alludes to him in the course of certain controversial exchanges with the Pharisees (Matt. 12:38–41; 16:4; Lk. 11:29–32). These references are both general to the career of Jonah, and particular, in that they refer to him as a → sign.

OT The Gk. sēmeion is occasionally used in LXX as equivalent to môp̄ēṯ (Exod. 11:9, 10), i.e. that which by its remarkable nature excites wonder and attracts attention; occasionally also it translates nēs, a banner, i.e. that which catches the eye. But for the most part it translates 'ôṯ, a sign. It is thus involved in two distinct meanings. On the one hand, a sign (e.g. Deut. 13:1) is something performed in order to persuade people to an immediate response; on the other hand, a sign can be offered (e.g. Exod. 3:12) as a future confirmation of the truth of some present fact. This background is clearly present in the sign element in Jesus' references to Jonah.

Four matters call for brief enquiry in the story of Jonah. First, what was the motive for his flight (Jon. 1:3 ff.)? The majority view is that he was a religious particularist and fled from the possibility of seeing Israel's privileges being shared with the heathen. It ought to be noted, however, that Jewish opinion, as reflected in the Babylonian Talmud which appoints the Book of Jonah to be read in its entirety on the Day of Atonement, thus stressed the repentance of the Ninevites as an example which the people of God were called to follow (Meg. 31a; cf. M. D. Goulder, Midrash and Lection in Matthew, 1974, 187, 334). This was the very point which Jesus sought to make. Rather than thus expose his people, Jonah risked his own life, willing to die on their behalf. It is not unworthy of note that, in quoting Exod. 34:6, 7 (Jon. 4:2), he omitted the reference to divine strictness of judgment.

Secondly, the book of Jonah records his own comment on his remarkable experience. In his prayer, the fish's belly becomes "the belly of Sheol" (Jon. 2:2; → Hell). While recognizing that Sheol is frequently metaphorical for that which is dark, threatening and likely to end in death, the use of the metaphor here, coupled with the reference to the "pit" (v. 6) must form part of the OT background to Jesus' use of the incident.

Thirdly, we must ask in what terms Jonah preached to Nineveh. All that is recorded (Jon. 3:4) is a proclamation of coming judgment. It was the force of this word, and the recognition of the divine authorization which lay behind it which implemented the response of repentance. As far as is noted, Jonah made no reference to his experience in the fish.

Fourthly, the call to repentance was heeded and God expressed his total satisfaction with this (Jon. 3:10 ff.) It was what he wanted and therefore effectively produced remission.

NT In speaking of the people of his day as "evil and adulterous" (Matt. 12:39; Lk. 11:29 agrees with ponēra [evil] but does not add moichalis [adulterous]), Jesus undoubtedly intended to set up a parallelism between them and Nineveh (Jon. 1:2): "wicked" in heart and life and "adulterous" physically and spiritually. Their spiritual vacuity is sharply underlined by the Lord in his refusal of the sign which they sought. Matt. 16:1 notes that they wished a "sign from heaven", presumably something unequivocally from God, something which would authenticate Jesus mainly because he himself had no involvement in its performance – a sign of the sort offered in Isa. 7:10. To Jesus (cf. Matt. 11:4) this was rank blindness in the face of his constant performance of his own works before their eyes. In this context he set up a threefold comparison. First, he made an open comparison between himself and Jonah (Matt. 16:4; Lk. 11:30). Especially in the former of these references he left his hearers to their own interpretative devices. In the latter, there is a significant change of tense: "as Jonah became [egeneto] . . . the Son of man shall be [estai]. . . ." That is to say, reviewing the story of Jonah, they can well see that he was a divinely sent persuader (a sign of the first category above), a watershed, a heaven-sent opportunity which came once and did not return. Even so, there will be that about the Son of man (a sign of the second category) which will, at some later point, make them aware that he too was sent from God and that in him too they reached, for good or ill, a point of no return.

Secondly, Jesus compared Jonah's experience of a three-day sojourn in the fish to his own coming sojourn "in the heart of the earth" (Matt. 12:40). This is largely rejected by commentators (IDB, McNeile, Plummer) as a typical Matthaean embellishment, pursuant to his supposed penchant for snatching Bible-fulfilments out of the air. McNeile's criticism that Jesus was not in fact three days in the tomb is more indicative of a weak case than of critical acumen. In the light of our own discussion immediately above, the question is rather to what Jesus was looking forward when he predicted a coming event in the light of which his own status as a Jonah-type sign would be clear. His resurrection from an unequivocal experience of death would be the very "sign from heaven" which once they had faithlessly sought and would not, even when it happened, be able to recognize – as Jesus full well foresaw (cf. Lk. 16:31). Matthew's record of the comparison between Jonah in a Sheol-like situation and Jesus actually "in the heart of the earth" is distinctly apt.

The third element in the sign-comparison which Jesus made is between Jonah's preaching and its result and his own preaching and its result (Matt. 12:41; Lk. 11:32). The comparison here is a fortiori. The ensuing judgment on impenitence will be greater because the one who calls to repentance is greater. In the light of the OT testimony to the status of the prophet, Jesus can here be seen as claiming the honour due to his deity, exactly as in Matt. 23:34. J. A. Motyer

→ Fish, → Miracle, → Nineveh, → Number

(a). G. Ch. Aalders, The Problem of the Book of Jonah, 1948; L. C. Allen, The Books of Joel, Obadiah, Jonah and Micah, New International Commentary on the Old Testament, 1976; R. A. Edwards, The Sign of Jonah in the Theology of the Evangelists and Q, SBT Second Series 18, 1971; and A Theology of Q: Eschatology, Prophecy and Wisdom, 1975; M. D. Goulder, Midrash and Lection in Matthew, 1974; D. Hill, The Gospel of Matthew, 1972; J. Howton, "The Sign of Jonah", SJT 15, 1962, 288–304; J. Jeremias, Iōnas, TDNT 406–10; A. Helmbold, "Jonah, Book of", ZPEB III 675–79; A. R. Johnson, "Jonah II 3–10: A Study in Cultic Phantasy", in H. H. Rowley, ed., Studies in Old Testament Prophecy Presented to Professor Theodore H. Robinson, 1950, 82–102; O. Linton, "The Demand for a Sign from Heaven (Mark. 8.11–12 and par.)", StTh 19, 1965, 112–29; A. H. McNeile, The Gospel According to St. Matthew, 1915; C. Moxon, to sēmeion Iōna, ExpT 22, 190–11, 566 ff.; W. Neil, "Jonah, Book of", IDB II 964–67; A. Plummer, An Exegetical Commentary on the Gospel according to St. Matthew, 1909; R. B. Y. Scott, "The Sign of Jonah: An Interpretation", Interpretation 24, 1970, 16–25; R. V. G. Tasker, The Gospel according to St. Matthew, 1961.

(b). O. Glombitza, "Das Zeichen des Jona (Zum Verständnis von Matthäus 12. 38–42)", NTS 8, 1961–62, 359–66.

Joy, Rejoice

There are three main groups of words in the NT which denote human joy and happiness and express its special character. In the case of chairō physical comfort and well-being are the basis of joy. Hence the use of the vb. in the good wishes which people express on greeting one another and on parting. They refer to the benefits of health and happiness which, in fact, people wish for themselves. On the other hand, euphrainō indicates the subjective feeling of joy, and agalliaomai the outward demonstration of joy and pride and the exultation experienced in public worship.

ἀγαλλιάομαι

ἀγαλλιάομαι (agalliaomai), exult, rejoice greatly, be overjoyed; ἀγαλλίασις (agalliasis), exultation, great joy.

CL agalliaomai, exult, shout for joy, rejoice greatly, and the corresponding noun agalliasis, exultation, are found only in the LXX, the NT and in Jewish and Christian writers dependent on them. They are later formations from the profane Greek agallō and agallomai (from Homer onwards) which occur with the following meanings: (a) to adorn, honour, glorify, revere (in Plato and Aristotle); (b) to make a show, boast of something (Herodotus); (c) to enjoy, experience pleasure in something (Homer); (d) to be in raptures (Herodotus). This is the basic human emotion of joy which takes possession of the whole man.

OT 1. In the LXX agalliaomai and agalliasis occur most frequently as the translation of gîl (rejoice, rejoicing) and rānan (cry in joy). They indicate the cultic festive joy, which expresses itself publicly over God's acts of salvation in the past and present (e.g. Ps. 32:11), but is not orgiastic as in the Canaanitish cults. The significance of these words soon extended beyond the sphere of public worship. agalliaomai came to express both corporate and individual attitudes of thankful joy before God (cf. Pss. 9:14; 16:9; 21:1; 31:7; 35:27; 92:4). This rejoicing not only testifies to past experiences of God's salvation; it also exults in his faithful dealings which are still future (cf. Hab. 3:18) and which the believer sees ensured by Yahweh. The keynote of public worship remains, but the rejoicing embraces even the created universe, the silent witnesses to God's mighty acts such as the heavens, the earth, the mountains, the islands, which all join in the jubilation or are called upon to do so (Pss. 19:5; 89:12; 96:11; and 97 passim). Even God himself joins in (Isa. 65:19). Under the prophets both during and after the exile, Israel's rejoicing in his God, even in wretched situations, broadened out to include anticipatory gratitude for final salvation and messianic joy (Isa. 61). It was in this eschatological direction that the Heb. attitude of thanks and praise reached its profoundest expression (cf. Pss. 96:11 ff.; 97:8; 126:2, 5; Isa. 25:9).

2. Loud, exultant rejoicing over God's acts of salvation in the past, present and the eschatological future continued to be characteristic of Rab. theology and the piety of Rab. Judaism (SB IV 2, 851 f.). The whole aim of the Jew's life was to glorify God. Jubilation thus accompanied "the dramatic history of the Jewish people like the strains of some heavenly choir, and in the liturgy became the dominant element in their religious life" (E. Stauffer, Jerusalem und Rom, 1957, 102).

3. In contrast with Rab. Judaism, the Qumran community held that the day of salvation had already begun. In praise and prayer (especially in the Hodayot [1QH] and in the concluding part of the Community Rule [1QS 10:11]) they rejoiced in God who in his mercy had granted them salvation and given them insight into his → secrets.

NT 1. In the NT agalliaomai occurs 11 times and agalliasis only 5 times (cf. chairein which occurs 74 times). The words are used as in the LXX, but with this difference. In the OT exultant rejoicing arises from gratitude and unshakeable trust in the God who has constantly helped and still is helping his people Israel. He will do away with all want and distress in his final act of deliverance at the coming of messiah. In the NT the rejoicing turns to the God who now in Jesus Christ has already inaugurated the eschatological age of salvation and will gloriously complete it on Christ's return.

(a) In the Gospels there is jubilation even before the coming of Jesus. Zechariah sang for joy when the forerunner of the Lord was born (Lk. 1:14), and even the child in Elizabeth's womb shared in the rejoicing (Lk. 1:44). Jesus spoke of devout Israelites who for a short time rejoiced in the light of John the Baptist (Jn. 5:35). In her song of praise Mary rejoiced that she had been granted a place in God's saving purpose (Lk. 1:47), while Jesus himself as the bringer of salvation not only called upon men to rejoice but joined in himself. The Beatitudes conclude with the exhortation: "Rejoice and be glad, for your reward is great in heaven" (Matt. 5:12; cf. Lk. 6:23). Jesus rejoiced in spirit because the time of salvation was at hand.

It was revealed to babes but at the same time, since it also involves judgment, it was hidden from the wise (Lk. 10:21; cf. Matt. 11:25). Even → Abraham (one of "the just men made perfect", Heb. 12:23) rejoiced that he had a part in the day of salvation (Jn. 8:56). The early → church regarded itself as the → elect of the last days because of God's saving work in Jesus Christ. It made Christ's cross, resurrection and future return the basis of its rejoicing, and thus interpreted David's joy christologically (Acts 2:26, where Peter quotes Ps. 16:10). The Philippian jailer rejoiced (ēgalliasato) with his whole family because he had come to faith and had been incorporated into the saved community of the last days through → faith and → baptism (Acts 16:34). At the cultic meal of the breaking of bread the early church sang with joy as they anticipated the parousia of the risen Christ. They observed the → Lord's Supper "in exultation [en agalliasei]" (Acts 2:47; cf. J. Jeremias, The Eucharistic Words of Jesus, 1966², 254).

(b) Paul does not use the word, but is no stranger to the idea. He expresses it partly through the vb. kauchasthai, to → boast.

(c) In the rest of the NT (with the exception of Mk. and Jas.) the word appears sporadically. In Heb. 1:9 God himself is represented as addressing Christ. He → anoints his son with the → oil of gladness [agalliasis], i.e. with consecrated oil as used at joyous feasts (cf. Ps. 45:7). In Jude 24 the church bows in praise before him "who is able to keep you from falling and present you without blemish before the presence of his glory with rejoicing [en agalliasei]" (cf. Acts 2:46). In 1 Pet. the church is called upon to look away from its sufferings in the last days, for they are insignificant in comparison with the rejoicing which will break forth at the end of time (1 Pet. 1:6, 8; 4:13). In Rev. believers are summoned by a voice at the end of time crying, "Let us rejoice and exult [chairōmen kai agalliōmen] and give him the glory (Rev. 19:7). In Matt. 5:12; Lk. 1:14; 1 Pet. 1:8; and 4:13 chairō and agalliaomai are also used together.

2. agalliasis, the festive joy which takes in the past and points to the future, thus becomes the characteristic attitude of the NT church and of the individual Christians in it. Its public worship is full of joy, as at the eschatological banquet (cf. Rev. 19:7–9). Joy is experienced through the salvation achieved by Jesus Christ in the past, personally experienced in the present, and confidently expected in the future. Looked at in this way, the → sufferings of this present time are alleviated. For even while they weigh heavily upon us we have paradoxically good reason to rejoice. Such rejoicing is grounded entirely in the person of Christ. The Lord himself, risen, present and returning, is the basis for all our joy.

E. Beyreuther

εὐφραίνω

εὐφραίνω (euphrainō), gladden, cheer (up); εὐφροσύνη (euphrosynē), joy, gladness, cheerfulness.

CL The vb. euphrainō is found in colloquial Greek from Homer onwards, and means in the active to cheer, to gladden a person; in the middle and passive to make merry. The noun euphrosynē (from Homer onwards) means merriment, joy, good cheer. Such joy stems largely from those events and situations which give rise to communal rejoicing, such as a banquet. Nevertheless, philosophers also use the word for introspective and spiritual joy.

OT In the LXX the word is used far more frequently than → chairō and is not sharply distinguished from → agalliaō. It chiefly renders words from the stem śāmaḥ (rejoice, gladden); and in Isa. more frequently words from rānan (cry in joy) and śîś (rejoice). Its use is concentrated in certain books of the OT such as Deut., the Deuteronomistic historical works, and particularly the Pss., Lam., Eccl., and Isa. (especially passages attributed to Deutero- and Trito-Isaiah). In addition it is used with remarkable frequency in Sir. The distribution is similar in the case of the noun. The word is clearly the appropriate expression for the united joy expressed at the cultic celebrations or sacrificial feasts. But the OT concept of God (→ God OT) prevents the type of ecstatic orgy, so common in heathenism, where the distinction between human and divine became blurred.

Joy can also be that of the heart of an individual, especially in response to God's help in situations of need (e.g. Ps. 13:5). Finally, euphrainō is used alongside agalliaō to express the eschatological joy in which even the heavens and the earth participate (Pss. 96:11; 97:1), God also rejoicing with them (Isa. 65:19). Joy is a feature of God's eternal world. At this point it may be observed that festive joy at the great communal feasts – the human enjoyment of eating, drinking and bodily refreshment – becomes a vivid picture of eschatological joy.

For the rest a wide diversity of usage can be found, a fact indicated by numerous Hebrew equivalents: joy as an emotion (e.g. Ps. 16:11); joy in someone or something (2 Sam. 1:26; Eccl. 11:9); joy in God (Neh. 8:10; Ps. 33:21); joy in God's word (Jer. 15:16; Ps. 119:14); joy in the keeping of the commandments (Ps. 119:162); joy in the time of salvation (Isa. 35:10; 52:12).

In the piety of Rab. Judaism joy is still of great importance. Joy in God's law now occupies a large place (cf. Pss. 19, 119). The festivals, especially Passover and the Feast of Tabernacles, are joyous occasions (→ Feast).

Joy characterizes the expected time of salvation. In Qumran, salvation is seen as already present, and there is rejoicing over God's redemptive gifts (cf. 1QM 12:13; 13:12 ff.; 17:7 f.; 1QH 11:23, 30; 18:15; CD 20:33).

Philo's piety is especially marked by euphrosynē. Taking festive joy as his starting point, he finds joy merely in seeking God (e.g. Spec.Leg. 36). God himself radiates joy by means of the Logos, especially upon all who by their virtues prove themselves worthy. Everything that belongs to God has this same characteristic: wisdom (sophia) is full of delight (chara), joy (euphrosynē) and other good things (Rer. Div. Her. 315; cf. R. Bultmann, TDNT II 773 f.).

NT In the NT the word chairō is clearly preferred as the term for joy (by contrast with its relative infrequency in the LXX). euphrainō occurs 14 times, of which no less than 8 are in the Lucan writings (cf. Luke's liking for OT phrases), 3 in Paul and 3 in Rev. euphrosynē is found twice only, in Acts. Five out of the total are OT quotations.

1. The words are clearly connected with the rejoicing to be found at a festive banquet, and this indicates the OT origins of their usage. euphrainō thus denotes in the NT the joy of the festive company, not the subjective emotion of an individual. In Lk. 12:19; 16:19 it refers to eating, drinking and enjoying oneself – in the latter instance doubtless in revelry among convivial friends. This is what man without God sees as supremely worthwhile and what material possessions are for. On the other hand, emphasis on the joy wrought by God is a peculiar feature of the Lucan writings (→ chairō NT 3). Luke's Gospel is irradiated by joy. Thus in Lk. 15:23, 32 there is an invitation to make merry over the return of the lost son, while according to Lk. 15:29 the elder son enviously desires a similar joyous feast for himself.

Acts 14:17 speaks of joy in the gifts of nature as being God's gifts in creation. Acts 2:26, 28, applying Ps. 16:8–11 to the resurrection, speaks of joy in the presence of God. On the other hand, Acts 7:41 refers to the shameless rejoicing of Israel when worshipping before the golden calf (cf. Exod. 32:4, 6).

2. Paul normally uses the vb. chairō (even in the context of 2 Cor. 2:2), but in Rom. 15:10 and Gal. 4:27 he is influenced by OT quotations. In Rom. 15:10 he sees the fulfilment of Deut. 32:43: the reason for rejoicing is that the message of Christ has now come to the Gentiles. Similarly in Gal. 4:27 the call to rejoice is applied to the → Jerusalem that is above, the church of the new → covenant composed of Jews and Gentiles.

3. Likewise in Rev. 12:12 and 18:20 which are based on OT quotations (cf. Isa. 44:23; 49:13; Jer. 51:48; Rev. 11:10 is not so based), it is eschatological rejoicing which is expressed by euphrainō. The fact that eschatological joy often appears in the NT under the figure of a joyous feast, and that Jesus himself, when on earth, does not scorn to join in the festivities of the common meal, indicates that the word euphrainō is in complete accord with the joyous message of the gospel.

E. Beyreuther

χαίρω

χαίρω (chairō), be glad, rejoice; χαρά (chara), joy.

CL chairō, to be glad, rejoice (related to the Sanskrit haryati, to take pleasure in, and the Old High German geron, to desire), and chara, joy, are attested from Homer onwards. chairein epi (also dia, en, peri) means to rejoice over someone or something. The reason for the joy is introduced with hoti (that) or appears in a participial form. The pres. imperative frequently occurs in the greeting chaire (sing.), chairete (plur.), "Hail!" At the opening of a letter in the infin. chairein, is often used in which case the vb. legei has to be supplied (cf. Funk § 480): "[. . . says] greetings!" The same formula is used in drinking a toast, "Good health!", and at parting, "Farewell!" The phrases chairein charan megalēn (be filled with intense joy) and chara chairein (rejoice greatly), which occur in the NT, doubtless go back to OT influence (Matt. 2:10; cf. Jon. 4:6; Jn. 3:29; cf. Isa. 66:10). chara denotes both the state and the object of the joy.

Also to be noted is the etymological connection with charis (grace) which has not always been clearly distinguished in meaning from chara.

OT In the LXX chara appears only in the later writings (principally Wis. and 1–4 Macc.) and is chiefly a translation of the Hebrew words śimḥâh, joy, gladness, and śāśōn, joy. It is distinguished from charis, which most frequently translates ḥēn, grace, favour. For the most part words from the stem śāmaḥ, to be glad, also gîl, rejoice and śîś, to be glad, are rendered by chairō.

There is no clear distinction between the usage of chairō and that of euphrainō, the Heb. equivalent of which is also predominantly śāmaḥ. The two words are often synonymous (Lam. 4:21; Prov. 29:6; Est. 8:17; 9:27 and passim), though Sir. 30:16 does permit a certain differentiation. Basically, euphrainō is nearer to → agalliaomai, as it also translated in words such as šîr, to sing. chairō covers both the subjective feeling and the objective cause of joy. Of all the words in this group it thus comes closest to the Heb. šālôm, → peace, salvation, and in fact is used to translate this in Isa. 48:22; 57:21 (cf. Tob. 13:14[15] charēsontai epi tē eirēnē sou "shall rejoice over thy peace"). The vb. and the noun do not often appear in the context of joy in worship (Ps. 30:11); agalliaomai and euphrainō are used almost exclusively in such passages.

1. A non-specific use as a greeting occurs particularly in 1–4 Macc. The general meaning to be glad, to be pleased, is found in e.g. Gen. 45:16; Isa. 39:2; cf. 2 Ki. 20:13.

In the OT there is no apology for joy in the good things of life, such as health (Sir. 30:16), wise children (Prov. 23:25), eating and drinking (1 Ki. 3:1; cf. Ps. 104:14 f.), peace in the land (1 Macc. 14:11; → euphrainō). But the author of Prov. also warns that joy is transitory and is threatened by the vicissitudes of life: after laughter comes weeping (Prov. 14:13).

2. God is the giver of all joy and of all → blessings (1 Ki. 8:66). He gives his gracious word (1 Ki. 8:56) which far outweighs all transitory blessings. This word comforts and strengthens in times of temptation and distress (Jer. 15:16). It enables men to endure until such time as God turns mourning into joy (Ps. 126:5). The fear of the Lord is thus a source of joy (Sir. 1:12). Consequently chairō serves also to describe eschatological joy, rejoicing over ultimate salvation and peace (Joel 2:21, 23; Isa. 66:10, 14; Zech. 10:7; Tob. 13:25 in conjunction with → agalliaomai).

3. In Rab. Judaism joy in the → law is emphasized. Reading the Pentateuch is described as the joy of the law (cf. SB IV 154; TDNT II 773 f.), or "fullness of joy" (cf. SB II 566 on Jn. 16:24). In Philo divine → wisdom is a source of joy (Rer. Div. Her. 315). God alone has pure joy; it is other-worldly, but comes to man in mystic union with him (Abr. 201–207; Spec. Leg. 2, 54 f.).

4. In Qumran joy (śimḥâh) also springs from knowledge of the truth (1QH 11:30), but here it is the knowledge of God's → election and of his → mercy towards his elect. There is a decisive contrast between present sadness in affliction and chastisement (1QH 9:24) and the joy of final victory (1QM 13:12 f.; 14:4; 18:8 and often). A banner in the final battle bears the inscription "Joy of God" (1QM 4:14), and after the victory the sons of light will be translated to glory and everlasting joy (1QH 13:6).

NT In the NT the vb. and noun occur chiefly in the Gospels and Pauline Epistles (the vb. 74 times; the noun 59 times). The writings with the most instances of chairō and chara are found as follows: 20 times in Lk.; 11 in Acts; 18 in Jn.; 12 in Matt.; 14 in Phil.; 13 in 2 Cor.; 7 in Rom.; and 6 in 1 Thess. It is no accident that the words appear particularly where there is express mention of the eschatological fulfilment in Christ, of being in him, and of hope in him. But it ought not to be overlooked that the whole NT message as the proclamation of God's saving work in Christ is a message of joy (→ Gospel).

1. The general use as a greeting needs only brief mention. chairein is used at the beginning of a letter in Acts 15:23; 23:26; Jas. 1:1 (→ Book). In 2 Jn. 10 those addressed are warned to refuse hospitality to teachers of heretical doctrine, so as to avoid all involvement in their evil deeds. In Matt. 28:9 the risen Christ makes himself known to his disciples using the familiar, everyday chairete. When in Matt. 26:49; 27:29 par. Mk. 15:18, Jn. 19:3, Jesus is saluted in derision as rabbi or King of the Jews (→ Israel) there is a concealed irony since he is quite unwittingly given the salutation which is his due. In Lk. 1:28, Mary is startled not so much by the chaire itself, as by the message which follows it.

2. According to the Synoptic Gospels, the coming of Jesus brings in a time of joy: "Can the wedding guests mourn as long as the bridegroom is with them?" (Matt. 9:15 par. Mk. 2:19, Lk. 5:34; → Fast). The fact that he brings in the eschatological salvation distinguishes him plainly from John the Baptist and the OT prophets: the blind see and the lame walk, lepers are cleansed and the deaf hear, the dead are raised and the poor have the gospel preached to them (Matt. 11:5 par. Lk. 7:22). The effect of his work and preaching is to bring joy (Lk. 19:6). Even when he became an offence and the way of those who tread in his footsteps leads to suffering and persecution, the joyful assurance of salvation should not be lost: "Rejoice and be glad, for your reward is great in heaven!" (Matt. 5:12). Jesus is the coming judge of the whole world. Hence he who remains faithful to Christ's commission and receives the word with no mere ephemeral joy (Matt. 13:20 par. Mk. 4:16, Lk. 8:13), will hear one day the welcoming summons to the joyous banquet of his Lord. On chara in the sense of banquet, festive dinner, and its possible use in this sense in Matt. 25:21, 23 see Arndt, 884; SB I 879, 972. On the parable of the great supper see J. Jeremias, The Parables of Jesus, 1963², 63–69 (cf. Matt. 22:2 f.; Rev. 19:7, 9). When the disciples met the risen Christ, they were seized not only with → fear but also with great joy (Matt. 28:8; cf. Mk. 16:8; Lk. 24:9).

3. (a) Lk.'s Gospel has joy as one of its basic themes. Already in the birth narrative the note is clearly heard. Zechariah is promised joy and gladness; many will rejoice at the birth of John (Lk. 1:14) because of what God is now about to do on behalf of his people (cf. 2:15). When Elizabeth meets the mother of the Saviour (cf. 2:11) the child leaps for joy in her womb (en agalliasei, "for joy", 1:44). Jubilant praise of God, in the majestic language of the OT Psalms, is expressed in the Magnificat of Mary (ēgalliasen, "rejoiced", 1:47) and in the hymn of Zechariah (1:68 ff.). The basis and content of this great joy is the Christmas message that in Jesus God has visited and redeemed his people (1:68), that he has taken care of lost mankind, as he had promised to the fathers (1:55) and to the prophets (1:70), and that he has good will (eudokia, 2:14) towards men.

Joy is an important consequence of Jesus' → miracles (13:17). The seventy disciples may share in his power over evil spirits and be filled with joy and pride (10:17), but joy in God's electing love counts for still more: "But rejoice that your names are written in heaven" (10:20; cf. Matt. 7:22 f.). God deals mercifully with the lost; everything depends upon that. There is joy in heaven over one sinner who repents (Lk. 15:7, 10, 23). Indeed, the whole of Lk. 15 with its parables of the lost sheep, the lost coin and the lost son presents Jesus calling upon men to rejoice with him over the lost returning to the Father (15:6, 9, 32).

In contrast with the note of fear and awe which concludes the authentic text of Mk. (16:8), the conclusion of Lk. is remarkable for its amazement and overflowing joy (Lk. 24:11, 41, 52). V. 46 might be regarded as a resumé of Lk.'s entire Gospel. Following upon the age of Jesus comes the age of the church (v. 47), when repentance will be preached in his name. (Here too there is the implication that repentance brings joy!) This is the message which will be carried beyond the boundaries of Israel and preached to all nations.

(b) This process is recorded in the Acts, where there are repeated expressions of joy over the irresistible worldwide expansion of the church. There is first of all the joy of the → apostles in suffering shame and persecution for Christ's sake (5:41; cf. Matt. 5:11 f.). Men experience such joy through the enabling of the Holy → Spirit (13:52; cf. 7:55). Persecution cannot halt the victorious course of the gospel (20:24 v.l. meta charas "with joy"). There is joy over the ingathering of the Gentiles (11:23; 13:48; 15:3). When the gospel is preached to the Gentiles and they are baptized, the persons concerned are filled with joy (8:8, 39; 15:31).

4. In the Gospel of John the eschatological term chara peplēromenē, perfect joy, fullness of joy (likewise in 1 Jn. 1:4; 2 Jn. 12), is an important feature. It occurs as early as 3:27, where John the Baptist's joy is now full on account of the "bridegroom", the promised revealer of heavenly truth (cf. Matt. 9:14 f. par. Mk. 2:18 f., Lk. 5:33 f.). The eschatological hour has now arrived, in which continuous sowing exists side by side with the harvest time (4:35 f.), and in which Jesus is already accomplishing the work he was given to do (4:34). Abraham in heaven joins in the rejoicing over this day when the harvest begins to be gathered (8:56). The perfect joy which Jesus has, because he is in full communion with the Father (14:20) and does his will (4:34), is to be granted to the disciples also (15:11). This he asks from the Father (17:13), and therefore exhorts his own to abide in him (15:4) and in his love (15:9). His work of love is completed as he lays down his life for his "friends" (15:13); it will only be fully revealed, however, when he goes away from them (16:10). But he does not leave them behind as → orphans (14:18). He prays the Father to send the paraklētos (14:16, 26; → Advocate), manifests himself to them as the risen one (14:19; 20:20 "the disciples rejoiced [echarēsan]"), and promises them that prayer in his name will be heard (15:7, 16).

The world cannot take away this joy and consolation any more than it can take away the → peace which he gives (14:27; 16:33), for they are grounded in → revelation and do not belong to this world. This is the reason why his disciples are to be separate from the world and are to expect the world's hatred and persecution (15:19; 16:2). But fear is banished because Jesus has overcome the world (16:33; cf. 1 Jn. 1:4). Present sadness will be turned into joy (16:22). This eschatological joy "is not described as a psychic condition of rapture but is defined as the situation in which believers no longer need to ask for anything" (R. Bultmann, The Gospel of John, 1971, 583).

5. The Pauline Epistles testify to the paradox that Christian joy is to be found only in the midst of sadness, affliction and care. Indeed, this is precisely where it gives proof of its power.

(a) This joy has its source beyond mere earthly, human joy. It is joy en kyriō, in the Lord, and therefore outside ourselves. This is why Paul constantly reminds his readers of its existence and exhorts them to manifest it (Phil. 3:1; 4:4, 10; Rom.

12:12; 2 Cor. 6:10). It is the "joy of faith" (Phil. 1:25; Rom. 15:13). It has its basis in the → hope and confidence of → faith, which despite all fightings and fears (2 Cor. 7:5) is certain of justification through Christ (Rom. 8:31 f.) and looks forward to his return as the risen Lord. As the joy of faith, it is also a → fruit of the → Spirit (Gal. 5:22), and is spoken of as joy in the Holy Spirit (Rom. 14:17; 1 Thess. 1:6). It is thus a spiritual gift, and in this respect approximates to the idea of charis, → grace. Because faith and its consequent joy do not come from ourselves, Paul can be confident and rejoice even when Christ is preached with base motives. The important thing is that God should do his gracious work and that as many men as possible should share in the gospel (Phil. 1:5 f., 15–18).

(b) In 2 Cor. Paul places joy in direct contrast to thlipsis, affliction (→ Persecution, Tribulation), by which he means not only the distress caused by outward trials, but also the sorrow aroused by his apostolic rebukes. He protests to the Corinthians that "we work with you [synergoi esmen] for your joy" (2 Cor. 1:24). He wrote as he did not to cause thlipsis (2:4) but that his joy, which is joy en kyriō, "in the Lord" (13:11; cf. Phil 3:1), might be shared by all (2:3). The lives of the Corinthians are to be ruled not by passive resignation or the worldly grief (lypē) which produces death (7:10), but by the joy of a purified faith. Having sharply rebuked them earlier, Paul has regained his confidence in them (7:13), for his admonition has had a salutary effect. Indeed, he almost implies that he has been too severe (7:11). Since his anxiety has been removed by Titus' report (7:16), he now has even stronger grounds for rejoicing.

(c) Paul wrote the Epistle to the Philippians from prison (possibly in Ephesus) and at the time was still uncertain of the outcome of his trial. There is evidence that he felt lonely (2:20 f.), and that faithful preaching of the gospel was in jeopardy (1:15 ff.; 2:21). Once again there was thlipsis (4:14; cf. Col. 1:24), occasion for anxiety. Yet there were also grounds for thankfulness and unmitigated joy: thankfulness for the participation of the Philippians in the gospel (1:5), and joy over the continuing proclamation of Christ (1:18). Constrained by the gospel and by Christ himself, Paul exhorts his readers to rejoice together with him (2:17 f.), to cast care behind them (4:16), and to be of one mind in the fellowship of the Spirit (2:1 f.). What if there is occasion for anxiety; what if Paul is soon to meet his death, so long as Christ is magnified in his body (1:20)!

In Phil. joy is thus a continuous "defiant 'Nevertheless' " (K. Barth, The Epistle to the Philippians, 1962, 120; cf. Phil. 2:17; 4:4). This "nevertheless" draws its strength not from itself but from untiring prayer which lays every need before God (4:6; cf. 1 Thess. 5:16; Col. 1:11). It takes heart at the spread of the gospel throughout the world (1:5 f.; 1 Thess. 3:9; Col. 2:5) and at the flourishing growth of missionary churches (Phil. 4:10; cf. 1 Thess. 2:20: "For you are our glory and joy"). But above all it is joy in the Lord (Phil. 4:4).

(d) The present period of trial and distress is limited. The Lord is at hand! (Phil. 4:5; cf. 1 Thess. 5:2 f.; 3:3). Hence joy is based primarily on the → hope that after suffering together we shall be glorified together (Rom. 8:17). This joyous and confident waiting for the day of Christ puts our present experience into true perspective. Gaudium in domino parit veram aequitatem: "Joy in the Lord brings forth true peace of mind" (J. A. Bengel, quoted by Barth, op. cit., 121). On the one hand, this "gentleness" (Phil. 4:5 RV mg.) gives us leisure from ourselves so that we can sympathize with others (Rom. 12:15). On the other hand, it reminds us that our present joys and sorrows belong to this life only and are not our final lot (1 Cor. 7:30; 2 Cor. 6:10).

6. This Pauline teaching about joy in affliction and temptation proved its value when the later NT epistles were being written. By this time, the persecution of Christians was already so severe as to threaten the very existence of the church (1 Pet. 4:13; cf. Rom. 8:17). But being robbed of their material goods could not deprive them of their joy (Heb. 10:34). This is well illustrated by the last lines of Luther's hymn Ein' feste Burg, inspired by Ps. 46:

> And, though they take our life,
> Goods, honour, children, wife,
> Yet is their profit small;
> These things shall vanish all:
> The city of God remaineth (Carlyle's translation).

For all that, persecution still brought very real distress (Heb. 12:11). Hence believers are urged to exercise patience (Heb. 10:36) and to continue obediently in sound doctrine (Heb. 12:17). Christ has voluntarily given up his own joy and taken upon himself the shame of the cross. Only looking to him can we obtain patience and endurance in temptation (Heb. 12:2; cf. 1 Pet. 1:8 f.).

Jas. 1:2 comes close to teaching Christians to rejoice in martyrdom (cf. Acts 5:41). In the course of the church's history, however, this has often degenerated into virtually seeking martyrdom for its own sake. Jas. 4:9 f. is not to be taken legalistically, as if this were the saving faith of the NT. Such a view is precluded by obedience to the risen Lord. For it would deny the ultimate, once-for-all value of his work on the cross. E. Beyreuther, G. Finkenrath

→ Cry, → Lament, → Laugh, → Suffer

(a). W. Beilner, "Joy", EBT II 438–42; R. Bultmann, agalliaomai etc., TDNT I 19 ff.; euphrainō etc., TDNT II 772–75; and The Gospel of John, 1971, 505 ff.; H. Conzelmann and W. Zimmerli, chairō etc., TDNT IX 359–415; D. W. Harvey, "Rejoice Not, O Israel!" in B. W. Anderson and W. Harrelson, eds., Israel's Prophetic Heritage, 1962, 116–27; J. Moltmann, Theology and Joy, 1973. (b). M. Ammermann, Die religiöse Freude in den Schriften des Alten Bundes, 1942; E. G. Gulin, Die Freude im Neuen Testament, I–II, 1932–36; U. Holtzmeister, " 'Gaudete in Domino semper' et 'Beati qui lugent' ", Verbum Domini 22, 1942, 257–62; P. Humbert, "Laetari et exsultare dans le vocabulaire religieux de l'Ancien Testament", Revue d'Histoire et de Philosophie Religieuses 22, 1942, 185–214; and Opuscules d'un Hébraisant, 1958, 119–45; R. Laurentin, Structure et Théologie de Luc I–II, 1964; W. Nauck, "Freude im Leiden", ZNW 46, 1955, 68–80; J. Perrier, La Joie dans l'Évangile de Jésus, 1962; B. Reicke, Diakonie, Festfreude und Zelos in Verbindung mit der altchristlichen Agapenfeier, 1951; H. Rusche, "Die Freude: Ein biblischer Grundbegriff", BuK 5, 1964, 141 ff.; E. Schick and A. Auer, "Freude", LTK IV 361 ff.; A. B. du Toit, Der Aspekt der Freude im urchristlichen Abendmahl, 1965; R. Voeltzel, Das Lachen des Herrn, 1961.

Judgment, Judge, Deliver, Judgment Seat

It is sometimes necessary to examine whether human behaviour conforms to certain standards. Such examination, together with the ultimate assessment and, if necessary, condemnation, is expressed in the NT by the extensive word-group connected with krinō, to judge. Since paradidōmi can mean "to hand over" (for judgment or punishment) it is also discussed here together with bēma, judgment seat, and katadikazō, condemn. However, in view of its basic meaning "to transmit" this word-group is further dealt with under → Teach.

κρίμα

κρίμα (krima), dispute, decision, verdict, judgment; κρίνω (krinō), separate, judge, consider, decide; ἀνακρίνω (anakrinō), investigate, examine; κρίσις (krisis), decision, crisis; κριτής (kritēs), a judge; συγκρίνω (synkrinō), compare, interpret; κατάκριμα (katakrima), punishment, condemnation; κατακρίνω (katakrinō), condemn; κατάκρισις (katakrisis), condemnation; καταγινώσκω (kataginōskō), condemn.

CL krima, judgment, is found once in Aeschylus but does not acquire a clear meaning until quite late (from the LXX onwards). It is formed from krinō, to judge, which in its numerous compounds (both nouns and vbs.) had come to occupy a major place in legal terminology. krinō did not originate as a legal term, however, nor are its meanings restricted to the legal sphere.

1. (a) From its basic meaning to separate, sift (so in Homer), the word acquired in Gk. literature its own shades of meaning in connection with human value-judgments: to discriminate, divide, distinguish, select, acknowledge, approve, estimate, prefer. At the same time the "assessment" aspect became prominent, so that krinō means to judge, pronounce judgment, decide, and also to be of the opinion, to purpose. In the mid. and pass. it means to dispute, debate, or fight.

(b) The compound synkrinō reveals a similar process in its meanings to compare, judge, measure. It also means (like krinō used in the mid.) to explain, expound, and interpret (dreams).

(c) anakrinō, found from Thucydides onwards, expresses the questioning process which leads to a judgment: to examine, cross-examine, interrogate, inquire, and investigate.

(d) The noun krima, like the vb., embraces a variety of meanings: decision, verdict, and also controversy, dispute.

(e) In this meaning krima is parallel to its derivative krisis, which means decision (of a referee), crisis (in battle, sickness, etc.), and also separation, selection, dissension, dispute.

(f) The person making the decision or selection is called kritēs: critic, judge, referee (the word is very rare in secular Gk., and in Attic and Ion. Gk. is never used for a lawcourt judge). Derived from this is the substantival adj. kritikos (found from Plato onwards), a competent, experienced judge.

2. (a) krinō as a technical legal term means to judge, to bring to judgment, or condemn. The judgment, krima, can be divine or human, and the judges, kritai, authorized office-bearers or unauthorized persons. Divine judicial authority is such that generally judgment and its effect are seen as one, so that krima means not only judgment but also condemnation, damnation and punishment.

(b) The compound katakrinō has a similar meaning: to condemn. The rare noun katakrisis means condemnation. The noun katakrima, is first found in the 1st cent. B.C. with the meaning punishment, damnation. Its meaning in the Corpus Papyrorum Raineri (ed. 1895) is noteworthy: legal liability in respect of a piece of land.

(c) The word autokatakritos is found in Philo and occurs sporadically elsewhere. Formed from the adj. and the prefix auto, self, it has no longer a strictly legal but rather a moral character and means self-condemned. Another rare compound is prokrima (not found until the 2nd cent. A.D.), a technical legal term for the interim judgment reached en route to the final verdict; then also, morally, prejudice, preconceived idea (which stands in the way of a judicial decision). A moral assessment is also expressed by kataginōskō, found from Aeschylus and Herodotus onwards, meaning to condemn, literally to observe something (bad) in someone, to catch in the act, to recognize as guilty, to despise.

OT 1. In the LXX krinō is used mainly as a translation of the Heb. words šāpaṭ, dîn and rîḇ. Thus krinō, to judge, acquired a meaning which went beyond its general Gk. usage, for dîn means not only to judge, but also to punish, wrangle, vindicate, and obtain justice for a person (Gen. 15:14; 2 Sam. 19:9; Gen. 30:6; Deut. 32:36; Ps. 54:3; Jer. 5:28). rîḇ means to quarrel, to litigate, to carry on a lawsuit (Gen. 26:21; Jdg. 8:1; 21:22; 1 Sam. 24:16). šāpaṭ, which occurs the most frequently, adds still further shades of meaning, so that to judge comes to mean "to rule" (Exod. 2:14; 1 Sam. 8:20; 2 Sam. 15:4, 6). He who judges brings salvation, peace and deliverance, especially to the persecuted and oppressed (cf. Deut. 10:18). "Give the king thy justice, O God, and thy righteousness unto the royal son! May he judge thy people with righteousness, and thy poor with justice" (Ps. 72:1 f.). The judges (LXX kritai) who in Jdg. are called "great" are the deliverers, helpers or saviours, raised up by God. They obtain justice for the tribes of Israel in the face of their enemies, annihilate or drive out their oppressors, and so bring salvation, rest and peace to the land (Jdg. 3:9, 15). krima can also mean statute (Lev. 18:5; 20:22), and in Jer. 51:10 the Heb. ṣᵉḏāqâh, righteousness, is translated by krima.

2. In Israel justice was originally dispensed not according to absolute moral standards but with a view to restoring peace within the community concerned, whether the family, the tribe, or the nation. In difficult cases it meant removing the offending member. After the conquest justice was dispensed partly in the context of family and tribe by the heads of families and tribal elders, and partly in the context of the local community by the elders sitting in the gate of a town or village, all full citizens having right to speak (Ruth 4:1 ff.). In Jerusalem officials (called commanders in Deut. 1:15 RSV; princes e.g. Isa. 1:23; Jer. 26) were appointed as judges. Certain officials whose function is not quite clear were called "judges of Israel". According to M. Noth, a list of these is seen in the enumeration of the so-called "minor judges" in Jdg. 10:1–5; 12:7–15 (The History of Israel, 1958, 101).

3. In Israel all justice is ascribed to God: Yahweh is Lord and judge (Deut. 1:17). As judge he helps his people (Jdg. 11:27; 2 Sam. 18:31). He never deviates from justice (Ps. 7:12), and will not suffer his honour to be brought into disrepute. Heaven and earth or the peoples of the earth are often called upon to act as a tribunal (Isa. 1:2; Jer. 2:12; Mic. 6:1; Ps. 50:1–6). He judges the nations (Gen. 11:1 ff.; Ps. 67:5; Amos 1:2; Joel 4:2; Mal. 3:2 ff.), especially on the "day of Yahweh", when he will destroy all ungodliness (Isa. 2:12–18; 13:9; Jer. 46:10; Ezek. 30:3 ff.; Zeph. 1:7–18; → Present, art. hēmera). He comes to the aid of anyone suffering violence and injustice (Gen. 4:9 ff.). One must submit to his inscrutable judgment (Job). His judgments are just, i.e. they are in harmony with his faithfulness, whereby he espouses the cause of his chosen people, guides them and ensures their safety. Thus God's judgment is motivated by love, grace and mercy, and its outcome is salvation (Isa. 30:18; Ps. 25:6–9; 33:5; 103:6 ff.; 146:7). "He will vindicate his people and have compassion on his servants" (Deut. 32:36 RSV).

4. In the judgment discourses of the prophets it is God's judgment upon Israel which receives most attention (Amos 5:18; 8 and 9; Hos. 4:1; Mic. 1; Jer. 2:4–9; Isa. 41:1 ff.; 48:1 ff.; 50:1 ff.). Since Israel is the elect nation, it will be judged (Amos 3:1 ff.; Ezek. 20:33–38). Moreover, Yahweh the judge is → king of the universe and uses nations and powers as instruments of his judgment. The key to the message of the major prophets "lies in the light of the fact that, as far as saving history is concerned they see an entirely new day dawning for Israel; they see a new action of God approaching her, which will bring with it heavy punishments but also mysterious acts of preservation. In view of this – so the prophets are convinced – it will no longer be enough to appeal to the old saving appointments, for this new divine saving activity, and it alone, is to decide the question of the existence or non-existence of Israel" (G. von Rad, Old Testament Theology, II, 1965, 395; cf. Isa. 5:1 ff.; Hos. 13:5–9; Jer. 31:31 ff.).

5. In the post-exilic period the description of God's judgment acquired certain apocalyptic features. Its character as punishment is emphasized: God's enemies, whether men or supernatural powers, will be dashed to pieces (a host on high, Eth.Enoch 10:6; God and Magog, Sib. 3). The "congregation of wickedness" will be annihilated, while the "sons of light" will attain salvation (cf. 1QS 3 and 4; 1QM 3:9–19 of the Qumran community). The doctrine of retribution led men to regard any calamity as God's judgment upon them for some offence; this in turn had an adverse effect upon their social life, and shook their faith in divine justice. Belief in a further judgment after death (Ps.Sol. 3:1 ff.; Eth.Enoch) offered a way out of this mental anguish, since it meant that the process of exact retribution could be lengthened. Judgment would still fall, even though men might not live to see it. God or the Son of man is the judge of the world at the "last day" (2 Esd. 7; Eth.Enoch).

NT 1. In addition to the metaphors of harvest (→ seed), sifting, and separation (cf. Matt. 13:30 f., 40 f., 49; 24:31, 40 f.; 25:31 ff.) the NT contains a great deal of legal and semi-legal language where krima, krinō and their derivatives are used with the same complex meanings as are found in Gk. literature and in the LXX.

(a) krinō has the following meanings: to distinguish, give preference, approve (Rom. 14:5a to esteem one day as better than another; Rom. 14:5b to approve each day, i.e. esteem all days alike). In addition it means to consider, regard as (Acts 13:46; 16:15; 26:8); to speak or think ill of, to decide, to judge (Matt. 7:1 f; Lk. 7:43; Acts 4:19; 15:19; Rom. 14:3 ff.; 1 Cor. 4:5; 10:15; 29; 2 Cor. 5:14; Col. 2:16). prokrima is similarly used ("without prejudice", 1 Tim. 5:21). krinō also means to decide, resolve (Acts 3:13 and passim; Rom. 14:13; 1 Cor. 2:2; 5:3; 7:37; Tit. 3:12). synkrinō means to interpret (1 Cor. 2:13, "interpreting spiritual truths to those who possess the Spirit"), and to compare (2 Cor. 10:12). anakrinō occurs with the meaning to inquire (Acts 17:11; 1 Cor. 10:25, 27; 14:24), to examine, interrogate (Lk. 23:14; Acts 4:9; 12:19; 24:8; 28:18; 1 Cor. 4:3; 9:3), to judge of, to form an estimate of (1 Cor. 2:14).

(b) krinō and krima are very frequently used in the NT in a strictly judicial sense, krinō meaning to judge; in the pass. to bring to trial, condemn, punish; in the mid. to dispute.

Men judge according to the → law (Jn. 18:31; Acts 23:3; 24:6). The apostles and the church judge (1 Cor. 5:12; 1 Cor. 6:2 f.; the world and angels). Paul is put on trial (Acts 23:6). The people cannot come to a right judgment (Lk. 12:57). The wicked servant is punished on the basis of his own statements (Lk. 19:22; → Punishment). People go to law to settle disputes (Matt. 5:40; 1 Cor. 6:6). The noun krima is used similarly: the disciples of Jesus should not judge, and with the judgment that a man pronounces on others he himself will be judged (Matt. 7:1 ff.). The Christians in Corinth have disputes (lawsuits) with one another (1 Cor. 6:7). krisis is similarly used: judgment by the authorities (Matt. 5:21); judgment passed by one man upon another (Jn. 7:24), or by the angels upon the devil (2 Pet. 2:11; Jude 9). kritēs means the authorized (Matt. 5:25; Lk. 12:14, 58; 18:2) and the unauthorized (Jas. 2:4; 4:11) judge, also anyone who brings injustice to light (Matt. 12:27). autokatakritos (only in Tit. 3:11) is the man who is self-condemned. kataginōskō (1 Jn. 3:20 f.; Gal. 2:11) means to be recognized as guilty and condemned by one's own heart or conduct. Condemnation by men is also expressed by katakrinō: the people of → Nineveh will appear at the last judgment with this generation and will condemn it (Matt. 12:41; cf. Heb. 11:7). "Has no one condemned you?" (Jn. 8:10, cf. 11). "In passing judgment upon another you condemn yourself" (Rom. 2:1). "Who is to condemn?" (Rom. 8:34). Jesus is condemned to death (Matt. 20:18; 27:3; Mk. 14:64). The noun katakrisis occurs twice: "dispensation of condemnation" (2 Cor. 3:9) and "not to your condemnation" (2 Cor. 7:3). When combined with the genitive, krima tēs pornēs means the judgment of the harlot (Rev. 17:1), and krima thanatou capital punishment (Lk. 24:20).

LXX influence appears when krima means rule: authority to rule is given to the disciples and martyrs (Lk. 22:30; Rev. 20:4); the twelve apostles rule over the twelve tribes (Matt. 19:28); likewise when krisis means justice (Matt. 12:18; 23:23; Acts 8:33).

God and Jesus judge (Jn. 5:22, 29 f. and often; Acts 6:10). They are called kritēs, judge (2 Tim. 4:8; Heb. 12:23; Jas. 4:12; 5:9; Acts 10:42), and God's word is called kritikos, a discerner (Heb. 4:12). When the passive form is used, the reference is similarly to the activity of the divine judge (Rev. 11:8). Christ judges the living and the dead (2 Tim. 4:1; 1 Pet. 4:5 f.), the secrets of men (Rom. 2:16), the world (Acts 17:31), every man according to his works (1 Pet. 1:17; Rev. 20:12 f. cf. 2 Cor. 5:10). The noun krima is used in the same way: Jesus has come to bring judgment (Jn. 9:39); God's judgments are unsearchable (Rom. 11:33); his activity as a judge begins with the church (1 Pet. 4:17); future and eternal judgment is in his hands (Acts 24:25; Heb. 6:2). Divine judgment often includes → punishment (Jn. 3:17 f.; Rom. 2:12; 3:6; 1 Cor. 11:13 f.; 2 Thess. 2:12; Heb. 10:30; 13:4; Jas. 5:9). God's condemnation is just (Rom. 2:2 f.; 3:8) and swift (2 Pet. 2:3). The prince of this world is condemned (Jn. 16:11). Divine condemnation, issuing, as the word implies, in damnation, is expressed by katakrima (Rom. 5:16, 18; 8:1). Damnation is also expressed by the verb katakrinō, which can have God, as well as men, for its subject: God condemned sin in the flesh (Rom. 8:3). He has turned Sodom and Gomorrah to ashes and condemned them (2 Pet. 2:6). When we are judged, we are chastened so that we may not be condemned along with the world (1 Cor. 11:32); cf. also the passive in Mk. 16:16 and Rom. 14:23. krisis is frequently used synonymously with krima, judgment: the judgment of God or of Christ (Jn. 5:30; 2 Thess. 1:5); the day (hour) of judgment (Matt. 10:15 and often; 2 Pet. 2:9; 3:7; 1 Jn. 4:17; Jude 6; Rev. 14:7; 1 Tim. 5:24; Heb. 9:27). Divine judgment brings separation (Jn. 3:19) and destruction (Heb. 10:27). He who hears Jesus' word and believes him does not come into judgment (Jn. 5:24). The dead who have done evil will arise to judgment (Jn. 5:29).

2. Just as in the OT all judgment is ascribed to God, so also in the NT all human judgment and punishment stands within the wider context of God's sovereign judgment, a principle expressed with the utmost clarity in Matt. 7:1: "Judge not, that you be not judged". The church of Christ has been entrusted with the task of judging in matters which affect its members (1 Cor. 5:12; 6:2). Human relationships are to be regulated by love, even extending to love of one's enemies, but measured by the standard of God's perfect righteousness, no man remains righteous in God's sight. All men fall under his wrath, and are without excuse (Rom. 1–3). This is the reason why ultimately no man has a right to judge another. Dire warnings are addressed to the unmerciful and the arrogant who are blind to their own lost condition, who are not ready to forgive and to pray for their enemies (Matt. 5:23 ff., 43 ff.; 7:1–5; Lk. 18:9 ff.).

The unsearchableness of God's judgments (Rom. 11:33) means that the doctrine of retribution can no longer be rigidly upheld. The human principle of "tit for tat" has no place in the divine judge's dealings with men (Lk. 6:32; 13:1–5; Jn. 9:2 f.). That God is judge, however, is basic to the NT, not merely as regards the frequency with which it is mentioned but also from the point of view of content. It is a doctrine which impinges upon many other major aspects of the NT message (→ Glory; → Righteousness; → Grace; → Lord; → Love; → Reward; → Guilt; → Punishment; → Sin; → Forgiveness; → Reconciliation; → Anger, Wrath). On the other hand, words like "judgment", "to judge", etc., are associated with human legal concepts, and as such are incapable of expressing the unsearchableness of God, particularly when his unsearchable decrees reveal his love. This is the other side of God's character, displayed throughout the NT, but in such a way as to show the unmistakable influence of the OT and of Jewish apocalyptic.

Jesus, like John the Baptist, preached by word and deed the nearness of divine judgment, which stirs men up both to hope and to repentance (Lk. 13:6 ff.) and brings woe upon the unrepentant (Matt. 11:20 ff.; 12:41 f.). The fact of coming judgment means that all men are advancing towards God's final verdict on themselves and their works. Before God nothing is forgotten, whether deed or word. The judgment of God is the great reality of man's life (Matt. 10:28), and the only way of escaping condemnation is to be forgiven.

For Paul and the early church, Jesus is the judge of all the world, as God the Father is. Divine patience still gives men time to repent and believe in Christ who for us has been made "to be sin, who knew no sin, so that in him we might become the righteousness of God" (2 Cor. 5:21; cf. Rom. 3:23 ff.; Gal. 3:13; Col. 2:13 ff.). The judge is the Saviour. Judgment already rests upon unbelievers because they refuse the Saviour, while believers escape condemnation (Jn. 3:16 ff.; 11:25 f.). They have confidence as they anticipate the day of judgment, and this confidence issues in ethical results here and now. The eschatological tension in the statements about judgment is broken neither by the emphasis in Jn. upon its being present, nor by the emphasis in Rev. upon its being future, though the apocalyptic elements figure differently.

The principles of judgment in the NT are a development of those found in OT prophecy. It is the elect one who is judged, for divine judgment falls upon Christ crucified. Yet this is God's saving work, for in judging Christ, he remains faithful to his elect people and honour, and bound to uphold his covenant. The wrath of God is fully revealed only by the gospel (Rom. 1–3), as the "word of the cross" is preached. Christ "is set for the fall and rising of many" (Lk. 2:34).

W. Schneider

παραδίδωμι

παραδίδωμι (paradidōmi), deliver up, give up, hand over.

CL paradidōmi, from Pindar onwards, has a wide range of uses and denotes all aspects of deliberate giving or giving over: to deliver up, to give away, to offer, to give up, to hand over, to betray. As a legal term, it means to bring before a court, to deliver up a prisoner (eis with the acc. expressing destination and purpose). The person concerned is delivered up e.g. to the dark chaos of doom (magic papyri), to death (papyri) or to discipline (Demetrius of Phaleron). It can cover the handing over of a captive (where this has a minimal effect on the situation of the person concerned), right through to the reprehensible act of betrayal, whereby a free man of good repute, who may well be innocent, is ruined.

In its connection with paradosis, tradition, the transmission of doctrine, the vb. is dealt with under → Teach, art. paradidōmi.

OT The LXX uses paradidōmi about 200 times. Although in the Heb. text 26 different words underlie the Gk. vb., paradidōmi stands chiefly (about 150 times) for the Hebrew nāṯan, which primarily means to give, but secondarily (with a preposition) to hand over, to deliver. The formula paradounai eis cheiras tinos, to deliver into someone's hands, is not found in secular Gk., but in the LXX it is very frequent and is carried over from there into the NT. The formula stems ultimately from the wars of Yahweh. Before a battle began, a priest or a prophet would be asked to consult the oracle, and if all was well, the answer would be: "I (Yahweh) deliver them into your hand, O Israel." If Israel was disobedient, then Yahweh would deliver them into the hands of strange peoples (Jdg. 2:14, plunderers; 6:13, Midianites; Isa. 65:12, the sword; Jer. 32:4, the king of Babylon). In the language of the Deuteronomist the old formula came to mean the total annihilation of all the earlier inhabitants of the land (e.g. Deut. 1:8). From then on it became even more widely used. Its origin accounts for the fact that the subject of the vb. is almost always God, and that in practically every case it implies handing over to ruin, to defeat, to annihilation, to death. In Isa. 43:3 it is said that Yahweh has given Egypt, Ethiopia and Seba as a ransom for Israel, i.e. he has inflicted defeat upon them that he may obtain Israel for himself. An analogy is found in

Isa. 53:5 where Yahweh's Servant is said to have been delivered over to death "for our transgressions" for the deliverance of many. This doubtless means that his own people were guilty of betraying Yahweh's Servant, but his death awoke them out of their sin of rejecting him. (For fuller discussion → Son, art. pais theou.)

NT 1. In the NT paradidōmi occurs in all 120 times; of these 84 are in the Gospels, 13 in Acts, only 19 altogether in the Pauline Epistles (6 in Rom., 7 in 1 Cor., 3 in Eph., 1 each in 2 Cor., Gal., 1 Tim.), 3 in 1 and 2 Pet., 1 in Jude. It does not occur at all in Heb., Rev., and the Epistles of Jn.

In the NT paradosis never occurs in the sense of handing over or betrayal, but only in the sense of the transmission of doctrine (→ Teach, art. paradosis).

2. The basic meaning of the vb. in the NT is to deliver up to judgment and death. The statement that John the Baptist was delivered up (paredothē, Matt. 4:12) signifies his imprisonment leading to his execution. The adversary delivers to the judge (Matt. 5:25), and the judge to the officer (Lk. 12:58). Jesus' followers will be delivered to the council (Matt. 10:17) and to synagogues (Lk. 21:12), and will be exposed to persecution and oppression (Matt. 24:9). Brother is delivered up by brother to death (Mk. 13:12), cf. also Acts 8:3 and 22:4 (Saul in his persecution of Christians) and Acts 12:4 (the arrest of Peter).

3. Most of the passages in which paradidōmi occurs refer, however, to Jesus' announcement of his suffering and to the passion itself (→ Suffer). He is delivered into the hands of men (Matt. 17:22 par. Mk. 9:31, Lk. 9:44), to the high priests and scribes (Matt. 20:18), to the Gentiles (Matt. 20:19 par. Mk. 10:33, Lk. 18:22), to Pilate (Matt. 27:2), to the death sentence (Lk. 24:20) and to crucifixion (Matt. 26:2). Judas, the person who delivers him up, is the betrayer. The frequent use of paradidōmi in the NT, particularly in the passion narratives, reflects the fact that it is a technical term used in law and in martyrology. The words of institution of the → Last Supper contain paradidōmi only once (1 Cor. 11:23), with reference to Christ's atoning death: en tē nykti hē paredideto, "on the night in which he was betrayed [or delivered up]"; cf. the hyper hymōn "for you" in v. 24.

4. The vb. is occasionally used for deliverance to something other than a human court of justice: to shameful lusts (Rom. 1:24); the Gentiles give themselves up to unchastity and this in itself is a judgment (Eph. 4:19); Israel was given over to worshipping the host of heaven (Acts 7:42). In 1 Cor. 5:5 and 1 Tim. 1:20 Paul delivers men to Satan (→ Destroy, art. olethros). According to Jewish tradition, → Satan was the executor of the divine judgment.

5. Finally paradidōmi is found in the context of dying, i.e. of giving up one's life: to give up one's spirit, i.e. to expire (Jn. 19:30); to give up one's life, i.e. to risk one's life (Acts 15:26); the Son of God who gave up himself (Gal. 2:20; cf. Eph. 5:25 and Rom. 8:32).

6. Only in a few passages does paradidōmi occur in a context other than that of judgment and death. Thus the fact that divine power is delivered to Jesus is an evidence of his messianic sovereignty (Matt. 11:27; Lk. 10:22; Matt. 28:18; cf. 1 Cor. 15:24). But the devil also asserts that he can grant power to whomsoever he will, since it has been placed at his absolute disposal (Lk. 4:6). In Acts 14:26 Paul and Barnabas in Antioch are commended or committed to the grace of God, i.e. placed under its protective power. H. Beck βῆμα | βῆμα (bēma), judgment seat.

CL In secular Gk. bēma is used in the sense of step or stride, as in walking (Pindar, Aeschylus). It has also the associative connotation of a pace as a unit of measure. The word is also used as a platform for a public speaker and, in legal contexts, it denotes the place where litigants stood for trial (Demosthenes, Aeschines).

OT In the LXX bēma stands for two Heb. words miḏrāḵ and miḡdāl. The word miḏrāḵ, from the root dāraḵ (tread), denotes the area covered by placing down the foot, hence a footbreadth. It occurs only in Deut. 2:5 where it is used in the sense of a unit of measure. In this context the Lord affirmed to Moses that he would not allow the people of Israel to take any of the territory belonging to the descendants of Esau, "not so much as for the sole of the foot to tread on." A somewhat similar expression utilizes the word māqôm (place) rather than miḏrāḵ (Deut. 11:24; Jos. 1:3). In this latter expression the emphasis is more geographical and the concept of space or area is minimized. The word miḡdāl, from the root gāḏal (grow up, become great) chiefly denotes a tower, but is used in Neh. 8:4 of a wooden platform on which Ezra stood to read from the book of the law. The word is used in the same sense in the parallel passage in 1 Esd. 9:42. In Sir. 19:30 bēma occurs in the plur. (but in the v.l. S^2 bēma podos in the sing.) in the sense of the steps of a man, i.e. his manner of walking which reveals his character. Eth.Enoch 62:3, 5 depicts the Son of man judging the mighty on his throne.

NT In the NT bēma occurs once in the sense of step as a unit of measure (Acts 7:5). It is found in the expression bēma podos ("a foot's length" RSV), i.e. a small area. The usage is similar to the Heb. expression in Deut. 2:5.

The word is used most frequently in the NT of the platform or dais on which was placed a seat for an official. The bēma was the platform from which orations were made (Acts 12:21) as well as the place where civil officials held session to hear certain legal cases and render judgment in such cases (Matt. 27:19; Jn. 19:13; Acts 18:12, 16 f.; 25:6, 10, 17). Thus Jesus was brought before the bēma of Pilate (cf. A. N. Sherwin-White, Roman Society and Roman Law in the New Testament, 1965^2, 24 ff.), and the Jews at Corinth accused Paul before the tribunal of the Proconsul Gallio who drove them out, but ignored the beating of Sosthenes. The remains of a public rostrum still stand among the ruins of Corinth (cf. O. Broneer, "Corinth: Center of Paul's Missionary Work in Greece", BA 14, 1951, 91 f.). Later Paul appeared before the bēma of Festus at Caesarea.

The word was twice used by Paul in his letters of the judgment seat. Rom. 14:10 speaks of "the judgment seat of God," and the following verse cites Isa. 45:23 as confirmation that all men will appear before it (cf. also Phil. 2:10 f.). 2 Cor. 5:10 speaks of "the judgment seat of Christ", drawing attention to the fact that Christ will be the judge of all men (cf. Matt. 16:27; 25:31–46). In Rom. 14:10 ff. the emphasis is on the rôle of the litigant before the bēma: "So each of us shall give account of himself to God." In 2 Cor. 5:10 the emphasis falls on the judgment rendered: "So that each one may receive good or evil, according to what he has done in the body." Both passages draw attention to the reversal of rôles: Jesus who (like his apostle) appeared before the judgment seat of men and suffered unjust judgment will one day sit in righteous judgment over unjust men. But Paul reminds his readers that believers are not exempt from this scrutiny and judgment. Even though reconciled (cf. 2 Cor. 5:20 f.) and justified (Rom. 5:1; 8:1), they still have to give account and have their work tested (cf. 1 Cor. 3:13 ff.).

T. McComiskey

καταδικάζω καταδικάζω (katadikazō), condemn; καταδίκη (katadikē), condemnation.

CL The vb. katadikazō means to condemn, render judgment against, in secular Gk. (Herodotus, Lucian). The noun katadikē denotes a legal sentence or judgment brought against someone.

OT katadikazō occurs in the LXX as the translation of the vb. rāša' and its adj. rāšā' as well as the vbs. 'āwaṭ and ḥûḇ.

The vb. rāša' (be wicked) has the meaning to condemn as guilty in the hiphil and it is this sense of the word that is reflected in katadikazō (Job 34:29; Pss. 36[37]:33; 93[94]:21). The adjectival form rāšā' (guilty) occurs in Ps. 108(109):7.

The vb. 'āwaṭ in the piel has the meaning bend or make crooked and hence, by extension, means to pervert, subvert or falsify. It is used by Amos (8:5) of the falsification of weights in dispensing food. In the LXX this word is translated by katadikazō in Lam. 3:36 in the sense of subverting one in a cause.

katadikazō is used to translate the piel form of ḥûḇ (qal, be guilty; piel, make guilty) in Dan. 1:10. In this context the word is used with "head" in the sense of to make one's head guilty, i.e. to inculpate one and hence endanger his life.

In the Wisdom of Solomon katadikazō occurs 4 times always in the sense of formal condemnation (Wis. 2:20; 11:10; 12:15; 17:11). The noun katadikē occurs in Wis. 12:27 of the condemnation that was pronounced on those who do not heed God.

NT katadikazō is always used in the NT in the sense of condemn, pass judgment against, find guilty (Matt. 12:7, 37; Lk. 6:37; Jas. 5:6). This is particularly clear in Matt. 12:37 where the word is contrasted with dikaioō (justify). In Lk. 6:37 katadikazō is used in connection with krinō (judge) in which case it seems to connote the formal act of passing judgment rather than the cognitive process by which that judgment is reached (krinō). The same concept is evident in the metaphorical usage of the term by James in Jas. 5:6 where the use of the word condemn represents the formal pronouncement of judgment before the execution of the sentence: "You have condemned, you have killed the righteous man." The noun katadikē occurs only once in the NT (Acts 25:15) in the sense of a sentence of guilt.

T. McComiskey

→ Death, → Hell, → Life, → Present, → Punishment, → Resurrection, → Reward, → Righteousness, → Satan, → Son of God

(a). A. Alt, "The Origins of Israelite Law", Essays on Old Testament History and Religion, 1966, 79–132; J. A. Baird, The Justice of God in the Teaching of Jesus, 1963; K. Barth, "The Command as the Judgment of God", CD, II, 2, 733–81; "The Judge Judged in our Place", and "The Judgment of God", CD, IV, 1, 211–83, 528–68; D. Bonhoeffer, Ethics, 1964²; G. Bornkamm,

"The Revelation of God's Wrath (Romans 1–3)", and "Sin, Law and Death (Romans 7)", Early Christian Experience, 1969, 47–70; 87–104; S. G. F. Brandon, The Judgment of the Dead: An Historical and Comparative Study of the Idea of a Post-Mortem Judgment in the Major Religions, 1967; F. Büchsel and V. Hentrich, krinō etc., TDNT III 921–54; R. Bultmann, Theology of the New Testament, I, 1952, 65–92; II, 33–69; and The Gospel of John, 1971, 257 ff., 278 ff.; R. H. Charles, A Critical History of the Doctrine of a Future Life in Israel, in Judaism, and in Christianity, or Hebrew, Jewish and Christian Eschatology, 1913²; C. E. B. Cranfield, "The Parable of the Unjust Judge and the Eschatology of Luke-Acts", SJT 16, 1963, 297–301; H. Cunliffe-Jones, "God's Judgment of the Individual after Death", London Quarterly Holborn Review 35, 1967, 116–28; J. D. M. Derrett, Law in the New Testament, 1970; W. Eichrodt, Theology of the Old Testament, I, 1961, 371–87; II, see index; A. M. Fairhurst, "The Problems Posed by the Severe Sayings Attributed to Jesus in the Synoptic Gospels", SJT 23, 1970, 77–91; L. Gaston, No Stone on Another: Studies in the Significance of the Fall of Jerusalem in the Synoptic Gospels, Supplements to NovT 23, 1970; H. E. Guillebaud, The Righteous Judge: A Study of the Biblical Doctrine of Everlasting Punishment, 1964; E. Käsemann, "Sentences of Holy Law in the New Testament", New Testament Questions of Today, 1969, 66–81; L. Koehler, Hebrew Man, 1956; J. P. Martin, The Last Judgment in Protestant Theology from Orthodoxy to Ritschl, 1963; A. L. Moore, The Parousia in the New Testament, Supplements to NovT 13, 1966; L. Morris, The Biblical Doctrine of Judgment, 1960; C. F. D. Moule, "The Judgment Theme in the Sacraments", in W. D. Davies and D. Daube, The Background of the New Testament and its Eschatology, In Honour of Charles Harold Dodd, 1956, 464–81; S. Mowinckel, He That Cometh, 1956; M. Noth, The History of Israel, 1958, 97–108; W. Pesch, "Judgement", EBT II 442–49; G. von Rad, Old Testament Theology, I, 1962; II, 1965, see indexes; W. Robinson, "The Judgment of God", SJT 4, 1951, 136–47; C. Roetzel, Judgment in the Community, 1972; and "The Judgment Form in Paul's Letters", JBL 88, 1969, 305–12; R. de Vaux, Ancient Israel, 1961, 143–63, 353 ff.; G. Vos, The Pauline Eschatology, 1952.

(b). P. Althaus, Die letzten Dinge, 1956⁶; J. Blank, Krisis. Untersuchungen zur johanneischen Christologie und Eschatologie, 1964; G. Bornkamm, "Der Lohngedanke im Neuen Testament", Theologie und Verkündigung, 1947, 7 ff.; and "Das Gottesgericht in der Geschichte", Studien zur Antike und Christentum, 1959, 47 ff.; H. Braun, Gerichtsgedanke und Rechtfertigung bei Paulus, 1930; E. Dinkler, "Rechtsnahme und Rechtsverzicht. Zum Problem der Ethik bei Paulus", ZTK 49, 1951, 167 ff., reprinted in Signum Crucis, 1967, 204 ff.; F. Horst, "Recht und Religion im Bereich des Alten Testaments", EvTh 16, 1956, 49 ff.; L. Mattern, Das Verständnis des Gerichtes bei Paulus, 1966; F. Nötscher, Zur theologischen Terminologie der Qumran-Texte, 1956; and Gotteswege und Menschenwege in der Bibel und in Qumran, 1958; W. Richter, "Zu den 'Richtern Israels' ", ZAW 77, 1965, 40 ff.; SB IV, 2, 1119–1212; H. Schuster, "Rechtfertigung und Gericht bei Paulus", Stat Crux Dum Volvitur Orbis, 1959, 57 ff.; P. Volz, Eschatologie der jüdischen Gemeinde, 1934², 89–97; R. Walker, "Die Heiden und das Gericht. Zur Auslegung von Röm. 2, 12–16", EvTh 20, 1960, 302 ff.; O. Weber, Grundlagen der Dogmatik, II, 1962, 718 ff.

K

King, Kingdom

βασιλεία

βασιλεύς (basileus), ruler, king; βασιλεία (basileia), kingship, kingly rule, kingdom; βασιλεύω (basileuō), to be king, rule; συμβασιλεύω (symbasileuō), share the rule; βασίλειος (basileios), royal; βασιλικός (basilikos), royal, kingly; βασίλισσα (basilissa), queen.

CL 1. The noun basileus occurs as early as Linear B, and is originally a general term for a ruler; later more specifically a king.

(a) In Mycenaean Gk. basileus does not mean sovereign of a state, but a subordinate prince or leader; the king is here the anax, i.e. divine ruler. The title anax and the ideas that went with it disappeared with time, and basileus took on the meaning of king in this sense (cf. T. B. L. Webster, From Mycenae to Homer, 1958).

(b) In Homer basileus is used of an hereditary, legitimate ruler, whether his sphere of influence be great or small. Thus Odysseus can be described as a basileus in Ithaca. The power of the king, from Homer onwards, is traced back to Zeus, and the king described as "nourished by Zeus [diotrephēs]" (cf. Homer, Il. 2, 196). Hesiod extols the king's wisdom and competence to judge, and makes him inspired by the Muses (Theogonia 886).

(c) After monarchy had given place to the rule of an aristocracy, and then in various Greek cities one of the nobles set himself up as monarch, a new term came into being for those who ruled in this fashion, tyrannos, one who has gained the rule by illegitimate means. Nothing derogatory is implied by this term about the way the rule is exercised. Not until the "slaying of the tyrants" (514 B.C. in Athens), and the subsequent glorification of those responsible, Harmodios and Aristogeiton, does the word tyrannos take on a negative meaning, and the term basileus, which has no longer any more than a marginal place in Greek political life, re-emerge as the title of a just and legal ruler. Plato in particular took this view, with his strong condemnation of the tyrant and his moral upgrading of the basileus by the requirement that kings should be philosophers and philosophers kings (Republic 5, 473d; Politicus 292e; cf. Aristotle, Politics 3, 1284a, 13).

(d) The Hellenistic concept of divine kingship is not derived from Plato. The development is adequately explained by the political traditions of the Macedonian monarchy and of the divine kingship of the Achaemenidae, and the overshadowing of both by the personality of Alexander the Great (356–323 B.C.). The special names of the Diadochoi, e.g. "benefactor", euergetēs, serve in the process of eliminating rivals, and are to be understood as divine attributes. One of the Diadochoi, Antiochus IV Epiphanes of Syria (c. 215–163 B.C.), became as a result of his attempt to force Hellenization on the Jews a symbol of man's opposition to God (on the erection of an altar to Zeus in the temple at Jerusalem [Mk. 13:14] → Abomination of Desolation).

(e) The Hellenistic idea of divine kingship originating with Alexander the Great was revived again in the Roman emperor cult. It was only by taking over the Hellenistic concept of the incarnation of divinity in the emperor that Augustus (63 B.C.–A.D. 14) was able to comprehend in his own person the imperium as a single whole, a unification for which there was neither national nor cultural precedent. The effect of the confession kyrios Iēsous, used by the Christians in proclaiming Jesus as the Lord, was to destroy this vital ideology of the Roman imperium, and the reaction it called forth was the persecution of Christians during the first three centuries (→ Confess). (On ruler worship in the Roman Empire see H. Lietzmann, The Beginnings of the Christian Church, 1949², 163 ff.)

2. The abstract noun basileia is of later origin than basileus, and is attested first in Hdt. 1, 11 (in the Ionic form basilēiē).

(a) The original meaning of the term basileia is the fact of being king, the position or power of the king, and it is best translated office of king, kingly rule (e.g. Aristotle, Politics 3, 1285b, 20).

(b) Besides this meaning there is a second meaning which emphasizes the geographical aspect of basileia; for the status of a king is shown by the area over which he reigns. basileia assumes therefore the meaning kingdom, signifying the state or area over which a king reigns (P.Oxy 1257, 7).

3. The vb. basileuō (Homer) means: (a) to be king, to reign (e.g. Homer, Il. 2, 203; Od. 2, 47); (b) inceptive: to become king, to begin to reign (Hdt. 2, 2). The vb. symbasileuō expresses the idea of ruling with (cf. Polyb., 30, 2, 4). The adjectives basileios and basilikos (Hdt., Aesch.) both express that which appertains to a king: royal. Finally the fem. term for king must be mentioned, basilissa, queen. This superseded the Attic forms basilis and basileia, and is found in the comic poet Alcaeus and in Xenophon, Oeconomicus 9, 15, and frequently in later writers (e.g. Philo and Josephus).

OT In the LXX the words of this root are very frequent, mostly as translations of Heb. derivatives of the root mālaḵ, to be king, to reign. In contrast to the NT (see below NT introductory paragraph), the term basileus, which appears frequently in almost all the books and especially in the historical writings, is far and away the most common. basileia occurs comparatively rarely (400 times) and not until Daniel does it begin to have a meaning of its own beside basileus. It is also important to observe that the words are used first and foremost for earthly kings and their secular government, and only secondarily of Yahweh's kingship. This means that the concept of Yahweh's kingly rule can only be presented in connection with the Israelite monarchy.

1. (a) From the conquest onwards, all the peoples with whom Israel came in contact had kings. Israel herself did not adopt monarchy as an institution until relatively late. This is all the more surprising in view of the fact that the Edomites, Moabites and Ammonites, who conquered their own territories during the same period as Israel, went over to government by a national monarchy soon after their settlement. The Israelites, on the other hand, continued for two centuries after the conquest of Canaan to function as a sacred confederation of tribes with a central sanctuary. Israel's initial hesitation to adopt the institution of monarchy is bound up with the concept of the holy war, which Yahweh himself conducts on Israel's behalf (Exod. 14:14; Jos. 23:10; Jdg. 7:22; cf. G. von Rad, Der heilige Krieg im alten Israel, 1965⁴, 6 ff., 14 ff.). Yahweh himself is seen as commander-in-chief of the Israelite army, and as the one to whom the land unconditionally belongs.

(b) Israel's constant harassment by the occasional subjection to the Philistines was the surface reason for the introduction of the monarchy. According to the older tradition (1 Sam. 9:1–10:16; 11:1–11, 14 f.), Yahweh himself took the initiative in view of the political extremity of his people, and had Saul the Benjaminite anointed king by Samuel (1 Sam. 9:16). Alongside this positive assessment of the monarchy, there was from the very beginning a rejection of it on the grounds of the theocratic lordship of Yahweh. This view flourished particularly in the northern kingdom. Thus there is a line stretching from Gideon of Manasseh ("I will not rule over you . . . Yahweh will rule over you" [Jdg. 8:23]), through Hosea the last prophet of the northern kingdom with his anti-monarchical tendency (Hos. 3:4; 7:3; 13:10 f.), to the Deuteronomistic account of the setting up of the monarchy in Israel (1 Sam. 8:1–22a; 10:17–27). Here the demand of the people, "Appoint for us a king to govern us like all the nations," received the answer from Yahweh, "They have rejected me from being king over them" (1 Sam. 8:5–7). The juxtaposition of the two accounts, one positive and the other critical, of the introduction of the monarchy (1 Sam. 8–12), makes clear the problem which beset the Israelite monarchy from the outset. On the one hand, it was seen as Yahweh's gift; on the other, as his rival.

(c) Of decisive significance for the Judean monarchy was the religious ratification it received through Nathan's prophetic promise to → David (2 Sam. 7:1–11b, 16). The house of David is here promised everlasting duration (verse 16). Because of this Davidic → covenant, the right of David's hereditary successors to the kingdom of Judah was never called in question. The dynasty was assured of continuance despite all the ups and downs which the throne underwent. By contrast the monarchy of the northern kingdom, after the non-renewal under Jeroboam I of the union with Judah (1 Ki. 12:1 ff.), never achieved the stability of the Davidic dynasty. Here the old ideal of charismatic leadership, as it had been known in Israel's formative period, lived on. According to it, only Yahweh's call fitted anyone for the office of ruler.

Another feature of the theology of kingship in Judah, in contrast to the Egyptian concept of a king who is divine by nature, is the adoption of the ruler as the son of Yahweh. This was celebrated at the festival of enthronement and hymned in the royal Psalms (e.g. Ps. 2:7; 45:7; 110:1). However, the less the kings of Judah in their historical reality measured up to the standards set forth in the theology of kingship, the more strongly did the expectation of an eschatological messianic king develop, who would finally fulfil the prophecy of Nathan and the associated concepts of kingship (Amos 9:11–15; but cf. Gen. 49:8–12). Isaiah in particular, a prophet who had close associations with the theology of kingship, prophesied of a branch of David that would bring in a new era of righteousness and peace (Isa. 11:1–9; 9:2–7; cf. also the messianic prophecies of Mic. 5:2 ff.; Jer. 23:5 f.; Ezek. 17:22 ff.; → Jesus Christ, art. Christos OT; → Son of God, art. hyios Dauid).

2. The kingship of Yahweh is an aspect of faith found neither in the wisdom literature, the oral teaching of many of the prophets, nor in a considerable number of historical narratives. It is frequent, on the other hand, in the hymns of the Psalter (the so-called enthronement-Psalms), later prophetic writings including the prophecies to the nations in Jeremiah (e.g. Jer. 46:18; 48:15; 51:57), and in the narrative parts of the book of Daniel. Thus it tends to feature in the later parts of the OT. This suggests that the concept of Yahweh's kingship was not a constitutive element in the original faith of Israel (cf. A. Alt, Kleine Schriften zur Geschichte des Volkes Israel, I, 1968⁴, 348). This is not to say that Israel did not from the first place herself under the rule of Yahweh. On the contrary, faith in the absolute lordship of Yahweh within the tribal confederacy goes back to the days before the formation of a political state (see above 1 (a)).

(a) The earliest example of the title king being used of Yahweh is in the 8th century "My eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts" (Isaiah 6:5). It is no coincidence that the title of king for Yahweh appears in the course of a vision which came to Isaiah in the central sanctuary at → Jerusalem. Texts discovered at Ugarit (in Syria) have revealed that in the Syro-Canaanite world there existed the idea of the "God most high" (cf. Gen. 14:18 f.) who bore the title of king (melek). The use of melek as a title for Yahweh has as its background the Syro-Canaanite world of ideas, and was probably originally drawn from the sacral traditions of the Jebusite city of Jerusalem and transferred to Yahweh there (Isa. 6:5). There is evidence of the existence of the mōlek cult (AV Molech, Moloch) among the original inhabitants of pre-Israelite Jerusalem (Lev. 18:21; 2 Ki. 23:10). Yahweh therefore would not have been described as melek before the time of the monarchy.

The divine title melek brought with it even in the Syro-Canaanite setting, a claim to universal authority which found expression particularly in lordship over the pantheon of gods. This universal claim is also reflected in the OT passages which talk about Yahweh the melek. Yahweh's kingship has a cosmic dimension: he is the creator of the world (cf. Pss. 24:1; 93:1; 95:3 ff.); "his kingdom rules over all the earth" (Ps. 47:2); he is the king of the nations (cf. Jer. 10:7; Ps. 47:3; 99:2).

(b) In addition to this concept of Yahweh being king, we find the dynamic concept of Yahweh becoming king. This finds expression especially in the enthronement-Psalms in the cry "Yahweh has become King!" (Pss. 47:8; 93:1; 96:10; 97:1; 99:1). (Note: Eng. versions have "The Lord reigns" for this Heb. perfect.)

The inseparability of the two concepts "Yahweh is king" and "Yahweh has become king" becomes especially evident in the later chapters of Isa. Yahweh is "King of Jacob" or "King of Israel" (Isa. 41:21; 44:6). Put in context of announcing the new exodus, a herald now brings to the city of Jerusalem the message: "Your God reigns" (Isa. 52:7). The enthronement-Psalms do not primarily announce an eschatological event, but a present reality experienced in the cultic ceremony. The proclamation of the reign of Yahweh as an eschatological event is now associated with the historical act of the new exodus. It is not nature and the cycle of the seasons (as in Babylonia), but the historical actions of Yahweh which form the basis of his "enthronement". (On the much-debated theory of an enthronement festival of Yahweh in Israel, cf. H.-J. Kraus, Psalmen, BKAT 15, I, § 6 XLIII f.; Excursus on Ps. 24, pp. 201 ff.; → Might, art. thronos OT 4).

(c) In the Judaean messianic theology of kingship the lordship of Yahweh is combined with the hoped-for lordship of the messiah. Thus it is the same prophet, Isaiah of Jerusalem, who was the first to use the royal title for Yahweh and who almost always related it to the currently reigning son of David. Even the messianic prince of the future is for Isaiah no autocrat, but one who is appointed (śar, official, vizier) and receives his office from God (Isa. 9:7; 11:1 f.). The rule of the future, messianic son of David is accordingly a delegated exercise of authority, representing the kingly rule of Yahweh.

The anti-monarchical bias of the northern kingdom (1 Sam. 8:7) stands in contrast to this, with a non-messianic eschatology (Hosea). This is also represented by Deutero-Isaiah who proclaimed from exile the kingship of Yahweh (Isa. 41:21; 44:6) and his eschatological enthronement (Isa. 52:7). Finally, in Ezekiel we find side by side the titles of king (Ezek. 37:24) and prince (Ezek. 37:24) for the messianic servant David.

3. The noun mal^{e}k̲ût is an early Heb. abstract noun with the meaning kingdom, reign. The reference is to power rather than to locality.

(a) The term mal^{e}k̲ût in the OT usually refers in a purely secular sense to political kingdoms (cf. 1 Sam. 20:31; 1 Ki. 2:12; 1 Chr. 12:23; 2 Chr. 11:17; Jer. 49:34; Dan. 9:1).

(b) Although the secular meaning of mal^{e}k̲ût is the most common one, there are occasional references to God's rule as his mal^{e}k̲ût, kingship, which he is presently exercising (Ps. 103:19; 145:11–13; Dan. 4:3). This is analogous to the use of melek̲, king, as an epithet of Yahweh.

(c) In later texts Yahweh's kingship is interpreted in an eschatological sense. The recognition begins to emerge of a kingdom of Yahweh at the end of time which breaks through all national barriers. One day Yahweh will rule over the whole earth. His throne will be in Jerusalem, and all nations will make their pilgrimage to Zion to worship him there (Isa. 24:23; Zech. 14:9; Obad. 21). A characteristic of the eschatological expectation of the later prophets is that Yahweh's mal^{e}k̲ût is always presented as immanent (cf. G. von Rad, TDNT I 568 ff.).

(d) Finally, in Dan. 7, this immanent eschatology is elevated to a transcendent level, in the concept of the kingdom of the "son of man" (v. 13 f.) and the kingdom of "the saints of the Most High" (v. 27). The son of man (→ Son of God, art. hyios tou anthrōpou) is an individual (v. 14) who represents the Most High (v. 27), as the king of Judah represented the people. In other words, when power is committed to the son of man, it is at the same time being given to the saints of the Most High. By these are meant the heavenly beings who surround God (M. Noth The Laws in the Pentateuch and Other Studies, 1966, 215–28; cf. Ps. 89:5–7; Job 15:15; Deut. 33:2; Zech. 14:5). The transfer of power to the son of man, representing the saints of the Most High, takes place within the heavenly realm (v. 12: "with the clouds of heaven there came one like a son of man"), so that the earthly empires symbolized by the four beasts are replaced by the transcendent rule of the saints of the Most High represented by the son of man. In the idea that God has a definite plan for the world (the four empires in succession), and in the dualism of the four world empires seen as the era of the evil one as over against the kingdom of God seen as transcendent, we have already the most important elements of apocalyptic.

4. (a) The expression kingdom of heaven (mal^{e}k̲ût šāmayim; Gk. basileia tōn ouranōn) owes its origin to the endeavour of Rab. Judaism to find an alternative for the divine name in the phrase mal^{e}k̲ût YHWH (kingdom of Yahweh) by using either šᵉḵînâh, glory (Gk. doxa) or šāmayim, heaven (Gk. ouranos). Kingdom of heaven is therefore a term which implies the essential idea that "God rules as King". It is a Jewish expression which is purely theological in its reference.

Since the kingdom of heaven is not evident in this world, it is necessary to decide for or against it by a decision of will. The expression "to take upon oneself the yoke of the kingdom of Yahweh" means to confess allegiance to the one God as King (cf. SB I 173 ff.). The opportunity to accept or reject the kingdom will, however, come to an end when Yahweh reveals himself at the end of time. In the theology of Rab. Judaism the kingdom of God is a purely eschatological concept (K. G. Kuhn TDNT I 574).

(b) As happened earlier with the OT eschatology of the northern kingdom (see above 2 (c)), there is a tension in Judaism between the expectation of the messiah, as a nationalistic, Israelite king at the end of time, and the hope of the eschatological revelation of the kingdom of God. In the last days the messiah will come, ascend the throne of Israel, and subject to himself all the nations of the earth (cf. SB IV 968 f.). Not until then will the hitherto hidden kingdom of heaven emerge from the transcendent realm. But there is in Judaism no inner connection between the coming of the national messianic king and the coming of the rule of God. This is further confirmed by the fact that the people of Israel as such receives no mention in statements concerning the kingdom of God. Membership of the nation can no longer be a determining factor, when it is a personal decision before God that is required. Thus proselytes can also take upon themselves the "yoke of the kingdom of God" (SB I 176). It should be noted further that in Rab. literature the term kingdom of heaven is comparatively rare and that it does not carry the same theological significance that it does in the preaching of Jesus. This helps to explain why those Jews who thought along nationalistic lines in terms of a nationalistic kingly messiah were bewildered by Jesus, while in the apocalyptic circles the expectation of the kingdom of God continued to live on. In the Qumran writings there are occasional references to the kingdom of God, but the Essenes had no expectation of its coming.

(c) The Apocryphal writings of the LXX in general follow the OT pattern of thought about the kingdom of God. In some places, however, where there is no Heb. equivalent, we may detect Hellenistic influence. Thus the LXX can identify the basileia with the four cardinal virtues (4 Macc. 2:23), and in Wis. 6:20 we read, "The desire for wisdom leads to a kingdom." This shift to an ethical meaning, in keeping with popular philosophy, is completed by Philo (cf. Migr.Abr. 97; Abr. 261; Sacr. 49; Som. 2, 244). The actual content of the basileia is the rule of the sage, seen as the true king (see above CL 1 (c)). The result of this shift of meaning was that the eschatological character of the term as used in the OT was inevitably lost. "The basileia constitutes a chapter in his moral doctrine. The true king is the wise man" (K. L. Schmidt, TDNT I 576). Josephus does not speak of basileus and basileia, but of hēgemōn, governor, and hēgemonia, direction, administration (cf. A. Schlatter, Wie sprach Josephus von Gott?, 1910, 11 f.; for these terms in the NT → Caesar, art. hēgemōn).

NT In the NT basileia is used more frequently than basileus and basileuō (cf. above OT introductory paragraph). Taking the words from this root together, we find that they belong chiefly to the vocabulary of the Synoptic Gospels. In Matt. and Lk.-Acts basileus, and to an even greater extent basileia, play a positively decisive rôle. The two nouns are used only occasionally in Jn., the Pauline corpus, and the other NT epistles, but they come to the fore again in Rev. The vb. basileuō, on the other hand, appears only occasionally in the Synoptic Gospels, though more often in Rev. It has its maximum theological significance in Paul (Rom., 1 Cor.).

1. basileus in the NT. The NT follows closely the precedent set by the OT and Judaism in giving to God and Christ alone the full right to the title king. Human kings, by contrast, are generally regarded as of limited importance.

(a) The earthly kings referred to are frequently those who set themselves against God and his Christ: Pharaoh (Acts 7:10; Heb. 11:23, 27); Herod the Great (Matt. 2:1 ff.; Lk. 1:5); Herod Antipas (Matt. 14:8); Herod Agrippa I (Acts 12:1, 20); Herod Agrippa II (Acts 25:13 f. etc.); Aretas (2 Cor. 11:32); and the Roman emperor (1 Tim. 2:2; 1 Pet. 2:13; Rev. 17:9 ff.). These rulers are called "kings of the earth" (Matt. 17:25; Acts 4:26; Rev. 1:5; 6:15); "kings of the Gentiles (Lk. 22:25); or "kings of the whole world" (Rev. 16:14; cf. Ps. 2:2 and 89:27; cf. TDNT I 576 f.).

Just as the OT is at variance with oriental views of divine kingship, so the NT is opposed to Hellenistic and Roman ideas of this kind: the earthly king is not an incarnation of the deity, since no one but God or the messiah can occupy such a position. Thus in Rev., in sharp contrast to the presumptuous claims to divinity of Domitian, only God is recognized as king of the nations basileus tōn ethnōn (Rev. 15:3 v.l.), and only Christ as the king of kings, basileus basileōn (Rev. 19:16; 17:14). The OT attitude to the great kings is found again in the NT with regard to the "kings of the east" (Rev. 16:12): the supremacy of God is asserted by making them a rod in his hand, only to destroy them at the last day if they do not submit to him in obedience (Rev. 17:2 ff.; 18:3 ff.; 19:18 ff.; 21:24).

(b) Only → David and → Melchizedek receive a positive assessment, by contrast with the earthly kings mentioned otherwise in the NT: David, because as the king chosen by God (2 Sam. 7) he is the forefather of Jesus Christ (cf. Matt. 1:6; Acts 13:22); Melchizedek, because as the priest-king of Salem (Gen. 14:18) he is the OT type of the high priesthood of Christ (Heb. 7:1 ff.).

(c) Jesus "who was descended from David according to the flesh" (Rom. 1:3; Matt. 1:6) is described in the NT as the messianic King of the Jews (basileus tōn Ioudaiōn) or King of Israel (basileus Israēl) (→ Israel, art. Israēl NT). Son of David, King of the Jews, King of Israel are messianic titles (→ Son of God).

(i) The first thing we notice here is that these titles are used principally in the section of the Gospels portraying the trial before Pilate (Mk. 15; Matt. 27; Lk. 23; Jn. 18 f.), and here exclusively on the lips of the Jewish opponents of Jesus, or of Pilate and his soldiers. basileus tōn Ioudaiōn does not appear as a self-designation of Jesus. Thus Jesus was accused by the throng of saying that he was "Christ a king" (Lk. 23:2). Jesus was asked by Pilate, "Are you the king of the Jews?" (Mk. 15:2 par. Matt. 27:11, Lk. 23:3). The people were confronted by Pilate with a decision: "Do you want me to release for you the King of the Jews?" (Mk. 15:9 par. Matt. 27:17; cf. Lk. 23:17). And after the condemnation of Jesus, the soldiers mocked him in the praetorium with the words, "Hail, King of the Jews!" (Mk. 15:18 par. Matt. 27:29). On the cross the inscription of the charge read "The King of the Jews" (Mk. 15:26 par. Matt. 27:37, Lk. 23:38, Jn. 19:19). Like the soldiers on guard (Lk. 23:37), the rulers of the people mocked as they passed by, "Let the Christ, the King of Israel, come down now from the cross, that we may see and believe" (Mk. 15:32 par. Matt. 27:42, Lk. 23:35).

(ii) If it is true, as the Roman inscription on the cross makes probable, that Jesus was condemned on a charge of claiming to be the messianic king of Israel, and if this claim is never found on the lips of Jesus, we may suppose that the basis of the charge is to be seen and found largely in the way Jesus behaved. (O. Cullmann regards the inscription as "almost irrefutable proof that Jesus in some way made himself the subject of his preaching on the Kingdom of God soon to come" [Salvation in History, 1967, 109; cf. The State in the New Testament, 1957, 8–49].) At any rate it is unlikely that the Jewish leaders acted out of pure malice in accusing Jesus of being a pretender to the throne, or that Pilate had no other intention in ordering the inscription on the cross than to make mock of Jewish messianism. (On the crucifixion of Jesus → Cross, art. stauros NT 1; on the trial of Jesus see D. R. Catchpole, The Trial of Jesus: A Study in the Gospels and Jewish Historiography from 1770 to the Present Day, 1971.) Rather we should note that Jesus himself saw his miracles of healing, his casting out of demons, and his preaching of the gospel to the poor as the fulfilment of Isaianic prophecies (Isa. 29:18 f.; 35:5 f.; 61:1 f.), and accordingly as messianic events (Matt. 11:2–6; Lk. 4:16–27). Moreover, his two principal actions during the last days at Jerusalem—the entry into Jerusalem (Matt. 21:1–9; Mk. 11:1–10; Lk. 19:28–38; Jn. 12:12–19) and the cleansing of the temple (Matt. 21:12 f.; Mk. 11:15–19; Lk. 19:47 f.)—make it clear that Jesus knew himself to be the fulfiller of messianic prophecies (cf. Isa. 62:11; Zech. 9:9; 2 Ki. 9:13; Ps. 118:26; and Exod. 30:13; Lev. 1:14; Isa. 56:7; Jer. 7:11 for OT allusions in these narratives).

(iii) It is also demonstrable that Jesus was confronted during his ministry with the question whether he was the messiah, when for instance in connection with the feeding of the five thousand the people wanted "to make him king" (Jn. 6:15). Similarly, in the "old reliable tradition" (W. G. Kümmel, Promise and Fulfilment, 1961², 111) John the Baptist's question (Matt. 11:3 par. Lk. 7:19 f.) used a term for the messiah which was not at all common among the Jews, "the coming one [ho erchomenos]" (→ Come, art. erchomai NT 3), in asking whether Jesus was he. Jesus' answer here is characteristic, in that he did not respond to the question directly with an open declaration of his messiahship. Instead he pointed to the fulfilment of Isaianic prophecies in veiled language that challenged the hearer to make up his mind (Matt. 11:5 par. Lk. 7:22). In view of the lowliness of Jesus the messiah, it is the visible messianic actions which retain more significance for the outsider. The fact that Jesus saw himself to be the king of the Jews and messiah of his people, and yet concealed it in this way, is his "messianic secret" (on the question of Jesus' messianic consciousness → Jesus Christ, art. Christos NT 5 and the literature under both Iēsous and Christos; → also Secret).

The same point is brought out by the short answer of Jesus, recorded by all the evangelists, to Pilate's question, whether he is the King of the Jews: "You say so [sy legeis]" (Matt. 27:2; Mk. 15:2; Lk. 23:3). Only once did Jesus openly reveal this messianic secret, and that is in the trial before the Sanhedrin (Matt. 26:57–75; Mk. 14:53–72; Lk. 22:54–71). To the question of the high priest, "Are you the Christ?" he replied unequivocally with the statement, "I am; and you will see the Son of man sitting at the right hand of Power, and coming with the clouds of heaven" (Mk. 14:62; cf. Matt. 26:64; Lk. 22:69; on the Son of man, → Son of God, art. hyios tou anthrōpou NT).

(iv) In the earliest Christian writings outside the Synoptic tradition and John's Gospel, i.e. in Acts and the writings of Paul, there is no mention of "King of Israel" or "King of the Jews". Nevertheless, it can be seen from a passage like Acts 17:7 that Christians in Thessalonica were being denounced by the Jews for confessing allegiance to Jesus as another king (basilea heteron). There is a certain irony in the way the Jews accused Christians of opposing the quasi-divine claims of the Roman emperor. However, it is basically true to say that with the application of the messianic title Christ to Jesus, the proclamation of Jesus as king of Israel faded eventually into the background, giving way to a christological, soteriological kerygma which focussed on the → Cross and → resurrection of Jesus (cf. Rom. 4:25; 1 Cor. 15:3 f.). (On the formation of the kerygma see C. H. Dodd, The Apostolic Preaching and its Developments, 1936; "The Framework of the Gospel Narrative", New Testament Studies, 1953, 1–11; cf. the not altogether convincing critique by D. E. Nineham, "The Order of Events in St. Mark's Gospel – an Examination of Dr. Dodd's Hypothesis" in D. E. Nineham, ed., Studies in the Gospels: Essays in Memory of R. H. Lightfoot, 1955, 223–40; → Proclamation.).

(d) In his Institutes of the Christian Religion 2, 15 Calvin expounded the three offices of Christ as → prophet, → priest and king, showing how these offices were anticipated by the corresponding figures in the OT and how they are appropriated by believers. The thought of the people of God sharing in kingship goes back to the OT. Exod. 19:6 contains the promise based on the → covenant: "And you shall be to me a kingdom of priests [basileia hierateuma] and a holy nation" (cf. Isa. 61:6). This thought is applied to Christian believers in Rev. 1:6 and 5:10 (where basileia is used in both cases). In the former passage it refers to believers in the present time; in the latter it is part of the "new song" of the saints before the → lamb.

The same thought occurs in 1 Pet. 2:9: "But you are a chosen race, a royal priesthood [basileion hierateuma], a holy nation, God's own people, that you may declare the wonderful deeds of him who called you out of darkness into his marvellous light" (RSV). The word translated here as "royal", basileion, can be taken either as a neut. adj. agreeing with hierateuma (as in RSV) or as a noun, i.e. group of kings (cf. E. Best, I Peter, 1971, 107 f.). Although there is no actual occurrence of the word in this sense, Best holds that its form indicates that such a meaning is possible. Moreover, it accords with the Targumic interpretation of Exod. 19:6 and the Christian tradition of Rev. 5:10, where the glorified saints "shall reign [basileusousin] on earth" (cf. Rev. 1:6).

The vb. basileuō, reign, is used of the reign of believers in Rom. 5:17 (where it is contrasted with the reign of death, cf. 5:14, 17, 21; cf. also the reign of sin, Rom. 6:12); 1 Cor. 4:8 (here ironically of the lordly behaviour of the Corinthians which, in fact, falls short of true reigning); and Rev. 20:4, 6; 20:5 (of the reign of the saints on earth and in glory). For the idea of reigning expressed in other terms see Eph. 2:6; 2 Tim. 2:12; Jas. 2:5 (cf. the third Beatitude "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth, Matt. 5:5; → Inheritance, art. klēroō). For other instances of basileuō see Matt. 2:22; Lk. 1:33; 9:14; 1 Cor. 15:25; 1 Tim. 6:15; Rev. 11:15, 17; 19:6. See further J. H. Elliott, The Elect and the Holy, Supplements to NovT 12, 1966; and E. Best, "I Peter 2:4–10, A Reconsideration", NovT 11, 1969, 270–93.

(e) basilissa, queen, occurs only 4 times in the NT. Matt. and Lk. both record the saying about the queen of the South in the context of the sign of → Jonah. "The queen of the South will arise at the judgment with this generation and condemn it; for she came from the ends of the earth to hear the wisdom of Solomon, and behold, something greater than Solomon is here" (Matt. 12:42 par. Lk. 11:31; cf. 1 Ki. 10:1–10; 2 Chron. 9:1–12; → Solomon). Although Sheba is today identified with Arabia, Josephus connected the Queen of Sheba with Ethiopia (Ant. 2, 10, 2; 8, 6, 5 f.). Later Arabic legend made her Solomon's wife, and the Ethiopian royal line claims descent from Solomon and the Queen of Sheba. In the NT she is an example to the Jews of the lengths to which a non-Jew might go in seeking wisdom. All the more reason have the Jews themselves cause to leave their ways, for paradoxically there is in Jesus the Galilean preacher "something greater than Solomon." Acts 8:27 might be regarded as an illustration of a similar response of a non-Jew. The Ethiopian → eunuch is described there as "a minister of Candace the queen of the Ethiopians, in charge of all her treasure, [who] had come to Jerusalem to worship." He too was a seeker. The episode is all the more pointed in the light of the persecution by the Jews which has just scattered the Jerusalem church (Acts 8:1), the eunuch's study of scripture (Isa. 53:7 f.; Acts 8:32 f.), and the fact that he was a eunuch. By contrast Babylon who plays the queen is judged (Rev. 18:7).

2. The use of basileia in the NT. (a) General. For the earthly, human king there is a corresponding earthly, human kingdom. In this sense basileia means, according to context, the office of king (e.g. Lk. 19:12, 15; Rev. 17:12) and also the area governed, domain (e.g. Matt. 4:8 par. Lk. 4:5; Mk. 6:23; Rev. 16:10). In almost all these passages the earthly kingdoms stand in contrast – though this is often unexpressed – to the basileia tou theou, kingdom of God, since they are subject to "the god of this world", the diabolos, devil, → Satan (Matt. 4:8). In Matt. 12:26 there is even explicit mention of the basileia of the devil. This is particularly true with regard to the Roman Empire, described in Rev. expressly as the beast (Rev. 13:1; → Animal, art. thērion).

(b) Kingdom of God. hē basileia tou theou is a term of central importance only within the Synoptic tradition. The form of the expression varies: Mk. and Lk. speak of the kingdom of God, while Matt. has kingdom of heaven and kingdom of the Father. Evidence that Mk. and Lk. preserve in basileia tou theou the older form used by Jesus himself is provided by two observations. First, both the sayings-source and Mk. have this formula in the places where Matt. speaks of the basileia tōn ouranōn, kingdom of heaven (Mk. 1:15; Matt. 4:17; Lk. 6:20 par. Matt. 5:3). Secondly and more important, Matt. itself contains four instances of the older term kingdom of God (12:28; 19:34; 21:31; 21:43). Jesus probably, therefore, spoke exclusively of the basileia tou theou. This is not to say that he never used a circumlocution for the divine name. It is exemplified by Matt. 5:4, where the passive paraklēthēsontai, "they shall be comforted", means that God will comfort them; and Lk. 16:9, where the plur. "they" i.e. the angels, will receive you into the eternal habitations means that God will receive you (cf. also Lk. 12:20; 23:31). ([Ed.] The "they" in Lk. 16:9 might, however, also be taken to refer to those benefited by the use of mammon.) Where basileia is used alone, without the addition of tou theou, it is qualified by its context: tēn hetoimasmenēn hymin basileian, "the kingdom prepared for you" (Matt. 25:34; cf. 6:10); God will throw the sons of the kingdom into the outer darkness (Matt. 8:12; cf. Lk. 12:32; 22:29).

(c) The Kingdom of God to come in the future. In order to understand Jesus' proclamation of the Kingdom of God, it is best, in accordance with the apocalyptic, eschatological character of that proclamation, to start with those passages which deal with the coming of the Kingdom of God in the near future. Mk. 1:15 records the theme of Jesus' preaching in a pregnant sentence: "The kingdom of God has come near [ēngiken hē basileia tou theou]" (cf. Matt. 3:2; 5:17). The same theme is found in other places: "The kingdom of God is near [engys estin]" (Lk. 21:31; → Goal, art. engys); it "is coming [erchetai]" (Lk. 17:20; → Come, art. erchomai, NT 3). Thus Jesus did not preach that there was a kingdom of God to which one must confess allegiance (cf. Rab. Judaism, see above OT 4 (a)), but that the rule of God is coming.

Just as when the fig-tree puts out leaves summer is known to be near, so the events of the present guarantee that God's rule will soon break in on the world (Matt. 24:32 f.; Mk. 13:28 f.; Lk. 21:29 ff.; → Fruit, art. sykē). It is to this sudden, unexpected irruption of the kingdom of God that Jesus' parables of the Parousia point: the sudden coming of the flood (Matt. 24:37 ff.; Lk. 17:26 ff.; → Noah), the unexpected entrance of the burglar (Matt. 24:43 f.; Lk. 12:39 f.), the surprise of the doorkeeper and the servant at the homecoming of their master (Matt. 24:45 ff.; cf. Lk. 12:42–6), the sudden arrival of the bridegroom (Matt. 25:1–13). All these are pictures of the sudden irruption of the catastrophe, of the eschatological crisis which is impending a short time ahead: "Truly, there are some standing here who will not taste death before they see the kingdom of God come with power" (Mk. 9:1; cf. Matt. 16:28; Lk. 9:27).

For Jesus the advent of the kingdom was so imminent that he vowed not to "drink of the fruit of the vine until the kingdom of God comes" (Lk. 22:18; cf. Mk. 14:25). The Parousia (→ Present) of the Son of man will take place even before the disciples have finished proclaiming the kingdom of God in Israel (Matt. 10:23). From these references it may be concluded that Jesus proclaimed the imminent advent of the kingdom of God within the lifetime of his hearers' generation (Mk. 9:1; 13:30). (On the interpretation of this → Generation, art. genea NT.; → Present).

(d) The Kingdom of God in the present. Although for Jesus the realization of God's rule is still in the future, its urgent proximity already casts its shadow over the present: "If it is by the Spirit of God that I cast out demons, then the kingdom of God has come upon you" (Matt. 12:28; cf. Lk. 11:20). The casting out of → demons reveals that the devil has been bound by one stronger than he (Matt. 12:29; Mk. 3:27; Lk. 11:21). The disarming of → Satan, an event which the Jews expected in the end-time (SB I 167 f.), has taken place (Lk. 10:18); in the works of Jesus the kingdom of God is already a present reality.

To the Pharisees' question, "When is the kingdom of God coming?", Jesus can therefore answer, "The kingdom of God is in the midst of you" (Lk. 17:20 f.; not as AV "is within you"). (On the prep. entos used here see Arndt, 268 f. and the literature there referred to.) Because the kingdom is already present, the friends of the bridegroom cannot fast (Mk. 2:19; cf. Matt. 9:15; Lk. 5:34); and it is the Father's good pleasure, eudokēsen (aorist), to give Jesus' disciples (the "little flock") the kingdom (Lk. 12:32). With the appearance of John the Baptist, according to an early logion, the era of the old revelation of God came to an end, and at the same time the new era began. The kingdom of God, already present, is "violently assaulted [biazetai]" (Matt. 11:12 f.; cf. Lk. 16:16). "The allusion may be to the opposition of Satan and evil spirits to the Kingdom, or to the violence of Herod Antipas to John; but a more likely explanation is that the reference is either to Zealots who try to bring in the Kingdom by employing force against the Romans or to Jewish antagonists of Jesus who continue to persecute Christians" (D. Hill, The Gospel of Matthew, 1972, 200).

(e) The Kingdom of God and the person of Jesus: an eschatology in process of realization. In comparing the eschatology of Jesus with that of Judaism, it is not sufficient to characterize the former as the ultimate extreme of imminent expectation. Of far more importance is Jesus' claim that the verdict to be passed on men in the final judgment is already determined by the attitude they adopt to himself in the present age. "Every one who acknowledges me before men, I also will acknowledge before my Father who is in heaven" (Matt. 10:32; cf. Lk. 12:8). He who hears the words of Jesus and does them will survive the eschatological crisis. The unrepentant cities, on the other hand, will be condemned, because in spite of the "mighty works" done in them by Jesus (Matt. 11:21 ff.; cf. Lk. 10:13 ff.), they have not repented. Jesus himself will appear as the eschatological judge (Matt. 25:31). He will disown those who merely say "Lord, Lord" (Matt. 7:23; cf. Lk. 13:27), and plead before the Father the cause of those who have confessed him (Matt. 10:32; cf. Lk. 12:8). A man's final destiny is decided by the attitude he adopts to Jesus' word and action (Matt. 7:24–27; cf. Lk. 6:47 ff.), in other words by his attitude to Jesus himself. For this present age, marked as it is by the activity and preaching of Jesus, bears a special relation to the coming day of → judgment. The new and distinctive factor, compared with the Rab. view of the kingdom of God, is not simply that it is coming, but that it is inextricably bound up with the person of Jesus. As W. G. Kümmel puts it, "It is the person of Jesus whose activities provoke the presence of the eschatological consummation and who therefore stands at the centre of his eschatological message" (op. cit., 108). The future rule of God has already in the person of Jesus become a reality in word and deed. The coming, imminent kingdom of God is already present in him. The interpretation of this teaching has led to radically divergent theses in the course of theological discussion. (For a more detailed survey of eschatological interpretation → Present: The Parousia and Eschatology in the NT.)

The school of Ritschl regarded the kingdom of God in the present as an ethical attitude which produces a moral society. Ritschl discarded apocalyptic, eschatological expectation as an outdated relic of Judaism. Johannes Weiss and Albert Schweitzer took the opposing view known as "consistent eschatology" or "thoroughgoing eschatology". They rightly pointed out that Jesus himself linked his message with Jewish apocalyptic by making its central theme the announcement that the end of the world was impending (A. Schweitzer, The Quest of the Historical Jesus, (1910) 1954³, see especially ch. 19 on "Thoroughgoing Scepticism and Thoroughgoing Eschatology", 328–95). According to Schweitzer, the distinctively new element in the preaching of Jesus, as compared with apocalyptic, is the nearness of the world catastrophe.

In contrast to this solution offered by "consistent eschatology", a large proportion of scholars in the English-speaking world have, under the influence of C. H. Dodd, completely eliminated "futurist eschatology" from the proclamation, seeing it as a product of re-Judaizing within the Christian community, and speak of a "realized eschatology" in Jesus' preaching. In view of the presumed Aramaic original Dodd translates Mk. 1:15 as "The kingdom of God has come" (The Parables of the Kingdom, 1935, 44). He has thus reinstated an important element in Jesus' proclamation of the kingdom of God, as against the views of A. Schweitzer, though he too has over-emphasized one side. Dodd subsequently modified his way of describing his understanding of NT eschatology. He came to speak of "an eschatology that is in process of realization", a view which comes close to that of J. Jeremias (The Parables of Jesus, 1963², 230; cf. C. H. Dodd, The Interpretation of the Fourth Gospel, 1953, 447).

Rudolf Bultmann is in basic agreement with Schweitzer's "consistent eschatology". "There can be no doubt that Jesus like his contemporaries expected a tremendous eschatological drama" (Jesus and the Word, 1935, 38). However, Bultmann attempts by means of his existential interpretation to distill from the mythical, apocalyptic future hope of Jesus the real meaning in existential terms. For him the expectation of the end of the world as a future event in time is an expression of the conviction that it is in the present moment that man is faced with a decision. Thus "every hour is the last hour" (op. cit., 52; cf. History and Eschatology, [1957] 1962, 154 f.). The true meaning of the eschatological preaching of Jesus concerning the impending kingdom of God lies, according to Bultmann, in the assertion that man is faced with a decision. "The future Kingdom of God, then, is not something which is to come in the course of time, so that to advance its coming one can do something in particular, perhaps through penitential prayers and good works, which become superfluous in the moment of its coming. Rather, the Kingdom of God is a power which, although it is entirely future, wholly determines the present" (op. cit., 51).

Against this view it must be maintained that it is not the purpose of Jesus' proclamation of the kingdom of God simply to call men to repentance and face them with a decision. At the centre of Jesus' message is the proclamation of the urgent proximity of God's kingdom, the announcement that God is about to inaugurate his world-wide reign. Repentance and decision are consequences, but not the actual theme of Jesus' proclamation of the impending kingdom (cf. Matt. 3:2; 4:17). The fact that Jesus averted a question which sought an apocalyptic timetable (Lk. 17:20 f.) must not be interpreted as an indication that the announcement of the kingdom of God is concentrated in the existential meaning.

Jesus, therefore, preached the kingdom of God neither solely as a present reality nor exclusively as a future event. Rather, he was aware that the future rule of God was present in his actions and in his person. He spoke, therefore, of the future kingdom, which would suddenly dawn, as already realizing itself in the present. Thus the nature of Jesus' eschatology is probably best described by the expression "an eschatology in process of realization" (E. Haenchen quoted by J. Jeremias, op. cit., 230). For the connection between the proclamation of the kingdom of God and the Son of man sayings, → Son of God, art. hyios tou anthrōpou.

3. The Kingdom of God in the preaching of Jesus. (a) As depicted in the preaching of Jesus, the kingdom of God may be characterized as being "opposed to everything present and earthly, to everything here and now. It is thus absolutely miraculous" (K. L. Schmidt, TDNT I 584). Man can, therefore, neither hasten the coming of the kingdom of God by doing battle with God's enemies (as the Zealots hoped), nor force it to appear by scrupulous observation of the law (as the Pharisees hoped). He can only await its coming in patience and confidence, as in the parables of the mustard seed (Matt. 13:31 f.; Mk. 4:30 ff.), the leaven (Matt. 13:33), and the seed growing secretly (Mk. 4:26–29).

(b) This kingdom is coming in the form of a cosmic catastrophe (Lk. 17:26; Mk. 13:26; 14:62), ushered in by the appearance of the → Son of man. Jesus thus aligned himself, not with the concept of an earthly, nationalistic messiah, but with the apocalyptic tradition in Judaism with its expectation of the Son of man. At the same time he avoided describing events in detail, although he clearly used apocalyptic imagery (e.g. the heavenly feast in the kingdom of God, Mk. 14:25; Matt. 8:11). Also connected with this toning down of apocalyptic ideas is Jesus' rejection of all attempts to discern signs of the end: "The kingdom of God is not coming with signs to be observed" (Lk. 17:20).

(c) Although Jesus shared with apocalyptic writers a cosmic, universal type of eschatology, in contrast to the political and nationalistic concept of the messiah, he nonetheless upheld the OT doctrine of election (Matt. 10:6) with the associated belief that it is the will of Yahweh to reach the whole world through the nation of → Israel. This is not to say that Israel has a special claim on God's favour. Indeed, Israel is in danger of being put to shame by the heathen on the day of judgment (Matt. 12:42 par. Lk. 11:31). The kingdom will be taken from Israel and given to the Gentiles (Matt. 21:43). God will cast the sons of the kingdom (Israel) into outer darkness (Matt. 8:12; cf. Lk. 13:28). But Jesus promised the Twelve (→ Apostle), as the representatives of the eschatological people of God, the office of judges and rulers in the future kingdom of God (Matt. 19:28; Lk. 22:28 ff.; cf. Mk. 10:35–45).

(d) The facts that the kingdom is the gift of God (Lk. 12:32) and that it is appointed to men (diatithēmi) by → covenant (Lk. 22:29) have their counterparts in the teaching that a person can only receive it like a child (Mk. 10:15 par. Lk. 18:17; cf. Matt. 18:3; Jn. 3:3) and that it is something for which one must wait (Mk. 15:43 par. Lk. 23:51). Particularly frequent is the metaphor of entering (eiserchesthai) the kingdom of God (Matt. 5:20; 7:21; 18:3; 19:23 f.; 23:13; Jn. 3:5). Entry into the kingdom in the fullest sense lies in the future (Matt. 25:34; Mk. 9:43 ff.). But the presence of the kingdom of God in the person of Jesus faces the individual with a clear-cut decision. The Yes or No nature of this situation is illustrated by the hyperbole of Jesus: "If your right hand causes you to sin, cut it off and throw it away; it is better to lose one of your members than let your whole body go into hell" (Matt. 5:30; cf. 18:8 f.; Mk. 9:43–48). Some have even made themselves → eunuchs for the kingdom's sake (Matt. 19:12). "No one who puts his hand to the plough and looks back is fit for the kingdom of God" (Lk. 9:62). The decision is not a result of mere enthusiasm; it is to be made after careful previous consideration (Lk. 14:28–32) and in obedience to Jesus' word (Matt. 7:24–27). But when it is made, it involves a readiness for sacrifice which may mean self-denial to the point of being hated by one's own family (Matt. 10:17 ff., 37). Yet the decision is not born of a rigid fanaticism, but against a background of overwhelming joy at the greatness of God's gift (cf. the parables of the hidden treasure and the pearl of great price, Matt. 13:44–46).

(e) The kingdom of God is utterly transcendent and supernatural: it comes from above, from God alone. When God's kingdom comes, the hungry will be filled and the sad will be comforted (cf. the Beatitudes, Matt. 5:3–10; Lk. 6:20 ff.). It demands that men should love their enemies (Matt. 5:38–42; Lk. 6:27 f., 32–36), and they will be as free from care as the birds of the air and the lilies of the field (Matt. 6:25–33; Lk. 12:22–31). Here again it is Jesus himself, in whom alone the future kingdom of God is present, in whose words and deeds that kingdom has already appeared. It has come already, in that Jesus seeks out the company of tax-collectors and sinners, offering them fellowship at table and so promising them forgiveness of their sins. As the king invites to his feast the beggars and homeless (Matt. 22:1–10), as the father's love receives back again the prodigal son (Lk. 15:11–32), as the shepherd goes out after the lost sheep (Lk. 15:4–7), as the woman searches for the lost coin (Lk. 15:8–10), as the master out of the goodness of his heart pays the labourers hired at the last hour the full day's pay (Matt. 20:1–15), so Jesus goes to the poor to give them the promise of forgiveness, "for theirs is the kingdom of heaven" (Matt. 5:3). Only sinners, who know what it is like to have a great burden of → guilt (Lk. 7:41–43), can appreciate the remission of sins through the goodness of God. For "those who are well have no need of a physician, but those who are sick" (Mk. 2:17; cf. Matt. 9:12; Lk. 5:31).

The distinctive feature of Jesus' proclamation of the kingdom of God is not therefore that he brought a new doctrine of the kingdom, or that he revolutionized people's apocalyptic and eschatological expectations, but that he made the kingdom of God inseparable from his own person. The new thing about Jesus's preaching of the kingdom is "He himself, simply his person" (J. Schniewind).

4. The Kingdom of God and the Kingdom of Christ outside the preaching of Jesus. (a) The Kingdom of Christ. Jesus himself spoke only of the basileia tou theou, the kingdom of God, which he tied up inextricably with his own person. Only in this sense did he declare it to be already present. After the resurrection the church, convinced that he had been exalted to the status of → Lord (kyrios, Phil. 2:9–11; Acts 2:36), maintained Jesus' christological emphasis in the preaching of the kingdom, and accordingly went on to speak of the basileia of Christ. They thus preserved the christological interpretation which Jesus had given to the kingdom of God, i.e. the inseparable connection between Jesus and the kingdom: only in himself is the kingdom of God present.

Where we read of the basileia of Christ we are dealing with the language of the early church. This is shown not only by the fact that the "conception of the Kingdom of Christ is foreign to the oldest stratum of tradition" (J. Jeremias, op. cit., 82), but also by the observation that the majority of texts which speak of the basileia of Christ may be recognized as redactional adaptations of an older original. Mk. 9:1 is older than Matt. 16:28; and Mk. 10:37 is older than Matt. 20:21.

basileia tou hyiou tou anthrōpou in Matt. 13:41 is an expression peculiar to Matt. and is found otherwise only at Matt. 16:28. The subordinate clause "that you may eat and drink in my kingdom" in Lk. 22:30 is lacking in the Matthaean parallel, Matt. 19:28.

This redaction of older versions is a legitimate development. Thus according to Jn. 18:36, Jesus says: "My kingdom is not of this world." Likewise 2 Tim. 4:18 speaks of the confidence of being delivered from every kind of evil and of being "saved for his heavenly kingdom [eis tēn basileian autou epouranion]" (cf. 2 Tim. 4:1; 2 Pet. 1:11). The inseparable connection between the person of Jesus and the presence of God's kingdom is expressed most clearly of all when Jesus Christ himself becomes an equivalent for "kingdom of God", as is shown by the following comparisons. Whereas Joseph of Arimathea was waiting for "the kingdom of God" (Mk. 15:43), believers are awaiting "their Lord" (Phil. 3:20). Whereas Jesus' message may be summed up as "The kingdom of God is at hand [ēngiken hē basileia tou theou]" (Mk. 1:15), James says, "The coming of the Lord is at hand [hē parousia tou kyriou ēngiken]" (Jas. 5:8). The disciple forsakes his family for Jesus' sake (heneken emou, Mk. 10:29) or for the sake of the kingdom of God (heneken tēs basileias tou theou, Lk. 18:29). This present → generation is to see the coming of "the kingdom of God" (Mk. 9:1), or of "the Son of man coming in his kingdom" (Matt. 16:28; cf. also Lk. 21:31 and Mk. 13:29). In Samaria Philip preached "good news about the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ" (Acts 8:12; cf. 28:31).

The phrase "basileia of Christ" and the equation of "kingdom of God" with Jesus Christ are thus seen to be the result of the change-over from an implicit to an explicit christology. They make it clear that Jesus' proclamation of the kingdom of God was in no way displaced in the early church by the proclamation of Jesus Christ. The post-resurrection christology, in which Jesus Christ is the centre of the kerygma, is rather the outcome of the realization that the kingdom of God is present only in the person of Jesus Christ, so that one can only properly speak of the kingdom of God by speaking of Jesus Christ. Since the kingdom is bound up with the person of Jesus, the good news which Jesus preached of the dawning of God's kingdom becomes, after Easter, the → gospel of Jesus Christ and the proclamation of his kingdom.

(b) Jesus' proclamation of the kingdom of God and the kerygma outside the synoptic tradition. The kingdom of God, which is the central concept in the preaching of Jesus, has only a peripheral place outside the Synoptic Gospels. In its place we find the christological kerygma of the → cross and → resurrection of Jesus, the expectation of the Parousia and the general resurrection of the dead, and the use of terms such as → life (zōē, in Jn.) and → righteousness (dikaiosynē, in Paul). Is there a logical sequence from Jesus' preaching of the kingdom to the christological kerygma and the Pauline doctrine of justification?

At this point a survey of the synonyms used in the synoptic tradition for the term basileia tou theou is illuminating. Matt. 6:33 says that men are to seek the basileia of God and his dikaiosynē; in the par. Mk. 9:42–48 we find instead next to one another the expressions eiselthein eis tēn zōēn, to enter life (Mk. 9:43, 46; cf. Matt. 7:13) and eiselthein eis tēn basileian tou theou, to enter the kingdom of God (Mk. 9:47). Following the question of the rich young man, "What must I do to inherit eternal life [zōēn aiōnion]?" (Mk. 10:17), Jesus remarks in conversation with his disciples "How hard it will be for those who have riches to enter the kingdom of God [tēn basileian tou theou]!" The phrase "to inherit eternal life" (Mk. 10:17) has a counterpart in "to inherit the kingdom prepared for you [by God]" (Matt. 25:34). Paul says at Rom. 15:17: "the kingdom of God . . . is righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Spirit [dikaiosynē kai eirēnē kai chara en pneumati hagiō]." Likewise in Rev. 12:10 we find hē sōtēria (salvation), hē dynamis (power) and hē basileia tou theou linked together. In place of the request for seats "in your glory [en tē doxē sou]" (Mk. 10:37) the par. Matt. 20:21 has a request for seats "in your kingdom [en tē basileia sou]". Lk. 21:31 refers to the nearness of God's kingdom, whereas a few verses earlier Jesus declares, "Raise your heads, because your redemption [apolytrōsis] is drawing near" (Lk. 21:28).

The Beatitudes (Matt. 5:3–10; cf. Lk. 6:20 ff.) which promise God's salvation to the poor, the parables of the Kingdom which testify to God's mercy towards sinners (Matt. 22:1–10; Lk. 15:11–32; 15:4–7, 8–10), and finally the synonyms for kingdom of God to be found within the synoptic tradition itself (→ Righteousness, → Life, → Redemption, → Glory), all go to demonstrate that the future kingdom of God, already present in the person of Jesus, is God's saving activity towards the individual. This saving activity of God, which is tied to Jesus and mediated by him alone, is likewise at the centre of the kerygma outside the synoptic tradition. Thus John speaks of eternal life (zōē aiōnios, Jn. 3:15, 36 etc.), referring to the goal of salvation, while Paul speaks of the righteousness, life or redemption which is given in Christ. In the writings of Paul and John these terms are to be understood with strict reference to christology (cf. "I am the resurrection and the life" [Jn. 11:25; cf. 3:15]; and the Pauline "in Christ", especially in Rom. 6). When in Rom. 4:5 Paul declares that the righteousness of God consists in "justifying the ungodly", he is taking up the central concern of Jesus' preaching of the kingdom, namely the promise of salvation to the poor and the sinners. The futurist eschatology in the preaching of Jesus is likewise retained in the expectation of his Parousia and the general resurrection of the dead. Pauline theology which is a development of christology contains, like the preaching of Jesus, both a present and a future element, since the crucified and risen one is also the one who is to come. By tying salvation to the person of Jesus and by developing christology along the lines of soteriology, pneumatology and eschatology, Paul has maintained a consistent and legitimate extension of Jesus' preaching of the kingdom of God, although he has adapted this to the post-resurrection situation as regards the cross and resurrection.

(c) Kingdom of God and Kingdom of Christ. Evidence that the kingdom of Jesus Christ is in the NT view the same as the kingdom of God is also to be seen in the fact that in parts of the NT outside the synoptic tradition both expressions are found together, sometimes God being named first, and sometimes Christ. Thus it is equally acceptable to speak of "the kingdom of Christ and of God" (Eph. 5:5) and of the world dominion "of our Lord and of his Christ" (Rev. 11:15). The rule of Christ and the rule of God are in other words identical. When the rule of Christ has become established, it is taken up into the rule of God (Rev. 5:10; 2:4, 6; 22:5); at the end of time Christ hands back to the Father the kingdom he has received from him (1 Cor. 15:24–28).

John's prophecy of the saints reigning a thousand years (Rev. 20:1–7) is, from the point of view of historical criticism (Traditionsgeschichte), an interpretation of the apocalyptic motif of a messianic kingdom as a period preceding the final realization of the kingdom of God. The doctrine of the millennium represents a coming together of the two parallel kinds of eschatology current in 1st century Judaism: the nationalistic, messianic eschatology, and the cosmic, universal view. The length of this messianic reign as a period preceding the kingdom of God is variously given in Jewish apocalyptic writings. The rule of Christ and the rule of God are not, however, two kingdoms following one another in succession, but one kingdom of Christ which issues finally in the kingdom of God. (On the interpretations of pre-millenarianism, post-millenarianism and amillenarianism → Chiliasm in the Glossary of Technical Terms, and → Number, art. chilias.) B. Klappert
→ Caesar, → Parable, → Present

(a). S. Aalen, " 'Reign' and 'House' in the Kingdom of God in the Gospels", NTS 8, 1961–62, 215–40; A. Alt, "The Monarchy in Israel and Judah", Essays on Old Testament History and Religion, 1966, 239–59; K. Barth, "The Royal Man", CD IV, 2, 154–264; A. Bentzen, King and Messiah, 1955; L. Berkhof, The Kingdom of God: The Development of the Idea of the Kingdom, especially since the Eighteenth Century, 1951; J. Bright, The Kingdom of God, 1953; S. Brown, " 'The Secret of the Kingdom of God' (Mark 4:11)", JBL 92, 1973, 60–74; M. Buber, Kingship of God, 1967[3]; M. Burrows, "Thy Kingdom Come", JBL 74, 1955, 1–8; L. Cerfaux, Christ in the Theology of St. Paul, 1959, 92–106; D. J. A. Clines, "The Evidence for an Autumnal New Year in Pre-Exilic Israel and Judah Reconsidered", JBL 93, 1974, 22–40; and "The Psalms and the King", Theological Students Fellowship Bulletin, 71, 1975, 1–6; O. Cullmann, "The Kingship of Christ and the Church in the New Testament", The Early Church, 1956, 105–40; N. A. Dahl, "Parables of Growth", StTh 5, 1952, 132–66; G. Dalman, The Words of Jesus, 1902; D. Daube, "Violence to the Kingdom", The New Testament and Rabbinic Judaism, 1956, 285–300; C. H. Dodd, The Parables of the Kingdom, 1935; J. H. Eaton, Kingship and the Psalms, SBT 1976; I. Engnell, Studies in Divine Kingship in the Ancient Near East, (1943) 1967; J. de Fraine, "Kingship", EBT II 470 ff.; H. Frankfort, Kingship and the Gods, 1948; R. H. Fuller, The Mission and Achievement of Jesus, 1954; A. Gelston, "A Note on YHWH mlk", Vetus Testamentum 16, 1966, 507–12; T. F. Glasson, His Appearing and His Kingdom: The Christian Hope in the Light of its History, 1953; J. Gray, "The Kingship of God in the Prophets and Psalms", Vetus Testamentum 11, 1961, 1–26; F. Hahn, The Titles of Jesus in Christology: Their History in Early Christianity, 1969; R. H. Hiers, The Kingdom of God in the Synoptic Tradition, 1970; S. H. Hooke, ed., Myth, Ritual and Kingship, 1958; M. Hopkins, God's Kingdom in the Old Testament, 1963; J. Jeremias, The Parables of Jesus, 1963[2]; A. R. Johnson, Sacral Kingship in Ancient Israel, 1955; S. E. Johnson, "King Parables in the Synoptic Gospels", JBL 74, 1955, 37 ff.; W. Kelber, The Kingdom in Mark: A New Place and a New Time, 1974; J. D. Kingsbury, Matthew: Structure, Christology, and Kingdom, 1975; H. Kleinknecht, G. von Rad, K. G. Kuhn, and K. L. Schmidt, basileus etc., TDNT I 564–93; W. G. Kümmel, Promise and Fulfilment: The Eschatological Message of Jesus, 1961[2]; and "Eschatological Espectation in the Proclamation of Jesus", in J. M. Robinson, ed., The Future of our Religious Past, Essays in Honour of Rudolf Bultmann, 1971, 29–48; G. E. Ladd, Crucial Questions about the Kingdom of God, 1952; "The Kingdom of God: Reign or Realm?" JBL 81, 1962, 230–38; "The Life-Setting of the Parables of the Kingdom", JBL 82, 1963, 193–99; The Gospel of the Kingdom: Scriptural Studies in the Kingdom of God, 1959; and Jesus and the Kingdom: The Eschatology of Biblical Realism, 1966 (rev. ed., The Presence of the Future, 1974); R. Leivestad, Christ the Conqueror, 1954; G. Lundström, The Kingdom of God in the Teaching of Jesus, 1963; V. Maag, "malkut YHWH", Congress Volume, Vetus Testamentum Supplements 7, 1960, 129–53; S. Mowinckel, He That Cometh, 1956; The Psalms in Israel's Worship, I–II, 1962; and "General, Oriental and Specific Israelite Elements in the Israelite conception of the Sacral Kingdom", in La Regalità Sacra. The Sacral Kingship, Studies in the History of Religions 4, 1959, 283–93; M. Noth, "God, King and Nation in the Old Testament" and "The Holy Ones of the Most High", The Laws in the Pentateuch and Other Studies, 1966, 145–79, 215–28; R. Otto, The Kingdom of God and the Son of Man: A Study in the History of Religion, 1938; N. Perrin, The Kingdom of God in the Teaching of Jesus, 1963; and Jesus and the Language of the Kingdom: Symbol and Metaphor in New Testament Interpretation, 1976; H. Ridderbos, The Coming of the Kingdom, 1962; A. Robertson, Regnum Dei: Eight Lectures on the Kingdom of God in the History of Christian Thought (Bampton Lectures, 1901), 1901; J. A. T. Robinson, Jesus and his Coming, 1951; R. Schnackenburg, "Kingdom of God", EBT II 455–70; and God's Rule and God's Kingdom, 1963; A. Schweitzer, The Kingdom of God and Primitive Christianity, 1968; H. E. Tödt, The Son of Man in the Synoptic Tradition, 1965; R. de Vaux, "The King of Israel, Vassal of Yahweh", in The Bible and the Ancient Near East, 1972, 152–66; G. Vos, The Teaching of Jesus Concerning the Kingdom of God and the Church, 1951; T. B. L. Webster, From Mycenae to Homer, 1958; R. N. Whybray, "Some Historical limitations of Hebrew Kingship", Church Quarterly Review, 163, 1962, 136–50; and The Succession Narrative, 1968; G. Widengren, "King and Covenant", JSS 2 1957, 1–32.

(b). A. Alt, Kleine Schriften zur Geschichte des Volkes Israel, I–III, 1956–64; K. H. Bernhardt, Das Problem der altorientalischen Königsideologie im Alten Testament, Supplements to Vetus Testamentum 8, 1961; H. Bietenhard, Das tausendjährige Reich, 1955; J. Bonsirven, Le Règne de Dieu, 1957; H. Conzelmann, "Gegenwart und Zukunft in der synoptischen Tradition", ZTK 54, 1957, 277 ff.; N. A. Dahl, "Der gekreuzigte Messias", in H. Ristow and K. Matthiae, eds., Der historische Jesus und der kerygmatische Christus, 1960, 149 ff.; E. Fascher, "Gottes Königtum im Urchristentum" Numen 4, 1957, 85 ff.; J. de Fraine, "L'aspect religieux de la royauté Israélite", Analecta Biblica 3, 1954; K. Galling, H. Conzelmann, E. Wolff, G. Gloege, "Reich Gottes", RGG^{3} V 912 ff.; H. Gross, Weltherrschaft als religiöse Idee im Alten Testament und Judentum, 1953; and Die Idee des ewigen und allgemeinen Weltfriedens im alten Orient und im Alten Testament, 1956; G. Harder, "Das Gleichnis von der selbstwachsenden Saat", ThV 1948–49, 51 ff.; J. Héring, La Royaume de Dieu et sa Venue, (1937) 1959^2; E. Jüngel, "Die Gottesherrschaft als die Jesu Verkündigung autorisierende Macht", Paulus und Jesus, (1962) 1967^3, 174 ff.; H.-J. Kraus, Die Königsherrschaft Gottes im Alten Testament, BHTh 13, 1951; W. G. Kümmel, "Futurische and präsentische Eschatologie im ältesten Christentum", NTS 4, 1959–60, 113–26 (reprinted in Heilsgeschen und Geschichte, 1965, 351 ff.); J. Lebram, "Die Weltreiche in der jüdischen Apokalyptik", ZNW 55, 1964, 143 ff.; E. Lohse, "Die Gottesherrschaft in den Gleichnissen Jesu", EvTh 18, 1958, 145 ff.; W. Michaelis, "Reich Gottes und Äonenwende in der Verkündigung Jesu", in Neutestamentliche Aufsätze. Festschrift für J. Schmid, 1963, 161 ff.; R. Morgenthaler, Kommendes Reich, 1952; S. Mowinckel, Zum israelitischen Neujahrsfest und zur Deutung der Thronbesteigung-Psalmen, 1952; F. Mussner, "Die Bedeutung von Mk. 1, 14 f. für die Reich-Gottes-Verkündigung Jesu", Trierer Theologische Zeitschrift 68, 1957; 257 ff. (reprinted in Praesentia Salutis. Gesammelte Studien zu Fragen und Themen des Neuen Testament, 1967, 81 ff.); G. von Rad, Der heilige Krieg im alten Israel, (1951) 1965^4, 6 ff., 14 ff.; L. Rost, "Königsherrschaft Jahwes in vorköniglicher Zeit?", TLZ 85, 1960, 721 ff.; A. Rüstow, "entos hymōn estin. Zur Deutung von Lk. 17, 20–21", ZNW 51, 1960, 197 ff.; W. Schmidt, Königtum Gottes in Ugarit und Israel, 1961; R. Schnackenburg, "Das 'Reich Gottes' im Neuen Testament", BuL 1, 1960, 143 ff.; J. A. Soggin, melek, THAT I 908–20; E. Staehelin, Die Verkündigung des Reiches Gottes in der Kirche Jesu Christi. Zeugnisse aus allen Jahrhunderten und allen Konfessionen, I–VII, 1951–65; A. Strobel, Kerygma und Apokalyptik, 1967; P. Vielhauer, "Gottesreich und Menschensohn in der Verkündigung Jesu", in Festschrift für G. Dehn, 1957, 51 ff. (reprinted in Aufsätze zum Neuen Testament, 1965, 55 ff.); G. Widengren, Sakrales Königtum im Alten Testament und Judentum, 1955; H. A. Wilcke, Das Problem eines messianischen Zwischenreiches bei Paulus, AThANT 51, 1967.

Knowledge, Experience, Ignorance

One of the most important marks of man as a rational being is his capacity to order and clarify his impressions of the world that surrounds him and to articulate standards of behaviour. Cognition, practical knowledge and theoretical understanding are attained when the mind reflects on and judges sense experience. Originally both aisthanomai and ginōskō referred to experiencing an object through the senses. But whereas aisthēsis and its cognates expressed physical apprehension through the senses apart from the intellectual act of interpretation, ginōskō and its cognates included from the very first the idea of grasping and understanding the object perceived by the mind. Owing largely though not exclusively to the usage of the LXX, aisthanomai came to be confined to perception by the senses. The words of the ginōskō group, however, embrace the whole gamut of knowledge from knowing things to knowing persons. When this process results in an item or body of knowledge which may serve as a basis for further thought and action, oida (infin. eidenai), to know, is used parallel to the perf. of ginōskō. Both contain the implication of certainty based on experience. Examples of the use of oida are given under ginōskō.

The present article is concerned mainly with the activity of knowing. It therefore does not include a comprehensive study of the complexities of gnosticism. On points where the latter touches on theology and Christian conduct see the appropriate key term (e.g. → Lord's Supper, → Heaven, → Body, → Soul).

The article on agnoeō, not to know, be ignorant of, deals with the opposite of knowledge, and illustrates the extent to which experience, knowledge, and obedience are linked in biblical thought.

αἴσθησις

αἴσθησις (aisthēsis), experience; αἰσθητήριον (aisthētērion), organ of sense, faculty.

CL aisthēsis means perception by the senses (in contrast to knowledge through rational deduction), experience, sensation; in an ethical context it means judgment, e.g. on the worthlessness of desire (Epict., Dissertationes 2, 18, 8). aisthētērion is the organ of sense.

OT In the LXX aisthēsis is used predominantly in the wisdom literature, especially as a rendering of da'aṯ, knowledge, wisdom, with the meaning of true insight. It can frequently include ethical discrimination and decision. aisthētērion is the organ where this discrimination is made (cf. Jer. 4:19). This insight stands in contrast to inexperience (Prov. 1:4), lack of → discipline (Prov. 12:1) and folly (Prov. 15:7). The father urges his son "to cry out for insight" (Prov. 2:3) for such → wisdom brings true knowledge of God (Prov. 2:4 ff.). The two are so identified that the opposite can be said, "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge" (Prov. 1:7). Experience of God and experience of the world belong inseparably together.

NT In the NT aisthēsis and aisthētērion are each used only once.

1. In Phil. 1:9 Paul places discernment (aisthēsis) and knowledge (gnōsis) side by side as two of love's expressions and functions. Knowledge is directed primarily to God; true discernment is necessary for human relationships, where it must distinguish between good and evil and judge accordingly (cf. especially v. 10).

2. Heb. 5:14 says of "the mature" that they "have their faculties [aisthētēria] trained by practice to distinguish good from evil." The concrete organ of sense has here become virtually a habitual ability which must, however, be developed and which enables believers to distinguish between the spirits. It is a spiritual gift which must be developed in practice. E. Schütz

γινώσκω

γινώσκω (ginōskō), know, come to know, understand, comprehend, perceive, recognize; γνῶσις (gnōsis), knowledge; ἐπιγινώσκω (epiginōskō), know, understand, recognize; ἐπίγνωσις (epignōsis), knowledge, recognition.

CL The original form gignōskō is found from Homer on; the shortened form ginōskō was Aeolic and Ionic, but appears in common Gk. from Aristotle (384–322 B.C.). They are formed from the root gno-, found in Lat. (g)noscere, ignorare, and Eng. can and know. The nouns gnōsis and gnōmē, means of knowing, thought, judgment, opinion, are from the same root.

1. In secular Gk. the vb. is used with the following range of meanings.

(a) Basically it means to notice, perceive, or recognize a thing, person, or situation through the senses, particularly the sight. (Seeing and ginōskō are linked in Homer, Od. 15, 532 and 24, 217.) This leads to an intelligent ordering in the mind of what has been so perceived in the world of experience. Thus the vb. also means experience, learn, get to know: what has been experienced becomes known to the one who has experienced it. This leads to the difference in meaning (which becomes clear in the later linguistic usage) between ginōskō and aisthanomai, perceive (without necessarily understanding). The noun gnōsis (from Heraclitus on) also originally expressed the act of knowing through experience.

(b) Occasionally ginōskō means to distinguish, for experience or recognition of a phenomenon among similar or different ones may lead to this (cf. Homer, Il. 5, 128, 182).

(c) Familiarity leads to personal acquaintance. Hence ginōskō also means to know in a personal way (Heracl., Frag. 97), to understand (already in Homer Od. 16, 136), to know (Democ., Frag. 198; used par. with oida), to be acquainted with, to be expert (gnōstos, an expert, Plato, Rep. 1, 347d), and to judge (Dem. 658, 23). Similarly gnōsis is repeatedly found with the meaning knowledge, insight (in Plato and Sophocles), and gnōmē with that of insight (Herodotus, Thucydides), reflection (Xen., Cyr. 1, 3, 10), will, disposition, and finally judgment, opinion, verdict.

(d) ginōskō may be used to express a relationship of trust between persons, i.e. to recognize as friend, love as a friend (Xen., Cyr. 1, 4, 27; cf. gnōstos, familiar with, from Aesch., Cho. 691). It is questionable whether the Hellenistic usage, to know (carnally) i.e. to have sexual relations with, is derived from this. It is possible that the borrowing of a non-Gk. usage lies behind it. It has, however, been pointed out that its root is related to Lat. gignere, beget (cf. H. Leisegang, Die Gnosis, 1955⁴, 32; → Birth, art. ginomai).

(e) Knowledge of situations can be reached by reflecting, judging and investigating, i.e. by logical thought-processes. The inscription at Delphi, gnōthi sauton, "Know thyself", is a summons to reflection and self-examination.

(f) Since verdicts in criminal and civil courts were based on a weighing of given facts, they could be expressed by ginōskō in the passive, with the meaning to be judged.

(g) The object of knowledge may be a concrete object or an idea in the mind of the thinking subject. Especially in philosophy speculative cognition in this latter sense plays a great part. But even here knowing was regarded in great measure as seeing, "the seeing of the soul [omma tēs psychēs]" (cf. Plato Rep. 533). This may be seen from the concrete character of the expressions used for speculation: e.g. theōreō look at, observe, contemplate; skopeō look into, examine, inspect; and by calling the knowledge so obtained eidos, idea (Democritus, Plato; → Image). The goal of philosophical knowledge was seeing – not the seeing of transient and changeable earthly phenomena, but of the lasting and real, which could be seen only by the eyes of the soul. Accordingly in such contexts one should render ginōskō by gain insight, perceive (intuitively). The objects of such insight may ultimately belong to the religious sphere (Herach., Frag. 5).

With ginōskō there is always the implication of grasping the full reality and nature of the object under consideration. It is thus distinguished from mere opinion (dokeō; → Think), which may grasp the object half-correctly, inadequately or even falsely. This finds expression in the late phrase attributed, perhaps wrongly, to Apollonius of Tyana gnōsis theōn, ou doxa, "Knowledge of the gods, not opinion" (Epistula 52).

2. The above indicated uses of ginōskō and its derivatives are also found in Hel. Gk. In addition, however, we find a growing use of the terms, based on a fairly loose link with the language of Gk. philosophy. They appear in the widely different systems of thought and conceptual schemes influenced by syncretism which from an early period have been bracketed together under the title of gnosticism (Gk. gnōsis). However, the terms gnosis and gnostic were used by only some of these groups to describe themselves (cf. Iren., Haer. 1, 11, 1; 1, 26, 3; Pauly-Wissowa, VII 2, 1004 ff.; H. Jonas, The Gnostic Religion, 1963², 32 ff.). It lies beyond the scope of the present article to attempt a comprehensive survey of gnostic thought, but certain features of gnosticism may be mentioned.

(a) In Hellenistic culture men adopted a new attitude to the world which involved an a priori doubt about the possibility of arriving at the truth about the world and reality along rational lines. Man experiences the world and history more or less as an impenetrable fate which he cannot influence and to which he is handed over like a powerless slave without his consent. He finds the world more a prison than a home. His existence on earth and in history is lived out in a strange land and in misery. Hence, he looks for freedom and escape from the compulsion imposed on him in an alien world. He finds one way of escape in gnōsis. In this context it does not mean the mental penetration of things by logical thought as was the case in Gk. philosophy, for it was now widely held that the answer of the universe to rational questions was either silence or lies. The answer of the gnostic was not from within this world, but from the non-cosmic, from outside the universe, from a divine source, diametrically opposed to the cosmic. It came through revelation given in grace to men (cf. Od.Sol. 7:3, 6). The cosmic presupposition of gnosticism was dualism which made an absolute separation between God and the world. The ways and means by which one could acquire knowledge of this other reality were varied, and included sacramentalism, magic, mysticism, semi-philosophical speculation.

(b) By the nature of things gnōsis was primarily man's knowledge of himself, of his true nature, which would explain to him his inharmonious relationship with his manner of existence on earth and in history. It would thus show him the way back to → salvation. It was a knowledge of past, present and future. It is the knowledge "who were we? what have we become? where were we? into what have we been cast? whither are we hastening? from what are we delivered? what is birth? what is rebirth?" (Clement of Alexandria, Excerpta ex Theodoto, 1, 78, 2; cf. W. Foerster, Gnosis, I, 1972, 230). gnōsis included cosmology, cosmogony and theological knowledge only in so far as they might teach man what he is; "man stands in the centre of the gnostics' interest" (G. Quispel, Gnosis als Weltreligion, 1951, 29).

(c) The gnostic myth of "the tragic history of the soul" (TDNT I 695) which appears in many different forms, attempts to give the answer to the gnostic's question about his own nature. This myth tells of the divine origin of the → soul, which as the result of a primeval fall was exiled and fettered to matter, which is hostile to God, i.e. to the → body. "Man by nature does not belong in any way to this world; his original home is beyond the spheres of the visible universe" (G. Quispel, ibid.). That is why man cannot feel at home in the cosmos, for this cosmos and the God of the soul have nothing in common. Hence, man is plagued by a vague, hopeless longing to leave the world. The less he has been lost to the cosmos, the stronger is the longing. If he has surrendered completely to the cosmos there is no hope of salvation left for him. He perishes along with matter, since there is no "soul-substance" left in him, for this alone is capable of salvation. The process of salvation begins when the hopeless and vague longing is replaced by instruction about the unknown God out there (agnōstos propatōr or patēr, Epiph., Haer. 1, 23, 1; agnōstos theos, Iren., Haer. 4, 20, 2), the original divinity of the soul, its "fall", the cosmos and its matter which is anti-God, and about the way the soul takes to its divine home. All this is an illumination which comes to man as an external "call" and divine → revelation. If the call is heard by those that belong to it, there is no obstacle to prevent the divine soul from returning to the divinity and being deified (Corp. Herm. 1, 26a; 13, 4). Salvation is here and now. The return can be anticipated in the ecstatic state (cf. Iren., Haer., 3, 15, 2). "He who has achieved gnōsis is good, and pious, even already divine" (Corp. Herm. 10, 9). Though gnōsis gives the appearance of being a way to salvation through grace, it is in fact a grandiose attempt at self-salvation, for all that is redeemed and glorified is the soul which is in any case essentially divine. The gnostic is a physei sōzomenos, someone saved by nature (Clem.Alex., Strom. 2, 3; cf. 4, 13).

(d) All this led to a characteristic gnostic attitude to life which was itself termed gnōsis (Iren., Haer. 1, 33, 3). It expressed itself in a feeling of superiority over all non-gnostics – in Christian gnosticism, over all mere believers. This may be seen both in their extreme claims, e.g. to be theon egnōkenai monoi, the only ones to know God (Clem.Alex., Strom. 3, 4, 31), and in their negative ethics, ascetic or antinomian, which were motivated by the gnostic's assurance that his true self was not part of the cosmos. Hence there was no reason why he should obey the claims he attributed to the cosmos. Moral rules were either demands of purely cosmic powers intended to reduce men to slavery (Iren., Haer. 1, 23, 3) or purely human values (Iren., Haer. 1, 25, 4). Whether by asceticism or libertinism, the gnostic sought to demonstrate his scorn of them and his freedom from all worldly ties.

Gnosticism is, therefore, a general term denoting a manner of life which sprang from a denial of the validity of human existence in history and the cosmos. It found expression for its beliefs in a syncretistic mythology, and expressed itself in the negation of ethics.

OT In the OT, as with the common Gk. attitude, knowledge is derived through the senses; the thing to be known must present itself to the senses and so let itself be known. Hence we find vbs. of hearing (→ Hear) and seeing (→ See) parallel to vbs. of knowing (e.g. Exod. 16:6 f.; Deut. 33:9; 1 Sam. 14:38; Isa. 41:20). It is easy to understand why the LXX rendered rā'âh, see (Jdg. 2:7), ḥāzâh, see (Isa. 26:11), and šāma', hear (Neh. 4:15[MT 4:9]), by ginōskō. The concepts of knowing in Gk. and Heb. thought largely coincide, and for both experience through the senses is fundamental.

1. In the LXX the ginōskō word-group is used mainly to render words formed from the Heb. root yāḏa' which has a very wide range of meaning. If one starts with the basic meaning (a) to notice, experience, observe (e.g. Gen. 3:7; 41:31; Jdg. 16:20; Eccl. 8:5; Isa. 47:8; Hos. 5:3), then the observing of things like good and bad (2 Sam. 19:35 [MT 19:36]) or right and left (Jon. 4:11) leads to distinguishing between them. Hence, ginōskō means (b) to distinguish between. Knowledge passed on by a third party gives the meaning (c) of know by learning (Prov. 30:3). (d) Experience becomes a reality in a relationship based on familiarity with the person or thing known. The use of yāḏa' in the wisdom literature is an example of this. It speaks of a knowledge which is empirical and living, obtained by observation of the world and life as the work of God, which in turn leads to an upright life before God (Prov. 2:6; Eccles. 8:17). (e) Knowledge, i.e. familiarity with a thing or situation, can result in technical ability, i.e. to know how to do something (1 Ki. 7:14 [LXX 7:2]; cf. Gen. 25:27; 1 Sam. 16:16, 18; Isa. 47:11). (f) In certain circumstances observation and resultant action (or failure to act) become closely linked. Hence, ginōskō also means to concern oneself with, care for, trouble oneself with, or their negatives (e.g. Prov. 27:23; Pss. 1:6, 37:18 [LXX 36:18]; 119:79 [LXX 118:79], and to want to have to do with (or its negative) (e.g. Deut. 33:9). Frequently in theological contexts it is a question of knowledge not properly obtained, leading to lack of interest (e.g. Jer. 8:7; Ps. 95:10[LXX 94:10]; Isa. 1:3). (g) To know can also mean to have sexual relations with (Gen. 4:1; 19:8; cf. 2:23; → Join). (h) To know another person "face to face" means to have a personal and confidential relationship with another person (e.g. Deut. 34:10). The expression has no sexual connotations. When God knows a person (Jer. 1:5) or a people (Amos 3:2) he chooses or → elects him (cf. Num. 16:5 LXX). This knowledge, understood as election, is gracious and loving (see above (f)), but it demands a personal response. (i) The distinctiveness of the OT concept of knowledge is clearly seen in passages which speak of man's knowledge of God, i.e. of his grateful and obedient recognition (see 2 below). "If one asks . . . for the central concept which makes comprehensible the varied uses of the one root, it is to be found in the concept of cognition. All the activities listed are merely variations on this" (H. W. Wolff, "Erkenntnis Gottes im Alten Testament", EvTh 15, 1955, 426 f.).

2. Knowledge of God is always linked with God's acts of self-revelation. This is illustrated in the formula, "And you [or they] shall know that I am Yahweh." This is found 54 times in Ezek., and occurs also elsewhere in the OT. It is always linked with the proclamation of some specific act by Yahweh: e.g. Ezek. 6:7, 13, 14; 7:4; 11:10, 11 f.; 12:14 f., 16 (after pronouncement of judgment on Israel); 25:5 (after pronouncement of judgment on Ammon); 28:26; 37:6 (after a promise of salvation); cf. also Exod. 6:7; 7:5, 17; 14:4, 18; 16:6, 12; 29:46; 1 Ki. 20:13, 28; Isa. 45:3, 6 f.; 49:23, 26. In 2 Ki. 5:15 Naaman the Syrian comes to a knowledge of the God of Israel through the healing of his → leprosy. In Sir. 36:4 f. God is asked to reveal himself to the nations, that they too may recognize that there is no other God beside Yahweh (cf. the 4th benediction in the Eighteen Benedictions; for text → Prayer, art. proseuchomai OT 5).

It is not only the uniqueness of Yahweh's acts in the past or future that leads to a knowledge of God. The testimony to God's past actions, by which the past is repeatedly made present (Exod. 10:1 f.; 18:8–11), and signs grounded in salvation history (including the → sabbath) are capable of bringing about knowledge of Yahweh (Exod. 31:13; Ezek. 20:12–20). Hence, knowledge of God arises uniquely from the revealing acts of God and the testimony to them. In fact, knowledge of God and knowledge of his acts coincide (Mic. 6:5). Knowledge of God in the OT is not concerned with the speculative question of the being of God, but in the God who, working in → grace and → judgment, has turned to men. To know him means to enter into the personal relationship which he himself makes possible.

Israel's intimate relationship with God required that the nation's conduct should correspond to God's actions. The command "Be still, and know that I am God" (Ps. 46:10[MT 46:11; LXX 45:11]) does not in the first instance mean that the nations attacking Yahweh's city should undergo a purely religious conversion to Yahweh. Rather, they should abandon their rebellion in recognition of Yahweh's rule in history. In the rhetorical questions of Jer. 22:15 f., knowledge of God is clearly interpreted as doing justice and righteousness, particularly to the poor and needy. In Jdg. 2:10 f. not knowing Yahweh and his work done for Israel results in doing evil in the sight of Yahweh. Similarly in Hos. 4:1 f. knowledge of Yahweh is directly related to specific behaviour; lack of faithfulness and disloyalty to the → covenant are bound up with lack of knowledge of God. The result is a breakdown of human relationships. For Hosea too knowledge of God means knowledge of God's saving acts for Israel (13:4, cf. also 4:6; 5:4; 6:6; 8:2). (On Hosea see H. W. Wolff, " 'Wissen um Gott' bei Hosea als Urform von Theologie", EvTh 12, 1952–53, 533 ff.; and Hosea, Hermeneia, 1974.) In the wisdom literature fear of Yahweh and knowledge of God are interchangeable terms (→ Fear, art. phobos).

3. Summary. While the Gks. were concerned with detached knowledge and a speculative interest in the metaphysical nature of things, the OT regards knowledge as something which continually arises from personal encounter. When the OT makes statements about → God and → creation, we should not regard them as ontological deductions, but as declarations of faith in response to God's → revelation. For knowledge of God is related to the revelation of God in the historic past and the promised future, in the earthly sphere in which God's creatures have their being. As Israel continually inquired into God's revelation in the past, present and future, he discerned the purposes and demands of God in worship and in conduct.

4. (a) The confrontation between Hellenistic Judaism and polytheism led to the development of a semi-dogmatic concept of the knowledge of God. The knowledge of God meant above all knowing that there was one God, and combatting the claims of heathen deities to be gods (cf. Jud. 2:20; Ep.Jer. passim; cf. Sib. 3:429 f.). The question of the possibility of knowing God was also raised and answered as the Stoics did by stressing the possibility of knowing him through his creation (e.g. Wis. 13:1–9; Syr.Bar 54:17 f.; Philo, Virt. 215 f.; Syr.Bar. 54:17 f.). Judaism was obviously also involved in controversy with the gnostics. Hagigah 2:1 (Mishnah and Tosefta) warns against speculations about what was before the creation, and what will be when the earth passes away (cf. H. Jonas, Gnosis und spätantiker Geist, II, 1, 1954, 206; H. Bietenhard, Die himmlische Welt im Urchristentum und Spätjudentum, 1951, 53 ff.; SB I 191; III 33, 378). This does not exclude the possibility that a gnostic answer may have been given to the question of the knowability of God, as may be inferred from the expression phōs gnōseōs, light of knowledge, occurring a number of times in Test.XII (e.g. Test.Lev. 4:3; 18:3; Test.Ben. 11:2; cf. Philo, Migr.Abr. 34 f.; Som. 2, 226).

(b) There appear to be some contacts between the OT and the Hel.-gnostic concepts of knowledge because in both knowledge of God comes by revelation. In the latter, however, the place of history is consistently denied, whereas in the former the knowledge of God is inseparably bound up with God's revelation in time and space.

(c) In the inter-testamental period the Qumran texts, in which yāḏa' and da'aṯ are central ideas, show a remarkable development of the OT concept of knowledge. In a number of passages knowledge stands by itself. It is one of the most important fruits of salvation enjoyed by pious members of the Qumran sect (cf. 1QHab. 11:1; 1QS 10:9, 12; 11:6, 15; 1QH 2:18; 11:24; CD 2:4). God himself is the "God of knowledge" (cf. 1QS 3:15), i.e. the God who possesses all knowledge and from whom alone man can acquire knowledge. An act of predestination is involved (cf. 1QS 4:25; 1QH 1:7; → Foreknowledge). Hence, God's knowledge is not purely intellectual. There are many objects of human knowledge. Of these "the secrets" or "the hidden things" are frequently mentioned (e.g. 1QH 12:13; 1QS 5:11), by which the sect meant the revealed secrets of creation, history and the last days. In this we see the affinity of Qumran teaching with later apocalyptic. God's loyalty is also to be known (cf. 1QH 9:9), as is God's goodness (1QH 14:17), wisdom (1QH 15:12), glory (1QH 15:20) and even God himself (1QH 1:31). Hence, the community could call itself "the knowing ones" (1QH 11:14; 14:15). Alongside this the knowledge of the will of God as revealed in the Torah plays an important part. Upon it depended a man's reception and place in the community (1QS 2:22; cf. 1QS 5:21 ff.). Similar usage occurs in the parallel concepts, śāḵal, the root of which means to have insight, and bîn, to distinguish, hiph. to understand, and the corresponding nouns. It has been argued that the Qumran texts with their stress on the concept of knowledge betray the influence of gnostic thought on Palestinian Judaism. However, the fundamental differences in cosmology, anthropology, soteriology and ethics must not be overlooked.

NT 1. Survey of use and meaning in the NT. ginōskō is found 221 times, of which 82 are in the Johannine literature, 50 in Paul (including the Pastoral Epistles), and 44 in Lk.-Acts; and epiginōskō 44 times, of which 12 instances are in Paul (including the Pastorals), and 20 in Lk.-Acts. gnōsis and epignōsis occur 29 times and 20 times respectively, no less than 38 of them being in Paul (gnōsis 23 times; epignōsis 15 times). John does not use them at all, possibly deliberately. The verbal adj. gnōstos is found 15 times (almost only in Jn. and Lk.); gnōmē (predominantly in Paul and Rev.) 9 times.

In a large number of cases we have the general and popular use of the words.

Since Gk. and OT usage are so close, we cannot normally determine the background. A few examples must suffice: to hear of (Mk. 5:43; Jn. 4:1; Phil. 1:12); notice (Matt. 16:8; Mk. 6:33 epiginōskō; 13:28 f.); feel (Mk. 5:29 f.); recognize (Matt. 7:16 epiginōskō; Lk. 24:16; Jas. 2:20, learn); know (Lk. 12:46 ff.; Jn. 1:48; 21:17 together with oida; Rom. 7:15 RSV "understand"); understand (Mk. 5:13 together with oida; Lk. 18:34 together with synienai; Jn. 13:7 together with oida); find out (Jn. 13:35; 15:18; 19:4; 1 Jn. 2:3, 5); distinguish (1 Cor. 14:7), know how to (Matt. 16:3).

The noun gnōmē is found almost only in the usual meaning of opinion, judgment. Thus in 1 Cor. 7:25 the opinion of the apostle is clearly distinguished from the "command of the Lord", but it is still authoritative (cf. v. 40). In Rev. 17:13 it occurs in the phrase "of one mind" (cf. 1 Cor. 1:10; Rev. 17:17). In Acts 20:3 Paul egeneto gnōmēs, came to the opinion, i.e. decided to return through Macedonia.

2. The influence of OT usage. The universal use of the LXX in the primitive church, as in Diaspora Judaism, ensured a linguistic continuity between the OT and the NT documents, or rather between the terms available and their use in the NT kērygma. But the standpoint of the NT writers who were in part Gentile Christians speaking to members of the pagan world and the subject matter of their message, the revelation of God in Jesus Christ, modified and gave a new stress to the OT concept of knowledge. Where it expresses a personal relationship between the one who knows and the one known, the NT concept of knowledge is clearly taken from the OT. This applies to sexual relations (Matt. 1:25; Lk. 1:34) and also to where ginōskō means have to do with as in Matt. 7:23, "I never knew you", i.e. I never had anything to do with you (cf. Mk. 14:71, where Peter denies his relationship to Jesus, though he uses oida). The statement in 2 Cor. 5:21 that Christ "knew no sin" does not mean that he had no intellectual knowledge of sin, but rather that Jesus had no personal truck with sin. It is this that brings out the enormity and irony of the pronouncement: "For our sake he made him to be sin" (→ Sin). Similarly Rom. 7:7 should be paraphrased: "The human I would have had no intimate dealings with sin had it not been for the law" (cf. Rom. 3:20: "since through the law comes knowledge of sin").

ginōskō has also the sense of have to do with, have dealings with, know personally, in 2 Cor. 5:16. The meaning of this verse is the subject of much controversy. oidamen ("we know") occurs in the first half and ginōskō is used twice in its second half in the forms egnōkamen ("we knew") and ginōskomen ("we know"). In 2 Cor. 5:11–21 Paul is involved in controversy with opponents who attacked him personally and his claim to be an → apostle. They maintained that he was lacking in visible spiritual qualities which would authenticate his claim to be an apostle, e.g. ecstatic phenomena (v. 13). They probably charged him with being a braggart who commended only himself. Paul is probably referring to this in v. 11 ("we persuade men") and in v. 12 ("we are not commending ourselves"). Part of Paul's defence is the reference to Christ's death "for all", through which "all have died" (vv. 14 f.), including the man with supposed, visible, spiritual qualities. So, says Paul, from now on – ever since the events linked with Christ, which mean a transformation of all values, the turning point of the ages – "we know no one after the flesh", according to his visible demonstration of the Spirit and power.

We must understand this as the consequence of all dying with Christ (v. 14). In order to show how obvious this is, he inserts the statement which should be clear to all, in v. 16 b: "Even though we may have had acquaintance with Christ according to the flesh", i.e. with the visible Christ as he was on earth, "we do not know him as such", i.e. have to do with him as such, but only with the invisible, risen Christ in whose service we stand. Because Christ had died and been raised for all he is the invisible Lord of all, and his lordship is externally inescapable. Hence both the apostle and his claims to apostleship, in common with all else that has died with Christ, are not subject to judgment by external and the normal visible standards. "In Christ" only the new creation is of value. The old, including judgment by outward appearances (en prosōpō, v. 12), has passed away and "a new order has already begun" (v. 17 NEB). In the light of this argument, it is clear that Paul in 2 Cor. 5:16 is neither affirming nor denying that he knew the earthly Jesus personally. Equally it has no bearing on the meaning of the historic Jesus for Paul.

(a) We find the influence of the OT most clearly in those contexts where the vb. means to give recognition to. In 1 Cor. 16:18 Paul urges, "Give recognition to [epiginōskete] such men", i.e. to colleagues who have shown their devoted service. In 1 Cor. 4:19 Paul tells the Corinthians that, when he comes he will not recognize, i.e. give weight to, the words of the arrogant ("self-important" NEB) or their power. In Matt. 17:12 Jesus speaks of the scribes' failure to recognize John the Baptist as → Elijah come again, which in effect meant that "they did with him whatever they pleased." In the letter to the church in Philadelphia the exalted Jesus promised that Jews would come to the (Gentile?) Christian church and recognize that the Risen One loved them (Rev. 3:9; cf. Rev. 2:23). In so doing he reversed Jewish eschatological hope (cf. E. Lohmeyer, Die Offenbarung des Johannes, HNT 16, 1970³ ad loc.).

Phrases such as "know God's decree" (Romans 1:32), "know the law" (Rom. 7:1), "know his will" (Rom. 2:18; Acts 22:14), do not imply a merely theoretical knowledge, but the recognition that it applies to the person individually and demands his obedience. (When Paul in Rom. 2:20 calls the law "the embodiment of knowledge and truth" in his description of the Jew, he implies a clear distinction between existential knowledge and theoretical truth.) The Pharisees' remark that "the crowd who do not know the law are accursed" (Jn. 7:49) reflects a well-attested scorn of rabbinic scholars for the common people (cf. SB II 494–521). It contains the implication that the common people would not have gone after Jesus if they had really known and obeyed the law. But in recording it Jn. sees an unconscious irony in the Pharisees' own failure to see where the law was pointing them (cf. 7:42, 51 with 5:39 f.; 11:49 ff.). 2 Cor. 10:5 contains the juxtaposition of "the knowledge of God" and "to obey Christ." Even where Paul clearly borrows the concept of knowledge held by the (Jewish) Hellenistic popular philosophy, he recasts it. In Rom. 1:28 "The knowledge of God as a question and accessible possibility does not concern him. What concerns him, rather, is the question whether this knowledge is personal (1:28), whether the truth of God remains truth and its power is acknowledged (1:18, 25)" (G. Bornkamm, Early Christian Experience, 1969, 56). If such acknowledgment which manifests itself in living obedience is refused, the judgment of God is inevitable. The statement in Rom. 1:21 that those who had known God had become futile in their thinking must have appeared as a contradiction in terms to Hellenistic thought (→ Empty, art. mataios). Their futility is a result of not knowing God (cf. Wis. 13:1; → agnoeō). Paul, however, considered that the knowledge of God necessarily included proper glorification and gratitude. Hence, the heathen who rejected God reduced this knowledge to mere intellectual activity, and what they considered wisdom was in fact nothing but folly (Rom. 1:22 f.). The very fact that, though the heathen undoubtedly knew God, they refused him due recognition, is the measure of their lack of excuse (Rom. 1:19 f.; cf. also Jn. 1:10; 1 Cor. 1:21; Gal. 4:8 f.; see further the whole argument of Bornkamm's essay on "The Revelation of God's Wrath (Romans 1–3)" in op. cit., 47–70). Such recognition of God, where it is found, is a → gift of God and not something natural. It is based on his → revelation and therefore remains dependent on revelation (1 Cor. 13:8; 14:6; cf. 2 Cor. 8:7; 2 Pet. 1:5). Other passages are Phil. 1:9; Col. 1:9 f. (which contains a prayer for a growth in love with knowledge or in knowledge of the will of God; cf. Eph. 1:17); 2 Pet. 1:2 (in the prayer for blessing in the introduction); 1 Cor. 1:5; Col. 3:10 (note the pass. vb.); 1 Cor. 2:11, 14. Consequently, this knowledge of God which comes about through the acceptance of salvation in the → forgiveness of sins alone can be nothing other than the gift of God (cf. Lk. 1:7).

Nevertheless, in apparent contradiction to its gift-like charismatic character, knowledge in the NT involves the ready will of the man who receives it. Through disobedience, ingratitude and prevarication he can fail to appropriate it. Hence, the imperatives and exhortations in the NT are calls to grasp the gift and use it aright in the changing circumstances of life (e.g. 1 Cor. 14:27; Eph. 5:5; Jas. 1:3; 5:20; cf. Lk. 10:11; Acts 2:36, where the "house of Israel" is called upon to recognize the crucified Jesus as the messiah in the light of the events of → Pentecost; cf. also the imperative in the parable in Matt. 24:43). 2 Cor. 8:9 ff. involves the outworking of knowledge in practical behaviour. Here the knowledge "of the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that though he was rich, yet for your sake he became poor, so that by his poverty you might become rich" finds expression in the collection for Jerusalem, which Paul was urging. One should not interpret it, as does Lietzmann, to mean simply that Christ is an example of generosity (H. Lietzmann, An die Korinther, HNT 9, 1969[5] ad loc.). We may also doubt that in 1 Pet 3:7 it is correct to render the appeal to husbands to live with their wives kata gnōsin by "considerately" (RSV) or "with understanding" (NEB). It is rather a call to the practical demonstration of the knowledge (of God or of Christ) in the marriage relationship (cf. TDNT I 708). Knowledge in the sense of recognition is thus always linked with the practical behaviour of the one who knows and has to do with his way of life (Col. 1:9 f.) which should bring credit to the One known.

(b) We also find typical OT usage in the NT in the case of God's knowledge. This refers to God's loving, electing knowledge of men (cf. 2 Tim. 2:19 quoting Num. 16:5; the passives in 1 Cor. 8:3 [see below]; 1 Cor. 13:12; and Gal. 4:9). Rom. 11:33 should be mentioned in this connection. God's knowledge here includes the whole activity of God, which takes in Gentiles and Jews alike. It is eternally valid for his creatures and triumphs over guilt and disobedience. Rom. 10:2 is a sort of counterpart. Here Paul acknowledges the Jews' zeal for God, but it is not kata epignōsin, "in accordance with [real] knowledge" (cf. Arndt, 291). "This does not mean that the Jews lack a deeper insight into the being of God. The knowledge they lack is the knowledge and recognition of God's ways" (E. Gaugler, Der Brief an die Römer, 1959² ad loc.).

(c) There are, however, passages where ginōskō implies theological and theoretical knowledge. This overtone cannot be immediately derived from OT usage (see 4 below). Matt. 13:11 and Lk. 9:10 (cf. Mk. 4:11) speak of a hidden knowledge granted only to the → disciples, concerning "the mysteries of the → kingdom of God". This knowledge made them authoritative interpreters of the → parables, which otherwise are hidden from men (→ Explain; → Hide; → Secret). Col. 2:2 contains the phrase epignōsin tou mystēriou tou theou Christou. The uncertainty of how the text should be taken is reflected by the v.l. which has theou kai patros kai tou Christou ("God and Father and of Christ") and by several other variants (cf. E. Lohse, Colossians and Philemon, 1971, 82). But the RSV seems to give the most likely rendering: "the knowledge of God's mystery, of Christ". At any rate, it has a certain esoteric colouring. Essentially it involves a knowledge of God, but this knowledge is described as a mystery which is not open to all, but only to the saints to whom God has proclaimed his secret (Col. 1:26).

But even the knowledge of theological truths, e.g. of a particular teaching about baptism, has as its object obedience which expresses itself in life (Rom. 6:6). The express purpose of such knowledge mentioned is that "we might no longer be enslaved to sin."

3. The use of the word-group in the NT controversy with Gnosticism. A number of contemporary scholars see evidence of a conflict with gnosticism in a variety of NT passages. ([Ed.] The bibliography at the end of this article gives details of works by Bultmann, Jonas, Schmithals and others who adopt this view, together with works by R. McL. Wilson and E. M. Yamauchi and others who take a more cautious view. In assessing what influence, if any, gnosticism had on the NT several facts need to be borne in mind. The extant sources of gnosticism, like the known leading gnostic teachers, are substantially later than the NT. Certain gnostic ideas appear to be indebted to the NT itself. Moreover, the extant gnostic texts display a wide variety of beliefs which make it impossible to treat gnosticism as if it were a homogeneous belief-system. It would be uncritically simplistic to label someone a "gnostic" simply because he lays claim to gnōsis [knowledge] and to attribute to him without further evidence the belief-systems of Valentinus or Basilides. On the other hand, there were those in NT times who vaunted their superior knowledge [1 Cor. 1:18–2:16; 8:1; 13:12 f.; cf. Col. 2:8; 1 Tim. 4:7; 6:20]. It may be that in such passages we should see incipient tendencies which later flowered into gnosticism as we know it. But it would be anachronistic to read into these references ideas for which we have evidence only in the 2nd and 3rd centuries.)

The NT writers frequently found themselves in conflict with travelling preachers who had their own version of the apostolic kērygma. Timothy was expressly warned against the "godless chatter" and the "contradictions" of knowledge (gnōsis) falsely so called (1 Tim. 6:20). In Rev. 2:24 opponents are mentioned who claimed to have learned "the deep things of Satan". It may well be that the writer has sarcastically and with true critical judgment turned round their claim to have learned "the deep things of God" (E. Lohmeyer, op. cit., 29; E. Lohse, Die Offenbarung des Johannes, NTD 11, 1966², 29). There is much in Paul's letters (especially 1 and 2 Cor.; Phil. 3:2 ff.; Col., especially 2:4–23, and perhaps Gal.), and in the whole Johannine literature and Jude that might be understood against the background of anti-gnostic controversy. Our purpose here is to investigate whether the understanding of knowledge in these NT writers has been influenced by their gnostic opponents, and if so in what measure.

(a) Paul. In his discussion of the use of food offered to idols Paul quoted the claim: "We know that all of us possess knowledge [gnōsis]" (1 Cor. 8:1). gnōsis is here thought to be used in typically gnostic fashion without the article. Hence, it cannot refer merely to knowledge about such food. The important thing is the possession of gnōsis. The deduction was drawn that one may eat food offered to idols without any scruples. The one who has gnōsis is the one who knows the true being of God and his own originally divine being (cf. 2 Cor. 13:5, where Paul ironically is aiming his shafts at gnostic self-knowledge). He thus recognizes the non-reality of the universe, its earthly, historical relationships and regulations, and finds no problem in eating food offered to idols (cf. Phil. 3:19a; Rev. 2:20) or in immorality (1 Cor. 6:12–20; Phil. 3:19b.; cf. Rev. 2:20). He considers the question of resurrection irrelevant (1 Cor. 15:12; cf. Phil. 3:10–16). For such a man even the historical, earthly Jesus has no relevance (cf. "Jesus be anathema" [1 Cor. 12:3; → Curse]; "enemies of the cross of Christ" [Phil. 3:18]). Christian gnosticism applied the dualism of spirit and matter to its christology which was, therefore, always docetic. Paul measured this gnostic knowledge with the yard-stick of love: "Knowledge puffs up, but love builds up" (1 Cor. 8:2b.). The gnostic with his knowledge was interested only in himself and his claim to a superior freedom loosed from all earthly ties. Love, on the other hand, is concerned with the building up of the church, i.e. with the salvation of others in the fellowship of Jesus Christ, including the weak (1 Cor. 8:9) who do not possess this knowledge (1 Cor. 8:7), and surely also the outsiders and unbelievers (1 Cor. 14:23).

The knowledge claimed by the Corinthians was thus unacceptable to Paul. "If any one imagines that he knows something, he does not yet know as he ought to know" (1 Cor. 8:2). This may be compared with 1 Cor. 15:34, where Paul says that some people have an agnōsian . . . theou, "ignorance of God". In view of this, Paul was compelled to explain what he understood by knowledge. He found it possible to express knowledge only passively, as a being known (cf. Gal. 4:9, where he corrects the thought of an active human knowledge of God by adding "or rather to be known by God"). This being known is not the counterpart of some previous active comprehension of God by man, but rather of loving God (cf. 1 Cor. 8:3). Full and real knowledge of God is rather part of the eschatological → promise and expectation (1 Cor. 13:12). Paul totally rejected the fantastic gnostic anticipation of the eschaton (→ Goal, art. eschatos), in which being known by God and the perfect knowledge of God by man come together by simply disregarding existence on earth and in the body (cf. 2 Tim. 2:18b). For Paul the whole stress lay on God's having known us before time. Thus the gnōsthēnai, being known by God, involves election (cf. G. Bornkamm, op. cit., 186). If there is any human knowledge of God, it is the mediated knowledge of God as he revealed himself in the life and work of Christ. It is the Spirit-given "knowledge of God in the face of Jesus Christ" (2 Cor. 4:6). Before the eschaton we can know God only as we know Jesus Christ (Phil. 3:10; cf. Col. 2:2 f.). But Christ is not to be known through theological speculation, but rather as one is met by him and as one acknowledges him as the Lord (Phil. 3:8). Such acknowledgement is the counterpart to having been known by God. Where it does not exist, it is useless to speak of knowledge; "if any one does not recognize this, he is not recognized" (1 Cor. 14:38). Hence → love for God is the counterpart of having been known by God (1 Cor. 8:3). Love for God, however, takes shape in new obedience to the Lord Jesus Christ and freedom from the lordship of sin (cf. "in growing conformity with his death" [Phil. 3:10 NEB] with Rom. 6:3–3), in fellowship with Christ's sufferings, and in strenuous service in the resurrection power of Christ, while one presses on to the promised resurrection from the dead (Phil. 3;10). True knowledge is the knowledge which God revealed everywhere through the apostolic witness (2 Cor. 2:14). It is not the final fulfilment. At present it is only fragmentary (1 Cor. 13:12), but it looks to fulfilment. As Paul said in Philem. 6, knowledge is epignōsis pantos agathou, tou en hēmin eis Christon, "knowledge of all the good that is ours in Christ." The Corinthian gnostics in their pride did not want to know anything of this knowledge. Hence, Paul ironically demanded of them to "acknowledge that what I am writing to you is a command of the Lord" (1 Cor. 14:37). In the light of all this it is clear that Paul's polemics remain essentially within the limits of the OT concept of knowledge. At the same time he amplifies and works out this concept christologically.

(b) John. The terminology of the Johannine statements about knowledge is influenced by the gnostic outlook as is the Johannine vocabulary and thought-world generally. What this means for the theological statements in Jn. will be discussed later. The gnostic influence on the concept of knowledge may be seen, if the statements involving ginōskō are detached from their contexts and examined on their own. The very fact that knowledge can represent a mutual and inner fellowship between Jesus and his own, and between Jesus (the Son) and God (the Father) in Jn. 10:14 f., points to a gnostic background. J. Jeremias (TDNT VI 496, note 106), argues, however, that this reflects a Semitism and not Hellenistic mysticism, as R. Bultmann maintains in The Gospel of John, 1971, 380 ff. The possibility of describing knowledge as → fellowship is based on the personal equality of the one who knows, the messenger of God who mediates the knowledge, and the God who is to be known who is utterly transcendent. A gnostic and dualistic contrast between God and the world is indicated by the statement that the world cannot receive "the Spirit of truth because it neither sees him nor knows him" (Jn. 14:17). The hatred experienced by Jesus and his disciples (Jn. 15:18; cf. 16:2 f.) is to be understood as a result of the irremovable distinction between the divine and the earthly. Similarly the voice of revelation cannot be recognized as such by those who have the devil and not God as → father (Jn. 8:42–47). Conversely the knowledge of God includes knowledge of the One he has sent and becomes co-terminous with eternal life (Jn. 17:3), as with the gnostics. This knowledge which brings salvation is possible only through the call from outside, the coming of the → Son of God who has given understanding (dianoia), i.e. the ability to know him who is true (1 Jn. 5:20).

The dependence of Johannine language and the Johannine view of knowledge on the terminology of gnosticism is understandable if one realizes that the recipients of the Christian message and its opponents influenced the form in which it was expressed. John's purpose is to speak to gnostics and therefore he uses their language. He faces the gnostic on his own ground and combats him with his own weapons. This does not make the gospel a myth or John a gnostic. We should, however, investigate what this may mean for our concept of knowledge.

One might say that John has given the gnostic myth an entirely new orientation. The gnostic understood knowledge as self-knowledge, through which man came to realize that he was a stranger in the universe and also that he was divine. He thus experienced deliverance from the world and history alike. For John, knowledge is of a personal reality that stands over against man. This Other is God mediated by revelation. Since "no one has ever seen God" (Jn. 1:18), there can be no immediate knowledge of God or direct fellowship with God. But God may be known in the One he has sent, his Son (cf. the synoptic parallels Matt. 11:27 and Lk. 10:22). The Son is not, like the saviour in gnosticism, a mythological figure. He bears the historical name Jesus which unambiguously locates him in time and space. He is the Logos (→ Word) who has become → flesh (Jn. 1:14; 1 Jn. 1:1–4). He who sees Jesus sees the Father (Jn. 14:9; 12:45). He who has known him will know the Father also, for he has already known him and seen him (Jn. 14:7). Hence, fellowship with God can come only through fellowship with Jesus, for this fellowship corresponds to Jesus' fellowship with God (Jn. 10:14 f.). On both levels it is expressed by ginōskō.

The fellowship between Jesus and those that are his, made effective by mutual knowledge, does not imply, as in gnosticism, the deification of man and his complete removal from the world and history. In Jn., knowledge gains its form from the one God and his revelation in history through historical channels. By sending his Son, God revealed his love to his own (Jn. 17:23; 1 Jn. 4:9 f.) and to the world (Jn. 3:16). The Son loved his own according to the measure of his Father's love to him (Jn. 15:9; 17:26). Therefore, knowledge by the one loved by God and Jesus finds expression in the sphere of history in love: "He who does not love does not know God; for God is love" (1 Jn. 4:8). Just as the Son demonstrated his love for the Father by obedience to God's → command (Jn. 14:31), so he who knows demonstrates his knowledge by keeping God's command (1 Jn. 2:3 ff.), above all that of loving his → brother (1 Jn. 4:7 f.; cf. 2:7–11), and by not sinning (1 Jn. 3:6). Thus ginōskō has a double application: it means knowing the love of God shown in the sending of his Son (Jn. 17:8; 1 Jn. 3:16), and the obedience of love based on it which is also described as obedience to the message proclaimed (1 Jn. 4:6). Such knowledge is already eternal → life here and now (Jn. 17:3), because it is a life in history derived from God's historical revelation. In view of all this, John's concept stands out as deliberately and diametrically opposed to that of gnosticism.

The striking equation of → faith and knowledge in the relationship of man to God is also part of the polemic against gnosticism which at the very least depreciated faith in contrast to knowledge. While Jn. 17:3 attributes eternal life to knowledge, Jn. 3:36 attributes it to faith. In the Johannine version of Peter's confession (Jn. 5:69) one might be tempted to see faith as the first step subordinate to knowledge, but in 1 Jn. 4:16 the order is "know and believe."

Gnostic self-satisfaction which is concerned only with one's own salvation is opposed by emphasis on the existence of the church in brotherly love (Jn. 13:35) and unity (Jn. 17:21 ff.). Moreover, the ultimate goal behind this will be reached only when the world comes to believe that the Son has been sent, and when this revelation becomes known throughout the universe. Such an affirmation is possible only if John does not share the gnostic dualism of cosmos (creation) and salvation. For the gnostic this dualism was insurmountable, because it was decreed by a pre-cosmic fall. According to the gnostic view, the universe was completely and fatally incapable of knowing God and of being redeemed. For John the world remains God's creation (Jn. 1:1 ff.; cf. 1 Jn. 2:14). Not to know, which showed itself in hatred against Jesus and his disciples, is a result of refusing to believe the revelation given (Jn. 8:42 f.) which in turn incurs guilt (cf. E. Käsemann, Verkündigung und Forschung, 1946², 192 f.). "If the 'Jews' are unable to understand, it is because they are unable truly to hear. They are prepared to hear only what they already know, even though of course they are interested in deepening and enriching this knowledge; but they are not prepared to hear anything new, and so to surrender all that they knew before, and with it the condition of such knowledge, their own understanding of themselves. They cannot hear in this way! To raise the question why they cannot hear would only be to show a lack of understanding that in this sphere being able to do something and willing to do something are one and the same" (R. Bultmann, op. cit., 317). The summons to knowledge and faith thus remains even for the world; God's love for the world in sending his Son which is now presented as something real has opened up a new dimension of reality.

Although Jn.'s vocabulary has clear affinities with gnosticism, his subject matter equally clearly stands much nearer to the concept of knowledge in the OT tradition than the mythical speculations of gnosticism.

4. Later developments. (a) In the Pastorals, and to some extent in 2 Pet., epignōsis has received a special stamp through the controversy with gnosticism which deviates from the OT usage. In the earlier Pauline Epistles and the Johannine writings church doctrine was still in the course of development in the controversy with gnosticism. In the Pastorals, however, a definite doctrinal tradition is evident, and all entanglement with "godless and silly myths" (1 Tim. 4:7) is forbidden. Hence, gnostic terminology has been in great measure eliminated and replaced by other terms. gnōsis is regarded as a technical term for the gnostic heresy (cf. 1 Tim. 6:20) and epignōsis takes its place, when it refers to Christian knowledge (1 Tim. 2:4; 2 Tim. 2:25; 2:7; Tit. 1:1). It has, however, quite clearly an intellectual, semi-dogmatic stress. The knowledge of God's truth is of equal importance with experiential profession of the Lord, and finally pushes it into the background. Hence, conversion to the Christian faith can be described almost technically as coming to a knowledge (epignōsis) of the truth (1 Tim. 2:4; 2 Tim. 3:7; cf. Heb. 10:26; 1 Tim. 5:3; 2 Tim. 2:25; Tit. 1:1; 2 Pet. 2:21). Examples of this concept of truth may be found in Eth.Enoch 105:2 and Sib. 1:20.

In 2 Pet. epignōsis is used in a similar theoretical, technical way in connection with God's call. Knowledge is here of the orthodox tradition, of the catholic doctrinal teaching (2 Pet. 1:2, 3, 8; 2:20) which, as in the Pastorals, must become effective in a corresponding manner of life. It is interesting that gnōsis has a good sense in 2 Pet. (cf. 1:5 f.; 3:18). This does not apply to ch. 2, where an anti-gnostic writing (Jude) has been incorporated which uses only epignōsis (2:20) and epiginōskō (2:21).

(b) The controversies of early Christianity with gnosticism had a decisive effect on many aspects of the church's teaching and concepts. They partly explain the development of the office of teacher (→ Bishop) by which correct exegesis of Scripture was to be guaranteed, and the fixing of the canon of Scripture so as to exclude heretical writings from the church's use. The drawing up of various creeds finds its place here also. Gnostic influences continued for a long time to show their influence on Church theology (for evidence of gnosticism in the early church see W. Foerster, Gnosis: A Selection of Gnostic Texts, I, Patristic Evidence, 1972).

E. D. Schmitz

ἀγνοέω

ἀγνοέω (agnoeō), not know, be ignorant; ἀγνόημα (agnoēma), error; ἄγνοια (agnoia), ignorance; ἀγνωσία (agnōsia), lack of knowledge; ἄγνωστος (agnōstos), unknown.

CL & OT agnoeō means not to know and is used against the full background of the Gk. concept of knowledge (→ ginōskō). It does not refer merely to something not grasped by the mind, but can also mean make a mistake or be in error. In Dan. 9:15 it is used beside hamartanō, to sin. Similarly agnoēma (in the NT only in Heb. 9:7) is used not merely for error but also for an offence done in ignorance. agnoia similarly refers not only to the fact of not knowing, but can be used in a general sense for ignorance or lack of education. The positive opposites are gnōsis (→ ginōskō) and sophia (→ Wisdom). The Stoics considered ignorance to be the root of all evil, and sometimes identified the two. In the Hellenistic terminology of gnostic dualism agnōsia was "lack of the knowledge essential to the salvation of the soul, i.e., the knowledge about God, of the fate of the soul and of true direction for life" (R. Bultmann, TDNT I 118). If a man was living without knowledge, it was either because he had not received the revelation or had refused it. Had he received it, it would have freed him from his ignorance of his origin.

In legal settings agnoia means ignorance of the law; kat' agnoian means unwittingly (e.g. Lev. 22:14). The LXX uses agnoia (mostly for Heb. 'āšām) concretely in the sense of agnoēma, also meaning (unintentional) → guilt, offence, error, generally (e.g. Lev. 5:18). agnōstos, meaning both unknowable and unknown, is found in the LXX, without Heb. equivalent, and Acts 17:23 (only here in the NT) only in the latter sense.

NT agnoeō is found 21 times in NT (15 times in Paul), but agnoia only 4 times, agnōsia twice, agnoēma and agnōstos each twice.

1. agnoeō occurs in the following senses:

(a) Not to understand in the sense of not being able to grasp (Mk. 9:32 and Lk. 9:45, in each case of a passion prediction by Jesus).

(b) Not to know, not be informed (e.g. 2 Pet. 2:12, where the godless revile in matters they do not know, about which they have not been informed); especially in the phrase ou thelō hymas agnoein, "I do not want you to be ignorant", i.e. uninformed (RSV sometimes "I want you to know") (Rom. 1:13; 11:25; 1 Cor. 10:1; 12:1; 2 Cor. 1:8; 1 Thess. 4:13), always with the address "brethren". The implicit double negative is used by Paul to stress that he wishes to end his readers' lack of knowledge by making them share in his knowledge. agnoeō is used also in the formula ē agnoeite, "or do you not know?" (Rom. 6:3; 7:1, "or" omitted by RSV) with the force of not knowing, or perhaps rather of failing to realize. In both passages a present knowledge is presupposed which implies a need to respond to the gospel. Almost all the passages cited above deal with a partial recognition of faith in Christ, as the object of agnoeō. It never means merely a lack of intellectual knowledge which can be removed by a neutral statement of facts. It is used in the OT sense. This lack of knowledge can be removed only by knowledge intimately linked with an existential recognition and acceptance (cf. ginōskō CL and OT).

(c) An ignorance that leads astray. In 1 Tim. 1:13 Paul, looking back on his past, says, "I received mercy because I had acted ignorantly in unbelief." Ignorance is here the trait that marked out his life that had gone astray until his → conversion to the Christian faith which always includes knowledge. The same shade of meaning is found in Heb. 5:2, "ignorant and wayward". OT language is here used, contrasting unknowing, unintentional → sins with deliberate ones. In the context, the meaning of agnoeō is expanded from unknowing to undesired, so that it comes to denote the sins for which there is atonement in contrast to those for which there is none.

(d) A failure to know in the sense of a disobedient closing of the mind to the revealing word of God (Acts 13:27; Rom. 10:3). This is not simply a lack of knowledge, but "a false understanding, a false path in knowing and thinking" (O. Michel Der Brief an die Römer, KEK 4, 1966[13], on Rom. 10:3). Ignorance and disobedience are here used as parallels; ignorance is the guilty turning away from the revelation of God in Jesus Christ. The guilty ignorance of the Jews cannot be conquered by introspection or some kind of self-reformation. It can only be dealt with by God himself as he forgives and reveals himself in the gospel. This is not merely an erring ignorance (see above (c)). It reflects the OT link between knowledge and right conduct (and correspondingly between wilful rejection of knowledge and judgment). (On the consequent hardening of Israel → Hard.)

1 Cor. 14:38 should probably be included in this connection: "If anyone does not recognize [agnoei], he is not recognized [agnoeitai]." The second half of the verse speaks of God's recognition. For Paul is claiming to speak by "a command of the Lord" (v. 37). Hence, to reject the command is to reject God with the implied corollary that this involves non-recognition by not only Paul but by God himself.

(e) To be unknown. In 2 Cor. 6:9 Paul says that he is "unknown", i.e. to the world, for he is not included among its great ones. On the other hand, he was well known to God and the church. See also Gal. 1:22.

2. (a) In Acts 3:17 agnoia is used in the juridical sense of the LXX. The guilt of the Jews is, from the viewpoint of the subject, a sin arising from ignorance. On the other hand, the Stoic-Jewish sense is found in the other cases of its use, among them being some which betray gnostic usage (→ ginōsko). Acts 17:30 refers to past heathenism as ignorance (cf. Acts 14:16; Rom. 3:25). The history of mankind is from the point of view of salvation divided into two periods; before and after Christ. The period before the decisive and basic revelation of God in Christ is characterized by the ignorance which prevailed. "The times of ignorance God overlooked, but now he commands all men everywhere to repent."

(b) agnōstos in Acts 17:23 means simply unknown in the inscription "To an unknown God" on an altar at Athens. Paul addressed the Athenians as those who had until then honoured the unknown God without knowledge, but whom he was now proclaiming as the revealed One. The unknown God among the gods is in fact the true and only One. He is the God of the OT and of salvation-history. The mention of ignorance was not intended to justify and excuse men; it was to introduce them to God's saving purposes and to lead them to the joy of repentance. (On the inscription see F. F. Bruce, The Acts of the Apostles, 1952², 335 f.; and E. Haenchen, The Acts of the Apostles, 1971, 516, 520 ff.; → God, art. theos NT 1 (d), 4 (b)). E. Schütz

→ God, → Light, → Myth, → Reason, → Revelation, → Secret, → Truth, → Wisdom

On knowledge and experience in general:
(a). G. Bornkamm, "The Revelation of God's Wrath (Romans 1–3)", in Early Christian Experience, 1969, 47–70; E. Brunner, Truth as Encounter: A New Edition, Much Enlarged, of The Divine-Human Encounter, 1964; R. Bultmann, agnoeō etc., TDNT I 115–21; and ginōskō etc., TDNT I 689–719; W. D. Davies, " 'Knowledge' in the Dead Sea Scrolls and Matthew 11:25–30", HTR 46, 1953, 113–39, reprinted in Christian Origins and Judaism, 1962, 119–44; C. H. Dodd, "Knowledge of God", in The Interpretation of the Fourth Gospel, 1953, 151–69; G. Delling, aisthanomai etc., TDNT I 187 f.; E. E. Ellis, " 'Wisdom' and 'Knowledge' in I Corinthians", TB 25, 1974, 82–98; B. Gärtner, The Areopagus Speech and Natural Revelation, 1955; J. B. Lightfoot, The Epistles of Paul to the Colossians and to Philemon, 1879, 137 f.; J. A. Robinson, St. Paul's Epistle to the Ephesians, 1904, 249 ff.; cf. the comments on Lightfoot and Robinson by R. E. Picirilli, "The Meaning of 'Epignosis' ", EQ 47, 1975, 88 ff.; B. Reicke, "Da'at and Gnosis in Intertestamental Literature", in E. E. Ellis and M. Wilcox, eds., Neotestamentica et Semitica: Studies in Honour of Matthew Black, 1969, 245–55; N. B. Stonehouse, Paul before the Areopagus and Other New Testament Studies, 1957; H. Zimmermann, "Knowledge of God", EBT II 472–78.
(b). E. Baumann, "yāḏa' und seine Derivate", ZAW 28, 1908, 22 ff., 110 ff.; and " 'Wissen um Gott' bei Hosea als Urform der Theologie?", EvTh 15, 1955, 416 ff.; G. J. Botterweck, "Gott erkennen" im Sprachgebrauch des Alten Testaments, Bonner Biblische Beiträge 2, 1951; A. Fridrichsen, "Gnosis: Et Bidrag til Belysning ave den Paulinske Terminologi og Erkjennelsesteori", Festschrift E. Lahmann, 1927, 85–109; F. Hesse, Das Verstockungsproblem im Alten Testament, BZAW 74, 1955; K. Niederwimmer, Der Begriff der Freiheit im Neuen Testament, 1966; E. Norden, Agnostos Theos, (1913) 1971⁵; F. Nötscher, Zur theologischen Terminologie der Qumran-Texte, 1956, 15–79; R. Prenter, Connaître Christ, 1966; E. Prucker, Gnōsis Theou. Untersuchungen zur Bedeutung eines religiösen Begriffs beim Apostel und bei seiner Umwelt, 1937; H. Schlier, "Gnosis", in Handbuch theologischer Grundbegriffe, I, 1962, 562 ff.; W. Schottroff, yāḏa', THAT I 682–701; Die Ausdrücke für den Begriff des Wissens in der vorplatonischen Philosophie, Philologische Untersuchungen, 29, 1924; and Platon, Mit den Augen des Geistes, 1955; H. W. Wolff, " 'Wissen um Gott' bei Hosea als Urform von Theologie", EvTh 12, 1952–53, 533 ff.; and "Erkenntnis Gottes im Alten Testament", EvTh 15, 1955, 426 ff.; W. Zimmerli, Erkenntnis Gottes nach dem Buch Ezechiel, AThANT 27, 1954.

Works on gnosticism and its bearing on the NT:
(a). A complete critical edition of the Nag Hammadi codices and Codex Berolinensis 8502 is under preparation in The Coptic Gnostic Library, published under the auspices of The Institute for Antiquity and Christianity. Other editions of texts and discussions include: C. K. Barrett, "The Theological Vocabulary of the Fourth Gospel and the Gospel of Truth", in W. Klassen and G. F. Snyder, eds., Current Issues in New Testament Interpretation: Essays in Honor of Otto A. Piper, 1962, 210–23; W. Bauer, Orthodoxy and Heresy in Earliest Christianity, 1971; F. H. Borsch, The Christian and Gnostic Son of Man ,1970; R. Bultmann, Primitive Christianity in its Contemporary Setting, 1956; and The Gospel of John, 1971; F. C. Burkitt, Church and Gnosis, 1932; R. P. Casey, "Gnosis, Gnosticism and the New Testament", in W. D. Davies and D. Daube, eds., The Background of the New Testament and its Eschatology. In Honour of Charles Harold Dodd, 1956, 52–80; H. Chadwick, "Gnosticism", OCD, 470 f.; F. L. Cross, ed., The Jung Codex: A Newly Recovered Gnostic Papyrus, 1955; J. Doresse, The Secret Books of the Egyptian Gnostics: An Introduction to the Gnostic Coptic Manuscripts discovered at Chenoboskion; With an English Translation and Critical Evaluation of the Gospel according to Thomas, 1960; J. W. Drane, "Gnosticism and the New Testament 1", Theological Students Fellowship Bulletin 68, 1974, 6–13; "Gnosticism and the New Testament 2", ibid. 69, 1974, 1–7; E. S. Drower, "A Mandaean Bibliography", Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, 1953, 34–39; W. Foerster, Gnosis: A Selection of Gnostic Texts, I, Patristic Evidence, 1972; II, Coptic and Mandaic Sources, 1974; B. Gärtner, The Theology of the Gospel of Thomas, 1961; R. M. Grant, Gnosticism: An Anthology, 1961; and Gnosticism and Early Christianity, 1966²; R. M. Grant and D. N. Freedman, The Secret Sayings of Jesus, With an English Translation of the Gospel of Thomas, 1960; K. Grobel, The Gospel of Truth: A Valentinian Meditation on the Gospel, 1960; R. Haardt, Gnosis: Character and Testimony, 1971; E. Hennecke and W. Schneemelcher, eds., New Testament Apocrypha, I–II 1963–65; R. A. Johnson, The Origins of Demythologizing: Philosophy and Historiography in the Theology of Rudolf Bultmann, Supplements to Numen 28, 1974; H. Jonas, The Gnostic Religion: The Message of the Alien God and the Beginnings of Christianity, 1963²; R. Macuch, Handbook of Classical and Modern Mandaic, 1965; H. Montefiore and H. E. W. Turner, Thomas and the Evangelists, 1962; J. Munck, "The New Testament and Gnosticism", in W. Klassen and G. F. Snyder, eds., op. cit., 224–38; A. D. Nock, "Gnosticism", HTR 57, 1964, 255–79 (reprinted in Essays on Religion and the Ancient World, II, 1972, 940 ff.); E. H. Pagels, The Gnostic Paul: Gnostic Exegesis of the Pauline Letters, 1975; M. L. Peel, The Epistle to Rheginos: A Valentinian Letter on the Resurrection, 1969; H. C. Puech, "Gnosis and Time", Papers from Eranos Yearbooks, Man and Time, 1958; G. Quispel, "Gnosis", Vox Theologica, 39, 1969, 27–35; and "Gnosticism and the New Testament", in J. P. Hyatt, ed., The Bible in Modern Scholarship, 1965, 252–71; with responses by R. Mc. L. Wilson and H. Jonas, op. cit., 272–93; B. Reicke, "Traces of Gnosticism in the Dead Sea Scrolls?" NTS 1, 1954–55, 137–41; A. Richardson, "Gnosis and Revelation in the Bible and in Contemporary Thought", SJT 9, 1956, 31–45; W. Schmithals, Paul and James, SBT 46, 1963; Gnosticism in Corinth, 1971; and Paul and the Gnostics, 1972; R. Schnackenburg, "The Gnostic Myth of the Redeemer and the Johannine Christology", The Gospel according to St. John, I, 1968, 543–57; W. C. van Unnik, Newly Discovered Gnostic Writings: A Preliminary Survey of the Nag Hammadi Find, 1960; E. Voegelin, "History and Gnosis", in B. W. Anderson, ed., The Old Testament and Christian Faith, 1964, 64–89; R. McL. Wilson, The Gnostic Problem, 1958; Studies in the Gospel of Thomas, 1960; The Gospel of Philip, 1962; "Gnostics – in Galatia?", StudEv, IV 1, 1968, 358–67; Gnosis and the New Testament, 1968; E. M. Yamauchi, Mandaic Incantation Texts, 1967; "The Present Status of Mandaean Studies", JNES 25, 1966, 88–96; Gnostic Ethics and Mandaean Origins, 1970; and Pre-Christian Gnosticism: A Survey of the Proposed Evidences, 1973.

(b). U. Bianchi, ed., Le Origini dello Gnosticismo, Colloquio di Messina 13–18 Aprile 1966, Studies in the History of Religions (Supplements to Numen) 12, 1967; A. Böhlig, Mysterion und Wahrheit. Gesammelte Beiträge zur spätantiken Religionsgeschichte, 1968; W. Bousset, "Gnosis", Pauly-Wissowa VII 1502 ff.; and "Gnostiker", ibid., 1534 ff.; L. Cerfaux, "De Saint Paul a l'Évangile de la Verité", NTS 5, 1958–59, 103–12; J. Dupont, Gnosis: La Connaissance Religieuse dans les Épîtres de Saint Paul, 1949; W. Eltester, ed., Christentum und Gnosis, BZNW 37, 1969; E. de Faye, Gnostiques et Gnosticisme, 1925²; A.-J. Festugière, La Révélation d'Hermès Trismégiste, I–IV, 1949–54; D. Georgi, Die Gegner des Paulus im 2. Korintherbrief, 1964; H. Jonas, Gnosis und spätantiker Geist, I, Die mythologische Gnosis (1934) 1964³, II, Von der Mythologie zur mystischen Philosophie, 1954; J. Krull, Die Lehre des Hermes Trismegistos, Beiträge zur Geschichte der Philosophie des Mittelalters, 12, 1914; H. Leisegang, Die Gnosis, 1955⁴; G. Quispel, Gnosis als Weltreligion, 1951; R. Reitzenstein, Das mandäische Buch des Herrn der Grösse und die Evangelienüberlieferung, 1919; Poimandres (1904) 1966; Die hellenistischen Mysterienreligionen 1927; and Die Vorgeschichte der christlichen Taufe (1929) 1967; K. Rudolf, Die Mandäer, I–II, 1960–61; K. Rudolf, ed., Gnosis und Gnostizismus, 1975; K.-W. Tröger, ed., Gnosis und Neues Testament. Studien aus Religionswissenschaft und Theologie, 1973.

L

Lamb, Sheep

In the ancient world sheep together with other small livestock were kept in herds, and for that reason are usually referred to in the plural. The word probaton, which is relatively frequent in the NT, was originally a generic term for all four-legged animals, especially tame domestic animals, only later was it restricted to sheep. amnos denoted from the outset a young sheep, frequently a one-year-old lamb, especially as used for sacrifice on numerous cultic occasions. In non-sacrificial contexts, the lamb as an animal for slaughter was called arēn. The diminutive form arnion originally meant lambkin, but later simply a lamb. In a figurative theological context (especially in Matt. and Jn.) Israel and the Christian church are often referred to as sheep (probata), and occasionally (in Jn. and 1 Pet.) Jesus is likened to a lamb, amnos (in Jn.), arnion (in Rev.).

ἀμνός

ἀμνός (amnos), lamb; ἀρήν (arēn), lamb; ἀρνίον (arnion), lamb.

CL amnos, found infrequently from Sophocles and Aristophanes onwards, denotes a lamb as distinct from → probaton, sheep. In the LXX both amnos and arēn are used, while arnion is no longer felt to be a diminutive, either in the LXX or in the NT.

OT In the OT amnos (Hebrew keḇeś) is used chiefly in passages classed among the Priestly writings and in Ezek., i.e. in writings of a cultic and sacrificial character. The lamb plays an important role as a sacrificial animal in Israel's public worship. Lambs are presented as burnt offerings and sacrifices (Lev. 9:3, Num. 15:5) to atone for and to cleanse the people as a whole or individual persons (e.g. → lepers, Lev. 14:10) at the sanctuary. According to Exod. 12:5, at the yearly Passover → feast each family consumed a lamb that was without blemish, a male a year old, in memory of the exodus from Egypt. (At the exodus itself the blood of the lamb was smeared upon the door-posts and lintels of Jewish houses [Exod. 12:7, 13, 23].) In his prophecy of the new temple Ezek. mentions lambs as gifts for the → Sabbath-offering and the feast-offering (46:4, 11). Isa. 53:7 is particularly illuminating: the patiently suffering → Servant of the Lord is compared with a lamb being led to the slaughter and remaining dumb before its shearers. Here for the first time a person is spoken of as fulfilling the function of a sacrificial animal. Acts 8:32 cites Isa. 53:7, and sees in the passage a reference to the "good news of Jesus" (Acts 8:35).

NT 1. In the NT Jesus is described 4 times as amnos (Jn. 1:29, 36; Acts 8:32; 1 Pet. 1:19). In Jn. 1:29, 36 John the Baptist describes Jesus, whom he has baptized, as ho amnos tou theou, "the lamb of God". This is not merely a comparison in which Jesus is said to be like a lamb; rather he is the lamb of God. Both Acts 8:32 and 1 Pet. 1:19 contain hōs (as), but this is not true of Jn. 1:29, 36. J. Jeremias (TDNT I 339) suggests that this phrase may have been borrowed from Isa. 53, and also from the Passover lamb idea. He points out that the Aramaic word ṭalyā' means both lamb and boy, servant, and says that the meaning "servant" makes the genitive intelligible: Jesus, the servant of God. Then this led eventually to the possible (but most likely not the original) translation amnos tou theou.

Interesting and thought-provoking as this is, it is preferable to understand this unusual genitive construction in the light of the relative clause ho airōn tēn hamartian tou kosmou ("that takes away the sin of the world") and to link this with Isa. 53: the lamb (of God) bears the sin of the world. (For interpretation of the Servant see H. H. Rowley, The Servant of the Lord and Other Essays, 1965².)

If "lamb" stands for "offering", then the Baptist's statement becomes clear. No offerings brought by men can take away the sin of the world. But God himself provides an offering, which does indeed take it away. He gave his only Son and did not spare him (cf. Rom. 8:31–32, probably an echo of Gen. 22). There is a considerable contrast between the Baptist's words in Jn. 1:29 and those in the Synoptic Gospels, where messiah is said to be coming with his fan in his hand, sweeping his threshing floor (Matt. 3:12; Lk. 3:17). Jn. 1:29, however, is to be seen against the background of Jesus' baptism (1:32–34), when he publicly identified himself with sinners and their lot. Once God has delivered up his Son to death the eschatological time of salvation can be said to have begun.

In the NT Jesus is described as a lamb in three different respects: (a) Acts 8:32 stresses his patient suffering; (b) 1 Pet. 1:19 emphasizes the sinlessness and perfection of his sacrifice by the phrase "without blemish and without spot"; (c) Jn. 1:29, 36 describe the atoning power of his death: he bears, i.e. wipes out, the sin of the world (cf. J. Jeremias, TDNT I 340).

2. arēn occurs once in the NT in Lk. 10:3, where it is said that the disciples will be as defenceless as sheep among wolves (→ Animal).

3. arnion. In Jn. 21:15 Christ exhorts Peter: "Feed my lambs [boske ta arnia mou]". "The church belongs to Christ, and needs faithful pastoral oversight by his disciple (cf. Augustine: "Feed my sheep as mine and not as yours [oves meas pasce sicut meas, non sicut tuas]" (Tractatus in Ioannis Evangelium 123). Apart from Jn. 21:15, arnion is found exclusively in Rev. (27 times). It is important to note the observation by J. Jeremias (TDNT I 340) that by the NT period this word was no longer thought of as a diminutive. There is therefore no biblical basis for referring to Christ as a "lambkin", however endearing the idea may be. The thought is rather that the judge of all the earth is he who died for us, and even as sovereign Lord he still bears the marks of his passion (Rev. 5:6).

arnion occurs 4 times in Rev. 5 (vv. 6, 8, 12 f.), where Christ is seen in this twofold aspect. On the one hand, he is the Lord, the one who opens the seals and who is to be worshipped. On the other hand, he is esphagmenon arnion ("a lamb that was slain") having redeemed men of all races to God by his → blood, and made them → kings and → priests (Rev. 5:9, 10). He is both arnion and leōn, a lion (→ Animal). The eschatological wrath from which kings, rulers, freemen and slaves all wish to hide is orgē tou arniou, "the wrath of the Lamb" (Rev. 6:16). In ch. 7 it is said that the blood of the Lamb has cleansing power. The robes of the martyrs were cleansed not by their martyrdom, severe as it was, but solely by the blood of the Lamb. The Lamb is worshipped at the same time as God (7:10). Rev. 19:7, 9 speaks of the marriage of the Lamb, the church being the bride. The 12 apostles are called apostles of the Lamb. God and the Lamb illumine the city of God (21:14, 23).

4. In summary it can be said that amnos tou theou denotes God's offering, Christ, whom he destined to bear the sin of the world, while arnion emphasizes the fact that he who is eternal Lord is also Christ crucified for us. J. Gess πρόβατον (probaton), sheep.

| πρόβατον |

CL In Gk. antiquity the word probaton in its widest sense denoted all four-footed animals (especially tame, domestic ones) as opposed to swimming and creeping animals. It is possible that the word derives from the vb. pro-bainō, to go before. In mixed herds it was the small livestock (especially the sheep) which, being weaker than the other animals, went ahead of them. At first the word was used only in the plur. (i.e. of a flock or herd), but later the sing. use appeared, meaning specifically a sheep. Aristophanes (Nubes, 1203) uses it metaphorically as a term of abuse: anything inferior or stupid (e.g. a simpleton) is likened to a sheep. It can also have a positive sense, however, being used as a metaphor for a person who needs to be guided by someone else (Epictetus, Dissertationes, 3, 22, 35).

OT As a translation of Heb. ṣō'n (small livestock) probaton in the OT means primarily the sheep as a useful and gregarious animal (Gen. 30:38, Isa. 7:21; Amos 7:15), and less as a sacrifice (Lev. 1:2; for this the more frequent word is → amnos, Heb. keḇeś, the lamb available for sacrifice). probaton (almost exclusively in the plur. probata) is used metaphorically for "the people" (under the king as poimēn, → shepherd; 2 Sam. 24:17), especially God's people (Ps. 74:1, the congregation; 77:20; 78:52). The essential point here is the sheep's need of protection. Without the shepherd's guidance the flock is scattered (Ezek. 34:5, 6); each sheep goes its own way (Isa. 53:6); the sheep wander about and fall victims to the dangers of the wilderness (Ezek. 34:5 f.); they must be guided by a skilful shepherd to the right pastures if they are to survive (Ps. 23). Hence, the people of Israel in the wilderness, and without a leader, are like "sheep which have no shepherd" (Num. 27:17). The individual also, without God's guidance, "goes astray like a lost sheep" (Ps. 119:176). Yahweh himself provides for his scattered flock by appointing shepherds such as the messianic king (Jer. 23:1 ff.; Ezek. 34:23), or → Moses (Ps. 77:20; Isa. 63:11), or by himself acting as the shepherd of his people (Ps. 78:52 f.; 80:1; Isa. 40:11). By repeatedly calling themselves God's sheep, therefore, the people of Israel were acknowledging first that, left to themselves, they were defenceless, and secondly that they were trusting in the guidance of their own good shepherd, Yahweh himself (Ps. 23; 95:7; 100:3).

NT In the NT probaton is remarkably frequent in Matt. (11 times) and in Jn (17 times), compared with the other books.

1. From the use which Jesus makes of sheep in his parables and teaching, it is clear that his contemporaries understood very well how utterly lost a sheep was if left to itself without a shepherd's care (Lk. 15:4). They knew that a sheep's great need was loving, unselfish protection (Matt. 12:11; Lk. 15:4), and this basic fact lies behind Christ's use of the metaphor. A sheep without a shepherd is "harassed and helpless" (Matt. 9:36), it "strays" (1 Pet. 2:25) and is "lost" (Matt. 10:6; 15:24). In following OT usage and likening his people to a flock of sheep without a shepherd (Mk. 6:34; cf. Num. 27:17; 1 Ki. 22:17), Jesus draws attention to the fact that they are heading for certain destruction, unless deliverance is forthcoming. In the same way Christians in 1 Pet. are reminded that before their conversion they were "straying like sheep" (1 Pet. 2:25), i.e. hopelessly lost and at the mercy of false shepherds (cf. Ezek. 34:5). But Jesus is "the great shepherd of the sheep" (Heb. 13:20), who is sent first of all to "the lost sheep of the house of Israel" (Matt. 15:24).

2. On the other hand, the term "sheep" is applied in Matt. to the exclusive band of disciples gathered by Jesus. In sending them forth to preach (10:16; cf. arnas, lambs, Lk. 10:3), Jesus likens them to defenceless sheep sent by the shepherd into the midst of ferocious wolves, i.e. the church of the last days is under the constant threat of dispersal by its enemies (Matt. 26:31 par. Mk. 14:27). This quotation applies to Jesus and the disciples the prophecy of Zech. 13:7 which reads in the MT: "Strike the shepherd and the flock [ṣō'n] will be scattered," and in the LXX "Strike the shepherd and scatter the sheep [probata]." It is interpreted christologically in the Gospels, with the implication that Jesus' followers are the true Israel and that it is God who will smite Jesus. The context of Zech. suggests that it is a judgment on the shepherd. The "sheep" who consciously or unconsciously have done the will of God will not be finally separated from the goats until the shepherd himself separates them at the great day of judgment (Matt. 25:32 f.).

3. Whereas in Matt. the thought is more of the flock being gathered from among the lost sheep of the people of Israel (10:6; 15:24), in Jn. probaton denotes Christ's elect people, "his own" (10:14). The sheep know the → voice of their shepherd, hear his call and follow him. As the good shepherd, Jesus knows his sheep, calls them, guards them from the wolf and lays down his life for them (Jn. 10:1–11). Whereas in Matt. the relation between shepherd and flock is that of king to the people of God, in Jn. the shepherd is the Son who comes forth from God in order to reveal him, while the flock is the church listening to his voice. When there is "one flock and one shepherd" (Jn. 10:16; cf. 17:20 f.), i.e. when at last Jews and Gentiles are gathered into one church under one Lord, then the purpose of Christ's saving work is achieved.

4. As in the OT, probaton hardly ever means a sacrificial animal (only in Jn. 2:14; Acts 8:32; Rom. 8:36), this idea being expressed in the NT mainly by the words → amnos and arnion, especially as metaphors for Christ in his vicarious suffering and sovereign power. R. Tuente

→ Animal, → Servant, → Shepherd

(a). C. K. Barrett, "The Lamb of God", NTS 1, 1955–56, 210 ff.; J. B. Bauer, "Lamb of God", EBT II 478 f.; J. Blenkinsopp, "The Lamb of God", Clergy Review, 50, 1965, 868–72; G. S.

Cansdale, Animals of Bible Lands, 1970; C. H. Dodd, The Interpretation of the Fourth Gospel, 1953, 230–38; J. D'Souza, The Lamb of God in Johannine Writings, 1968; G. Florovsky, "The Lamb of God", SJT 4, 1951, 13–28; A. T. Hanson, The Wrath of the Lamb, 1957; N. Hillyer, " 'The Lamb' in the Apocalypse", EQ 39, 1967, 228–36; J. Jeremias, amnos etc., TDNT I 338–41; E. E. May, Ecce Agnus Dei: A Philological and Exegetical Approach to John 1:29–36, 1947; L. Morris, The Gospel According to John, 1971, 143 ff.; H. Preisker and S. Schulz, probaton etc., TDNT VI 689–92; E. M. Sidebottom, The Christ of the Fourth Gospel in the Light of First Century Thought, 1961; J. G. S. S. Thomson, "The Shepherd-Ruler Concept in the OT and its Application in the NT", SJT 8, 1955, 406–18; W. Tooley, "The Shepherd and the Sheep Image in the Teaching of Jesus", NovT 7, 1964–65, 15 ff.; S. Virgulin, "Recent Discussion on the 'Lamb of God' ", Scripture 13, 1961, 74–80.
(b.) C. Burchard, "Das Lamm in der Waagschale", ZNW 57, 1966, 219 ff.; F. Gryglewicz, "Das Lamm Gottes", NTS 13, 1966–67, 133–46; T. Holtz, Die Christologie der Apokalypse des Johannes, TU 85, 1962; J. Jeremias, "Das Lamm, das aus der Jungfrau hervorging (Test.Jos. 19, 8)", ZNW 57, 1966, 216 ff.; K. Koch, "Das Lamm, das Ägypten vernichtet. Ein Fragment aus Jannes und Jambres und sein geschichtlicher Hintergrund", ZNW 57, 1966, 79 ff.

Lame, Crippled

These two words are closely related functionally in popular usage. A cripple is generally understood to be someone deprived of the use of a limb or a member of the body, or one who is partially disabled and thus lacks the natural functions of a limb. While a lame person is also disabled, the particular area affected is thought of in terms of the legs. Hence one who is lame moves about with some difficulty, perhaps walking with a limp, and may well experience pain in the process.

κυλλός	κυλλός (kyllos), crooked, crippled, maimed.

CL In Greek medical authors kyllos was used of crooked or disabled legs, feet and ears, though properly of legs bent outwards by diseases such as rickets or disabled through badly reduced fractures or other forms of surgical accident. This contrasted with the condition described in Hippocrates and some non-medical authors as blaisos, in which the legs bent in at the knees (genu varum) and the feet splayed out somewhat. The background of kyllos was predominantly medical, but occasionally the term was used metaphorically.

OT Being of a rather rare and technical nature, the word kyllos did not occur in the LXX or other Gk. versions of the OT or Apocrypha. Similarly there is no single Heb. word for cripple, the closest being the late Heb. adj. 'iṭṭēr, hampered, impeded (which in biblical Heb. is followed by yaḏ y^emînô, "his right hand", and means impeded on the right side, and so "left-handed", Jdg. 3:15; 20:16), and nāḵeh, smitten, afflicted, without further specification as to the nature of the disability (2 Sam. 4:4; 9:3; and fig. in Isa. 66:2).

NT kyllos is a comparatively rare word in NT usage, occurring 4 times only. In Matt. 15:30 f. the RSV reads "maimed" (NEB "crippled"), following the AV, RV, as also in Matt. 18:8 and Mk. 9:43. The NEB has "maimed" in the latter two references. The Matthean passages do not indicate the type of disability, suggesting that the persons involved may have included the congenitally afflicted as well as those who had sustained crippling accidents. In Matt. 18:8 and Mk. 9:43 the reference is more specific, describing the voluntary amputation of a hand as a means of forestalling sin from a source which was already jeopardising entry to eternal life. The severing of the hand at the wrist was an ancient oriental method of punishing thieves, and is still practised today in parts of the east. The use of kyllos to describe a maimed or crippled hand is a comparatively late development in both the classical and medical authors. R. K. Harrison

χωλός

χωλός (chōlos), lame, halt, maimed; παραλυτικός (paralytikos), paralytic.

CL The classical writers from Homer onwards employed chōlos to describe a lame condition in the legs or feet which produced a halting or limping gait. At a later period the word came to be used, like kyllos, to designate a deformed or impaired condition of the hand, as in Hippocrates and others. In the Greek papyri it was used in both the literal and metaphorical sense of lameness.

OT The word chōlos occurred in the LXX as the equivalent of the Heb. pissēaḥ, lame with respect to the feet (as in 2 Sam. 9:13; 19:27). Whether congenital or acquired, this condition disqualified a man from holding office as a → priest in → Israel (Lev. 21:18). This prohibition formed part of the concept of → holiness for the nation, and was especially important for those participating in the sanctuary rituals, of whom a high standard was required. The basic postulate was that whatever approached, or was offered up to, God must be perfect, so that priests had to be free from both ceremonial impurity and physical defects (Lev. 21:1 ff.; Deut. 15:21). In the same way sacrifices must be without blemish (Lev. 22:19 ff.), to symbolize the offering of the very best of human productivity to God. Otherwise punishment would result (cf. Mal. 1:7 ff.). The term pissēaḥ is comparatively rare in the OT, occurring only about a dozen times. In Isa. 33:23 and 35:6 the lame are mentioned in connection with the promised future. See also 2 Sam. 5:6, 8 f.; 9:13; 19:27(26); Job 29:15.

NT With the meaning of lame or maimed, chōlos occurs 14 times in the NT. In Matt. 11:5; 15:30 f.; 18:8; Mk. 9:45; Lk. 7:22; Acts 3:2; 14:8; Heb. 12:13, the reference is either implicitly or explicitly to impairment of the legs and feet, Acts 3:7 mentioning specifically the feet (baseis) and ankles (sphyra), two terms which do not occur elsewhere in the NT. Of a more indeterminate nature is the use of chōlos in Matt. 21:14; Lk. 14:13, 21; Jn. 5:3 and Acts 8:7. In the NT the lame, maimed or crippled were invariably regarded as among the underprivileged members of society, and therefore as objects of charity, whether of a secular (cf. Lk. 14:13) or Christian (cf. Acts 3:2 ff.) nature.

The adj. used as a noun, paralytikos, lame person, paralytic, occurs in Matt. 4:24; 8:6; 9:2, 6; Mk. 2:3–5, 9 f.; Lk. 5:24 v.l.; Jn. 5:3 v.l. The synonym paralytos is found only at Mk. 2:9 v.l. R. K. Harrison

→ Blind, → Body, → Deaf, → Heal, → Leper, → Weakness

Arndt, 458, 625, 897; Liddell-Scott, 1008 f., 1317, 2014; and bibliography under → Heal.

Lament, Sorrow, Weep, Groan

Laughter and tears, and → joy and sorrow belong together as elements of human emotion. Sorrow may manifest itself in weeping, or other outward demonstrations of grief or remain concealed as inner anguish. In Gk. several verbs are used to express this range of emotions. klaiō, weep, cry out, expresses man's immediate and outward reaction to suffering. koptō stresses the aspect of public grief, which can manifest itself in various customs such as smiting the breast, cutting oneself, wailing or singing set funeral dirges (cf. also thrēneō, wail, sing a lament or dirge; pentheō, mourn, lament). lypeō covers the widest range from physical pain to inward grief; in general it means in the active to give pain, and in the passive to be grieved. Also examined here are brychō, gnash; pentheō, mourn; and stenazō, groan.

κλαίω

κλαίω (klaiō), weep; κλαυθμός (klauthmos), weeping.

CL 1. klaiō, found from Homer onwards, means intrans. to cry aloud, weep; trans. bewail. In secular Gk. klaiō does not express remorse or sorrow, but physical or mental pain which is outwardly visible.

OT In the LXX klaiō is used mostly as the translation of bāḵâh, weep, cry aloud. It expresses profound grief (1 Sam. 1:7; Lam. 1:16), and also deep sorrow in mourning for the dead (Gen. 50:1). But it may equally express supreme joy, as at the meeting of Jacob and Joseph (Gen. 46:29). The whole personality is involved, as it is in the case of a crying child (Gen. 21:16; Exod. 2:6). A Greek might bewail his personal fate or that of his people, but in the OT the thought is rather that of expressing dependence on God, by addressing one's cries or complaints to him in prayer (e.g. Samson in Jdg. 15:18; 16:28; cf. Isa. 30:19). A further OT feature is the cultic lamentation of the whole people before Yahweh, usually accompanied by a general fast (Jdg. 20:23, 26), such occasions providing the Sitz im Leben for such songs of national lamentation as Pss. 74; 79; 80.

The noun klauthmos stands most frequently for the Heb. bᵉḵî, the nominal form of bāḵâh (weep). bᵉḵî is the most common word in Heb. for weeping (e.g. Gen. 45:2; Deut. 34:8; Jdg. 2:2; Isa. 15:2 f.). It stands for the participial form of bāḵâh in Job 30:31; Isa. 30:19 and Jer. 22:10. In Mic. 7:4 klauthmos represents the Heb. mᵉḇuḵâh from the root bôḵ which basically means to confuse. It is possible that the translators of the LXX understood the word as a derivation of bāḵâh.

NT 1. klaiō is similarly used in the NT, i.e. to express violent emotion, e.g. at parting (Acts 21:13), when thinking of the enemies of Christ (Phil. 3:18), when facing dying and death (Mk. 5:38; Lk. 7:13, 32; Jn. 11:31, 33; Acts 9:39), or generally when face to face with affliction (Rom. 12:15; 1 Cor. 7:30). On the other hand, tears of joy are not mentioned in the NT.

2. In the third Beatitude of Lk. hoi klaiontes nyn, "those that weep now" (6:21), are contrasted with those who are rich and full, who laugh now and of whom all men speak well (6:25 f.). The latter are self-righteous, pharisaical persons, "who need no repentance" (15:7), who think highly of themselves, going through life full of self-assurance and with no sense of guilt. "Those that weep now", on the other hand, live humbly in complete dependence upon God, since they are conscious of their guilt (Matt. 26:75; Lk. 7:38) and therefore acknowledge that God's assessment of them is just, as did the tax collector in the temple. Christ's promise to them is: "You shall laugh." His disciples' weeping over their guilt and the sufferings of this present time will give way, at the end of time, to the laughter of the children of the kingdom.

3. By contrast, those who laugh now are warned: penthēsete kai klausete, "you shall mourn and weep" (Lk. 6:25). Where klaiō has a future reference in the NT, it is connected with warnings of disaster: those who now are godless and scornful will be put to shame in the final judgment. To intensify the severity of these statements klaiō is sometimes combined with another vb. of mourning: penthēsete kai klausete ("you shall mourn and weep", Lk. 6:25; cf. Jas. 4:9); klausete kai thrēnēsete hymeis ("you will weep and lament", Jn. 16:20); klausousin kai kopsontai ("[they] will weep and wail", Rev. 18:9).

4. In order to avoid lamentation in the future which will be too late, James exhorts his readers to weep now. "Be wretched and mourn and weep. Let your laughter be turned to mourning and your joy to dejection. Humble yourselves before the Lord and he will exalt you" (Jas. 4:9 f.). Perhaps James is recalling the words of Jesus in Lk. 6:25 (cf. C. L. Mitton, The Epistle of James, 1966, 162).

5. The noun klauthmos, weeping, occurs frequently in the NT in the expression "weeping and gnashing of teeth" (→ brychō below). In this instance the word describes the remorse associated with the → judgment, particularly among the Jews who had rejected their opportunity. In Matt. 2:18 klauthmos (v.l. thrēnos, dirge) is associated with odyrmos polys ("loud lamentation") in the quotation from Jer. 31:15 which is seen as being fulfilled in the slaughter of the innocents at Bethlehem (→ Fulfil, art. plēroō). H. Haarbeck κόπτω κόπτω (koptō), strike; κόπτομαι (koptomai), beat the breast; κοπετός (kopetos), mourning, lamentation.

CL The word is found in this sense from Homer's Iliad onwards. It has a derivative: kopetos, lamentation for the dead. thrēnos is used similarly in Ion. and Att. in the sense of a lament or dirge, the vb. thrēneō, to wail, bewail, being derived from it. There is widespread evidence from antiquity for public mourning and lamentation for the dead. Smiting on the breast and cheeks, loud wailing or dirge-singing were originally intended to drive away the spirits of the dead or to honour the dead. Various mourning customs, some of them violent, extend into the Hellenistic period. Originally carried out on behalf of the dead, they later became increasingly a general expression of grief at death.

OT 1. In the OT there are numerous parallels to the burial customs of the surrounding world. The LXX translates Heb. sāp̄aḏ, make lamentation, by koptomai (e.g. Gen. 23:2; 1 Ki. 25:1; 28:3; Jer. 16:5 f.).

The Israelites had a variety of customs associated with mourning for the dead (Gen. 23:1–2; 37:34–35; 2 Sam. 3:31–34): cutting oneself, shaving off one's hair, eating mourning bread, drinking from the cup of consolation (Jer. 16:5–7); calling in mourning women (Jer. 9:16–21); putting on sackcloth (Isa. 15:2–3); removing one's beard (Isa. 7:20); beating one's breast (Nah. 2:7; cf. Jer. 31:19). But the most prominent and abiding feature of mourning was wailing (Isa. 15:2; Jer. 22:18; 34:5; Amos 5:16) and the set funeral dirge (2 Sam. 1:17–27; 3:33 ff.).

2. Mourning for the dead held a special place in the preaching of the prophets. Whilst Lam. bewails and interprets the divine judgment which has already befallen Judah and → Jerusalem, the prophets announced – in the "prophetic perfect" and indeed often in the form of a lament for the dead – a catastrophe which still lies in the future (Mic. 1:8; Jer. 9:10; Amos 5:1–2; 16–17; Ezek. 32:1–16). By doing this they aimed to arouse the people and call them to repentance (Jer. 9:18; Ezek. 19; 27:30–34). But it is characteristic of Israel's faith that again and again even as the message of destruction rings in their ears, it changes into hope in God who will deliver them and turn "mourning into dancing" (Ps. 30:11).

3. In Judaism, heathen mourning practices were forbidden (Lev. 19:28; Deut. 14:1), but it was customary before or at a burial to wail and lament for the dead, to beat the breast and so to fulfil one's loving obligations toward the dead person. On the other hand, it was believed that the dead person could still hear the lamentation and the praise until the stone was rolled before the grave, and that he was comforted by the vehement expressions of sorrow.

4. In the Hellenistic period, attempts were made by the state (with the support of enlightened philosophy) to check the extravagances which had crept into mourning customs. These attempts, however, met with little success. A marked feature of this period was the funeral song, used by men and women, relatives and professional mourners as a cultic lamentation for the dead.

NT In the NT koptō occurs only 8 times and then exclusively in the Synoptic Gospels and Rev. kopetos is used only once (Acts 8:2). apokoptō is found 6 times in different books, while enkoptō and enkopē are Pauline words (6 times in all; → Hinder). The verbs thrēneo and → pentheō, which are closely related to koptō in meaning, occur 4 times (Matt. 11:17; Lk. 7:32; 23:37; Jn. 16:20) and 10 times respectively, and mainly in the Gospels.

1. Evidence of the existence of Jewish mourning customs in the time of Jesus is given by Jesus' parable of the children lamenting the dead when playing at funerals (Matt. 11:17; Lk. 7:32). The story of Jairus's daughter (Matt. 9:23; Mk. 5:38; Lk. 8:52) shows that following immediately upon a person's death, the lamentation was begun by a great crowd of relatives, neighbours and mourning women. After the death of Lazarus (Jn. 11:17, 30) and four days after the burial, i.e. at the culmination of a seven-day period of mourning, there gathered in Bethany a great crowd of neighbours and acquaintances from Jerusalem, weeping (v. 33) and seeking to console Mary and Martha (vv. 19, 31). Mourning women met Jesus on the way to Golgotha (Lk. 23:27), and in the early Christian church "devout men" came together after the death of Stephen to make "great lamentation" over him (Acts 8:2).

2. What significance attaches to the fact that Jesus wept on the way to the grave of Lazarus (Jn. 11:35)? Do not his tears express his compassion for men, subject as they are to death and all its woe? Does he not "groan in spirit" (vv. 33, 38 AV) because of the faithless and hopeless lamentation for the dead with which he finds himself surrounded? He has come to take upon himself man's suffering and distress, his abandonment and death, so becoming the conqueror of death. His saving, life-giving work puts an end to lamentation for the dead (Lk. 7:13). How can the Pharisees expect wailing and lamentation of him who is life and who brings life? The cross and resurrection of Jesus manifest his victory over death. There is no place for hopeless lamentation in his presence; to indulge in it is nothing other than doubt and unbelief. Sorrow over death for the Christian does not mean being left to his own resources, but in his very natural grief he is sustained by the hope of the resurrection of the dead.

3. Thus the characteristic of the Christian church is not lamentation for the dead, but the hope of life in Christ Jesus (Rom. 6:23). Since God's gift in Jesus is eternal life, lamentation for the dead belongs to those who are far from God, who are themselves under the sentence of death and who have no hope. The new world of eternal life which we hope for because of Jesus' death and resurrection knows no tears and lamentation, for "death shall be no more, neither shall there be mourning nor crying nor pain any more, for the former things have passed away" (Rev. 21:4). All natural mourning for those who have fallen asleep is now irradiated by the living hope of the resurrection (Rom. 8:17, 18). By faith in the conqueror of death we enter into the truth of Christ's promise: "Your sorrow will turn into joy" (Jn. 16:20). H. Haarbeck

λυπέω

λυπέω (lypeō), inflict pain; λυπέομαι (lypeomai), feel pain, be sad; λύπη (lypē), sorrow, pain.

CL In Hellenism lypē denotes physical pain and emotional suffering. Joy and sorrow are part and parcel of human life, and already in Gk. tragedy, sorrow (pathos) had been recognized as one of life's basic components. Aeschylus saw it as an educative factor (pathei mathos, learning from suffering, Ag. 177), which is the basis of all Gk. tragedy. Hellenistic philosophy understood sorrow as the antithesis to the joy that is worth striving for (hēdonē, pleasure [→ Desire]; euphrosynē, cheerfulness, → joy; eudaimonia, happiness). The Stoics saw it as man's task to overcome sorrow by means of frugality and impassiveness. Only at a later period, particularly in gnosticism, was a more positive understanding of sorrow attained: through accident, sickness and pain man is refined and brought to salutary repentance.

OT The LXX translates 13 different Hebrew verbs by lypeō (some 50 times) to denote physical hardship, pain, sorrow, grief, mourning, fear, displeasure and anger. There is, however, no clear distinction between this word-group and such concepts as odynē, pain; thymoō, make (become) angry; orgizō, to be angry; or such roots as kako- (bad) and ponēro- (evil). The different Heb. words reveal the amazing ability of oriental man to differentiate between feelings, especially in the case of such basic emotions as sorrow and joy. The emotions concerned are always those of everyday life, and are not subjected to any kind of theoretical analysis.

It is interesting to note that lypeō and lypē are used principally in the later writings of the OT and in the Apocrypha (especially Dan., Prov., Sir., and 4 Macc.). The only explanation of sorrow and pain given in Gen. 3 is that lypē is sent by God as a result of the fall of man (vv. 16 ff.). This basic interpretation of human life as en lypē ("in sorrow") does not stand alone. The wisdom literature speaks of the lypē that is present even in joy (Prov. 14:13) and has to be overcome (Sir. 30:21 ff.). When Isaiah (1:5) says that the whole heart of the people is turned eis lypēn ("to sorrow"), he means that they are in the worst state imaginable. On the other hand, eschatological salvation is promised as a time without sorrow and sighing (Isa. 35:10; 51:11); the age to come will know nothing but joy and glory (2 Esd. 7:13).

Judaism did not advance beyond a generalized conception of lypē, closely tied to morality.

NT In the NT (as in the LXX) there are fewer references to mourning than to the opposite concept of → joy. lypeō occurs 21 times, and lypē only 14 times, whereas → chairō and → chara are found 69 and 60 times respectively. The ratio of these words associated with sorrow to those associated with rejoicing is thus roughly 1:4. While Matt. prefers the vb. lypeō and Jn. the noun lypē, both vb. and noun are used most frequently in 2 Cor., a fact which indicates Paul's profound personal understanding of "godly sorrow".

1. In general in the NT lypē denotes physical as well as emotional pain. Jesus experienced fear and dread before his death (Matt. 26:37, 38), and the disciples sorrow in Gethsemane (Lk. 22:45). Paul was "grieved" (perhaps even ill-treated) by a member of the Corinthian church (2 Cor. 2:5). Both in the OT and the NT, the sufferings of this present time are seen as contrary to the purpose of creation; hence the longing to be free of them. In 2 Cor. 2:1 ff. Paul hopes that the Corinthians will cause him no further grief. The OT expectation of salvation is taken over by the NT, future consolation being promised to those who are now sorrowing (Matt. 5:4 has pentheō, whereas Lk. has lypeō). Rev. looks forward to a new heaven and a new earth from which pain and sorrow will be banished (7:17; 21:4).

2. Paul portrays lypē as an essential mark of the Christian life. In 2 Cor. 7:8–11 he contrasts the kata theon lypē, godly sorrow, with the lypē tou kosmou, the sorrow of the world. While worldly sorrow laments personal disappointment and the transitoriness of life, godly sorrow brings one to see one's own guilt and leads to penitence. "For godly grief produces a repentance that leads to salvation and brings no regret, but worldly grief produces death" (v. 10). Within the framework of his theology of the cross Paul speaks of himself as taking up the → cross of Christ (Gal. 6:14). This lays upon his shoulders the cross of this world's sorrow and pain; hence the catalogues of his sufferings, found in 2 Cor. 4:8 ff. and 11:23 ff. While the non-Christian fears the loss of his own life, the Christian finds new life (2 Cor. 4:11; Phil. 3:10 f.) in being crucified with Christ (Rom. 6:6). This leads to paradox in the experience of the believer. All the normal values relating to life and suffering are reversed (cf. the antitheses of 2 Cor. 6:3–10, especially v. 10: hōs lypoumenoi, aei de chairontes, "as sorrowful, yet always rejoicing").

3. That which Paul describes as a present paradox in Christian experience is set out in Jn. 16:20–22 as a temporal sequence. The church at the present time is sad, because of Christ's departure and apparent absence, though for the "world" this is a cause for rejoicing. Jn. shows that the present lot of the church is to endure loneliness and the world's hatred; these, together with the fact that Jesus is no longer visibly present with her, are some of the reasons for her lypē. At the same time, however, the departing Christ promises his church joy at his return; this joy no one will take from her (v. 22). H. Haarbeck, H.-G. Link βρύχω | βρύχω (brychō), gnash; βρυγμός (brygmos), gnashing.

CL The vb. brychō is used in secular Greek of the act of eating noisily or greedily, as well as the act of gnashing the teeth. It was also used metaphorically in the sense of gnawing or eating away as in the case of a disease (Sophocles). The noun brygmos connotes a biting (Nicander) and a gnashing of the teeth (Eupolis). It is used in Sir. 51:3, apparently in the sense of biting, for the writer gives thanks for deliverance from "the gnashings of teeth about to devour me."

OT In the LXX brychō occurs in the sense of gnashing the teeth at someone. In each instance it stands for the Heb. ḥāraq. This word is used only in the OT poetic literature, where it connotes the act of gnashing the teeth. In every instance the gnashing of the teeth is in demonstration of anger (Job 16:9; Pss. 35:16; 37:12; 112:10), with the possible exception of Lam. 2:16 where it may convey the idea of mocking.

The noun brygmos occurs in Prov. 19:12 to translate Heb. naham, where it denotes the wrath of a king. naham is used of the growling of a lion (Prov. 28:15; Isa. 5:29, 30), and figuratively of groaning (Prov. 5:11; Ezek. 24:23). In Isa. 5:29, 30 the word seems to imply the growl of a lion as it devours its prey. The fem. form of the noun is used figuratively of the roaring of the sea (Isa. 5:30) and the groaning of the heart (Ps. 38:9).

NT In the NT brychō is used only once (Acts 7:54) and occurs in an expression describing the angry reaction of those who listened to Stephen's speech. Their reaction was one of rage and "grinding the teeth." The act of grinding the teeth here is clearly expressive of anger.

The noun brygmos always occurs in the set expression ekei estai ho klauthmos kai ho brygmos tōn odontōn ("there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth"). The expression occurs in Matt. 8:12; 13:42, 50; 22:13; 24:51; 25:30; Luke 13:28, and always describes the condition of the wicked in the future life. The precise meaning of this expression can be derived only from its usage in each context, for there are no precise parallels in secular Gk. and Jewish literature (K. H. Rengstorf, TDNT I 642). While it is true that in many instances the usage of brychō in the expression "to gnash the teeth" connotes anger, the association of the word with klauthmos (weeping), and the figure of torment that accompanies the term in Matt. 13:42, 50 seems to indicate that the gnashing of the teeth is not an indication of rage but of extreme suffering and remorse. T. McComiskey πενθέω | πενθέω (pentheō), be sad, grieve, mourn; πένθος (penthos) grief, sadness, mourning.

CL The vb. pentheō means to lament or mourn, frequently with the connotation of mourning for someone (Herodotus, Aeschylus). The noun penthos is used in secular Greek in the sense of "mourning" or "sorrow". It is used especially of the external signs of mourning, as when mourning for the dead.

OT In the LXX pentheō stands chiefly for the vb. 'āḇal which means to mourn, and in the majority of cases connotes the act of mourning over realized or impending misfortune. It is frequently used figuratively of inanimate objects such as the earth, the land, or parts of the structure of cities upon which catastrophe has come or is yet to come (cf. Isa. 3:26; 24:4; 33:9; Jer. 4:28; 23:10; Lam. 2:8; Hos. 4:3). A sense of loss frequently pervades the description of catastrophe. It is also used of mourning over the death of an individual (2 Ki. 14:2; 1 Chron. 7:22), of remorse in general (Neh. 8:9), and of the sorrow experienced during the absence of a loved one 2 Ki. 13:27; 19:1).

The vb. pentheō also stands for the Hebrew 'āmal (to be weak, to languish) in Isa. 16:8; 19:8; 24:4, 7; 33:9. The frequent use of 'āmal in contexts of mourning may indicate that it was used occasionally to describe the psychological and physical effects of mourning. In Gen. 23:2 and 50:3 pentheō stands for the Heb. bāḵâh (weep), and in Ps. 78(77):63 it is used somewhat dubiously to translate hālal (praise).

In Jer. 23:10 pentheō occurs as the translation of nûḏ (to flutter or quiver, hence also to show the emotion of grief), and in Ezek. 31:15 it occurs as the translation of qāḏar (to darken oneself, i.e., mourn). The vb. thus connotes various aspects of sorrow including the outward demonstration of remorse.

The noun penthos represents the Heb. 'ēḇel, the specific meaning of which is akin to the verbal form 'āḇal, mourning (e.g. Gen. 27:1; 50:10 f.; Amos 5:16; 8:10; Isa. 60:20).

NT The vb. pentheō occurs in Matt. 9:15 in the sense of sorrow over the absence of a loved one, and in Mark 16:10 it is used of those who mourned the death of Christ. Paul uses it of the sorrow he may have to experience when he learns that some have not repented of their sins (2 Cor. 12:21).

In the Lucan account of the Beatitudes the word occurs as the antithesis of → laugh (6:25) describing the eventual mourning of those who laugh now. The reference here is to those who are not contrite now and who will later experience the results of their lack of contrition. In the Matthean account of the Beatitudes (5:4) the word pentheō is used of sorrow in a general sense.

In Rev. 18:11, 15, 19, the judgment on → Babylon is mourned by those who trafficked with her. The deep sense of loss at the destruction of their source of wealth pervades the description of their reaction.

The term is used by Paul and James in a sense closely paralleling the concept of godly sorrow or repentance. In 1 Cor. 5:2 Paul uses pentheō to describe the attitude that should characterize the Corinthian Christians relative to the immorality among them. He describes their present attitude as "arrogant" (pephysiomenoi, lit. "puffed up") and indicates that they should rather "mourn" (epenthēsate) over the situation. James exhorts sinners to "mourn and weep" as an aspect of their humbling themselves before God. This attitude of mind will lead to God's exalting them (4:8–10).

The noun penthos is used by James in a sense similar to his use of the vb., i.e., in the sense of godly sorrow. In Jas. 4:8, 9 he calls on sinners to draw near to God, cleanse their hands, purify their hearts, be wretched (talaipōrēsate), mourn (penthēsate) and weep. The section is concluded by the exhortation to humble themselves before the Lord and he will exalt them (→ Humility, → Height, art. hypsoō).

In Rev. 18:7 f. penthos is used in the sense of sorrow due to catastrophe and loss. In this context it describes the sorrow and mourning to come on → Babylon at her fall. By contrast in Rev. 21:4 it is used in the sense of sorrow in general, the removal of which will lead to the → joy to be experienced by men when the future state is realized in the new → Jerusalem. T. McComiskey

στενάζω

στενάζω (stenazō), to sigh, groan; στεναγμός (stenagmos), sigh, groan, groaning.

CL The vb. stenazō is used in secular Greek of sighing or moaning. It occurs transitively in the sense of sighing over or bemoaning. The noun stenagmos connotes a sighing or groaning.

OT In the LXX stenazō stands for several Hebrew words. It represents the verb 'āḇal in Isa. 19:8 and is used again for 'ānâh in the same verse. Both Heb. words connote the general concept of mourning. On several occasions it stands for the niphal of 'ānaḥ which means chiefly to sigh or groan, connoting the sighing of grief due to physical suffering, loss or distress (Isa. 24:7; Lam. 1:8, 21; Ezek. 21:6 f. [11 f.]).

In Ezek. 26:15 it stands for 'ānaq, a word which denotes the groaning of the wounded in its two occurrences in the qal (Ezek. 26:15; Jer. 51:52) and which in the niphal connotes sighing as an expression of grief (Ezek. 9:4; 24:17).

Once (Isa. 59:11) stenazō represents hāmâh (growl, murmur) where it describes the roaring of a bear. It stands for zā'aq (cry out) in Job 31:38 where it is used metaphorically to describe the crying out of the land. In Nah. 3:7 it represents nûḏ (flutter, show grief) in a context asking who will bemoan → Nineveh. In Job 24:12 stenazō represents 'āḡam (to be grieved) and in Job 30:25 it stands for šāwa' (cry out for help).

The noun stenagmos represents noun forms of several of the previously cited Hebrew verbs, most frequently 'ᵃnāqâh. On one occasion, however, it stands for hērôn (Gen. 3:17) which means pregnancy. The LXX rendering seems to be a metaphorical use of stenagmos. It also represents nᵉ'āqâh from nā'aq (groan) in Exod. 2:24; 6:5; Jdg. 2:18 where it is used of groaning as a result of physical affliction and distress.

It stands for nāham (growl, groan) in Ps. 37:8, where it describes the groaning of the Psalmist in his distress, and for ṣārâh (distress) in Jer. 4:31 where it describes the anguish of a woman in travail.

NT The vb. stenazō is used in Mark 7:34 in the general sense of sighing as the expression of inward emotion. Paul uses the term exclusively of sighing in the sense of longing for something (Rom. 8:23; 2 Cor. 5:2, 4). In Heb. 13:17, however, stenazō stands as the antithesis of "joyfully" (meta charas) and hence is a surrogate for "sorrow" in this context.

James uses the vb. with the phrase kat' allēlōn to connote the concept of grumbling or complaining "against one another" (5:9).

The noun stenagmos is used in two instances in the NT. In Acts 7:34 it is used to describe the groaning of the Israelites in their slavery in → Egypt. In this usage it is reminiscent of the use of nᵉ'āqâh in the OT which is used on three of four occasions to describe the groanings of the Israelites while under oppression.

In Rom. 8:26 the word is used in the expression stenagmois alalētois, "with sighs too deep for words" (RSV), to refer to the intercession of the Holy → Spirit. There is a progression in the context where Paul moves from the groaning of the creation (v. 22) to the groaning of the Christian. The clear element of a sympathetic relationship of the Holy Spirit to the spirit of the believer (vv. 9, 16) and the reference to the groaning of the believer in the immediately preceding context (v. 23) seem to warrant the view that the groaning is shared by the Holy Spirit and the believer. The groanings of the heart are observed by the one who "searches the hearts of men" (v. 27) but are not expressed audibly. These deep groanings are not lost to the Spirit but utilized in his intercession for the believer. The deep emotive elements in stenagmos are to be retained here. It is the groaning of distress or deep emotion. (For further discussion of this passage → Prayer, art. entynchanō.)

T. McComiskey

→ Bury, → Cry, → Joy, → Laugh

(a). R. Bultmann, lypē etc., TDNT IV 313–24; and penthos etc., TDNT VI 40–43; T. Collins, "The Physiology of Tears in the Old Testament", CBQ 33, 1971, 18–38, 185–97; N. K. Gottwald, Studies in the Book of Lamentations, SBT 14, 1954; F. F. Hvidberg, Weeping and Laughter in the Old Testament, 1962; K. H. Rengstorf, brychō etc., TDNT I 641 ff.; and klaiō etc., TDNT III 722–26; J. F. Ross, "Job 33:14–30: The Phenomenology of Lament", JBL 94, 1975, 38–46; J. Schneider, stenazō etc., TDNT VII 600–3; G. Stählin, thrēneō etc., TDNT III 148–55; and kopetos etc. TDNT III 830–52.
(b). C. Westermann, "Struktur und Geschichte der Klage im Alten Testament", ZAW 66, 1954, 44 ff.

Large, Small

The twin concepts, large and small, in Gk. megas and mikros, are put together here because the two words are always being related to each other, whether in quantitative mathematical comparisons or in qualitative value judgments. The words take on a particular importance in the NT through being used to express qualification or disqualification in the sight of God. The nouns formed from megas are also used to express attributes of God.

μέγας

μέγας, μεγάλη, μέγα (megas, megalē, mega), large, great; μεγαλύνω (megalynō), make large, great, magnify; μεγαλειότης (megaleiotēs), grandeur; μεγαλωσύνη (megalōsynē), majesty; μεγαλεῖα (megaleia), mighty deeds.

CL 1. megas, great, is the antonym of → mikros, small, and occurs from Mycenaean Greek (Linear B) onwards in literature, the papyri and inscriptions. Its use ranges from the measurement of physical shapes and spaces, via qualities, to designations of rank (e.g. in Homer, Aeschylus, Pindar). Used as an epithet of honour, megas occurs frequently in the formula of acclamation, megas theos, great god, and in connection with the names of gods. While the superlative, megistos, is also attested as early as the Iliad, the comparative, meizōn, does not occur until Heraclitus. According to the context, the emphasis of megas varies in translation: fully grown, important, magnificent, powerful.

2. The derived vb. megalynō occurs first in Thucydides. Used transitively it means to make great, and is chosen for figurative use in the sense of to praise, glorify. The two nouns megaleiotēs, grandeur, splendour, and megalōsynē, majesty, splendour, are not attested in pre-Christian literature. megaleia, good and mighty deeds, is the neut. plur. of megaleios used as a noun; this adj. is first used by Xenophon and Menander.

OT 1. The LXX employs all five words to translate several Heb. words by far the most numerous of which are those formed from the root gdl (great). It is impossible to establish a specific connotation for megas (which occurs about 820 times) in different OT writings. The same is true of megalynō (93 times), which had just begun to emerge in secular Gk. at the time of the composition of the earliest LXX writings.

2. (a) The fact that megas was chosen to translate several Heb. words suggests that at that time the translators were not making great efforts always to find the exactly corresponding Gk. term, but were generalizing. On the other hand, megas was not always chosen where gāḏôl occurs in the Heb. text (e.g. Gen. 15:14; Isa. 12:6).

(b) In contrast to the wide-ranging use of the adj. the derived nouns have a clear denotation. In addition to two verses in the Apocrypha (1 Esd. 1:5; 4:40), megaleiotēs is used in Jer. 33:9 (LXX 40:9) and Dan. 7:27 (where, however, Theodotion has megalōsynē) in connection with the fact that God's activity in Israel will extend also to every people of the earth in power and glory. megalōsynē occurs in 32 places, of which 11 are in the Apocrypha and 7 in Dan. It is used predominantly in expressions of God's surpassing greatness and power (e.g. 2 Sam. 7:23). God redeemed → Israel for himself (→ Redemption, art. lytron), and created a place especially for his people to live in. Similarly in 1 Chr. 17:19 and Ps. 150:2 the thought is of God's creative will and of his lordship over history, and in particular his glorious deeds. There is, therefore, a twofold usage: (a) to describe God's greatness; and (b) to summon men to see and praise God's greatness, i.e. to glorify him (→ Glory).

megaleia has the same almost exclusive reference to Yahweh's mighty acts (e.g. Deut. 11:2; Ps. 106:21 [LXX 105:21]). At times the OT presents Yahweh as greater than all gods (cf. Exod. 18:11; Ps. 77:13 [LXX 76:13]).

NT 1. The megas word-group is attested 258 times in the NT. The adj. occurs particularly frequently in Lk. (194 times, and the comparative meizōn a further 48 times) and in Acts (64 times), but also 30 times in Matt.; it is also particularly prominent in the later letters (Pastorals, Eph., 2 Pet., Jude, and Heb.), while the group rarely appears in the earlier Pauline writings (e.g. Rom. 9:2; 1 Cor. 12:31; 13:13; 2 Cor. 10:15). Jn. is characterized by the use (13 times) of the comparative meizōn, against 5 times for megas. But it is in Rev. that the greatest number of occurrences (80) are to be found. The combination small and great, meaning all without distinction, which is typical of Acts but which also occurs in Rev. (e.g.

Acts 8:10; 26:22; Rev. 11:18; 20:12), rests on LXX usage (cf. Gen. 19:11; 1 Sam. 30:2).

(a) megas is theologically important in various synoptic sayings of Jesus. These reveal his rejection of the Rab. Jewish striving after piety, as it was then practised in a world strictly divided into great and small, i.e. into people of higher and lower standing. The sayings concern rewards and true greatness in the kingdom of heaven. They cut across the Pharisaic attitude to commandments (Matt. 5:19 f.), warn about the enmity of man (Lk. 6:23), and call for love of one's enemies (Lk. 6:35). Jesus' own attitude is further illustrated by his teaching on the → sabbath which leads to the declaration that "something greater than the temple is here" (Matt. 12:6), namely the order of the → kingdom of God, which is already present in the actions and person of Jesus himself.

(b) The reasons for the 80 instances of megas in Rev. are bound up with the literary form in which apocalyptic thought is expressed. megas also occurs in the apocalyptic discourses in the Gospels (Matt. 24:21, 24, 31; Mk. 13:2; Lk. 21:11, 23). It is used in the larger-than-life symbolism which characterizes the eschatological dimension of events, e.g. the day (Rev. 6:17), the earthquake (16:18), and the city (18:2, 10, 16, 18 f., 21). Particularly striking is the occurrence (21 times) of phōnē megalē, "with a great [i.e. loud] voice". The expression indicates especially the sovereignty of God which drowns all other sounds in the voices of his messengers (e.g. Rev. 1:10; 5:2; 7:2; 10:3; 11:15; 16:1; 21:3; → Angel). The note of divine sovereignty is also heard in the loud voice of the multitude praising him (e.g. Rev. 5:12; 6:10; 7:10; 19:1). The phrase is found also with a similar meaning in the Gospels, where it is used, moreover, both of the cry of Jesus on the cross (Matt. 27:50; Mk. 15:37; Lk. 23:46) and also of the demons' cry of terror (Lk. 4:33; → Word, art. phōnē).

2. As a result of the normative usage of the LXX and of inter-Testamental tradition in a Hellenistic environment, all three nouns have a similar meaning. megaleiotēs is reserved in the NT for God's majesty, supremacy and splendour (Lk. 9:43; 2 Pet. 1:16; cf. Acts 19:27 where on heathen lips it refers to the great goddess Artemis). megalōsynē, which is a synonym for it, occurs in Heb. 1:3; 8:1; Jude 25, as a surrogate and periphrasis for God, expressing his sublime majesty. Apart from the v.l. in Lk. 1:49, megaleia occurs only in Acts 2:11, where the Jews of the Dispersion visiting Jerusalem express amazement at hearing the followers of Jesus "telling in our own tongues the mighty works of God" (→ Pentecost).

3. In Jn. the comparative meizōn appears only in the discourses. It brings into prominence Jesus' claims and the unique effectiveness of his work. In authority he is "greater" than Jacob (→ Israel), → Abraham or other men, for he brings → life (4:12; 8:53; 5:20, 36). His works have been given him by the Father who, however, despite the unity and equality which exist between the two, is "greater" than Jesus himself (10:29; 14:28). The commission with which the Father sends the Son is balanced by the Son's obedience in carrying out his work of love.

4. megas takes on special significance in a number of passages which have particular theological importance in that they have no exact parallels in pre- and non-Christian literature. Jesus' teaching thus presents something quite new.

(a) In Matt. 22:36, 38 Jesus is asked a controversial question about the entolē megalē, the great commandment (cf. Mk. 12:28 which has "first commandment of all"). The use of the positive instead of the superlative, i.e. "great" instead of "greatest", is a Semitism (cf. Moulton, Grammar, III, 31). Jesus replied by referring to the double commandment to love God and one's neighbour. He thus made an essential organic connection between Deut. 6:5 and Lev. 19:18, which was not commonly made in Jewish legal thought (but cf. Lk. 10:25 ff. and Test. Iss. 5:2, the date of which is disputed; → Command, art. entolē). ([Ed.] Some rabbinic teaching tended to emphasize the equal importance of all commandments [Mekilta Exod. 6; Sifre Deut. 12:28; 13:19; 19:11; cf. D. Hill, The Gospel of Matthew, 1972, 306], but there were also tendencies in Judaism to seek a single principle [cf. D. Daube, The New Testament and Rabbinic Judaism, 1956, 247–73].) Similarly, the works that Jesus does and the "greater works" that the disciples will do are to be understood as combining this love for God and love for man. Jesus utterly rejected the casuistical comparison of commandments, and focused his radical demand on love in the form of service which must underlie all works (→ Serve, art. diakoneō; → Love, art. agapē; → Hear, art. akouō).

(b) In the case of the corresponding pericope in Lk., which meets us in a different setting, Jesus' answer is linked directly with the parable of the Good Samaritan (10:25 ff.). This makes clear how, in Jesus' understanding of love, a special standard for reckoning greatness and smallness applies. His own story is the standard example for those who would obey the two-fold "greatest" commandment, who would turn to God in love and, by so doing, also towards their neighbour. (On the parable see W. Monselewski, Der barmherzige Samariter, Eine auslegungsgeschichtliche Untersuchung zu Lukas 10, 25–37, 1967; J. D. M. Derrett, "The Parable of the Good Samaritan", Law in the New Testament, 1970, 208–27.)

(c) Thus, as regards function, the "greatest commandment" goes hand in hand with the definition of greatness and smallness in the kingdom of heaven, as it appears in the passage where the disciples argue about precedence (Matt. 18:1–5; Mk. 9:33–37; Lk. 9:46 ff.). Jesus demonstrated by his action the supremely valid guideline for his disciples. He put a child in their midst and declared, "Whoever receives one such child in my name" (Matt. expands in v. 4: "Whoever humbles himself like this child," i.e. acknowledges his own smallness), whoever in this way offers service to the small, is ho meizōn, the greatest in the kingdom of heaven.

(d) In this devaluation and revaluation of worldly orders of precedence the structure of the Christian community, determined by the model of Christ, emerges as one based on service to others. It is essentially a fellowship characterized by service (cf. Lk. 22:26 f., where the greatest is used as a parallel to, indeed as a synonym of the one who serves: also Matt. 20:26; 23:11; Mk. 10:43 f.). The discussions about the greatness or smallness of John the Baptist are to be understood in just the same way (Matt. 11:11; Lk. 7:28). His status, because of what happened in the era of Jesus, is revalued in so far as Jesus, with the ushering-in of the → kingdom of God, performs the greatest work, while the Baptist still belongs to the previous era of expectation (cf. W. Grundmann, TDNT IV 534 f.).

F. Thiele

μικρός

μικρός (mikros), small, little; ἐλάσσων (elassōn), smaller, younger; ἐλάχιστος (elachistos), very small, the least; ὀλίγος (oligos), little, small, few.

CL The adj. mikros, small, is found in Gk. literature from Homer on as the antonym of → megas, great. In evaluations and comparisons the two words express a quantitative or qualitative difference which can refer to things, living beings and periods of time. elassōn (smaller, younger) is the comparative of mikros and elachistos (very small, the least) the superlative. A comparative, not found until later, was formed from this, i.e. elachistoteros, the very least. oligos also occurs in Gk. literature from Homer on. It designates a small quantity, a small number, also a few people or a few days.

OT 1. The LXX uses mikros, together with its comparative and superlative, about 190 times to translate a variety of concepts, of which qāṭān, qāṭōn (small, young) and m^{e}ʿaṭ (a few) are the most frequent. They are as widely used as in Hel. Greek, e.g. little houses (Amos 6:11), a small light (Gen. 1:16), something almost (lit. by a little) happened (Ps. 73:2 [LXX 72:2]), a younger son, a small boy (1 Sam. 16:11; Isa. 11:6). Sometimes there is the combination "small and great" in the sense of → all (e.g. Deut. 1:17; Ps. 115:13 [LXX 113:21]).

The LXX uses also oligos (103 times, of which 51 are in the Apocrypha) as does secular Gk., e.g. a few days (Gen. 29:20), a small number of Israelites (Deut. 4:27), man's short span of life, indicating God's punishment (Job 10:20; Ps. 109:8, LXX 108:8). oligos is most frequently used in the LXX to translate the Hebrew m^{e}ʿaṭ, few, a little.

2. In addition, OT writers use mikros and its derivatives to denote humility towards God. Gideon called himself the least in his family, from the weakest clan (Jdg. 6:15). The language of Solomon's prayer after succession to the throne uses the courtly style of ancient oriental kingly formulae: "I am but a little child [paidarion mikron]; I do not know how to go out or come in" (1 Ki. 3:7; cf. RGG^{3} III 1711). Self-effacement before God on the part of God's elect enjoys his favour (cf. Isa. 60:22).

3. The OT clearly emphasizes that Yahweh is frequently on the side of the very people who have little in the way of possessions (e.g. Ps. 37:16 f. [LXX 36:16 f.]). He often helps by means of small things, e.g. "It is an easy thing for the LORD to help through a few" (1 Sam. 14:6). Such thoughts "express the transvaluation of all values before God and His Kingdom" (H. Seesemann, TDNT V 171).

4. The Rabbis often referred to young disciples as "little ones". But they also called them "immature pupils" which carried derogatory undertones in comparison with megas, great (cf. SB I 591 f.).

NT 1. In the NT the lines laid down by the OT are continued. Thus mikros is used in such expressions as small of stature (Lk. 19:3), of little value (Jn. 2:10), younger in age (Rom. 9:12; 1 Tim. 5:9). The juxtaposition of small and great as a periphrasis in Semitic style for "all" also occurs quite often (e.g. Acts 8:10; Heb. 8:11; Rev. 13:16; 19:5, 18).

oligos (40 times, of which 26 are in the Synoptic and Acts) is similarly used. The reversal of values mentioned above is theologically significant (e.g. Matt. 25:21, 23; Lk. 19:17). God will not treat man's faithfulness in matters of little importance with contempt, but reward it.

2. The Pauline writings contain the word-group relatively rarely. 1 Cor. 5:6 and Gal. 5:9 mention the proverb about the far-reaching effects of a little → leaven.

The adv. mikron and the superlative elachistos occur in contexts in which Paul speaks of himself, passing judgment or by way of example, in the same self-effacing manner which we have seen in the OT (e.g. 1 Cor. 15:9; 2 Cor. 11:1, 16; Eph. 3:8 with the special form elachistoteros, he is "the very least" of all the saints). 1 Tim. 4:8 declares that bodily training is of a little (oligon) value.

3. (a) With one exception Jn. uses mikros only in a temporal sense, i.e. a little, a little while (13:33; 14:19). The almost pleonastic heaping up of the word in 16:16–19 denotes first of all the time between Jesus' discourse and his coming arrest in Gethsemane "in a little while" and then the short interval until his disciples meet him after his resurrection. The passage focuses on the eschatological tension of the short interval. At the same time an element of → comfort is implied.

(b) Jn. 7:33 and 12:35 are also to be understood in a temporal sense, as is Heb. 10:37 with its reference to a "very, very short time [mikron hoson hoson]" (cf. Isa. 26:20 LXX).

4. The Synoptics use mikros in one way which differs from the usage of Hellenistic and Jewish literature. Despite their enthusiasm over the innocence of children (→ Child), the latter nevertheless undervalued the "little ones" and "children" (cf. O. Michel, TDNT IV 651 f.). Jesus, on the other hand, was specially concerned for their protection. He sharply warned anyone who caused the least of those who believe in him to stumble (Mk. 9:42; Lk. 17:2; → Offence, art. skandalon). Conversely, those who do good to the least of these are promised eschatological reward (Matt. 10:42; 25:40, 45).

The implications for the Christian community in Matt. 18:1–6, 10, 14 (cf. Mk. 9:33–34, 37, 42; Lk. 9:46 ff.; 17:1 f.) clearly correspond to the character and ways of God. The kingdom of God is not attained by quarrels over precedence and lust for greatness but by being least, by self-effacing service (→ Humility; → Serve), and poverty (→ Poor) which relies entirely on the sufficiency of God's help.

The sayings about the little grain of mustard seed (Matt. 13:31 f.; Mk. 4:30 ff.; Lk. 13:18 f.), which becomes a great tree, about the little flock (Lk. 12:32) and about John the Baptist being less than the "least in the kingdom of God" (Lk. 7:28) are also to be interpreted from this standpoint. In the Christian community, and therefore before God, the only thing that counts is the renunciation of all the greatness that one has striven after. F. Thiele

→ Age, Stature, → Child, → Command, → Disciple, → Poor, → Possessions

a). Arndt, 298 f., 523; W. Grundmann, megas etc., TDNT IV 529–44; W. G. Kümmel, Promise and Fulfilment: The Eschatological Message of Jesus, SBT 23, 1961², 92 ff.; O. Michel, mikros etc., TDNT IV 64859.
(b). O. Bächli, "Die Erwählung des Geringen im Alten Testament", ThZ 22, 1966, 285 ff.; O. Michel, " 'Diese Kleinen' – eine Jüngerbezeichnung Jesu", ThStKr 108, 1937–38, 401 ff.

Laugh

γελάω

γελάω (gelaō), laugh; καταγελάω (katagelaō), laugh at, mock; γέλως (gelōs), laughter.

CL 1. The word group as a whole was in use in Greek literature from the time of Homer onwards and covered a whole range of meanings from free and joyous laughter to ridicule and scorn. The compound katagelaō is an intensification, meaning either laugh loudly or sneer. The words were not only applied to men but also to the gods. K. H. Rengstorf (TDNT I 661) notes that for the Romans and the Greeks merry laughter was a divine characteristic which featured in the theophanies (cf. Virgil, Eclogues 4, 60 ff. where laughter following the birth of a child denoted its divine character). "gelōs is a mark of deity which also spreads gelōs in the world around" (K. H. Rengstorf, ibid.).

2. Three categories of humour and irony in the secular Gk. world are of interest by comparison and contrast with the biblical presentation.

(a) Gk. comedy. The production of a combination of satyric plays and tragedies in connection with the festival of Dionysus continued well into the NT era, and the practice had spread throughout the Gk. world. The plots of the comedies include fantasy and burlesque. The satirical element was very strong. Prominent men in contemporary society were parodied and even mythology and theology are treated with great irreverence. It has been argued, however, that, although the gods were made to appear foolish and cowardly, the reality of their power was consistently assumed. J. Jónsson, using Friedländer's example of Diogenes Laertius, "who says that the Stoic Cleanthes did not care when he was made fun of in a comedy, because the gods themselves, like Dionysus and Hercules, had been able to take a good joke," concludes that the religious humour is to be understood not as laughing at the gods, but rather as taking part in their own joy (Humour and Irony in the New Testament, 1965, 35 f.; cf. Diog. Laert. 7, 173; P. Friedländer, "Lachende Götter," Die Antike 10, 3, 1934, 223). He also cites Carl Schneider who holds that "at the beginning of the Christian era the optimistic and joyful attitude to life was so common and so deeply rooted in the religious feeling of the people that humour was a natural expression of religion" (op. cit., 35; cf. C. Schneider, Geschichte des antiken Christentums, I, 1954, 162 f.).

(b) The dramatic irony of the tragedies. The themes of classical tragedy most often concerned the relation of man to the powers controlling the universe and how these powers determined his destiny. Frequently the audience is given a glimpse behind the scenes and is enabled to foresee the course of events.

(c) Socratic irony. Socrates, as portrayed by Plato, is a teacher of philosophy who employed humour to great effect as a means of education. He played the part of an eirōn, one who says less than he thinks (Aristot., Eth.Nic. 2, 7, 12) confessing his own ignorance and by means of relentless ironical questions forcing his disciples to abandon their self-confident opinions.

Many scholars have pointed to the connection between Socratic irony and the comedy characteristic of a ridiculous and boastful pretender (alazōn, Aristot., Eth.Nic. 2, 7, 12) who is humiliated by an eirōn in the form of a god, fate, or the facts of life (cf. J. Jónsson, op. cit., 37 f.; P. Friedländer, op. cit., 214; J. Kruuse, Humorister, 1945, 53 ff.). One is reminded of the characterization of the "fool" in the Bible (cf. Prov. 12:15; Pss. 14:1; 53:1; Lk. 12:20). D. O. Via points to a similar motif in the early Christian kerygma (cf. 1 Cor. 1:18–31, where the → "wisdom" of the world is brought to nothing by the "foolishness" of God [Kerygma and Comedy in the New Testament, 1975, 45 ff.]).

OT 1. The vb. is used in the LXX to translate śāḥaq (Job 29:24; Ps. 51[52]:6; Lam. 1:7), ṣāḥaq (Gen. 1:17; 18:12 f.; 15), śāmaḥ (Job 22:19), and is without

Heb. equivalent in 1 Esd. 4:31; Ezra. 4:17; Job 19:7; Jer. 20:8; Dan. LXX Bel. 18; Dan. Theodotion Bel 7, 19; 4 Macc. 5:28. The noun gelōs occurs mostly for the Heb. śᵉḥōq and is found in Gen. 21:6; Job 8:21; 17:6; Prov. 10:23; Eccl. 2:2; 7:4(3), 7(6); 10:19; Wis. 5:3; Sir. 19:30; 21:20; 27:13; Amos 7:9; Mic. 1:10; Jer. 20:7; 31(48):26, 39; Lam. 3:14; Ezr. 23:32; 4 Macc. 5:28. K. H. Rengstorf claims that the words are used exclusively for the true or supposed superiority towards another expressed in scorn or laughter (Ps. 80:6; Prov. 1:26; 2 Chron. 30:10; Job 12:4; Eccl. 7:6; cf. TDNT I 659). They are never used for righteous or religious → joy. In Gen. 17:17; 18:12; 13:15 the contrast is between laughter and belief. In Prov. 10:23 gelōs is the mark of a fool, contrasted with wise conduct. Rengstorf further points out that laughter is rarely attributed to God (Pss. 2:4; 37:13; 59:8; Prov. 1:26) and it only expresses his absolute superiority over the ungodly who will not accept him as God even though they are nothing beside him (TDNT I 661).

Certain possible exceptions, however, should be noted. (a) In Gen. 21:6 the laughter here appears to refer to two different things: a God-given joy for Sarah, "God has made laughter for me", and man's scornful scepticism, "everyone who hears will laugh over me." The LXX gives the whole clause a positive meaning by substituting synchairō in the second clause. gelōs had to be retained in the first half since Sarah is commenting on the aptness of the name Isaac (yiṣḥāq) which is a self-reproachful reminder of their unbelief (Gen. 21:3; → Abraham, arts. Sarra and Isaak). (b) In Job 29:24 the positive meaning of the Heb. – a smile which encourages – is interpreted by the LXX to refer to ridicule. (c) In Ps. 126:2 laughter is associated with the joy of the time of salvation. Rengstorf argues that this again refers to the laughter of triumph over opponents (TDNT I 661 f.). But the context does not make this explicit and again the LXX prefers chara (→ Joy) to gelōs.

It may be concluded therefore that in the OT śāḥaq and ṣāḥaq are not in general the marks of righteous joy either for God or man and gelōs is even less so.

2. Humour and irony in the OT. The above conclusions should not, however, be taken to indicate that the OT is humourless. Scholars have been divided on this question, some regarding humour, i.e. playfulness, as inappropriate to the seriousness of the subjects treated. It must be conceded that the assessment of humour is a highly subjective process. If for example Nebuchadnezzar's madness in Dan. 4 is regarded by some as humorous (W. F. Stinespring, IDB II 662), the dividing line between tragedy and comedy is a very narrow one. Jónsson maintains that humour may change according to the state of mind of the person, his attitude towards the object, and his philosophy of life (op. cit., 23).

There is, however, a general consensus of opinion about certain types of humour to be found in the OT.

(a) Lighthearted portrayal of people and situations feature in the narrative passages: e.g. the characterization of Jacob and Esau (Gen. 25:27–34); Jacob meets his match in Laban (Gen. 29:15–30); the early life of Joseph (Gen. 37:1–11), the story of Balaam (Num. 22); Abimelech's death at the hands of a woman (Jdg. 9:50–54); David dressed in armour (1 Sam. 17:38).

(b) Very extensive use of word play. Names are regularly seen to be significant. In Gen. 25:26 "Jacob" suggests "following at the heel" in order to supplant ('āqaḇ); hence Gen. 27:36 and Jer. 9:4 (on Jacob → Israel, art. Iakōb). The prophets' words include many bitter puns. "The Lord God showed me . . . a basket of summer fruit [qayiṣ] . . . Then the Lord said to me, 'The end [qēṣ] has come upon my people Israel' " (Amos 8:1 f.; cf. also e.g. Hos. 8:7; 12:11; Isa. 5:7; Jer. 1:11–12).

(c) Quiet educational humour. This is best illustrated by the book of Proverbs, where the teacher gently teases his disciples and makes the sinner look ridiculous (e.g. 6:9–10; 19:24; 27:15). It is possible to understand Ecclesiastes in this way too (cf. 3:16–22).

(d) Dramatic irony. This is used to good effect in the story of Joseph (Gen. 42:6–45:4), and it is present throughout the book of Job. In so far as the reader is admitted beforehand into the knowledge of God's activity it might even be called divine irony (see below NT 2 (b) on John's Gospel).

(e) Prophetic irony of varying degrees, from mild sarcasm to bitter satire. This is used on the one hand with the intent of recalling God's people to a true awareness of their rebellion against him. It is found in: Samuel's descriptions of kingship (1 Sam. 8:10–18); the ironic words of God himself (Job 40:6 ff.); numerous passages in the latter prophets (e.g. Isa. 1:2–3; 28:9–10; 30:10). On the other hand, ironical scorn and ridicule is hurled at other nations and their gods, who have dared to challenge the God of Israel: Elijah's taunts at the prophets of Baal (1 Ki. 18:27); Isaiah's mockery of idols and those who make them (Isa. 44:9–20); the comical picture of the arrival of the king of Babylon in Sheol (Isa. 14:3–21). When this reaches the point of simple exultation over the weakness and downfall of one's enemies, as in Nahum, there does not appear to be much humour in it, though Rengstorf's conclusions above imply that the verb gelaō was primarily used in this context.

3. Rabbinic literature. It was the concern of the Rabbis at all times to maintain the majesty of God. According to Rengstorf, the Rabbis seldom spoke of laughter. ṣāḥaq is used for the attitude which is the exact opposite of serious application to Torah. "ṣāḥaq is contrasted with a pious sense of dependence on God which is well pleasing to Him. In ṣāḥaq there is a rejection of God as the reality which determines all things and an affirmation of man as an autonomous being" (TDNT I 659). The four verses noted above where God is said to laugh were assembled by the Rabbis as a surprising phenomenon and there was an attempt by them to show that the vb. in Ps. 2:4 could be taken as a piel: God will make his enemies the objects of mutual derision (Midrash Ps. 2:6).

Again, however, we discover that this has no bearing on the Rabbinic attitude to humour. Jónsson collects together evidence to show how the Talmudic literature makes a wide use of humour (op. cit. 51–89). Humour is employed when dealing with personal relationships, nature, the after life and even the Scriptures. There are humorous pictures of God, and Satan is shown in a ridiculous light. It is not permissible, however, to scoff at or parody Scripture disrespectfully, or use it to express improper ideas. The main characteristics of Rabbinic humour are self-irony and educative humour, but never humour for its own sake. Humour never becomes brutal except where serious heresies are attacked. Jónsson suggests that a knowledge of types of Rabbinic humour can supply us with a guide for recognizing humour in the teachings of Jesus (op. cit., 51 ff.).

NT 1. The incidence of the gelaō word-group follows the usage found in the OT rather than secular Gk. usage. In the account of Jairus's daughter katagelaō is the scornful, superior laughter of those who ridiculed Jesus, believing that he could do nothing about someone already dead (kai kategelōn autou, "and they laughed at him", Matt. 9:24; Mk. 5:40; Lk. 8:53). The story itself illustrates the power of God in Jesus over man's ultimate enemy, → death, and at the same time the emptiness of unbelief which is heightened by the use of this vb. Jesus' act shows him to be in the succession of → Elijah (1 Ki. 17:17–24) and Elisha (2 Ki. 4:17–37). Peter also performed a similar act (Acts 9:36–42). In Jas. 4:9 gelōs denotes activity which is inappropriate: "Be wretched and mourn and weep. Let your laughter be turned to mourning and your joy to dejection." For the thought cf. Eccl. 2:2; 7:2–6; Tob. 2:6; Sir. 21:20; 27:13. Above all it seems to reflect that of the Sermon on the Plain: "Blessed are you that weep now, for you shall laugh [gelasete]. . . . Woe to you that laugh now [gelōntes], for you shall mourn and weep" (Lk. 6:21b, 25b). Here laughter is associated with salvation joy with no thought of triumph over enemies. The parallelism between laugh and mourn is not recorded in the Sermon on the Mount (Matt. 5:6) where the saying refers to mourning (→ Lament). The thought in Lk. may be influenced by Ps. 126:1 f.: "When the Lord restored the fortunes of Zion, we were like those who dream. Then our mouth was filled with laughter [Heb. śᵉḥôq; LXX, however, chara, joy], and our tongue with shouts of joy; then they said among the nations, 'The Lord has done great things for them.' " The coming age of salvation was to be a time of joy for Israel (Test.Jud. 25); but rabbinic ethics rejected laughter in relation to it, as this was something which only God could give (Midrash Ps. 126:2; Ber. 31a; cf. SB IV, 2, 965 f.; TDNT I 662).

2. Humour in the NT. Again it is possible to isolate various categories of humour.

(a) The humour of Jesus in the Synoptics. Jónsson maintains that Jesus combines the rabbinic educational humour with the prophetic irony. "It may depend on our mood whether we hear the stern and threatening voice of the prophet with his sharp irony or the mild traditional humour of the Rabbi" (op. cit., 198). Jesus had a sense of comical features in the situations of daily life: a man who rushes out of the temple leaving his offering behind (Matt. 5:23–24); Matt. 5:40 is comical when it is realized that the traditional way of describing a fully dressed man was to speak of his coat, cloak and shoes! Matt. 24:43 alludes to the idiotic attitude of a man who does not prepare against robbery unless he knows the thief is coming, as a picture of men's lack of readiness for the coming of the Son of man. Matt. 4:19 is perhaps a playful picture. Lk. 7:31 notes the comical inconsistencies of people. Jesus used word play (aphanizousin . . . phanōsin, "disfigure . . . may be seen", Matt. 6:16; Petros . . . petra "Peter . . . rock", Matt. 16:18; → Rock), exaggeration (the speck and the log, Matt. 7:3; the three measures of meal, Matt. 13:33), and paradox ("who would save his life will lose it, Mk. 8:35; cf. Matt. 16:25; Lk. 9:24; Jn. 12:25 f.). He probably employed contemporary proverbs and humorous rabbinic parables (e.g. the humorous side to the picture of the rich man in Hades, still wishing to use Lazarus as a lackey (Lk. 16:23–37; cf. Talmudic humorous stories about the after-life). The use of the word apechousin in Matt. 6:2, 5, 16 virtually amounts to: they have had their salary and been given the receipt (A. Deissmann, Light from the Ancient East, 1911, 112; cf. the traditional comic stories about rewards in ML). Jónsson follows H. Clavier in his attempt to classify the irony of Jesus (op. cit., 177; cf. H. Clavier, "La méthode ironique dans l'enseignement de Jésus" Études Théologiques et Religieuses, 1929–30, 61–5), but it is probably not possible to do this in a way which makes any clear distinctions. Jesus' response to the Canaanite woman (Mk. 7:27 par. Matt. 15:26) could have been an ironical quotation of a Jewish saying. Many of the questions Jesus directed at his opponents have an ironical ring (Matt. 9:5 par. Mk. 2:9; Lk. 5:23; Matt. 12:12 par. Mk. 3:4; Lk. 6:9; Matt. 21:25, par. Mk. 11:30, Lk. 20:4). There is irony in the way he takes well known concepts and gives them a different meaning, e.g. Mk. 2:17 where "righteous" means "self-righteous". Clavier suggests that the words of Mk. 4:11–12 are ironical, considering the blindness of the disciples (cf. Mk. 8:17–18; op. cit. 74 ff.). The language of Matt. 23 is comparable with much of the biting irony of the OT prophets.

(b) Divine irony. Jónsson points out that it would be inappropriate to speak of the humorous, i.e. comical, in John's Gospel. However, John's christology which presents so markedly a human Jesus and an eternal Christ in the same person introduces into the Gospel a sort of dualism and hence a special kind of irony. Words and ideas carry two senses at the same time (cf. 1:36; 2:19–22; 4:32; 6:20; 11:50; 12:7); and this enigma is highlighted in the Gospel by the questions which reveal lack of understanding of Jesus' words and deeds (cf. 2:18; 2:20; 3:4; 4:11). Whatever men say or do simply serves the purpose of the divine will. To a certain extent all the evangelists make use of this motif, especially in the Passion narratives (cf. the widespread use the title → king in questions, accusations, taunts and the inscription over the cross). It was probably part of the primitive passion tradition.

(c) Lighthearted portrayal of people and situations in narrative passages (as in OT and Jesus' teaching). This is found both in the Gospels and the book of Acts (cf. the gently humorous description of Zacchaeus in Lk. 19:1–6; Peter's reactions in Jn. 13; the escape from prison, Acts 5:17–32; the unclean food from heaven offered to Peter in Acts 10:9–16; Peter left knocking at the door, Acts 12:12–16; the tribune's misunderstanding, Acts 21:37–40).

(d) The humour of Paul. Paul, the Pharisee, enjoyed scholarly argumentation and there is considerable humour and irony in the tussles he had with his opponents. He posed paradoxical questions (Gal. 2:17; Rom. 3:29; Rom. 6:1; 7:7). He employed humorous illustrations, e.g. the vessel and the potter which also figured in classical and rabbinic literature as well as in the OT (Rom. 9:20–23; cf. Isa. 29:16; 45:9; Jónsson, op. cit., 225); the protest of the different parts of the body (1 Cor. 12:14–26); the instruments out of tune (1 Cor. 14:7 f.). He used word play: mēden ergazomenous . . . periergazomenous, "not doing work . . . busybodies" (2 Thess. 3:11; → Busybody). In speaking of the runaway slave Onesimus (whose name onēsimos means useful or beneficial), Paul remarks: "Formerly he was useless [achrēston] to you, but now he is indeed useful [euchrēston] to you and to me" (Phlm. 11; cf. also onaimēn, benefit, v. 20). Finally Paul was prepared to speak of himself in humorous terms. He was a nervous and unimpressive speaker: "And I was with you in weakness and in much fear and trembling" (1 Cor. 2:3). He was a laughing-stock in the arena: "For I think that God has exhibited us apostles as last of all, like men sentenced to death; because we have become a spectacle to the world to angels and to men" (1 Cor. 4:9). His boasting turns out to be a list of his sufferings and → weaknesses, or things for which he can claim no credit such as the gospel and the commission given to him (1 Cor. 9:15–18; 2 Cor. 10:1–13:4; → Boast). Paul's attitude to boasting may be compared with what he says about the alazōn, boaster, braggart (Rom. 1:30; 2 Tim. 3:2; cf. Hab. 2:5; Prov. 21:24; see also above CL 2 (c) and G. Delling, TDNT I 226 f.).

(e) Several flashes of humour in the other NT books. James' humorous similes: the double-minded man (1:6 ff.); the rudder and the → fire (3:1–6); the idiotic statement, "be warmed and filled" (2:16). In 1 Jn. there is some word play; antichristos . . . hymeis chrisma echete, "Antichrist . . . you have an anointing" (1 Jn. 2:18).

3. It would be wrong to give the impression that humour and irony are dominant characteristics of the Bible, but it has been suggested that they are more theologically significant than scholars have usually allowed. At the simplest level the Bible consists of much teaching and exhortation and every good teacher knows that his words must be spiced with humour and irony if they are to rivet attention, especially of those who are reluctant to listen. Irony may be understood as a special branch of humour, and true humour is one aspect of → joy. Jónsson refers to E. F. Carritt's theories that failure provides the food for humour, but only where failure is not a sign of fatal disaster and where there is a sense of inner superiority (op. cit., 17 ff.; cf. E. F. Carritt, Theory of Beauty, 1949, 333). This superiority, says H. Höffding, following a similar line of thought (Den Store Humor, 1916, 52 ff.), in true humour is not the self-security of arrogance, but the consciousness of being master of the situation, not indifferent to the seriousness of the battle, but assured that nothing of true value can ever be destroyed (Jónsson, op. cit., 16 ff.). If such reasoning is correct, humour is the natural expression of the religious joy represented in the Bible. Jónsson approves with reservations R. Voeltzel's description of the irony of the OT which results from the fact that God, while condemning the mocking which is a sign of rebellion against himself, cannot help seeing the ridiculous and comical in the revolt and fighting of the helpless creatures who intend to frustrate his purposes (op. cit., 13, 48 f.; cf. R. Voeltzel, Le Rire du Seigneur, 1955, 103). Similarly Barth, taking a different interpretation of Gen. 17:17 and 18:12, argues that laughter is man's humble reaction to the amazing and ridiculous fact of man being a recipient of God's honour (K. Barth, CD III, 4, 665). Jesus came with a joyful message, and though he took the opposition seriously he was profoundly conscious that the victory lay with God. Hence his light-hearted humour (Jónsson, op. cit., 195 f.). Similarly it should be accepted as natural "that humour was a fairly strong sentiment among the first Christians, not in spite of the 'eschatological' situation, but because of it . . . just where we might expect the sense of the tragic humour breaks forth, triumphing, because failure will not be allowed to hinder the work of God" (Jónsson, op. cit., 255).

Certainly irony is written into the basic facts of redemption: God promised a childless man who was "as good as dead" (Heb. 11:12) that he would be father of a nation; he chose not a great and powerful nation to serve his purposes, but a small one which was despised and often at the mercy of its powerful neighbours; the climax of the world's rejection of God – the cross – was in fact the means he used to redeem the world (1 Cor. 2:6–8); hence the Christian knows that he is strongest when most aware of his weakness (2 Cor. 12:10). Biblical theology has irony in its very essence.

Finally, however, we must notice from the above discussions that for the OT and NT gelaō is not the appropriate expression of joy or true humour. As with paizō, play, make sport, or empaizō, ridicule, make fun of, mock, trick, it is associated too closely with idolatry, licentiousness and irreverence. Joy is expressed in such words as chairō, rejoice; agalliaō, exult, be overjoyed; euphrainō, make glad; orcheomai, dance; auleō, play the flute; adō, sing; psallō, sing praise (with an instrument). The humour of the Bible is dancing and singing through the spoken and written word. E. M. Embry

→ Joy, → Lament, → Pride

(a). G. Bertram, paizō etc., TDNT I 625–36; M. D. Goldman, "Humour in the Hebrew Bible", Australian Biblical Review 2, 1952, nos. 1–2; R. K. Harrison, "Humor", ZPEB III 224 ff.; F. F. Hvidberg, Weeping and Laughter in the Old Testament, 1962; J. Jónsson, Humour and Irony in the New Testament, Illuminated by Parallels in Talmud and Midrash, 1965; K. H. Rengstorf, gelaō etc., TDNT I 658–62; F. Rosenthal, Humour in Early Islam, 1956; J. Reumann, "St. Paul's Use of Irony", Lutheran Quarterly 7, 1955, 140–45; W. F. Stinespring, "Humor", IDB II 660 ff.; D. O. Via, Kerygma and Comedy in the New Testament, 1975 (concerned with comparing the structure of Gk. comedy with that of the kerygma of Paul and Mark than with humour as such); G. Webster, Laughter in the Bible, 1960; D. Zuver, Salvation by Laughter, 1933.
(b). H. von Campenhausen, "Ein Witz des Apostels Paulus und die Anfänge des christlichen Humors", in Neutestamentliche Studien für Rudolf Bultmann, BZNW 21, (1954) 1957², 189–93; "Christentum und Humor", ThR 27, 1961, 65–82; H. Clavier, "La méthode ironique dans l'enseignement de Jesus", Études Théologiques et Religieuses, 1929–30; "L'ironie dans l'enseignement de Jésus", NovT 1, 1956, 3–20; "L'ironie dans le quatrième Évangile", Studia Evangelica, 1959, ed. K. Aland, F. L. Cross, J. Daniélou, H. Riesenfeld, W. C. van Unnik, TU 73 261–76; and "Les sens multiples dans le Nouveau Testament", NovT 2, 1958, 185–98; P. Friedländer, "Lachende Götter", Die Antike 10, 3, 1934; J. Kruuse, Humorister, 1945; R. Voeltzel, Le Rire du Seigneur, 1955.

Law, Custom, Elements

The social life of man requires structure and commonly recognized rules of conduct. Within this context, the Gk. word with the widest range of meaning is nomos, which originally denoted a system for distributing property, based upon collective agreement. Then it acquired the more general sense of a commonly agreed public order, or, in the plur., the laws that regulate life. However, nomos or the plur. nomoi has a religious basis, being anchored in transcendence and therefore claiming absolute validity, either as authoritative divine commands or as cosmic principles. ethos, on the other hand, is usage or custom (unwritten but not therefore any less plain or valid), i.e. that which is normally done. In the NT it also means the custom of the priesthood. stoicheion denoted originally the line or rank in which one stands, hence the basic order to which one has to conform. The stoicheia are therefore the elements, the basic constituents of the cosmic and the human order.

ἔθος

ἔθος (ethos), usage, custom; ἦθος (ēthos), custom, way of life.

CL 1. ethos, found from Aeschylus onwards, stems from the root sweth (cf. Lat. suetus, accustomed, customary; Ger. Sitte, custom and means tradition, wont, usage, custom. With the prepositions ex, kata, dia, en or the instrumental dative it means "according to [these] principles" or "in the usual way".

2. The related word ēthos, since Homer, is a rather more abstract term, not easily distinguishable in English, however, from ethos.

OT In the canonical text of the OT neither word has any real Heb. equivalents; nevertheless, in the LXX ēthos occurs 7 times and ethos 8 times.

1. The Heb. form k^{e}mišpāṭ is translated by ethos in a few places, including Jdg. 18:7 v.l.; 1 Ki. 18:28 v.l.: "according to the [popular, Gentile] custom", "after the manner of . . . ." ethos is used thus in the sense of popular custom and particularly in connection with → feasts. In the extra-canonical writings the word always refers to a custom traditional within a given class or nation: e.g., giving presents to members of the royal family (1 Macc. 10:89); the custom of the ancestors (2 Macc. 11:25; 4 Macc. 18:5) or of the priests (Dan. Bel. 15 v.l.); customs relating to execution (2 Macc. 13:4), or to public worship. Even when a custom is reversed, the resulting custom can come to be ethically and legally binding (4 Macc. 18:5; Wis. 14:16, hōs nomos, as a law; → nomos).

2. In the LXX ēthos ordinarily conveys the idea of basic human motives or attitudes (4 Macc. 1:29; 2:7; 2:21; 5:24), a frame of mind (4 Macc. 13:27); also a manner of life resulting from certain ethical or psychological impulses, e.g., directly from the law (Sir. Prol. 27, v.l. ennomos; → nomos NT) or from virtue (4 Macc. 13:27 see above); or, negatively, from a general attitude of deceit (Sir. 20:26).

NT In the NT the two words are found 13 times altogether (ēthos only once, i.e. 1 Cor. 15:33; ethos 3 times in Lk., 7 times in Acts, once in Jn., once in Heb.). The range of meaning extends from religious custom (frequently indistinguishable from popular mores) to personal habit, although no hard and fast distinctions can be drawn. Some passages merely give objective information on customs or traditions, while others reflect the clash of early Christian teaching and practice with the way of life found in traditional Judaism and late antiquity. It is helpful to consider these groups separately.

In the narrative sections of the Gospels ethos is variously qualified as the custom of the priesthood (Lk. 1:9); the custom relating to the Passover and to the education of sons (Lk. 2:42; when the son reaches puberty at the age of 12, the father has the duty of introducing him to the requirements of God's law by taking him to the three great → feasts); Jewish burial custom (Jn. 19:40); or Christ's personal custom, e.g. of visiting the synagogue (Lk. 4:16, kata to eiōthos autō, "as his custom was"; cf. Acts 17:2) or, as a festival pilgrim, of teaching daily in the temple and spending the following night near the Mount of Olives outside the city (Lk. 22:39), a custom with a long tradition behind it, making it easy for Judas and the temple officers to locate him.

The following passages introduce us to early Christian polemic: Acts 15:1, the confrontation between Jewish and Gentile Christians over the necessity of circumcision (note the appeal is to the custom of → Moses [cf. Lev. 12:3], not to that of → Abraham [cf. Gen. 17:10]); previously Stephen (Acts 6:14) and subsequently Paul (Acts 26:3; 28:17) were accused of altering the customs delivered by Moses or the fathers; cf. the charge against Jesus that he wished to annul the law (Mk. 2:23 ff.; 3:2 ff.; 7:14 f.; Matt. 5:18, 21). Paul's opponents accused him of being the enemy both of the → people and of the law (cf. nomos NT) and of endangering both by his sectarian activities (Acts 21:28; 24:5). Paul himself appealed to Roman legal custom (Acts 25:16; cf. A. N. Sherwin-White, "Paul before Felix and Festus", Roman Society and Roman Law in the New Testament, 1963, 48–70). An appeal to Roman political and religious law was also made by the Roman slave-owners at Philippi (Acts 16:21) against what they conceived to be Jewish customs and religious propaganda. For Romans were forbidden to become proselytes of the Jewish religion which was a religio licita, legally recognized religion, and Philippi was a Roman colonia (cf. E. Haenchen, The Acts of the Apostles, 1971, 496; A. N. Sherwin-White, op. cit., 78 f., 177).

Finally, the use of ēthos and ethos shows something of the internal dangers facing the early Christian church: the church is doomed if it allows itself to be infected by the immoral habits of the surrounding world (ēthos, 1 Cor. 15:33). Here Paul cites the saying from the 4th cent. comedy Thais by Menander, "Bad company ruins good morals." Heb. 10:25 states that for some people non-attendance at public worship had already become a habit (ethos), an attitude of indifference which the church must seek to overcome by spiritual exhortation, pointing out the imminence of the day of judgment. H.-H. Esser

νόμος

νόμος (nomos), law, norm; νομικός (nomikos), pertaining to the law, learned in the law, hence legal expert, jurist, lawyer; νομίμως (nomimōs), conforming to the law, according to rule; νομοδιδάσκαλος (nomodidaskalos), teacher of the law; νομοθεσία (nomothesia), lawgiving, legislation; νομοθετέω (nomotheteō), make laws, legislate, ordain, enact; νομοθέτης (nomothetēs), lawgiver; ἀνομία (anomia), lawlessness; ἄνομος (anomos), lawless, unlawful; ἔννομος (ennomos), under law, orderly; παρανομέω (paranomeō), break the law, act contrary to the law.

CL 1. (a) The noun nomos is formed from the vb. nemo, distribute, deal out, assign, grant, especially in the sense of assigning property, apportioning pasture or agricultural land (cf. nomē, pasture). In other words, the reference is to those processes which are essential whenever men live together in a community, whether small or great. Relationships to earthly possessions have to be determined in a legally binding fashion, so that private and communal ownership may become a reality. Thus the basic vb. covers all shades of meaning from merely handing something over for a given period of time, right through to transferring something, once and for all, to the ownership of another person. By means of appropriate prepositions, personal or non-personal objects, and other qualifying phrases, ethical value-judgment can be expressed: to grant equally, exercise fairness, be impartial, also to favour, pass over, reject. The same vb. can also indicate the result of distributing property: to appropriate, own or possess, occupy, utilize; pass. to belong to. The communal aspect can still be seen in the mid.: to distribute (e.g. an inheritance) between one another.

(b) The fig. sense covers the idea of guarding what has been entrusted: to watch over, protect; and also the way the recipient is regarded by the person who distributes: to esteem, regard as, take for, respect.

2. In the same way, the word nomos (found in literature from the time of Hesiod, 7th cent. B.C.) originally referred to distributing and what follows from it. It meant that which has been laid down, ordered or assigned; but more particularly the results of this, namely arrangements which become regularized and attain the status of tradition. The word therefore denotes custom, usage, statute, law, especially in the context of distribution of goods, and of law and order.

The legal, ethical and religious meanings of nomos are inseparable in antiquity, for all goods were believed to come from the gods, who upheld order in the universe and in relations between men. Hence, the universal conviction, found throughout history, that law is linked to the divine – an idea which has persisted subconsciously even in periods when the purely human aspects of law have been emphasized (see below). The close interrelationship between the worship of the gods, the customs of the time and one's duty to the state was expressed in the charge levelled at Socrates, namely that he failed to reverence the gods officially worshipped (nomizein) by the city, or at least that he did not worship them as everyone else did (Plato, Apol. 24b; → Godliness, art. sebomai).

3. Used in a political context, nomos was regarded as the most essential feature of the polis or city-state, i.e. the judicial norm, legal custom, the "law of the land." From about the 5th cent. B.C. onwards, the nomos was written down as nomoi (plur. laws), thereby acquiring the specific meaning of written law, the constitution (of the polis), the coercive law of the state, which had to be obeyed upon pain of punishment. This purely political view of nomos led to relativization and an increasingly man-centred approach to law. Many Gk. tragedies rest on the fact that one law stands over against another, both claiming validity but mutually incompatible. Hence, men are caught in the toils of such conflict, as in Sophocles' Antigone. Indeed, nomos is sometimes even disparaged as a human exaggeration, compared with physis (→ Nature) or universal law.

4. Philosophy (even that of the Sophists), kept alive the awareness that, since human laws are so fallible, man cannot exist unless he conforms to cosmic, universal law. Only when a man is inwardly in harmony with the universe does he have peace of mind amid the vicissitudes of life (as the Stoics). Whereas the Sophists criticized the idea of absolute validity attaching to nomos, Plato and Aristotle each in his own way connected it with the nous, the human spirit, and thereby once again with the divine (cf. H. Kleinknecht, TDNT IV 1032). The period of late antiquity in the time of the NT suffered from no longer having a nomos of binding force throughout the known world. Most of the gnostic systems sought to project earthly law into the higher sphere of the ground of all being. This represented a wistful attempt to regain, by religious means, the lost unity of law itself and of life lived under the law.

OT 1. In the LXX nomos occurs about 430 times, of which about 200 are without Heb. equivalents; for the rest, the commonest equivalent is tôrâh, with dāṯ occurring 16 times and ḥōq, ḥuqqâh 12 times. In the canonical OT, nomos is concentrated most heavily in the Pentateuchal books other than Gen., occurring about 60 times, of which 25 are in Deut. and 20 in Lev. Next come Ezra and Nehemiah, if one counts the apocryphal 1 Esd. (53 times), then the Pss. (40 times, of which 27 are in Ps. 119 (LXX 118). Among the prophets Jer. uses the word most frequently (15 times). The frequent use of the word in the extra-canonical books (it occurs about 100 times in the Books of the Maccabees and 30 times in Sir.) indicates the importance of law in the Judaistic thought of the last two centuries B.C. Of the derivatives (see NT below) only anomia (lawlessness; about 150 times) and anomos (lawless; about 50 times) are numerically significant in the LXX.

2. This paragraph deals with those passages in the LXX where tôrâh is translated by nomos. It is important to note that tôrâh frequently does not mean "law" in the modern sense of the term. At a time when the Jews saw "law" as the transcript of an eternal norm, and the Greeks likewise thought of nomos as having definite content, the predominant use of the latter word must have produced a striking translation.

(a) Originally tôrâh (mostly used in the sing.) meant an instruction from God, a command for a given situation. The plur. which also occurs indicates the concreteness and variability of such instructions (cf. Exod. 16:28; 18:16, 20, translated, significantly enough, by ton nomon, "the law", in all three places). Instruction for given situations was also given by the prophets (Isa. 1:10; 5:24 and passim; Mic. 4:2; Jer. 6:19), by the priests (Hos. 4:6; Jer. 2:8; Deut. 17:9, 11; Ezek. 7:26) or by a judge (Deut. 17:9, 11 f.). The prophets threatened judgment on those priests and prophets who issued their own instruction without having received it from Yahweh (Jer. 2:8; 8:8; Zeph. 3:4; Ezek. 22:26).

(b) Human counsel given by a teacher of wisdom (Prov. 13:14; 28:4, 7, 9) can also be called tôrâh and nomos.

(c) Nearer the concept of law are the specific instructions for the different kinds of offering (Lev. 6 and passim); or for a definite priestly procedure (Num. 5:29, when adultery is suspected); or with regard to the Nazirites (Num. 6:13, 21).

(d) Only after the Deuteronomic reform did phrases such as "the law of Yahweh" become widespread, epitomizing the laws in general, and without any further qualification or any enumeration of the individual laws involved (2 Ki. 10:31; Exod. 13:9; Amos 2:4, a Deuteronomic expansion of a Yahwistic basic text; Jer. 8:8 and passim); similarly "the law of God" (Jos. 24:26 and passim), delivered by Moses (Jos. 8:31 [LXX 9:2]; 2 Ki. 23:25 and passim). Deut. is itself called "the book of this law" (Deut. 28:61; cf. 29:20; 30:10; 31:26; cf. G. von Rad, Old Testament Theology, I, 1962, 221; Jos. 1:8; 2 Ki. 22:8, 11), and after the Exile the whole Pentateuch is so called (Neh. 8:3). Corresponding to this is the formula "written in the law", found in the post-exilic literature (Neh. 8:14; 10:35 [LXX 34], 37 [LXX 36]; Dan. 9:11; 2 Chr. 23:18 and passim), where the law is seen as a written norm.

(e) The verbs used in connection with tôrâh indicate whether the latter is conceived of as oral instruction or as written law. Oral instruction is presupposed by such formulae as: to teach instruction (Exod. 18:20); to hear it (Isa. 42:24); to forget it (Hos. 4:6); to despise it (Isa. 5:24); to violate it (Hos. 8:1). On the other hand, the following phrases indicate written law: to observe, to keep the law (Ps. 119 [LXX 118]:34, 44; Prov. 28:4 and passim); to → walk in the law, i.e. to order one's life by the law (Exod. 16:14; Ps. 78 [LXX 77]:10; 119 [LXX 118]:1; 2 Chr. 6:16 and passim).

3. ḥōq denotes: (a) Yahweh's sacrificial requirement, his right to receive sacrifice (Lev. 6:15 [LXX 22]); or (b) the legal system proclaimed in the cult, to which Israel is bound (Jos. 24:25; cf. A. Alt, Essays on Old Testament History and Religion, 1966, 126; G. von Rad, op. cit., I, 30). The fem. ḥuqqâh (in the plur. ḥuqqôṯ) has the meaning: (a) creation ordinances, laws of nature (Jer. 31[LXX 38]: 36); (b) the ordinance of the passover (Exod. 12:43; Num. 9:3, 14 and passim; [→ Feast, art. pascha]); (c) statutes regulating everyday life (Lev. 19:19, 37); (d) sacrificial ordinances (Jer. 44 [LXX 51]:23).

4. The equivalent dāṯ occurs only in the late OT writings, always denoting a written law: either (a) the law of God (Ezr. [LXX 2 Esd.] 7:12, 14, 21, 25, 26; Dan. 6:6 [LXX 6:5]; here identical with religion, worship of God); 7:25; Est. 3:8 (plur. interpreted as the laws of the people); or (b) the law or decree of the king (Ezr. 7:26; Est. 1:8, 13, 15, 19, 3:8; 4:16).

5. This survey is sufficient to show that we cannot speak simply of "the law in the OT" as if it expressed a uniform concept, much less of the OT itself as law. Even in the Pentateuch the later generic term tôrâh or law is an example of the part standing for the whole (see above 2 (d)). There are essentially three types of "law" to be distinguished:

(a) Casuistic law, which was pre-Israelite in origin, and was largely taken over after the conquest from Canaanite legal custom. It has its setting "in the gate", where the law was administered. Large sections of the Book of the Covenant (Exod. 21:1–23:19) contain such lists of laws, each with the characteristic form: "if . . . then. . . ."

(b) Apodeictic law, which is of genuine Israelite origin, stemming from the period when the tribes were still mobile, and set out in thematic series of ten or twelve for ease of memorizing: "he that . . . shall surely be put to death" (Exod. 21:12. 15 ff. and passim); or "I am Yahweh . . . thou shalt not . . ." (as in the Decalogue, Exod. 20:2 ff.; → Command). Here the setting is the worshipping community, especially at the feast of the covenant and the feast of the renewal of the covenant; such law "watches over man in his humanity" (G. von Rad, op. cit., I, 195). In the OT, incidentally, the Ten Commandments were never called "law" (ibid.).

(c) Purely cultic regulations, to be carried out and expounded by the → priests (see above 2 (c); cf. also Hag. 2:11 [LXX 12]).

The law inherent in such passages is part and parcel of the → covenant. It is the rule of life for those who have been redeemed (see the First Commandment, which is the basis of the other nine). It sets out "the obedience of men who have come of age" (von Rad, op. cit., I, 198; cf. Deut. 30:14). The commandments "were not a law, but an event, with which Jahweh specifically confronted every generation in its own hic et nunc [here and now], and to which it had to take up its position" (op. cit., 199). The law thus had a prophetic character. This original view of law changed in the post-exilic period, when the community was considered to be actually constituted by the law (Neh. 8). The law came to be viewed as a set of rigid rules, instead of serving the community as an ordinance of salvation. (On the whole subject see G. von Rad, op. cit., I, 187–279 and the various works listed in the bibliography below.)

6. For the Qumran sect's view of law → Command, art. entolē, OT 3.

7. (a) In the Judaism of the last two centuries B.C. and at the time of Jesus nomos was used in an absolute sense: the law was an absolute in itself and was independent of the covenant. It is fulfilment of the law that determines one's membership of the people of God. Israel no longer saw her special status as due to Yahweh's living self-revelation in the course of her history, but considered this status to rest upon the obedience of those who were righteous in terms of the law (→ Pharisees). Visible observance of the law was what distinguished the true Israel both from non-Jews and from the godless Jewish masses. In other words, the law had assumed a dominant role as mediator between God and man, and had become personified as an intermediary with a hypostasis of its own. The whole of life could be regulated, and was regulated by the law. In Hellenistic Judaism especially, the law came to stand alongside → wisdom, which had likewise come to be seen as having a hypostasis. In this respect the law had become separated from its original setting, namely the → covenant as given by God. Moreover, it could now be presented as universal law, i.e. as universally valid. This was important in the Hellenistic world, where any system of thought had to be able to compete apologetically with existing philosophies. Furthermore, its universality was extended backwards in time. The patriarchs, it was claimed, already knew it, in fact it antedated the whole of creation. By universalizing the law in this way and detaching it from the covenant, Hellenized Jews were able to give it a rational basis and proclaim it as a superior philosophy (→ Command, art. dogma OT). The method they adopted was to allegorize it, which involved cutting it loose from its historical roots.

(b) Similarly, Rabbinic Judaism no longer saw God's self-revelation as tied to the covenant, but rather to the Torah as a covenant ordinance. Thus the Torah came to occupy the place of a "canon within the canon", even before the latter was finally determined; i.e. the Torah became normative over against the other two sections of the OT, namely the Prophets and the Writings. These were held merely to develop what was already germinally present in the Torah. Israel believed that the Torah (identical with the Pentateuch) had been delivered ready-made by God to Moses. God had committed himself to it, but not only so, he is eternally committed to it. Man's life and death hung upon fulfilling its commands, and with it his religious pride and shame (see Lk. 18:9–14). The Torah was regarded as capable of fulfilment. As an aid towards this goal, use was made both of casuistry and of summaries of the law in the form of a few commandments or of one basic commandment. Rabbi Hillel (c. 20 B.C.) instructed a proselyte: "What you do not like, do not do to your neighbour. That is the whole Torah, everything else is merely interpretation; go and study it" (Shab. 31a; cf. SB I 460). The dictum states the negative counterpart of the Golden Rule in Matt. 7:12. Rabbi Hillel also claimed that Amos (5:4) and Hab. (2:4) reduced the Torah to one commandment (Mak. 23b–24a; cf. W. Gutbrod, TDNT IV 1058 f.). In the Judaism of the time of Christ, the study and fulfilment of the Torah were considered to be the way to righteousness and the way to → life (cf. Lk. 10:28).

NT In the NT the noun nomos (191 times) occurs most frequently in Paul: 119 times, predominantly in Rom. (72 times), Gal. (32), 1 Cor. (9). Non-Pauline books where the word occurs fairly frequently are Acts (17 times), Jn. and Heb. (14 each), Jas. (10), Lk. (9), Matt. (8). nomos does not occur in Mk., in the Catholic Epistles apart from Jas., or in Rev. Its infrequent appearance in the Synoptic Gospels should not blind us to the fact that Jesus dealt intensively with the whole problem of the law (cf. Mk. 2:23–28; 10:1–12 and passim).

1. The summaries of Christ's work as given in Jn. 1:17 and Eph. 2:14–18 also apply to his own preaching. In all that he said and did, he removed the law from its mediatorial position and opened up immediate access to God (cf. especially the group of parables in Lk. 15; also 18:9–27; Matt. 11:28–30 and many other synoptic passages).

(a) His testimony to the significance of John the Baptist (Matt. 11:7–19) is enhanced to become an indirect testimony to himself (vv. 11–15): the Baptist is → Elijah come again (v. 14), who brings one divine dispensation to an end, and proclaims the arrival of a new one where the kingdom of God comes directly among men (cf. Mal. 4:5; Matt. 17:10–13; Jn. 1:21; Lk. 1:17). Thus the preaching and teaching of the prophets and of the law reaches its → goal (v. 13) and comes to an end. "The prophets and the law" here are regarded to some extent formally as constituent parts of the OT scriptures, but the main reference is to their content as salvation history. The wording here draws attention not only to the precedence accorded to the prophets over the law, but also to the dynamic view of both: they proclaim, preach, prophesy (prophēteuein; → Prophecy). The parallel passage in Lk. 16:16 makes a point of inserting these words of Jesus into the whole scheme of salvation history: "law and prophets until John" (note the absence of a vb.). From that point onwards the → kingdom of God is proclaimed directly, like the news of great victory (euangelizetai; → Gospel).

Similarly, in the antitheses of the Sermon on the Mount (Matt. 5:21–48) Jesus put an end to all self-satisfaction at having kept individual commandments of the law (vv. 20, 46). He dealt with them radically by pointing out that at root they require absolute conformity to the requirements of the divine majesty in thought as well as in deed (vv. 20, 48). Thus he made the unprecedented claim that what was said in the law to the men of old (vv. 21, 27, 31, 33, 38, 43) is now made out of date once and for all by himself: "But I say unto you . . . ." (v. 22, 28, 32, 34, 39, 44). In the eyes of those who did not acknowledge him as bringing in God's kingdom or recognize his teaching as being the rule of life for the church of the last days, this claim must have made his condemnation for seeking to abolish the law (v. 17) a foregone conclusion.

(b) Jesus makes it clear at this point, however, that his claim was not levelled against the law (Matt. 5:17–19), but against man's self-righteous attitude to the law (vv. 19–20; cf. Paul in Rom. 7:12). He set himself to fulfil in detail the law's demand for a life of utter obedience to God (v. 17; cf. 3:15), as he had done already from his circumcision onwards, and continued to do until his death on the cross. Even his condemnation was in accordance with established Jewish law (cf. Jn. 19:7). The inviolability of the law (Matt. 5:18; cf. Lk. 16:17) likewise determined Christ's attitude in conversation with the teachers of the law (nomikoi), who were specialists in the ethical interpretation of the law, and the theological leaders of the → Pharisees. Jesus shared the view that the law could be summed up in two great commandments (Matt. 22:34–39; cf. Lk. 10:25–28), but he rejected the Pharisees' gradations within the double commandment. (On the two great commandments → Command, art. entolē; → Hear, art. akouō; → Large, Small, art. megas.) Moreover, in his repeated cries of "Woe to you!" (Matt. 23:13–16, 23, 25, 27, 29; cf. Lk. 11:42 ff. 46 f., 52) he condemned their failure to recognize the basic intention of the law, namely → justice, → mercy and → faith (Matt. 23:23).

(c) In the words of Jesus and in the usage of Matt. and Lk. the reference is generally to the whole law as a part of Scripture, without any further delineation of content. (This does not apply, of course, to verbatim quotations from the Torah.) Thus: "the law" (Matt. 5:18; 12:5; Lk. 2:27; 10:26; 16:17); "the law and the prophets" (Matt. 5:17; see above 1 (a)); "the law of the Lord" (Lk. 2:23, 24, 39); "the law of Moses" (Lk. 2:22; cf. also Acts 28:23 ". . . and the prophets"); "Moses and the prophets" (Lk. 24:27). The threefold formula "Moses and the prophets and the psalms" also occurs (Lk. 24:44).

2. Paul, confronted as he was by his own Pharisaic past and by his Jewish and Jewish Christian opponents, developed a theology of the law that is connected historically with the promise and on a personal level with Christ. In doing so, however, he is far from regarding himself as a second teacher of Christianity either in addition to, or in place of Jesus. His teaching remains within the limits previously laid down by Jesus; he merely brings out the basic significance of Christ's work, now completed in the → cross and → resurrection. As Lk. 10:25–37 shows, it is possible to keep the law fully (v. 37) only by being in fellowship with him, listening to his loving voice, and → following him. In the same way, after his resurrection, it is only the man who is "in Christ" who can keep the law, not with any thought of works-righteousness, but rather out of gratitude and in the liberty of one set free to love and obey. Paul also follows Jesus (see above 1 (a)) in denying the absoluteness of the law and the idea that it alone was the way to salvation (see below (a)–(d)). He took this position, however, not because of any emotional complexes arising from his being a converted Pharisee (cf. Phil. 3:5–11), but because he saw the uniqueness and newness of Christ. As the → Apostle to the Gentiles, he has the prophetic insight to realize that without a comprehensive theology of law as a background, the universal claims of the → gospel would lack all justification and credibility (see Rom. and Gal.).

Paul used nomos for the Pentateuch (Rom. 3:21b; Gal. 4:21) and for the whole of Scripture (Rom. 3:19, a generic term for the quotations of vv. 10–18, taken from all three parts of Scripture: 1 Cor. 14:21 citing Isa. 28:11 f. and Deut. 28:49), but especially for the Mosaic law, and the Decalogue in particular (Rom. 2:14a; 2:17; 3:28; 7:12; Gal. 5:3) in its demand for unconditional obedience from the Jews. Rom. 2:14b is to be translated "The Gentiles are law to themselves" (RSV), because the implication is that God has given them the law in another way (cf. v. 15). ([Ed.] Karl Barth has argued, however, that this passage refers to Gentile converts who, in fulfilment of the prophecy of the new covenant in Jer. 31:33, have the law "written on their hearts" [cf. CD I, 2, 304; II, 2, 242, 604; IV, I, 33, 369, 395; J. B. Souček, "Zur Exegese von Röm. 2:14 ff." in Antwort. Karl Barth zum siebzigsten Geburtstag, ed. E. Wolf, C. von Kirschbaum, R. Frey, 1956, 99–113].) Paul also uses nomos to indicate a part of the law (e.g. marriage law, as it affects the woman, Rom. 7:2b), and in the metaphorical sense, mostly defined by a genitive (e.g. Rom. 3:28, divine commands in the widest sense; Rom. 7:23c, 25b; 8:2; Gal. 6:2, genitive of authorship; Rom. 7:23 a and b, regular principle). Paul often personifies the law: it speaks (Rom. 3:19); it says (Rom. 7:7; 1 Cor. 9:8); it works (Rom. 4:15); it rules (Rom. 7:1). In doing this, he is not subscribing to the idea of law as a hypostasis (see above OT 7), but he means that the law is the mouthpiece of the living God.

Paul views the law against the background of the → cross of Christ. (a) In his death on the cross Jesus upheld the law's condemnation of all men. He became a curse (Gal. 3:13; cf. Deut. 21:23). He was made sin, yet only as the representative for the sins of others (2 Cor. 5:21; cf.: "he was reckoned with the transgressors", meta anomōn, Lk. 22:37; Mk. 15:28; both quoting Isa. 53:12). These statements indicate a deliberate, vicarious act by Jesus on our behalf.

(b) At the same time he fulfils all the obedience required by the law (Phil. 2:8). Paul's addition of the words "even death on a cross" in v. 8b to what was probably an already existing hymn stresses Christ's complete oneness with those enslaved under the law. (On this hymn see R. P. Martin, Carmen Christi: Phil. ii. 5–11 in Recent Interpretation and in the Setting of Early Christian Worship, 1967; → Empty, art. kenos.) Now that he has fulfilled the law, salvation rests not on our meeting certain conditions, but upon the simple fact that the law has now been fulfilled (Rom. 3:31).

(c) Having → faith, the Christian is no longer under the law (1 Cor. 9:20b). He is free to be "as one outside the law [anomos] to those outside the law [anomois]" (note the play on words in the four-fold use of this adj., v. 21). He is also free to fulfil the law in → love (Rom. 13:10b; Gal. 5:14, 22), to be as one under the law (1 Cor. 9:20) to those under the law, i.e. the Jews. The author and inspirer of such love is the Holy → Spirit of God and of Christ, who translates the Christian from the realm of the law and the → flesh with its resulting → sin and → death (Rom. 8:4; Gal. 5:18, 22).

(d) Since Christ is the end and → goal (telos) of the law for believers (Rom. 10:4), Paul can look back from his vantage-point, as it were, and describe the law, both as having no more part to play in salvation, and at the same time as having a valid function apart from Christ (Rom. 5:20 f.; Gal. 3:19–29). The law, which is holy and good (Rom. 7:12), was one of God's gifts to Israel (Rom. 9:4, here nomothesia means the giving of the law). It came in (Rom. 5:20), being introduced by God into the history of sinful man (Gal. 3:19) in order to "increase the trespass" (Rom. 5:20; cf. 7:8–13; 1 Cor. 15:56b; → Command, art. entolē NT 2 (a)), and in order to "confine" men under law and sin, with no prospect of escape until Christ should come (Gal. 3:22 f.) – a dreadful thought, were it not for God's superabundant grace (Rom. 5:20b) and his gift of sonship (Gal. 3:25 ff.)!

(e) The individual who stands before God "under the law" (en nomō, Rom. 2:12b) has to reckon with the following consequences: the law demands entire obedience (Gal. 3:10, quoting Deut. 27:26); only he who does the law will live and be justified (Gal. 3:12b, quoting Lev. 18:5; Rom. 2:13b), while he who does not is condemned (Gal. 3:10; Rom. 2:12b). No one is justified before God merely by hearing or knowing the law (Rom. 2:12, 13a). To be justified one needs to be made alive, which is precisely where the law fails (Gal. 3:21; Rom. 7:9 f.); only those who have faith in Christ are made alive (Gal. 3:26 f.). Thus law is linked with → sin, and → faith with → promise. However, the law is not contrary to the promise (Gal. 3:17), rather it has an educational part to play, both within redemptive history and in individual experience, driving men to Christ and to faith in him. The law is a paidagōgos, "custodian" (Gal. 3:24, 25; RSV). The word means lit. "boy-leader". The paidagōgos was usually a slave whose duty it was to take the pupil to school and supervise his conduct generally (Arndt, 608; → Teach, art.

paideuō). The law produces the startling realization of sin which does not save (Rom. 3:20; 7:7); but it calls forth a cry for help in one's lost condition (Rom. 7:24), a cry which can be answered effectively only by Jesus Christ (Rom. 7:25).

(f) Even the man who sins "without the law", i.e. one before Christ came, or outside the bounds of Christianity, does not conform to the will of God (Rom. 3:23; note the twofold use in Rom. 2:12a of the adv. anomōs, found only here in the NT). Outside the law men are judged by God according to whether they have done right (Rom. 2:6 f.), for the Gentiles can know what is good, the work of the law being written in their hearts (v. 15; cf. 1:32). Thus a Jew who does the law is in the same position as a Gentile who does good works (vv. 13, 7), while a Jew who sins under the law is in the same position as all men, whether Jew or Gentile, who do evil (vv. 12b, 9). Whether they live within the Jewish law, or outside, it both groups will meet with the same → judgment, without respect of persons (vv. 11 f., 16), according to their works. Destruction and death await all men (Rom. 3:23, 27; 7:10, 11c, 13), for no one has put into practice his knowledge of what is good (3:23; 7:18 f., 21). All men, therefore, depend for salvation upon the work of Christ which has to be appropriated by faith (Rom. 3:25 f., 29 f.), without the works of the law (v. 28), and also without the participation (chōris) of the law (v. 21). The words "But now" introduce a totally new situation.

(g) This indicates the fundamental weakness of the law, namely that its only answer to sin is to forbid it and condemn it. Law cannot overcome sin, because it depends on the co-operation of the → flesh, which is weak (Rom. 8:3). Here "the flesh" means would-be autonomous human nature, incapable of obedience. The law is part of the fabric of this world (→ stoicheia), and therefore cannot lead us beyond it. What the law demands can be wrought only by the Spirit on the basis of the work of Christ (v. 4; see above (e)). The law is essentially a letter that kills, while the life of the new covenant is the → Spirit who makes alive (Rom. 7:6; 2 Cor. 3:6).

(h) The commandment to love, which can be fulfilled in the Spirit (see above (c) and (g)), can now be called the "law of Christ" (Gal. 6:2; cf. 1 Cor. 9:21: to be ennomos of Christ, to be under the law of Christ). It is the Torah of the Lord, which he himself has lived out. Now, on raising men to spiritual life, he can require of them its fulfilment.

(i) Occasionally the law is invoked as a secondary authority, in order to provide scriptural support for Paul's injunctions to the Christian church. In 1 Cor. 9:8 ff. he makes allegorical use of Deut. 25:4 to back up his claim that, as an apostle, he had the right to be materially supported by the church. In 1 Cor. 14:21 he combines quotations from Deut. 28:49 and Isa. 28:11 f. in order to regulate speaking with tongues, and in 1 Cor. 14:34 he refers to Gen. 3:16 to support his command that women be silent in the church, a command which is probably not meant to apply generally, but specifically to speaking with tongues: women are not to push in themselves forward in this matter. Basically, however, the life of the church is controlled not by the principle: "Anything contrary to the law is sin", but rather by "Whatever does not proceed from faith is sin" (Rom. 14:23).

3. In Eph. (which some scholars count as deutero-Pauline) and the Pastoral Epistles there are statements which are in complete accord with Paul's theology of the law, but also some others which show that controversy had now arisen over the law's function and which prima facie uphold the law as a regulative principle.

(a) Eph. 2:15 is fully in line with Paul's doctrine of the law (see above 2 (b) and especially → Command art. dogma NT).

(b) In the struggle against (gnostic?) libertinism and asceticism 1 Tim. 1:8 repeats the assertion of Rom. 7:12 that the law is good. But whereas Rom. develops the rôle of the law in provoking and convicting of sin, 1 Tim. 1:9 f. enumerates various categories of sin condemned by the law. Christ has appeared "to deliver us from all lawlessness [anomia]" (Tit. 2:14, quoting Ps. 130:8). The law is "a rule of life which is self-evident to the respectable man; the others [the anomoi, the lawless] experience it rightly as compulsion" (M. Dibelius, Die Pastoralbriefe, ed. H. Conzelmann, HNT 13, 1966[4] on 1 Tim. 1:9). The "just" in this verse no longer appears to be a man justified by → faith (cf. Rom. 1:17; Gal. 3:11). In Rom. Paul did not say that the law is good when it is used lawfully (nomimōs); for his position regarding the law's absolute holiness, and also regarding the use of the law, see Rom. 7:12 ff. The false teachers of the law (nomodidaskaloi, 1 Tim. 1:7) are those who preach antinomianism (as here) and also those who lead the church astray with their ascetic demands (1 Tim. 4:1–3). This passage is thoroughly Pauline in its exhortation to receive God's good gifts of creation in a spirit of faith and thanksgiving, and not to stand aloof from them in the interests of certain ascetic regulations. Like 1 Tim., Tit. 3:9 recommends the avoidance of quarrels about the law (machas nomikas). The Gk. background is apparent in the use of nomikos, lawyer (Tit. 3:13) and of nomimōs, according to the rules of the contest (2 Tim. 2:5). In the apocalyptic section 2 Thess. 2:1–12 the fact that Christ's return has not yet occurred is explained in Jewish apocalyptic fashion as follows: the man of lawlessness (anthrōpos tēs anomias, v. 3) or the lawless one (anomos, v. 8) must first appear, and the mystery of lawlessness, although already at work, is not yet revealed (v. 7; cf. Matt. 24:12; see A. Oepke, Die Briefe an die Thessalonicher, NTD 8, 1965[10] ad loc.; L. Morris, The Epistles of Paul to the Thessalonians, NLC, 1959, 217–32; → Antichrist; → Present: The Parousia Eschatology in the NT).

4. In his logical development of Pauline thought the writer of Heb. sees the law, especially the sacrificial law, as a manifestation of the old → covenant, inferior to and now superseded by the new covenant (8:13; 10:9b). There are extensive passages proving the superiority of the single, once-for-all → sacrifice of Christ, the great High Priest, over the offerings of the OT priests, a sacrifice, moreover, in which he himself is both the offering and the offerer (4:14–5:10; 7:1–10, 18; cf. also the Moses-Christ typology of 3:1–6).

Thus in working out his teaching on inferiority and superiority, the writer puts nomos in the negative part of his comparisons: cf. 7:5 with 7:6–8 (→ Melchizedek as a type of Christ, and the contrast "those descendants of Levi who receive the priestly office . . . but this man . . ."); 7:12 with 7:13 ff.; 7:16a with 7:15, 16b, "not according to a legal requirement concerning bodily descent"; 7:19a with 19b, "the law made nothing perfect . . . on the other hand, a better hope"; 7:28a with 7:28b, "the law men appointed in their weakness . . . but the word of the oath . . . appoints a Son"; 8:4 f. with 8:5b and 6, "priests who offer gifts according to the law . . . serve as a copy and shadow. . . . a more excellent ministry . . . a better covenant . . . better promises"; 9:19 ff. with 9:24 ff., the repeated sacrifice of the high priest with the "once for all" sacrifice of Christ; 10:1 with 10:2b, "offered year after year . . . once cleansed"; 10:8 with 10:9a, 10, offerings made according to the law but not desired . . . the readiness of Christ to do the will of God.

The vb. nomotheteō, to give laws (pass., to receive laws) is similarly used to present the same antithesis: the people of the old covenant received the law under the Levitical priesthood (7:11), while Christ is the mediator of a better covenant, legally instituted on the basis of better promises (8:6).

As in Paul, the overcoming of lawlessness (anomia) by Christ is the ground on which the new covenant is based: the Son has hated lawlessness (1:9, quoting Ps. 45:7), and the Holy Spirit, speaking through the prophets, promised that one day it would be finally forgiven; that day has now come (10:17, quoting Jer. 31:34). Since the new covenant is now a reality, the writer can state that the law never made anything perfect (7:19; 10:1c), and that the OT sacrifices are finished: "where there is forgiveness, there is no longer any offering for sin" (10:18).

5. In the Gospel of Jn. Christ and the Jews clash vehemently over the question of the law. For Jesus claims personally to reveal God, whereas they represent the rebellious "world". They measure him by the law (7:23, 52; 8:5; 12:34, where passages from the Pss. [110:4] and the Prophets [Isa. 9:7; Ezek. 37:25; Dan. 7:14] are treated as law; 19:7), and he in return measures them by the law. He has an absolute knowledge of it, expounds it and uses it to expose their hypocrisy (7:19; 8:17; 10:34; 15:25; in both of the last named passages Ps. 82:6 and 35:19 are called "law"). These disputes are thought by Bultmann and others to reflect the controversy with Jewish gnosticism on the part of the author and the churches he represents (cf. R. Bultmann, The Gospel of John, 1971, ad loc.; but → Knowledge, art. ginōskō).

The Gospel of Jn. develops the basic thesis (1:17) that, as compared with the law given by → Moses, the → knowledge and → truth revealed in Jesus Christ bring the full revelation of God. (Bultmann, op. cit., 79, points out the similarity here to Pauline thought.) Christ's repeated use of "your law" (8:17; 10:34) and "their law" shows that the Son is not subject to the law. He charged the Jews with appealing to Moses merely in self-justification; not one of them kept the law (7:19; cf. Rom. 2:17–24). When it comes to healing and forgiveness, he cut through the pedantry and complacency with which they treated the law (7:23; 8:5 ff.). The passage about the woman taken in adultery (7:53–8:11), which is a later insertion in the Gospel of Jn. and is missing from the best manuscripts, clearly reveals the tension between Jesus and his opponents who were zealous for the law. He used the law or the "writings" of the OT to support his testimony to himself (8:17; cf. Deut. 19:15; 10:34; cf. Ps. 82:6). The Jews, on the other hand, were prevented from recognizing God's present revelation in Christ, the → scripture being to them nothing but the letter, i.e. rules and regulations (5:39; 12:34; cf. Ps. 110:4; Isa. 9:7; Ezek. 37:25; Dan. 7:14).

The extent to which the handling of the law had become a matter for the specialists and therefore something to be exploited, is shown by the debate in the Sanhedrin after an abortive attempt to arrest Jesus. "The people do not know the law" (7:49), say the Pharisees, while one of their number, Nicodemus, has to point out their own disregard of the law (v. 51). (On the well-attested scorn of rabbinic scholars for the common people of the land see SB II 494–521; → People, art. ochlos.)

The last legal debate (before Pilate) over the fate of Jesus demonstrates the utter paradox of his opponents' enslavement to the law. As an occupied people, the Jews were not permitted to carry out the death penalty laid down in Lev. 24:16; and Exod. 20:7 (cf. Jn. 5:18). By demanding that Christ's accusers should judge him according to their own law, Pilate adroitly extracts from them admission of their hatred and also of their impotence (18:31). Only by appealing to their own law, the law of Moses (19:7) can the Jews get their prisoner put to death, albeit by a method which treats their law with contempt. By thus rejecting the revelation of Christ, however, they merely make his willing sacrifice a reality. At the same time the judgment of the law falls not only upon him, but upon them (15:2 ff.), as Jesus has warned them it would (cf. Ps. 69:5; on the condemnation of Jesus as "King of the Jews" → King, art. basileus, NT 1 (c)).

6. In 1 Jn. 3 and 4 the equation of sin with lawlessness or transgression of the law (anomia) occurs twice. This does not imply some new legal ethic, but combats what many scholars regard as the gnostic heresy of sinlessness (see 1:8, 10; cf. 2 Pet. 2:1 f., 8, a polemic against the type of life characterized by "lawless deeds [anomois ergois]"). 1 Jn. distinguishes between "sin unto death" (5:16b) which is apostasy from true faith in Jesus, the Son of God (5:1–12), and "sin not unto death" (5:16a and 17), which can be confessed and forgiven (1:9). He who remains in the true faith acknowledges that he needs forgiveness for his transgressions against the law (anomia), and that such forgiveness is available to him. For him everything depends on abiding in Christ (2:1b; 3:6), he then keeps the → commandments and does what is well-pleasing to God (3:22 ff.; cf. W. Marxsen, Introduction to the New Testament, 1968, 262 ff.).

7. James uses twice the apparently contradictory phrase "the law of liberty [nomos eleutherias]" (1:25; 2:12), both times in connection with his peculiar emphasis on not merely hearing but doing the word (1:22). The addition of the adj. teleios (perfect) in 1:25 shows a background of Jewish thought (cf. Ps. 19:7), while the combination "law of liberty" in Gk. has a mainly Stoic origin. The phrase probably comes from the Jewish-Christian diaspora and refers chiefly to those collections of Christ's sayings, such as the Sermon on the Mount (Matt. 5–7) and the Discourse on the Plain (Lk. 6:20 ff.), which were regarded as the rule of life. Any man putting them into practice was thereby set free from a literal observance of the OT law (see M. Dibelius, Der Brief des Jakobus, KEK 15, 1964[11], 110–113, 138). On both occasions the reward of blessedness is promised to him who obeys the law of liberty. The preceding context and 2:13 make it clear that deeds of → mercy (art. eleos NT 5 (b)) are the chief element in the law of liberty. Jas. also calls this law the "royal law [nomos basilikos]" (2:8), which can be summarized in the command to love one's neighbour. ("Royal" need not necessarily refer to Jesus the King; it may equally refer simply to the grandeur of this commandment; see M. Dibelius, op. cit., 32 ff.) He who keeps this commandment is free from the fear of having to keep the whole of the Jewish law by a minute observance of every single commandment (2:10 f.; cf. Gal. 3:10). It is still true, however, that he who rides roughshod over this royal law by showing partiality will finally fall under "judgment without mercy", exactly as if he had not kept the OT law (2:13a). The prohibition of slander and judging (4:11 f.) has its origins both in the OT (Lev. 19:16) and in the NT (Matt. 7:1–5; cf. Rom. 2:2), like many of James' sayings. The meaning of "law" will then depend on how it is taken, being either an injunction in the OT sense, or alternatively "the law of liberty", a summary of Christ's injunctions (see above). The import remains the same, however. To speak ill of a brother (a fellow church-member) is to speak ill of the law and to sit in judgment upon it. Again, man is meant to be a doer of the law (see above) but the lawgiver (nomothetēs) and judge are one, and a man who judges another has ultimately to do with him whose judgment is final (4:12; cf. Rom. 14:4). The twofold use of "one" for the divine name (common in Judaism) with the predicate ho dynamenos ("who is able . . .") enables the reader to identify the "lawgiver" as both the Father and the Son. (On the attitude of James and Paul to justification, faith and works → Faith, art. pistis NT 4.)

8. Acts gives a vivid picture of the controversies over the law which arose in the early church. On the one hand, there were the Jews and Jewish Christians who remained true to the law, and on the other, Hellenistic Christians who thought in universal terms (see above 3; also E. Haenchen, The Acts of the Apostles, 1971, 100–3, 112 f., 267 f., 362 f., 440–72). With the exception of 15:5 and 23:29 all references to the law are found in discourses which, while not having the nature of purely independent evidence, accord well with the author's historical approach and bring both persons and situations into sharp relief. There is a striking parallel between the accusations and prosecution which the Hellenistic Christian leaders had to face, and the treatment meted out to Jesus. To that extent the disciples are indeed not above their master (Matt. 10:23 ff.).

The charges levelled against them were as follows: speaking against the → temple and the law (6:13, against Stephen, see also v. 11); persuading people to worship God in a way that is "contrary to the law [para ton nomon]" (18:13, against Paul in Corinth); teaching "all men everywhere" against the people, the temple and the law (21:28, against Paul in Jerusalem; cf. also 21:21). For similar charges concerning the temple see Matt. 26:61 par. Mk. 14:58; 24:2 par. Mk. 13:2; Jn. 2:19–21; and concerning the law: Matt. 5:17 f.; Rom. 3:31. In the course of his defence, Stephen asserted that the temple is not God's dwelling place (7:48 f.) and went so far as to charge the Jews with not keeping the law (7:53; cf. Rom. 3:19 f.; Jn. 7:19). This so provoked the Jews that he was immediately lynched, being stoned to death before his trial was properly over (7:57 ff.). Paul, on the other hand, when defending himself against his Jewish accusers before Festus, opened his speech with the assertion that he had committed no offence either against the law of the Jews or against the temple (25:8).

This is in line with the policy he had adopted ever since his recent arrival in Jerusalem. Having welcomed him to the city with joy, the Jewish Christians pointed out that they had remained zealous for the law (21:20), and referred to the unfavourable reports about him which were in circulation, the essence of which was that he taught the Jews to forsake → Moses, → circumcision and Jewish custom (→ ethos NT). Since his life was in danger, they advised him to show the Jews and Jewish Christians that he was true to the law (phylassōn ton nomon, v. 24) by undertaking the discharge of four destitute Nazirites, an act of charity considered particularly pious among the Jews. This advice to Paul, and the fact that they insisted once again that Gentile Christians should observe the so-called apostolic decree (cf. 15:28 f.), show the efforts made by the Jerusalem church leadership to maintain the utmost loyalty to the Jews and at the same time not to lose contact with Gentile Christianity as promoted by Paul (on 21:15–26 see Haenchen, op. cit., 606–18).

Paul complied with the request of the Jerusalem church and behaved as a devout Jew (21:26), but being recognized again by Jews from Asia Minor, who protested publicly (21:27 f.) against his missionary activities, he was very nearly lynched. Claudius Lysias, the tribune of the occupying forces, permitted him to address the people after his arrest, whereupon Paul emphasized his upbringing in the law (22:3) and also Ananias' loyalty to the law (22:12; cf. his speeches when defending himself before Felix and Agrippa, 24:14; 26:5). The high priest who had him struck on the mouth during interrogation was accused by Paul of violating the law (paranomein; see Lev. 19:15a; cf. Jn. 18:22 f.) while administering the law (23:3).

This positive attitude of Paul to the law is explained by his freedom from the law, as set out in 1 Cor. 9:19 ff. (see above 2 (c)). He knew that he was in the service of the gospel, and saw no inconsistency between his present attitude and his insistence, when writing from Corinth to Rome, that in God's purposes of salvation the law has now come to an end (Rom. 10:4; cf. Rom. 11:13 f.). The picture of Paul which emerges from the Acts is of an apostle who, on the one hand, opposed the Jewish Christians in their demand that Gentile converts be obliged to practise circumcision and to keep the law (15:18), but who, on the other hand, delivered the terms of the apostolic decree to the churches (16:4; cf. 15:28 f.), and even had his (half-Jewish, half-Greek) assistant Timothy circumcised out of regard for the Jews (16:3). When preaching in the synagogue at Pisidian Antioch, Paul appeared to present Christ as merely completing the justification left unfinished by the law (13:38). Alternatively, we may see it as Lk.'s intention to delineate in broad terms Paul's preaching of justification as distinguished from the law of Moses (cf. E. Haenchen, op. cit., 412).

It is noteworthy that the Roman authorities tended to reject the charge of total illegality levelled against the preaching of the early Christians and to treat such matters as mere controversies over Jewish law: Gallio (18:15); Claudius Lysias (23:29); cf. Pilate (Jn. 18:31).

9. For the view of Christian faith as a "new law" in the post-apostolic period, see → Commandment, art. entolē, NT 4, 5. H.-H. Esser στοιχεῖα (stoicheia), elements, rudiments; στοιχέω (stoicheō), be in line with, hold to; συστοιχέω (systoicheō), stand in the same line, correspond to, conform to.

στοιχεῖα

CL The root stichos or stoichos means row, rank, line, especially battle line (since Herodotus, 5th cent. B.C.), but also line of verse (cf. the words distich, acrostic). From this root came the vbs. stichaomai, dep. mid., and stoicheō, to be in a row or line, to belong to a row, to remain in a line, to march in rank and file (found in literature from the beginning of the 4th cent.); or (metaphorically), to step into line (by giving an undertaking); also the noun to stoicheion: especially the gnomon on a sundial, or the shadow on a sundial, the length of the shadow, or metaphorically, a part of a word (i.e. letter, syllable), component part of the universe (i.e. element), hence original component (i.e. beginning, foundation, etc.). All these meanings are in evidence by the beginning of the 4th cent. B.C. The derivative systoicheō (from the 2nd half of the 4th cent.) has an intensive meaning: to be in the same line, to keep in line.

OT In the LXX the noun occurs only in the Apocrypha, and then only 3 times (always plur.). In two places (Wis. 7:17; 19:18) the meaning is "elements of the universe", "matter", and in the other (4 Macc. 12:13) "the substance of human life". The vb. stoicheō is found only in Eccl. 11:6, in the sense to succeed, to prosper; the Heb. equivalent kāšēr has the further meaning to be fitting (cf. Est. 8:5; see above CL).

NT 1. In the NT the vb. occurs only 5 times (once in Acts and 4 times in Paul). Acts 21:24c gives the clearest sense: "will see that you too are in the ranks as one who keeps the law [stoicheis kai autos phylassōn ton nomon]" (G. Delling, TDNT VII 668; → nomos NT 8). In other words, the reference is to leading a closely regulated life, living according to definite rules. This is also shown by Phil. 3:16: "Only let us hold true to what we have attained [stoichein]." This is the earliest and shortest reading; the other readings elaborate on the common standard by which our lives are to be lived, or the need for a common outlook. In Gal. 6:16 Paul uses the word "canon" to describe the rule just given in v. 15, and links it with the vb.: "keep to this rule of life" (RSV: "walk by this rule"). Gal. 5:25b should accordingly be paraphrased: "conduct our lives in conformity with the Spirit" (cf. H. Schlier, "order our lives according to the Spirit," Der Brief an die Galater, KEK 7, 1951[11], ad loc.). In Rom. 4:12 the idea of constancy in a given direction is provided by the context: "follow in the footsteps of the faith of our father Abraham" (cf. Arndt, 777). The compound systoicheō (Gal. 4:25) concludes one of the two lines of descent from → Abraham in vv. 22 ff., that namely of slavery: Hagar belongs to the same line (systoichei) as the present → Jerusalem. Sinai, the mountain on which the law was given, is here linked with stoicheō just as "law" is in Acts 21:24.

2. The noun is used exclusively in the epistles of the NT (7 times, always in the plur.; 4 times in Paul, once in Heb. and twice in 2 Pet.). The two apocalyptic passages, 2 Pet. 3:10, 12, are the simplest to interpret: the reference to "the elements" (v. 10) means earth, water and air, of which only the first is named explicitly, the last being understood as "the heavens". When the world is consumed these elements will be dissolved or will melt (vv. 10, 12) in the primeval element, fire. The meaning of Heb. 5:12 is also clear, because of the presence of archē, → beginning. The linking of these two words in ta stoicheia tēs archēs, "first principles" or "rudimentary elements" has a derogatory ring which is further emphasized by the reminder that the readers need milk and not solid food. The recipients of Heb. are not familiar with even the first principles of the faith. The elementary doctrines are further defined in 6:1 ff.

In the case of Gal. 4:3, 9 and Col. 2:8, 20 it is a disputed question whether or not the stoicheia tou kosmou, the "elements of the world", are angels, demons, gods, i.e. personified forces as taught by a certain gnostic heresy. Most commentators hold this to be the case (cf. G. Delling, TDNT VII 684 ff., footnotes 95–108). But Delling himself takes the passage in Gal. 4 to refer to the Torah with its statutes and the world of false gods which the readers once served. In Col. the expression refers to religion before and outside Christ. However, the question is relatively unimportant, since the hierarchy of beings taught by gnosticism, while partly syncretistic from the viewpoint of the history of religion, was in fact the product of a philosophico-religious view of the world and of existence (cf. H. Jonas, The Gnostic Religion, 1963²; → Knowledge).

The important point is that in Gal. 4:1–11 Paul has nothing positive to say about "the elements of the world"; he knows they have been overcome by Christ the Redeemer. Compared with him they are weak and beggarly (v. 9; → poor, art. ptōchos NT 3 (b)) and not the gods (v. 8) the Gentiles believed them to be before conversion. Even the law is reckoned as among the elements of the world (cf. the 1st person plur., vv. 3, 5) and hence is declared null and void. Thus "the elements of the world" cover all the things in which man places his trust apart from the living God revealed in Christ; they become his gods, and he becomes their slave (cf. Luther's exposition of the First Commandment in the Large Catechism).

In Col. 2:8, human tradition and "the elements of the world" both come under the heading of "philosophy" which seeks to prey upon men (sylagōgein). Such "philosophy", however, has long since been defeated by Christ and has appeared as a captive in his triumphal procession (vv. 10–15; on the Col. heresy cf. G. Bornkamm, Gesammelte Aufsätze, I, 1958², 139–86; M. D. Hooker, "Were there false teachers in Colossae?" in B. Lindars and S. S. Smalley, eds., Christ and Spirit in the New Testament. Studies in honour of C. F. D. Moule, 1973, 315–31). Just as in Gal. 4:3, 5 "the elements of the world" and the law are combined, so in Col. 2:20 "the elements of the world" are disapprovingly linked with "regulations" by the word dogmatizein (→ Command, art. dogma NT 1 (b) and 3). He who has died with Christ (v. 20) has nothing further to do with them and so is freed from the burdens they would impose on his day-to-day life (vv. 21 ff.; on the new life in Christ, see 3:1). "The worship of the elements of the world is based on the assumption that the problem of life is both ultimate and insoluble. The early Christians, however, believed that they had the answer, and that it lay in the character and work of God" (E. Lohmeyer, Excursus "Elemente der Welt", Die Briefe an die Philipper, an die Kolosser und an Philemon, KEK 9, 1956¹¹, 103 f.).

H.-H. Esser

→ Command, → Covenant, → Fullness, → Goal, → Gospel, → Israel, → Moses, → Promise, → Prophet, → Righteousness, → Teach, → Work

On law in the OT and in the ancient world:
(a). A. Alt, "The Origins of Israelite Law", Essays on Old Testament History and Religion, 1966, 79–132; H. Cazelles, "Law in the Old Testament", EBT II 480, 84; D. Daube, Studies in Biblical Law, 1947; W. D. Davies, Torah in the Messianic Age and for the Age to Come, 1952; O. Eissfeldt, The Old Testament: An Introduction, 1965, 155–241; I. Engell, "The Pentateuch", Critical Essays on the Old Testament, 1970, 50–67; Z. W. Falk and H. J. Wolff, "Private Law", in S. Safrai, M. Stern, D. Flusser and W. C. van Unnik, eds., The Jewish People in the First Century, 1974, 504–60; R. K. Harrison, Introduction to the Old Testament, 1970, 493–662; M. Jastrow, Dictionary of the Talmud, 1930; H. Kleinknecht and W. Gutbrod, nomos etc., TDNT IV 1022–59; H. Jonas, The Gnostic Religion, 1963²; L. Koehler, Old Testament Theology, 1957, 107–10; B. Lindars, "Torah in Deuteronomy", in P. R. Ackroyd and B. Lindars, eds., Words and Meanings: Essays Presented to David Winton Thomas, 1968, 117–36; H. Miskotte, When the Gods are Silent, 1967; E. Nielsen, The Ten Commandments in New Perspective, SBT Second Series 7, 1968; M. Noth, The Laws in the Pentateuch and Other Studies, 1966; G. Oestborn, Tora in the Old Testament, 1945; A. Phillips, Ancient Israel's Criminal Law: A New Approach to the Decalogue, 1970; G. von Rad, Old Testament Theology, I, 1962, 187–279; II, 1965, 388–409; and The Problem of the Hexateuch and Other Essays, 1966; J. J. Stamm and M. E. Andrew, The Ten Commandments in Recent Research, SBT Second Series 2, 1967; R. de Vaux, Ancient Israel: Its Life and Institutions, 1961, 143–63; J. Weingreen, "The Deuteronomic Legislator – A Proto-Rabbinic Type", in J. I. Durham and J. R. Porter, eds., Proclamation and Presence: Old Testament Essays in Honour of Gwynne Henton Davies, 1970, 102–32; revised in From Bible to Mishna, 1976; W. Zimmerli, The Law and the Prophets: A Study of the Meaning of the Old Testament, 1965.

(b). J. Begrich, Thorah, BZAW 66, 1936; G. Bertram, "Zur Bedeutung der Religion der Septuaginta in der hellenistischen Welt", TLZ 92, 1967, 245 ff.; H. Cazelles, Études sur le Code de l'Alliance, 1946; A. Dünner, Gerechtigkeit nach dem Alten Testament, 1963; O. Eissfeldt, "Das Gesetz ist zwischeneingekommen", TLZ 91, 1966, 1 ff.; C. Feucht, Untersuchungen zum Heiligkeitsgesetz, 1963; R. Hentschke, "Gesetz und Eschatologie in der Verkündigung der Propheten", Zeitschrift für evangelische Ethik 4, 1960, 46 ff.; F. Horst, Gottes Recht. Gesammelte Studien zum Recht im Alten Testament, 1961; H. Jonas, Gnosis und spätantiker Geist, I, 1964³; II, 1, 1954; B. Reicke, Die zehn Worte in Geschichte und Gegenwart. Zählung und Bedeutung der Gebote in den verschiedenen Konfessionen, Beiträge zur Geschichte der biblischen Exegese 13, 1973; R. Rendtorff, Die Gesetze in der Priesterschrift, 1963²; H. Graf Reventlow, Das Heiligkeitsgesetz, 1961; D. Rössler, Gesetz und Geschichte. Untersuchungen zur Theologie der jüdischen Apokalyptik und der pharisäischen Orthodoxie, 1962²; J. Schreiner, Die zehn Gebote im Leben des Gottesvolkes. Dekalogforschung und Verkündigung, 1966; E. Würthwein, "Der Sinn des Gesetzes im Alten Testament", ZTK 55, 1958, 255 ff.; W. Zimmerli, "Das Gesetz im Alten Testament", TLZ 85, 1960, 481 ff.

On law in the NT:

(a). L. Baeck "The Faith of Paul", Journal of Jewish Studies 3, 1952, 93–110; R. Banks, "Matthew's Understanding of the Law: Authenticity and Interpretation in Matthew 5:17–20", JBL 93, 1974, 226–42; Jesus and the Law in the Synoptic Tradition, Society for New Testament Studies Monograph Series 28, 1976; and "The Eschatological Role of Law in Pre- and Post-Christian Jewish Thought", in R. Banks, ed., Reconciliation and Hope: New Testament Essays on Atonement and Eschatology Presented to L. L. Morris on his 60th Birthday, 1964, 173–85; R. S. Barbour, "Loyalty and Law in New Testament Times", SJT 11, 1958, 337–51; G. Barth, "Matthew's Understanding of the Law", in G. Bornkamm, G. Barth and H. J. Held, Tradition and Interpretation in Matthew, 1963, 58–164; P. Bläser, "Law in the New Testament", EBT II 185–95; G. Bornkamm, Early Christian Experience, 1969; and Paul, 1971; B. H. Branscomb, Jesus and the Law of Moses, 1930; F. F. Bruce, "Paul and the Law of Moses", BJRL 57, 1974–5, 259–279; R. Bultmann, "Christ the End of the Law", Essays Philosophical and Theological, 1955, 36–66; and The Gospel of John, 1971; C. E. B. Cranfield, "St. Paul and the Law", SJT 17, 1964, 43–68; and The Epistle to the Romans, ICC, I, 1975; W. D. Davies, Law in the Messianic Age, 1952; Paul and Rabbinic Judaism, 1955²; "Matthew 5:17, 18", Christian Origins and Judaism, 1962, 31–66; The Setting of the Sermon on the Mount, 1964; and The Sermon on the Mount, 1966; G. Delling, stoicheō etc., TDNT VII 666–87; J. D. M. Derrett, "Law in the New Testament", ZNW 56, 1965, 184 ff.; and Law in the New Testament, 1970; C. H. Dodd, "Natural Law in the Bible", Theology 49, 1946, 130–33, 161–67 (reprinted in New Testament Studies, 1953, 129–43); "ennomos Christou", More New Testament Studies, 1968; 134–48 (first published in Studia Paulina, in honorem Johannis de Zwaan, 1953); and Gospel and Law: The Relation of Faith and Ethics in Early Christianity (Bampton Lectures in America, 1950), 1951; J. W. Drane, Paul - Libertine or Legalist? A Study in the Theology of the Major Pauline Epistles, 1975; A. Ehrhardt, "Christian Baptism and Roman Law", The Framework of the New Testament Stories, 1964, 234–55; E. E. Ellis, Paul's Use of the Old Testament, 1957; H. L. Ellison, "Paul and the Law – 'All Things to All Men' ", in W. W. Gasque and R. P. Martin, eds., Apostolic History and the Gospel: Biblical and Historical Essays presented to F. F. Bruce on his 60th Birthday, 1970, 195–202; R. T. France, Jesus and the Old Testament, 1971; W. Gutbrod, nomos etc., TDNT IV 1059–91; E. Haenchen, The Acts of the Apostles, 1971; G. E. Howard, "Christ the End of the Law: The Meaning of Romans 10:4 ff.", JBL 88, 1969, 331–37; J. Jervell, "The Law in Luke-Acts", HTR 64, 1971, 21–36; E. Käsemann, "Sentences of Holy Law in the New Testament", in New Testament Questions of Today, 1969, 66–81; G. E. Ladd, A Theology of the New Testament, 1975, 495–510; R. Longenecker, Biblical Exegesis in the Apostolic Period, 1975; F. Lyall, "Roman Law in the Writings of Paul – Aliens and citizens", EQ 48, 1976, 3–14; M. Maher, " 'Take my yoke upon you' (Matt. xi. 29)", NTS 22, 1975–76, 97–103; J. M. Meyers, Grace and Torah, 1975; H. Preisker, ethos, TDNT II 372 f.; H. Schlier, Principalities and Powers in the New Testament, 1961; R. Schnackenburg, God's Rule and Kingdom, 1963; H. J. Schoeps, Paul: The Theology of the Apostle in the Light of Jewish Religious History, 1961, 168–218, 280–93; E. Schweizer, "Observance of the Law and Charismatic Activity in Matthew", NTS 16, 1969–70, 213–30; A. N. Sherwin-White, Roman Society and Roman Law in the New Testament, 1963; J. G. Strelan, "Burden-Bearing and the Law of Christ: A Re-examination of Gal. 6.2", JBL 94, 1975, 266–76; M. J. Suggs, Wisdom, Christology and Law in Matthew's Gospel, 1970; J. B. Tyson, " 'Works of Law' in Galatians", JBL 92, 1973, 423–31; D. E. H. Whiteley, The Theology of St. Paul, 1964, 76–86; R. McL. Wilson, "Nomos: The Biblical Significance of Law", SJT 5, 1952, 36–48.

(b). W. Andersen, Ihr Seid zur Freiheit berufen: Gesetz und Evangelium nach biblischem Zeugisn, Biblische Studien 41, 1964; K. Berger, Die Gesetzauslegung Jesu, I, WMANT 40, 1972; L. Baeck, Paulus, die Pharisäer und das Neue Testament, 1961; P. Bläser Das Gesetz bei Paulus, 1941; "Glaube undSittlichkeit bei Paulus", in Vom Wort des Lebens (Festschrift M. Meinertz), 1951, 114–21; and "Gesetz und Evangelium", Catholica 14, 1960, 1–23; G. Bornkamm, Das Ende des Gesetzes. Paulusstudien. Gesammelte Aufsätze, I, 1966[5]; M. Dibelius, "Die Bergpredigt", Botschaft und Geschichte, I, 1953, 79 ff.; Der Brief des Jakobus, KEK 15, 1964[11]; An die Kolosser, an die Epheser, an Philemon, HNT 12, ed. H. Greeven, 1953[3]; and Die Pastoralbriefe, HNT 13, ed. H. Conzelmann, 1970[3]; C. Dietzfelbinger, Paulus und das Alte Testament, ThEH 95, 1961; K. Galley, Altes und neues Heilsgeschehen bei Paulus, 1965; C. Haufe, "Die Stellung des Paulus zum Gesetz", TLZ 91, 1966, 171 ff.; J. Jeremias, "Paulus als Hillelit", in E. E. Ellis and M. Wilcox, eds. Neotestamentica et Semitica: Studies in Honour of Matthew Black, 1969, 88–94; E. Jüngel, "Das Gesetzzwische n Adam nud Christus", ZTK 60, 1963, 42 ff.; and Paulus und Jesus. Eine Untersuchung zur Präzisierung der Frage nach dem Ursprung der Christologie, 1967[3]; W. G. Kümmel, "Paulus und die jüdische Traditionsgedanke", ZNW 33, 1934, 105 ff. (reprinted in Heilsgeschehen und Geschichte, 1965, 15 ff.); and " 'Das Gesetz und die Propheten gehen bis Johannes' – Lukas 16, 6 im Zusammenhang der heilsgeschichtlichen Theologie der Lukasschriften", in O. Böcher and K. Haacker, eds., Verborum Veritas. Festschrift für Gustav Stählin zum 70. Geburtstag, 1970, 89–102; O. Kuss, "nomos bei Paulus", Münchener Theologische Zeitschrift 17, 1966, 173–227; H. Ljungmann, Das Gesetz erfüllen. Mt. 5, 17 ff. und 3, 15 untersucht, 1954; E. Lohmeyer, Die Briefe an die Philipper, an die Kolosser und an Philemon, KEK 9, 1956[11]; E. Lohse, Christologie und Ethik im Kolosserbrief, BZNW 30, 1964; S. Lyonnet, Liberté chrétienne et Loi nouvelle, 1953; C. Maurer, Die Gesetzlehre des Paulus, 1941; O. Michel, Der Brief an die Römer, KEK 4, 1966[13]; F. Neugebauer, In Christus. Eine Untersuchung zum paulinischen Glaubensverständnis, 1961; K. Niederwimmer, Der Begriff der Freiheit im Neuen Testament, 1966; A. Oepke, Die Briefe an die Thessalonicher, NTD 8, 1965[10]; K. H. Schelkle, Paulus – Lehrer der Väter. Die altkirchliche Auslegung von Röm. 1–11, 1959; H. Schlier, Der Brief an die Galater, KEK 7, 1951[11]; E. E. Schneider, "Finis legis Christus, Röm. 10, 4", ThZ 20, 1964, 410 ff.; H. J. Schoeps, "Jesus und das jüdische Gesetz", Studien zur unbekannten Religions- und Geistesgeschichte, 1963, 41 ff.; A. Schulz, Unter dem Anspruch Gottes. Das neutestamentliche Zeugnis von der Nachahmung, 1967; H. Schürmann, "Wer daher eines dieser geringsten Gebote auflöst . . .", BZ 4, 1960, 238–50; E. Schweizer, "Die 'Elemente der Welt' Gal. 4, 3. 9; Kol. 2, 8.20", in O. Böcher and K. Haacker, eds., op. cit., 245–59; G. Söhngen, Gesetz und Evangelium, 1957; P. Stuhlmacher, Gottes Gerechtigkeit bei Paulus, 1965; W. Trilling, Das wahre Israel. Studien zur Theologie des Matthäus-Evangelium, 1959; P. G. Verwejs, Evangelium und neues Gesetz in der ältesten Christenheit bis auf Marcion, 1960; R. Walker, "Allein aus Werken", ZTK 61, 1964, 155 ff.

On the law generally in theology:

(a). K. Barth, CD, I, 2; II, 2; III, 3; III, 4; IV, 1; IV, 2; IV, 3 (see indexes); and "Gospel and Law", in God, Grace and Gospel, SJT Occasional Papers No. 8, 1959, 3–27; C. Brown, Karl Barth and the Christian Message, 1967 (see index); E. Brunner, The Divine Imperative: A Study in Christian Ethics, 1937; J. H. Deibert, "Law-Gospel or Gospel-Law?", SJT 15, 1962, 225–34; G. Ebeling, "On the Doctrine of the Triplex Usus Legis in the Theology of the Reformation", and "Reflections on the Doctrine of the Law", Word and Faith, 1963, 62–78, 247–81; J. Ellul, The Theological Foundation of Law, 1961; E. F. Kevan, The Grace of Law: A Study in Puritan Theology, 1964; W. Lillie, The Law of Christ: The Christian Ethic and Modern Problems, 1956; J. Murray, Principles of Conduct: Aspects of Biblical Ethics, 1957; I. T. Ramsey, ed., Christian Ethics and Contemporary Philosophy, 1966; H. Thielicke, Theological Ethics, I, Foundations, 1968; II, Politics, 1969 (see indexes); G. Wingren, Creation and Law, 1961.

(b). P. Althaus, Gebot und Gesetz, 1952; W. Andersen, Der Gesetzbegriff in der gegenwärtigen theologischen Diskussion, ThEH 108, 1963; H. Beintker, "Zur Vollmacht der ethischen Forderung des Gehorsams", TLZ 91, 1966, 241 ff.; H. Berkhof, "Gesetz und Evangelium", in Vom Herrengeheimnis der Wahrheit. Festschrift H. Vogel, 1962, 127 ff.; G. Bornkamm, "Gesetz und Natur", Studien zu Antike und Christentum. Gesammelte Aufsätze, II, 1959, 93 ff.; R. Bring, "Die Erfüllung des Gesetzes", Kerygma und Dogma 5, 1959, 1 ff.; O. Bückmann et al., "Gesetz", EKL I 1551 ff.; K. Frör, "Die theologische Lehre von Gesetz und Evangelium und ihre Bedeutung für Pädagogik", in Glauben und Erziehen. Festgabe G. Bohne, 1962, 127 ff.; H. Gerdes, "Die Frage von Gesetz und Evangelium in der gegenwärtigen theologischen Diskussion", in Wahrheit und Glaube, Festschrift E. Hirsch, 1963, 100 ff.; H. von Glasenapp et al., "Gesetz", *RGG*³ II 1511–33; H. Gollwitzer, "Zum Verhältnis von Gesetz und Evangelium", Theologia Viatorum 8, 1960–61, 30 ff.; and "Zur Einheit von Gesetz und Evangelium", in E. Wolf, C. von Kirschbaum, R. Frey, eds., Antwort. Karl Barth zum siebzigsten Geburtstag, 1956, 287–309; H.-J. Iwand, Gesetz und Evangelium Nachgelassene Werke, IV, ed. W. Kreck, 1964; W. Joest, Gesetz und Freiheit, 1960³; K. H. Kandler, "Evangelium nihil aliud quam expositio legis", Neue Zeitschrift für sytematische Theologie, 4, 1962, 127 ff.; W. Kreck, "Schöpfung und Gesetz", Kirche in der Zeit 15, 1960, 369 ff.; E. Lange, Die zehn grossen Freiheiten, 1965; A. T. van Leeuwen, Christentum in der Weltgeschichte, 1966; W. Matthias, "Der anthropologische Sinn der Formel Gesetz und Evangelium", EvTh 22, 1962, 410 ff.; R. C. Schultz, Gesetz und Evangelium in der lutherischen Theologie des 19. Jahrhunderts, Arbeiten zur Geschichte und Theologie des Luthertums, 4, 1955; G. Wingren, "Adam, wir und Christus", Kerygma und Dogma 7, 1961, 54 ff.; E. Wolf, "Christum habere omnia Mosis, Bemerkungen zum Problem Gesetz und Evangelium", Für Kirche und Recht. Festschrift für J. Keckel, 1959, 287 ff.; W. Zimmerli, "Das Gesetz und die Freiheit", Juden, Christen, Deutsche, 1961, 294 ff.

Layman

ἰδιώτης

ἰδιώτης (idiōtēs), layman, unlettered, uneducated, unskilled.

CL idiōtēs (from idios, own, personal, private), found in Gk. from Herodotus onwards, means: (a) a private person as opposed to an occupant of a public office (e.g. a ruler), or an individual citizen as opposed to the state or the totality of citizens; (b) a layman as opposed to an expert (e.g., a priest, judge, or philosopher); generally, an unlettered person as opposed to one who has knowledge; (c) an outsider as opposed to one who "belongs".

OT idiōtēs occurs in the LXX only in Prov. 6:8b, without a Heb. equivalent. The rabbis borrowed the word from the Gk., in the form of heḏyôṭ, and used it similarly for (a) a private person as opposed to the king; (b) a layman as opposed to an expert, particularly an expert in the law, and virtually an equivalent for 'am hā'āreṣ, the people of the land or common people (cf. T. Taan. 4:12) because of their lack of learning; (c) man as opposed to God.

NT In the NT idiōtēs, which occurs only 5 times, is used as in CL (b) and (c) above, but not as in CL (a).

In Acts 4:13 the word is used in the sense of unlettered, uneducated: "When they . . . perceived that they were uneducated [anthrōpoi agrammatoi], common men [idiōtai], they wondered" (RSV). Likewise 2 Cor. 11:6: "Even if I [Paul] am unskilled in speaking [idiōtēs tō logō], I am not in knowledge" (RSV).

The idiōtai in 1 Cor. 14:16 are all those who do not possess the gift of tongues and who therefore, not understanding what is said when this gift is exercised, cannot join in the → Amen to the church's thanksgiving. Similarly, in 1 Cor. 14:23, 24, the same word refers to those who are "uninitiated" into speaking in tongues. They are unbelievers (apistoi), i.e. non-Christians, who attend Christian meetings from time to time. For their sakes, Paul urges that public worship should be intelligible. The context lends no support to the view (e.g. of Arndt, 371) that these idiōtai are those not in full church membership, i.e. proselytes or catechumens.

If idiōtēs is translated by "layman", it is important to note that the NT word is not used to distinguish church members from priests or clergy, for such a distinction was not drawn in the NT church. Rather, the word denotes outsiders as distinct from Christians. A distinction between church members and clergy was first made in A.D. 95 by Clement of Rome, who applied to believers the word laïkos (from laos, people; 1 Clem. 40:5). The original emphasis was simply that all belonged to the laos, the → people (cf. H. H. Walz, *RGG*³, IV 204; Lampe, 790, 792). O. Flender

Arndt, 371; H. Schlier, idiōtēs, TDNT III 215 ff.; Lampe, 668; Moulton-Milligan, 299.

Lead Astray, Deceive

πλανάω

πλανάω (planaō), lead astray, cause to wander, mislead; πλάνη (planē), wandering, delusion, error; πλάνος (planos), leading astray, deceitful, deceiver, imposter; ἀποπλανάομαι (apoplanaomai), go astray, wander away; (ἐξ-)ἀπατάω ((ex-)apataō), trick, deceive; ἀπάτη (apatē), deception, trickery, deceitfulness; παραλογίζομαι (paralogizomai), cheat, deceive, delude.

CL The Gk. root plan- has its origin in the Indo-Germanic root pela-* to spread out. Also related are the French flâner, to saunter around (cf. also German flanieren), and the Norwegian flana, to drive around. The original meaning of planaō (Homer) implies movement in space: in the act., to lead astray; in the mid. and pass., to go astray, be led astray. planē or planos (first found in the tragic poets) means going astray, roaming; planētēs is a wanderer.

1. (a) The active form of the vbs. planaō and apoplanaō is seldom used in its lit. sense. But in a transferred sense the vb. means to lead astray, deceive, by one's behaviour or one's words. This can refer to a person's judgment or to actions in the realm of morals. (apo-)planaomai means lit., to wander from or roam about. It can be used of men, powers, beasts, rumours, dreams, and even of blood or breath pulsing through the body. It is by no means to be assumed that it always has a negative undertone. In a transferred sense the vb. comes to mean to wander off course, miss the mark, in thought, speech or action. Here again the word carries no implication of guilt. The most that can be said is that it contains a summons to right judgment (cf. → Sin, art. hamartia CL).

(b) In classical tragedy man's mistakes are seen as a fate laid upon him by the gods (as in the cases of Oedipus and Prometheus). In Plato the way to right insight leads through error. The gnostics and the mystery cults used the word almost as a technical term for man's entanglement in the world from which he must be released.

(c) Similar meanings characterize the other derivatives of this group of words. planos as an adj. (Menander) means inconstant, unsteady, deceiving; as a noun it means deviation wandering about, or imposter. planē has the same meaning as the vb.: vacillation and error are characteristics of human life which are at first stated as facts without further qualification. Thus in Plato planē can be used to express digression of thought. The change to a negative sense can only be said to have occurred when planē is used of disorder of the parts of the soul which leads to adikia, injustice, and kakia, evil.

2. (ex)apataō and apatē are sometimes synonymous in meaning with words from the root plan-. The emphasis is, however, somewhat different. The basis for deceit and trickery is here not to be sought in agnoia, ignorance, so much as in an epithymia, desire. apatē accordingly comes to mean pleasure, enjoyment, that which is diverting, the pleasant illusion of the theatre. The noun can be personified and occurs as a woman's name. A negative sense is not at first attached to it, though this develops later.

3. paralogizomai, attested from Isocrates, is a negative form of logizomai, to calculate, reckon, consider. It connotes deception, cheating by false reasoning.

OT 1. There is no direct Heb. equivalent to the group of words derived from plan-. planaō most frequently stands for tā'âh (qal, to wander about; hiph., to lead astray). The classical meaning of the Gk. word is taken over in the LXX. The spatial sense of the vb. is found where mention is made of leading the → blind astray (Deut. 27:18), and is also the basic concept behind the description of people staggering as a result of drinking wine (cf. Isa. 19:13 f.; 28:7; → Drunken, Sober). The frequent use of the term in combination with hodos, way, has its origin in the spatial sense of the term (cf. Isa. 35:8). It corresponds to Israel's way of life, when wandering sheep are used as an illustration of man's existence (cf. Deut. 22:1; Isa. 13:14; 53:6; Ps. 119:176). The fate of the people in the wilderness wanderings is seen in Num. 14:29, 33 as a punishment of God for their disobedience (cf. also Deut. 2:14). The people go astray by ignoring God's commandment and practising idolatry (cf. Deut. 13:6). Those who lead them astray are idols (Amos 2:4), false prophets (Jer. 23:32), and unfaithful kings (2 Chron. 33:9). Even God himself appears in the role of one who leads astray (Job 12:33; Ezek. 14:9; Isa. 63:17). Because Israel's path every now and again leads her astray, turning and salvation are necessary. This basic relationship to God is aptly expressed by the picture of sheep who cannot exist without a → shepherd (→ Lamb, Sheep, art. probaton).

2. apataō is chiefly used for verbal forms of pāṭâh, which in the qal and niphal means to be deceived, be simple; in the piel to deceive, seduce; and in the pual to be led astray. The deception can be used as a human strategem to dupe others (e.g., Samson's in Jdg. 14:15; 16:5). Gen. 3:13 speaks of the serpent's deception in enticing the woman to eat the forbidden fruit. In a vision of Micaiah ben Imlah the personified spirit offers, in Yahweh's royal council, to become a lying spirit and to entice King Ahab and his prophets (1 Ki. 22:21 ff.). On the other hand, there is the Psalmist's testimony: "I sought God . . . and I was not deceived" (Ps. 76:3 LXX).

3. In the inter-Testamental period some important elements are added to the concept of being led astray. The agents are often spirits or powers, especially, for example, the sons of God (Gen. 6:1 ff.) and the diabolos (→ Satan; SB I 136 ff.). Apocalyptic literature predicts the planē as a precursor of the end of the world, the day of the messiah (SB IV 977 ff.).

4. The Qumran texts speak, on the one hand, of a wandering astray of the children of light which is brought about by evil spirits and impulses (1QS 3:21; CD 2:17; 3:4, 14), and, on the other hand, of men who have appeared as deceivers of the community (CD 20:11; 1QH 2:14, 19; 4:7, 12; 16:20).

NT The active vb. (apo-)planaō is used in the NT almost exclusively in an apocalyptic sense (Matt. 24:4 f., 11, 24; Mk. 13:5 f.; Lk. 21:8; Rev. 2:20; 12:9; 13:14; 18:23; 19:20; 20:3, 8, 10) and of false teachers (2 Tim. 3:13; 1 Jn. 1:8; 2:66; 3:7). The nouns also often appear in this context (e.g. 2 Thess. 2:11; 2 Pet. 2:18; 3:17; Jude 11, 13; 1 Jn. 4:6; 2 Jn. 7). The primary, spatial sense is seen most clearly where the picture of sheep is expressly introduced (Matt. 18:12 f.; 1 Pet. 2:25), or in combination with hodos, way (2 Pet. 2:15; cf. also Heb. 11:38). It is never, however, spatial and nothing more: there is always a theological meaning associated with its use. The mid. (apo-)planaomai is used in the sense of to be wrong, to be led astray, to err (Tit. 3:3; Heb. 3:10 = Ps. 95:10; Heb. 5:2; Jas. 5:19; Matt. 22:29; Mk. 12:24; 1 Tim. 6:10). Similarly the formula, often used by the Stoics (cf. TDNT VI 244), mē planasthe, means "Do not be deceived", make no mistake" (Gal. 6:7; 1 Cor. 6:9; 15:33; Jas. 1:16). The pure passive sense, to be deceived, is to be found e.g., at Matt. 18:12; Jn. 7:47; 2 Tim. 3:13. The noun planē refers to a specific mistake (Matt. 27:64; 2 Pet. 3:17; Jude 11), or to more general confusion, error, lack of discipline and restraint (Rom. 1:27; Eph. 4:14; 1 Jn. 4:6). The nouns planētēs and planēs occur only in variant readings of Jude 13 in the sense of a wandering star or planet, with which Jude compares the false teachers. The point of the comparison is the apparently irregular movement of the planets which seemed to violate the order of the heavens and which was attributed to the disobedience of the angels controlling them. As punishment the latter were imprisoned for ever in the abyss (Eth.Enoch 18:13–16; 21:1–10; cf. J. N. D. Kelly, The Epistles of Peter and Jude, BNTC 1969, 274). planos is used both as an adj. (of deceitful spirits, 1 Tim. 4:1); and as a noun, deceiver, imposter (of Jesus in Matt. 27:63; of those who deny that Jesus Christ has come in the flesh, 2 Jn. 7; of Paul and his colleagues, 2 Cor. 6:8).

(ex-)apataō and apatē occur in 2 Cor. 11:3 and 1 Tim. 2:14 with reference to Gen. 3; in 2 Thess. 2:3; Eph. 5:6; Col. 2:8 in connection with false teachers; and in Matt. 13:22 par. Mk. 4:19; Rom. 7:11; 2 Thess. 2:10; Heb. 3:13; 2 Pet. 2:13 in the ethical sense of enticement by → sin or to sin.

paralogizomai occurs only at Col. 2:4 and Jas. 1:22, meaning to delude (with beguiling speech) and to deceive oneself (by being merely a hearer and not a doer of the word).

The terms we have considered can be used synonymously as far as their theological meaning is concerned. The differences of meaning in NT usage correspond to the various shades of meaning mentioned in OT above.

1. The picture of sheep that get lost and perish, having no shepherd, is widely used in the OT (cf. Num. 27:17; 1 Ki. 22:17; Ps. 119:176; Isa. 53:6; Ezek. 34; Zech. 13:7). In the NT it is taken up again in various contexts (Matt. 10:6; 12:11 f.; 14:14 par. Mk. 6:34 [= Num. 27:17; 1 Ki. 22:17] Lk. 9:11; Matt. 18:12; Matt. 26:31 par. Mk. 14:27 [= Zech. 13:7]; Lk. 15:4; Jn. 10; 1 Pet. 2:25). planaō and its cognates are part of the framework of this picture. Nearly all the places where these words are used may be interpreted in terms of this background, even when it is not expressly mentioned. Jesus is the → way (hodos) and the → truth (alētheia) (Jn. 14:6). To be removed from him, the shepherd, means to wander about without guidance or protection and so be in danger of getting lost. The vbs. planaō and apollyō (→ destroy) are interchangeable in this context (cf. Matt. 18:12 with Lk. 15:4 ff.). Where we read of nations going astray (Rev. 18:23), of those who have wandered from the right way (2 Pet. 2:15; Jas. 5:20), or the people of God going astray (Heb. 3:10 [= Ps. 95:10]; 5:2), there is this underlying image coupled sometimes with the wilderness wanderings of Israel. It is also implicit in the passages where mention is made of false teachers who lead astray (e.g. Matt. 24:4 ff.; Jn. 7:12; 1 Jn. 3:7; Rev. 20:8–10).

2. Life prior to becoming a Christian is described as planē, error (Rom. 1:27; Eph. 4:14; Tit. 3:3; 1 Pet. 2:25). This is a time of being without the guidance and support of a Lord and shepherd. It is a time of unbelief and of sin, even though the wandering itself occurred apart from the → law of Moses (cf. Rom. 1:18 ff.).

For the man who is under the law, to go astray is sin (hamartia, Rom. 7:11). To wander away from the faith (1 Tim. 6:10) or from the truth (Jas. 5:19 f.), the deception of the heart (Rom. 16:18; Heb. 3:10,13; Jas. 1:26) is both sinful and incurs guilt (cf. also 2 Thess. 2:10).

The story of the → fall is the archetype of deception and disobedience as a result of appetite and desire (2 Cor. 11:3, 1 Tim. 2:14). Here the apataō group of words come into their own. Riches are seductive (Matt. 13:22 par. Mk. 4:19; 1 Tim. 6:10), and there are other desires lying in wait to deceive the believer (Rom. 16:18; Eph. 4:22; 2 Pet. 2:13).

In the background are dark powers, such as the spirit of deception (1 Tim. 4:1; 1 Jn. 4:6), the → Antichrist (2 Jn. 7), and ultimately → Satan himself who causes error and confusion (Rev. 12:9; 20:10).

3. The danger for the Christian is of deceiving himself (1 Cor. 3:18; 1 Jn. 1:8) which can lead to falling away from right doctrine. Hence the need for the oft-repeated warning mē planasthe, "Do not be deceived" (1 Cor. 6:9; 15:33; Gal. 6:7; Jas. 1:16; cf. also 2 Thess. 2:3). He who is not firmly grounded in the faith is in danger of missing the true → knowledge (→ ginōskō), since numerous false teachers threaten the church (1 Thess. 2:3; 2 Thess. 2:3; Eph. 4:14; Col. 2:8; 1 Jn. 2:26; 3:7; 4:6; 2 Tim. 3:13; 2 Pet. 2:18; 3:17). To be led astray by false teaching, in the form of philosophy or empty words, and to be led astray into definite acts of sin, are processes that go hand in hand. On the opposite side is the → truth (Jas. 5:19 f.) which must be held firmly by faith in him who is himself the truth.

4. Jesus is hated and persecuted by the Jews because they see in him the one who leads the people astray (Matt. 27:63; Jn. 7:12, 47). In the eyes of those who do not believe the apostles are imposters (2 Cor. 6:8), although they are servants of the truth. In this struggle to uphold the truth the church is pointed to him who himself experienced the weakness of a man (Heb. 5:2), and who can therefore provide support. Faith in him is the yardstick of truth and error. Seen in this light, the church's opponents turn out to be deceivers who themselves have been deceived, and the → Pharisees are those who really lead the people astray (Matt. 22:29; Mk. 12:24, 27; cf. 2 Tim. 3:13). For the Christian there is no other criterion of truth than Jesus Christ.

5. The final demonstration of the truth lies in the future, in the final revelation of Jesus Christ at his second coming. The era of the church is the era of fighting for the truth. The apostles' testimony is proclaimed to all nations (Matt. 28:18 ff.), but at the same time the powers increasingly bring in confusion and error (Matt. 24:4 f., 11, 24; Mk. 13:5 f.; Lk. 21:8; cf. Rev. 18:23; 20:3, 8). It is against the background of this final climax of the struggle that most of the texts containing the terms we have been considering are to be understood. The end event consists of the coming of the Lord to take home the lost and those who have gone astray, and to make an end of all planē, deception (2 Pet. 3; 2 Thess. 2; Rev. 12:9; 13:14).

W. Günther

→ Animal, → Antichrist, → Knowledge, → Lamb, Sheep, → Present, → Prophet, → Shepherd, → Teach, → Tempt, → Walk

(a). W. Bauer, Orthodoxy and Heresy in Earliest Christianity, 1972; G. R. Beasley-Murray, A Commentary on Mark Thirteen, 1957; H. Braun, planaō etc., TDNT VI 228–53; R. Bultmann, Theology of the New Testament, II, 1955, 127–42, 203–18; M. D. Hooker, "Were there false teachers at Colossae?", in B. Lindars and S. S. Smalley, eds., Christ and Spirit in the New Testament. In Honour of Charles Francis Digby Moule, 1973, 315–32; Liddell-Scott, 181, 1316 f., 1411; A. L. Moore, The Parousia in the New Testament, Supplements to NovT 13, 1966; A. Oepke, apataō etc. 384 f.; H. Räisänen, The Idea of Divine Hardening. A Comparative Study of the Notion of Divine Hardening, Leading Astray, and Inciting to Evil, in the Bible and the Qur'an, Publications of the Finnish Exegetical Society 25, 1972.
(b). G. Quell, Wahre und falsche Propheten, 1952.

Leaven

ζύμη

ζύμη (zymē), leaven; ζυμόω (zymoō), ferment; ἄζυμος (azymos), unleavened.

CL zymē appears in secular Gk. from Aristotle (4th cent. B.C.) to the Tebtunis Papyri (2nd cent. A.D.). zymoō first appears in Hippocrates (5th cent. B.C.). Leaven, in fermenting grain, is not yeast, but old, sour dough, stored and stimulated as a fermentation agent by adding juices, which was "hidden" (Matt. 13:33 par. Lk. 13:21) in the new dough in order to permeate it and give it lightness. In the Roman state cult the Flamen Dialis was not permitted to come into contact with leaven, because, claimed Plutarch (Quaestiones Romanae 109), it weakens, sours and corrupts.

OT 1. zymē is used lit. in the LXX and in Josephus in cultic contexts concerned with regulations for feasts and sacrifices (e.g. Exod. 12:15, 19; Deut. 16:3; Josephus, Ant. 3, 252 f.). It was not necessarily taboo in Jewish ritual. Leaven was used in the peace and wave offerings (Lev. 7:13), but was forbidden in the cereal offerings consumed by fire (Lev. 2:11; 6:17). In the ritual of the Passover and the Feast of Unleavened Bread all leaven was cleaned out from every Jewish home annually for the 14 Nisan, and only unleavened bread was eaten from that evening and the seven days following (Exod. 12:14–20), commemorating the hurried flight from Egypt (Exod. 12:34, 39). While this spring-clean was a cult ordinance, it served the hygienic purpose of breaking any chain of infection established by successive use of sour leaven (C. L. Mitton, "Leaven", ExpT 84, 1972–73, 339 f.).

2. Figuratively leaven was given different meanings in rabbinic tradition. Rabbi Alexander used it as a metaphor for human restraints on obeying God (I. Abrahams, Studies in Pharisaism and the Gospels, I, 1917, 52 ff.), whereas Rabbi Chiyya bar Abba described as leaven the Torah with its power to lead Israelites who observe it back to God (SB I 728). Philo also gave it divergent transferred meanings. On the one hand, it symbolized swelling arrogance, indulgence and pretension (Quaest. in Exod. 1, 15; 2, 14). On the other hand, it suggested complete (spiritual) nourishment and blissful joy (Spec.Leg. 2, 185).

NT 1. zymē and zymoō appear in the Synoptic Gospels and in Paul. Each instance is in a literary figure: parable, metaphor, proverb and type. The point of the various uses varies from context to context, despite the frequent claim among scholars that in the NT "leaven is used symbolically to symbolize an evil influence which spreads like an infection" (C. L. Mitton, op. cit., 342).

(a) Parable. In Matt. 13:33 par. Lk. 13:21 the hidden but persistent expansion of the → kingdom of God – seen in the words and works of Jesus – is compared to leaven hidden in dough until it permeates the whole. H. Odeberg interprets the parable as a warning against evil (Herren kommer, 1962, 199–201), and C. L. Mitton as a comparison with the influential power of evil (op. cit., 341). However, the point of the preceding parable of the mustard seed is expansion by something minute (cf. the proverb in 1 Cor. 5:6). The Gospel of Thomas stresses the expansive property of leaven in its use of the parable (B. Gärtner, The Theology of the Gospels of Thomas, 1961, 230 f.). The point in Matt. and Lk. appears to be expansion by secret, hidden permeation, not evil influence (B. Gerhardsson, "The Seven Parables in Matthew 13", NTS 19, 1972–73, 22 f.). No indication is given of the significance of the dough, whether it is meant to refer to the culture of society or to the territorial orbis terrarum.

(b) Metaphor. In Mk. 8:15 leaven is an attribute of the Pharisees and of Herod (v.l. of the Herodians), of which the disciples are to beware. Matt. 16:11 f., in a warning against Pharisees and Sadducees, interprets the metaphor as "teaching", and Lk. 12:1, in a warning against Pharisees alone, as "hypocrisy". Several scholars (e.g. V. Taylor, The Gospel According to St. Mark, 1953, 365) believe that the warning suggests that leaven indicates something evil, but this is not necessarily so (H. Windisch, TDNT II 906). If the Pharisees were making a similar claim for the Torah as that made later by Rabbi Chiyya bar Abba (see OT 2, above), then the warning which is not explained in the Marcan version would have been understood without explanation. Further, in this case, Matt. rightly interpreted the metaphor, as did Lk., when writing to a Christian public, since Pharisaic observance of the Torah in the view of Jesus (cf. Matt. 6:2 ff.; 23:13) was no longer a vital faith but a mask.

(c) Proverb. In 1 Cor. 5:6 and Gal. 5:9 Paul uses the words, "A little leaven leavens the whole lump." Proverbial in form, but not found outside Paul as a proverb, these words might have been associated in the Christian church with the parable of the leaven. Windisch suggests that Jesus elaborated the point of the proverb in the parable (op. cit., 905). But since the parable is not evidenced prior to the formation of the Gospel tradition outside Paul, it is possible that the parable gave rise to the proverb in the church. For synoptic tradition elsewhere seems to have influenced material in NT epistles (cf. H. Riesenfeld, The Gospel Tradition and its Beginnings, 1957, 15). In 1 Cor. the proverb symbolizes the notion that the continuing presence of a transgressor in the community renders the community guilty of the transgression (v. 1) and in Gal. the imagery refers to the influence of false teachers on the understanding of the congregation.

(d) Type. In 1 Cor. 5:7 Paul exhorts the community to "clean out the old leaven." This might be an injunction to expel the offender (v. 13) or to divest themselves of the "boast" of association with the transgression. The grounds for the command are that Christ the Passover (→ lamb) has been sacrificed, that the Christians are "unleavened", and that the festival is to be kept by expelling leaven (malice and evil) and by partaking of unleavened bread (sincerity and truth). This type (not allegory, A. T. Hanson, Studies in Paul's Technique and Theology, 1974, 112 ff.) recalls the Passover ritual and the Christian identification of Christ with the Passover → lamb (Jn. 19:14, 31; 1 Pet. 1:19). The Jews cast out the leaven before eating the Passover; the believer is to cast out leaven, because the Passover sacrifice has already taken place, whereby he is accepted and made new by God (1 Cor. 6:11). This is a classic example of Pauline ethical teaching in which the acts of God in Christ on behalf of the Christian – expressed in the indicative mood – are the grounds for exhortation to Christ-like living – expressed in the imperative mood – both by renouncing evil and pursuing good as God works within the believer. Other examples are found in Rom. 6; 1 Cor. 6:19 f.; Col. 2:20–4:1.

2. azymos, unleavened. Apart from the uses in 1 Cor. 5:7 f. (see above 1 (d)), this word is found elsewhere in the NT in the plur. form ta azyma, meaning the Feast of Unleavened Bread. This was originally a harvest festival (Exod. 23:14–17), celebrated in the month Abib. It became part of the Passover ritual, set for 15–21 Nisan, but also dated to begin on 14 Nisan (Josephus, Ant. 2, 15, 1; 14, 2, 1), as we find in Mk. 14:12. The Jews regularly equated the Passover with the Feast of Unleavened Bread (Ezek. 45:21; Josephus, War, 2, 10), as Lk. 22:1 does.

G. T. D. Angel

→ Bread, → Feast, → Hunger, → Sacrifice

O. T. Allis, "The Parable of the Leaven", EQ 19, 1947, 254 ff.; Arndt, 340; J. P. Lewis, "Leaven", ZPEB III 901 ff.; Liddell-Scott, 757; C. L. Mitton, "Leaven", ExpT 84, 1972–73, 339–42; H. Windisch, zymē etc., TDNT III 902–6.

Leprosy

Leprosy is an ancient designation of a fairly extensive class of diseases, the principal symptoms of which were of a cutaneous nature. Leprosy appears to have been endemic in various parts of the ancient orient, being described as far back as the third millennium B.C. It was held in abhorrence by the Hebrews partly because of the pathology itself, and partly because it was accompanied by ceremonial defilement which rendered the sufferer unclean. For these reasons the leper, once his condition was properly diagnosed, was banished from society.

λεπρός

λεπρός (lepros), leprous, but chiefly used as a noun describing a leper.

CL Classical writers employed the adjective lepros to describe anything rough, scabby or scaly. Among ancient Greek leather workers the best straps and reins were supposedly those prepared from roughly textured (ek leprōn) skins or hides. In Hippocrates and Dioscorides the adj. was used to describe a leprous person, i.e., someone with a scaly skin affliction such as psoriasis.

OT lepros occurs in the LXX in Lev. 13:45; 14:2 f.; 22:4; Num. 5:2 etc. as the equivalent of ṣārûa' and m^eṣōrā', participial forms of ṣāra', to become diseased in the skin. If the Heb. is equivalent to the Akkadian ṣinnītu, it would describe any kind of skin eruption, of which clinical leprosy (Hansen's disease) would be one form. It should be observed that the instructions given in Lev. 13 to the priests to enable them to detect leprosy also suggested that skin afflictions other than clinical leprosy might be present in individuals, thus furnishing the possibility of differential diagnosis. Perhaps for this and other reasons the term lepros was sufficiently flexible in nature to include such common dermatological conditions as impetigo, psoriasis, eczema, acne vulgaris and the like, as well as leprosy itself. Specific diagnoses will be considered below in the section on lepra.

NT NT writers employed lepros as a noun, leper, and in this sense it occurs 9 times only. The cleansing of a leper is referred to in Matt. 11:5; Mk. 1:41 f.; Lk. 7:22; 17:12, as part of the healing ministry of Christ. Lk. 4:27 cited an OT miracle whereby Elisha healed the leprosy of Naaman (2 Kings 5:1 ff.). lepros was also used of Simon, formerly a leper, in Matt. 26:6; Mk. 14:3. The word was employed in as broad a sense as its OT counterpart, and the fact that some clinical manifestations called for cleansing, or a priestly declaration of cleanness, implies that the conditions described by lepros varied in severity, and doubtless included specific instances of Hansen's disease. R. K. Harrison

λέπρα

λέπρα (lepra), leprosy.

CL In Herodotus and the medical authors, lepra was employed as a description of a cutaneous disease which gave a scaly or uneven texture to the skin. It was associated by Herodotus (1, 138) and Hippocrates with leukē, a whitish affliction of the skin, and seems to have been acquired leucodermia (vitiligo). This is a condition of the skin in which there is an absence of pigment, the result being the presence of irregular pale or white patches. The Greek medical authors also employed another term, elephas, or elephantiasis, to describe a different and much more serious chronic disorder (elephantiasis Graecorum), which was found frequently in Egypt, the symptoms of which corresponded largely to those now associated with clinical leprosy. Curiously enough, only one case of this latter disease has been discovered among Egyptian mummies to date, despite the common association by classical writers of leprosy with Egypt.

OT lepra occurs in the LXX as the Gk. equivalent of the Heb. ṣāra'aṯ, traditionally rendered by leprosy in the EVV, but by "malignant skin-disease" in NEB. The term ṣāra'aṯ described a kind of eruptive condition which could be exhibited by leather (Lev. 14:55), clothing (Lev. 13:47, 59), and the walls of houses (Lev. 14:44), as well as by human beings. The various forms in which ṣāra'aṯ could be manifested were described in detail in Lev. 13 using ancient Heb. technical terms which unfortunately are very difficult for the modern student to comprehend. The situation is not made any easier by such translations of ṣāra'aṯ as the NEB "malignant skin-disease". This generalized designation unfortunately leaves no room for the specific diagnosis of clinical leprosy, which Lev. 13 clearly allows.

Preliminary symptoms included a swelling indicative of possible morbid changes (śᵉ'ēṯ; LXX oulē), a localized tissue-crust on the epidermis (sappaḥaṯ; LXX sēmasia), and a whitish-red swollen spot (bahereṯ; LXX tēlaugēma). Since any or all of these could presage clinical leprosy, the sufferer presented himself to the priest for examination. If subcutaneous penetration was exhibited along with a whitening of the small local cuticular hairs, a malignant state was suspected and the patient was declared unclean. But if the skin tissue, while swollen, was not actually inflamed (13:4) and did not indicate subcutaneous changes of a morbid nature or discolouration of local hair, the patient was quarantined for seven days. If on re-examination the swollen area of the whitish spot had not increased in size, a further seven days' quarantine could be followed by a priestly diagnosis of a benign skin condition. But if there was a spreading of the eruption in the skin subsequently, it was diagnosed as leprosy (13:8). A chronic state of leprosy was indicated by depigmented hairs and ulcerated tissue in an area of swollen white skin, this also rendering the sufferer unclean. But if the whole body was covered with patches of depigmented skin (probably acquired leucodermia), the individual who manifested this condition was pronounced clean (13:13). The mild type of ulceration found in many cutaneous diseases was also kept under observation, and degenerative changes resulted in a diagnosis of leprosy. Differential diagnosis turned upon the degree of cutaneous penetration of the disease. If the dermis and local cutaneous hairs exhibited pathological changes, leprosy was diagnosed. Otherwise the sufferer could be regarded as being afflicted with eczema, vitiligo, acne, psoriasis, or some analogous skin disease. A condition which may have been a keloid, marked by indurated patches of a whitish colour on a larger pinkish or purplish area of skin, was described in Lev. 13:18 ff. Once again, the degree of localization and skin penetration determined the nature of the affliction, which at best is rather obscure. Scalp disease was treated in the same manner as other forms of skin eruptions, so that an itchy condition (NEB "scurf") such as ringworm could be differentiated from more serious cutaneous diseases. Alopecia (baldness) did not involve ritual defilement (13:40 f.) unless the pathology characteristic of leprosy was also present. The term ṣāra'aṯ was also applied to material damaged by molds or fungi (13:47 ff.), and to the mineral efflorescence on the walls of houses (14:34 ff.).

What was diagnosed as ṣāra'aṯ undoubtedly included genuine cases of clinical leprosy, the cause of which was identified by Hansen in 1871 as a minute fungus, Mycobacterium leprae, but which is now identified as a bacillus. The developed disease, if allowed to run its full course, may exhibit three forms. The nodular (lepromatous) type produces lumps in the facial tissues and a form of cutaneous induration which results in a characteristic leonine appearance. Degenerative changes also occur in nose and throat membranes. An anaesthetic (tuberculoid) variety attacks the nerves of the skin, producing depigmented areas in which there is no feeling. The local hair often undergoes morbid changes, blisters and perforating ulcers frequently form on these patches and elsewhere, and it is common for the extremities of the arms and legs to be affected. In such cases necrosis occurs and the diseased part will then be rejected by the body, leaving a well-healed stump (lepra mutilans). A third form of leprosy combines the symptoms of the first two kinds in varying degrees, and like them is chronic in nature.

NT In the NT lepra occurred 4 times only in passages apparently describing the same incident (Matt. 8:3; Mk. 1:42; Lk. 5:12 f.). Luke noted the advanced nature of the condition (RSV "full of leprosy"; NEB, "covered with leprosy"), but apart from this it is not easy to determine the true nature of the complaint. It may have been acquired leucodermia, since the sufferer seems to have been moving in society to some extent, although the possibility of an advanced case of clinical leprosy should not be discounted. In Lk. 17:12 ff. Jesus cures ten lepers (leproi andres).

([Ed.] In the parable of the rich man and Lazarus the latter is said to have been "full of sores [heilkōmenos]" (Lk. 16:20; cf. Arndt, 251). On this parable see the article by J. D. M. Derrett listed in the bibliography below.)

→ Heal, → Miracle R. K. Harrison

S. G. Browne, "Leprosy", Medicine, 1972–74, 1549–57; Leprosy in the Bible, 1974²; and S. G. Browne, ed., Leprosy Review; R. G. Cochrane, Biblical Leprosy: A Suggested Interpretation, 1963²; J. D. M. Derrett, "Dives and Lazarus and the Preceding Sayings", Law in the New Testament, 1970, 78–99; R. K. Harrison, "Leprosy", IDB III 111 ff.; W. Michaelis, lepra etc., TDNT I 233 f.; J. N. Sanders, "Those whom Jesus Loved", NTS 1, 1954–55, 29 ff.

Levite

Λευίτης

Λευί(ς) (Leui[s]), Levi; Λευίτης (Leuitēs), Levite; Λευιτικός (Leueitikos), Levitical.

OT A Levite was any descendant of Jacob's third son, Levi (Heb. lēwî; Gen. 29:34), but the term is relatively seldom so used in OT. Normally it refers to the male descendants of Levi apart from the priests, the descendants of Aaron, i.e. to those entitled to serve in the sanctuary in a subordinate role. Where the expression "the priests the Levites" (RSV, NEB, "the Levitical priests") is used, its meaning is probably that of genuine priests in contrast to those from other tribes who might arrogate the position to themselves. Deut. 18:1 is not likely to mean, as is so often held, that all Levites were priests, even though a Levite was obviously welcomed when an Aaronic priest was not available (Jdg. 17:13).

In the course of time the Levites diminished in importance, largely for economic reasons. Num. 18:21, 24 gave the whole tithe to the Levites, who were expected to give a tithe of it to the priests (Num. 18:26 ff.). It seems clear, however, that as the priestly clans multiplied, the Levites were increasingly squeezed out of the more important sanctuaries, except from menial posts, especially after Josiah's reformation, and in practice it is improbable that they continued to receive their share of the tithe. As a result comparatively few Levites returned from Babylonia with Zerubbabel and Joshua (cf. Ezr. 2:40 with 2:36–39), and Ezra had great difficulty in persuading any to accompany him (Ezr. 8:15–20).

Nehemiah restored the tithe position (Neh. 10:37 f.), but at an unspecified period the tithes were taken from the Levites in favour of the priests, as is implied by Josephus' language (Life 15; Ant. 20, 8, 8). This is confirmed by Rab. sources (Hullin 131; Yeb. 86). Their importance was further diminished by their teaching functions being largely taken over by the scribes. In addition, the lower ranks of temple servants, many of them descendants of slaves, gradually obtained the right to call themselves Levites. This helps to explain the rarity of their mention in the NT.

NT 1. Levi is found as a proper name 8 times in NT; viz. the son of Jacob 3 times (Heb. 7:5, 9, Rev. 7:7); two ancestors of Jesus (Lk. 3:24, 29); a son of Alphaeus, presumably Matthew, three times (Mk. 2:14; Lk. 5:27, 29). Since in Jesus' genealogy Levi is presumably a purely personal name with no suggestion of Levitical origin, there are no adequate grounds for supposing that Levi (Matthew) was of the tribe of Levi.

2. Levites are referred to 3 times in NT.

(a) The leading Pharisees in Jerusalem ("the Jews") sent priests and Levites to question John the Baptist (Jn. 1:19). The choice was probably motivated by the fact that the tribe of Levi generally had the divinely given privilege of teaching (Deut. 33:10).

(b) A priest and a Levite are linked in the parable of the Good Samaritan (Lk. 10:31 f.). The suggestion of greater interest or humanity on the Levite's part conveyed by AV in contrast to RV and later translations is due to its use of an inferior text.

(c) Barnabas, a native of Cyprus, was a Levite (Acts 4:36). It is impossible to establish whether he functioned in the Jerusalem temple. The mention of Cyprus may be a preparation for Acts 13:4–12; 15:39, in which case he may have moved to Jerusalem as a young man; he had relations there (cf. Col. 4:10). If, on the other hand, he had been won for Christ on a visit, and his home and property were in Cyprus, then he would probably not have functioned in the temple.

3. Heb. 7:11 uses the term "the Levitical priesthood" as a variant to "the Aaronic priesthood". It stresses that the priests were of the tribe of Levi, unlike the priest for ever after the order of Melchizedek, who was of the tribe of Judah.

→ Melchizedek, → Priest, → Temple, → Tent H. L. Ellison

R. Abba, "Priests and Levites", IDB III 876–89; R. Brinker, The Influence of the Sanctuaries in Early Israel, 1946; A. Edersheim, The Temple, Its Ministry and Services, as they were at the Time of Jesus Christ, 1874; A. K. Helmbold, "Levite", ZPEB III 912; D. A. Hubbard, "Priests and Levites", NBD 1028–34; J. Jeremias, Jerusalem in the Time of Jesus, 1969; Y. Kaufmann, The Religion of Israel, 1960, 193–200; H. H. Rowley, "Early Levite History and the Question of the Exodus", JNES 3, 1944, 73–78; H. Strathmann, Leu(e)i etc., TDNT IV 234–39; R. de Vaux, Ancient Israel, 1961, 358–71 (see also bibliography 544 f.); G. E. Wright, "The Levites in Deuteronomy", Vetus Testamentum 4, 1954, 325–30.

Lie, Hypocrite

In Gk. two different groups of words are used for lying, the antithesis of telling the → truth. hypokrinō stems originally from the world of the theatre. In a positive sense, it refers to the "answering" of the dialogue, and to the exposition and interpretation in the play. In the negative, it is used of an actor who has not identified himself with his rôle. Hence, the meanings of play-acting, disguise, and then hypocrisy (cf. the corresponding nouns hypokrisis, hypocrisy and hypokritēs, a hypocrite).

pseudomai, to lie, and pseudos, a lie, express the opposite of alētheia, truth, even more clearly. The great number of compound words derived from the root pseud- indicates the extent and the importance of the use of this idea in ancient and in Christian literature.

ὑποκρίνω

ὑποκρίνω (hypokrino), answer, pretend, dissimulate; ὑπόκρισις (hypokrisis), pretence, hypocrisy; ὑποκριτής (hypokritēs), pretender, hypocrite, a godless man; ἀνυπόκριτος (anhypokritos), unfeigned, genuine.

CL hypokrinō is a compound verb based on krinō, judge (→ Judgment). The mid. form hypokrinomai is the one generally used. Its original meaning was to give final judgment on a question; but it also came to mean to reply, expound, interpret (e.g. dreams).

In secular Gk. these words have primary reference in the world of the theatre. By hypokritēs one should understand either the "answerer" who appeared on stage and turned the self-contained speeches of the chorus into dialogue form; or the "interpreter" (Homer used the word in this sense) who explained the situation to the audience. hypokrisis has various shades of meaning: reply, interpretation, play-acting, and then also (via "rôle-playing") appearance, hypocrisy, dissimulation. anhypokritos is rarely used in secular literature, and indicates someone who is inexperienced as an actor; and in a metaphorical sense unfeigned, genuine, simple.

OT 1. The LXX translates Heb. 'ānâh by hypokrinomai, reply, in Job 39:32 [40:2]. The vb. occurs only rarely and then in late writings (Sir. 1:29; 35[32]:15; 36[33]:2; 2 Macc. 5:25; 6:21, 24; 4 Macc. 6:15, 17). hypokritēs renders Heb. ḥānēp̄, someone estranged from God. This word, too, occurs only in Job 34:30; 36:13. ḥānēp̄ is also translated by anomos, lawless, and asebēs, godless, in the LXX (→ Law; → Godliness).

The term denotes what elsewhere is graphically described as the man with a "double heart" and "false lips" (Ps. 12:3 f.); he always has God on his lips, but keeps him far from his → heart (Jer. 12:2). Job 36:13 describes the hypokritēs as an angry and taciturn man who is too proud to call for help when he needs it. Such a man should not be in a position of authority, because he directs all his efforts to the oppression of his subjects (Job 34:30).

2. There was a rabbinic saying that 90 per cent of all the hypocrisy in the world was to be found in Jerusalem (SB I 718; cf. Jer. 23:15). Hypocrisy was one of the chief sins denounced in Judaism. The → Pharisees were especially condemned, because of their frequent hypocrisy (SB I 388 f., 921 ff.; IV 336 f.).

NT The NT uses these words exclusively in the metaphorical sense of hypocrisy; they occur mainly in the Synoptic Gospels, especially in Matt. The vb. is only found in Lk. 20:20, of the spies sent by the chief priests to trap Jesus; and in Gal. 2:13 in the compound form synhypokrinomai ("And with him the rest of the Jews acted insincerely [synhypekrithēsan], so that even Barnabas was carried away by their insincerity [hypokrisei]"). The noun hypokrisis is used in a variety of contexts; hypokritēs is the regular expression for wicked and godless people – the scribes and Pharisees are particularly so described by Jesus. anhypokritos is chiefly linked with agapē (→ love) and pistis (→ faith).

1. The use of the vb. in Lk. 20:20 is close to the meaning to play a rôle, act as if, pretend: they made out that they were honest men (Vulg. simulare). Gal. 2:13 has a similar reference: Peter did not remain true to his commission; he was playing a double game, trimming his sails to the wind. Clear knowledge of the right course of action is assumed; but it is the actual situation that gives the decisive judgment on his behaviour, and thus Peter became a hypocrite.

2. Jesus called the attempts of his opponents to catch him out with their crafty questions hypocrisy (hypokrisis; cf. Matt. 22:18; Mk. 12:15). It involves a quite deliberate pretence, similar to that of a stage performance. (In passing, it may be noted that the attitude of the early Church to the theatre was overwhelmingly negative.)

Exhortations in the Epistles, in such passages as 1 Tim. 4:2 and 1 Pet. 2:1, put hypokrisis alongside lying (→ pseudomai) and slander. It is the kind of behaviour that attempts to cover up sin by putting oneself in a favourable light at the expense of truth.

3. The noun hypokritēs is found in the Gospels, exclusively on the lips of Jesus. Matt. 15:7 ff. quotes Isa. 29:13 as prophetic of the Pharisees and scribes of Jesus' day: "You hypocrites! Well did Isaiah prophesy of you, when he said: 'This people honours me with their lips, but their heart is far from me; in vain do they worship me, teaching as doctrines the precepts of men' " (cf. Mk. 7:6 f.).

The Pharisees were by no means the only ones to be so addressed. The epithet applies to anyone who rejects the truth about God in Jesus (→ Lead Astray, art. planaō). Through his teaching and actions Jesus revealed to men the unhappy state of their delusion and sought to open their eyes to their true situation before God. Hypocrisy is not simply a conscious act of dissimulation, but a perverse → blindness. It is illustrated by the question in the Sermon on the Mount as to how anyone can remove a speck from someone else's eye when he has a log in his own eye (Matt. 7:3 ff.; cf. Lk. 6:41 f.; SB I 446). Anyone who prays in public is doing his religious duty, but Jesus warned against the hypocrisy of praying to be seen by men. They should rather pray in secret and likewise give alms in secret (Matt. 6:5 ff.; cf. 6:2 ff.). Jesus did not condemn the Pharisees because of their serious and pious attitude towards the → law as such. Rather, it was their understanding of righteousness and their ways of evading its demands that he condemned (→ Gift, art. korban). Moreover, the fact that the pious Jews did not recognize Jesus as the fulfiller of the law showed how far they were from God (Matt. 15:2 ff. par. Mk. 7:5 ff.).

Pharisees and scribes (→ Writing) were the prime examples of unbelief, being unable to see beyond their own traditionalism and to interpret the signs of the time (Lk. 12:56) because of their reliance on their own piety. Thus they remained outside the coming → kingdom (Matt. 23:1–25:46; Mk. 12:37–40; Lk. 12:41–48;

20:45 ff.). Their characteristic feature is their "objective self-contradiction" (J. Schniewind), or rather their self-deluding blindness (Matt. 23:16 ff.). Outwardly they appeared to be men of God, but in reality they were sinners who were guilty in God's sight because they did everything possible to repel and ward off the salvation which comes in Jesus. That is why Jesus characterized them as hypokritai in the series of woes he pronounced on them which are scarcely without parallel in severity (Matt. 23:13 ff.; cf. Lk. 11:42–52).

4. anhypokritos is an adj. only found in the Epistles. In 3 of the 6 instances it is used to qualify love, agapē (Rom. 12:9; 2 Cor. 6:6), and brotherly love, philadelphia (1 Pet. 1:22). Such → love comes from an open and genuine heart without ulterior motives. It does not deliberately put on show. The same is said of faith in two places (1 Tim. 1:5; 2 Tim. 1:5). This adj. expresses the fact that → faith is not affected by considerations of expediency. It grows spontaneously out of the union of the Christian with the living Christ, and, rooted in the heart, it finds its expression in a transparent life. This is also true of the → wisdom that comes from above (Jas. 3:17). W. Günther

ψεύδομαι

ψεύδομαι (pseudomai), lie, deceive by lying; ψευδής (pseudēs), deceitful, mendacious, a liar; ψεῦδος (pseudos), a lie; ψεύστης (pseustēs), a liar; ἀψευδής (apseudēs), guileless, truthful.

CL Though these words occur in Gk. from the time of Homer, the etymology is not clear. The noun pseudos means a lie, the antithesis of the → truth, alētheia (cf. Plato, Hippias Minor 370e). The only part of the vb. used in the NT is the mid. pseudomai, lie, or deceive by lying (12 instances). The following derivatives also occur in the NT: (a) pseudēs, untruthful, deceitful; and as a noun, liar (3 times); (b) pseudos, lie (11 times); (c) ho pseustēs, liar (11 times); (d) apseudēs, candid (once). Apart from compound words, such as pseudomartyreō, give false witness, which also occur in the Synoptics, there are a number of words beginning with pseud- (false-) which are found mainly in Pauline and Johannine writings.

OT In the LXX pseudomai is primarily used to translate Heb. kāḥaš, deny, disclaim, act secretively, deceive, lie. pseudos is the equivalent of Heb. šeqer, fraud, deception, falsehood.

1. The OT proclaims that God is truthful. He and his word can be trusted (→ Faith, art. peithomai; → Truth). When salvation or calamity is prophesied, it is also fulfilled. "God is not a man that he should lie. . . . Has he said and will he not do it? Or has he spoken, and will he not fulfil it?" (Num. 23:19; cf. 1 Sam. 15:29). The God-ness of God is proved by the truth of his word and his faithfulness in → fulfilling it.

2. Man, however, has fallen prey to a lie; he has dissociated himself from God, and does not let him be the Lord who, in truth, he is. The → prophets make the accusation that God's people have fallen prey to a lie. Instead of trusting their Lord, they rely on their own strength and on political alliances. They listen to false prophets (Jer. 5:31; Ezek. 13:19 and after), who flatter them and give them false prophecies of salvation, who preach about "drinking and strong drink" (Mic. 2:11), and who use whitewash over their sins (Ezek. 22:28; → Black, White). Hosea proclaimed the charge from God, "You have ploughed iniquity, you have reaped injustice, you have eaten the fruit of lies" (10:13). The most serious accusation was that the people have put their faith in idols instead of in God (→ Image, art. eidōlon) which the prophets call lies. "Their lies have led them astray" (Amos 2:4). Lies have become their refuge (Isa. 28:15), and they have renounced their God (Isa. 59:13; Jer. 5:12). Lying, in the eyes of the prophets, is not so much an ethical offence as a basic moral attitude, which turns its back on the true God. It therefore falls prey to the delusion of the lie, as it does to the "nothingness" of existence (→ Empty). To put one's trust in a delusory lie instead of in the true God is called by Isaiah a "covenant with death" (28:15). God's judgment falls on all who deny him and preach lies: "Because you have uttered delusions and have seen lies, therefore behold, I am against you, says the LORD GOD" (Ezek. 13:8; cf. Isa. 28:17). Only a remnant will survive God's judgment – those "who do no wrong and who speak no lies" (Zeph. 3:13).

3. As in the prophets, so also in the Pss. those who turn from God are described as liars. "The wicked go astray from the womb, they err from their birth, speaking of lies" (Ps. 58:3). "I said in my alarm, All men are liars" (Ps. 116:11 RV mg.). But the devout man holds firm to God: "Blessed is the man who makes the Lord his trust, and does not turn to the proud, to those who go astray after false gods! [MT kāzāḇ, lie; LXX manias pseudeis, lying fooleries]" (Ps. 40:4; MT 40:5; LXX 39:5). God makes an end of all liars (Ps. 5:6).

4. In the laws of the OT there is no explicit, general prohibition against lying, but it can plainly be deduced from a whole collection of individual examples where lying is specifically forbidden. Most notably, there is the command not to bear false witness (Exod. 20:16; cf. Prov. 21:28). Such a thing would be particularly reprehensible, because, according to OT law, judgment can be given solely on the basis of the evidence of two → witnesses (cf. Num. 35:30; Deut. 17:6 f.; 19:15 ff.). There are further prohibitions: against perjury (Lev. 19:12; → Deny) and against embezzlement of stolen or lost property (Lev. 6:2 f. [MT 5:21 f.]). Lev. 19:11 relates them: "You shall not steal, nor deal falsely, nor lie to one another."

5. Rabbinic texts likewise declare that God has nothing to do with lies. He "created everything in the world, except for lies, which he did not create . . . men concieved those in their own hearts" (Pes.R. 24 (125b)). In San. 103a four groups of men are named who will not see God: scoffers, hypocrites, liars and slanderers. False evidence given against a neighbour is reckoned by God "as if you were to declare that I had not created the world in six days" (Pes.R. 21 107b). To bear false witness against a neighbour is to bear false witness against God.

6. What could be observed in the OT and in Rab. writings is stated even more emphatically in the Qumran writings. Lies belong on the side of God's adversary and to the powers of darkness. The "ways of the spirit of falsehood" include "wickedness and lies" (1QS 4:9). Lies are the mark of those who belong to the godless just as the members of God's community are always called "sons of truth". Belial (→ Satan) uses lies to lead the godly astray from God; hence several times in CD and 1QpHab a historical opponent of the sect who is mentioned is referred to as the "Liar" or the "Spouter of Lies". But God saves the godly from the "jealousy of the teachers of lies" who "scheme against him a devilish scheme" (1QH 4:10). In the → judgment all lies will be destroyed along with the powers of darkness, and men will be cleansed from all their terrible delusions: for God will "sprinkle them with the Spirit of Truth as one sprinkles water for purification." But the godly man already confesses: "I will not keep Belial within my heart, and in my mouth shall be heard no folly or deceitful lie" (1QS 10:22).

NT In the NT 15 different words contain the root pseud- (false). These are found in nearly all the NT writings, but whereas the Synoptic Gospels make only very sparing use of them, they play an important role in Johannine and Pauline writings. Besides the simple use of vb., noun and adj. (pseudomai, lie; pseudos, lie; pseustēs, liar; pseudēs, deceitful), which comprise the major part of the NT instances, there are numerous compound words. These include: pseudadelphos, false brother (2 Cor. 11:26; Gal. 2:4; → Brother); pseudapostolos, false apostle (2 Cor. 11:13; → Apostle); pseudodidaskalos, false teacher (2 Pet. 2:1; → Teach); pseudologos, speaking lies (1 Tim. 4:2); pseudomartyria, false witness (Matt. 15:19; 26:59); pseudomartys, one who gives false witness (Matt. 26:60; 1 Cor. 15:15; → Witness); pseudoprophētēs, false prophet (Matt. 7:15; 24:11, 24; Mk. 13:22; Lk. 6:26; Acts 13:6; 2 Pet. 2:1; 1 Jn. 4:1; Rev. 16:13; 19:20; 20:10; → Prophet); and pseudochristos, false Christ (Matt. 24:24; Mk. 13:22).

1. (a) The NT takes up the OT witness to the truthfulness and truth of God. Tit. 1:2 speaks of God as the apseudēs theos, God who does not lie. God's → truth does not come to light in the unveiling of being in the way that the Greeks understood alētheia. Rather, God's truth is to be seen as truthfulness in the way that he keeps faith with his → promises in history. This was the way that Israelites stressed the unchangeable nature of God's decrees. God added the guarantee of an oath to his promise, "so that through two unchangeable things [i.e. the promise and the oath] in which it is impossible that God should prove false, we who have fled for refuge might have strong encouragement to seize the hope set before us" (Heb. 6:18). Since the God who raised Jesus from the dead is the source of truth, Paul could defend himself by claiming in the last resort that God knows that he is not lying (2 Cor. 11:31; Gal. 1:20).

(b) The revelation of God's truth in Jesus Christ lets the other side of the picture come to light – the lies of men. For men have "exchanged the truth about God for a lie and worshipped and served the creature rather than the Creator" (Rom. 1:25). (On this see further G. Bornkamm, "The Revelation of God's Wrath (Romans 1–3)", Early Christian Experience, 1969, 47–70.) The revelation of God's wrath against human wickedness (Rom. 1:18–3:20) leads in Rom. 3:4 to the confession: "Let God be true though every man be false, as it is written, 'That thou mayest be justified in thy words, and prevail when thou art judged' " (cf. Ps. 116:1 LXX; Zeph. 3; Ps. 51:4 ff.). "Paul, following the Psalmist, pictures a scene in court, where God and men plead against each other; when this happens God is sure to leave the court in the right" (C. K. Barrett, A Commentary on the Epistle to the Romans, 1957, 63).

2. (a) John's Gospel presents a radical dualism of God and the devil in terms of truth and lie, in a manner similar to that of the Qumran texts, which in their way sharpened the OT outlook. Jn. 8:44 describes the devil as a murderer and a liar. Lying and death stand opposed to the truth and life of the Revealer. Lying, here, does not simply mean telling untruths; it connotes the will which is directed against God, the hatred of disbelief, and the resulting futility. Bultmann interprets this in existentialist terms. "It is because of this nothingness that the pseudos kills, because it robs the man who imagines it is real of his own authenticity" (R. Bultmann, The Gospel of John, 1971, 321). See also Jn. 8:41–47, where Jesus accuses his opponents of lying. In Jn. pseudos is not primarily a moral offence; it connotes the hatred which disbelief feels for the truth of the Revealer. Such lying can quite easily think of itself as the height of piety, and it is this that makes it so terrible. It happens everywhere, where men seek their own glory and put up barriers to resist Christ's revelation.

(b) This thought is expanded in 1 Jn. The lie here is that men "make God a liar", when they maintain that they have not sinned (1:10; cf. 5:10). 1 Jn. is also directed against false teachers who preach lies (cf. Rev. 2:2), denying Jesus as the Christ (1 Jn. 2:22). In the Johannine literature "lie" is used in the widest sense to mean hatred of Christ, and in consequence man's life without God, characterized by delusion and death.

3. (a) The antithesis of truth and lie is not only the determining factor which distinguishes between Jesus' disciples and his enemies. It also operates within the church of Christ in the responses of obedience and disobedience (→ Hear) to the word of truth. As an ethical problem, lying is not on the same level as quarrelsomeness or unchastity. These belong to the imperfect state of man on earth and as such stand in continual need of sanctification (→ Holy). But lying, like loving, is the expression of one of the basic aspects of the human condition which is determined either by the power of lies or by the power of love. "Why has Satan filled your heart to lie to the Holy Spirit?" (Acts 5:3). The sin of Ananias was not that he had witheld his property, for he was entitled to dispose of it as he pleased, but that he had lied to God in professing to have given it all to the church whilst retaining something for himself (Acts 5:4).

(b) In 1 Jn., men's false evaluation of themselves in relation to God (see above 2 (a)) means that any contradiction between the confession of faith (→ Confess) and the life of the members of a congregation involves them in lies. To profess fellowship with Christ is incompatible with a continued → walk in darkness (1:6). To profess knowledge of Christ is incompatible with simultaneous disobedience to his commands (2:4). To profess to love God is incompatible with continuing to hate one's brother (4:20). In such cases both the claims and the life of a Christian become a lie, excluding him from the truth of God. Here, too, it is apparent that for 1 Jn. lying is not only a moral offence, but also the manifestation of existence without God.

(c) The admonitions in Eph. and Col. have individual faults in mind, when their readers are told to throw off falsehood and to speak the truth to each other (Eph. 4:25; Col. 3:9). This command can be made, because the Christian has put off "the old man [ton palaion anthrōpon]" (Eph. 4:22; Col. 3:9) and may put on "the new man" [ton kainon anthropon]" (Eph. 4:24; cf. Col. 3:10), and is therefore in the position to stop lying. Rev. also understands lying in specific terms: no liar (pseudēs) or perpetrator of horrible deeds will enter the new → Jerusalem (21:8; cf. 21:27; 22:15). Those who belong to the Lamb stand opposed to liars: "No lie was found on their lips" (14:5). ([Ed.] But as in Jn. and 1 Jn. there is the overtone that lying and falsehood stand in fundamental opposition to God. Thus the Jews at Philadelphia are described as "the synogogue of Satan", who claim to be Jews but lie [3:9]. See also the references to the false prophet [pseudoprophētēs; 16:13; 19:20; 20:10] who leads men to oppose God and the church and who likewise has no part in the new Jerusalem.)

4. In conclusion, we can say that God is the truthful One who is faithful in history and who fulfills his word and his promises. When he reveals himself in Christ, man's godlessness is unmasked and seen to be the lie that it is. A lie is not simply a single act: it is an attitude of existence which determines the whole of life. Because it resists the one who gives life, it is the deceitful accomplice of → death. Such an existence in the "lie" manifests itself in individual lies which reveal who is in control of men. Man without God is trapped in lies, unable to see through the deception and destined for death. Only where the lie is exposed by the truth of Christ and man comes under the Lordship of Christ and becomes a new man can the counterfeit existence based on deceit and untruth be overcome. This is the basis of the Christian ethical demand to stop telling lies.

→ Lead Astray, → Pharisee, → Truth U. Becker, H.-G. Link

(a). W. Beilner, "Hypocrite", EBT II 390 ff.; H. Conzelmann, pseudos etc., TDNT IX 594–603; D. Hill, The Gospel of Matthew, 1972; M. D. Hooker, "Were there false teachers at Colossae?" in B. Lindars and S. S. Smalley, eds., Christ and Spirit in the New Testament. In Honour of Charles Francis Digby Moule, 1973, 315–32; T. Overholt, The Threat of Falsehood: A Study in the Theology of the Book of Jeremiah, 1970; S. van Tilborg, The Jewish Leaders in Matthew, 1972; U. Wilckens, hypokrinomai etc., TDNT VIII 559–71.

(b). W. Beilner, Christus und die Pharisäer, 1959, 227–35; H. D. Betz, Der Apostel Paulus und die sokratische Tradition. Eine exegetische Untersuchung zu seiner "Apologie" 2 Korinther 10–13, BHTh 45, 1972; G. Bornkamm, "Heuchelei", *RGG*³ III 305 f.; G. F. Else, Wiener Studien 72, 1959, 75–107; P. Joüon, "hypokritēs dans l'évangile et hébreu hanaf", Recherches de Science Religieuse 20, 1930, 312–17; J. Klein, E. Fuchs, G. Gawlick, "Wahrhaftigkeit, Wahrheit", *RGG*³ VI 1511 ff.; M. A. Klopfenstein, Die Lüge nach dem Alten Testament, 1964; and kāḥaš, THAT I 825–28; W. G. Kümmel, "Die Weherufe über die Schriftgelehrten und Pharisäer (Mt. 23, 13–26), Antijudaismus im Neuen Testament?", Abhandlungen zum christlich-jüdischen Dialog, II, 1967, 141 f.; L. Lemme, "Heuchelei", RE III 21 ff.; A. Lesky, "Hypokrites", Festschrift U. E. Paoli, 1964, 469–76; J. Maier, "Weitere Stücke aus dem Nahumkommentar aus der Höhle 4 von Qumran", Judaica 18, 1962, 2–5–50; J. Schniewind, Das Evangelium nach Matthäus, NTD 2, 1968¹²; N. H. Søe, "Wahrhaftigkeit", EKL III 1716 ff.

Life

The term life denotes the organic functioning of plants, animals and men. Life and → death are the opposite categories basic to all living things; both categories relate to and interpret the other. Human life is unique. It is not merely instinctive but is capable of self-realization and open to formative influences. In Gk. a distinction is made between zōē which tends to mean life as a vital, natural force, and bios which has a stronger ethical content and means manner of life. It is instructive that the NT takes over the first of these two words to denote that fellowship with God which men enjoy as a specific gift from God himself. For further information on the Gk. and the biblical views → Death.

βίος

βίος (bios), life; βιόω (bioō), live; βιωτικός (biōtikos), pertaining to life.

CL The noun bios (since Homer; derived from the corresponding vb. bioō and related to Lat. vivere, live, and Eng. "quick") denotes life in its concrete outward manifestations. It is used generally for "lifetime" or "duration of life" (Plato, Symp. 181d, 203d; Leg. 6, 770a; 7, 802a), and specifically for an individual's way of life, which, however, is seen not as a once-for-all historical event but as a "type" of supertemporal behaviour existing alongside other possible "types" (Plato, Leg. 2, 663b; Rep. 617d ff.). The Greeks' ethical view of life is expressed with great clarity by Aristotle, who distinguishes between the following ways of life: pleasure-loving (apolaustikos); active (praktikos) or political (politikos); and contemplative (theōrētikos) (Eth.Nic. 1, 3p 1095b, 14 ff.). Later bios acquired the concrete meanings livelihood, trade, wealth (cf. biōtikos, pertaining to life, everyday, Polybius 4, 73, 8; Diogenes Laertius 7, 22; Epictetus, Dissertationes 1, 26, 3, 7).

OT In the LXX bios usually translates yāmîm, days, the plural of yôm, day, when it renders a Heb. equivalent. Following OT historical thought, the LXX adopts mainly the temporal meaning of bios, i.e. the duration of life (cf. the Heb. expression "a man's days"). The word does not occur at all in the Pentateuch or the Prophets, while in Cant. 8:7 it means wealth, and in Prov. 31:14 food.

The meaning of the word is clearest in Job, where it occurs 13 times. Man's life, in all its wretchedness, is likened to forced labour (7:1), a shadow (8:9), vanity (7:16), sorrow (15:20). By contrast, Wisdom promises the godly man length of life (Prov. 3:2), a gift which she holds in her right hand (Prov. 3:16), while the godless are punished with a short fleeting life (Wis. 2:1, 4, 5).

In 4 Macc., Hel. influence replaces the temporal meaning of bios with an ethical meaning. Just as Aristotle had applied a variety of adjs. to the noun (see above CL), so 4 Macc. describes it as a way of life which is true to the law (nomimos, 5:36; 7:15); upright (orthos, 1:15); pleasant (hēdys, 8:23); even divine (theios, 7:7).

NT Unlike zōē, bios is surprisingly rare in the NT, occurring only 11 times (bioō only once, 1 Pet. 4:2). All three meanings normal in profane Gk. are to be found, but with characteristic shifts of emphasis.

1. bios has a clearly temporal meaning (duration of life) only in the Koine version of 1 Pet. 4:3; likewise bioō in the previous verse. In 1 Tim. 2:2 and 2 Tim. 2:4 it has the more general sense of (everyday) life, a meaning shared on occasion with zōē.

2. The NT uses bios mostly (6 times) in the concrete, somewhat external sense which it had acquired in late antiquity: that of wealth, fortune. Mk. 12:44 and Lk. 21:4 speak of the poor widow putting "her whole living" into the treasury, while Lk. 15:12, 30 tells of the prodigal son wasting his living on harlots. Similarly, according to 1 Jn. 3:17, real love shows itself in the concrete act of sharing this world's goods with a brother in need.

3. The specifically Gk. use of bios to mean "manner of life" (see above CL) is only hinted at in the NT. "The pride of life" in 1 Jn. 2:16 refers to ostentatious living, and in Lk. 8:14 there is an allusion to "the cares, riches and pleasures of life". In other words, the NT attitude here is purely negative. The reason why this specifically Gk. conception of bios is not adopted by the NT is that according to the latter, man does not live his life for himself or to develop his own virtues, but is answerable to God for living in the service of others. H.-G. Link

ζωή

ζωή (zōē), life; ζάω (zaō), live; ζῷον (zōon), living creature; ζῳογονέω (zōogoneō), procreate, give life to, keep alive; ζῳοποιέω (zōopoieō), make alive, give life to.

CL zaō, contracted to zō, and its corresponding noun zōē, are both found from Homer onwards. Somewhat later, during the period of Herodotus and the precursors of Socrates, the noun zōon appears, covering men (logika zōa, rational creatures) and animals (aloga zōa, irrational creatures) as distinct from inanimate objects. Apart from its use in Heb. 13:11 and 2 Pet. 2:12, zōon in the NT is confined to Rev. and refers to the four living creatures by the heavenly throne (→ Cherub). The two compound vbs. zōogoneō and zōopoieō stem from a still later period, that of Aristotle and Theophrastus. Both vbs. refer to the life-processes of nature, usually the procreation of animals and the growth of plants. This is particularly true of zōogoneō, which therefore occurs sporadically and only incidentally in the NT. zōopoieō, on the other hand, is a more technical word occasionally used in soteriological contexts where there is no reference to natural history.

1. In classical Gk., life refers in the first place to that living quality of → nature which is shared alike by men, animals and plants (for what follows cf. R. Bultmann, TDNT II 832–43). For the Greeks, therefore, life belongs to the category of natural science, being characterized by the power of self-movement as distinct from mechanical movement (Plato, Leg. 10, 895c ff; Phaedr. 245c ff.; Aristotle, An. 2, 2 p 412b, 16 f.; p 413a, 22 ff.). The cause of life is considered to be the psychē (→ soul), which Diogenes of Apollonia imagined as an ètherial substance (aēr), while Xenophanes thought of it as a fluttering breath (pneuma) (H. Diels, Die Fragmente der Vorsokratiker, I, 425, 42). Just as psychē and zōē belong very closely together in Gk. thought, so do psychē and sōma (→ body) (Plato, Phaedr. 105c ff.; Aristotle, An. 2, 1p 412b, 7 ff.); natural life is made up of the components soul and body.

Not only each single individual but also the whole universe is thought of as a living organism (zōon empsychon, Plato, Tim. 30b) or as a world with a soul (kosmos empsychos). Even the gods are imagined largely as living creatures (zōa) having bipartite natures analogous to the human body and soul (Aristotle, Metaph. 11, 7 p 1072b, 28 ff.). Thus Plato distinguishes between living creatures which are thnēta (mortal, i.e. men), and athanata (immortal, i.e. gods) (Tim. 38c ff.).

The Greeks considered a third component to be specific to human life, namely, the → reason, mind, or understanding (nous). While the sōma and to some extent the psychē go to make up natural life, the nous is a divine element which enters human life from outside, enhancing it beyond the natural life e.g. of animals and producing a type of existence capable of various alternatives (→ bios). This idea is expressed not merely by the variety of dative constructions which can be found with zaō (e.g. patridi for the fatherland, Demosthenes, Orationes 7:17; patri, for one's father, Dionysius of Halicarnassus, 3, 17, 7), but also by the adjs., advs. and preps. which can be added and which qualify "life" as being good (agathē), orderly (kosmiōs), reasonable (kata logon) or bad (aischra) (Plato, Rep. 521a; Leg. 7, 806e; 3, 944c).

2. Among the Stoics the slogan kata physin zēn, to live according to nature, assumed great importance. This phrase, however, does not imply instinctive existence, but rather life which is virtuous (kat' aretēn) or lived according to reason (kata logon), and which enables the man who is otherwise "dead" to fulfil the purpose of his existence (eu zēn, to live well; cf. Epictetus, Dissertationes, 1, 9, 19; 2, 9, 7 f.; 3, 1, 25 f.; 4, 11, 3). The phrase → bios kata physin, life according to nature, is also found, in this same sense. Whereas the Greeks of the classical period saw their ideal as active involvement in the public affairs of the polis, in the Hellenistic period the Stoics idealized complete withdrawal from the outward bustle of the world, and the cultivation of one's own inner life.

3. While the Stoics distinguished between outward and inward life, neo-Platonism differentiated between life in this world and life beyond this world. According to Plotinus, man indeed possesses natural life, but the life which is perfect (teleia) and true (alēthinē) is to be found only in the one divine realm of the One (hen). The way to this true life leads via abnegation of the body, and cleansing (katharsis) from all earthly things, to the moment of sight or vision (thea), when man attains the true life and becomes one with it (cf. Plotinus, Enneads 1, 4, 3; 6, 7, 31; and often). In other words, life is seen as an upward ascent.

4. Gnosticism, by contrast, saw life as a descent. zōē, often associated with phōs, light (e.g. Corp.Herm. 1, 12), is something essentially divine, a tangible fluid in the divine world, definitely a physical entity, but at the same time something indestructible and possessed of lifegiving power; in a word immortality (athanasia; Corp.Herm. 1, 28). In the human world this pure divine life is intermingled with matter, being imprisoned in the body. It is not present in its fullness but only in the form of tiny, scattered sparks of life. Hence, one must break free from the prison-house of the body in order to enjoy, at least temporarily, the ecstatic vision (gnōsis, → knowledge), i.e. to attain to the unity which exists between the inner sparks of life and the supernatural life of the divine world (Corp.Herm. 1, 6). This true life is attained on earth only in fleeting moments of → ecstasy. Its full enjoyment must be reserved for the future, when all the particles of life and light presently scattered within matter reunite in the divine world (Corp.Herm. 12, 15:14, 10; and passim).

Thus in the history of Gk. philosophy two trends are visible within this area of thought: first, true life is progressively divorced from concrete, everyday events and transferred to a supernatural, divine world; and secondly, life is increasingly seen as something tangible, "scientific", so that true human life manifests itself not so much in the continuum of historical events as in discontinuous moments of ecstatic vision, totally divorced from history.

OT 1. The relevant Heb. vocabulary is as follows: noun, ḥayyîm; vb., ḥāyâh; adj., ḥay. The Israelites in the OT viewed life as something thoroughly natural, vital and pertaining to this world. The Gk. division of life into body, soul and reason was a completely alien concept to them. It is true that in Heb. nepeš, soul (e.g. Jos. 10:28), or bāśār, flesh, (e.g. Gen. 6:13) can be used in place of ḥayyîm. But when this occurs it is an example not of analytical Gk. thought but of the synthetic oriental approach, where the part represents the whole, and where the whole of human life is included but viewed from a given standpoint. In those passages where the life is said to be the → blood (Lev. 17:14 LXX: hē . . . psychē pasēs sarkos haima autou estin; cf. Lev. 17:11; Gen. 9:4; Deut. 12:23), this is to be understood not as a scientific statement, but rather as an assumption made against the background of early oriental ritual (cf. the rite of the Passover in Exod. 12). The aim is to draw attention not so much to a life at man's disposal but rather to the fact that life is not man's to dispose of. The Israelites thought of life not as a natural or scientific phenomenon, but primarily as duration, the days of a man's life which are granted him by Yahweh, the Lord of life (Gen. 25:7; 47:28; Deut. 32:39; → bios OT). Long life was considered to be special evidence of the divine → blessing promised to the obedient (Gen. 15:15; 25:8; Deut. 5:16; 30:19; Prov. 3:1 f.; cf. 2 Ki. 20:1 ff.). The power of death, on the other hand, invades human life in the form of sickness, hatred or loneliness (Ps. 18:5 f.; 33:19; 56:13; 116:8; → Death OT). In common with orientals generally, the Israelites were strangers to the Gk. ideal of a life which is aloof and contemplative (theōrētikos; cf. bios CL). Rather, their ideal was a life of active involvement, a life expressed, e.g. by → hunger and thirst (e.g. Jdg. 15:18 f.), → hatred and → love (e.g. Gen. 24:27), → desires and lusts (e.g. 1 Sam. 1; 2 Sam. 13). To the Israelites, as to orientals in general, the sheer vitality, concreteness and diversity of life were a source of the utmost delight (1 Ki. 3:11 ff.; Prov. 3:16; Job 2:4); life synonymous with health, well-being and success (Mal. 2:5; Prov. 2:19; Ps. 56:13; Eccl. 9:9). An essential feature of life, however, was attendance at the sanctuary. Here the worshipper joined in fellowship with the living in praising Yahweh, the Creator of life, and was even granted the occasional privilege of gazing upon him albeit indirectly (Exod. 33:18 ff.; Ps. 27:4; 65:5; 84:5; 142:7; see below OT, 5). Only in extreme despair was there any thought of death which would put an end to a life that had become intolerable (Jer. 20:14 ff.; Job 3:11 f.; Tob. 3:10).

2. While the Israelites were unanimous in their conviction that Yahweh is to be praised as the author of life (Jer. 17:13; Ps. 36:9; 139:13 ff.), the Yahwist's reflections on the origin of life produce some idiosyncratic statements on related issues not otherwise touched on in the OT. According to Gen. 2:7, Yahweh formed man from the dust of the ground and breathed divine breath into the lifeless body so that he became a living being (nepeš ḥayyâh). Here the distinction is not, as the LXX translation psychē zōsa (living soul) suggests, between the body and the soul, but rather between the → body and the life. The whole physical, emotional and intellectual life of man stems from God. If he withdraws his breath of life, then man crumbles to dust (Ps. 104:29 f.; Job 34:14 f.; cf. G. von Rad, Old Testament Theology, I, 1962, 149; and Genesis, 1963², 71–83).

The trials and tribulations common to man – toil and failure, shame and fear, the pains of childbirth – are said by the Yahwist to have been caused by man's primeval fall into sin (Gen. 3). That which the Yahwist sees as divine punishment is not so much death (which before the Exile was accepted as one of the given factors of the human situation; cf. Gen. 2:17; 3:19); rather it is the shortening of the life span (Gen. 6:3), and in particular the various trials of life. These are the discords which mar all human existence, the original harmony of life having been broken (cf. von Rad, Genesis, 83–99).

3. The specifically Israelite view of life is expressed most clearly in Deut. At the → feast commemorating the renewal of the → covenant, the worshipping community is confronted by the word of Yahweh with a choice between life and death (Deut. 30:1–20). The obedient are promised blessing, prosperity and life, while the disobedient can expect nothing but curse, adversity and death (Deut. 30:15, 19).

The living power of God's word extends even to man's physical existence: "Man does not live by bread alone, but . . . by everything that proceeds out of the mouth of Yahweh" (Deut. 8:3). Deut. is most insistent that true life comes not from magical rites and ceremonies but from keeping the word of Yahweh. For this word "is no trifle, but it is your life" (Deut. 32:47; cf. Lev. 18:5).

4. In the same way the prophets call Israel back to Yahweh; this is Israel's only chance of life, threatened as he is with imminent disaster (Amos 5:4, 14). Isaiah laments over the scoffers among the people who have entered into a covenant with death (Isa. 28:15). Jeremiah sets the way of life and of death (Jer. 21:8) once more before a faithless Israel, that has forsaken the source of life (Jer. 2:13; 17:13). Ezekiel stresses repeatedly that the righteous man shall live, while the godless man must die (Ezek. 3:18 ff.; 14:20; 18:4, 9, 13, 17, 20 ff.; 33:11; 37:5). Here the gift of natural life becomes an integral part of the → covenant, obedience to which means prosperity and blessing, while the transgressor forfeits his right to live. The accounts of Ezek.'s visions occasionally contain the phrase rûaḥ haḥayyâh (LXX pneuma zōēs), which is a paraphrase for the creative, life-giving power of God (Ezek. 1:20 f.; 10:17; 37:5, 10).

Jeremiah's distinction between the two ways is taken up in the wisdom literature, where → Wisdom offers to guide men along the pathway to life, while the ways of → folly lead to death (Prov. 2:18 f.; 3:2, 18; 4:4, 10, 22; 5:6; 6:23; 8:35; 9:11, 18 and passim).

5. In the Psalms Yahweh is portrayed as he who gives life and delivers from → death (Ps. 16:11; 27:1; 31:4 f. and passim). With the passage of time, however, godly men increasingly found that their expectations of long life and prosperity were utterly contradicted by their day-to-day experiences. Hence in later Pss. the traditional view of life becomes relative, and true life is seen as arising from fellowship with Yahweh. "Thy loving kindness is better than life" (Ps. 63:3). Life is now viewed metaphorically in terms of spirituality and life-mysticism (G. von Rad, The Problem of the Hexateuch and Other Essays, 1966, 258 f.) which seeks refuge and finds satisfaction in living fellowship with Yahweh (Ps. 16:5, 9 ff.; 23; 36:8 ff.). Ps. 73 goes a step further. The assurance of Yahweh's nearness, and the sense of security which this brings, give the worshipper a hope beyond death: "My flesh and my heart may fail, but God is . . . my portion for ever" (Ps. 73:26). Faced with the necessity of justifying the ways of God to men, and persuaded of Yahweh's faithfulness to his covenant promises, the OT believer finds himself being led to hope for better things beyond the grave, i.e. his view of life becomes eschatological. "Wholly apart from magic and mythology there grew up a confidence based simply and solely upon the certainty of an irrefragable relationship with God" (G. von Rad, op. cit., 264; cf. Ps. 49:16; Job 19:25 ff.; → Death, art. thanatos, OT 2 (e)).

In apocalyptic the hope of a future life, hitherto held by individual psalmists, has become an expectation of future resurrection now held by the whole nation (Isa. 26:19; Dan. 12:2; cf. SB I, 885 f.; D. S. Russell, The Method and Message of Jewish Apocalyptic 200 B.C.–A.D. 100, 1964, 353–90).

6. The LXX frequently reinterprets the OT view of life in terms of the Gk. zōē (cf. LXX Deut. 32:39; Ps. 55:14 [56:13]; 118 [119]; Prov. 16:15; Job 19:25; 33:30).

To a large extent, late Judaism adopted the OT view of life (Meg. 27b; Taan.

20b; Ber. 55a; cf. SB IV 267, 275, 629), but under Hellenistic influence true life was increasingly seen as the gift of eternal life (zōē aiōnios), life without end (4 Macc. 7:19; 15:3; 16:25; 17:12; 18:19; and often). Hence, as in the NT, eternal life could be referred to simply as zōē (Test.Jud. 25:1) or zēn (Pss.Sol. 15:15). From the Maccabean period onwards belief in a hereafter, → resurrection and eternal life was widespread among Jewish theologians (cf. SB III 481 ff.). As in gnosticism, so also in late Judaism zōē is frequently found in association with phōs, light, and gnōsis, knowledge (cf. Hos. 10:12 LXX).

In Hellenistic Judaism belief in the → resurrection of the dead was largely replaced by the doctrine of the immortality of the → soul (Wis. 8:19 f.; Josephus, War 7, 8, 7). Earthly life lost significance (Wis. 4:8 f.), or was even regarded as the prison-house of the soul (Philo, Leg.All. 2, 57; 3, 21, 151); the act of dying gained ever-increasing significance (4 Macc. 15:12; 2 Macc. 8:21; Josephus, War 7, 8, 7), and true life, i.e. life which is athanatos, immortal, was transferred to the world beyond (4 Macc. 15:3; Pss.Sol. 3:16; Philo, Op.Mund. 155 f.).

On the other hand, the usage found in the Qumran texts is strikingly similar to that of the OT, the only new feature being the rather formal association of life with the blessings of salvation (1QS 3:7; 4:7; 1 QH 2:20, 31; 9:66; 1QM 1:9; 12:3; CD 3:20).

NT References to the important matter of life occur, as one might expect, in all the books of the NT. It is in the theology of Paul and of John that the doctrine of life is most clearly expressed, and it is evident that the NT teaching contains elements which are of OT, late Jewish and also Gk. origin.

1. (a) The OT view of life is recalled most strongly in the Synoptic Gospels. Natural life is regarded as a priceless possession (Mk. 8:37). Jesus is frequently called upon to exercise his power in order that sick or dying men might live (Mk. 5:23, aorist zēsē, that she may live; cf. Jn. 4:47 ff.) or even to restore to earthly life those who are already dead (Mk. 5:35 ff.; Lk. 7:11 f.; Jn. 11:1 ff.). As in the OT, temporal categories are used for life (Lk. 1:75; cf. Heb. 7:3; Rom. 7:1 ff.), which is regarded as something dynamic, but at the same time bounded and transient (Acts 17:28; Jas. 4:14). It is no merely natural occurrence, but an event which can succeed or fail (Lk. 15:13, asōtōs zēn, to live dissolutely; 2 Tim. 3:12, eusebōs zēn, to live a god-fearing life). True life depends on the word of God (Matt. 4:4, quoting Deut. 8:3), while to live away from God is described as being dead (Lk. 15:24, 32). The basic necessities of life, such as food and clothing, are by no means despised; rather they are gratefully received as gifts of the Creator (Matt. 6:25 ff.; Lk. 12:15). God, who can kill and make alive (Matt. 10:28; Rom. 4:17), is the undisputed Creator (Acts 17:25), the Lord (Lk. 12:20; Acts 10:42; Jas. 4:15) and the embodiment of life; he is the living God (Matt. 16:16; 26:63) and the God of the living (Matt. 22:32; Mk. 12:27; Lk. 20:38).

(b) Over against the present life there stands the life to come (Mk. 10:30; 1 Tim. 4:8; "Godliness is of value in every way, as it holds promise for the present life and also for the life to come [zōēs tēs nyn kai tēs mellousēs]"). It is described as "eternal life" (zōē aiōnios; Matt. 19:16; par. Mk. 10:17, Lk. 18:18; Matt. 25:46; cf. 2 Tim. 1:10, zōē kai aphtharsia, life and immortality). One attains this not by reason of the immortality of the soul – this Gk. idea is completely foreign to the NT – but as a gift from God who raises the dead (Matt. 22:31 f. par. Mk. 12:26 f., Lk. 20:36 f.). The fact that the future life is occasionally referred to by the use of zōē alone, i.e. without any qualifying phrase (see above OT 6), indicates that such life is regarded as real and true, the very life of God himself (Matt. 18:18; Mk. 9:43, 45). There is no implication here, however, of the devaluation of earthly life found in later Hellenism. On the contrary, man's relationship to God's will in this present life determines his destiny in the life to come (Matt. 19:16 par. Mk. 10:17, Lk. 18:18; Lk. 10:25). Matt. 7:13 f. (cf. Lk. 13:23 f.) takes up the idea of the two ways found in Deut. 30:19; Jer. 21:8, Wisdom and inter-Testamental literature, Qumran and later Christian writings (cf. Prov. 8:20; 9:6; 12:15; 16:25; 2 Esd. 7:7 ff.; Test.Ash. 1:3, 5; Pirke Aboth 2:12 f.; 1QS 3:20; Did. 1:1; Barn. 18:1; → Walk, art. hodos; see also above OT 4). This close relationship between the present and the future life is put most impressively in the parable of the last → judgment (Matt. 25:31 ff.): the disobedient will suffer eternal punishment, while the righteous will enter into eternal life (Matt. 25:46).

2. (a) Paul's view of life is deeply affected by the → resurrection of Christ from the dead (1 Cor. 15:4), which, being an accomplished fact, has proved the power of divine life over death (Rom. 14:9). The apostle sees Christ as the very embodiment of God's living power, conquering death and raising the dead (2 Cor. 13:4). Life means Christ's everlasting life, life from the dead and beyond the grave.

Through his resurrection Christ, the Last → Adam, has become the author of a new life for mankind (Rom. 5:12 ff.; 1 Cor. 15:20 ff.). The life of Christians is not their own life but the life of Christ: Christ lives in them (Gal. 2:20; Phil. 1:21), they live the life of Christ (2 Cor. 4:10). Their life is justified by Christ (Rom. 5:18), and by his life they will be saved (Rom. 5:10). The life of Christ is mediated to Christians neither as a power (as with the gnostics), nor through mystic union, but by the → word of life (Phil. 2:16; cf. 2 Tim. 1:10; Tit. 1:2 f.) and by the creative power of the quickening → Spirit (Rom. 8:2, 6, 10 f.; 1 Cor. 15:45).

(b) The new Spirit-wrought life of believers (Rom. 6:4) does not try to escape from everyday life into Stoic or gnostic indifference and asceticism. Rather, as Paul sees it, the Christian is to serve his fellow-men responsibly, in whatever historical situation he finds himself. Since he no longer lives for himself (Rom. 14:7; 2 Cor. 5:15), but for God (Rom. 6:10 f.) and Christ (Rom. 14:8; 2 Cor. 5:15), his life shows positive, tangible results (Gal. 5:25, 26) as he follows in the footsteps of Christ and takes up Christ's → cross (2 Cor. 4:9 f.). Hence, Paul can make the paradoxical statement: "We are treated . . . as dying, and behold we live" (2 Cor. 6:8 f.), since life comes from and through death. Not living for oneself means having an attitude of love for others (Rom. 13:8–10; 14:11 ff.). It is important to notice the datives and syn-constructions which Paul uses with zaō, in order to teach that "living for . . ." and "living with . . ." belong to the very structure of life.

(c) In the believer's new life there is a tension between present and future, indicative and imperative (Gal. 5:25). His new life exists already but has not yet been fully manifested (Col. 3:3, 4). Christ's → resurrection is the pledge of our own future resurrection to an eternal life where death and all the imperfections of the present creation will be things of the past (Rom. 8:18 ff.). "For as in Adam all die, so also in Christ shall all be made alive" (zōopoiēthēsontai, 1 Cor. 15:22; → Adam).

The new life is not confined to historical time, but points forward to eternal life when the last enemy, death, is vanquished (1 Cor. 15:26, 28; Rom. 6:22; Gal. 6:8). Paul depicts the transition from temporal to eternal life in terms of cosmic drama, miraculous transformation and rapture (1 Thess. 4:13–17; 1 Cor. 15:20 ff., 35 ff., 51 ff.). In this he is following apocalyptic tradition, using apocalyptic imagery and symbolism. He does not engage, however, in the speculations of late Judaism, but confines himself to figurative hints concerning the form which the future life will take. It will be a bodily life (1 Cor. 15:35 ff.; 2 Cor. 5:1 ff.; note that the Jews could not conceive of life in a disembodied state; → Body). It will involve seeing → face to face (1 Cor. 13:12; cf. 2 Cor. 5:7), entering into the fullness of → righteousness, → peace and → joy (Rom. 14:17), → glory (doxa, 2 Cor. 3:8 f.) or glorification (Rom. 8:17), but above all being with Christ forever (1 Thess. 4:17; 2 Cor. 5:8; Phil. 1:23).

3. (a) Jn. presents the Word as being eternal life even before his incarnation. He has lived eternally with God and for the benefit of men (Jn. 1:4; 1 Jn. 1:1 f.), i.e. he is the source of divine life and power both in the old and in the new creation. In his incarnation he is the revelation of God, but he not only brings eternal life by his word (Jn. 6:68; 10:28; 12:50; 17:2); he himself is the true life (1 Jn. 5:20), as his various → "I am" sayings indicate: "I am the bread of life" (Jn. 6:35, 48), "the light of the world (Jn. 8:12), "the resurrection and the life" (Jn. 11:25), "the way, the truth and the life" (Jn. 14:6). The pre-existent Son of the eternal Father is sent into the world to give life to men both by his word and in his own person (Jn. 6:33; 10:10; 1 Jn. 4:9).

(b) The life of God is received by → faith. He who believes in the Son has life (1 Jn. 5:12), eternal life (Jn. 6:40, 47); he has already passed from death to life (Jn. 5:24; 1 Jn. 3:14). The eternal life which is granted to believers expresses itself in love (Jn. 15:9–17) and in joy (Jn. 16:20–24). According to 1 Jn. 3:14, brotherly love is the criterion of true life: "He who does not love remains in death. We know that we have passed out of death into life, because we love the brethren."

(c) Although at many points Jn.'s view of life corresponds to that of the gnostics, he moves in the opposite direction, for whereas the gnostics transferred eternal life to an almost inaccessible world beyond time and space, Jn. brings it right into the present and anchors it firmly to the word, the commandment and the person of Christ (Jn. 17:3). Possessing this eternal life here and now, believers find death and judgment no longer factors to be reckoned with (Jn. 5:24; 11:25), for such life has the seeds of eternity within it (Jn. 4:14; 6:27; 12:25). All that remains for Christ's disciples is to see the divine glory (theōrōsin tēn doxan, Jn. 17:24); and their salvation will be complete (cf. R. Bultmann, TDNT II 870 f.).

4. Rev. combines the → Son of man tradition with the figure of a slain → lamb: "I am the first and the last, and the living one; I died, and behold I am alive for evermore, and I have the keys of Death and Hades" (Rev. 1:17 f.; cf. 1:13 ff.; 4:9 f.). Whereas the Gospel of Jn., with its Hellenistic background, concentrates wholly on the present life, Rev. goes back to Jewish traditions and concerns itself exclusively with the life to come. In the vision of the new → Jerusalem, the mythical, early oriental pictures of the tree of life and the water of life, familiar from the story of the Garden of Eden (Gen. 2:9–17), reappear as symbols of the fulness of life in the new city of God (Rev. 22:2–14, 19; 21:6; 22:1, 17). The vision of the new → heaven and the new earth is the most wide-ranging in its promises: the last enemy, death, will be vanquished (cf. Paul, 1 Cor. 15:26) and our eternal life with God will be utter perfection: "God himself will be with them; he will wipe away every tear from their eyes and death shall be no more, neither shall there be mourning nor crying nor pain any more, for the former things have passed away" (Rev. 21:3 f.). H.-G. Link

→ Adam, → Animal, → Birth, → Creation, → Judgment, → Man, → Death, → Resurrection, → Righteousness, → Sin, → Soul, → Time

(a). K. Barth, CD III 2, "The Creature"; and CD III, 4 "Freedom for Life", 324–64; G. R. Beasley-Murray, "The Contribution of the Book of Revelation to the Christian Belief in Immortality", SJT 27, 1974, 76–93; G. Bornkamm, "Baptism and New Life in Paul (Romans 6)", Early Christian Experience, 1969, 71–86; S. G. F. Brandon, "Life after Death IV. The After-Life in Ancient Egyptian Faith and Practice", ExpT 76, 1964–65, 217–220; F. F. Bruce, "Paul on Immortality", SJT 24, 1971, 457–72; R. Bultmann, Theology of the New Testament, I, 1952, 203–10, 345–52; Primitive Christianity in its Historical Setting, 1956; The Gospel of John, 1971; J. C. Coetzee, "Life in John's Writings and the Qumran Scrolls", Neotestamentica 6, 1972, 48–66; C. H. Dodd, The Interpretation of the Fourth Gospel, 1953, 144–50; W. Eichrodt, Theology of the Old Testament, II, 1967, 496–529; A. J. Feldman, The Concept of Immortality in Judaism Historically Considered, 1964; D. H. Gard, "The Concept of the Future Life according to the Greek Translator of the Book of Job", JBL 73, 1954 137–43; D. Hill, "The Background and Biblical Usage of zōē and zōē aiōnios", Greek Words and Hebrew Meanings: Studies in the Semantics of Soteriological Terms, 1967, 82–201; L. Hodgson, "Life after Death II. The Philosophers: Plato and Kant", ExpT 76, 1964–65, 107 ff.; S. H. Hooke, "Life after Death V. Israel and the After-Life", ExpT 76, 1964–65, 236–39; and "Life after Death VI. The Extra-Canonical Literature", ibid., 273–76; G. E. Ladd, A Theology of the New Testament, 1975, 254–69; W. B. J. Martin, "Life after Death III. The Poets – Victorian and Modern", ExpT 76, 1964–65, 140–43; H. Miskotte, When the Gods are Silent, 1967; C. L. Mitton, "Life after Death VII. The After-Life in the New Testament", ExpT 76, 1964–65, 332–37; S. Mowinckel, He That Cometh, 1956; J. Pedersen, Israel: Its Life and Culture, I–II, 1926, 99–181 (on the soul), 453–96 (on the world of life and death); G. von Rad, Old Testament Theology, I, 1962; II, 1965 (see indexes); Genesis, 1963²; and " 'Righteousness' and 'Life' in the Cultic Language of the Psalms", The Problem of the Hexateuch and Other Essays, 1966, 243–66; H. H. Rowley, "The Good Life" and "Death and Beyond", The Faith of Israel, 1956, 124–49, 150–76; G. von Rad, G. Bertram, R. Bultmann, zaō etc., TDNT II 832–75; D. S. Russell, The Method and Message of Jewish Apocalyptic 200 B.C.–A.D. 100, 1964, 353–90; E. Schmitt, "Life", EBT II 499–503; R. Taylor, "The Eschatological Meaning of Life and Death in the Book of Wisdom I–V", Ephemerides Theologicae Lovanienses 42, 1966, 72–137; V. Taylor, "Life after Death I. The Modern Situation", ExpT 76, 1964–65, 76–79; R. W. Thomas, "The Meaning of the Terms 'Life' and 'Death' in the Fourth Gospel and in Paul", SJT 21, 1968, 199–212; G. Widengren, "Life after Death VIII. Eschatological Ideas in Indian and Iranian Religion", ExpT 76, 1964–65, 364–67; H. W. Wolff, Anthropology of the Old Testament, 1974.

(b). C. Barth, "Leben und Tod", EKL II 1040 ff.; G. Dautzenberg, Sein Leben bewahren. Psyche in den Herrenworten der Evangelien, Studien zum Alten und Neuen Testament 14, 1966; F. Delekat, "Tod, Auferstehung, ewiges Leben", EvTh 21, 1961, 1 ff.; L. Dürr, Die Wertung des Lebens im Alten Testament und antiken Orient, 1926; E. Ebeling, Tod und Leben nach den Vorstellungen der Babylonier, 1931; G. Gerleman, ḥāyâh, THAT I 549–57; M. L. Henry et al., Leben angesichts des Todes, Beiträge zum theologischen Problem des Todes. Helmut Thielicke zum 60. Geburtstag, 1968; A. Hultkranz, "Leben", *RGG*³ IV 248 f.; P. Kleinert, "Zur Idee des Lebens im Alten Testament", ThStKr 68, 1895, 693–732; H.-J. Kraus, "Der lebendige Gott", EvTh 27, 1967, 169–200; J. Lindblom, Das ewige Leben, 1914; O. Michel, "Der Mensch zwischen Tod und Gericht", Deutsche Theologie 8, 1941, 10 ff.; F. Mussner, Zōē. Die Anschauung vom "Leben" im vierten Evangelium unter Berücksichtigung der Johannesbriefe, 1952; H. Pribnow, Die johanneische Anschauung vom "Leben", 1934; O. Procksch, "Der Lebensgedanke im Alten Testament", Christentum und Wissenschaft 4, 1928, 145 ff.; G. Quell, Die Auffassungen des Todes in Israel, 1925; G. von Rad, "Alttestamentliche Glaubensaussagen von Leben und Tod", Allgemeine evangelisch-lutherische Kirchenzeitung 71, 1938, 826 f.; E. Schmitt, Leben in den Weisheitsbüchern Job, Sprüche und Jesus Sirach, 1954; J. N. Sevenster, Leven en Dood in de Evangelien, 1952; B. Steffen, "Ewiges Leben", EKL I 1217 ff.; H. Thielicke, Tod und Leben, 1946; T. C. Vriezen, E. Lohse, D. Georgi, H. Conzelmann, P. Althaus, "Ewiges Leben", *RGG*³ II 799 ff.; W. Zimmerli, " 'Leben' und 'Tod' im Buche des Propheten Ezechiel", ThZ 13, 1957, 494–508.

Light, Shine, Lamp

Light always involves the removal of → darkness, a contrast common to all the word-groups dealt with in this article. phōs denotes brightness, light itself, or that which radiates light, e.g. a lamp or torch. But since light is essential to all life, light and → life are closely linked, as are → darkness and → death. phōs, therefore, has a wide range of associations in figurative language, from the light of life and the soul to salvation or happiness. The vb. lampō and its compounds describe the function or effect of the light coming from an object (or, metaphorically, from men, etc.). phainō is largely synonymous with lampō, but it lays greater stress on the object itself. It therefore means in cl. Gk. to bring to light; in the pass. to become visible, appear; and in the mid. (as most often in the NT) phainomai means to let oneself be seen, to appear as something, to have the appearance of. lychnos originally meant the same as lychnia, i.e. a lampstand for diffusing the beam of the lamp (lampas) placed upon it. Later, however, lychnos came to be used for the lamp itself, and figuratively for the eye. Like phōs, phengos means light, but occurs only three times in the NT: twice with reference to the light of the moon (Matt. 24:29; Mk. 13:24; both quoting Isa. 13:10), and once (Lk. 11:33) referring to the light of a lamp.

λάμπω

λάμπω (lampō), shine; λαμπάς (lampas), torch, lamp; λαμπρός (lampros), beaming, bright, shining, radiant, gleaming, beautiful; λαμπρότης (lamprotēs), brilliance, splendour, large-heartedness; λαμπρῶς (lamprōs), brilliantly, splendidly, sumptuously; ἐκλάμπω (eklampō), shine forth; περιλάμπω (perilampō), surround with light.

CL 1. lampō, found since Homer, especially in Gk. poetry, is generally intrans. and means to shine (rarely trans., to illuminate). In its lit. sense it refers to sources of light such as the sun, lightning, a torch or a lamp, but it is frequently used fig. in reference to men, e.g. eyes flashing with anger, shining faces, radiant beauty. The compound perilampō is used trans. in the sense of to surround with light, while eklampō (since Aeschylus) is intrans. and means to shine forth, e.g. of the sun. The noun lampas (since Aeschylus) means a torch (made of resinous pine-wood) or a lamp (i.e. an oil-vessel with a wick). lamprotēs, on the other hand, is abstract, meaning brilliance, or fig. large-heartedness, and is found from Herodotus onwards. Finally, the adj. lampros (since Homer) means beaming, gleaming, shining white (cf. leukos, white, gleaming), and the adv. lamprōs (since Aeschylus) means brilliantly, splendidly, sumptuously.

2. While in its primary sense lampō describes the function of light (→ phōs), in illuminating → darkness (skotos), used metaphorically it can refer to a shining hero striking fear into men's hearts (e.g. Homer, Il. 20, 46). Justice and certain virtues are also said to shine forth.

The flaming torch is associated with the Eleusinian deities and with Artemis and Hecate, i.e. it is a symbol of purification and serves to drive away demonic powers. A further connection with deity is seen when, e.g., a grove is said to light up at the appearance of a god (cf. Hesiod, Scutum Herculis 71). Such passages, however, are rare, for on the whole the Gk. concept "does not specifically associate that which shines with the divine" (A. Oepke, TDNT IV 18). Only later, under Egyptian and particularly under oriental influence, does a "religion of light" properly so-called, arise within the Hel. world, reaching its full development in gnosticism (→ phōs).

OT In the LXX lampō and eklampō stand for the Heb. equivalents ṣāḥaḥ (to shine), zāhar (hiph. trans. to illumine, to teach; intrans. to shine) and nāḡah (to shine, to light; hiph. to cause to shine).

([T. McComiskey] In the LXX lampas represents the Heb. lappîḏ which means torch and is so used in Gen. 15:17; Jdg. 7:16, 20; 15:4, 5. It was used frequently in the OT to describe something of brilliant or dazzling appearance. In Ezek. 1:13 the word describes the undulating light in the midst of the four creatures [cf. Dan. 10:6]. In Nahum 2:4[5] the word describes the gleaming of chariots and in Job 41:10[11] the exhalations of Leviathan. In Isa. 62:1 the word describes the visible manifestation of Israel's deliverance among the nations. And in Zech. 12:6 the clans of Judah are likened to a flaming torch that ignites sheaves. The word lampas also represents the Aramaic nebraštā' [lampstand] in Dan. 5:5. In the LXX lamprotēs stands for the Heb. nō'am in Psa. 90[89]:17. The word nō'am means pleasantness or favour with no intrinsic concept of brightness.)

These words are important theologically since, in certain contexts, they indicate that God manifests himself as light and hence as a source of illumination, though Yahweh himself is rarely found as the subject of one of these vbs. (see 2 Sam. 22:29: "my God lightens my darkness"; cf. Ps. 18:28, where, however, the vb. is phōtizein). As a rule his kāḇôḏ, the radiance of his glory (→ Glory, art. doxa) is represented in terms of man-made or natural luminaries.

Thus flaming torches (lampades pyros) indicate the presence of God (Gen. 15:17; Ezek. 1:13); cf. Exod. 19:18; 24:17, where Yahweh is associated with the smoke and → fire on Mount Sinai, and similarly in the Sinai narrative his presence as lawgiver is made known by flashes of lightning (Exod. 20:18). In Zech. 4:1 ff. there is the vision of the seven-branched candlestick with lamps symbolizing the eyes of the Lord which survey the whole earth. Presumably "the ever-burning lamp in the temple is a representation of the kāḇôḏ" (S. Aalen, Die Begriffe "Licht" und "Finsternis" im Alten Testament, im Spätjudentum und im Rabbinismus, 1951, 75). Certainly the seven-branched lampstand (Exod. 25:31 ff.) is "a symbol of life and light" just as the lamp is "a symbol of happiness and prosperity" (cf. Jer. 25:10; Prov. 31:18; 13:9; Job 29:3), and therefore, to the godly man, they point back to God as the "Lord and source of all these blessings" (S. Aalen, op. cit., 66). Even Job 41:10 ff. fits this context of ideas, for Leviathan pictured as a crocodile spitting out sparks of fire (v. 19) is an impressive illustration of the power and greatness of the Creator.

Hence in the OT lightning, flaming torches and lamps frequently indicate a theophany or otherwise draw attention to the glory of Yahweh. Furthermore, there is often a close connection between flaming torches and divine → judgment (cf. Num. 16:35), an association vividly portrayed in Zech. 12:6, where the princes of Israel, as instruments of divine justice, are likened to flaming torches ready to consume Israel's enemies (cf. Nah. 2:4). Occasionally the radiance of the divine glory can also be reflected by men acting on behalf of Yahweh. There is no suggestion anywhere, however, of "a passing of the divine substance of light into man" (A. Oepke, TDNT IV 22). Nevertheless, the future of the → covenant people is radiant with light and life (cf. Ps. 36:9; Dan. 12:3 Theodotion's Gk. text), while that of the godless is dark (Prov. 4:18, 19). These latter ideas in particular are developed in late Judaism (2 Esd. 7:97; Eth.Enoch 51:5; cf. A. Oepke, TDNT IV 23 f.).

NT In the NT lampō occurs 7 times, perilampō twice, eklampō once, lampas and lampros 9 times each, and lamprotēs and lamprōs once each. Out of 30 occurrences in all, 9 are in Matt., and 7 in Rev.

1. The words are used in their lit. sense to denote the shining of the sun (Acts 26:13; cf. 2 Cor. 4:6, where as in the OT stress is laid on the creative act of God in causing light to break forth); similarly of lightning (Lk. 17:24; cf. Rev. 8:10) and of a light upon a lampstand (Matt. 5:15 f. par. Lk. 11:33 f.).

Equally lit. is the use of lampades (plur. of lampas) both for torches (Jn. 18:3 in the account of Jesus' arrest; cf. Rev. 4:5; 8:10) and for (oil-) lamps (Matt. 25:1, 3 f., 7 f.; Acts 20:8).

2. The adj. lampros can denote the magnificance of a garment, indicating affluence or luxury (Jas. 2:2 f.; cf. Lk. 23:11; Rev. 19:8). Used without immediate reference to clothing, it pictures the faded splendour of the "harlot of Babylon" (Rev. 18:14), or, adverbially, the luxurious living of the rich man in Lk. 16:19. In these passages the words begin to have metaphorical significance, for true splendour comes only from heaven. Thus Paul, on his way to Damascus, is suddenly surrounded by a light "brighter than the sun" (Acts 26:13: ouranothen hyper tēn lamprotēta tou hēliou perilampsan me phōs), and similarly, in Lk. 2:9, the shepherds are surrounded with the radiance of the → angels, who, in the NT generally, appear as shining figures in a blaze of light (Acts 10:30; 12:7; Rev. 15:6; cf. Matt. 28:2 f.; Rev. 18:1).

3. But supremely it was → Jesus Christ himself who was so "transfigured" by divine radiance that his face shone (elampsen) like the sun and his garments became white as light (Matt. 17:2; cf. Mk. 9:2 f.; Lk. 9:29). In John's vision of the future he appears as the bright morning star (Rev. 22:16). This and related word-groups are particularly important in John's vision (→ lychnos; → phōs); cf. the reference to the river of the water of life, "bright as crystal", flowing from the throne of God (Rev. 22:1). As the lightning illuminates the whole sky, so (according to Lk. 17:24) will it be at Christ's parousia. "Then the righteous will shine like the sun in the kingdom of their Father" (Matt. 13:43, quoting Dan. 12:3).

Until that time Christ's disciples have the task of shining like lights on a lampstand (Matt. 5:15 f. → lychnos; cf. Rev. 1:12, 20; 2:1), which is made possible only by sharing with Paul in the experience of 2 Cor. 4:6. H.-C. Hahn

λύχνος

λύχνος (lychnos), lamp, light; λυχνία (lychnia), candlestick, lampstand.

CL & OT Already in Homer lychnos (root leuk; cf. Latin lux, light) means light, lamp (cf. Homer, Od. 19, 34). At a later period this was almost invariably some form of oil-lamp (lampas). The latter was often placed upon a lampstand or candlestick (lychnia, since Plutarch) in order to diffuse the beam.

In the Gk. world and among the Israelites, lamp and lampstand were important both as everyday objects (cf. 2 Ki. 4:10), and for the part they played in public worship (cf. especially the seven-branched candlestick in the tabernacle and the temple, e.g. Exod. 25:13 ff.; Heb. 9:2).

NT In the NT lychnos occurs 14 times (of which 6 are in the writings of Lk. and 3 in Rev.), and lychnia 11 times (of which 7 are in Rev.). The importance of lights and lamps (e.g. for the household, Lk. 15:8) explains why Jesus used them to illustrate his disciples' function in the world: as the lamp on the candlestick lights up the surrounding darkness, so the disciples are to have an illuminating effect upon their environment (Matt. 5:15 ff.; Mk. 4:21; Lk. 8:16; 11:33). The eye is called "the light [lychnos] of the body" (Matt. 6:22; Lk. 11:33). "On its health depends whether the blessings of light come to man" (W. Michaelis, TDNT IV 326). The ensuing reference to the eye being haplous, single or sound, is taken by D. Hill to reflect the Heb. tām (Aram. šᵉlîm) meaning singleness of purpose, undivided loyalty (The Gospel of Matthew, 1972, 142). Hill endorses the gloss of F. V. Filson: " If a man divides his interest and tries to focus on both God and possessions, he has no clear vision, and will live without clear orientation and direction" (A Commentary on the Gospel according to St. Matthew, 1960, 100).

While Jesus described himself as light (→ phōs), his forerunner John the Baptist is likened to a burning and shining lamp (ho lychnos ho kaiomenos kai phainōn, Jn. 5:35). Similarly, two witnesses are compared to two lampstands (Rev. 11:4, cf. Zech. 4:3, 11–14), and the seven churches are symbolized by seven golden lampstands (Rev. 1:12 f., 20; 2:1). The source of the witnesses' and the churches' light is indicated by 2 Pet. 1:19, where the word of prophecy is called "light" in that it looks forward to the glory of Christ. It is clear from Rev. 2:5 that the light of Christian witness can become dull and even go out, and that it can be renewed only by repentance (cf. Heb. 6:4 ff., concerning the apostasy of those who have been enlightened).

Babylon is warned that when she sinks in ruin, "The light of the lamp shall shine in thee no more" (Rev. 18:23; → Babylon). The heavenly → Jerusalem, on the other hand, will be illuminated by the glory of God (Rev. 21:23), which makes all lamps superfluous (Rev. 22:5) for God himself will be the sole light. Until that day, the Christian may be said to live in eschatological tension; he is therefore called to be watchful, as in the vivid metaphors of Lk. 12:35: "Let your loins be girded and your lamps burning". H.-C. Hahn

φαίνω

φαίνω (phainō), shine; φαίνομαι (phainomai), mid. shine, appear, become manifest, come into view.

CL & OT Both active and passive forms are found from Homer onwards. The active phainō (intrans. only) means to shine (e.g. of the sun, the moon, or a lamp); similarly the passive phainomai, which, however, more frequently means to appear, come into view. In the LXX the mid. occurs almost exclusively, but without any clear Heb. equivalent; usually it translates 'ôr (hiph.), to let shine and rā'âh (niph.), to be seen, appear.

NT 1. In the NT phainō occurs 9 times, of which 7 are in the Johannine writings. It generally refers to the light of natural luminaries such as celestial bodies (Phil. 2:15), the sun (Rev. 1:16; 21:23; cf. 8:12) and the moon (Rev. 21:23) (→ Sun, Moon, Stars), but may also refer to the light of a lamp (→ lychnos) (Jn. 5:35; 2 Pet. 1:19; Rev. 18:23). In all these passages, however, the light concerned is contrasted with a stronger source of light, e.g. the sun and the moon will be superfluous when the glory of God illumines the heavenly Jerusalem (Rev. 21:23). Only in two places does phainō refer to the "true" light itself, i.e. Christ (Jn. 1:5; 1 Jn. 2:8).

2. phainomai which occurs 22 times in the NT, of which 17 are in the Synoptic Gospels, is used for the appearing of a star (Matt. 2:7), and also for the appearing of tares among the wheat (Matt. 13:26). It occurs similarly in the birth narratives where → angels appear in → dreams (Matt. 1:20; 21:3, 19), and in other narratives such as those of → Elijah's rumoured appearance (Lk. 9:8) and the appearances of the risen Christ (Mk. 16:9). Similarly, the appearance of certain phenomena will accompany his return (Matt. 24:27, 30). The idea of becoming visible is present in Matt. 9:33 (of Christ's deeds); Jas. 4:14 (of a mist, to which man's brief life is compared); and 1 Pet. 4:18 (of the ungodly at the last → judgment). Matt. 6:5, 16, 18 and 23:27 f. take what men are or do in secret, and contrast this, either positively or negatively, with outward appearances. Paul tells the Corinthians that his primary concern is their well-being, not his own good "showing" before God (2 Cor. 13:7). Mk. 14:64 and Lk. 24:11 refer to the way something "appears" to a person (similarly Rom. 7:13: the true nature of sin being revealed to a person through the law).

Heb. 11:3 is theologically significant. Here the prime cause of "things which are seen" (blepomena; → See) is said to be God's creative word. In this way the doctrine of ex nihilo → creation is safeguarded against the error of materialism, which would teach that the "aeons" have evolved spontaneously from "things which appear" (phainomena). (→ Faith, art. pistis; → Form art. hypostasis.)

H.-C. Hahn

ἐμφανίζω

ἐμφανίζω (emphanizō), reveal, make known; ἐμφανής (emphanēs), visible.

CL In secular Gk. emphanizō is used basically in the sense of to manifest, exhibit, and passively to become visible. The word also connotes the ideas of making plain (Plato, Sophocles), declaring or explaining (Aristotle). The adj. emphanēs connotes the idea of visible, open, manifest.

OT In the LXX emphanizō stands once for the Heb. 'āmar (Est. 2:22). The vb. 'āmar means to say or tell. Thus, in this context emphanizō is used in the sense of declare. The word also stands for the hiphil of yāḏa' (know) in Exod. 33:13, where → Moses prays that he may "have made known" to him the ways of God.

The sense here is that of making known or revealing the ways of God. In Isa. 3:9 emphanizō occurs as the translation of the negative clause lō' ḵiḥēḏû ("they do not hide it"). The context indicates that it is their sin that they fail to hide; the LXX presents the act positively, i.e. they "manifest" or "display" their sin. In Exod. 33:18 emphanizō represents the Heb. rā'âh (hiph.). The Heb. rā'âh is the common word for see, and in the hiphil means to show or exhibit.

emphanes (neut.) represents the niphal of the Heb. kûn (establish) in Isa. 2:2 and Mic. 4:1 which describes the exalted position of the mountain of the → house of the Lord over the mountains. emphanes here is probably used in the sense of conspicuous or manifest. This connotation is not inherent in the Heb. kûn which is used only in the sense of to be firm, establish (cf. Ass. kânu, be firm). The LXX seems to be expansive in its translation at this point.

In Isa. 65:1 emphanēs represents the niphal of the Heb. dāraš (seek). In this context the Lord indicates that he was sought by those who did not ask for him. The LXX understands dāraš in the sense of to manifest, perhaps understanding the niphal in its reflexive sense, i.e. "I permitted myself to be known," hence "I manifested myself."

In Exod. 2:14 emphanēs stands for the niphal of yāḏaʿ (know). In this context Moses becomes aware of the fact that his murder of the Egyptian has become known.

NT In the NT the vb. emphanizō occurs in the sense of declare, inform on 5 occasions. In Acts 23:15 the word occurs with the dative tō chiliarchō, the military tribune, the commander of a cohort in charge of Paul (cf. Arndt, 890). In Acts 24:1 the word is used in conjunction with the clause kata tou Paulou in a legal context referring to the act of informing against or presenting a case against Paul. The word is used in a similar sense in Acts 25:2, 15 with peri as the preposition in v. 15. In Acts 23:22 the word is used of the act of imparting information. It describes the act of a young informant who disclosed information to the tribune mentioned above.

In Heb. 11:14 the word emphanizō is used in the sense of show or manifest. Those who acknowledge their transience on the earth show or demonstrate by this acknowledgment the fact that they are seeking a homeland.

emphanizō occurs several times in the sense of appear. In Matt. 27:53 it is used of the saints who appeared in Jerusalem at the → resurrection of Christ. In Jn. 14:21 f. it is used of the spiritual presence of Christ with the one who keeps Christ's → commandments. It thus connotes here a manifestation to the spiritual faculties rather than to the senses. In Heb. 9:24 the verb is used of Christ's appearance in the presence of God.

The adj. emphanēs is used in the NT on two occasions. In Acts 10:40 it occurs in the sense of manifest in the phrase edōken auton emphanē genesthai, "made him manifest" (RSV). The context refers to the post-resurrection appearance of Christ to certain witnesses.

In Rom. 10:20 the word occurs in a quotation from Isa. 65:1: "I have been found by those who did not seek me; I have shown myself [emphanēs egenomēn] to those who did not ask for me." As in the LXX rendering of this verse noted above, emphanēs represents the niphal of dāraš. The quotation, like the preceding one from Deut. 32:21, illustrates the fulfilment of OT prophecy and the consistency of God in receiving the Gentiles, whereas → Israel, as ever, has remained disobedient, (Rom. 10:21; cf. Isa. 65:2). T. McComiskey

φῶς

φῶς (phōs), light, brilliance, brightness; φωτίζω (phōtizō), light up, illumine, bring to light; φωτισμός (phōtismos), illumination, enlightenment; φωτεινός (phōteinos), shining, bright, radiant; φωστήρ (phōstēr), luminary, brightness; φωσφόρος (phōsphoros), bearing light, morning star.

CL 1. In Homer there is frequent use of the noun to phaos, later abbreviated, e.g. by the tragedians, to its Att. form phōs. Its basic meaning of light, brightness, also covers the following nuances among others: sunlight, daylight, torch, fire (-light), eyesight. Figuratively phōs means the light of life, i.e. life itself, which is highly valued as something bright, and as being comparable with salvation, happiness or military triumph. The bringer of such salvation can also be referred to as phōs.

The vb. phōtizō (since Aristotle), formed from the same stem, is almost always trans., meaning to light up, illumine, bring to light, make visible. Its corresponding noun phōtismos denotes brilliance, radiance, or bringing to light, making manifest, revelation. There is also the adj. phōteinos (since Xenophon), shining, bright.

A further derivative from phōs is phōstēr (since Heliodorus), luminary or brightness, and from Euripides onwards the morning star is termed phōsphoros.

2. Relatively early in Gk. usage phōs (in contrast with skotos, → darkness, or nyx, night) came to mean the sphere of ethical good, whereas misdeeds are said to take place in darkness. Hence it is the task, e.g., of a judge, to bring hidden things "to light".

Plato's comparison of the idea of the good with sunlight (Rep. 507e–509b) is deeply significant for the history of ideas. By entering the sphere of epistemology (→ knowledge), phōs became greatly enriched in its range of connotation. A context such as this can stress its illuminating qualities, while another can emphasize its function as a healer, for even in the Gk. world there was a connection between "the notion of sin and the image of darkness, and the notion of a redemption and salvation from evil and the image of the light" (J. Stenzel, Die Antike, I, 1925, 256; cf. R. Bultmann, The Gospel of John, 1971, 42). Light possesses powers essential to true life. Hence "to be in the light" comes to mean simply "to live", whereas to be in Hades (→ Hell) is to be in darkness.

3. In the Gk. as in other religions the metaphor of light has a certain importance. The gods are said to live in a world of brightness, the world from which Prometheus stole → fire. "He kindled the light of fire for mortal men" (K. Kerenyi, Prometheus, 72). Torch-races were held as part of the cultic veneration of the gods, and in certain mystery cults the cleansing and refining effect of fire (like that of water) played no small part. But Gk. religion never became a religion of light in the strict sense of the term (cf. A. Oepke, TDNT IV 19). Such a religion came into being only in later Hellenism.

Gnosticism (→ Knowledge, art. ginōskō) marked the climax of this process. It saw a basic, essential difference between light and darkness which stood over against each other as hostile powers, each being sovereign within its own sphere. Man, who by nature is in darkness, needs to liberate the elements of light within his own soul, and free them from earthly matter so that they may be re-united with the supernatural world to which they really belong and so attain to true life. Light and → life are inseparably connected; similarly, "in gnosticism light and spirit are considered to be essentially one" (H. Leisegang, Die Gnosis, 1955[4], 27). "Light is the matter of the other world which flows on him who is willing to receive it and imports divine powers. Light, life, and later knowledge are interchangeable concepts" (A. Oepke, TDNT 20 IV). This gnostic religion of light was carried still further in Manichaeism and Mandaeism.

OT 1. In the OT there are frequent references to light and its effects. Having quoted B. Jacob and A. Dillmann, who respectively describe light as "the sublimest element" and "the finest of all elementary forces", G. von Rad adds his own epithet: "the first-born of creation" (Genesis, 1963[2], 49; cf. Gen. 1:3 ff.). He points out that this primeval light has pride of place over all other lights: even the stars are "in no way creators of light, but only mediating bearers of a light that was there without them and before them" (op. cit., 54). The sun, being the brightest star, is assigned to the day (Gen. 1:14 ff.; Sir. 43:2 ff.), and each new day begins with the ushering in of morning light (2 Sam. 23:4). The moon and stars seek to penetrate the darkness of the night at least to some degree (Gen. 1:16; Sir. 43:6 ff.). Surrounded as they were by "a cultural and religious atmosphere that was saturated with all kinds of astrological false belief" (von Rad, ibid.; cf. Wisd. 13:1 f.), the Israelites laid great stress on light having been created, in order to render abortive any attempt to deify it. There is only the one God Yahweh. He creates light and darkness (Gen. 1:3 ff.; Isa. 45:7; Jer. 31:35; Sir. 43:1 ff.), and since he is → Lord also of the darkness, he is able to turn even darkness into light (Ps. 139:11 f.).

(a) In the OT there are frequent references to light as a kind of attribute of God: light is his garment (Ps. 104:2). His nearness and presence are indicated by light (cf. Exod. 13:21 f.; Neh. 9:12; Dan. 2:22, "the light dwells with him"; Hab. 3:4, "his brightness was like the light"; Isa. 60:19 f. in an eschatological context). In particular his countenance is said to be the origin of the light proceeding from him (Ps. 4:6; 44:3; 89:15). S. Aalen comments: "It is probably true to say that throughout the OT light is a feature of God's self-manifestation rather than of his heavenly being" (RGG[3] IV 358).

For man the light of Yahweh means salvation, an idea clearly expressed in Ps. 27:1: "The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear?" (cf. Job 22:28). The light which comes from God sets the bounds of every man's life, and arises upon all men (cf. Job 25:3; Sir. 42:16). Each man, however, must still turn to the light; in fact, he must look beyond it to its source, and consciously acknowledge the might of the Creator.

The light of the ungodly is worthless. It goes out (Job 18:5 f.), or is taken from them (Job 38:15). They grope in darkness (cf. Job 12:25; Prov. 4:19), and even after death darkness will still surround them (Ps. 49:19), while God will redeem the soul of the righteous "from the power of Sheol" (Ps. 49:15; → Hell).

(b) Even during his earthly life, however, the godly man enjoys the light of the living (Ps. 112:4, "Light rises in the darkness for the upright"; cf. Job 33:30; Ps. 56:13; Prov. 4:18; 13:9). He enters into an experience of God's saving power when he opens his heart to the light of God's word (Ps. 119:105; cf. Prov. 6:23 and Wis. 7:10, 26, where the → law and → wisdom respectively are referred to as light). Only in the light of God does man see light (Ps. 36:9). Only when enlightened by God does the nature of reality dawn upon him, and that not by any mystical illumination. Rather, having turned to God, he receives, along with the gift of salvation, practical "orientation for his life" (cf. S. Aalen, Die Begriffe "Licht" und "Finsternis" im Alten Testament, in Spätjudentum und im Rabbinismus, 1951, 65). His life must be lived in the light, i.e. in concrete obedience to God's → commandments. Just as the "pillar of fire" marked Israel's route at the time of their exodus from Egypt (Exod. 13:21 f.), so the law shows how a man is to walk in the light, i.e. how a godly Israelite ought to live (cf. the exhortation of Isa. 2:5). The prophets in particular lay great stress on the importance of walking in holiness and righteousness. He who walks in the light himself can also become a light for others, i.e. a mediator of the covenant on behalf of all mankind (said of the Servant of the Lord, Isa. 42:6; 49:6; cf. 58:10, acts of mercy are like beams of light). This missionary outlook is marked by a world-wide hope, even in the OT, for the truth of Yahweh will go forth as "a light to the nations" (Isa. 51:4), and they will flock to the light of God (Isa. 60:3).

2. An antithesis found particularly in the OT Wisdom Literature, that of light and darkness as the respective spheres of the God-fearing and the ungodly (e.g. Prov. 4:18 f.), receives radical treatment in the Qumran texts. Within the religious community on the North-West shores of the Dead Sea there developed a dualism of light and darkness, probably under the influence of the Persian religion of light. On earth the "sons of the light" – in this case identified with the members of the Qumran community – are locked in conflict with the "sons of darkness" (1QS 1:9, 18, 24; 2:5, 16, 19; 3:13 and often; cf. the title of 1QM, "War of the Sons of of Light against the Sons of Darkness"; on this see the edition of Y. Yadin, The Scroll of the War of the Sons of Light against the Sons of Darkness, 1962).

This confrontation within history corresponds to a similar one in the metaphysical world of spirits. The Prince of Light (1QS 3:20; CD 5:18; 1QM 13:10) is opposed as lord of the world by an Angel of Darkness (1QS 3:20, 21). But there is a causal, indeed almost a predestinarian link between the respective sides in this conflict and the two opposing camps into which mankind is divided: "Those born of the truth spring from a fountain of light, but those born of falsehood spring from a source of darkness. All the children of righteousness are ruled by the Prince of Light and walk in the ways of light; but all the children of falsehood are ruled by the Angel of Darkness and walk in the ways of darkness" (1QS 3:19 ff.; cf. Vermes, Scrolls, 76). Nevertheless, the sons of light are still subject to attacks from the Angel of Darkness and his spirits (ibid.) and their situation would be desperate apart from the help of the "God of Israel". He represents the limit of the power of darkness, for in Qumran, just as in the OT, he is regarded as the creator both of the spirits of light and also of those of darkness (1QS 3:26). Dualism extends, therefore, into the transcendent realm of spirits, but it is not carried further to include God himself. Darkness is not his equal, as it is in Mazdaism, for he remains ultimately the Lord and as such the guarantor that the eschatological hopes of the sons of light will be realized. The latter, of course, must live as those who have been enlightened (cf. 1QS 11:5), continually walking in the ways of light, i.e. in conformity to the Torah and to the rules of their order (cf. 1QS 1:16–2:18; 3:3). Then their way will be bathed in the light of glory yet to come, while all that awaits the ungodly is darkness (cf. 1QS 2:7 f.; 4:6 ff., 12 f., and often; for the antithesis of the way of light and the way of darkness see 1QS 3:20 f.; cf. Sl.Enoch 30:15 A). The dualism between light and darkness is conceived of not so much in material terms as in gnosticism, but rather in ethico-historical terms.

3. Philo used phōs particularly with reference to questions of → knowledge. Hence sophia, → wisdom, and epistēmē, knowledge, are called phōs dianoias, the light of knowledge (Spec.Leg. 1, 288; Migr.Abr. 39 f.), i.e. they cast true light upon the whole question of existence. Under Plato's influence, Philo saw the noetic as playing an important part in a man's appropriation of salvation. But since, like others in the history of religion, he viewed salvation in terms of light, it is easy to see why he used the metaphor of light for epistemological concepts.

The logos is light (Leg.All. 3, 171 ff.; → Word), similarly the human nous or understanding (Post.C. 57 f.; → Reason). By describing → conscience as phōs (Deus Imm. 135; Jos. 68), he indicates the connection between knowledge and ethical behaviour, a connection already assumed as self-evident by Plato. Pride of place among the virtues, however, is held not by the philosophical concept of erōs (→ Love), but by piety and love towards God. He is the one and only God, dwelling, according to Philo, in a heaven of brightness and light (Jos. 145). But God himself is regarded as "the first light", and "the archetype of every other light" (Som. 1, 75) – yet another indication of Philo's attempt to combine Hellenistic philosophy with the faith of Israel.

NT In the NT phōs occurs 72 times, of which 33 are in the Johannine writings, 14 in the Synoptic Gospels, 13 in Paul and 10 in Acts; phōtizō occurs 11 times; phōtismos twice (2 Cor. 4:4, 6); phōteinos 4 times; phōstēr twice (Phil. 2:15; Rev. 21:11); and phōsphoros only once (2 Pet. 1:19).

1. (a) The original, literal meaning is found in reference to the light of the sun (Rev. 22:5), which is absent at night (Jn. 11:10), the light of lamps (Lk. 8:16; 11:33; 15:8; Acts 16:29; Rev. 18:23; 22:5) and the warm glow of a fire (Mk. 14:54; Lk. 22:56).

(b) The bright cloud used by God in the transfiguration of his Son (Matt. 17:5) points beyond itself to God, whose appearing is inevitably accompanied by effulgence. The Son, too, is surrounded by radiance: "His face shone like the sun, and his garments became white as light" (Matt. 17:2). Here light is a manifestation of the presence of God; in some other places it indicates the appearing of the exalted Christ (Acts 9:3; 22:6, 9, 11; 26:13), and in yet others the coming of angels as messengers from God himself (Acts 12:7; cf. Matt. 28:2 f.).

The disciples are also described as light or light-bearers (Matt. 5:14, 16; Lk. 12:35; cf. Eph. 5:8; Phil. 2:15), since it is their task to pass on the divine light which they have received. That which they heard from Jesus in secret (i.e. in the intimacy of his closed circle of friends) they are to proclaim fearlessly "in the light" (a stock phrase meaning "in public") (Matt. 10:27; cf. Lk. 12:3). As missionaries of Christ, they are to shine out into the world, not with their own light but with the very light of heaven itself, for in the NT light is associated with God's dwelling-place (1 Tim. 6:16), or even with God himself (1 Jn. 1:5), whence it streams forth into this world.

2. It is John in particular who portrays Jesus Christ as light breaking in upon the → darkness of the world (→ Earth, art. kosmos). Already in the prologue to his Gospel, light and life are linked together, i.e. Christ is the only remedy for men who by nature are in darkness (Jn. 1:4; cf. 8:12). John the Baptist is called a witness to the light, though the difference between him and the light itself is made very clear (Jn. 1:6 ff.; 5:35 f.). "The true light that enlightens every man" came into the world in the person of Jesus Christ (Jn. 1:9). R. Bultmann comments: "He is the proper, authentic light, who alone can fulfil the claim to give existence the proper understanding of itself. . . . The exclusiveness of the revelation which occurred in Jesus is further brought out by the relative clause ho phōtizei: he and only he is the Revealer for all men" (The Gospel of John, 1971, 53; cf. Jn. 3:19; Lk. 2:32, quoting Isa. 42:6; 49:6). The same note of exclusiveness is sounded very clearly in one of Christ's celebrated → "I am" sayings, where he also indicates the consequences for men: "I am the light of the world; he who follows me will not walk in darkness, but will have the light of life" (Jn. 8:12; cf. 9:5; 12:46; → See). " 'The light' designates the nature of Jesus directly. He is not like a light; he is 'the light' " (H. Conzelmann, An Outline Theology of the New Testament, 1969, 351). R. Bultmann expounds the significance of this light as follows: "By making the world bright, it makes it possible for men to see. But sight is not only significant in that it enables man to orientate himself in respect to objects; sight is at the same time the means whereby man understands himself in his world, the reason he does not 'grope in the dark', but sees his 'way' " (op. cit., 40). Recognizing the way is not sufficient, however. We have to → walk in it, for he who is the light and the way does not want mere admirers, but believing followers. Hence the injunction: "Believe in the light, that you may become sons of light" (Jn. 12:36).

An admonition such as this is necessary because the natural man loves darkness rather than light (Jn. 3:19). This may be compared with 2 Cor. 4:4, where Paul speaks of men blinded by the god of this world "to keep them from seeing the light of the gospel of the glory of Christ who is the likeness of God". This can only be changed by a creative act of God parallel to the original creation of light. "For it is God who said, 'Let light shine out of darkness,' who has shone in our hearts to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Christ" (2 Cor. 4:6; cf. Gen. 1:3). And even though it is certainly true that since the coming of Jesus Christ "darkness is passing away" (1 Jn. 2:8), the Christian coming to the light still needs to be urged to keep the commandment of brotherly love (1 Jn. 2:8 ff.). For only "he who loves his brother abides in the light" (1 Jn. 2:10). The prerequisite for doing the → truth – here as elsewhere closely associated with the idea of light – is communion with him who is the light of the world, Jesus Christ. In order to abide in him, the Christian must walk in the light, live for his brethren and constantly seek forgiveness through the power of the → blood of Christ (1 Jn. 1:6 f.).

3. Although using these words less frequently than John, Paul gives them a similar theological content. Light and darkness are as incompatible as → righteousness and lawlessness (→ sin; cf. 2 Cor. 6:14), ideas influenced possibly by Qumran.

The content of light or illumination, however, can only be christological: God has shone in our hearts "to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Christ" (2 Cor. 4:4, 6 [see above 2]; cf. 2 Tim. 1:10). Through him we share "in the inheritance of the saints in light" (Col. 1:12).

In turn those who once were darkness have become, as believers, "children of light", and are now "light in the Lord" (Eph. 5:8; cf. 1 Thess. 5:5; Lk. 16:8). Such sonship, however, makes ethical demands upon its recipients: "The fruit of light is found in all that is good and right and true" (Eph. 5:9). Thus it is necessary to walk according to the light, and all the more so since Christians bear a missionary responsibility for the world about them, a responsibility which they can only meet by living "as lights in a dark world" (Phil. 2:15; cf. Acts 13:47, quoting Isa. 49:6), even though this may perhaps involve them in conflict (Heb. 10:32).

In this world the Christian lives his life, so to speak, between God and → Satan. The latter can even disguise himself as "an angel of light" (2 Cor. 11:14). Hence Christians must put on "the armour of light" (Rom. 13:12; → Weapon). Only he who has fought a good fight in this armour has no need to fear the day when "the Father of lights" (Jas. 1:17) will bring to light what is hidden (1 Cor. 4:5).

H.-C. Hahn

4. Like the OT and late Judaism, the NT describes the future of the ungodly in terms of eschatological → darkness which symbolizes perdition. Believers, on the other hand, have a → hope which enables them to see the end of time differently. This too can be depicted in terms of light. In the new → Jerusalem there will no longer be sun, moon or created light, "for the glory of God is its light [lit. illuminated it, ephōtisen autēn] and its lamp [lychnos] is the Lamb. By its light shall the nations walk; and the kings of the earth shall bring their glory to it" (Rev. 21:23 f.; cf. 22:5 which adds that there will be no more night). While the ungodly are excluded (Rev. 21:8, 27; 22:3, 11, 18 f.), there is an echo here of the universal coming to the light by the Gentiles alongside Israel which featured in the eschatological proclamation of Isa. 2:2–5; 24:23; 60:1, 19. Here too the light of Yahweh supersedes created light.

2 Pet. 1:19 contains the admonition: "You would do well to pay attention to this as to a lamp shining in a dark place, until the day dawns and the morning star [phōsphoros] rises in your hearts." There are no lexical grounds for interpreting phōsphoros (lit. light-bringer) of the → sun. The term was used in cl. Gk. of the morning star, the planet Venus (Liddell-Scott, 1968), which precedes the dawn. For stars as messianic symbols see Num. 24:17: "There shall come a star out of Jacob" (which was applied to Bar Kokhba whose name means "Son of a Star"; → Jesus Christ, art. Christos; → Israel; cf. also Test.Lev. 18:3; Test.Jud. 24:1–5; 1QM 11:6 f.; Lk. 1:78; Rev. 22:16). The term heōsphoros, bringer of morn, morning star, is likewise attested in cl. Gk. (Liddell-Scott, 752). It occurs in the LXX in a lit. sense in 1 Sam. (Ki.) 30:17; Job 3:9; 11:17; 38:12; 41:9(10); Ps. 110(109):3. But in Isa. 14:12 it is a title applied to the king of → Babylon whose fall Isaiah proclaims. The Heb. here is hêlēl, shining star, "Day Star" (RSV). O. Kaiser conjectures a background of Ugaritic mythology (Isaiah 13–39; A Commentary, 1974, 38 ff.) which may have had its origin in the fact that as it rises, the morning star grows feebler because of the rays of the sun. The thought of Christ as the morning star in

2 Pet. 1:19 presents a marked contrast with this. The verse gives "a pictorial description of the way in which, at His Coming, Christ will dissipate the doubt and uncertainty by which their hearts are meanwhile beclouded and will fill them with a marvellous illumination" (J. N. D. Kelly, A Commentary on the Epistles of Peter and of Jude, 1969, 323, who notes similar expressions in Philo, Ebr. 44; Decal. 49).

C. Brown

→ Black, White, Red, → Creation, → Darkness, Night, → Present, Day, → See, → Sun, Moon, Stars

(a). K. Barth, "The Light of Life", CD, IV, 3, 1, 38–165; R. Bultmann, The Gospel of John, 1971 (see index); R. Bultmann and D. Lührmann, phainō etc., TDNT IX 1–10; J. H. Charlesworth, "A Critical Comparison of the Dualism in 1QS 3:13–426 and the 'Dualism' Contained in the Gospel of John", in J. H. Charlesworth, ed., John and Qumran, 1972, 76–106; H. Conzelmann, phōs etc., TDNT IX 310–58; C. H. Dodd, The Bible and the Greeks, 1935; and The Interpretation of the Fourth Gospel, 1953, 201–12; E. R. Goodenough, By Light Light: The Mystic Gospel of Hellenistic Judaism, 1935; H. G. May, "The Creation of Light in Gn. 1:3–5", JBL 58, 1939, 203–10; W. Michaelis, lychnos etc., TDNT IV 324–27; A. Oepke, lampō etc., TDNT IV 16–28; R. Schnackenburg, "Light", EBT II 503–9; and The Gospel according to St John, I, 1968; D. Tarrant, "Greek Metaphors of Light", The Classical Quarterly, 54, 1960, 181–7; D. O. Via, "Darkness, Christ, and the Church in the Fourth Gospel", SJT 14, 1961, 172 ff.; Y. Yadin, The Scroll of the War of the Sons of Light against the Sons of Darkness, 1962.
(b). S. Aalen, Die Begriffe "Licht" und "Finsternis" im Alten Testament, im Spätjudentum und im Rabbinismus, 1951; and "Licht und Finsternis", *RGG*³ IV 357 ff.; H. Bardtke, Die Handschriftenfunde am Toten Meer, 1953, 97 ff.; G. Baumbach, Qumran und das Johannesevangelium, 1958, 46 ff.; J. C. Bott, "De notione lucis in scriptis s. Ioannis Ap.", Verbum Domini 19, 1939, 81–91; R. Bultmann, "Zur Geschichte der Lichtsymbolik im Altertum, Philologus 97, 1948, 1 ff. (reprinted in Exegetica, 1967, 323 ff.); and "Weihnachten", Glauben und Verstehen, III, 1960, 76 ff.; B. Bussmann, Der Begriff des Lichtes beim heiligen Johannes, 1967; C. Colpe, "Lichtsymbolik im alten Iran und antiken Judentum", Studium Generale, 18, 1965, 116–33; M. Dibelius, "Die Vorstellung vom göttlichen Licht", Deutsche Literaturzeitung, 1915, 1496 ff.; J. Dupont, "Jésus-Christ. Lumière du Monde", Essais sur la christologie de S. Jean, 1951, 61–105; C. Edlund, Das Auge der Einfalt, 1952; K. Galling, "Lampe", Biblisches Reallexikon, 1937, 347 ff.; F. Heiler, Erscheinungsformen und Wesen der Religion, 1961, 43 ff.; J. Hempel, "Die Lichtsymbolik im Alten Testament", Studium Generale 13, 1960, 352–68; P. Humbert, "La Thème Véterotestamentaire de la lumière", Revue de Théologie et de Philosophie 99, 1966, 1–6; F. N. Klein, Die Lichtterminologie bei Philon von Alexandrien und in den hermetischen Schriften, 1962; G. Molin, Die Söhne des Lichts. Zeit und Stellung der Handschriften vom Toten Meer, 1954; F. Nötscher, Zur Terminologie der Qumran-Texte, 1956, 76 ff.; E. Percy, Untersuchungen über den Ursprung der johanneischen Theologie, 1939, 23–79; H. Preisker, "Jüdische Apokalyptik und hellenistischer Symbolismus im Johannes-Evangelium, dargelegt am Begriff 'Licht' ", TLZ 77, 1952, 673–78; M. Saeb, 'ôr, THAT I 84–90; H. Schär, Erlösungsvorstellungen und ihre psychologischen Aspekte, 1950; R. Schnackenburg, Die Johannesbriefe, 1963²; G. Stählin, "Jesus Christus, das Licht der Welt", Universitas (Festschrift A. Stohr), I, 1960, 58–78; H. Sedlmayr, Der Tod des Lichtes, 1964, 9 ff.; W. von Soden, "Licht und Finsternis in der sumerischen und babylonisch-assyrischen Religion", Studium Generale 13, 1960, 647–53; L. R. Stachowiak, "Die Antithese Licht-Finsternis: ein Thema der paulinischen Paränese", ThQ 143, 1963, 385–421; R. von Ungern-Sternberg, "Die Bezeichnungen 'Licht' und 'Finsternis' im Alten Testament", Deutsches Pfarrerblatt 65, 1965, 642 ff.; G. P. Wetter, Phos, 1915.
For works relating to gnosticism → the bibliography under Knowledge.

Like, Equal

Although it is impossible to make a clear and universally applicable differentiation between the two word-groups, as they are often interchangeable, in general the isos group indicates more strongly an external, objectively measurable and established likeness and correspondence, while the words connected with homoios express more substantial, essential likeness, hence correspondence in particular characteristics, specific or generic likeness. Although the term does not appear in the NT, a note on homoousios has been appended to the article on homoios in view of the crucial importance of the term in the debates on the person of Christ in the early church. It was opposed by the Arians but included in the Creed of Nicea (325) asserting that Christ was "of the same substance as the Father", and as such passed into the Nicene Creed.

ἴσος

ἴσος (isos), equal, corresponding to; ἰσότης (isotēs), equality, fairness; ἰσότιμος (isotimos), of equal value; ἰσόψυχος (isopsychos), of like soul or mind.

CL 1. Already in frequent use in Homer, isos and isotēs in their earliest stage express a fundamental rule in the sharing of the booty of war. Care had to be taken to ensure not only the equality of quantity but also the equality of value of the objects which were divided up. Hence, isos and isotēs indicate:

(a) Numerical and physical equality, e.g., of number, value (equal interest rates, number of votes, sums of money, dimensions in space or time; water and wine mixed in equal parts, etc.).

(b) By extension, substantial equality, e.g., of the copy with its original, of the assertions of witnesses, of the chances in war.

(c) Political and legal equality. The concept received a spiritual meaning in Gk. literary and legal life. Gk. democracy in the city states rested on the principle that all citizens possessed equal standing in society and enjoyed equal rights. isos and homoios were used as standing expressions for these political equalities. Judicial impartiality also rested upon the application of the principle of equality to all parties. Hence, isos became the expression for impartial, and came close to meaning the same as dikaios, just (→ Righteousness), so that the two concepts could be interchanged. Beyond impartiality in the legal sphere the application of the principle of equality meant particularly that which must be conceded to every citizen, that which is right and fair.

2. The relationship between justice and fairness was differently defined in the individual philosophical schools. In Stoic teaching on virtue, rectitude and fairness stem from the will for justice. In Philo (Spec.Leg. 4, 231) it is the other way round: isotēs mētēr dikaiosynēs, "fairness is the mother of justice." Finally, the two concepts can become an interchangeable pair: ison ē dikaion, "fair or right."

3. (a) Behind the idea of legal equality and fairness lay fundamental philosophical convictions about the essential equality of all men, convictions not yet thought out when we meet them in Homer, but philosophically established in Plato and Aristotle. In the originally rigoristic Stoic ethic the thought of the homogeneity of mankind even led to the levelling out of the natural differences in good or evil thoughts and deeds, with the result that graduations were looked upon as of only little significance and no longer as decisive. Good is good and evil is without distinction evil.

(b) As a principle of order isotēs means cosmic harmony, the balancing of all forces. This cosmic principle is reflected in human striving for equality.

(c) This sense of equality, so strongly developed in Gk. intellectual life, led eventually in Hellenism via the veneration of heroes to the doctrine of deification through the application of philosophical ideas to the concept of salvation. Already in Homer's epic, as later in tragedy, the heroes who were believed to possess divine power were spoken of as daimoni isos, isotheos, isodaimōn, godlike, like the gods. Plato showed in philosophy the ideal way: homoiousthai tō theō kata to dynaton, "become as far as possible like god" (Theaet. 176). Correspondingly, the ideal "divine man" was also to a certain extent equal to god, isotheos (cf. Homer, Il. 2, 565; Od. 1, 324; Plato, Phdr. 255a).

OT 1. In the LXX isos and isotēs are not very frequent. isos for the most part translates the comparative particle k^e (thus predominantly, in Job, e.g. 5:14; 10:10) or 'eḥaḏ in comparative juxtapositions (thus in Ezek. 40:5–9). Of the many compounds formed with isos, only isopsychos has a Heb. counterpart: k^e*'erkî*, my equal (Ps. 55:13 [MT 55:14]; cf. Deut. 13:6). No others appear until writings of the Hellenistic period and express more strongly Hellenistic ideas, which are connected above all with the political principle of equality: e.g., isēgoreomai, to speak with the same freedom (Sir. 13:11); isomoiros, having an equal share (2 Macc. 8:30); isonomeō, to have equal rights (4 Macc. 5:24); isopolitēs, a full citizen with equal rights (3 Macc. 2:30).

2. In the language of wisdom and religion, on the other hand, one can establish characteristic differences from Gk. usage which stand out even more clearly in the case of → homoios and its derivatives. The natural, essential equality of all men is seen above all in their transitoriness and frailty, in the suffering of birth and death (Wis. 7:3 6). In contrast to Gk. veneration of heroes and the thought of a deification of man, the fundamental distance between God and his mortal creatures is stressed: no mortal may dare wish to be God's equal (isotheos, 2 Macc. 9:12), not even the heavenly beings may be likened to him (isoō, Ps. 89:7). "The OT echoes with majestic monotony the question 'Who is like God?' " (G. Stählin, TDNT III 352; cf. Isa. 44:7, tis hōsper egō, "Who is like me?"; similarly Jer. 10:6; 49:19). For this reason the Satanic suggestion, "You shall be as God!" (Gen. 3:5, LXX theoi, "gods") is the fundamental temptation of man and his succumbing to it stands at the beginning of a human history full of suffering (on Gen. 1:26 → homoios OT).

3. In Rabbinic Judaism, with all its delight in the law and striving after faithfulness to it, there was the idea that, despite the different standards of fulfilment of the law in this life, in eternity all believers in the messiah would receive equal rewards as a gift of grace (SB I 832 f.). For the messiah will so lead his people that every member, in the presence of his grace, will be equal to all the others (Ps. Sol. 17:41–46).

NT In the NT we find the adj. isos 8 times (in all four Gospels, also in Acts, Phil., and Rev.) – this includes the neut. plur. isa used as an adv. in Phil. 2:6; isotēs 3 times (2 Cor. and Col.); isotimos only in 2 Pet. 1:1; isopsychos only in Phil. 2:20.

1. In a few passages the use of isos remains within the framework of secular Gk., as it is reflected partly in the LXX: it marks equality of size (Lk. 6:34; Rev. 21:16) and conversely at the trial of Jesus the lack of unanimity in the evidence of the witnesses (Mk. 14:56, 59). In Phil. 2:20 Paul recommends Timothy to the congregation as a fully like-minded (isopsychos) and reliable colleague.

2. (a) The equality among Christians, which transcends all national and religious frontiers, with regard to their participation in salvation (→ Fellowship) is experienced as a supernatural act, through one and the same experience of the Spirit, which removes all barriers between Jewish Christians and Gentiles (Acts 11:17; cf. 2 Pet. 1:1, isotimos, "of the same kind", lit. "equal in value"). This removal of differences is continued by Jesus' statement on the eschatological equality of Christians. They will receive the same → reward (misthos) in heaven as a gift of grace, whether they entered the work in the vineyard early or late (Matt. 20:12).

(b) The existing social inequalities of the members of the congregation, however, are not denied or simply removed. But the fellowship of poor and rich, of masters and slaves, receives new rules and standards, and this through → love as a new regulating principle of life between Christians. Thus masters are exhorted to treat their slaves justly and with fairness (isotēs; Col. 4:1). They are no longer a possession subject to their master's caprice, but → brothers in Christ. Brotherly love always cares for the needy as, for example, in the original community in Jerusalem (Acts 2:44 f.; 4:36 f.), so that the differences also between wealthy and poor do not become a cause of distress (→ Fellowship, art. koinos).

With these assumptions Paul can appeal to the Corinthians on the ground of their experience of equality as Greeks when he exhorts them as something self-evident to give of their own surplus to meet the lack of the community in Jerusalem, so that there might be an equality (isotēs; 2 Cor. 8:13, 14).

This new attitude of brotherly love means being free to love one's → enemy. It surpasses the law of give in order to get, which even sinners practise when they help one another in order "to receive as much again" (Lk. 6:34).

(c) External inequality is not called into question, neither are internal differences within the community. The → gifts (charismata) of → grace are various and are variously divided (Matt. 25:14 f.; 1 Cor. 12:28 ff.; Rom. 12:6 ff.; Eph. 4:16; Mk. 4:24; Rom. 12:3). But from the picture of the → body and its members Paul demonstrates their coordination and their equality of value in Christ (1 Cor. 12:12 ff.). The uniting force is love (1 Cor. 13).

The idea of → reward (misthos), undergoes a limitation in the NT. It is not the "axle of piety" as it was, so often, in Judaism (cf. Sir. 44:21). If it is still retained, it is chiefly in relation to the last → judgment, which will not leave unbelief and its deeds unpunished. But grace cannot be earned. It is a gift, of which all who receive it are equally unworthy (Rom. 11:32).

The secular forms of equality, "which are determined by earthly law and righteousness, are confronted in the NT by another kind of equality which is established by the love of Christians and by the divine gifts of grace" (G. Stählin, TDNT III 348).

3. Two passages speak of Jesus' equality with God.

(a) In Jn. 5:17 Jesus says, "My Father is working still, and I am working." Previously he had broken the → Sabbath commandment, whereupon the Jews taxed him with making himself equal with God. In certain respects they were right to do so, for on their assumptions they could only understand his assertion of equality as a flagrant presumption of independence from God (R. Bultmann, The Gospel of John, 1971, 245; SB II 462 ff.), whereas for Jesus it signified exactly the reverse. As the obedient Son, he revealed the Father, without the greatness of the Father (Jn. 14:28) which was working through him being thereby damaged. The Son is thus equal to the Father in the harmony of their working (5:19 ff.). One can therefore conceive the equality of Jesus with God expressed in Jn. 5:18 as "equality of dignity, will and nature" (TDNT III 353).

(b) The hymn to Christ in Phil. 2:6–11 contains the assertion that Jesus "did not count equality with God a thing to be grasped [ouch harpagmon hēgēsato to einai isa theō], but emptied himself taking the form of a servant, being born in the likeness [homoiōmati] of men" (vv. 6 f.). The numerous complex problems of this passage can only be barely indicated here. First may be noted the contention of E. Käsemann that this statement comes in a "sequence of occurrences in a single event" and therefore does not present "a definition of essence in the manner of a patristic christology" (Exegetische Versuche und Besinnungen, I, 1960, 75). Thus it does not permit us to treat it in isolation as a statement of the kind of equality with God possessed by the pre-existent Jesus. The decisive point is the assertion of pre-existence and the consequent existence in the sphere of God. The striking thing, therefore, in the statement of Phil. 2:6 f. is that the Pre-existent One entered without reserve the sphere of man, death and historical existence in all its ambiguity. It is not just a question of exemplary obedience (v. 8), or "model humility" (E. Lohmeyer, Kyrios Jesus, [1928] 1941, 42), but objectively of incarnation. The revelation involves renouncing the glory of divine status and living under the conditions of a fully human existence. For discussion of kenotic christology and the interpretation of Phil. 2 → Empty, art. kenoō; → Form, arts. morphē and schēma.

E. Beyreuther

ὅμοιος

ὅμοιος (homoios), like, of the same nature, similar; ὁμοίως (homoiōs), likewise, so, similarly, in the same way; ὁμοιόω (homoioō), make like, compare; ὁμοιότης (homoiotēs), likeness, similarity, agreement; ὁμοίωμα (homoiōma), likeness, image, copy, appearance; ὁμοίωσις (homoiōsis), likeness, resemblance; ὁμοιοπαθής (homoiopathēs), with the same nature; παρόμοιος (paromoios), like, similar; παρομοιάζω (paromoiazo), be like; ἀφομοιόω (aphomoioō), make like, similar.

CL 1. The adj. homoios is derived from the root, homos, which is connected with hama, at the same time, together (cf. Lat. simul, at the same time, together; similis, like), and has been in general use since Homer. Four meanings are to be distinguished:

(a) Of the same kind, like, of the same condition, referring to persons and things. As a mark of such a state of affairs, homoios more frequently occurs linked with isos, to emphasize expressly similarity of kind. On the other hand, homoios and isos can even on occasion be interchanged.

(b) Of the same character, hence of the same value, endowed with the same rights (fellow-member of a party, like-minded companion). Thus hoi homoioi, the peers, in Sparta and similarly constituted Gk. city states, were the citizens who possessed the same right of access to all offices (Xenophon, Hellenica 3, 3, 5).

(c) What is divided equally to all, the common, e.g. in possessions or fate (homoiē moira, Homer, Il. 18, 20).

(d) In geometry homoios signifies similar figures in the sense of equal (cf. TDNT V 187).

2. The vb. homoioō remains within this range which the adj. occupies. From Homer on it is used in this sense trans. to make someone like a person or thing, then to hold in similar regard, to compare; pass. to be like, to resemble.

3. The nouns homoiotēs, homoiōsis and homoiōma are at times virtually synonymous meaning likeness, resemblance.

(a) homoiotēs (from the pre-Socratic philosophers onwards) and the rarer homoiōsis are very close in meaning. With homoiotēs the stress falls on similarity of kind, likeness, correspondence, which, perhaps, has only just been produced or discovered and has not existed from the beginning. homoiōsis, making or being like or similar, occurs among the grammarians in the sense of comparison, analogy. It is also used of species (Aristotle, De Plantis 2, 6, p. 826b, 32 f.).

(b) homoiōma seldom occurs in secular Gk., and means what is like-shaped, likeness, image. The stress here also lies on a correspondence and similarity, in this case with reference to the concrete, individual form. homoiōma is moving, therefore, in the direction of eikōn (→ Image). But even if Plato sometimes used the two concepts synonymously, there remains a possible distinction in so far as eikōn is considered more as an entity in itself, whereas homoiōma stresses more the element of comparison. It means what is similar or like, a copy (cf. TDNT V 191).

4. homoiopathēs means literally suffering the same, then generally of similar disposition. The rare paromoios means similar in the sense of almost the same, and therefore presupposes a certain lack of correspondence with the thing copied or compared. paromoiazō, to be similar, is only found in the NT (Matt. 23:27). Similarly, aphomoioō means to make like, to copy; in the pass. to be or become like.

OT In the LXX homoios has predominantly two Heb. equivalents which belong to the realm of simple comparison and, taken by themselves, have no particular significance: k^{e}mô, the extension of the comparative particle k^{e}, as; and mîn, kind, sort, in expressions like of the same kind, the like, e.g. similar types of animal in Lev. 11:14 ff. In contrast the vb. homoioō occurs chiefly for dāmâh, to be like and the nouns homoiōsis and to a lesser extent homoiōma for d^{e}mûṯ, pattern, shape, likeness. One can recognize here an extensive correspondence with Gk. usage. homoioō occurs frequently in the introduction to illustrations and → parables (e.g. Ps. 144:4; Cant. 2:17; 7:8; Sir. 13:1; dāmâh in each case). It also features in statements about the incomparability of Yahweh; e.g. "To whom will you compare me?" (Isa. 46:5). In Gen. 34:15, 22 f. 'ôt, consent to, seems to have been wrongly translated by homooiō.

Of the nouns homoiōma occurs most frequently (some 40 times including non-canonical LXX writings); more rarely homoiōsis (5 times for d^{e}mûṯ, 9 times all told), homoiotēs only 5 times (once for mîn). homoiōma stands for taḇnîṯ, image (Deut. 4:16 ff.), and t^{e}mûnâh, image in connection with the Second Commandment (Exod. 20:4). In Ezek. 1:4 ('ayin) and Ezek. 1:5, 16, 22, 26; 2:1 (1:28); 8:2; 10:1, 10, 21 f., 23:15 (d^emût) homoiōma denotes the mysterious forms that the prophet saw. For Isa. 40:18 tini homoiōmati hōmoiōsate auton the best translation is perhaps: "What kind of copy will you make of him?" homoiotēs in Gen. 1:11 f. is to be translated kind and in Wis. 4:19 and 4 Macc. 15:4 similarity. In just the same way pasa homoiōsis in Ezek. 8:10 (taḇnît) means kinds or images (of creeping and four-footed beasts) and in Ezek. 10 similarity. Dan. 10:16 (Theodotion) hōs homoiōsis hyiou anthrōpou is best rendered "like the form of a man" (Heb. ben 'āḏām, lit. son of man, means man).

In contrast to the incomparability of Yahweh, otherwise so strongly stressed (see also isos OT), Gen. 1:26 states that God created man kat' eikona hēmeteran kai kath' homoiōsin "in our image and likeness". eikōn translates the Heb. ṣelem and homoiōsis the Heb. d^emût. Admittedly man is here accorded a special creaturely worth and even has a special kāḇôḏ, glory (Ps. 8:9). But the statement on the image of God has its real point rather "in the purpose for which the image is given to man" (G. von Rad, Old Testament Theology, I, 1962, 144). There is no direct explanation of the likeness. The plur. may even be understood as a concealment. The hēmeteran (our) may mean nothing more than that man was created "'^e*lōhîm*-like" (cf. Ps. 8:5 [MT 8:6] m^e'aṭ mē'^elōhîm, "little less than God"; cf. LXX brachy ti par' angelous, "a little less than angels"). In other words, man is God's authorized agent and has his worth only as such (von Rad, op. cit., 146; → Image, art. eikōn for other interpretations).

NT The majority of NT occurrences appear, in the case of the adj., adv. and vb., in the Gospels (21 out of 45 occurrences of homoios, 19 out of 31 of homoiōs, 12 out of 15 of homoioō). However, homoios occurs 21 times in Rev. On the other hand, the majority of instances of the nouns are in the Pauline writings and Heb. (homoiōma 4 times in Rom. and once in Phil. out of a total of 6; homoiotēs only twice in Heb.; homoiōsis once in Jas.). homoioō and aphomoioō each occur only once in Heb. (the only occurrence of the latter); and homoiopathēs once each in Acts and Jas.

1. Where adj. and vb. (also the single instance of paromoiazō, be like, Matt. 23:27) occur in the Gospels, they are found predominantly in the introductory formula to Jesus' → parables, especially in Matt. Lk. prefers the form of the parable without introduction (e.g. Lk. 7:41; 10:30; 12:16). Only Matt. uses (10 times) the formulae: homoia estin hē basileia tōn ouranōn, "the kingdom of heaven is like" (13:31, 33, 44, 45, 47; 20:1); hōmoiōthē hē basileia tōn ouranōn, "the kingdom of heaven may be compared to" (Matt. 13:24; 18:23; 22:2); and homoiōthēsetai hē basileia tōn ouranōn "the kingdom of heaven shall be compared" (Matt. 25:1). Mk. 13:34 (cf. 4:31) simply has hōs, as; and Matt. 25:14 hōsper, as. The Aramaic underlying these formulations is a terse construction in the dative case using l^e. J. Jeremias holds that this should be rendered: "It is the case with . . . as with. . . ." (The Parables of Jesus, 1963², 101). The point of comparison, e.g., in Matt. 13:45 is not the merchant but the pearl; in Matt. 22:2 it is not the king but the wedding feast, etc. The construction corresponding to the developed dative beginning occurs, e.g., in Lk. 13:20 f., "To what shall I compare the kingdom of God? Where it is concerned it is as . . .", or more broadly Mk. 4:30 f. (On the whole question see J. Jeremias, op. cit., 100–3; → Parable, art. parabolē).

2. In other passages homoios is found in very varied connections.

(a) In Matt. 22:39, in the double commandment, love for one's neighbour is placed beside love for God as its necessary counterpart and illustration (homoia; → Brother, art. plēsion; → Command; → Law; → Love). According to Jn. 8:55, Jesus would be a liar, a denier of the revealing and sending God like his opponents (homoios hymin pseustēs, "a liar like you"), if he were to be silent and avoid giving offence (cf. R. Bultmann, The Gospel of John, 1971, 300 f.).

(b) homoios also occurs in connection with the polemic against the worship of false gods in Acts 17:29. The idea that God cannot be depicted struck a chord among educated Gks.; but it was to just such that the speech before the Areopagus sought to present an apology for Christianity as the model of the only true worship of the "unknown god" (v. 23; → God, art. theos NT 4 (b)). Rom. 1:23 also belongs to the polemic against the worship of false gods. Through their images the heathen have "exchanged the glory of the immortal God for images resembling [en homoiōmati eikonos] mortal man or birds or animals or reptiles" (cf. O. Michel, Der Brief an die Römer, KEK 4, 1966[13], 60; N. Hyldahl, "A Reminiscence of the Old Testament in Romans i. 23", NTS 2, 1955–56, 285–88; G. Bornkamm, "The Revelation of God's Wrath (Romans 1–3)", Early Christian Experience, 1969, 47–70; C. E. B. Cranfield, The Epistle to the Romans, ICC, I, 1975, 119 f.). Thereby the revelation of the true God was negated, the God to whom, according to vv. 19 f., the heathen also had access (→ God, art. theos NT 4 (b)).

Acts 14:11 is also concerned with a naive, heathen belief in false gods. Here the crowd thought that their gods, Zeus and Hermes, had taken on human form (homoiōthentes) in Barnabas and Paul. The apostles protested, indicating that they too were ordinary men (homoiopathēs, of like nature) and mere messengers of the living God (v. 15). homoiopathēs occurs otherwise only in Jas. 5:17 → Elijah was like us a mortal man.

(c) 1 Jn. 3:2 expresses the expectation that we shall be like Jesus (homoioi autō esometha) at his parousia, and see him as he is (→ Present, art. parousia). For the present we are instructed to seek the true knowledge of Christ in his word and this word only allows us a token knowledge of his true being (cf. 1 Cor. 13:12). At the parousia, on the other hand, an unimpaired relationship will be possible, on "the same level of being" (F. Hauck, NTD 10, 129 f.). However, the writer does not intend this isolated remark to be a speculative description of future likeness to God. He prefaces it with the observation: "we are God's children now; it does not yet appear what we shall be." And he follows it with an exhortation to purity.

In Rev. 1:13 and 14:14 the "one like a son of man" is to be interpreted within the framework of Son of man christology (→ Son of God, art. hyios tou anthrōpou). The "son of man" of Dan. 7:13, the divinely appointed, kingly judge of the world, is the exalted Christ, the coming messiah. On the grammatical construction see Funk §182(4).

(d) homoios occurs elsewhere in comparisons, without having any particular stress of its own: in Gal. 5:21 in the phrase "and the like [kai ta homoia]"; similarly in Mk. 7:13 "and many such things [kai paromoia toiauta polla]"; cf. also, e.g., Rev. 2:18; 4:3, 6, 7 in symbolic comparisons. The same applies in Rev. 9:7 for homoiōma which RSV and Arndt (570) render "appearance".

3. homoiōma plays an important rôle in the christological statements of Rom.

and Phil. in expressing both the divinity of the Pre-existent One and the humanity of the Incarnate One.

(a) Rom. 5:14 asserts that mankind as a whole, like → Adam, has been subjected to the rule of death, even if it has not sinned in exactly the same way as he (epi tō homoiōmati). Adam is the → type of Christ, the Last Adam (cf. 1 Cor. 15:45). What Christ brings about by grace surpasses by far the equivalent effect of the fall of the first man (pollō mallon, v. 15; → Fullness, art. perisseuō).

(b) Rom. 6:5 presents certain difficulties of exegesis: "For if we have been united [symphytoi gegonamen] with him in a death like his [tō homoiōmati tou thanatou autou], we shall certainly be united in a resurrection like his [alla kai tēs anastaseōs esometha]" (RSV). The interpretation depends on whether one understands homoiōma in this verse concretely as a picture, the symbolic representation of something else, or as the actual realization of an event by means of a symbolic representation. If one prefers the second rarer, but here very appropriate alternative, the text would mean: "In the act of baptism the death of Jesus Christ is present, although in a different form from that on Golgotha," and we are "received into the same saving event" (symphytoi means lit. "grown together"; O. Michel, op. cit., 154; cf. J. Schneider also TDNT V 192–95).

(c) Rom. 8:3 also presents difficulties. "For God has done what the law, weakened by the flesh, could not do: sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh [en homoiōmati sarkos hamartias] and for sin [kai peri hamartias] he condemned sin in the flesh" (RSV). The difficulties have their origin in the theological problem of grasping conceptually the incarnation, i.e. the paradox of how Christ can be fully God and fully man, and applying it to the justification of the sinner. "Paul wants to emphasize that the power of sin is a cosmic unity, but that it is broken into at one absolutely specific point" (O. Michel, op. cit., 190). By remaining obedient under the form of our bodily existence and bearing its burden Jesus "became in a unique sense a sign of the righteousness of God" (O. Michel, ibid.).

(d) Similarly in Phil. 2:7 the Incarnate One is described as "being born in the likeness of men [en homoiōmati anthrōpōn genomenos]" (RSV). He took on human form, and became like man. There are still those who try to interpret this likeness as not real, but merely apparent. J. Schneider, for example, appears to come near to this, when he says that "even as man He remained at the core of His being, what He had been before" (TDNT V 197). All interpretations which tend in this direction can hardly avoid the danger of some form of docetism, even when the contrary is asserted. Likewise it seems to us that one cannot, following on v. 5, determine the tenor of Phil. 2:5–11 as ethical (Jesus surrendered his divine nature by a free decision, he voluntarily practised obedience "unto death"). This would result in homoiōma being merely the model for the obedience of faith. However, E. Käsemann has shown that the hymn is to be understood eschatologically and soteriologically (Exegetische Versuche und Besinnungen, I, 1960, 51 ff.). What has already been said about Rom. 8:3 applies here unequivocally. Christ has in fact taken a historically unique, unambiguously human form. He was in fact delivered to death, the curse of sinful men (cf. Gal. 3:13), although he himself was sinless (cf. Heb. 4:15). Thus at a specific point in time he broke the power of sin and death.

Here, too, the mystery of the saving significance of the incarnation must be expressed in words which cannot serve as a basis for dogmatic speculations, for this mystery can only be described in terms of paradox.

4. (a) Heb. also uses homoioō, aphomoioō and homoiotēs in connection with christological statements. Christ "had to be made like his brethren in every respect [kata panta tois adelphois homoiōthēnai]" (2:17). Hence he was tempted like us "in quite the same way (kath' homoiotēta]" (4:15; cf. Arndt, 570). "The becoming like signifies being bound to us in history and humanity, in temptation, suffering and dying" (O. Michel, Der Brief an die Hebräer, KEK 13, 1966[12], 163). That Christ took flesh and blood and thus was placed in the situation of man before God is seen in the light of theological reflection as a matter of → necessity ("he had to [ōpheilen]", 2:17). For only thus can the sentence of death, which hangs over man, be averted (cf. O. Michel, ibid).

(b) In Heb. 7 the Son of God is compared with → Melchizedek in the form of type and antitype. "God is the artist who allows a sign of the first age to correspond with the event of the last" (O. Michel, op. cit., 163). Melchizedek is said to resemble (aphomoiōmenos) the Son of God (7:3). His priesthood is not limited in time. No genealogy is given, and his birth and death find no mention in the OT. Hence rabbinical exegesis concluded that he possessed a special being and office (SB III 694 f.). So when, according to Heb. 7:15, Christ is installed in his priestly office "in the likeness [kata tēn homoiotēta] of Melchizedek", what is being said is that he has an office not limited in time and a share in the power of indestructible life (v. 16), to which he has opened the way of access (cf. 10:19 ff.) for his brothers (2:17) as their pioneer or originator (12:2; → Begin, art. archēgos).

5. The only other verse in which homoiōsis occurs (Jas. 3:9) warns against the sins of the tongue (→ Word, art. glōssa). The tongue is capable of contradictory opposites: → blessing God and → cursing man who, according to Gen. 1:26, is created in the image (kath' homoiōsin) of God. Therefore to curse man is indirectly to curse God. E. Beyreuther, G. Finkenrath

6. The term homoousios became one of the crucial terms in the history of Christian doctrine in view of its central importance in the Arian controversy. Arius and his followers denied the divinity of Christ. At the Council of Nicea (325) homoousios (of the same substance or stuff, of one substance, consubstantial) was inserted into the creed adopted by the council to express the faith of the church. It was reaffirmed by the Council of Constantinople (381). But in the intervening years it was questioned not only by the Arians but by many churchmen who were uneasy about making a term not contained in the Scriptures the test of orthodoxy. It was defended by Athanasius on the grounds that it contains "the sense of the Scriptures" (Epistola de decretis Nicaenae synodi 21; cf. Gregory Nazianzen, Orationes 31, 23 f.). In particular, Athanasius appealed to the fact that Christ was the offspring (gennēma) of the Father (→ Birth, art. gennaō). Among the passages he appealed to were Jn. 1:18; 6:46; 8:42; 10:30; 14:10.

Originally homoousios had a non-theological generic sense meaning "made of the same stuff", and was applied to physical objects which cannot be composed of identical portions of matter. It was used thus by Eusebius (Demonstratio evangelica 1, 10, 13) and Basil the Great (Adversus Eunomium 2, 19). Diodore of Tarsus (Commentary on Psalms 54:4) and Chrysostom (Homiliae 16, 2 in 1 Tim.) used it in the sense of fellow men.

In a simple theological sense it was quite a common term among gnostic writers, as is shown by orthodox opponents such as Epiphanius (Haer. 33, 7, 8), Irenaeus (Haer. 1, 15, 1), Hippolytus (Haer. 7, 22, 7) and Tertullian (Adv.Herm. 44; Lat. consubstantialis). They saw it as the nature of the Good to produce or beget objects similar to itself and homoousios with itself. Both Clement of Alexandria (Strom. 2, 16; 74, 1) and Origen (Commentarii in Joannem 13, 25, 149) argued against those gnostics who said that some men are homoousios with the unbegotten nature.

Commenting on Wis. 7:25, where wisdom is said to be "a breath of the power of God, and a clear effluence of the glory of the Almighty", Origen wrote: "Both these illustrations suggest a community of substance between Father and Son. For an effluence would appear to be homoousios, i.e. of one substance with, that body of which it is an effluence or vapour" (Fragmenta in Heb.; cf. De prin. 4, 4, 1).

Prior to the Council of Nicea it seems that homoousios simply meant "of one substance" as applied to material objects. When the metaphor was applied to the divine persons, its limitations were clearly recognized. The emperor Constantine who urged the term upon the Council of Nicea emphasized that it was not being used as it would be of physical objects, "nor as if the Son subsisted out of the Father by way of division or any sort of severance" (Eusebius, Epistula ad Caesarienses 4). One of the reasons for the term being rejected by Arius and his followers was that they understood it in the material sense only (Arius, Epistula ad Alexandrum Alexandrinum). The Creed of Nicea declared that: "We believe . . . in one Lord Jesus Christ . . . begotten, not made, of one substance with the Father [homoousion tō patri]." It was intended to be anti-Arian, suggesting, it would seem, nothing more nor less than that the Son shares the same divine nature as the Father.

A. Robertson saw the formula of Nicea as "the work of two concurrent influences, that of the anti-Origenists of the East, especially Marcellus of Ancyra, Eustathius of Antioch, supported by Macarius of 'Aelia', Hellanicus of Tripolis, and Asclepas of Gaza, and that of the Western bishops, especially Hosius of Cordova" (St. Athanasius: Select Works and Letters, IV, A Select Library of Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers, 1892, xvii). He further agreed with Harnack that Constantine was "prompted" by Hosius to insert the phrase homoousion tō patri (op. cit., xviii; cf. A. Harnack, History of Dogma, IV, reprint 1961, 56). It seems clear that Athanasius was not the author of the term. As F. Loofs observed, Athanasius was moulded by the Creed of Nicea, but did not mould the creed himself (Leitfaden zum Studium der Dogmengeschichte, 1906[4], 237–43). The minority party at Nicea, led by Hosius, in all probability saw the term as implying a great deal more than that the Son is God in the same sense as the Father. "For to the Westerns the word implied identity (tautotēs) as well as equality or unity with the Godhead" (T. H. Bindley and F. W. Green, The Oecumenical Documents of the Faith, 1950[4], 24).

The Eastern opponents (the Arians, semi-Arians and Origenists) of the Nicene formula seized upon the rejection of homoousios by the Council of Antioch in 268. It was the reasoning of Paul of Samosata (fl. 260–72) which led to this step. Paul had argued that his adoptionist view was the only one possible, on the grounds that "unless Christ has of man become God, it follows that He is homoousios with the Father; and if so, of necessity there are three ousiai, one the previous ousia, and the other two from it" (Athanasius, De Synodis 45). On this material interpretation of the term the Council of Antioch could do nothing but reject it. However, as Athanasius points out, the Council of Nicea "understanding Paul's craft, and reflecting that the word homoousios has not this meaning when used of things immaterial, and especially of God" (ibid.), rightly chose to use it.

The opponents of Nicea saw the term as an open door for Sabellianism. The Sabellians of Libyan Pentapolis in their dispute with Dionysius of Alexandria (c. 260) had accused the latter of failing to describe the Son as homoousios with the Father (Athanasius, De Sententia Dionysii 18). When the pro-Nicene Marcellus of Ancyra and his deacon Photinus moved towards Sabellianism, the Arians saw this as confirmation of their contention that the supporters of homoousios were implicitly Sabellian and did not believe in the separate identity of the Son. However, Basil the Great (c. 370) supported Athanasius in his use of the term, and added that in fact it was a safeguard against Sabellianism, "since a unitary object cannot be homoousios with itself; the term implies plurality of hypostasis" (Epistula 52, 3). The point was also made in 374 by Epiphanius (Ancoratus 6, 4).

In the years after Nicea the Arian party gradually gained the upper hand in the East to such an extent that the more moderate Origenists, under Basil of Ancyra, felt compelled to rally (358) around the compromise formula homoiousios (of like substance). The statesmanship of Athanasius and Hilary then gradually won them over to homoousios (De Synodis 41). In 381 at the Council of Constantinople the phrase homoousion tō patri was once more accepted into the creed as the orthodox view of the church, and Arianism was rejected. Summing up the dispute, the historian Socrates was to write in the 5th century: "The situation was exactly like a battle by night, for both parties seemed to be in the dark about the grounds on which they were hurling abuse at each other. Those who objected to the word homoousios imagined that its adherents were bringing in the doctrine of Sabellius and Montanus. So they called them blasphemers on the ground that they were undermining the personal subsistence of the Son of God. On the other hand, the protagonists of homoousios concluded that their opponents were introducing polytheism, and steered clear of them as importers of paganism. . . . Thus, while both affirmed the personality and subsistence of the Son of God, and confessed that there was one God and three hypostases, they were somehow incapable of reaching agreement, and for this reason could not bear to lay down arms" (Historia Ecclesiastica, 1, 23).

The question whether the Holy Spirit is homoousios with the other two divine persons was considered by Athanasius (c. 359). He held that although the Spirit is not directly called God, he is shown as belonging to the Word and the Father, and as sharing one and the same substance (homoousios) with them (Epistulae ad Serapionem, 1, 27). In 362 at the Council of Alexandria this proposition was accepted (Tomus ad Antiochenses 3; 5 f.). Epiphanius writes that the Holy Spirit is "not begotten, not created, not fellow-brother nor brother to the Father, nor forefather nor offspring, but out of the same substance [homoousios] of the Father and Son" (Ancoratus 7, 7 f.).

"The single Deity of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, under the concept of equal majesty and of the Holy Trinity" (Codex Theodosianus 16, 1, 2, A.D. 380) became the norm of orthodoxy. It was professed by Damasus of Rome in 372 and was accepted by the Council of Antioch in 379. Its acceptance at Constantinople in 381 is seen in the Fifth Canon of the Council and in the Council's Creed.

M. Farmery

→ God, → Image, → Man, → Melchizedek, → Type

On isos and homoios:
(a). Arndt, 381 f., 570 f.; R. Bultmann, The Gospel of John, 1971; J. Jeremias, The Parables of Jesus, 1963²; I. H. Marshall, "The Christ-Hymn in Philippians 2:5–11;" TB 19, 1968, 104–27; R. P. Martin, An Early Christian Confession: Philippians II. 5–11 in Recent Interpretation, 1960; and Carmen Christi: Philippians ii. 5–11 in Recent Interpretation and in the Setting of Early Christian Worship, 1967; C. F. D. Moule, "Further Reflections on Philippians 2:5–11", in W. W. Gasque and R. P. Martin, eds., Apostolic History and the Gospel, Biblical and Historical Essays presented to F. F. Bruce, 1970, 264–76; G. von Rad, Old Testament Theology, I, 1962; J. Schneider, homoios etc., TDNT V 186–99; G. Stählin, isos etc., TDNT III 343–55.
On Athanasius and the Arian controversy see B. Altaner, Patrology, 1960; Athanasius, Select Works and Letters, IV, ed. A. Robertson, A Select Library of Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers, 1892; and Contra Gentiles and De Incarnatione, ed. and tr. by R. W. Thomson, 1971; T. H. Bindley and F. W. Green, The Oecumenical Documents of the Faith, 1950⁴; A. Grillmeier, Christ in Christian Tradition: From the Apostolic Age to Chalcedon (451), 1975²; A. Harnack, History of Dogma, IV, reprint 1961; J. N. D. Kelly, Early Christian Creeds, 1972³; and Early Christian Doctrines, 1968⁴; G. L. Prestige, God in Patristic Thought, 1936; J. Quasten, Patrology, III, 1960; G. C. Stead, "The Platonism of Arius", JTS New Series 15, 1964, 16–31; J. Stevenson, A New Eusebius: Documents Illustrative of the History of the Church to A.D. 337, 1957; and Creeds Councils and Controversies: Documents Illustrative of the History of the Church A.D. 337–461, 1966; M. Wiles, "In Defence of Arius", JTS New Series 13, 1962, 339–47; and "HOMOOUSIOS HĒMIN", JTS New Series 16, 1965, 454–61.
(b). D. Georgi, "Der vorpaulinische Hymnus Phil. 2, 6–11", in E. Dinkler, ed., Zeit und Geschichte, Dankesgabe an Rudolf Bultmann zum 80. Geburtstag, 1964, 263 ff.; F. Hauck, Die Kirchenbriefe, NTD 10, 1953⁶; E. Käsemann, "Kritische Analyse von Phil. 2, 5–11", Exegetische Versuche und Besinnungen, I, 1960, 51 ff.; E. Lohmeyer, Kyrios Jesus. Eine Untersuchung zu Phil. 2, 5–11, Sitzungsberichte der Heidelberger Akademie der Wissenschaften, Philosophisch-historische Klasse, 1927–28, 4. Abhandlung, 1928, 1961²; O. Michel, Der Brief an die Römer, KEK 4, 1966¹³; and Der Brief an die Hebräer, KEK 13, 1966¹².

Lord, Master

One of the basic facts of human existence is the power and authority that some people have over others. Gk. has two principal words for lord and master. despotēs denotes the lord as owner and master in the spheres of family and public life, where lordship sometimes entails harshness and caprice. kyrios which occurs more often means lord, and carries with it overtones of the legality and acknowledged authority of lordship. When a god is called lord, the predominant term is kyrios; despotēs is used very seldom in this connection. In classical antiquity the lord stood over against the → slave, the servant (doulos).

δεσπότης

δεσπότης (despotēs), lord, master (of a house), owner; οἰκοδεσπότης (oikodespotēs), the master of a house; οἰκοδεσποτέω (oikodespoteō), be master of a house, rule one's household.

CL despotēs (formed from domos, house and potis* [whence posis], lord) means: (a) the master of a house (who usually had absolute authority over his household); (b) master, as opposed to slave; (c) owner; (d) (transferred in the course of political developments from the sphere of the household to that of politics) the ruler, who is characterized by the scope of his power and by his high-handedness, particularly towards subject peoples. Starting from the idea of unlimited possession, despotēs often involves harshness and caprice, whereas kyrios emphasizes more strongly the idea of the legality with which someone acts.

oikodespotēs, master of a house, a pleonastic compound etymologically speaking, became an astrological technical term in secular Gk.: the planets were oikodespotai in particular signs of the Zodiac. In this context oikodespotēsis meant the predominance of a planet.

OT despotēs occurs only about 60 times in the LXX. Where there is a Heb. original it mostly translates 'ādôn, lord, master. The word is used less than kyrios. This was no doubt because despotēs expresses the arbitrary, unlimited exercise of power without any real conditions, which must have been foreign to Israel's concept of God. For Israel had experienced the Lordship of God in his gracious, saving actions in history. Where it is used (especially in later writings) it particularly emphasizes God's omnipotence (cf. Isa. 1:24; 3:1; 10:33; Jer. 4:10; 15:11; Jon. 4:3; Dan. 9:8, 15 ff., 19; Wis. 6:7; 8:3; Sir. 23:1; 31[34]:24; 33[36]:1). The retreat of the term despotēs in the face of kyrios is theòlogically significant. oikodespotēs does not occur in the LXX.

NT 1. In the NT the word occurs 10 times.

(a) God is addressed in prayer 3 times as despotēs (Lk. 2:29 in contrast to doulos, slave; Acts 4:24; Rev. 6:10 quoting Zech. 1:12 and Ps. 79:5 [LXX 78:5, where the LXX translates kyrie]).

(b) despotēs is twice used with reference to Christ: 2 Pet. 2:1 (Christ the Master bought us; the background is the metaphor of the redemption of slaves); and Jude 4 which uses the same underlying idea (despotēs alongside kyrios). In both passages the term is used in opposition to heretical statements. The false teachers deny that Jesus is despotēs. K. H. Rengstorf suggests that "despotēs is here used rather than kyrios to suggest the function of Jesus as the One who commands and exercises influence and power." The false teachers "do not acknowledge Jesus in practice as the One whose will they must take as their guide" (TDNT II 49). This interpretation, in the light of the context and of 2 Pet. 2:1, seems more likely than that which sees Jesus here deliberately placed beside God as Almighty.

(c) Used of earthly lords in the sense of owner despotēs occurs in 1 Tim. 6:1; Tit. 2:9 (douloi, slaves, and despotai are contrasted; cf. douloi and kyrioi in Eph. 6:5; Col. 3:22); and 1 Pet. 2:18 (oiketai, servants, and despotai). Slaves are exhorted to be obedient to their masters in order that the faith may not be brought into disrepute by their disobedience. It has an essentially metaphorical sense in 2 Tim. 2:21 as master of the house. Anyone who purifies himself from false teaching is a vessel for noble use, consecrated and useful to the despotēs. Here Christ is to be understood as the despotēs.

2. oikodespotēs occurs 12 times in the NT, particularly in Matt. (10:25; 13:52; 24:43; in parables oikodespotēs illustrates God's actions by means of the activities of the master of the house; 13:27; 20:1, 11; 21:33; cf. Lk. 14:21), where it corresponds to Heb. ba'al habayit, the owner of a house or land. It is frequently found in connection with anthrōpos, man, the master who rules over his household. In Mk. 14:14 the owner of the ass, on which Jesus intends to ride into the city, is called oikodespotēs. oikodespotēs is used pleonastically in Lk. 22:11. If the oikodespotēs had known when the thief was coming, he would have watched (Matt. 24:43). In the parable of Lk. 13:25 ff. Jesus is the oikodespotēs who will shut the door on those who come late. Through the metaphor of the oikodespotēs Jesus is depicted as the Lord of the → kingdom. In a further word-picture Jesus spoke of himself as the oikodespotēs (Matt. 10:24). His opponents have abused him and called him Beelzebul (Matt. 12:24; cf. 9:34; → Satan); how much more will the members of his household (i.e. his → disciples and followers) be exposed to abuse. Here oikodespotēs is used in parallel with didaskalos and kyrios (v. 24 f.) and characterizes the relationship between Jesus and the disciples as imitation of suffering.

oikodespoteō, rule over house and family, occurs only in 1 Tim. 5:14 in directions to younger women to marry and rule their households. H. Bietenhard

κύριος

κύριος (kyrios), lord, master, owner, Lord; κυρία (kyria), lady, mistress; κυριακός (kyriakos), belonging to the Lord, the Lord's; κυριότης (kyriotēs), lordship, dominion; κυριεύω (kyrieuō), be lord, master, rule; κατακυριεύω (katakyrieuō), rule over, subjugate, conquer, be master of, lord it over.

CL kyrios (attested from Pindar on) adj. having power, authoritative, from to kyros, power, might; as a noun, lord, ruler, one who has control (over people things, himself). kyrios always contains the idea of legality and authority. kyrios is often used beside despotēs which means especially an owner (with overtones of high-handedness). Later anyone occupying a superior position was referred to quite generally as kyrios and addressed as kyrie (fem. kyria). From here it penetrated as a loan-word into the Heb. of the Talmud and Midrash, and also into Aram. (cf. e.g. Tg. Job 5:2; Tg. Ps. 53:1) to denote God.

1. In classical Gk. of the early period kyrios was not used as a divine title. Although the term was applied to the gods (e.g. Pindar, Isth. 5, 53; Plato, Leg. 12, 13), there was no general belief in a personal creator god. The gods were not creators and lords of fate, but were like men subject to fate. In effect, gods and men belonged to the same sphere of reality (cf. the beginning of Pindar's Ode to Alcimidas). The Gk. of this period did not understand his position as that of a → slave (doulos), dependent on a god. Nor did he feel himself in any way personally responsible to the gods. Only in so far as the gods ruled over particular individual spheres in the world could they be called kyrioi.

2. In this respect the situation was different in the East. "For the Orientals the gods are the lords of reality. Destiny is in their hands" (W. Foerster, TDNT III 1048). The gods created man who, moreover, was personally answerable to them. They could intervene in the life of men to save, punish or judge. They also established justice and law, which they communicated to men, e.g. through the king. Therefore they were called lords.

3. Instances of the use of the title kyrios in Hellenistic times with reference to gods or rulers do not occur until the 1st cent. B.C. (cf. W. Foerster, TDNT III 1049). kyrios basileus, Lord and King, is found frequently between 64 and 50 B.C. In 12 B.C. the emperor Augustus was called theos kai kyrios, God and Lord, in Egypt (BGU, 1197, I, 15); in Upper Egypt Queen Candace (cf. Acts 8:27) was called hē kyria basilissa, Mistress and Queen. The title kyrios was also used of Herod the Great (c. 73–4 B.C.), Agrippa I (c. 10 B.C.–A.D. 44) and Agrippa II (A.D. 27–c. 100). Apart from rulers, high officials could also receive this title, e.g. a Ptolemaic governor. The same was probably true in Syria as in Egypt; not until the 1st cent. B.C. were eastern lords called kyrios. Thus we find titles like kyrios theos, Lord and Governor. kyrios was used of the gods where, in contemporary popular thought and speech, they were referred to as lords. In this case kyrios translated the underlying Semitic equivalents (e.g. 'ādôn, mārā', fem. rabbaṯ). These terms always bore a personal suffix (my, our, etc.) and were placed in front of the name of a god. Where kyrios was used of a god, the servant (→ Slave, art. doulos) who thus used it stood in a personal relationship of responsibility towards the god, who on his part exercised personal authority. When, e.g. Heb. 'ādôn denoted the lord of power, kyrios was the natural Gk. equivalent. Individual gods were worshipped as lords of their cultic communities and of the separate members of the fellowship. The worship of other lords was not excluded, for none of them was visualized or worshipped as universal lord. (See further W. Foerster, TDNT II 1049–54.)

4. The Roman emperors Augustus (31 B.C.–A.D. 14) and Tiberius (A.D. 14–37), in accordance with Roman feeling for justice, rejected the eastern form of monarchy and with it all that was bound up in the title kyrios. But Caligula (A.D. 37–41) found the title of kyrios attractive. From Nero (A.D. 54–68) on, who was described in an inscription as ho tou pantos kosmou kyrios, Lord of all the World (SIG 814, 31), the title kyrios occurs more and more frequently. One of the oldest instances is Acts 25:26. The title kyrios was brought into disrepute again by Domitian (A.D. 81–96), who had himself called in official letters dominus et deus noster, Our Lord and God (Suetonius, De Vita Caesarum, 13, 2). After Domitian's death this title was detested along with his memory (damnatio memoriae). Nevertheless, it prevailed again later. In and of itself the title kyrios does not call the emperor god; but when he is worshipped as divine, the title Lord also counts as a divine predicate. It was against such a religious claim, which demanded so much of the burdened conscience, that the Christians turned and rejected the totalitarian attitudes of the state. (On the early church and the Roman empire see W. H. C. Frend, Martyrdom and Persecution in the Early Church: A Study of a Conflict from the Maccabees to Donatus, 1965; R. M. Grant, Augustus to Constantine: The Thrust of the Christian Movement into the Roman World, 1970.)

OT 1. In the LXX kyrios occurs over 9,000 times. It is used to translate 'ādôn, lord, and as such refers 190 times to men. It is used only 15 times for ba'al, lord. While ba'al, in marriage and property law, denotes the owner of a wife or piece of land (e.g. Hos. 2:18; Jdg. 19:22, 23), 'ādôn is determined by social factors and means the one who commands, the responsible head of a group (e.g. 1 Sam. 25). Yahweh is rarely called owner (Hos. 2:16 [MT 18]), but more frequently Lord of the community belonging to him (cf. Ps. 123:22).

In addition kyrios can stand also for g^{e}bîr, commander, or (Aram.) mārā', lord, or šallîṭ, ruler. In the overwhelming majority of cases (some 6156), however, kyrios replaces the Heb. proper name of God, the tetragrammaton YHWH. The LXX thus strengthened the tendency to avoid the utterance of the name of God, and finally to avoid its use altogether. The substitution of the title 'ᵃḏōnay for the proper name Yahweh was a result of Israel's development from a national religion in the pre-exilic period to an international one in the period of Alexander (356–323 B.C.). Where originally the exodus was the theological focal point, after the exile the emphasis fell on the creation of the world. Where kyrios stands for 'āḏôn or 'ᵃḏōnay there has been genuine translation, but where, on the other hand, it stands for Yahweh it is an interpretative circumlocution for all that the Heb. text implied by the use of the divine name: Yahweh is Creator and Lord of the whole universe, of men, Lord of life and death. Above all he is the God of → Israel, his → covenant → people. By choosing kyrios for Yahweh the LXX Gk. text also emphasized the idea of legal authority. Because Yahweh saved his people from → Egypt and chose them as his possession, he is the legitimate Lord of Israel. As → Creator of the world he is also its legitimate Lord with unlimited control over it. (For further discussion of the use of the title Lord instead of the name Yahweh → God, art. theos OT 2.)

2. Recent textual discoveries cast doubt on the idea that the compilers of the LXX translated the tetragrammaton YHWH by kyrios. The oldest LXX MSS (fragments) now available to us have the tetragrammaton written in Heb. characters in the Gk. text. This custom was retained by later Jewish translators of the OT in the first centuries A.D. One LXX MS from Qumran even represents the tetragrammaton by IAŌ. These instances have given support to the theory that the thorough-going use of kyrios for the tetragrammaton in the text of the LXX was primarily the work of Christian scribes (P. E. Kahle, The Cairo Geniza, 1959², 222; cf. S. Jellicoe, The Septuagint and Modern Study, 1968, 185 f., 271 f.). On the other hand, the Jews would already have replaced the tetragrammaton by kyrios in the oral transmission of the Gk. OT text.

3. In post-OT Jewish literature kyrios first appears as a term for God in Wis. (27 times, e.g. 1:1, 7, 9; 2:13), then particularly frequently in Philo and Josephus. Philo seems not to have been aware that kyrios stood for the tetragrammaton, for he used theos, God, to indicate the gracious power of God, while kyrios, on the other hand, for him describes God's kingly power (e.g. Som. 1, 163). Since the earliest Egyptian and Syrian instances of gods being called kyrioi, lords, come from the 1st cent. B.C. the substitution of kyrios for the tetragrammaton is no doubt connected with these non-Jewish ascriptions. At about the same time the members of the Qumran sect, in Heb. biblical MSS, were writing 'ᵃḏōnay, Lord, instead of the tetragrammaton. A few fragments from the caves pick out the tetragrammaton in ancient Heb. script while the rest of the text is written in square characters (on this see J. A. Sanders in D. N. Freedman and J. C. Greenfield, eds., New Directions in Biblical Archaeology, 1969, 101–16; and "The Dead Sea Scrolls – A Quarter Century of Study", BA 36, 1973, 140; J. P. Siegel, Hebrew Union College Annual 42, 1971, 159–72). The non-biblical texts from Qumran make it clear that 'ᵃḏônay was used particularly as an invocation in prayers, and therefore predominantly in liturgical contexts (1QM 12:8, 18; 1QH passim; 1QSb; 1Q34; 4Q Diḇrê Hamᵉ'ōrôṯ [Words of the Luminaries]).

4. In the Aram. scroll of the so-called Genesis Apocryphon (1QGenAp) God is addressed as māri, my Lord. Apart from this one instance, this form of address is not found in Aram. In the same text māri is used once by a woman addressing her husband. Otherwise Aram. uses mār, lord (with personal suffixes) only to address people who have particular authority, especially in the fields of law or education. ([F. F. Bruce]. In 11Q Targum Job mārē' is used as the Aram. rendering of Heb. šadday, Almighty [Job 34:10, 12]; and in the Aram. Enoch fragments from Cave 4 mārē' or māran is found as a designation of God [M. Black, "The Christological use of the Old Testament in the New Testament", NTS 18, 1971–2, 10].)

NT Of the 717 passages in which kyrios occurs in the NT, the majority are to be found in the Lucan writings (210) and in Paul's letters (275). This one-sidedness can be explained by the fact that Luke wrote for, and Paul to, people who lived in areas dominated by Gk. culture and language. On the other hand, the Gospel of Mk., more firmly based in Jewish Christian tradition, uses the kyrios-title only 18 times, and these mostly in quotations. The remaining occurrences of kyrios are spread over the other NT books: Matt. 80; Jn. 52; Heb. 16; Jas. 14; 1 Pet. 8; 2 Pet. 14; Jude 7; and Rev. 23. The fact that kyrios is one of the most frequently used words in the NT is in accordance with its varied use in the LXX.

1. The secular use of kyrios. The kyrios stands over against the → slave (Matt. 10:24 f.; 18:25, 27; 25:19; Lk. 12:36 f., 46; Eph. 6:5, 9; Col. 3:22). kyrios means owner (Mk. 12:9; Lk. 19:33; Matt. 15:27; Gal. 4:1), or employer (Lk. 16:3, 5). The husband faces his wife as kyrios, i.e. as superior (1 Pet. 3:6; cf. Gen. 18:12 LXX). A gen. qualifying kyrios betrays the influence of Sem. (Palestinian) usage (e.g. Mk. 12:9; Lk. 10:2). kyrios used as a form of address can emphasize the power of a superior over an inferior, but it can also be simply politeness (Matt. 18:21 f.; 25:20 ff.; 27:63; Lk. 13:8; Jn. 12:21; 20:15; Acts 16:30). It is also used to address angels (Acts 10:4; Rev. 7:14) and the unknown in the heavenly vision outside Damascus (Acts 9:5; 22:8, 10; 26:15). A twice repeated kyrios corresponds to Palestinian usage (Matt. 7:12 f.; 25:11; Lk. 6:46). The use of the nom. with the art. instead of the voc. (Jn. 20:28; Rev. 4:11) is also Sem., as is the addition of a noun in the gen. in place of an adj. (1 Cor. 2:8; 2 Thess. 3:16).

2. God as the kyrios. In accordance with the usage of the Hellenistic synagogues God is frequently called kyrios, especially in the numerous quotations from the OT in which kyrios stands for Yahweh, corresponding to the custom of pronouncing the title kyrios instead of the tetragrammaton in public reading (e.g. Rom. 4:8 = Ps. 32:2; 9:28 f. = Isa. 10:22 f.; 10:16 = Isa. 53:1; 11:3 = Lk. 19:10; 11:34 = Isa. 40:13; 14:11 = Isa. 45:23; 15:11 = Ps. 117:1; 1 Cor. 3:20 = Ps. 94:11; 14:21 = Isa. 28:11 f.). kyrios frequently denotes God in the Lucan birth narratives (e.g. Lk. 1:32; 2:9). kyrios in the gen. accompanying another word corresponds to OT usage: the → hand of the kyrios (Lk. 1:66; Acts 11:21); the → angel of the kyrios (Matt. 1:20; 2:13; 28:2; Lk. 1:11; 2:9; Acts 5:19; 8:26; 12:7); the → name of the kyrios (Jas. 5:10, 14); the → Spirit of the kyrios (Acts 5:9; 8:39); the → word of the kyrios (Acts 8:25; 12:24; 13:48 f.; 15:35 f.). The formula "says the kyrios" (Rom. 12:19 = Deut. 32:35; 2 Cor. 6:17 = Isa. 52:11; Rev. 1:8 cf. Exod. 3:14) also comes from OT. To the OT phrase kyrios ho theos the author of Rev. sometimes adds an emphatic, solemn pantokratōr, All-Sovereign

(Rev. 1:8; 4:8; 11:17; 16:7; 19:6; 21:22; cf. Arndt, 613 f.). The formula ho kyrios kai ho theos hēmōn (Rev. 4:11, cf. Jn. 20:28), our Lord and our God, is reminiscent of the title adopted by Domitian (cf. CL 4). The liturgical formulae of Rev. 11:15; 22:6 are remarkable. Jesus was adopting Jewish forms of speech (ribbōnô šel 'ôlām; Aram. mārē' 'ālᵉmā', Lord of the world) when he addressed God the Father as "kyrios of heaven and earth" (Matt. 11:25; Lk. 10:21; cf. Heb. 1:2; Sir. 51:1; Tob. 7:18; SB I 607; II 176; III 671 f.). God is the kyrios of the (eschatological) harvest (Matt. 9:38; → Seed, Harvest). God is the only ruler, the → King of kings and the kyrios of lords (cf. Dan. 2:47), who will cause our kyrios Jesus Christ to appear (1 Tim. 6:15). God is the → Creator and as such the Lord of all (Acts 17:24). By addressing and acknowledging God as kyrios, the NT expresses particularly his creatorship, his power revealed in history and his just dominion over the universe, and at the same time confesses the continuity of its belief with that of the OT.

3. Jesus as the kyrios. (a) The earthly Jesus as kyrios. kyrios applied to the earthly Jesus is in the first instance a polite form of address, as it is with other people. This no doubt goes back to the title Rabbi (perhaps also to māri, mārā'); cf. Mk. 9:5 (rhabbi) with Lk. 9:33 (epistata, Lord) and Matt. 17:4 (kyrie); cf. Jn. 4:14 f.; 5:7; 6:34; 13:6. This form of address also implies recognition of Jesus as a leader, and willingness to obey him (Matt. 7:21; 21:29 ff.; Lk. 6:46). As Son of man (→ Son of God, art. hyios tou anthrōpou), Jesus is also kyrios of the → Sabbath. He has control over the holy day of God's people (Mk. 2:28 f.). Even after his death and → resurrection the words of the earthly Jesus have unrestricted authority for the Christian community. Paul appealed to words of the kyrios which finally decide a question (1 Cor. 7:10; 12:25; 1 Thess. 4:15; cf. Acts 11:16; 20:35).

(b) The exalted Jesus as kyrios. The confessional cry used in worship, kyrios Iēsous, Jesus (is) Lord, no doubt originated in the pre-Pauline Hellenistic Christian community. This → confession is one of the oldest Christian creeds, if not the oldest. With this call the NT community submitted itself to its Lord, but at the same time it also confessed him as ruler of the world (Rom. 10:9a; 1 Cor. 12:3; Phil. 2:11; cf. the title kosmokratōr in Eph. 6:12 used of "the world rulers of this darkness" [cf. Arndt, 446]). God has raised Jesus from the dead and exalted him to the position of universal kyrios. Moreover, he has "bestowed on him the name which is above every name" (Phil. 2:9 ff.; cf. Isa. 45:23 f.), i.e. his own → name of Lord and with it the position corresponding to the name. (On Phil. 2:5–11 → Empty, art. kenoō NT.) The exalted kyrios, Christ, rules over mankind (Rom. 14:9). All → powers and beings in the universe must bow the knee before him. When that happens, God the Father will be worshipped (cf. Eph. 1:20 f.; 1 Pet. 3:22). This is further implied in the fact that Christ is called the ruler over all the kings of the earth, Lord of lords and → King of kings (Rev. 1:5; 17:14; 19:15 f.). In this way Jesus Christ received the same titles of honour as God himself (1 Tim. 6:15; cf. Dan. 2:47). According to contemporary Jewish thought, the different spheres of the world in nature and history were ruled by angelic powers. Since Christ has now been raised to the position of kyrios, all powers have been subjected to him and must serve him (Col. 2:6, 10; Eph. 1:20 f.). When Christ has overcome every power (1 Cor. 15:25), he will submit himself to God the Father. Thus Jesus' lordship will have achieved its goal and God will be all in all (1 Cor. 15:28). The one God and the one kyrios Jesus stand in opposition to the many gods and lords of the pagan world (1 Cor. 8:5 f., Eph. 4:5 f.).

Scriptural evidence for the exaltation of Jesus and for his installation as Lord was found in Ps. 110:1 (cf. Matt. 22:44; 26:64; Mk. 12:36; 14:62; 16:19; Lk. 20:42 f.; 22:69; Acts 2:34; 1 Cor. 15:25; Eph. 1:20; Col. 3:1; Heb. 1:3, 13; 10:12 f.; 12:2; cf. B. Lindars, New Testament Apologetic, 1961, 45–51, 252 ff.; R. T. France, Jesus and the Old Testament, 1971, 100 ff.). The Jewish interpretation of this passage from the Pss. looked forward to the messianic future – the messianic interpretation was for a long time suppressed among the Jews out of opposition to the church – but in the faith of the Christians this hope was transferred to the present. The Lordship of the messiah, Jesus, is a present reality. He is exercising in a hidden way God's authority and Lordship over the world and will bring it to completion in the eschatological future. This faith was articulated in Thomas's confession (Jn. 20:28): ho kyrios mou kai ho theos mou, "my Lord and my God". Primitive Christianity saw no infringement of monotheism in the installation of Jesus as Lord, but rather its confirmation (1 Cor. 8:6; Eph. 4:5; Phil. 2:11). It is God who has exalted the Lord Jesus (Acts 2:36) and made him Lord of all things.

([Ed.] Wilhelm Bousset, a leading exponent of the history of religions school, argued that the application of the title kyrios to Christ originated with the Gentile church which appropriated it from the surrounding world of syncretistic religion. "It was in this atmosphere that Antiochene Christianity and that of the other primitive Christian Hellenistic communities came into being and had their growth. In this milieu the young Christian religion was shaped as a Christ cultus, and out of this environment then people also appropriated the comprehensive formula kyrios for the dominant position of Jesus in worship. No one thought this out, and no theologian created it; people did not read it out of the sacred book of the Old Testament. They would hardly have dared without further ado to make such a direct transferal of this holy name of the almighty God – actually almost a deification of Jesus. Such proceedings take place in the unconscious, in the uncontrollable depths of the group psyche of a community; this is self-evident, it lay as it were in the air, that the first Hellenistic Christian communities gave the title kyrios to their cult-hero" [Kyrios Christos, 1913, ET 1970, 146 f.] A similar position was adopted by R. Bultmann [Theology of the New Testament, I, 1952, 123 ff.; cf. also Bultmann's introduction to Kyrios Christos, 7 ff.]. The arguments for and against it are discussed more fully in the works by W. Foerster, G. Dalman, O. Cullmann, E. Schweizer, F. Hahn, R. Longenecker and R. H. Fuller listed in the bibliography below. A telling fact against a purely Hellenistic origin and in favour of a Palestinian is the Aramaic formula maranatha [1 Cor. 16:22] which means "Lord come", "Our Lord has come", or as a prophetic perfect "The Lord will come" [→ Present, art. maranatha]. The ascription of lordship to Christ in this Aramaic formula indicates that Jesus was already called Lord in Palestinian Christianity at an early date. The synoptic accounts of the discussion of the lordship of David's son imply that this use of the title went back to Jesus himself [Matt. 22:41–46; Mk. 12:35–37; Lk. 20:41:44; cf. Ps. 110[109]:1]. How can David speak of another as Lord if he is his son? The question is presented as a dilemma to the Jewish teachers, without however Jesus being explicitly identified with this "Lord". The contexts of Matt. and Mk. intensify this dilemma by recording it immediately after the question of the great commandment [Matt. 22:23–40; Mk. 12:28–34; → Command; → Law]. Here the great commandment is defined as loving "the Lord your God [kyrion ton theon sou]" with the whole of one's being. Thus in reply to the Jewish teachers' question about the great commandment Jesus declares that this kyrios is to be given complete and undivided attention. But then Jesus puts to them the question of this other kyrios with its implied claims: "David himself calls him Lord; so how is he his son?" [Mk. 12:37 par. Matt. 22:45, Lk. 20:44]. This challenge marks the climax of Jesus' encounters with the Jewish religious teachers and leaders. Their failure to respond positively to this challenge marked the point of no return.)

As far as we can establish, the NT church did not reflect on the relationship of the exalted Christ to God the Father as did later church doctrinal teaching. One may perhaps say that there is indeed no developed doctrine of the Trinity in the NT, but that the writers, particularly in the later strata, thought in trinitarian forms. (On this → God, art. theos NT 8; and → Like, art. homoios NT 6 on the term homoousios.)

(c) kyrios and the Lord's Supper. kyrios figures frequently in expressions connected with the → Lord's Supper. There are the phrases which are partly pre-Pauline: "table of the kyrios" (1 Cor. 10:21); "the death of the kyrios" (1 Cor. 11:26); "the cup of the kyrios" (1 Cor. 10:21; 11:27); "provoke the kyrios to jealousy" (1 Cor. 10:22); "not to love the kyrios" (1 Cor. 16:22); "the Lord's supper" (1 Cor. 11:20), "to be judged by the kyrios" (1 Cor. 11:32), "to be guilty of the body and blood of the kyrios" (1 Cor. 11:27). These different expressions indicate that the Lord's Supper is the place where the Christian community submits itself in a special way to the saving work of the kyrios and receives a share in his body and in his power.

(d) kyrios and Spirit. Paul taught the Christian community to distinguish between the man who is speaking in the Holy → Spirit and the one who is not (1 Cor. 12:3). A man can only say "Jesus is Lord" if he is filled with the Holy Spirit (on the background of this → Curse, art. anathema; → Confess). Anyone who, by acknowledging his allegiance to Jesus as kyrios, belongs to the new → covenant belongs to the sphere of the → Spirit and no longer to that of the old covenant and of the letter. He stands in → freedom: "Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is freedom" (2 Cor. 3:17).

(e) kyrios in epistolary greetings. In the opening (but not the concluding) greetings of Paul's letters "the [or "our"] Lord Jesus Christ" is frequently mentioned beside God the Father (Rom. 1:7; 1 Cor. 1:3; 2 Cor. 1:3; Gal. 1:3; Phil. 1:2; 2 Thess. 1:2; 1 Tim. 1:2; 2 Tim. 1:2; Phlm. 3). The concluding greeting, with the phrase "the grace of our [or "the"] kyrios Jesus Christ be with you [or "with your spirit; with you all"]", continued the pre-Pauline tradition which probably had its ultimate origin in the Lord's Supper (cf. 1 Cor. 16:23; 2 Cor. 13:13; Phlm. 25, and Rev. 22:17–21). The description of God as the Father of Jesus Christ must go back to the Gentile-Christian Hellenistic community (Rom. 15:6; 2 Cor. 1:3; 11:31; cf. 1 Pet. 1:3; Eph. 1:3, 17; Col. 1:3). The formula was introduced into an originally Jewish context (the praise of God). The one kyrios Jesus Christ who is contrasted with the many kyrioi of the pagan world and who is acknowledged as the agent of creation (1 Cor. 8:6), corresponds to the one God, confessed by Judaism and preached in the Jewish mission to the Gentiles. Hence, Christian missionaries did not just call men to faith in God the Father but also to faith in the kyrios Jesus (Acts 5:14; 18:8; cf. → One, art. heis).

4. The Lordship of the kyrios. (a) The activity of the Christian community (→ Church) before the kyrios Jesus. In every expression of its life the Christian community stands before the kyrios who has authority and exercises it over the community (1 Cor. 4:19; 14:36; 16:7). He causes the community to grow (1 Thess. 3:12 f.), bestows authority on the → apostles (2 Cor. 10:8; 13:10) and different ministries on the members of his → body (1 Cor. 3:5; 7:17; 12:5). The kyrios gives visions and revelations (2 Cor. 12:1). The whole life of the Christian community is determined by its relationship to the kyrios (Rom. 14:8). The body, i.e. the complete earthly existence of the Christian, belongs to the kyrios (1 Cor. 6:13). This precludes dealings with prostitutes. The kyrios gives to each one the measure of → faith (1 Cor. 3:5; 7:17; Eph. 4:7). He is the kyrios of → peace and gives peace (2 Thess. 3:16), → mercy (2 Tim. 1:16) and insight (2 Tim. 2:7). On the basis of faith in the kyrios Christ, even the earthly relationships between masters and slaves take on a new aspect. Faithful service of earthly kyrioi is service of the kyrios of the church (Col. 3:22 ff.; cf. 1 Pet. 2:13).

(b) The formulae "through" (dia) and "in" (en) the kyrios. The formula "through the ["our"] Lord Jesus ["Christ"]", which is probably pre-Pauline, occurs in the most varied contexts: thanksgiving (Rom. 7:25; 1 Cor. 15:57); praise (Rom. 5:11); exhortation (Rom. 15:30; 1 Thess. 4:2). In all these phrases the word kyrios is used in order to claim the power of the exalted Lord for the life of the church and of the individual.

The phrase "in the Lord" occurs frequently, particularly in Paul, and means the same as en Iēsou Christō: a door was opened for mission (2 Cor. 2:12); Paul affirms and exhorts (Eph. 4:17; 1 Thess. 4:1); is convinced (Rom. 14:14); people are received (Rom. 16:2; Phil. 2:29); the church is to rejoice (Phil. 3:1); it is to stand firm (Phil. 4:1); to work (Rom. 16:21); to greet one another (Rom. 16:22; 1 Cor. 16:19). Christians are to marry in the kyrios, i.e. to enter upon a Christian → marriage (1 Cor. 7:39); to be strong (Eph. 6:10); to walk (Col. 2:6); to undertake service (Col. 4:17). Paul was a prisoner "in the Lord" (Eph. 4:1); people are chosen (Rom. 16:13); beloved (Rom. 16:8; 1 Cor. 4:17); their work is not in vain (1 Cor. 15:58); the Christian has eternal life (Rom. 6:23); the church is a light (Eph. 5:8). The whole of life, both in the present and the future, is determined by the fact of Christ which is expressed by this formula: Paul and his churches stand in the presence and under the power of the kyrios. (On this question in general see T. Preiss, Life in Christ, SBT 13, 1954; J. K. S. Reid, Our Life in Christ, 1963.)

(c) Statements about the parousia. In his present existence the Christian is separated from the kyrios and longs to be with him (2 Cor. 5:6, 8). Christians who are alive at the second coming will, according to Pauline eschatology, be caught up to meet the kyrios (1 Thess. 4:17). Just as the present life of the church and of the individual Christian is already determined by the hidden power of the kyrios, the NT church looks forward to the future, visible return of Christ and to a final union with the Lord of life and death. For the church believed not only in a present Lord but in a coming Lord. We read of "the day of the kyrios" (1 Cor. 1:8; 5:5; 2 Cor. 1:14; 1 Thess. 5:2; 2 Thess. 2:2); of "the revealing [apokalypsis] of the kyrios" (1 Cor. 1:7); "the coming [parousia]" of our kyrios" (2 Thess. 2:1); of the "appearing [epiphaneia] of the kyrios" (1 Tim. 6:14). Other passages speak of the coming of the kyrios, of meeting him, of his nearness and of his heavenly revelation (1 Cor. 4:5; Phil. 4:5; 1 Thess. 6:16 f.; Jas. 5:7 f.). Such statements about the kyrios belong with the eschatological prayer of the Aram.-speaking church maranatha → Present). When he comes, the exalted One is judge (2 Thess. 1:9; 2:8) and saviour (Phil. 3:20).

5. Derivatives of kyrios. (a) kyria (fem. of kyrios), lady, mistress, owner, mistress of the house. In the NT it occurs only in 2 Jn. 1, 5, where it refers to the church (cf. the change from the 3rd person sing. to the 2nd person plur. in v. 6; according to v. 13 the churches are sisters and their members children, cf. vv. 4, 13). In addressing the church as lady the author is expressing his respect for it and honours it as a work of the kyrios.

(b) kyriakos (adj. derived from kyrios), belonging to the Lord. In secular Gk.: pros ton kyriakon logon means at the owner's expense; in the language of administration it means imperial.

In the NT kyriakē hēmera means the Lord's day, the day on which the kyrios rose from the dead (cf. Matt. 28:1; Acts 20:7; 1 Cor. 16:2), which the church honoured by assembling on it (→ Sabbath). John received his revelation on the Lord's day (Rev. 1:10). The kyriakon deipnon (1 Cor. 11:20) is the meal of the kyrios, the → Lord's Supper. The expression stands in parallel with trapeza kyriou, the Lord's table (1 Cor. 10:21); cf. Isa. 65:11; Philo, Spec.Leg. 1, 221. To sit down at the table of the kyrios is to receive food from him and through it enter into communion with him. Correspondingly, anyone who takes part in pagan sacrificial meals enters into communion with demons (cf. H.-J. Schoeps, Theologie und Geschichte des Judenchristentums, 1949, 192; C. K. Barrett, A Commentary on the First Epistle to the Corinthians, 1968, 237 f.; → Lord's Supper). The two activities are utterly incompatible.

(c) kyriotēs, lordly power or position, dominion. In the NT the word occurs in the plur. with reference to → angelic powers (Col. 1:16; Eph. 1:20 f.). The expression recalls Eth.En. 61:10: "And He will summon all the host of the heavens, and all the holy ones above, and the host of God, the Cherubin, Seraphin and Ophannin, and all the angels of power, and all the angels of principalities, and the Elect One, and the other powers on the earth (and) over the water" (cf. also 1 Cor. 15:24; Rom. 8:38; Eph. 6:12; Arndt, 461 f.; E. Lohse, Colossians and Philemon, 1971, 51; G. H. C. Macgregor, "Principalities and Powers: the Cosmic Background of Paul's Thought", NTS 1, 1954–55, 17–28). The NT epistles stress that the exalted Christ rules over these dominions. kyriotēs occurs in the sing. in Jude 8 and 2 Pet. 2:10, where the thought is not of angels but of God's dominion. False teachers disregard it in the lust of their defiling passions.

(d) kyrieuō, be a kyrios, act as master; be authorized. In the LXX it occurs more than 50 times, mostly to translate māšal, rule. In the NT it occurs 7 times (6 in Paul and one in Luke). The rule of kings over their people is characterized by ambition (Lk. 22:25, kyrieuousin), because they misuse their power for selfish ends. Paul uses kyrieuō to describe relationships of power. But the disciples are not to seek to be the greatest, but rather to serve like Jesus himself (Lk. 22:26 f.). Because Christ has risen, → death no longer reigns over him, i.e. no longer has any power over him (Rom. 6:9). Christ died and rose in order that he might reign over the living and the dead (Rom. 14:9). God is the ruler of those who rule (1 Tim. 6:15). Since Christians have been baptized into Jesus' death and have risen with him (Rom. 6:3 f.), sin should not and must not reign over them any longer (Rom. 6:14). For they no longer stand under → law (art. nomos), but under → grace, i.e. under the kyrios (Christ (Rom. 7:1, 6). Paul does not want to lord it over the faith of the Corinthians but to work with them for their → joy (2 Cor. 1:24). Now that Christ has demonstrated his Lordship over sin and death, Christians should, indeed must, no longer let themselves be dominated by these powers.

(e) katakyrieuō, rule over, conquer. The LXX uses the word principally to describe domination by foreigners; it is used of God's dominion only in Jer. 3:14. In the NT the word occurs 4 times. It is a characteristic of Gentile rulers to lord it over the people. The prefix kata- clearly has a negative force and implies that the princes exercise their rule to their own advantage and contrary to the interests and well-being of the people (Matt. 20:25; Mk. 10:42). The vb. is also used of the man with an evil spirit who leaped on the seven sons of Sceva and mastered them (Acts 19:16) as they attempted to imitate Christian exorcism. The elders are exhorted, on the other hand, not to exercise their office as lording it over the congregation, but as examples to the flock (1 Pet. 5:2 f.). H. Bietenhard

→ Confess, → Curse, → God, → Jesus Christ, → Son of God, → Present, → Sabbath, → Spirit

(a). G. Bornkamm, "Christ and the World in the Early Christian Message", Early Christian Experience, 1969, 14–28; W. Bousset, Kyrios Christos: A History of the Belief in Christ from the Beginnings of Christianity to Irenaeus, 1970; F. F. Bruce, "Jesus is Lord", in J. McD. Richards, ed., Soli Deo Gloria: New Testament Studies in Honor of W. C. Robinson, 1968, 23 ff.; R. Bultmann, Theology of the New Testament, I, 1952, 123 ff.; L. M. Canfield, The Early Persecutions, Studies in History 55, 1913; H. Conzelmann, An Outline Theology of the New Testament, 1969, 82 ff., 199 ff.; O. Cullmann, The Earliest Christian Confessions, 1949; Christ and Time: The Primitive Christian Conception of Time and History, 1951; "The Kingship of Christ and the Church in the New Testament", The Early Church, 1956, 105–40; The State in the New Testament, 1963²; The Christology of the New Testament, 1963², 195–237; and Salvation in History, 1967; A. Czégledy, "The Modern Pattern of Christ's Lordship", SJT 12, 1959, 361–72; G. Dalman, The Words of Jesus Considered in the Light of Post-Biblical Jewish Writings and the Aramaic Language, 1902, 324–31; and Jesus-Jeshua: Studies in the Gospels, 1929; A. Deissmann, Light from the Ancient East: The New Testament Illustrated by Recently Discovered Texts of the Graeco-Roman World, 1927⁴; E. E. Ellis, "Saith the Lord", EQ 29, 1957, 23–28; W. Foerster and G. Quell, kyrios etc., TDNT III 1039–98; W. H. C. Frend, Martyrdom and Persecution in the Early Church: A Study of a Conflict from the Maccabees to Donatus, 1965; R. H. Fuller, The Foundations of New Testament Christology, 1965; F. C. Grant, Roman Hellenism and the New Testament, 1962; R. M. Grant, Augustine to Constantine: The Thrust of the Christian Movement into the Roman World, 1970; F. Hahn, The Titles of Jesus in Christology: Their History in Early Christianity, 1969, 68–135; J. N. D. Kelly, Early Christian Creeds, 1972³, 1–29; J. D. Kingsbury, "The Title 'Kyrios' in Matthew's Gospel", JBL 94, 1975, 246–55; W. Kramer, Christ, Lord, Son of God, 1966; W. G. Kümmel, Promise and Fulfilment: The Eschatological Message of Jesus, 1961² SBT 24; and The Theology of the New Testament, 1974; R. Leivestad, Christ the Conqueror: Ideas of Conflict in the New Testament, 1954; E. Lohmeyer, The Lord of the Temple: A Study of the Relation between Cult and Gospel, 1961; R. N. Longenecker, The Christology of Early Jewish Christianity, 1970, SBT Second Series 17, 120–47; R. P. Martin, Carmen Christi. Philippians ii. 5–11 in Recent Interpretation and in the Setting of Early Christian Worship, 1967; V. F. Neufeld, The Earliest Christian Confessions, New Testament Tools and Studies 5, 1963; A. Oepke, en, TDNT II 537–43; J. C. O'Neill, "The Use of KYRIOS in the Book of Acts", SJT 8, 1955, 155–74; O. Plöger, Theocracy and Eschatology, 1967;

W. M. Ramsay, The Church in the Roman Empire before 170, 1906; A. Richardson, An Introduction to the Theology of the New Testament, 1958, 148, 153 f., 305; and The Political Christ, 1973; E. Schweizer, Lordship and Discipleship, 1960; E. Stauffer, Christ and the Caesars: Historical Sketches 1955; L. R. Taylor, The Divinity of the Roman Emperor, 1931; W. C. van Unnik, "Jesus: Anathema or Kyrios (I Cor. 12:3)", in B. Lindars and S. S. Smalley, eds., Christ and the Spirit in the New Testament. In Honour of Charles Francis Digby Moule, 1973, 113–26.
(b). D. Barthélemy, Les Devanciers d'Aquila. Première Publication intégrale du Texte des Fragments du Dodécaprophéton, 1963; H. Bietenhard, Das tausendjährige Reich, 1955²; L. Goppelt, "Die Herrschaft Christi und die Welt nach dem Neuen Testament", Lutherische Rundschau, 1967, 21 ff.; J. Herrmann, Kyrios und Pneuma. Studien zur Christologie der paulinischen Hauptbriefe, 1961; N. Hofer, "Das Bekenntnis 'Herr ist Jesus' und das 'Taufen auf den Namen Jesu' " ThQ 145, 1965, 1 ff.; E. Lohmeyer, Kyrios Jesus. Eine Untersuchung zu Phil. 2, 5–11, Sitzungsberichte der Heidelberger Akademie der Wissenschaften, Philosophisch-historische Klasse, 1927–28, 4. Abhandlung, 1928; and Christuskult und Kaiserkult, 1919; U. Luck, "Historische Fragen zum Verhältnis von kyrios und pneuma bei Paulus", TLZ, 1960, 845 ff.; R. Rendtorff, "El, Baal und Jahwe", ZAW Neue Folge 37, 1966, 277 ff.; E. Schweizer, "Der Glaube an Jesus, den 'Herrn' in seiner Entwicklung von den ersten Nachfolgern biz zur hellenistischen Gemeinde", EvTh 17, 1957, 7 ff.; S. Schulz, "Maranatha und Kyrios Jesus", ZNW 53, 1962, 125 ff.; P. Vielhauer, "Ein Weg zur neutestamentlichen Christologie?", Aufsätze zum Neuen Testament, ThB 31, 1965, 141 ff.

Lord's Supper

δεῖπνον

δεῖπνον (deipnon), a main meal, dinner, supper, banquet; κυριακὸν δεῖπνον (kyriakon deipnon), Lord's supper; τράπεζα (trapeza), table; κλάσις τοῦ ἄρτου (klasis tou artou), breaking of bread.

CL 1. In the ancient religions eating and drinking were mostly formal meals, i.e. acts of public or private fellowship linked with the sacred (*RGG*³ IV 605). Families, clans and religious fellowships received a share in divine power through the common meal, which represented their union with the deity. The origin of the sacred character of the meal is connected with magic concepts, according to which the divine is embodied in material things (animism; similar ideas also in cannibalism, cf. *RGG*³ III 1116). The thought that deity was contained in every plant (Demeter-Kore) led on to the idea that the deity possessed a → life-giving power, which was received directly by those who shared the meal. In short, there was nothing which unites man and man, and man and God, more than eating and drinking (cf. E. O. James, The Beginnings of Religion, [1948] 1958, 83–100; F. Bammel, Das heilige Mahl im Glauben der Völker, 1950).

2. deipnon (from Homer on), in the sense of a cultic meal, was part of the living vocabulary of Hellenistic religion, in which it played an important rôle. The participant believed that he was sitting at the trapeza tou theou, the god's table (cf. 1 Cor. 10:21, trapeza daimoniōn, "table of demons") and that through the meal he entered into fellowship with the deity. He thus became a partner or sharer koinōnos (cf. 1 Cor. 10:20). The Oxyrhynchus Papyri in the 2nd cent. A.D. contain the invitation: "Chairemon invites you to eat [deipnēsai] at the table of the Lord Sarapis [kyriou Sarapidos]" (P.Oxy. 1, 110). Sarapis is here represented as the host and the participants in the cultic meal as his table companions (for further instances of such invitations see P.Oxy. 14, 1755; 3, 523; cf. W. Bousset, Kyrios Christos, 1970, 143 ff.; H. Lietzmann, An die Korinther I, II, HNT 9, 1949⁴, 49 f.). Josephus tells of an invitation to the deipnon of Anubis in the temple of Isis at Rome (Ant. 18, 3, 4). "The underlying thought is that of communio, of the union of those who eat with the divinity" (J. Behm, TDNT II 35).

OT 1. The meal in the OT. The term deipnon does not play a significant rôle in the LXX. Until 4 Macc. 3:9 it occurs only in Dan. and translates Heb. paṭbaḡ, delicacies (1:8, 13, 15, 16) and leḥem, bread (5:1). The vb. deipneō occurs only in Prov. 23:1; Dan. 11:27 and Tob. 7:8; 8:1.

Festivals and sacrifices in the OT are often connected with cultic meals and can be described as eating before the Lord and rejoicing (Deut. 12:7) (→ Feast; → Hunger, art. esthiō; → Joy; → Sacrifice). Table-fellowship binds a man to → God and before God (Exod. 18:12; 24:11). A meal often played a part in the conclusion of a secular → covenant (Gen. 26:30; Jos. 9:14 f.), at which Yahweh was present as an unseen guest. It was with a meal that Jacob and Laban sealed their peace treaty (Gen. 31:46, 54), Moses, his father-in-law and the elders their association (Exod. 18:12), Gaal and the Shechemites their conspiracy (Jdg. 9:26–41), and the people their agreement with their elected king (1 Sam. 11:15; 1 Ki. 1:25, 41 ff.; cf. 1 Sam. 9:22 ff.). The covenant between Yahweh and Israel on Sinai was concluded with a cultic meal for the elders with Yahweh (cf. G. Fohrer, RGG^{3} IV 607). Such a fellowship-meal not only made the participants brothers one of another, but also of Yahweh (cf. the name Ahijah [Heb. 'ᵃḥîyâh, 'ᵃḥîyāhû], "Yahweh is my brother"). Table fellowship meant the granting of → forgiveness (2 Sam. 9:7; 2 Ki. 25:27–30; Josephus, Ant. 19, 7:1), protection (Jdg. 19:15 ff.) and → peace (Gen. 43:25 ff.). The breaking of table-fellowship was the most detestable of crimes (Jer. 41:1 f.; Ps. 41:9 [MT 10]; cf. 1QH 5:23 f.; Mk. 14:18).

2. The Passover meal (→ Feast, art. pascha) originated in Israel's nomadic period. A one year old lamb or kid (Exod. 12:5) was killed by the head of the household on 14 Nisan at sundown (Exod. 12:6), "between dusk and dark" (NEB). Its blood was smeared on the doorposts, its flesh roasted and eaten by the family during the night of 14–15 Nisan (Exod. 12:8 f.). After Josiah's reform (621 B.C.) the killing of the Passover lambs and the Passover meal took place in Jerusalem (Deut. 16:5–7; 2 Ki. 23:21–23). The Jewish Passover meal in the time of Jesus recalled the sparing of the houses marked with the blood of the Passover lambs and the redemption out of slavery in Egypt. At the same time the Passover meal looked forward to redemption in the future, of which the redemption from Egypt was the pattern (J. Jeremias, The Eucharistic Words of Jesus, 1966^2, 42 f., 56–62). The messiah comes on Passover night. "On this night they were redeemed and they will be redeemed," says an old proverb (Mekilta Exod. 12:42).

3. (a) Table-fellowship. Joining in table-fellowship meant sharing in Yahweh's → blessing. This was signified by the prayer at the beginning and the thanksgiving at the end of the meal. The head of the household took the bread and spoke over it the benediction on behalf of all those present (Ber. 6:1). Then he broke the bread that had been blessed and gave each at the table a piece. In this way every participant in the meal received a share of the benediction. A benediction followed after the meal. The head of the household took a cup of wine, the "cup of blessing" (cf. 1 Cor. 10:16), and pronounced the prayer of thanksgiving on behalf of all present (Ber. 7:3; 46a ff.; 50a). Then everyone drank from the cup of blessing, in order to receive a part of the benediction pronounced over the wine. The use of wine at an ordinary meal was not obligatory, but a closing benediction was.

(b) The Passover liturgy. Even before the time of Christ the outlines of the liturgy to be followed during the Passover meal had been laid down (Pes. 10:2–7; cf. J. Jeremias, op. cit., 85 f.).

(i) Preliminary course. The head of the household pronounced the prayer of sanctification (qiddûš), comprising the benediction for the festival and the first cup (the qiddûš cup). The preliminary course (karpas), consisting of green herbs, bitter herbs and a sauce of fruit juice was eaten without bread. The meal was brought in but not yet eaten, the second cup was mixed with water and placed on the table, but not yet drunk.

(ii) The Passover liturgy. The Passover service, in which the head of the household explained the special features of the Passover meal (Exod. 12:26) and proclaimed the outline of the story, the haggāḏâh; the first part of the Passover Hallel (Pss. 113 f.) was sung and the second cup (haggāḏâh cup) was drunk.

(iii) The main meal. The head of the household pronounced a benediction over the unleavened bread, which was distributed and the meal eaten which consisted of the Passover lamb, mazzoth, bitter herbs (Exod. 12:8) and wine (optional). After grace the third cup (cup of blessing) was drunk.

(iv) Conclusion. The second part of the Hallel (Pss. 115–118) was sung and a benediction pronounced over the fourth cup (Hallel cup).

The interpreting of the special features of the Passover meal was a firmly-established part of the Passover ritual. In the Passover service which preceded the meal the Passover lamb, the unleavened bread and the bitter herbs (cf. Exod. 12:8) were explained. Thus an old Aram. formula explaining the mazzoth runs: "Behold, this is the bread of affliction" (G. Dalman, Jesus-Jeshua, 1929, 139; cf. Deut. 16:3).

4. The eschatological meal. Isa. 25:6–8 (cf. 65:13) refers to a bountiful feast which Yahweh will provide "for all peoples", when sorrow and death are things of the past. This feast, with the attendant removal of "the veil that is spread over all nations", has been linked closely with the Lord's Supper, especially in its Lucan setting, by P. E. Leonard (Luke's Account of the Lord's Supper, dissertation, Manchester, 1976).

5. The common meal at Qumran. The cultic meal at Qumran was the daily main meal of the community. A priest presided and pronounced the benediction over the bread and the wine at the beginning of the meal (1QS 6:4–6). There is a reference in 1QSa 2:17–21 to an eschatological meal with the messiah in which bread is eaten and new wine drunk. There is an analogy here with the Christian celebration of a meal, even if dependence of the one on the other cannot be proved and indeed is improbable. (On the Essene meal see K. G. Kuhn, "The Lord's Supper and the Communal Meal at Qumran", in K. Stendahl, ed., The Scrolls and the New Testament, 1958, 65–93; J. Jeremias, op. cit., 31–6.)

NT 1. The NT sources. The expression, the Lord's Supper (kyriakon deipnon) occurs only in 1 Cor. 11:20. In meaning it is closely related to the phrase the "table of the Lord [trapeza kyriou]" (1 Cor. 10:21). Both passages indicate that the term → Lord (art. kyrios) is firmly established in the tradition and terminology of the Lord's Supper (1 Cor. 10:22; 11:27, 31 f.). The institution of the Lord's Supper has been handed down to us in four forms (Mk. 14:22–25; Matt. 26:26–29; Lk. 22:15–20; 1 Cor. 11:23–25). Many scholars are of the opinion that the differing versions of the words of institution represent in each case the liturgical text entrusted to the writer by his own community (cf. J. Jeremias, op. cit., 106–37). The words of institution, in the form in which we have them, therefore, belong to the realm of liturgy and "behind each form is as it were a celebrating congregation for whom it is intended" (G. Bornkamm, Early Christian Experience, 1969, 134).

(a) 1 Cor. 11:23–25 is, from the literary point of view, the oldest version, reproducing the form of words current in the Christian community in Antioch, which Paul found there in the mid-forties (Acts 11:26) ([F. F. Bruce] or more probably at Damascus, where he first experienced Christian fellowship in the mid-thirties [Acts 9:19; Gal. 1:17]) and which he traces back to Jesus, as a tradition handed down by the church (1 Cor. 11:23). Matt.'s version is widely considered to be an expanded form of that in Mk., and therefore has no independent value as a source in a discussion of the original form. A number of MSS of Lk. omit vv. 19b, 20 (D, some Old Lat., Old Syr.; on the text see Metzger, 173–77; J. Jeremias, op. cit., 139–59). The majority of scholars regard the so-called "short text" of Lk. (without vv. 19b, 20) as secondary, holding that it arose either on the grounds of discipline (to protect the Lord's Supper from profanation, J. Jeremias, ibid.), or to avoid mentioning the second cup (v. 17, 20; cf. H. Schürmann, Der Einsetzungsbericht, Lk. 22, 19–20, NTAbh 20, 4, 1955, 35 ff.). A comparison with Paul and Mk. reveals that the original longer text (Lk. 22:15–20) agrees essentially in vv. 19b, 20 with 1 Cor. 11:24 f., and in v. 19a (as far as to sōma mou, "my body") and in the concluding formula of v. 20c (to hyper hymōn ekchynnomenon, "which is shed for you") with Mk. 14:22, 24. The text of Lk., therefore, on one hand betrays the influence of the Marcan version, and on the other of a text very closely related to, but older than, that of 1 Cor. 11:23–25. So we are left with Mk. 14:22–25 and 1 Cor. 11:23–25 as the oldest forms of the tradition.

(b) In addition to the four-fold record of the Lord's Supper we must take into consideration: (i) 1 Cor. 10:16, a pre-Pauline commentary on the Lord's Supper; (ii) 1 Cor. 11:26, an explanatory comment by Paul; (iii) 1 Cor. 11:27 f.; 16:20, 22; Rev. 22:17–21, parts (or references to parts) of the introductory liturgy to the primitive Christian celebration of the Lord's Supper; (iv) Acts 2:42, 46; 20:7, 11, accounts of the daily celebration of the Lord's Supper (breaking of bread) in the primitive church; (v) Jn. 6:51–58 with the Johannine version of the saying about the bread: "and the bread which I shall give for the life of the world is my flesh" (6:51c).

2. The historical roots. (a) The Lord's Supper in the primitive church was certainly not just the continuation of the disciples' daily table-fellowship with the earthly Jesus. But it is related to the accounts of Jesus' table-fellowship with his disciples, with tax-collectors and sinners (Matt. 9:9–13; Mk. 2:13–17; Lk. 5:27–32), and to the accounts of the feeding of the five thousand (Matt. 14:13–21; Mk. 6:30–44; Lk. 9:10–17; Jn. 6:1–13) and the four thousand (Matt. 15:32–39; Mk. 8:1–10; → Hunger, art. esthiō). "By coming to them and eating and drinking with them, Jesus brought them the merciful presence of God, the forgiveness of sins. This fellowship with the friend of tax collectors and sinners keeps the Christian community firm, by . . . renewing for it the consolation of forgiveness" (E. Lohse, Geschichte des Leidens und Sterbens Jesu Christi, 1964, 57). These meals with tax-collectors and the granting of table-fellowship to the despised (Lk. 15:1 f.; 19:5 f.) are kerygmatic parabolic actions, Jesus' word of forgiveness coming to life in events (J. Jeremias, The Parables of Jesus, 1963², 227 ff.).

(b) The Lord's Supper in the primitive church, with its eschatological joy at present table-fellowship with the exalted Jesus, is, however, equally related to the table-fellowship of the risen Jesus with his disciples after Easter. According to O. Cullmann, the church's celebration of eschatological meals has real roots in the meals that took place on the occasion of Jesus' appearances after Easter (Acts 10:41; Lk. 24:30 f., 35, 43; Jn. 21:13; cf. Early Christian Worship, 1953, 14 ff.; The Christology of the New Testament, 1963², 212). Though the connection cannot be denied, it seems that Cullmann has ascribed to the breaking of bread at the Easter appearances too great an influence upon the emergence of the Lord's Supper in the primitive church. For the expression, to break bread (klaō ton arton or klasis tou artou), occurs only in Lk. 24:30, 35 (cf. also Jn. 21:13), and the appearances of the risen Jesus were, as the NT itself recognizes, unique occurrences and as such were limited to the original witnesses (1 Cor. 15:5 ff.). When the risen Jesus ate and drank with his disciples at his appearances after Easter, he was doing something extraordinary, which could not be repeated in the same manner nor in any way continued.

The table-fellowship of the earthly Jesus and of the risen Christ with his disciples (→ Hunger, art. pinō) are accordingly factors which are related to the basic motives behind Jesus' last meal. The regular celebration of the Lord's Supper by the primitive church arose from all these taken together. The Lord's Supper in the church after Easter has a strong eschatological element (cf. Mk. 14:25). Nevertheless, the retrospective look at Jesus' saving death (Mk. 14:22–25) was an essential constituent of the Lord's Supper from the first (P. Vielhauer, Aufsätze zum Neuen Testament, 1965, 159 f.).

3. The original form of the words of institution. (a) There is a general consensus of agreement on the following points:

(i) Mk. 14:22–25 and 1 Cor. 11:23–25 are the two oldest forms of the words of institution. (ii) One must assume an original Aram. (or Heb.) form, which has not been preserved and which lies behind both of the oldest forms of the text.

In Mk. the saying about the bread runs, "Take; this is my body [labete, touto estin to sōma mou]" (14:22); the saying about the cup, "This is my blood of the covenant, which is poured out for many [touto estin to haima mou tēs diathēkēs to ekchynnomenon hyper pollōn]" (14:24). In Paul the saying about the bread runs, "This is my body for you [touto mou estin to sōma to hyper hymōn]" (1 Cor. 11:24), and the saying about the cup, "This cup is the new covenant by my blood [touto to potērion hē kainē diathēkē estin en tō emō haimati]" (1 Cor. 11:25).

(b) One can deduce from Mk., an original form, "This is my body, this is my shed blood (i.e. my dying) for [the] many" (Mk. 14:22c, 24). K. G. Kuhn ("Über den ursprünglichen Sinn des Abendmahls", EvTh 11/12, 1950–51, 513 ff.), E. Lohse (Märtyrer und Gottesknecht, 1955², 122 ff.; and op. cit., 54 ff.) and others have rightly decided for this possibility. On the other side, G. Bornkamm (op. cit., 134 ff.), E. Schweizer (see bibliography), and others defend the originality of the Pauline-Lucan words of institution. They maintain that this form has in its narrative framework the older comment that the cup was not shared until after they had eaten; in Mk. body and blood are complementary terms; the original asymmetry of the Pauline-Lucan version of the sayings about the bread and the cup has been harmonized in the Marcan form on liturgical grounds, and even on grounds of content, for the parallelism of body and blood reveals the questionable idea of the body and blood of Christ as the two parts of the crucified Lord, an idea arising from the elements which represent the body and the blood.

The following 6 objections to this argument have been raised:

(i) Even in the original pre-Marcan form "body" and "blood" (sōma and haima) do not represent a commonly linked pair of terms (E. Lohse, Märtyrer und Gottesknecht, 125). Flesh and blood (sarx and haima; cf. Heb. 2:14) appear more often as complementary terms. In the pre-Marcan explanatory saying, therefore, we have a pair of terms which are not complementary, either anthropologically or cultically.

(ii) The term → "blood" (14:24) in the pre-Marcan formula must not be isolated and simply made a parallel to → "body" (14:22), because in Mk. 14:24 "my blood shed [to haima mou to ekchynnomenon]" taken in the context of the OT and Jewish forms of expression, denoted violent death (E. Lohse, J. Behm, F. Hahn; → Blood).

(iii) In the pre-Marcan form, therefore, it is not body and blood that are related to one another, but the non-parallel phrases, "my body" (the saying about the bread) and "my dying for [the] many" (the saying about the cup). In other words, each part of the pre-Marcan saying is self-contained and can be explained without reference to the parallel phrase.

(iv) It was only due to the inclusion of the words "of the covenant", alluding to Exod. 24:8, that "blood" in Mk. became cultically complementary to "body", and even the participle "shed" only received cultic significance (a combined allusion to the atonement and to the covenant) at this point; whereupon the possibility of misunderstanding in the Marcan saying about the cup was removed in the Pauline-Lucan form by associating the allusion to the atonement with the saying about the bread, so that the idea of the covenant here only qualifies the saying about the cup.

(v) The phrase "shed for [the] many" (Mk. 14:24b) does not represent any expansion of or addition to the Hellenistic phrase "my blood of the covenant" (Mk. 14:24a; cf. W. Marxsen, "Der Ursprung des Abendmahls", EvTh 12, 1952–53, 299). For on linguistic grounds Mk. 14:24b is an Aramaism (J. Jeremias, op. cit., 178 ff.; K. G. Kuhn, op. cit., 513 ff.). Moreover, the expression haima ekchynnesthai (to shed blood) is analogous to other turns of phrase like "to pour out one's soul" (Isa. 53:12), "to give one's soul" (Mk. 10:45b), which are paraphrases of the idea of dying, sacrifice or violent death (cf. Gen. 4:10 f.; 9:6; Deut. 19:10; 2 Ki. 21:16; Ps. 106:38; Jer. 7:6; Matt. 23:35).

(vi) Therefore the Pauline-Lucan form assumes the Marcan version of the explanatory words and can only be understood as a development of them. Since the phrase in Paul's account "by my blood" (1 Cor. 11:25) does not appear in Jer. 31:31 ff., the formula is not to be understood primarily in terms of Jer.; it receives its significance which speaks of "the blood of the covenant" from Exod. 24:8. In other words, the Pauline form of the words of institution can only be explained on the basis of the older Marcan form of the words of institution, based on Exod.

24:8, and on a process of theological reflection moving from Exod. 24:8 to Jer. 31:31 ff. This is comparable with the development from the Marcan form [14:24] which is orientated towards Exod. 24:8 to that in Matt. [26:29] which reflects Jer. 31:34b.

(c) The originality of the pre-Marcan form follows then from: (i) a wealth of Semitisms (Aramaisms) of which only few recur in Paul; (ii) the considerable asymmetry which results from the pre-Marcan formulations saying about the bread not having any theological interpretation and the reference to the atonement's being attached only to the saying about the cup; (iii) the imbalance of "my body"/"my dying for [the] many"; (iv) the fact that the Pauline-Lucan form can be derived, according to the principles governing the handing down of tradition, from the Marcan, but the reverse process is unthinkable; and finally (v) the fact that the sayings about the bread and the cup, in the pre-Marcan original form, each constitute a complete saying which does not first require the parallel saying in order to be understood. This presupposes, therefore, that the sayings about the bread and the cup were originally separated by a whole meal. One must conclude, therefore, "that in the oral tradition of the earliest times there was a shorter version" (E. Lohse, Märtyrer und Gottesknecht, 124) which may be stated: "This is my body, this is my dying for [the] many."

4. The setting of the words of institution. The account of the institution, which stems from liturgical tradition, appears in the NT in the setting of the oldest account of the passion, the Passover meal and the liturgy of the primitive church. Therefore, we must investigate the significance of this setting for the understanding of the words of institution.

(a) The Lord's Supper in the setting of the oldest account of the passion.

(i) The striking fact that the Gospel of Jn. does not coincide with the Synoptics until the account of the Passion demonstrates that the passion narrative was a self-contained and very old traditional compilation. Systematic comparison of the Johannine and Synoptic passion narratives reveals that, from Judas's betrayal onwards, Jn. agrees with the Synoptics even in the order of his material, viz. betrayal (Mk. 14:10 f.; Jn. 13:2), prophecy of the betrayal and the meal (Mk. 14:18–25; Jn. 13:1–30). Jn. does not give an account of the Last Supper but has sayings about eating Jesus' flesh and drinking his blood in 6:51 ff., and also describes the arrest (Mk. 14:32 ff.; Jn. 18:2–11). The underlying oldest passion narrative, therefore, began with Judas's betrayal, then recounted the prophecy of the betrayal and the institution of the Lord's Supper and finally depicted the arrest, the trial before the Sanhedrin, the judgment by Pilate, the crucifixion and resurrection (empty tomb). If, at a very early stage, the passion narrative began with the betrayal, the oldest summaries of the passion agree with this (Mk. 9:31; 8:31; 10:33 f.), for they never mention any event of the passion earlier than Judas's betrayal (J. Jeremias op. cit., 89–105; E. Lohse, Geschichte des Leidens und Sterbens Jesu Christi, 1964, 23 f.). The oldest account of the passion embraces, therefore, the oldest summary of the passion (Mk. 9:31).

(ii) The theme of the passion summaries (cf. especially Mk. 9:31) and of the passion narrative that embraces them (Mk. 14:10 f., 18, 21, 44; 15:1, 10, 15) which represents the setting of the original form of the Lord's Supper sayings, is, accordingly, the representative delivering up of the Son of man by God. It is accomplished through Judas's betrayal, Jesus' arrest and his violent death (Mk. 9:31; 14:21; cf. 14:41). In so far as the passion summaries and the oldest passion narrative go back to the primitive Palestinian church, this favours the conclusion that the pre-Marcan original form of the words of institution (and not first the Marcan version) also stood within this oldest passion narrative.

If that is so, the theme of the setting of the pre-Marcan words of institution casts light on their meaning. It is not the two elements representing body and blood that stand at the heart of the pre-Marcan original of the old passion summaries (Mk. 9:31, etc.), and of the oldest passion narrative which embraces them (14:21, cf. 14:41), but the violent death ("my blood shed") of the One given up by God vicariously for the many.

(iii) This conclusion is supported by the agreement of the contents of the Marcan setting and the Pauline introductory formula: "the Lord Jesus [ho kyrios Iēsous] on the night when he was delivered up" (1 Cor. 11:23). Comparison with the liturgical introduction to the Pauline outline of the Lord's Supper establishes not only that the nocturnal betrayal by Judas belonged to the passion narrative at an early date (J. Jeremias, op. cit., 94 ff.) and that the Son of man title (Mk. 14:21) corresponds to the Pauline "kyrios Jesus" (the call maranatha refers to the coming of the Son of man; cf. W. Kramer, Christ, Lord, Son of God, 1966, 99–107, 175). It also shows that paradidomai (to be delivered up) in the passion narrative is to be understood in the context of the salvation history of God, who "gave up his Son for us all (Rom. 8:32; cf. 4:25). . . . Thus it was not as an expression of a police measure or a villainous deed of men" (G. Bornkamm, op. cit., 132). (On the call → Present, art. maranatha.)

This means, however, that the setting of the pre-Marcan words of institution in the Lord's Supper, with its theme of the substitutionary delivering up by God of the Son of man, accomplished through the ungodly actions of men, corresponds exactly to the liturgical introduction to the words of institution in Paul's account of the Lord's Supper and their theme of God's delivering up for us in salvation history of the kyrios Jesus.

(b) The Lord's Supper in the setting of the Passover meal. (i) The Synoptic narratives agree that Jesus' Last Supper was a Passover meal (Matt. 26:17 ff.; Mk. 14:12, 14, 16; Lk. 22:7, 11, 12, 15). According to them, Jesus was crucified on the Day of Passover (15 Nisan). Execution on the day of such a high festival was not impossible historically, for in cases of very serious crime execution was to be carried out "at the feast" (Deut. 17:13; 21:21) in the sight of all the people, i.e. on 15 Nisan (H. Conzelmann, *RGG*³ III 626; J. Jeremias, op. cit., 53). According to Jn., when Jesus was accused before Pilate, the Passover lambs had not yet been eaten (Jn. 18:28). Jesus' crucifixion took place on 14 Nisan, the Preparation for the Passover (Jn. 19:14). Nevertheless, the balance of probability seems to lie with the Synoptic presentation (W. Marxsen EKL I 4), for Jn. fixes the moment of Jesus' death as the time when the Passover lambs were being slaughtered in the Temple and clearly wants to make his chronology a comment on the meaning of Jesus' death, i.e. Jesus died as the true Passover lamb (Jn. 1:29; 19:36; cf. Exod. 12:46, Num. 9:12; 1 Cor. 5:7). ([Ed.] For discussions of the complex question of the chronological schemes employed by the evangelists see especially the works by Jaubert, Ogg, and Ruckstuhl listed in the bibliography.) Since the Lord's Supper, celebrated daily or weekly from the beginning, had no reference to the Passover as an annual feast, an original connection of the Passover meal and the Lord's Supper is more likely than a development in the opposite direction (K. G. Kuhn, op. cit., 513 ff.; W. Marxsen, ibid.).

([F. F. Bruce] The chronological question is best solved if the combined Synoptic and Johannine evidence be interpreted as indicating that the official Passover meal was indeed eaten on the Friday evening, as John implies [Jn. 18:28; 19:14], but that Jesus, for his own good reasons, kept the Passover with his disciples the preceding evening, "before the [official] feast of the Passover" [Jn. 13:1]. The official feast was regulated by the temple calendar, but there were groups in Israel which did not accept this calendar. One of these was the Qumran community, which followed the solar calendar of the book of Jubilees, but the view of A. Jaubert [The Date of the Last Supper, 1965], that Jesus kept the Passover according to this calendar, has not been adequately established. More probably Jesus did not regulate his observance on this occasion by any current calendar, but since he knew that he would not be alive on the Friday evening, and "earnestly desired to eat this passover" with his disciples before he suffered [Lk. 22:15], he resolved to eat it with them twenty-four hours earlier. Provision was made in the OT for the observance of the Passover on another day than the normal one, in a case of necessity [cf. Num. 9:10 f.; 2 Chr. 30:2 f., 13, 15]; and the Lord of the sabbath was also Lord of the Passover. If the meal was eaten a day earlier than the official date, it must have been eaten without a lamb, since in post-exilic times paschal lambs were slaughtered only by the priests in the temple at the appointed time. But wherever the Passover was commemorated beyond the environs of Jerusalem before A.D. 70, and throughout the whole world since A.D. 70, it has had to be commemorated without the paschal lamb. It is unnecessary to suppose with M. Black [The Scrolls and Christian Origins, 1961, 201] that Judas took the "morsel" [Jn. 13:26, 30] to the chief priests as "evidence . . . that an illegal feast had been celebrated".)

(ii) Not merely the setting of the oldest passion narrative suggests that Jesus' last meal took place within the framework of a Passover meal, but also the liturgical words of institution themselves.

The setting in which Jesus held his last Supper was Jerusalem and not Bethany to which he normally went each night (Matt. 21:17 par. Mk. 11:11; Mk. 11:19; Matt. 26:6 par. Mk. 14:3). He did not, therefore, leave the Holy City. It was a rule that the Passover lamb had to be eaten within the city limits of Jerusalem.

Jesus' Last Supper closed with a hymn of praise (Matt. 26:30 par. Mk. 14:26), i.e. with the second half of the Hallel (Pss. 115–118), which was sung at the close of the Passover meal.

The liturgical account of the institution states that Jesus' Last Supper was held during the night (1 Cor. 11:23; Matt. 26:20; Mk. 14:17; cf. Lk. 22:14), whereas the normal main meal took place in the late afternoon. The Passover meal, however, was from the beginning eaten at night, and its celebration was only permitted then. Since the indication of time in 1 Cor. 11:23 (in contrast to the setting in Mk. 14:17, 26) belongs to the old liturgical formula (G. Bornkamm, op. cit., 137 ff.; J. Jeremias, op. cit., 44 ff., 95, n. 5), the liturgical tradition itself supports the idea that Jesus' Last Supper took place within the setting of a Passover meal.

Finally, the words of institution within the supper support the idea that a Passover meal was the setting for Jesus' Last Supper. "The most likely way of understanding the fact that the words of institution were spoken is evidence that Jesus' words were said within the setting of a Passover meal. But the explanation of the elements is part of the Passover service, not of the benediction before or after the meal. Jesus, however, pronounced the words of institution at the distribution of the bread and wine" (E. Lohse, Märtyrer und Gottesknecht, 123). But here it must be noted that the analogy between the explanatory words of the Jewish Passover meal and those of Jesus is only formal, and not a material one. The setting of the Jewish Passover gave rise to Jesus' explanatory words but it does not explain them.

(iii) The novel element is the fact that Jesus is not said to have explained the special features of the Passover (the lamb, the unleavened bread and the bitter herbs), but that he is said to have explained → bread and → wine as such, i.e. those elements which appeared at every other meal. To this must be added the fact that Jesus' explanatory words were connected with the benediction before and after the meal. The distribution of the blessed bread and wine after the blessing meant giving a share in the blessing pronounced over the bread and the cup. On this basis one can explain, on the one hand, the linking of the words of institution with the blessing before and after the main meal and, on the other hand, the connection of the explanation with the distribution (J. Jeremias, op. cit., 84–88).

(c) The words of institution and parabolic actions. Jesus' explanation of the elements of bread and wine in the Lord's Supper differed finally from the explanation of the special features of the Jewish Passover meal in that the distribution of the bread and wine by Jesus represents a (prophetic) parabolic action (J. Jeremias, op. cit., 204 ff.; 212; W. Marxsen, EKL I 5), through which the disciples participated in Jesus' death. Two things are, however, essential to parabolic actions: that they become real events and that their constituent parts are described. The explanation is an established part of OT parabolic actions (cf. Ezek. 5:5 "this is Jerusalem"; Ezek. 12:11 "I am a sign for you"; cf. H. W. Wolff, Hosea, Hermeneia, 1974; W. Zimmerli, Ezekiel, I, Hermeneia, 1976).

(d) The Lord's Supper and the Passover meal. Jesus' Last Supper, therefore, was in all probability a Passover meal. He spoke the words of institution in the setting of his last celebration of the Passover and "clearly referred to many features of the feast, assimilating some and changing others. . . . When, as head of the household, he passed round the bread before the main meal, he accompanied it with a word of explanation, and likewise, later, the cup" (W. Marxsen, EKL I 4). The cup referred to was the third cup "after supper" (Lk. 22:20; 1 Cor. 11:25), the "cup of blessing" (1 Cor. 10:16) of the Passover feast. That this is above all explanation, not of actions but of the food, is made clear only by the setting of the Jewish Passover ritual. So if the Synoptic gospels are historically correct in placing the words of institution in the setting of the Passover, this conclusion in no way determines the sense of the words of institution and the significance of the Lord's Supper (K. G. Kuhn).

5. The Lord's Supper and the liturgy of the primitive church. The practical setting of the words of institution in the Lord's Supper is the celebration of the meal in the Palestinian and Hellenistic primitive church.

(a) Effects of the liturgical use. The liturgical use of the words of institution becomes apparent in the explicit command to repeat the act (Lk. 22:19), and its doubling for the sake of liturgical parallelism (1 Cor. 11:24, 25), in the adding of imperatives like "eat", "drink" (Matt. 26:26 f.), in the replacement of the third person "for the many" (Mk. 14:24) by the second person "for you" (Lk. 22:20), which narrows down the universal reference of the saying about the cup (Jesus' substitutionary death for the many) to a formula of distribution, in the avoidance of Aramaisms and Semitisms, which were incomprehensible to Gentile Christians, and not least in the disappearance of the historical features of the Passover meal, which were incompatible with the liturgy of the primitive church and the regular celebration of the Lord's Supper (cf. J. Jeremias, TDNT VI 543; → All, Many, art. polloi).

(i) In Acts 2:42 a liturgy of primitive Christian worship is described (J. Jeremias, The Eucharistic Words of Jesus, 118 ff.). After teaching, in place of which a letter could be read, and a common meal (koinōnia), there followed closely the Lord's Supper (klasis tou artou, "breaking of bread"), which was concluded with psalms and prayers (proseuchai). The liturgical development is visible in the fact that the sayings over the bread and the cup are no longer, as in the Pauline version (1 Cor. 11:25 "after supper"; cf. Lk. 22:20), separated by a whole meal, but that the meal proper precedes the Lord's Supper which is therefore self-contained (cf. the absence of the phrase "after supper" in Mk. and Matt.). The separation of the meal from the Lord's Supper is also assumed in 1 Cor. 11. It is here that the direct cause of the Corinthian abuses lies.

(ii) Parts of the introductory liturgy to the celebration of the primitive Christian meal are to be found in 1 Cor. 11:26 ff.; 16:20–22; and Rev. 22:17–21. Paul concludes 1 Cor. with a series of liturgical phrases – the invitation to the holy kiss, the anathema against those who do not love the Lord, and the Maranatha (1 Cor. 16:20–22) – which originate in the introductory liturgy to the Lord's Supper which will have followed closely on the reading of the apostle's letter to the assembled congregation and on the holy kiss (1 Cor. 16:20; Rom. 16:16; cf. G. Bornkamm, op. cit., 147 ff.). The anathema at the beginning of the celebration of the meal excluded the unworthy from the Lord's Supper (1 Cor. 16:22a). To strengthen this there followed the Maranatha (1 Cor. 16:22b), which called upon the kyrios to be present ("Our Lord, come!"; cf. Rev. 22:20). Even if the church with this call, "Our Lord, come!" was praying for the Lord's eschatological coming, this did not exclude the presence of the exalted Lord at the Lord's Supper, but rather assumed it (P. Vielhauer, Aufsätze zum Neuen Testament, 159 f., 175; K. G. Kuhn, maranatha, TDNT IV 466–73). The achri hou elthē ("until he comes") of 1 Cor. 11:26 clearly reflects the Maranatha of the Lord's Supper liturgy (J. Schniewind, TDNT I 72 n. 25; G. Bornkamm, op. cit., 148), and probably represents a remodelling of this cry. Similar phrases from the introductory liturgy occur in Rev. 22:17–21 (E. Lohmeyer, Die Offenbarung des Johannes, HNT 16, 1970³, ad loc.) and in Did. 10:6, where the use in a Hellenistic tradition of the Aramaic invocation Maranatha confirms its primary eucharistic setting. The holy kiss, the formulae of threat and exclusion and the invocations of the coming and present kyrios are thus the essential elements of the introductory liturgy of the Lord's Supper.

(b) Pre-liturgical elements in the tradition of the Lord's Supper. The tradition of the words of institution is not, as it stands, simply a historical account but a liturgical text, which mentions only the points which are essential for the celebration of the Lord's Supper in the church. Nevertheless, the tradition of the institution of the Lord's Supper implies a pre-liturgical stage in the tradition which could not be fully assimilated into the liturgy itself.

(i) The historically probable information given by the Synoptics, which describes Jesus' Last Supper as a Passover meal, diverges from the rite of the primitive church, for there is not the slightest evidence that the Lord's Supper was ever celebrated as a Passover, only once a year (J. Jeremias, op. cit., 66; W. Marxsen, EKL I 4). Rather, the original Passover motifs were removed in the light of the regular celebration of the Lord's Supper. In primitive Christian usage, therefore, there is no ground for a subsequent interpretation of the Lord's Supper as a Passover meal (K. G. Kuhn, EvTh 11/12, 1950–51, 522).

(ii) While in Mk. the eschatological perspective is included in the words of institution (14:25), in Lk. it occurs before them (Lk. 22:18) and in Paul an echo of it is heard in his own explanatory phrase, achri hou elthē "until he comes" (1 Cor. 11:26), which may also imply an assurance of the fulfilment of this hope (cf. O. Hofius, "Bis dass er kommt," NTS 14, 1967–68, 439 ff.). It is no accident that the eschatological perspective (Mk. 14:25) should no longer appear in direct association with the words of institution, either in Lk. or Paul. Since it had moved, as 1 Cor. 16:22; Rev. 22:20; and Did. 10:6 attest, into the introductory liturgy, its continuing position after the words of institution (Mk. 14:25) did not fit very well into the liturgical formulation of the Lord's Supper (G. Bornkamm, op. cit., 151; F. Hahn, EvTh 27, 1967, 340). In Did. 10:5 the congregation celebrating the meal prays that God will perfect the church and gather it into the → kingdom; in Did. 10:6 there follow invocations referring to the parousia, and the Maranatha (→ Present, art. maranatha). The placing of the eschatological perspective in the Marcan tradition after the words of institution indicates a stage which does not correspond to the liturgy of the Lord's Supper in the primitive church. It should therefore be accepted as original.

(iii) While Mk. and Matt. associate the identification of the traitor with the preliminary course (Matt. 26:20–25; Mk. 14:17–21) in Lk. the prophecy of the betrayal (Lk. 22:21–23) follows on the celebration of the Lord's Supper (Lk. 22:15–20). Here the Lucan order is probably older and indicates a preliturgical stage; placing the identification of the traitor first not only shows theological reflection (the traitor must not participate in the Lord's Supper), but also liturgical influence, i.e. the order in Mk. corresponds to the formulae of threat and exclusion at the beginning of the primitive Christian Lord's Supper (cf. 1 Cor. 11:27; 16:20a; Did. 10:6).

The tradition of the words of institution, therefore, certainly reflects the Lord's Supper liturgy of the primitive church, but it equally points back to a pre-liturgical stage in the tradition.

6. The principal theological ideas of the Lord's Supper. A theological interpretation must begin with the original form of the words of institution. From there follows the process of development in the history of the tradition. Finally we must consider the main theological ideas which arise in connection with it.

(a) The original form. (i) To understand the saying about the bread it is important to establish the Aram. equivalent of sōma (→ body). J. Jeremias posits behind the Gk. sōma/haima (body/blood) the Aram. biśrā'/d^{e}mā' (flesh/blood). His translation is determined by the consideration that "flesh" and "blood" are frequently used as a complementary pair in sacrificial language. Hence, he concludes that, when Jesus spoke of body and blood, he was referring to the flesh and blood of the Passover → lamb and thereby described himself as the true Passover lamb. But since "body and blood" was not a current pair of complementary terms (E. Lohse, Märtyrer und Gottesknecht, 124 f.), the original form of the words of institution did not connect "body" and "blood", but "my body" and "my dying for [the] many". Since there is in fact no record that Jesus ever referred to himself as the Passover lamb, the Aram. equivalent for sōma should probably be gupā' ("body", "self", "I"; cf. J. Behm, TDNT III 736; G. Dalman, Jesus-Jeshua, 1929, 142; E. Schweizer, TDNT VIII 1059). The words spoken at the distribution of the bread, "this is my body" (Mk. 14:22c), mean therefore: This is myself; with this bread I am giving myself. If Jesus, then, explained the distribution of the broken bread with the words "this is myself" (a parabolic action), it means that as the disciples received the bread they received a share in Jesus' surrender of himself.

(ii) This self-surrender of Jesus, already expressed in the words over the bread, was included in the words over the cup, "this is my blood shed for [the] many" (Mk. 14:24b). There are frequent references to the shedding of → blood in the OT (cf. Gen. 9:6 etc.), in Rabbinic Judaism (examples in Dalman, op. cit., 159 f.) and in the NT (cf. Matt. 23:25 etc.), whenever the subject is violent death or the surrender of life. The oldest version of the saying about the cup therefore means that Jesus' blood is shed, i.e. his life is surrendered. "This is my dying for [the] many", therefore, like Mk. 10:45 and 1 Cor. 15:3, interprets the death of Jesus in the context of Isa. 53:11 f. as a substitutionary, atoning death, which includes the universal "[the] many". Jesus' self-surrender (the saying over the bread) is his substitutionary death for the many (the saying over the cup). The fact that the Lord's Supper was a (prophetic) parabolic action has the following consequence. In the distribution of the broken bread and the red wine the reality which they represent occurs and is repeated. The disciples received a share in Jesus' vicarious self-surrender for the many which was accomplished in the surrender of his life.

(iii) The eschatological perspective (Mk. 14:25) gave the Lord's Supper a future reference. As Jesus, by the distribution of the bread and wine, took his disciples into communion with himself and into participation in the universal atoning power of his death, he thereby placed them already within the sphere of the coming of the reign of God (→ Kingdom). In a solemn declaration of his will, in the form of an oath, Jesus promised the consummation of salvation and assured his disciples that this would be his last meal with them before the meal at the consummation. His substitutionary atoning death for the universal "many", in which the disciples participated in the Lord's Supper, also made them participants in the sovereignty of God breaking in among men. When this had been fully realized, Jesus would once again, as head of the household, break the blessed bread for his people and pass round the cup of blessing (J. Jeremias, op. cit., 233 ff.; for the eschatological meal cf. e.g. Isa. 25:6; 65:13; Eth.Enoch 62:14).

(b) The development in the history of the tradition. When we turn to the form the tradition takes in the successive strata of the NT, we get the following picture.

(i) Mark. Since the phrase "my blood of the covenant" (14:24) is supposed to be impossible in Aram., the Marcan version of these words, "this is my blood of the covenant, which is poured out for [the] many" (14:24), has been thought to belong in the realm of Hellenistic Jewish Christianity. But, since the → covenant is mentioned in all the versions of the tradition of the Lord's Supper (Mk., Matt., Paul, Lk.), it must be very early. The words of institution in the Lord's Supper were linked with the concept of the covenant. The self-surrender of Jesus (explicit in the original form) as a substitutionary death for the many now underwent closer definition through the covenant concept. The phrase "blood of the covenant" echoes the words of Exod. 24:8 LXX (cf. Zech. 9:11; Heb. 9:20; 10:29; 13:20), and makes a typological reference to the blood of the covenant sprinkled at Sinai. As the covenant on Sinai was then confirmed with the blood of sacrificial animals, the conclusion of the new covenant is now made effective through the blood of Jesus. Not only was a correspondence intended, however, but also a development. The sacrifice that was offered on Sinai to confirm the covenant long ago had no ultimate, atoning, sin-erasing power (Exod. 24:3–8). The substitutionary death of Christ, on the contrary, is superior to all the sacrifices of the old covenant. His death inaugurates the eschatological order or covenant of salvation (E. Lohse, Geschichte des Leidens und Sterbens Jesu Christi, 1964, 56).

(ii) The additions in the version handed down in Matt. may be explained by liturgical practice. They are the invitation "eat" (Matt. 26:26), the re-writing of the Marcan statement, "and they all drank of it" (Mk. 14:23); which comes, remarkably, before the words of institution over the cup, as an imperative (Matt. 26:27b) and the expansion of the conclusion of the words over the cup to "for the forgiveness of sins" (Matt. 26:28b), a formula perhaps originating in the baptismal liturgy (Mk. 1:4; cf. Matt. 3:6; Acts 2:38; J. Jeremias, op. cit., 173; cf. E. Schweizer, RGG^{3} I 13). Moreover, the Matthaean form, with the epexegetic addition eis aphesin hamartiōn, "for the forgiveness of sins", is also evidence of a theological interpretation developing from Exod. 24:8 to Jer. 31:31–34. The covenant which is brought into effect, like the Sinai covenant, by the blood of Jesus, but which at the same time is superior to the Sinai covenant because of the substitutionary death of Christ (Mk.), is a covenant of the → forgiveness of → sins (Matt.). The fellowship with God established by Jesus' death, in which the coming rule of God dawns, is identical with the forgiveness of sins (Jer. 31:34b). Matt., therefore, gives an interpretation of the order of salvation established in Jesus' death as the gift of the forgiveness of sins. The Lord's Supper is a present expression of that forgiveness.

(iii) The Pauline version reveals a stage of advancing Gk. influence in the avoidance of Semitisms and of liturgical formulation (the command to repeat is doubled; for anamnēsis → Remember, art. mimnēskomai). In it the statement about atonement was associated with the words over the bread ("this is my body for you"), while the covenant idea qualified only the words over the cup. This covenant is described as the "new" covenant, and is thus understood as the fulfilment of the prophetic promise of the new covenant (Jer. 31:31 ff.). It may be paraphrased: This cup is the new covenant on the basis of my blood (1 Cor. 11:25). When they drink from the cup, those who celebrate the Lord's Supper participate in the new order of salvation, founded by God in Christ's death. The church thus experiences the present validity of the new covenant (Jer. 31:31 ff.), established in the death of the kyrios (Exod. 24:8). And when the assembled congregation eats the broken bread, they receive a share in the Lord who was delivered up to death for them. But here sōma (→ Body) is not thought of as substance but means the very person (cf. G. Bornkamm, op. cit., 145).

Paul's own view is most clearly expressed in 1 Cor. 10:17, "Because there is one loaf" (which gives us a share in Christ, who was delivered up to death as our substitute), "we who are many are one body," i.e. the body of Christ as a community. For Paul, Christ delivered up for us, whom we receive in the bread, automatically includes the church as the body of Christ, the church in which we are included through the Lord's Supper. Paul's particular concern, therefore, is the relationship between the Lord's Supper and the church; for him the christological concept of the body implies the ecclesiastical one as well (G. Bornkamm, op. cit., 144).

It is possible that the Corinthian abuses arose, because the Lord's Supper was conceived as granting the individual participant the food of immortality. Hence, its meaning as the basis of the body of Christ, uniting those sharing in it together as its members, was missed. Church-members from the slave class were apt to arrive too late and could therefore no longer take part in the table-fellowship of the meal proper (1 Cor. 11:21); only the sacrament itself remained for them. But if in the celebration of the Lord's Supper the one body of Christ is actualized, any Lord's Supper which does not achieve real table-fellowship (11:20) is exposed as an abuse (G. Bornkamm, op. cit., 122–30, 154 ff.; cf. E. Schweizer, *RGG*³ I 11).

(iv) In comparison with the Marcan form and even with Paul, Lk. reveals clear signs of a developing liturgical influence. In the interests of liturgical parallelism the eschatological perspective was attached to the words over the bread too (note the twofold eschatological utterances, Lk. 22:16, 18), which results in a parallelism between the twofold eschatological utterances (vv. 16, 18) and the words of institution (vv. 19, 20). Its appearance before the words of institution was no doubt determined by the fact that the eschatological theme stood at the centre of the Jewish-Christian Passover Haggadah. This comment is based on the view held by a number of scholars (e.g. B. Lohse, Das Passahfest der Quartadezimaner, 1953, 62 f.; J. Jeremias, TDNT V 896–904; and op. cit., 122 ff.; F. Hahn, EvTh 27, 1967, 352 ff.), that Lk. 22:15–20 mirrors the liturgy of a Jewish-Christian Passover celebration. The latter included vicarious fasting at night for → Israel, the expectation of the Parousia on Passover night and the celebration of the Lord's Supper about 3 a.m. at the end of the period of fasting. It is here also, probably, that we find the setting for the interpretation of Christ as the eschatological Passover lamb (1 Cor. 5:7), which is typologically contrasted with the Passover lambs of the exodus and is the theological reason for the renunciation of the eating of the Passover lamb in the primitive church (cf. Jesus' explanations of his renunciation according to Lk. 22:16, 18).

(v) Jn. is the only Gospel which does not give an account of the Lord's Supper in the context of Jesus' last meal (13:1–30). Jn. 6 refers to eating Christ's flesh and drinking his blood after telling of the feeding of the five thousand (6:51–58). R. Bultmann (The Gospel of John, 1971, 209 f., 234–7) and G. Bornkamm (ZNW 47, 1956, 161 ff.) consider that vv. 51c–58 are editorial additions by the church to John's Gospel. But E. Ruckstuhl (Die literarische Einheit des Johannesevangeliums, 1951, 149, 164, 266), J. Jeremias (ZNW 44, 1952–53, 256 f.), E. Schweizer (Neotestamentica, 1963, 371 ff.), and L. Goppelt (TDNT VIII 236 f.) support the literary unity of the discourse on the bread and feeding on Christ. However, Jn. 6:51c may be a late version of Jesus' words of institution of the bread: This (bread) is my flesh (sarx), (which I give) for the life of the world. If the introduction of the idea of the covenant in Hellenistic Jewish Christianity (Mk. 14:24) resulted in the Church's seeing Jesus' death as an atoning and a covenant sacrifice, in Jn. (6:51 ff.) we now have the first appearance of the pair of terms, sarx/haima (flesh/blood), as the logical conclusion of the use of the language of sacrifice. It is thought that Jn. also betrays a later stage of development by speaking of eating (lit. chewing) the flesh and drinking the blood (ho trōgōn mou tēn sarka kai pinōn mou to haima, "He who eats my flesh and drinks my blood"). It thus made a close connection between the elements in the meal and the component parts of the person of Christ. However, eating the flesh and drinking the blood must not, according to Jn., be misunderstood in a literal and sacramental sense, for v. 63 clearly shows that Jn. is thinking of the personal presence of Christ spiritually through his word, and his self-offering in word and sacrament through faith (6:35, 47, 54). But then the reference to eating the flesh, etc., is in an anti-docetic setting and is intended to emphasize the "scandal of the full incarnation." "Thus in Jn., so to speak, the Lord's Supper holds fast to Jesus' fleshly form and prevents it . . . evaporating to become a mere idea of Christ" (E. Schweizer, *RGG*³ I 12). For John "eating the flesh" and "drinking the blood" of the Son of man is the continuing sign of participation in his life by faith and to share in it is to continue to acknowledge the full reality of the incarnation of the divine Logos.

([Ed.] It is commonly assumed that Jn. 6 is about the Lord's Supper, even though there is no hint in the text itself to any form of meal, liturgical or otherwise. Notwithstanding, it is repeatedly called a eucharistic discourse, even though there is no reference to the eucharist or to the Last Supper. Yet there is at least a prima facie case for saying the reverse. Jn. 6 is not about the Lord's Supper; rather, the Lord's Supper is about what is described in Jn. 6. It concerns that eating and drinking which is belief in Christ (6:35), which is eternal life (6:54), and which in other words is described as abiding in him (6:56). The discourse in Jn. 6 represents these activities as central to faith and to men's relationship with Jesus. They are not confined to a sacramental meal. They belong to the very essence of day-to-day relationships. In presenting this discourse and omitting an account of the institution of the Lord's Supper, Jn. is, in effect, saying that the whole of the Christian life should be characterized by this kind of feeding on Christ and that this is what the sacramental meal of the church is really about. In his account of Jesus' last meal with his disciples Jn. gives prominence to the feet-washing with the reminder, "If I then, your Lord and Teacher, have washed your feet, you also ought to wash one another's feet. . . . Truly, truly, I say to you, he who receives any one whom I send receives me; and he who receives me receives him who sent me" [Jn. 13; 14, 20].)

(c) The principal theological ideas in the words of institution. While the original form of the words of institution in Aram. contained the idea of Jesus' self-offering (Mk. 14:22), his substitutionary death for the many (Mk. 14:24), and the eschatological reference to the coming of the → kingdom of God (14:25) at its centre, in Hellenistic Jewish Christianity (Mk.) the reference to the covenant was added to the words over the cup (Mk. 14:24). Jesus' death is an atoning covenant sacrifice which inaugurates the eschatological era of salvation. Matt. (26:28) interpreted the fellowship with God set up by the covenant sacrifice as the forgiveness of sins (Jer. 31:34b). In Paul (and Lk.), for the sake of balance, the reference to atonement was transferred from the Marcan words over the cup to those over the bread (1 Cor. 11:24; Lk. 22:19), so that the words over the cup are now qualified by the reference to the covenant based on Jer. 31:31 ff. (1 Cor. 11:25; Lk. 22:20). Paul for his part, in opposition to Corinthian sacramentalism, laid his emphasis on the indissoluble link between the Lord's Supper and the church (Christ delivered up for us constitutes the church as the → body of Christ; 1 Cor. 10:16), while Jn., in an anti-gnostic confrontation, stressed the connection between eating Christ's flesh and drinking his blood and the incarnation.

([F. F. Bruce] That the covenant idea first entered into the transmitted words of institution in the Greek-speaking phase of primitive Christianity is highly improbable. The covenant idea is thoroughly Hebraic, and in any case one should treat with profound scepticism the suggestion that it was impossible to formulate in Aramaic certain expressions, such as "This is my covenant blood" or "This blood of mine is the blood of the covenant".)

The references to the covenant (Mk.) and to forgiveness (Matt.), as well as the ecclesiastical (Paul) and the anti-docetic (Jn.) emphases, embrace and actualize by a process of continuous reinterpretation the essential significance of the event of Jesus' self-offering and of his universal substitutionary death (Mk. 14:24). They underline the following aspects of the Lord's Supper: (i) The proclamation of the substitutionary self-offering of Jesus and the guarantee of the final eschatological banquet (original form). (ii) Participation in God's order of salvation, set up by Jesus' death as a covenant sacrifice (Mk.). (iii) An assurance of the forgiveness of sins (Matt.). (iv) Incorporation into the new covenant and the founding of the Church as the body of Christ (Paul). (v) The proclamation of the incarnation of the Logos, in which the Son's self-offering is accomplished (Jn.). All this is actualized and given in the Lord's Supper only because the risen Christ is present there. And in so far as the crucified and risen kyrios offers himself in the meal, the grace conveyed by the Lord's Supper is Jesus Christ. He himself makes his presence real as the Supper is celebrated and thus makes it the Lord's Supper. B. Klappert

→ Blood, → Body, → Bread, → Feast, → Hunger, → Present

(a). J. J. von Allmen, Worship: Its Theology and Practice, 1965; G. Aulén, Eucharist and Sacrifice, 1958; W. Barclay, The Lord's Supper, 1967; N. A. Beck, "The Last Supper as an Efficacious Symbolic Act", JBL 89, 1970, 192–98; J. Behm, haima, haimatekchysia, TDNT I 172–77; deipnon, deipneō, TDNT II 34 f.; and "Vom urchristlichen Abendmahl", ThR Neue Folge 9, 1937, 168 ff., 273 ff.; 10, 1938, 81 ff.; M. Black, The Scrolls and Christian Origins, 1961, 91 ff., 199 ff.; G. Bornkamm, "The Anathema in the Early Christian Lord's Supper Liturgy", Early Christian Experience, 1969, 169–76; and "Lord's Supper and Church in Paul", ibid., 123–60; R. E. Brown, "The Eucharist and Baptism in John", New Testament Essays, 1965, 77–95; O. Cullmann, Early Christian Worship, 1953; The Christology of the New Testament, 1963²; O. Cullmann and F. J. Leenhardt, Essays on the Lord's Supper, 1958; J. D. G. Dunn, "John vi – A Eucharistic Discourse?", NTS 17, 1970–71, 328–38; W. Elert, Eucharist and Church Fellowship in the First Four Centuries, 1966; A. Farrer, "The Eucharist in I Corinthians", in Eucharistic Theology Then and Now, SPCK Theological Collections, 1968, 15–33; R. H. Fuller, "The Double Origin of the Eucharist", Biblical Research, 7, 1963, 60 ff.; B. Gärtner, John 6 and the Jewish Passover, Coniectanea Neotestamentica 7, 1959; A. Gilmore, "The Date and Significance of the Last Supper", SJT 14, 1961, 256 ff.; L. Goppelt, potērion, TDNT VI 148–59; and trōgō, TDNT VIII 236 ff.; F. Hahn, The Titles of Jesus in Christology: Their History in Early Christianity, 1969; A. J. B. Higgins, The Lord's Supper in the New Testament, SBT 6, 1952; N. Hook, The Eucharist in the New Testament, 1964; J. K. Howard, "Passover and Eucharist in the Fourth Gospel", SJT 20, 1967, 329–37; J. C. Hurd, Jr., The Origin of I Corinthians, 1965; A. Jaubert, The Date of the Last Supper, 1965; J. Jeremias, pascha, TDNT V 896–904; polloi, TDNT VI 536–45; and The Eucharistic Words of Jesus, 1966²; E. Käsemann, "The Pauline Doctrine of the Lord's Supper", Essays on New Testament Themes, 1964, 108–35; J. F. Keating, The Agape and the Eucharist in the Early Church, (1901) 1969; E. J. Kilmartin, The Eucharist in the Primitive Church, 1965; W. Kramer, Christ, Lord, Son of God, 1966; K. G. Kuhn, maranatha, TDNT IV 466–72; and "The Lord's Supper and the Communal Meal at Qumran", in K. Stendahl, ed., The Scrolls and the New Testament, 1958, 65–93; N. Lash, His Presence in the World: A Study of Eucharistic Worship and Theology, 1968; P. E. Leonard, Luke's Account of the Lord's Supper against the Background of Meals in the Ancient Semitic World and more particularly Meals in the Gospel of Luke, Dissertation, Manchester, 1976; H. Lietzmann, Mass and the Lord's Supper: A Study in the History of the Liturgy, with introduction and supplementary essay by R. D. Richardson, to be published in 11 fascicles, 1953–; E. Lohmeyer, The Lord of the Temple: A Study of the Relation between Cult and Temple, 1961; R. P. Martin, Worship in the Early Church, 1975²; W. Marxsen, The Lord's Supper as a Christological Problem, 1970; and "The Lord's Supper: Concepts and Developments", in H. J. Schultz, ed., Jesus in His Time, 1971; C. F. D. Moule, Worship in the New Testament, 1961; G. Ogg, "The Chronology of the Last Supper", in Historicity and Chronology in the New Testament, SPCK Theological Collections 6, 1965, 75–96; E. Ruckstuhl, Chronology of the Last Days of Jesus, 1965; E. Schweizer, sōma etc., TDNT VII 1024–94; and The Lord's Supper according to the New Testament, 1967; A. Shaw, "The Breakfast by the Shore and the Mary Magdalene Encounter as Eucharistic Narratives", JTS New Series 25, 1974, 12–26; A. Stöger, "Eucharist", EBT I 227–41; V. Taylor, Jesus and his Sacrifice, 1965⁶, 114 ff., 175 ff., 201 ff., 236 ff.; and "The New Testament Origins of Holy Communion", in New Testament Essays, 1970, 48–59; J. Wilkinson, The Supper and the Eucharist, 1965; R. Williamson, "The Eucharist and the Epistle to the Hebrews", NTS 21, 1974–75, 300–12.

(b). L. Aalen, "Der Kampf um das Evangelium im Abendmahl", TLZ 91, 1966, 81 ff.; A. Adam, "Ein vergessener Aspekt des frühchristlichen Herrenmahls", TLZ 88, 1963, 9 ff.; J.-P. Audet, "Esquisse historique du genre littéraire de la 'bénédiction' juive et de 'l'eucharistie' Chrétienne", RB 65, 1958, 371–99; F. Bammel, Das heilige Mahl im Glauben der Völker, 1950; F. Bammel and G. Fohrer, "Mahlzeiten", *RGG*³ IV 605 ff.; M. Barth, Das Abendmahl, Passamahl, Bundesmahl und Messiasmahl, TheolStud 18, 1945; J. Betz, Die Eucharistie in der Zeit der griechischen Väter, I, 1, 1955; and LTK III 1159–62; E. Bizer and W. Kreck, Die Abendmahlslehre in den reformatorischen Bekenntnissen, ThEH Neue Folge, 47 1957; G. Bornkamm, "Die eucharistische Rede im Johannesevangelium", ZNW 47, 1956, 161 ff.; M. Brändle, Jesu letztes Mahl im Lichte von Qumran, 1957, 111 ff., 121 ff.; G. Delling, "Das Abendmahlsgeschehen nach Paulus", KuD 10, 1964, 61 ff.; E. Gaugler, Das Abendmahl im Neuen Testament, Gegenwartsfragen Biblischer Theologie, 2, 1943; H. Gollwitzer, Coena Domini, 1937, L. Goppelt, Typos, 1967², 131 ff., 173 ff.; F. Hahn, "Die alttestamentlichen Motive in der urchristlichen Abendmahlsüberlieferung", EvTh 27, 1967, 337–74; O. Hofius, "Bis das er kommt", NTS 14, 1967–68, 439 ff.; B. van Iersel, "Die wunderbare Speisung und das Abendmahl in der synoptischen Tradition", NovT 7, 1964, 167 ff.; A. Jaubert, "Jésus et le calendrier de Qumran", NTS 7, 1960–61, 1–30; O. Koch, Gegenwart oder Vergegenwärtigung Christi im Abendmahl, 1965; H. Kosmala, "Das tut zu meinem Gedächtnis", NovT 4, 1960, 81 ff.; K. G. Kuhn, "Die Abendmahlsworte", TLZ 75, 1950, 399 ff.; and "Über den ursprünglichen Sinn des Abendmahls", EvTh 11/12, 1950–51, 508 ff.; F. J. Leenhardt, "L'Eucharistie dans le Nouveau Testament", Lumière et Vie 31, 1957; H. Lietzmann, An die Korinther, I, II, HNT 9, 1949⁴; E. Lohmeyer, "Das Abendmahl in der Urgemeinde", JBL 56, 1937, 246 ff.; and "Vom urchristlichen Abendmahl", ThR Neue Folge 9, 1937, 168 ff., 273 ff.; 10, 1938, 81 ff.; E. Lohse, Märtyrer und Gottesknecht, 1963²; "Wort und Sakrament im Johannesvangelium", NTS 7, 1960–61, 110 ff.; and Geschichte des Leidens und Sterbens Jesu Christi, 1964; W. Marxsen, "Der Ursprung des Abendmahls", EvTh 12, 1952–53, 293 ff.; and "Abendmahl", EKL I 4 ff.; J. M. Nielen, "Die Eucharistiefeier der ältesten Christenheit nach den Aussagen des Neuen Testaments", BuK 15, 1960, 43 ff.; P. Neuenzeit, Das Herrenmahl, Studien zur paulinischen Eucharistieauffasung, 1960; P. Philippi, Abendmahlsfeier und Wirklichkeit der Gemeinde, 1960; M. Rese, "Zur Problematik von Kurz- und Langtext in Luk. xxii 17 ff.", NTS 22, 1975–76, 15–31; F. Reitschel, "Der Sinn des Abendmahls nach Paulus", EcTh 18, 1958, 269 ff.; E. Ruckstuhl, "Wesen und Kraft der Eucharistie in der Sicht des Johannesevangeliums", Opfer der Kirche, 1954, 47–90; H. Schürmann, Der Paschamahlbericht Lk. 22, (7–14) 15–18, 1953; Der Einzetsungsbericht Lk. 22, 19–20, NTAbh 20, 4, 1955; "Die Gestalt der urchristlichen Eucharistiefeier", Münchener Theologische Zeitschrift 6, 1955, 107–31; Jesu Abschiedsrede Lk. 22, 21–38, 1957; Die Abendmahlsbericht Lk. 22, 7–38, 1957; and "Die Eucharistie als Repräsentation und Applikation nach Joh. 6, 53–58", Trierer Theologische Zeitschrift 68, 1959, 30–45, 108–18; R. Schnackenburg, "Die Sakramente im Johannesevangelium", Sacra Pagina 2, 1959, 239–43; E. Schweizer, "Das Herrenmahl, eine Vergenwärtigung des Todes Jesu oder ein eschatologisches Freudenmahl?", ThZ 2, 1946, 81 ff.; "Das johanneische Zeugnis vom Herrenmahl", EvTh 12, 1952–53, 341 ff. (reprinted in Neotestamentica: Deutsche und englische Aufsätze, 1951–1963, 1963, 371–96); "Das Herrenmahl im Neuen Testament, ein Forschungsbericht", TLZ 79, 1954, 577 ff. (Neotestamentica, 1963, 344–70); and "Abendmahl", *RGG*³ I 10 ff.; E. M. Skibbe, "Das Proprium des Abendmahls", KuD 10, 1964, 78 ff.; A. Stöger, Brot des Lebens, 1955; and "Die Eucharistiefeier des Neuen Testaments", Eucharistiefeiern der Christenheit, 1960, 10–19; P. Vielhauer, "Ein Weg zur neutestamentlichen Christologie? Prüfung der Thesen Ferdinand Hahns", Aufsätze zum Neuen Testament, 1965, 141–98; G. Walther, Jesus das Passalamm des neuen Bundes, 1950; W. Wilkens, "Das Abendmahlszeugnis im 4. Evangelium", EvTh 18, 1958, 354 ff.

Love

What we describe as love is differentiated in Gk. by various expressions (for details → agapaō CL). phileō is the most commonly used word, indicating a general attraction towards a person or thing. In the foreground stands the meaning of love for one's relatives and friends (cf. the typical formation of philadelphia, love for a brother; → Brother, art. adelphos), but the whole area of fondness is also included with gods, men and things as possible objects. philia accordingly, denotes love, friendship, devotion, favour; and philos is a relative or friend. By contrast erōs is love which desires to have or take possession. agapaō, originally meaning to honour or welcome, is in classical Gk. the least specifically defined word; it is frequently used synonymously with phileō without any necessarily strict distinction in meaning. In the NT, however, agapaō and the noun agapē have taken on a particular significance in that they are used to speak of the love of God or the way of life based on it.

ἀγαπάω

ἀγαπάω (agapaō), love; ἀγάπη (agapē), love; ἀγαπητός (agapētos), loved, beloved; ἐράω (eraō), love passionately, desire, yearn; ἔρως (erōs), passionate love; φιλόστοργος (philostorgos), tenderly loving, affectionate; ἄστοργος (astorgos), without natural affection.

CL In contradistinction to Eng., extra-biblical Gk. has quite a number of words for love and to love; the most important being → phileō, stergō, eraō and agapaō.

1. phileō is the most general word for love or regard with affection. The many derivative words show this clearly: e.g., philos, a friend; philēma, a kiss; and compound words such as philosophia, love of knowledge, philosophy (→ wisdom); philoxenia, hospitality (→ Foreign, art. xenos); and proper names like Philippos (lit. lover of horses, horse-lover). phileō mainly denotes the attraction of people to one another who are close together both inside and outside the family; it includes concern, care and hospitality, also love for things in the sense of being fond of. Ideas related to phileo do not have a clear religious emphasis.

2. The less frequent vb. stergō means to love, feel affection, especially of the mutual love of parents and children. It can also be used of the love of a people for their ruler, the love of a tutelary god for the people, and even of dogs for their master. It is less common for the love of husband and wife, and does not occur at all in the NT, apart from the compounds astorgos (Rom. 1:31; 2 Tim. 3:3) and philostorgos (Rom. 12:10). It is, however, found in some early Christian writings (e.g. 1 Clem. 1:3; Polycarp 4:2).

3. The vb. eraō and the noun erōs, on the other hand, denote the love between man and woman which embraces longing, craving and desire. The Greeks' delight in bodily beauty and sensual desires found expression here in the Dionysiac approach to, and feeling for, life. Sensual ecstasy leaves moderation and proportion far behind, and the Gk. tragedians (e.g. Soph., Ant. 781 ff.) knew the irresistible power of Eros – the god of love bore the same name – which forgot all reason, will and discretion on the way to ecstasy.

There was also a more mystical understanding of erōs, whereby the Greeks sought to reach and go beyond normal human limitations in order to attain perfection. As well as the fertility cults with their oriental influences, and their glorification of the generating Eros in nature, there were the mystery religions, whose rites were intended to unite the participant with the godhead. Here spiritual and psychical unity with the god came into the foreground more and more, however much erotic pictures and symbols were used. Plato sought to raise spiritual love above the physical. erōs for him was the striving for righteousness, self-possession and wisdom; it is the embodiment of the good, the way to attain immortality (Symp. 200, 206; Phaedr. 237 ff., 242 ff.). In Aristotle (Met. 12, 7p, 1072a, 27 f.) the concept was further developed in this direction, and in Plotinus (A.D. 205–c. 269) the mystical aspiration towards spiritual union with the transcendental dominates (Enneads 5, 5, 8; 6, 8, 15). In the early Christian era gnōsis (→ Knowledge) found its place in this approach, giving its own particular slant to the human desire for self-transcendence.

4. The etymology of agapaō and agapē is not clear. The vb. agapaō appears frequently from Homer onwards in Gk. literature, but the noun agapē is only a late Gk. construction. Only one reference has been found outside the Bible, where the goddess Isis is given the title agapē (P.Oxy. 1380, 109; 2nd cent. A.D.).

agapaō in Gk. is often quite colourless as a word, appearing frequently as an alternative to, or a synonym with, eraō and phileō, meaning to be fond of, treat respectfully, be pleased with, welcome. When, on rare occasions, it refers to someone favoured by a god (cf. Dio. Chrys., Orationes 33, 21), it is clear that, unlike eraō, it is not the man's own longing for possessions or worth that is meant, but a generous move by one for the sake of the other. This is expressed above all in the way agapētos is used, mostly of a child, but particularly of an only child to whom all the love of his parents is given.

OT In the LXX agapaō is used by preference to translate the Heb. vb. 'āhēḇ. The noun agapē finds its origin here, in standing for Heb. 'ahᵃḇâh. The vb. occurs far more frequently than the noun. 'āhēḇ can refer to both persons and things, and denotes first men's relationships with each other, and secondly God's relationship with man.

1. (a) Love and hate represent for the Eastern sensibility two of the basic polarized attitudes to life. The phenomenon of love in the OT is experienced as a spontaneous force which drives one to something or someone over against itself. Love means the vital urge of the sexes for one another. The prophets Hosea (3:1; 4:18), Jeremiah (2:25) and Ezekiel (16:37) were not at all ashamed to speak of the sexual side of love. The powerful perception of the differentiation of the sexes and of marital love as an enriching gift does not only derive from the creation stories (Gen. 2:18 ff.), but even more from Cant., which celebrates the strength of passionate love. "Love is strong as death, jealousy is as cruel as the grave. Its flashes are flashes of fire, a most vehement flame" (Cant. 8:6).

(b) But as well as the relationship between the sexes, the blood relationship with father and mother and the spiritual bond between friends can also be love. (It is not possible in Heb. to distinguish between eraō and agapaō.) Thus, when the love of Jonathan and David for one another is spoken of (1 Sam. 18:1, 3; 20:17), this is expressed in terms of a communal fellowship deeper than love for a woman: "your love for me was wonderful, passing the love of women" (2 Sam. 1:26).

(c) In a further sense, love is understood as lying at the root of social community life: "you shall love your neighbour as yourself" (Lev. 19:18; → Brother, art. plēsion; → Command; → Law, art. nomos). Love in this context means devotion towards one's neighbour for his sake, accepting him as a brother and letting him come into his own. This aspect is illustrated by the social legislation, which is particularly concerned with the rights of aliens (Lev. 19:34; → Foreign), the → poor (Lev. 25:35) and → orphans.

2. The word love is used less commonly and with greater caution for describing the relationship between God and man. In this respect the OT contrasts with Gk. literature in being far removed from any mystical thinking. In the OT man can never ascend to God; in the Gk. understanding of erōs he can. It is because all human thought, feeling, action and worship are a response to a previous movement by God, that the LXX prefers the simpler word agapē to the more loaded erōs. The completely different direction of thought makes this quite understandable.

(a) At the beginning of the OT stands not only the God who loves, but also the God who elects, and the God who creates facts through direct action in nature and with men – in particular, with his people, with whom he has made a → covenant (Exod. 24). The great deeds of Yahweh are the deeds of his history with his people, such as the Exodus, the gift of the land and the Torah. Righteousness, faithfulness, love and grace are some of the concepts embodied in such actions. The people, in turn, reply with jubilation, praise and obedience.

God's judgment and → grace (ḥeseḏ) permeate the whole of the OT. It is not a characteristic of God that is being described; it is always the total activity which is based on his sovereign will. God holds to his covenant, despite → Israel's frequent relapses which draw God's wrath on them. The only ground for this is to be found in his electing grace and love (e.g. Hos. 11:1). Statements concerning this devotion of God to his people reach the level of suffering love, as Isa. 53 predicates of the Servant of God.

(b) It was the → prophets who first ventured to elaborate on the theme of the love of God as the main motif of his electing work. It was an enormity of unique proportions for Hosea, surrounded by the Canaanite world of sexual fertility-cults and love-feasts, to represent the relationship between Yahweh and his people as that of a deceived husband and a prostitute (→ Marriage). Yet, despite the fact that Israel had broken the covenant, and thus become a whore and an adulteress, Yahweh still wooed back his faithless wife, the godless covenant people, with an inconceivable love (2:19 f.). Israel is not his people (1:9), but will become his people again through Yahweh's patient and winsome wooing (2:23). But, besides using the picture of marriage, Hosea also used the picture of a → father to describe Yahweh's unfathomable love for Israel, whom he loved in → Egypt and drew to himself with bonds of love (11:1 ff.). Israel, however, turned away. So Hosea pictured the struggle, which he saw as going on inside Yahweh himself, as that between the jealous wrath of a deceived father and his glowing love: "How can I give you up, O Ephraim! How can I hand you over, O Israel? . . . My heart recoils within me, my compassion grows warm and tender. I will not execute my fierce anger, I will not again destroy Ephraim; for I am God and not man, the Holy One in your midst, and I will not come to destroy" (11:8 f.). This description by Hosea of the passionate and zealous love of God is unprecedented in its boldness. For, according to Hosea, the God-ness of God does not express itself in destructive power, but in tender and compassionate love, which precedes any responsive human love, and which suffers through the faithlessness of his people (6:4) and does not hand them over to ultimate ruin.

The later prophets took over from Hosea the picture of love and the theme of the beloved, with modifications. Jeremiah spoke of Israel's first love in the wilderness, and its growing cold in Canaan (Jer. 2:1 ff.). But Yahweh's love is everlasting (31:3), and he will help up the degenerate people again (3:6–10; 31:4). In Isa. 54:4–8 it is not the wife who has left her husband, but Yahweh who left his young bride, to whom he now again turns in compassion. "For the Lord has called you like a wife forsaken and grieved in spirit, like a wife of youth when she is cast off, says your God. For a brief moment I forsook you, but with great compassion I will gather you" (54:6 f.). One can even speak of Yahweh's political love which is to be recognized in the return of the exiles from Babylon: "Because you are precious in my eyes, and honoured, and I love you, I give men in return for you, peoples in exchange for your life" (43:4).

(c) Deut., also expresses similar ideas. But whereas in the prophets Yahweh's love is the sole and incredible basis for his future actions in saving his lost people, the allusions to Yahweh's electing love in Deut. always provide the ground for exhorting Israel on its side to love God and to follow his directing. (7:6–11). "You shall love the LORD your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your might" (6:5; → Command; → Law, art. nomos). This love for God is realized in obedience to his will as expressed in the covenant, in keeping the law (Exod. 20:6; Deut. 10:12 f.), and in devotion to one's neighbour (Lev. 19:18). There is a nice example of the way human social love is to be founded on the acts of God in the law concerning aliens: "The stranger who sojourns with you shall be to you as the native among you, and you shall love him as yourself; for you were strangers in the land of Egypt: I am the LORD, your God" (Lev. 19:34). Love, here, means dealing with a friend as a friend. Of course, the command to love one's neighbour is not, in the OT, something capable of comprehending the whole law: love for Yahweh is represented in a whole gamut of instructions and directives.

3. (a) In Hellenistic and Rabbinic Judaism agapē became the central concept for describing God's relationship with man and vice versa. Despite mystical nuances derived from Greece and the Orient, the word still maintained its basic OT implications. God loves his people through every distress they meet. Proof of his love is the Torah: the believer reciprocates God's love as he obeys the commandments, emulates God's zealous compassion, and remains true to God, even to the point of martyrdom (4 Macc. 13:24; 15:3). Loving one's neighbour is the chief → commandment to the pious Jew. There are even individual examples of commands to help one's enemy, if need be, whether a member of the chosen people or not. There is also the occasional observation that God allows his forgiving love to hold sway well beyond the requirements of justice (SB I 905; 917 f.; III 451, 485; 766, 778).

(b) Essential for an understanding of the NT is the quite different structure of Qumran piety. The community believed that it had been chosen in God's love, but that this only had reference to the children of light. God loves the angel of light and hates all who belong to the company of Belial. There is an often repeated command: "Love everyone whom God elects, hate everyone he hates" (1QS 1:3 f.; contrast Matt. 5:43 ff.). The command to love does indeed play an important rôle, but since God's love is not conceived as having universal application, even love for one's neighbour only has a restricted reference to members of the community. (Cf. E. F. Sutcliffe, "Hatred at Qumran", Revue de Qumran 2, 1959–60, 345–55.)

NT 1. (a) In the NT love is one of the central ideas which express the whole content of the Christian faith (cf. Jn. 3:16). God's activity is love, which looks for men's reciprocal love (1 Jn. 4:8, 16).

(b) It is significant that stergō only occurs in the NT in Rom. 12:10 in the compound philostorgos, loving dearly, in an expression in which Paul emphasizes the need for love in the church by piling up words for love tē philadelphia eis allēlous philostorgoi, "devoted to one another in brotherly love" [Arndt, 869], and in Rom. 1:31; 2 Tim. 3:3 in the compound astorgos, heartless, inhuman, without natural affection. As an illustration of such lack of natural, family affection, C. E. B. Cranfield cites the practice of exposing unwanted babies and Seneca's justification for drowning weakly or deformed infants (The Epistle to the Romans, ICC, I, 1975, 132 f.; cf. Seneca, De Ira 1, 15). Moreover, erōs and eraō do not occur at all. As A. Nygren has shown, the reason for this is that the anthropocentric way of thinking which is inevitably bound up with these words does not correspond with the NT approach (Agape and Eros, 1953²). phileō, on the other hand, does appear commonly, though it also features in compound words. However, it remains in every case a more limited and colourless word. A typical example would be philadelphia, love for a friend or brother (2 Pet. 1:7). The main emphasis of phileō is on love for people who are closely connected, either by blood or by faith. Jn. 15:19; 11:36; 16:27 use it in the context of the father-child relationship. agapaō and phileō are used synonymously in Jn. 3:35 and 5:20 (cf. 16:27) of the Father's love for the Son, and in Jn. 21:15 ff., when Jesus asked Peter whether he loved him and in Peter's reply. ([F. F. Bruce] The attempts of B. F. Westcott and others to find significance in the variation between the two verbs in Jn. 21:15 ff. have now generally been abandoned – the more so because opposite and mutually inconsistent conclusions have been drawn from the variation [as by Westcott on the one hand, and R. C. Trench on the other]. The variation is a feature of Johannine style: in the same three verses two different words are also used for "know", two for "feed" [or "tend"] and two for "sheep" [or "lambs"].) In 1 Cor. 16:22 phileō is clearly used of love for the Lord Jesus: "If anyone has no love for the Lord, let him be accursed. Our Lord, come!" (→ Present, art. maranatha).

(c) By contrast, agapē and agapaō are used in nearly every case in the NT to speak of God's relationship with man – not unexpectedly, in view of the OT usage. Where agapē is obviously directed towards things (Lk. 11:43), the very use of the vb. agapaō is intended to make it plain that here love is directed to the wrong ends, i.e. not towards God. Thus the vb. is used of misdirected love in Jn. 3:19 (love of skotos, darkness), Jn. 12:43 (love of doxa tōn anthrōpōn, the glory of men), and 2 Tim. 4:10 (love of the nyn aiōn, the present age). But in the case of the noun agapē there is no corresponding negative usage in the NT. It is always in the sense of hē agapē tou theou, the love of God, either subjective gen. (i.e. God's love of men) or the objective gen. (i.e. men's love of God), or referring to the divine love for other men which the presence of God evokes. This brings agapē very close to concepts like pistis, → faith, dikaiosynē, → righteousness and, charis → grace, which all have a single point of origin in God alone.

2. (a) In the Synoptic tradition the main emphasis falls on the preaching of the → kingdom of God and of the new way of life which breaks in with Jesus himself. God sends his beloved Son (in Matt. and Mk. ho agapētos), to whom to listen is to be saved (Mk. 1:11 par. Matt. 3:17; cf. Lk. 3:22; Mk. 9:7 par., Matt. 17:5; cf. Lk. 9:35; cf. Ps. 2:7; Isa. 42:1; Gen. 22:1 ff.). Lk. has agapētos as v.l. and in the parable in Lk. 20:13 as does Mk. 12:6 (but not Matt. 21:38). agapētos also figures in the christological interpretation of Isa. 42:1 in Matt. 12:18. However, agapē is scarcely ever used to express the motive behind this. Instead other words, pictures and parables take its place (e.g. oiktirmōn, merciful, compassionate, Lk. 6:36; eleos, mercy, compassion, pity, Lk. 1:50 ff.; eleeō, have mercy or pity, Matt. 18:33). Jesus' activity among men thus reveals the mercy and love of God: Jesus himself is the one who truly loves, and takes to himself the poor, the sick and sinners.

The word agapē is not found in the passion narrative either. But the underlying thought of mercy and love as the way God intends to redeem lies clearly in the background. It may be seen in the hyper pollōn ("for many") in the account of the → Last Supper (Mk. 14:24; Matt. 26:28; cf. also Mk. 10:45) and the paradidonai ("betray", "hand over") of Jesus to death (Matt. 26:45; Mk. 14:41).

The Sermon on the Mount is best understood when the Beatitudes are seen in the first instance as statements by Jesus about himself (Matt. 5:3–11; cf. Lk. 6:20 ff.; → Blessing art. makarios). Jesus is the first to keep the radical demands of discipleship and so fulfil the law. The command to love one's enemies (Matt. 5:44; cf. Lk. 6:27), the word of forgiveness from the → cross (Lk. 23:34), and the promise to the robber (Lk. 23:43) all fit into the same pattern.

(b) In the Synoptics love for God is based on the two → commandments (Matt. 22:34–40 par. Mk. 12:28–34; cf. Lk. 10:25–28). Here too, through God's mercy, grows the new reality of love which is revealed in Jesus' ministry. His followers enter and share this, and so fulfil the demands of the Sermon on the Mount. Discipleship (→ Disciple), however, also involves → suffering: and when a disciple does suffer he is recognized by God (Matt. 10:37 ff.; 25:31 ff.; Lk. 6:22 ff.). This demand indicates the hardship love has to face; it can only succeed in this world by way of suffering. If love cost God what was most dear to him, the same will certainly apply to a disciple.

(c) This approach provides a different interpretation for loving one's neighbour or one's brother, one unknown either to rabbis or Greeks. It is God's love, creating the new realities amongst mankind, which is itself the basis and motivation for love between people. The commands to love can again be cited here. The combination of Deut. 6:5 and Lev. 19:18 appears only in Mk. 12:28 par. (on this → Command; → Brother; art. plēsion; → Law, art. nomos). The second half, love for one's neighbour, is also quoted in Rom. 13:9; Gal. 5:14; Jas. 2:8. The two commands were also stressed by the rabbis: Rabbi Akiba calls the command to love one's neighbour a basic principle of the Torah, embracing all others (cf. SB I 900–8 on Matt. 22:36 ff.). But the summation and substantiation of the command in the love of God is a peculiarly NT insight. Further, Jesus decisively stepped over the boundaries of Jewish tradition in the radical command to love one's enemies (Matt. 5:43–48 par. Lk. 6:27 f., 32–36). It is true that a general love for people, even for all creatures, had already been accepted as axiomatic. But the radical and laconic nature of the sentence – enemies are to be loved – is quite foreign to Rabbinic teaching (cf. SB I 553–68). Jesus, the Son of God, loves those who crucify him; in fact he died for them. Jesus' interpretation of this command in the parable of the Good Samaritan implicitly extends love to include everybody (Lk. 10:37; cf. 7:47).

3. (a) Paul stands entirely in the line of OT tradition when he speaks of the love of God. agapē is for him electing love, as is indicated by his use of agapētos, "the chosen one". This adjective is commonly used by Paul, but is entirely lacking in Jn., as is also the vb. kaleō (→ call). Rom. 9:13 ff. and 11:28 show in particular how Paul's thought links up with the Israelite election-tradition. The klētoi ("called") are the agapētoi ("beloved") (Rom. 1:7; Col. 3:12). As in the OT the motive for the election is God's love, which can also be rendered by eleos or eleeō (→ Mercy). (The LXX translates the root rḥm sometimes by eleeō, sometimes by agapaō.) This love becomes a revealing activity in Jesus Christ's saving work (Rom. 5:8; 8:35 ff.). The circle of → guilt, wrath (→ Anger) and → judgment is broken through, for in Jesus Christ God appears as love. Indeed this love comes to be predicated of Jesus Christ himself (e.g. Gal. 2:20; 2 Thess. 2:13; Eph. 5:2). The contrasting concept in Paul is orgē, wrath (→ Anger). Men under the law find themselves on a direct road leading to the wrathful judgment of God; from this destiny God in his electing love rescues those who believe (1 Thess. 1:10). Now if God's action can be defined as love (in 2 Cor. 13:11, 13 God and his love are used synonymously), then the great love song of 1 Cor. 13 can be understood not merely as a chapter of ethics, but as a description of all God's activity. In place of the word "love" we can put the name of Jesus Christ (cf. K. Barth, CD I 2, 379). This does not mean that God becomes the "good Lord" who lets anything pass; for there is still the possibility of disbelief and there is still the judgment to come. But God's righteousness is realized in the fact that the beloved Son stands in the place of the unrighteous (cf. 2 Cor. 5:18 ff.).

The electing love of God is also in the background of Eph. 5:22 ff., where the relationship between man and wife is compared with the love of Christ for the church. There are two points of contact here. On the one hand, there is the election of → Israel (cf. Rom. 9); the church is the called-out body, the new Israel which has come to faith in Christ. On the other hand, there is the OT picture of marriage dating from the time of Hosea with the implication of a relationship of fidelity and covenant love. What is true for the Christian community is true also for the individual, and is also true for marriage. God's love is able to overcome every kind of difficulty and infidelity. Electing love is at the same time compassionate and forgiving love.

Certainty of salvation consists in knowing that God's loving activity, of which the resurrection is the final seal, is stronger than any other power including even → death (Rom. 8:37 ff.; 1 Cor. 15:55 ff.). The → resurrection is the crowning act of God's love. In it is displayed the victory over these forces (cf. 2 Cor. 5:19 ff.; on katallagē → Reconciliation).

(b) A believer is a sinner who is loved by God. When he realizes this, he enters the sphere of God's love. He himself becomes loving. Hence, also in Paul love for God and love for one's neighbour derive from God's own love.

It is this love of God, poured into our hearts by the Spirit, that moves believers (Rom. 5:5; 15:30). Man's response to God's saving act is described by Paul mostly as pistis (→ faith) or gnōsis (→ knowledge), but also frequently as agapē (cf. Eph. 3:19; 1 Cor. 8:3). Through the Spirit, knowing God and being known by him become the same thing. The same applies to being loved by, and loving, God (Gal. 4:9). Those who are known by God know him. Similarly, with agapē, the faith which knows that it is loved (Rom. 8:37) is active in love (Gal. 5:6; 1 Thess. 3:6). Thus love can be said to be the fruit of the Spirit (Gal. 5:22); faith and love in fact are often mentioned side by side (e.g. 1 Thess. 1:3; 3:6; 5:8; Eph. 6:23; 1 Tim. 1:14).

The formula en Christō, "in Christ", speaks of the existence of the believer in the sphere of the love of God. When I am "in Christ" or Christ is "in me", this love has taken hold of me and is making me, a believing person, into a loving person (cf. Gal. 2:20; 1 Tim. 1:14). As someone who loves, a believer is a new → creation (kainē ktisis, 2 Cor. 5:17) who finds his origin in the love of Christ (cf. 2 Cor. 5:14 with v. 17).

(c) Paul, therefore, characterizes love for one's neighbour as love for one's → brother in the faith (Gal. 5:6). 1 Cor. 13 summarizes everything to be said here. There agapē is always both God's love and man's love. Love stands over every power and authority introducing and encircling the whole. ([Ed.] In a study of the phrase ta tria tauta, "these three things", and meizōn de toutōn hē agapē, "but [the] greatest of these [is] love", R. P. Martin asks: "May it not be, then, that this tremendous chapter ends on the note of an unexpected climax, as though Paul were saying, Excellent as are the features of this well-known triad, with love the still outstanding trait, there is something greater still, the love of God expressed in Jesus Christ our Lord?" ["A suggested Exegesis of 1 Corinthians 13:13", ExpT 82, 1970–71, 120].) prophēteia, prophecy, and pistis, faith (v. 2), elpis, hope (v. 7), and gnōsis, knowledge (v. 8), are subordinated to it not, however, as gradations of lessening importance, but as component parts of that one powerful force which permeates and animates everything. In the context of 1 Cor. love is the greatest of the gifts of the Spirit, however readily Paul puts pneuma → Spirit and agapē side by side elsewhere (Gal. 5:13–22; 1 Cor. 14:1). 1 Cor. also makes it clear that love is the force which holds a Christian community together and builds it up. Without love, no → fellowship or shared life is possible (1 Cor. 14:1; 16:14; Eph. 1:15; 3:17 ff.). The sōma Christou, body of Christ, is built up by love (1 Cor. 8:1; 2 Thess. 1:3; Phil. 2:1 f.; Eph. 4:16; Col. 2:2). When Paul offers the church the example of his own love he is calling them back again to their fellowship in the love of God (2 Cor. 2:4; 8:7).

Paul also takes up the command of the OT and of Jesus to love (Rom. 13:8 ff.; Gal. 5:14), thus setting agapē alongside pistis, and over against the nomos (→ Law). The law has been fulfilled, because Jesus is love, and has died for sinners Insofar, therefore, as Christians love one another they too fulfil the law, not in the sense that they attain any perfection, but that they are now living in God's new reality through the strengthening power of → forgiveness. agapē is a reflection of what is still to come (1 Cor. 13:9, 12, 13).

4. (a) In John, God's nature and activity are illustrated with particular clarity by his use of agapē. That partly arises from the fact that agapē is used here more frequently than in Paul in its absolute form – i.e. as a noun with no gen., or as a vb. with no object. Parallel ideas such as dikaiosynē (righteousness), charis (grace) and eleos (mercy) recede somewhat in favour of agapē. John can thus speak of pre-existent love in the same way that he speaks in Jn. 1:1 ff. of the pre-existent logos (→ Word; cf. Jn. 3:35; 10:17; 15:9; 17:23 ff.). God is essentially love (1 Jn. 4:8), and his purpose right from the beginning has been one of love. The love of the Father for the Son is therefore the archetype of all love. This fact is made visible in the sending and self-sacrifice of the Son (Jn. 3:16; 1 Jn. 3:1, 16). For men to "see" and "know" this love is to be saved. God's primary purpose for the world is his compassionate and forgiving love which asserts itself despite the world's inimical rejection of it. In God's agapē his → glory (doxa) is simultaneously revealed. Love's triumph is seen in the doxasthēnai of Jesus, i.e. his glorification: his death which here includes his return to the Father (Jn. 12:16, 23 ff.). The believer, taken up into this victory, receives zōē, life (cf. 1 Jn. 4:9; Jn. 3:36; 11:25 ff.).

(b) If Paul's word for describing the way men turn to God is pistis, John's is agapē. The relationship between Father and Son is one of love (Jn. 14:31). In this relationship of love believers are included (Jn. 14:21 ff.; 17:26; 15:9 f.). They are to love Father and Son with an equal love (Jn. 8:42; 14:21 ff.; 1 Jn. 4:16, 20). The continual oscillation between the subject and object of love in John shows that the Father, the Son, and the believers are all united in the one reality of divine love: the alternative to which is death (1 Jn. 3:14 ff.; 4:7 f.). The typical Johannine phrase menein en, remain in, can refer equally to Jesus or to love (Jn. 15:4 ff.; 1 Jn. 4:12 ff.).

(c) In John, mutual love is grounded even more clearly than in Paul in the love of God (Jn. 13:34; 1 Jn. 4:21). Love is a sign and a proof of faith (1 Jn. 3:10; 4:7 ff.). Love of one's brother derives from God's love; and without love for one's brother, there can be no relationship with God.

John, in turn, takes up the command to love (Jn. 13:34; 15:12, 17; 2 Jn. 5). To love is to keep the law (Jn. 14:23 f.).

5. (a) Finally, love found expression for itself in early Christian circles by way of the kiss of fellowship, which was a regular part of the worship of the congregation (e.g. Rom. 16:16 "with a holy kiss [en philēmati hagiō]"). In 1 Pet. 5:14 it is called the "kiss of love [en philēmati agapēs]"; but practically no details of this rite are known (→ phileō NT 3).

(b) agapē is also the word used for one of the early Christian ceremonies which we only know about by way of allusion. 1 Cor. 11 shows that the actual celebration of the Lord's Supper was linked with a normal meal. Later the "love feast" (agapē) became separated from the → Lord's Supper itself, and celebrated in its own right (cf. Jude 12; perhaps also 2 Pet. 2:13; Ign., Smy. 8:2; Clem.Alex., Paedogogus 2, 1; cf. Lampe, 8). The difference seems to be that whereas the centre both of a service of preaching and of the Lord's Supper was the joyous declaration of faith, the common meal had its central significance in celebrating and displaying the especial → fellowship which they shared in their agapē. It also seems certain that this service provided an opportunity for congregations to give practical expression to their love in generous social action (cf. Acts 6:1 ff.).

(c) Evidence that the new community based on agapē understood itself as the family of God is provided by the variety of names used for brothers and sisters in the early church (→ Brother, art. adelphos). W. Günther, H.-G. Link

φιλέω

φιλέω (phileō), be fond of, love; φίλος (philos), a relative, friend; φιλία (philia), friendship, love; καταφιλέω (kataphileō), to kiss; φίλημα (philēma), a kiss; φιλαδελφία (philadelphia), brotherly love; φιλανθρωπία (philanthrōpia), love for mankind, hospitality.

CL phileō is the regular word from Homer onwards for to show affection, love, hospitality, etc. It can also be used with less precision and colour to mean: be accustomed to, be in the habit of; and then, when joined with other vbs. to do something gladly, customarily, generally. It is also commonly used with more specific meanings. There is a very large number of words compounded from phil- e.g. philoxenia, hospitality (cf. Liddell-Scott, 1935–42). philos, attested in Mycenaean Gk., and originally meaning dear, expensive, valuable, became the ordinary expression for a friend or relative; philē similarly means a female friend. philia is a later abstraction meaning friendship, love, devotion, favour; philēma is a love token, a kiss.

OT In the LXX we are presented with a completely different picture. phileō occurs rarely, whereas the vb. agapaō, and the noun agapē (otherwise almost entirely unknown in Gk.) are everywhere to be found. It is not possible to say whether they are used according to set rules, for phileō (30 times), like agapaō (c. 263 times), generally translates Heb. 'āhēḇ (e.g. Gen. 27:4 ff.; 37:4[cf. 37:3]; Isa. 56:10, Prov. 8:17[cf. 8:21]). Whereas Heb. has a whole range of different words to express the contrary concept of the hate (but the LXX has only the one word miseō (→ Enemy, art. miseō), it has virtually only the one root form 'āhēḇ at its disposal for the range of feelings associated with love. Gk., on the other hand, has several roots and derived words to express the various nuances of love. philia (38 times), generally translating 'ahēḇ, 'ahªḇâh, is comparatively rare, though philos (c. 181 times), generally translating rēa', though often without Heb. equivalent, is more common in the LXX. As an alternative plēsion, neighbour, mainly used to indicate relatives or friends (c. 221 times, often for rēa'), and occasionally hetairos, friend (c. 27 times), are used (→ Brother arts. ho plēsion and hetairos).

NT In the NT the vb. phileō occurs in Matt. (5 times) and Jn. (13 times); elsewhere there are only individual instances (7 in all). The distinction from → agapaō is not strictly adhered to. The nouns philos or philē are used for friends, and also for people bound together in → faith; as an adjective philos is not found at all. philēma is a kiss, and in the Epistles a Christian form of greeting, the "holy kiss". The noun philia only appears in the NT in Jas. 4:4.

1. (a) A typical example for the original meaning of phileō can be seen in Matt. 6:5: the hypocrites love to pray at street corners. Matt. 23:6 and Lk. 20:46 are similar cases. The use of agapaō in Lk. 11:43, and Lk. 20:46 in a similar context, is an exception, showing how the difference in meaning is not always maintained. Matt. 10:37 is another typical example, love here deriving from family connections: "He who loves [ho philōn] father or mother more than me is not worthy of me; and he who loves [ho philōn] son or daughter more than me is not worthy of me." We have here, incidentally, a statement which has a theological importance in indicating the transition to a theological meaning of the word; for the phraseology, introducing the comparison, points implicitly to a love for Jesus, which is elsewhere described as agapē, the gift of God's rule. The starting-point of the statement, however, remains the natural love shared between relatives. But, clearly, when the → kingdom of God breaks in, even the usual family ties and links of friendship may be dissolved for the benefit of the new fellowship of the family of God (→ Brother, art. adelphos).

(b) Jn. characterizes love according to whether the → world is viewed as God's creation, or as the sphere of enmity towards God. Where the world is viewed as God's creation, natural creaturely love has its legitimate place. Thus Jn. 11:3, 36 speak of Jesus' bond of friendship with Lazarus. But Jn. also sees the kosmos as the sphere of darkness which opposes God. Viewed thus, love in or for the kosmos is the same as hatred for God's revelation (15:19; cf. Jas. 4:4). 1 Jn. 2:15 is directed against such people: "do not love the world, or anything in it," i.e. "do not love God-lessness." But since God loves the creation which hates him, in order to save it (3:16), the other imperative also holds: "He gave us this command: whoever loves God must love his brother too." Love for one's brothers as God's creations makes concrete one's love for the world, which is also the creation of God.

The scene with Peter in Jn. 21:15 ff. makes it clear that phileō and agapaō cannot always be neatly distinguished. Verses 15, 16 distinguish the agapaō in Jesus' mouth from the phileō in Peter's, but in v. 17 this distinction ceases. Nor is it possible to draw any particular exegetical consequences from this scene. Jn. 5:20 and 16:27 are the only places where phileō is predicated of God. Both times it is God the Father who is spoken of, since relationships between people become pictures of relationships within the divine being.

(c) There is a single, yet important, Pauline example of the use of phileō, in 1 Cor. 16:22. Love for the kyrios, → Lord, is the condition of salvation. The whole history of the word would have led one to expect agapaō. Again the impossibility of rigid distinctions is clear. As to content, clearly the meaning is that of agapē elsewhere. Tit. 3:15, too, can only be correctly understood when it is born in mind that through God's love in the revelation of the Son, human love understood as love in faith requires a new interpretation (cf. on this the varying translation of Prov. 3:11 in Heb. 12:6 [agapaō] and Rev. 3:19 [phileō]). For phileō, meaning to kiss (Mk. 14:14), see below 3, on philēma.

2. philos is also in the NT a friend to whom one is under a basic obligation (cf. Lk. 7:6; 11:5 f.; 14:10, 12; 15:6, 9, 29; 23:12; Jn. 11:11; Acts 10:24; 19:31; 27:3). Relatives (syngeneis) and friends are often mentioned alongside each other. But neither in Gk. nor in Jewish tradition can any firm distinction be upheld; and when philoi, friends, are sometimes mentioned, relatives are clearly often to be included. philos is also used, as in Lk. 16:9, for people linked by some inclination or relationship; Jesus here advises people to win friends for themselves by giving away their worldly wealth (→ Possessions, art. mamōnas). The same point is made when Pilate is threatened in Jn. 19:12 with losing his honorary title of "friend of Caesar" (philos tou kaisaros; Lat. amicus Caesaris). By way of contrast, philos can be used to express God's love for the godless. In Matt. 11:19 and Lk. 7:34 Jesus is called the "friend of sinners and tax-collectors." He loves them, though they are enemies, just as God loves the world which hates him. That is also what is meant when Jesus addressed his disciples as "friends" (Lk. 12:4; Jn. 15:14 f.). They come to him as sinners, and become his friends through his sacrificial love. (Jn. 15:13). So now, instead of the love and friendship they enjoyed while belonging to the world (Jas. 4:4), they belong to the new fellowship of the kingdom of God, or the family of God, in which they are brothers and friends of Jesus and children of the Father (Lk. 21:16; cf. also Jas. 2:23, where → Abraham because of his faith is called a philos theou). Brothers and sisters in faith can therefore be greeted as philoi (3 Jn. 15). For Jn. 3:29 philos tou nymphiou, "friend of the bridegroom", → Marriage, art. nymphē.

3. philēma is a kiss. For the vb. phileō and kataphileō are both used in the NT. The kiss was a common courtesy greeting amongst the Rabbis; and Judas' kiss was of this nature (Matt. 26:48 f.; Mk. 14:44 f.; Lk. 22:47). He addresses Jesus honorifically as Rabbi. Again, in the story of the woman who was a sinner (Lk. 7:36 ff.), the kiss was a sign of respect for Jesus. Whether at the same time there is a hint or reference to the Jewish kiss of farewell depends on the decisions one reaches in comparing this scene with the anointing in Bethany (Matt. 26:6 ff.; Mk. 14:3 ff.).

The kiss in the ancient world was both a friendly sign of greeting and an emotional token of farewell (cf. Lk. 15:20; Acts 20:37 where kataphileō is used). In the early Christian congregations it became a philēma hagion, a holy kiss. Those who have been incorporated into the fellowship of the love of God are hagioi (→ Holy, art. hagios) in being children of God, and can greet one another as such (Rom. 16:16; 1 Cor. 16:20; 2 Cor. 13:12; 1 Thess. 5:26; 1 Pet. 5:14 philēma agapēs, kiss of love).

W. Günther

4. The following compounds occur in the NT: philagathos, loving what is good (1 Tim. 1:8); philadelphia, brotherly love, love of a brother or sister (Rom. 12:10; 1 Thess. 4:9; Heb. 13:1; 1 Pet. 1:22; 2 Pet. 1:7); philadelphos, loving one's brother or sister (1 Pet. 3:8); philandros, loving one's husband (Tit. 2:4); philanthrōpia, love for mankind (Tit. 3:4), hospitality (Acts 28:2); philanthrōpōs, benevolently, kindly (Acts 27:3); philargyria, love of money, avarice (1 Tim. 6:10); philargyros, fond of money, avaricious (Lk. 16:14; 2 Tim. 3:2); philautos, loving oneself, selfish (2 Tim. 3:2); philēdonos, loving pleasure (2 Tim. 3:4); philotheos, loving God, devout, in a play on words with philēdonos (2 Tim. 3:4); philon(e)ikia, dispute (Lk. 22:24); philon(e)ikos, quarrelsome (1 Cor. 11:16); philoxenia, hospitality (Rom. 12:13; Heb. 13:2); philoxenos, hospitable (1 Tim. 3:2; Tit. 1:8; 1 Pet. 4:9); philoprōteuō, wish to be the first (3 Jn. 9); philosophia, philosophy (Col. 2:8); philosophos, philosopher (Acts 17:18); philostorgos, loving dearly (Rom. 12:10); philoteknos, loving one's children (Tit. 2:4); philotimeomai, consider as an honour, aspire (Rom. 15:20; 2 Cor. 5:9; 1 Thess. 4:11); philophronōs, in a friendly manner (Acts 28:7); philophrōn, well-disposed, friendly (1 Pet. 3:8 TR).

In addition there are the following names: Philadelph(e)ia, Philadelphia, the city in Lydia in Asia Minor mentioned in the sixth letter of Rev. (1:11; 3:7) and in the letter of Ignatius to the Philadelphians, founded by Attalus II Philadelphus (159–138 B.C.); Philēmon, Philemon, a Christian probably at Colossae whose runaway slave, Onesimus, was won for Christianity by Paul and was sent back to Philemon with the letter that bears his name urging clemency; Philētos, Philetus, who is mentioned with Hymenaeus (2 Tim. 2:17) as teaching that the resurrection is already past (v. 18); Philippēsios, Philippian (Phil. 4:15); Philippoi, Philippi, city of Macedonia, founded on the site of Crenides by Philip II of Macedon in 356, the first European city to hear Christian missionaries, Paul and Silas (Acts 16:12); it is also mentioned in Acts 20:6; Phil. 1:1; 1 Thess. 2:2; Philippos, Philip (lit. fond of horses, horse-lover); (i) Philip Herod I, son of Herod the Great and the younger Mariamne (Matt. 14:33; Mk. 6:17) whose wife left him for his half-brother, Herod Antipas, who beheaded John the Baptist; (ii) Philip Herod II, son of Herod the Great and Cleopatra of Jerusalem, the Tetrarch (Matt. 16:13; Mk. 8:27; Lk. 3:1); (iii) Philip the disciple and apostle (Matt. 10:3; Mk. 3:18; Lk. 6:14; Jn. 1:44–47, 49; 6:5, 7; 12:21 f.; 14:8 f.; Acts 1:13); (iv) Philip, one of the Seven and later the evangelist (Acts 6:5; 8:5–40; 21:8); Philologos, Philologus (lit. lover of learning), a recipient of greetings in Rom. 16:15, possibly the leader of a house church (cf. vv. 5, 10 f.). C. Brown

→ Anger, → Brother, → Command, → Gift, → Grace, → Hope, → Law, → Mercy, → Samaritan

(a). A. Barr, "Love in the Church: A Study of First Corinthians, Chapter 13", SJT 3, 1950, 416–25; K. Barth, "The Love of God", CD I, 2, 371–401; and "The Holy Spirit and Christian Love", CD IV, 2, 727–840; G. Bornkamm, Jesus of Nazareth, 1960, 109–17; and "The More Excellent Way (I Corinthians 13)", Early Christian Experience, 1969, 180–90; C. L. Bowen, "Love in the Fourth Gospel", JR 13, 1933, 39–49; R. Bultmann, Theology of the New Testament, I, 1952; II, 1955 (see index); and "To Love Your Neighbour", Scottish Periodical 1, 1947, 41–56; T. G. Bunch, Love: A Comprehensive Exposition of I Corinthians 13, 1952; W. G. Cole, Sex and Love in the Bible, 1960; M. C. D'Arcy, The Mind and Heart of Love, 1947⁴; J. D. M. Derrett, "The Parable of the Good Samaritan", Law in the New Testament, 1970, 208–27; J. Ferguson, Moral Values in the Ancient World, 1958; V. P. Furnish, The Love Command in the New Testament, 1969; J. Gaer, Love in the New Testament, 1952; A. E. Goodman, "ḥsḏ and twḏh in the Linguistic Tradition of the Psalter", in P. R. Ackroyd and B. Lindars, eds., Words and Meaning: Essays Presented to David Winton Thomas, 1968, 105–16; W. Harrelson, "The Idea of Agape in the New Testament", Journal of Religion, 31 1951, 169–82; J. Jeremias, The Parables of Jesus, 1963², 202 ff.; C. S. Lewis,

The Four Loves, 1960; W. Lillie, "The Christian Conception of Love", SJT 12, 1959, 226–42 (reprinted in Studies in New Testament Ethics, 1961, 163–81); U. Luck, philanthrōpia etc., TDNT IX 107–12; R. P. Martin, "A Suggested Exegesis of 1 Corinthians 13:13", ExpT 82, 1970–71, 119 f.; J. Moffatt, Love in the New Testament, 1929; H. Montefiore, "Thou Shalt Love Thy Neighbour as Thyself", NovT 5, 1962, 157–70; A. Nygren, Agape and Eros: Part I A Study of the Christian Idea of Love: Part II The History of the Christian Idea of Love, 1953²; G. Outka, Agape: An Ethical Analysis, Yale Publications in Religion 17, 1972; G. Quell and E. Stauffer, agapaō, etc., TDNT I 21–55; C. E. Raven, Jesus and the Gospel of Love, 1942²; C. H. Roberts, "AGAPE in the Invocation of Isis (P. Oxy xi 1380)", Journal of Egyptian Archaeology, 39, 1953, 114; and "The Use of AGAPE in P. Oxy 1380. A Reply", JTS New Series 19, 1968, 209 ff.; J. T. Sanders, "First Corinthians 13: Its Interpretation Since the First World War", Interpretation 20, 1966, 159–87; O. J. F. Seitz, "Love your Enemies", NTS 16, 1969–70, 39–54; N. H. Snaith, The Distinctive Ideas of the Old Testament, 1944, 94–142; C. Spicq, Agape in the New Testament, I–III, 1963–66; G. Stählin, phileō etc., TDNT IX 113–71; K. Stendahl, "Hate, Retaliation, and Love", HTR 55, 1962, 343–55; E. F. Sutcliffe, "Hatred at Qumran", Revue de Qumran 2, 1969–60, 345–55; B. B. Warfield, "The Terminology of Love in the New Testament", Princeton Theological Review 16, 1918, 1–45 and 153–203; V. Warnach, "Love", EBT II 518–42; D. D. Williams, The Spirit and Forms of Love, 1968. (b). G. Bornkamm, "Das Doppelgebot der Liebe", Neutestamentliche Studien für Rudolf Bultmann BZNW 21, 1954, 85–93; H. Braun, Spätjüdisch-häretischer und frühchristlicher Radikalismus, I–II, BHTh 24, 1957; F. Buck, Die Liebe Gottes beim Propheten Osee, 1953; J. Coppens, "La doctrine biblique sur l'amour de Dieu et du prochain", Ephemerides Theologicae Lovanienses 11, 1964, 252–99; F. X. Durwell, La charité selon les Synoptiques et les Épîtres de S. Paul, 1955; F. Frerichs, "Liebe", EKL II 1096 ff.; E. Fuchs, "Was heisst: 'Du sollst deinen Nächsten lieben wie dich selbst'?", Zur Frage nach dem historischen Jesus: Gesammelte Aufsätze, II, 1965², 1 ff.; H. Gollwitzer, Das Gleichnis vom barmherzigen Samariter, BSt 34, 1062; H. Greeven, plēsion, TDNT VI 316 ff.; G. Harbsmeier, Das Hohelied der Liebe 1952; E. Jenni, 'ahaḇ THAT I 60–73; R. Joly, Le Vocabulaire chretien de l'Amour, est-il Originel? Philein et Agapan dans le Grec Antique, 1968; R. Kiefer, " 'Afin que je sois brulé' ou bien 'Afin que j'en tire orgueil'? (I Cor. xiii 3)", NTS 22, 1975–76, 95 ff.; N. Lohfink, "Auslegung deuteronomistischer Texte II. Ein Kommentar zum Hauptgebot des Dekalogs (Dtn. 6, 4–25)", Bibel und Leben 5, 1964, 84 ff.; O. Loretz, "Zum Problem des Eros im Hohenlied", BZ 8, 1964, 191–216; W. Lütgert, Die Liebe im Neuen Testament, 1905; and Ethik der Liebe 1938; O. Michel, "Das Gebot der Nächstenliebe in der Verkündigung Jesu", Die soziale, Entscheidung, 1947, 53–101; L. Malevez, "Amour païen, amour chrétien", Nouvelle Revue Théologique 69, 1937, 944–68; E. Neuhäusler, Anspruch und Gegenwart Gottes, 1962, 114 ff.; A. Nissen, Gott und der Nächste im antiken Judentum: Untersuchungen zum Doppelgebot der Liebe, WUNT 15, 1974; T. Ohm, W. Zimmerli, N. A. Dahl and R. Mehl, "Liebe", *RGG*³ IV 361 ff.; M. Paeslack, "Zur Bedeutungsgeschichte der Wörter philein, philia, philos in der LXX und im Neuen Testament unter Berücksichtigung ihrer Beziehungen zu agapan, agapē, agapētos", ThV 5, 1953–54, 51–142; W. Pesch, "Das Liebesgebot in der Verkündigung Jesu", BuK 9, 1964, 129 ff.; H. Preisker, Die urchristliche Botschaft von der Liebe Gottes im Lichte der vergleichenden Religionsgeschichte, 1930; B. Reicke, "Neuzeitliche und neutestamentliche Auffassung von Liebe und Ehe", NovT 1, 1956, 21–34; H. Riesenfeld, "Étude bibliographique sur la Notion biblique d'Agape", Coniectanea Neotestamentica 5, 1941, 1–27; "Note bibliographique sur I Cor. XIII", Nuntius 6, 1952, 47 f.; and "La Voie de Charité. Note sur I Cor. 12. 31" StTh 1, 1947, 146–57; K. Romaniuk, L'Amour du Père et du Fils dans la Sotériologie de Saint Paul, 1961; R. Sanders, Furcht und Liebe im palästinischen Judentum, BWANT IV, 16, 1935; O. Schilling, "Die alttestamentliche Auffassung von Gerechtigkeit und Liebe", Wort des Lebens (Festschrift M. Meinertz), 1951, 9–27; H. Schlier, "Uber die Liebe: 1 Kor. 13", Die Zeit der Kirche, 1956, 186–92; and "Glauben, Erknnen, Lieben nach dem Johannesevangelium", Besinnung auf das Neue Testament, 1964, 279–93; H. Scholz, Eros und Caritas, 1929; H. Schürmann, "Eschatologie und Liebesdienst in der Verkündigung Jesu", in K. Schubert, ed., Vom Messias zum Christus, 1964, 203 ff.; W. C. van Unnik, "Die Motivierung der Feindesliebe in Lk. 6, 32–35", NovT 8, 1966, 284 ff.; E. Walter, Glaube, Hoffnung und Liebe im Neuen Testament, 1940; and Wesen und Macht der Liebe, 1955; V. Warnach, Agape. Die Liebe als Grundmotiv der neutestamentlichen Theologie, 1951.

M

Magic, Sorcery, Magi

μαγεία

περίεργος (periergos), meddlesome, curious, belonging to magic; μαγεία (mageia), magic; μαγεύω (mageuō), practise magic; μάγος (magos), magus, magician; φαρμακεία (pharmakeia), magic, sorcery; φαρμακεύς (pharmakeus), mixer of potions, magician; φάρμακον (pharmakon), poison, magic potion, charm, medicine, remedy, drug; φάρμακος (pharmakos), poisoner, magician; γόης (goēs), sorcerer, juggler; πύθων (pythōn), the Python, spirit of divination; βασκαίνω (baskainō), bewitch; φάντασμα (phantasma), apparition, ghost.

CL 1. Evidence of magic dating from palaeolithic culture has been found in cave art depicting animals stuck with darts with a view to causing the same thing to happen in a future hunt, and in the covering of corpses with red pigment (suggesting blood, the life-substance) in order to restore them to life. The dividing line between magic and religion is often indistinct. Sir James Frazer suggested that religion was characterized by conciliation of superhuman powers, whereas magic is concerned with the control by man of the forces of nature (The Golden Bough, abridged edition 1957, I, 67 ff.). Even where magic deals with spirits as personal agents, it treats them as inanimate in the sense that they can be constrained and forced in an impersonal way rather than conciliating or propitiating them as in a religion. The distinction is often drawn between white and black magic. The former is held to be benevolent in intention (e.g. rain making), whereas the latter is malevolent causing loss of health, property, destruction and death. Magic may co-exist alongside a primitive knowledge of the laws of the natural world; it is invoked to deal with what cannot be controlled by known natural means.

2. Common features of magic are: (i) the spell, the utterance of words according to a set formula, without which control over the desired power is impossible; (ii) the rite, or set of actions designed to convey the spell to the object concerned, involving imitation of the desired action or the use of similar substances; and (iii) the condition of the performer who must not breach any of the relevant taboos and must be in the requisite emotional state to perform the prescribed actions.

3. Magic is known in Homer, but is doubtless much older. In Od. 19, 457 an incantation can stop the flow of blood from the wounded Odysseus. Circe has potions, salves and a magic wand, and is able to teach Odysseus to summon the shades from the nether world. Magic abounds in Gk. mythology. Among those accredited with supernatural powers were the Telchines, smiths who lived on the island of Rhodes who had the evil eye and who bear a resemblance to the dwarfs and gnomes of north European mythology, the Curetes of Crete who protected the infant Zeus, and the Idaean Dactyls who were likewise dwarfs and who were masters of medicine and music. The most renowned enchantress of antiquity was Medea who also had the evil eye and was the prototype of the jilted witch of later literature (OCD, 637). Both Gk. and Lat. poets and dramatists give pictures of magic and witchcraft. The growth in knowledge and progress of Gk. civilization led to the suppression of magic. Nevertheless, as secularization increased in the higher social levels during the fourth cent. B.C., there was a renewed outburst of interest in magic in the lower levels.

4. Numerous forms of magic are attested in the Graeco-Roman world. To bring about the death of a person, one could make an image of that person and destroy it or pierce it. Plato believed that men could not be prevented from believing in such homoeopathic magic, or incantations and magic knots, and therefore urged punishment by law including the death penalty (Leg. 933b; cf. also Theocritus 2; Virgil, Eclogues 8; Ovid, Heroides 6, 91 for such practices). Contagious magic, destroying something belonging to the victim, is exemplified in Theocritus 2, 53 ff. and Virgil, Aeneid 4, 494 ff. The attempt to transfer by magic a disease from a person to an animal is described by the Elder Pliny in his account of whispering into the ear of an ass, "A scorpion has stung me" (Naturalis Historia 28, 155). Belief in the apotropaic efficacy of rings, crowns and amulets and numerous medical charms was widespread. Evocation of the spirits of the dead occurs as early as Homer, Od. 11, and necromancers were a recognized class of magician.

OT 1. The employment of magic not only by men but also by gods is well attested in Sumero-Akkadian and Canaanite religious literature. Behind it lies the belief that no single power has ultimate control over the universe. In order to secure the desired stability and well-being of the world, the gods must also resort to the powers which they themselves do not possess. In the Babylonian Creation Epic (Enûma Eliš) the hero of the younger gods, Ea-Enki is called the Lord of Incantation and is regarded as the god of magic par excellence. In his struggle against the primeval gods Tiamat and Apsu, Ea-Enki killed the latter with the aid of a spell (Tablet I, 60–70; ANET 61; A. Heidel, The Babylonian Genesis, [1951²] 1963, 20; cf. H. Ringgren, Religions of the Ancient Near East, 1973, 69 ff.). Ea's son, Marduk, employed magic in his fight against the monsters created by Tiamat to avenge Apsu, holding a red talisman between his lips (Tablet IV, 61; ANET, 66; A. Heidel, op. cit., 39). Tiamat also recited a charm and kept casting a spell (Tables IV, 91; ANET, 67; A. Heidel, op. cit., 40). But Marduk, the better magician, proved victorious. Compared with this account of creation, the absence of magic in the Genesis creation narratives is all the more striking.

In the Akkadian Myth of Zu the vitality of the gods appears to depend on a talisman carried by their chief (ANET, 111 ff.). The bird-god Zu stole the Tablets of Destinies and usurped the authority of the gods until vanquished by one of the benign deities. The gods themselves wear amulets to protect themselves and ensure victory. Similarly, in the Descent of Ishtar to the Nether World (ANET, 106–9) Ishtar wore charms.

2. In the case of Canaanite religion the use of magic in healing is illustrated by the Legend of King Keret who is healed by the magic of El (ANET, 148), and in fertility by the story of how the goddess Anath avenged the death of her brother at the hands of Mot by slaying Mot, the god of sterility, and scattering his ashes (ANET 140). However, human beings also were regarded as being endowed with magical powers and the capacity to tell omens (ANET, 153).

3. For evidence of magic in Egypt see ANET, 325 ff.; K. Preisendanz, ed., Papyri Graecae Magicae, I-III, 1928–42; A. H. Gardiner, ERE VIII 262–69. Magic was under the protection of the leading god, Thoth and Isis, and was learned in the temple schools. It was a particular province of the priests. The charms included charms against snakes.

4. The reality of occult powers is recognized in the OT, but the Israelites were consistently forbidden to become embroiled in any form of magic. The law of Deut. 18:10–14 observes the various practices of the surrounding peoples, but prohibits them categorically: "There shall not be found among you any one who burns his son or his daughter as an offering, any one who practises divination, a soothsayer, or an augur, or a sorcerer, or a charmer, or a medium, or a wizard, or a necromancer. For whoever does these things is an abomination to the Lord; and because of these abominable practices the Lord your God is driving them out before you. You shall be blameless before the Lord your God. For these nations, which you are about to dispossess, give heed to soothsayers and to diviners; but as for you, the Lord your God has not allowed you to do so." The key terms here are: qōsēm qᵉsāmîm (Heb.), manteuomenos manteian (Gk.), one who practises divination (cf. Num. 22:7; 23:23; Jos. 13:22; 1 Sam. 6:2; 15:23; 28:8; 2 Ki. 17:17; Isa. 3:2; 44:25; Jer. 14:14; Ezek. 13:6, 9, 23; 21:26 ff.; Mic. 3:6 f., 11; Zech. 10:2); mᵉʿônēn (Heb.), klēdonizomenos (Gk.), soothsayer (the Heb. means one who causes to appear, raises spirits, practises soothsaying; cf. Lev. 19:26; Jdg. 9:37; 2 Ki. 21:6; Isa. 2:6; 57:3; Jer. 27:9; Mic. 5:11; 2 Chron. 33:6); mᵉnaḥēš (Heb.), oiōnizomenos (Gk.), an augur, one who looks for an omen (cf. Gen. 44:5, 15; Lev. 19:26; 2 Ki. 17:17; 21:6; 2 Chron. 33:6; with Gen. 30:27; Num. 23:23; 24:1; 1 Ki. 20:33); mᵉkaššēp (Heb.), pharmakos (Gk.), sorcerer (cf. Exod. 7:11; 22:17; Mal. 3:5; Dan. 2:2; 2 Chron. 33:6; with 2 Ki. 9:22; Isa. 47:9, 12; Mic. 5:11; Nah. 3:4); ḥōbēr ḥābēr (Heb.), epaeidōn epaidēn (Gk.), a charmer, one who binds spells (cf. Ps. 58:6; Isa. 47:9, 12); šōʾēl ʾôḇ (Heb.), engastrimythos (Gk.), a medium (cf. Lev. 19:31; 20:6, 27; 1 Sam. 28:3, 7 f., 9; 2 Ki. 21:6; 23:24; 1 Chron. 10:13; 2 Chron. 33:6; Isa. 8:19; 19:3; 29:4); yiddʿônî (Heb.), teratoskopos (Gk.), wizard, familiar spirit, soothsayer (Lev. 19:31; 20:6, 27; 1 Sam. 28:3, 9; 2 Ki. 21:6; 23:24; Isa. 8:19; 19:3; 2 Chron. 33:6); dōrēš ʾel hammēṯîm (Heb.), eperōtōn tous nekrous (Gk.), necromancer, lit. one who enquires of the dead (dāraš is the normal Heb. vb. for enquire; it is used in connection with spirits and deities in Isa. 8:19; 11:10; 19:3; an instance of necromancy is given in the story of Saul's visit to the medium [Heb. ʾēšeṯ baʿᵃlaṯ-ʾôḇ; Gk. gynē engastrimythos, 1 Sam. 28:7] at Endor). The story of the raising of the spirit of Samuel by the medium at Endor casts no doubt on the reality of what happened, but clearly condemns the venture.

A number of other terms are found elsewhere in the OT. The Heb. vb. lāḥaš means to whisper and is used in connection with charms (cf. the piel participle form mᵉlaḥᵃšîm in Ps. 58:6 with 2 Sam. 12:19; Ps. 41:8). The noun laḥaš means whispering, serpent-charming, "charms" (RSV, Isa. 3:3; cf. Jer. 8:17; Eccl. 10:11). The Gk. word in Isa. 3:3 is akroatēs. The expert in charms figures among those who were currently held in esteem in Israel and who held sway over the people in Isaiah's day; in the name of the Lord the prophet announced their removal. The same applies to the ḥ^{a}ḵam ḥ^{a}rāšîm, "the skilful magician" which is only found in Isa. 3:3. The LXX removes the magical element from both these terms by rendering them sophon architektona kai syneton akroatēn ("skilful architect and intelligent scholar"). But the magical element in ḥereš can be seen in Aramaic and Syriac parallels, and may be traced back to Ugaritic as an old West Semitic word (cf. I. Mendelsohn, "Magic", IDB III 225). Isa. 47:13 mentions hōḇrê šāmayim (LXX astrologoi tou ouranou) "those who divide the heavens" and haḥozîm bakkôḵāḇîm (LXX hoi horōntes tous asteras) "those who gaze at the stars", a scornful reference to the influence of Babylonian astrology. Astrology was also practised in Egypt, but there are relatively few references to it in the OT (cf. Jer. 10:2 with Dan. 2:27; 4:7 [4:4]; 5:7, 11). The ḥarṭōm (plur. ḥarṭummîm) were soothsayer priests. Egyptian ones are mentioned in Gen. 41:8, 24 (LXX exēgētēs; → Explain, art. exēgeomai); Exod. 7:11, 22; 8:3, 14 f.; 9:11 (the LXX uses pharmakos for ḥarṭōm, though it also uses the word for other Heb. words). Babylonian ones are mentioned in Dan. 1:20; 2:2. Dan. 1:20 and 2:20 also mention 'aššāpîm, conjurors, enchanters who were likewise summoned to retell and interpret the → dreams of Nebuchadnezzar. But the task proved beyond them, and it was Daniel who was able to declare the king's dreams. Isa. 19:3 contains the unique word 'iṭṭîm, in the plur., for the shades or ghosts of a dead person. I. Mendelsohn maintains that the various forms of magic not mentioned in the law of Deut. 18:10 f. represent Egyptian and Babylonian practice and that ḥ^{a}rāšîm and kiššēp and its cognates (Exod. 7:11; 22:17; Deut. 18:10; Mal. 5:5; Dan. 2:2; 2 Chron. 33:6) were the Heb. generic names for magic in all its aspects (IDB III 224 f.; cf. Exod. 22:18; 2 Ki. 9:22; Nah. 3:4).

The practice of sorcery is mentioned in the Code of Hammurabi who belonged to the Old Babylonian Amorite Dynasty and who ruled from 1728 to 1686 B.C., though the copy of the Code preserved on a stele is sometime later. Paragraph 2 of the Code specified the death penalty for those guilty of sorcery and equally those who make false accusations of sorcery (ANET, 166). The test in both cases was to cast the person accused into the Euphrates. If he survived it was to be taken as a divine vindication of innocence. The Middle Assyrian laws preserved on clay tablets also laid down the death penalty for those guilty of making magical preparations (§47; cf. ANET, 184). The king himself was to investigate cases and false accusations. The OT saw magic as a potential rival to the worship of Yahweh and a threat to the well-being of the people. It was forbidden by law and those who practised it were to be put to death (Exod. 22:18 [MT 22:17]; Lev. 19:26, 31; 20:6, 27; cf. Mic. 5:12). As the passage already quoted from Deut. 18:10–14 shows, magical practices were ranked with human sacrifice as evil and an abomination to the Lord (cf. also 2 Ki. 17:17; 2 Chron. 33:6). It was denounced by the prophets as lies and deception (Isa. 44:25; 57:3; Jer. 27:9 f.; Ezek. 22:28; Zech. 10:2; Mal. 3:5). Jezebel was condemned as a sorceress (2 Ki. 9:22), and Manasseh's apostate practices included various forms of magic, soothsaying and human sacrifice (2 Ki. 21:3–6). His grandson Josiah, however, "put away the mediums and the wizards and the teraphim and the idols and all the abominations that were seen in the land of Judah and Jerusalem, that he might establish the words of the law which were written in the book that Hilkiah the priest found in the house of the Lord" (2 Ki. 23:24).

6. The most significant evidence of magic in the Hellenistic world is to be found in the papyri from Egypt which date from the 3rd and 4th cents. A.D. The most important of these have been edited by Karl Preisendanz (see bibliography; see also table of abbreviations for other papyri). Early important references to magic include the Apology of Apuleius, written in the middle of the 2nd cent. A.D., De Mysteriis by Iamblichus (early 4th cent. A.D.), the Elder Pliny (died A.D. 79), Naturalis Historia, which contains numerous magical recipes and exorcisms, and the writings of Lucian of Samosata (born c. A.D. 120). In addition numerous cursing tablets, inscriptions often on thin sheets of lead known as tabellae defixionum, amulets, and ostraca have been found, The papyri often refer to laurel wreaths, earthen altars, white garments, all of which have naturally perished, and also to tables, discs, dishes, lamps and stands some of which have survived. For a survey of data, literature and practices see J. M. Hull, Hellenistic Magic and the Synoptic Tradition, SBT Second Series 28, 1974, 5–44. Magic in the Hellenistic world was a fusion of the Gk. spirit with Egyptian influences. Among them were the belief that magic words gained additional power if written on a gem; belief in monstrous beings, half animal and half human; the belief that whilst magic allows man to control the gods, it is at the same time a gift and revelation of the gods to men; and such figures as Seth, Thoth and Osiris. On the other hand, there was also a Persian influence which included the idea of magic as a defence against evil spirits rather than as a means of manipulating the high gods. Magical practices were also rife in Judaism. Justin Martyr testifies to the use of the → name of God in exorcism (Dial. 85, 3), and the use of Ia, Iaō (and numerous variants), Sabaoth, Adonai and Yahweh is common in the magical papyri. Apart from the divine names, that of → Moses appears alongside that of Thoth and Zoroaster, and → Solomon was highly important. The Heb. language itself, as a sacred language, had a special use. Angels and demons figured particularly in Jewish magic.

The normal magical ceremony consisted of two parts: the invocation (klēsis or epiklēsis) and the ritual (praxis). Hull (op. cit., 42 f.) lists six features of the invocation: (i) The invocation proper beginning "I call upon you, I summon you, come to me, help me . . . "; (ii) The utterance of the name of the god (though this is often omitted from the papyri to guard the secret or allow the magician to insert the name of his choice); (iii) Epithets describing the god; (iv) Descriptions of the god to increase his benevolence; (v) Remembrances of similar acts performed by the god, sometimes using substances associated with the act; (vi) The request itself. The subsequent ritual could take various forms involving the use of amulets, sacrifices, the mixing of special substances and potions, libations, and secret writing. Elaborate ceremonies could take several days. C. Brown

NT Magic is the technique of manipulating supernatural or supernormal forces to attain one's own ends. It may be a means of bending spirits of various grades to carry out one's wishes, or of developing psychic powers so that one can project an inner force on to some person or situation. There have always been fake magicians, or conjurers in the modern sense of the word, but even the English word "conjurer" up to the time of Shakespeare had the magical sense of one who bound spirits or people by invocation. In the light of Acts 19:18, 19 we may assume that in NT times this was the only sort of magic that interested people. The books that were burnt were books of perierga. The word has the root idea of being concerned with other people's business, and is translated → "busybodies" in 1 Tim. 5:13, but in Acts 19:18, 19 it has the specific sense of interfering with other people through magical arts. Thus, while magicians may well have helped out their claims by trickery, they were primarily concerned with the realm of the psychic and the occult.

1. The following magicians are named in the NT: (a) Simon, commonly referred to as Simon Magus (Acts 8:19–24). He practised spectacular magic in Samaria, but professed conversion in response to Philip's preaching. He was astounded by the manifestations of the Holy Spirit that followed the laying on of hands by Peter and John, and, being still under the influence of his old ideas, he assumed that the apostles had some secret technique that he might use as a Christian magician. For this he was roundly rebuked by Peter.

Early Christian writers speak of him as a heretic of gnostic type, and founder of the Simonians (e.g. Justin, Apol. I, 26; Irenaeus, Haer. 1, 16). The Acts of Peter 4, 6, 9, 11–18, 23, 31 describe among other things his levitation in flight over Rome, and his being brought down through the prayers of Peter (cf. Henn. Schn. II 282 ff., 286, 292, 293–301, 306, 314 f.; cf. also the Acts of Paul, Henn.Schn. II 374).

(b) Bar-Jesus, or Elymas (Acts 13:4–12). A magician on Cyprus in the employ of Sergius Paulus, the proconsul. He resisted Paul and Barnabas, but was struck down with temporary blindness. In Acts 13:8 the name Elymas is not intended as a translation of Bar-Jesus, but as an equivalent of magician (cf. RSV), probably connected with the Arabic 'alîm, wise, magician. (On his name see Arndt, 253, 758 f.; F. F. Bruce, The Acts of the Apostles, 1952², 256 f.; E. Haenchen, The Acts of the Apostles, 1971, 398 f.)

(c) Jannes and Jambres are named in 2 Tim. 3:8 as two of the Egyptian magicians who opposed Moses. They are not named in Exodus, but in one form of another they occur in Jewish writings (cf. Schürer III 402 ff.; Arndt, 368). Thus the Babylonian Talmud writes of Yohane and Mamre (Menahoth 85a). Some Lat. and Gk. MSS have Mambres in 2 Tim. 3:8. Pliny speaks of Jannes and → Moses as magicians in Pharaoh's court (Nat.Hist. 30, 1 11).

2. The following descriptive words are found in the NT.

(a) perierga, "magic arts" (Acts 19:19 RSV). Here the reference is to the voluntary burning of books by those who had previously practised magic arts at Ephesus. The act is seen as testimony to the growth and power of the word of the Lord (19:20) especially as the value of the books was put at fifty thousand pieces of silver. On this word in other contexts → Busybody.

(b) magos, magus, magician; mageia, magic; mageuō, practise magic. According to Herodotus (1, 101; cf. 1, 132), the Magians were originally Medians who became priests under the Persian empire. Like the Chaldeans of Dan. 1:4 and 2:2 ff., they merged their racial identity in their profession, and their name was applied to any practitioner such as Bar-Jesus (Acts 13:6, 8; see above 1 (b)). They are referred to in Josephus, Ant. 10, 216; 20, 142. The term is used of the Magi who came from the East at the birth of Jesus (Matt. 2:1–16).

D. Hill regards the account of the visit of the Magi as a piece of haggadic poetry (The Gospel of Matthew, 1972, 82 f.). He takes the star not as a literal star, but as a messianic interpretation of Num. 24:17: "a star shall come forth [anatelei astron] out of Jacob, and a sceptre shall rise out of Israel." In the OT this passage forms part of an oracle of Balaam to Balak, king of Moab, who attempted to bar the way of the people of Israel as they journeyed from Egypt. The messianic interpretation is attested in the Qumran literature (CD 7:19 f.; 1QM 11:6; 1QSb 5:27; 4Qtest 12 f.) and in the Pseudepigrapha (Test.Lev. 18:3 f.; Test. Jud. 24:1). It was also applied to Bar Kokhba whose name means "Son of a Star" (→ Israel OT 2 (c); → Jesus Christ, art. christos OT 5), and the text appears to underlie a Christian testimonium (cf. Rev. 22:16; 2 Pet. 1:19; Justin, Dial. 106, 4; 126, 1; Irenaeus, Haer. 3, 9, 2). The LXX version of Num. 24:7 already bears traces of messianic interpretation. The difficult Heb. text ("Water shall flow from his buckets") is replaced by "A man shall come forth from his seed." This makes it possible to refer the next verse ("God brings him out of Egypt") to the messiah rather than to Israel. A midrashic interpretation of the visit of the magi is also offered by M. D. Goulder who sees various other motifs such as the coming of the Gentiles, the gifts and the name of Joseph as contributing to the story (Midrash and Lection in Matthew, 1974, 236 ff.).

On the other hand, the story has usually been taken to refer to an actual celestial phenomenon. Kepler suggested that the star was a conjunction of Jupiter and Saturn in the constellation Pisces in 7 B.C. For a discussion of views concerning the star see B. Ramm, The Christian View of Science and Scripture, 1955, 112–18; H. Montefiore, Josephus and the New Testament, 1962, 8–14; → also Sun, Moon, Stars for the theological significance of heavenly bodies. The magi were clearly not crude practitioners of the occult arts, nor were they ordinary astrologers. They believed that God showed signs in heaven and that a certain heavenly body, whether planet, star, comet, or supernova, indicated from its appearance and position that God had fulfilled the royal promise, of which they had doubtless heard from Jews in the East (cf. E. Stauffer, Jesus and His Story, 1960, 36 ff.).

The noun mageia and the vb. mageuō are found in Acts 8:11 and 9 respectively of the magic of Simon Magus (see above 1 (a)).

(c) pharmakos, magician (Rev. 22:15); pharmakeus, mixer of potions, magician (Rev. 21:8); pharmakeia, magic, sorcery (Gal. 5:20; Rev. 9:21; 18:23). The basic word pharmakon does not occur in the NT, but its meaning of medicine, magic potion, poison gives the underlying idea of the words. Potions include poisons, but there has always been a magical tradition of herbs gathered and prepared for spells, and also for encouraging the presence of spirits at magical ceremonies (cf. possibly the final sentence of Ezek. 8:17: "They put the branch to their nose"). Sorcery is classed among the works of the → flesh in Gal. 5:20.

(d) goēs, sorcerer, juggler, occurs only in 2 Tim. 3:13. In cl. Gk. it may mean a magician, probably from the root seen in goaō, wail. A wizard might chant his spells. In 2 Tim. 3:13 magicians may be the correct translation in view of Jannes and Jambres in v. 8 (see above 1 (c)). Cl. Gk. also knows the meaning of imposter, since spellbinders could make false claims for their powers, and RSV prefers this translation in 2 Tim. 3:13 in the light of the closing words of the verse.

(e) The word pythōn is connected with the Delphic oracle, Delphi being the place where Apollo slew the mighty serpent Python that guarded the oracle (Strabo, 9, 3, 12). Later on pythōn came to designate a spirit of divination and also a ventriloquist who was thought to have such a spirit inside his or her belly. In Acts 16:16 a girl at Philippi had a Python spirit (pneuma pythōna), the two words being in apposition. She probably had second sight fostered by a possessing spirit. Such second sight was characteristic of the priestesses of the Delphic oracle. The spirit in the girl was forced to admit the truth of the gospel, just as other spirits confessed Jesus Christ during his earthly ministry (e.g. Mk. 1:24; Lk. 4:34; Matt. 8:29), but neither Jesus nor Paul accepted testimony from this source, and they cast out the spirits. (On the term pythōn see further Arndt, 736; F. F. Bruce, op. cit., 315; E. Haenchen, op. cit., 495; W. Foerster, pythōn, TDNT VI 917–20.)

(f) baskainō is possibly related to Eng. fascinate via the Latin (cf. fascino, bewitch, charm). The meaning is to cast a spell by what is called the evil eye. Paul uses the word of the deceived Galatians in Gal. 3:1 ("Who has bewitched you . . . ?"). The effect of the spell, if the evil eye is detected at the time, could be averted by spitting, and some hold that this was in Paul's mind in his use of ekptyō in Gal. 4:14 (lit., spit out; RSV "despise").

3. The heresy in Col. 2. Whatever heresy Paul has in mind in this chapter, much of what he says is applicable to practitioners of the occult. Paul's theme is the absolute supremacy and sufficiency of Christ. If the Christian is linked to him, he shares in his supremacy over the spirit world, good and bad, and, to say the least, he is foolish to think he can gain more power through intermediate spirit beings. Thus vv. 8 and 20 speak of the Christian's deliverance from the elemental spirits of the universe, according to the probable translation of ta stoicheia tou kosmou. In v. 15 there is the conquest of principalities and powers (cf. Eph. 6:12) and in v. 18 the worship (service) of angels, and also induced visions. Finally the strange vs. 21–23 could describe the rigorous ritual of the magician to produce and safeguard his contacts with the spirits (cf. self-abasement, v. 18).

4. Mediumship and spiritualism. Mediumship is of a different order from manipulative magic and sorcery, but, inasmuch as it is an attempt to communicate with the departed, there is no relaxation in the NT of the OT ban (e.g. Lev. 19:31; Deut. 18:10, 11; 1 Chr. 10:13, 14; Isa. 8:19, 20). The argument is not simply from silence but from significant silence. Thus, when Paul speaks of the departed, he assures the Christians that they will meet their loved ones again, inasmuch as they are both "in Christ". He does not suggest that Christian mediums can put the bereaved in touch with those who have passed on, and thus give assurance that they have not perished (1 Thess. 4:13–18; 1 Cor. 15:17–19), whereas many spiritualists assert that NT → prophets were mediums.

The NT shows that God may allow a departed spirit to return for purposes of his own. → Moses and → Elijah returned on the Mount of Transfiguration to reassert the testimony of the law and the prophets to the sacrifice of Christ on the cross (Matt. 17:3; Mk. 9:4; Lk. 9:30 f.). There are two other references to spirits or ghosts. When Jesus walked on the water, the disciples thought they were seeing a phantasma (Matt. 14:26; Mk. 6:49). The word is a general one to describe an apparition. The more important reference is Lk. 24:37–41, where Jesus appeared to his disciples after his → resurrection. Some thought he was a pneuma, a → spirit or ghost. Jesus did not deny the existence of ghosts, but showed that his resurrection body was of a different order altogether from a spirit form. This is further testimony to the difference between his resurrection and his spiritual survival.

J. Stafford Wright

5. In Hellenistic Magic and the Synoptic Tradition, SBT Second Series 28, 1974, J. M. Hull provides a survey of magical ideas and practices in the Hellenistic world. He then examines the question whether Jesus had anything in common with this background in the light of traditions in the early centuries that Jesus was a magician (cf. the third-century gnostic Pistis Sophia ch. 102, §§ 255, 258; ch. 130, §§ 332–35; Acts of Pilate 2:1; Clementine Recognitions 1, 42; Act.Thom. 20; Act. Paul 15; Pseudo-Clementines, Homily 7, 9; Origen, Contra Celsum 1, 38 and 60; Tertullian, On Idolatry 9; the Koran 5, 113). The author sees some affinities between Mk.'s presentation of Jesus' healing work and the magical beliefs of the surrounding world. This was a decisive factor in the way Jesus appears in Mk. as a liberator from the powers of evil. Similarly in Lk. and Acts the greater power of Christ is stressed. Matthew, on the other hand, sought to avoid giving the impression of any connection between Jesus and magic. However, Hull does not think that Jesus thought of himself as a magician. A difficulty attending the thesis that Mk. and other NT writers thought of Jesus as a "Master-Magician" is the presumption that the → miracles of Jesus were works of magic. The evidence for magical practices in the gospels is slim. Jesus used saliva in healing the deaf-mute in Mk. 7:32 ff. and the blind man in Mk. 8:23. The word ephphatha which represents 'eṯpattaḥ or the contracted 'eppattaḥ is not a meaningless word like abracadabra, and Mk. himself provides a translation which is contrary to magical practice. It is derived from the vb. p^{e}ṯaḥ and means "be opened" or "be released" (cf. SB II 17 f. for its use in connection with blindness). The idea is that of the whole person being opened. V. Taylor compares it to "verbal encouragement" as in modern psychotherapy (The Gospel according to St. Mark, 1952, 354; cf. E. R. Micklem, Miracles and the New Psychology, 1922, 119). But C. E. B. Cranfield prefers to see it as "the command that shatters the fetters by which Satan has held his victim bound" (The Gospel according to Saint Mark, 1959, 252). The accounts of the healing of the woman with the issue of blood (Matt. 9:20 ff.; Mk. 5:25–34; Lk. 9:34–8) do not significantly differ in any way which demonstrates that any one of the evangelists is more interested in magic than the others. The woman herself has a faith which might seem to border upon superstition, in that she believed that she would be healed if only she could touch the clothes of Jesus. But this must be seen against the background that her unclean condition prevented her from coming openly to him. All three evangelists avoid any support for connecting the healing with magic in giving Jesus' reply, "Your faith has saved you [hē pistis sou sesōken se]." Whereas magicians used names in connection with spells, the way that the → name of Jesus is used in healing and casting out evil spirits stands out in marked contrast. Neither Jesus nor the apostles used secret rituals or esoteric signs to gain control over supernatural powers. Still less is there any trace of trying to coerce a reluctant God to further one's own ends. Although the imputation was made that Jesus cast out demons in the name of Beelzebul, the self-contradictory nature of the charge is at once evident in the light of the exorcisms that Jesus performed (Matt. 12:25–37; Mk. 3:23–30; Lk. 11:17–23; → Satan). For Jesus the control over evil spirits was not an end in itself. He told his followers: "Nevertheless, do not rejoice in this, that the spirits are subject to you; but rejoice that your names are written in heaven" (Lk. 10:20). (The unauthentic longer ending of Mk. gives rather greater prominence to such powers than the authentic gospel texts, cf. Mk. 16:17 f. Even so, the emphasis is one of implied contrast between the power of Jesus and other powers.) Finally, the Lord's Prayer and other prayers of Jesus have a completely different orientation from magic. The latter is concerned with the control of the supernatural by techniques to further one's own ends. Jesus' concern was to do the will of the Father and to teach men to submit their whole lives to that will (Matt. 6:9–15 par. Lk. 11:2–4; cf. Matt. 26:36–46 par. Mk. 14:32–42, Lk. 22:40–46; Jn. 4:34; 5:30). C. Brown

→ Angel, → Bless, → Curse, → Demon, → Dream, → Heal, → Miracle, → Satan, → Spirit

The following bibliography contains references to a number of works dealing with magic outside the Bible and the ancient world. This is for the purpose of comparing magical practices.

(a). C. Bailey, Phases in the Religion of Ancient Rome, 1932; J. Beattie and J. Middleton, eds., Spirit Mediumship and Society in Africa, 1969; H. Birkeland, The Evildoers in the Book of Psalms, Avhandlinger utgitt av Det Norske Videnskaps-Akademi i Oslo 2, 1955; E. A. W. Budge, Egyptian Magic, 1899; R. Bultmann and D. Lührmann, phantasma, TDNT IX 6; E. D. van Buren, "Amulets in Ancient Babylonia", Orientalia 14, 1945, 21 ff.; R. P. Casey, "Simon Magus", in F. J. Foakes Jackson and K. Lake, eds., The Beginnings of Christianity, V, 1933, 151–63; T. W. Davies, Magic, Divination, and Demonology Among the Hebrews and Their Neighbours, 1898; G. Delling, baskainō, TDNT I 594 f.; goēs, TDNT I 737 f.; and magos etc., TDNT IV 356–9; E. R. Dodds, The Greeks and the Irrational, 1951; E. Ehnmark, "Religion and Magic: Frazer, Söderblom and Hägerström", Ethnos 21, 1956, 1–10; S. Eitrem, The Greek Magical Papyri in the British Museum, 1923; Some Notes on the Demonology of the New Testament, Symbolae Osloenses Supplement 1966²; S. Eitrem, ed., Papyri Osloenses, I, Magical Papyri, 1925; S. E. Eitrem and J. H. Croon, "Magic", OCD 637 f.; E. E. Evans-Pritchard, Witchcraft, Oracles and Magic among the Azande, 1937; W. Foerster, pythōn, TDNT VI 917–20; J. G. Frazer, The Golden Bough: A Study in Magic and Religion, I–XII, 1911–27³; abridged edition I–II, 1957; and The Magic Art, I–II, 1936³; A. H. Gardiner, "Magic (Egyptian)", ERE VIII 262–9; M. Gaster, "Magic (Jewish)", ERE VIII 300–5; W. Goode, "Magic and Religion, A Continuum", Ethnos 14, 1949, 172–82; A. Guillaume, Prophecy and Divination, 1938; J. M. Hull, Hellenistic Magic and the Synoptic Tradition, SBT Second Series 28, 1974; L. W. King, "Magic (Babylon)", ERE VIII 253 ff.; and Babylonian Magic and Sorcery, 1896; C. Kluckhorn, Navaho Witchcraft, Peabody Museum Papers, 22, 1944; H. van der Leeuw, Religion in its Essence and Manifestation, 1964²; J. E. Lowe, Magic in Greek and Latin Literature, 1929; D. S. Margoliouth, "Magic (Arabian and Muslim)", ERE VIII 252 f.; L. Mair, Witchcraft, 1969; B. Malinowski, Magic, Science and Religion and Other Essays, (1948) 1974; M. Mauss, A General Theory of Magic, 1972; I. Mendelsohn, "Magic", IDB III 223 ff.; R. R. Marett, "Magic (Introductory)", ERE VIII 245–52; A. D. Nock, "Greek Magical Papyri", Journal of Egyptian Archaeology 15, 1929, 219–35; and "Paul and the Magus", in F. J. Foakes Jackson and K. Lake, eds., The Beginnings of Christianity, V, 1933, 164–88; W. M. F. Petrie, Amulets, 1914; J. B. Pritchard, ed., Ancient Near Eastern Texts, 1955²; E. Reiner, Surpu, A Collection of Sumerian and Akkadian Incantations, 1958; H. Ringgren, Religions of the Near East, 1973; E. Rohde, Psyche, 1925; K. F. Smith, "Magic (Greek and Roman)", ERE I 269–89; R. C. Thompson, The Reports of the Magicians and Astrologers of Nineveh in the British Museum, I–II, 1900; The Devils and Evil Spirits of Babylonia, I–II, 1903–4; Semitic Magic, its Origins and Development, 1908; L. Thorndike, A History of Magic and Experimental Science during the first Thirteen Centuries of our Era, 1923; J. Trachtenberg, Jewish Magic and Superstition: A Study in Folk Religion, 1939; V. W. Turner, Ndembu Divination: Its Symbolism and Techniques, 1961; M. Unger, Biblical Demonology, 1952; D. P. Walker, Spiritual and Demonic Magic from Ficino to Campanella, 1958; H. Webster, Magic: A Sociological Study, 1948; G. B. Wetter, Magic and Religion, 1958; R. C. Zaehner, The Teachings of the Magi: A Compendium of Zoroastrian Beliefs, 1956.

(b). E. Benveniste, Les Mages dans l'ancien Iran, 1938; A. Bertholet, Das Dynamistische im Alten Testament, 1926; A. Bertholet, C.-M. Edsman, K. Galling and W. Eilers, "Magie", *RGG*³ IV 595–602; K. Beth, Religion und Magie bei den Naturvölkern, 1928²; J. Bidez and F. Cumont, Les Mages Hellénisés, I–II, 1938; L. Bieler, Theios anēr. Das Bild des "göttlichen Menschen" in Spätantike und Frühchristentum, I–II, 1935–36; and "dynamis und exousia", Wiener Studien 55, 182–90; H. Birkeland, Die Feinde des Individuums in der israelitischen Psalmenliteratur, 1933; L.

Blau, Das altjüdische Zauberwesen, 1898; A. Carnoy, "Le nom des Mages", Muséon New Series 9, 1908; 121–58; G. Conteneau, La Magie chez les Assyriens et les Babyloniens, 1947; S. Eitrem, "Magische Papyri", Münchener Beiträge zur Papyrusforschung 19, 1933, 243 ff.; and "Kronos in der Magie", Annuaire de l'Institut de Philologie et d'Histoire Orientales (Mélanges Bidez) 2, 1934, 351–60; G. Fohrer, "Prophetie und Magie", ZAW 78, 1966, 25–47; A. E. Jensen, Mythos und Kult bei Naturvölkern, 1959²; F. Lexa, La Magie dans l'Égypte antique, I–III, 1925; H. Kaupel, Die Dämonen im Alten Testament, 1930; G. Messina, Der Ursprung der Magie und der zarathustraischen Religion, 1930; and I magi a Betlemme e una predizione di Zoroastro, 1933; K. Preisendanz, Papyri Graecae Magicae: Die griechischen Zauberpapyri, I–III, 1928–42; Papyrusfunde und Papyrusforschung, 1933; "Die griechischen und lateinischen Zaubertafeln", Archiv für Papyrusforschung 11, 1935, 153–64; "Zur Überlieferung der spätantiken Magie", Zentralblatt für Bibliothekswesen Behiheft 75, Georg Leyh Festgabe, 1950, 223–40; "Neue griechische Zauberpapyri", Chronique d'Égypte 26, 1951, 405–9; C. H. Ratschow, Magie und Religion, 1955; L. Röhrich, "Zauberbücher" and "Zaubersprüche", *RGG*³ VI 1869 ff., 1873 ff.; E. Spranger, Die Magie der Seele, 1947; E. Stiglmayr, "Zauberer", *RGG*³ VI 1971 ff.

Man

The basic concept behind the Gk. word anthrōpos is that of generic man (as opposed to gods or animals), the human race, mankind (cf. the derived word, anthropology, the theory or science of man). In this general sense men and women, old men and children can all be subsumed under the one overall heading (cf. Ger. man, Eng. "one"). anthrōpos, within the genus man, also refers some specifically to men, occasionally also to attendants or → slaves, as distinct from their → Lord (kyrios). When anthrōpos refers to a particular man, its meaning impinges on that of the word anēr, denoting a man as opposed to a → woman, whether he be husband, bridegroom, warrior, hero (similarly arsēn, male). The fact that anēr can take on the more general meaning of mankind, whereas no such similar usage is attested for woman (gynē) is linked up with the ancient identification of man and mankind.

ἀνήρ

ἀνήρ (anēr), a man; ἀνδρίζομαι (andrizomai), behave in a manly way.

CL anēr, attested from Mycenaean Gk. onwards, is found in secular Gk. from Homer in all the meanings which are also known in the LXX and the NT: (a) a man, as contrasted with → woman (Plato, Gorgias 514e; (b) husband (Homer, Od. 6, 182 ff.); also bridegroom (cf. SB II 393 ff.); (c) adult (Xen., Cyr. 8, 7, 6) and warrior; (d) manliness (Aristoph., Achilles 77 ff.); also gentleman, hero; (e) man, as genus (Homer, Il. 1, 544; → anthrōpos).

OT There are several Heb. words used in the OT which approximate to these various meanings which the LXX often simply translates by anēr. The main ones are 'îš, man; 'enôš, men, people; ba'al, lord, husband, head of a household; gibbôr, hero, warrior; zāqēn, elder; nāśî', prince; 'āḏôn, lord. The man is lord of the wife (Gen. 3:16; 18:12). He alone is competent in legal and cultic proceedings (Exod. 23:17; 34:23; 1 Sam. 1:3 f.). But alongside this typically oriental and patriarchal way of life, one can find allusions to men's responsibilities to women, above all in writings such as Deut. 20:7; 21:14; 22:13 ff.; 24:5, and occasionally also in later Judaism (cf. e.g., B. Yeb. 62b; cf. SB III 610a; → Woman, art. gynē OT).

NT 1. anēr occurs in the NT, with meanings mentioned as under CL, as follows:

(a) Matt. 14:21; 1 Cor. 11:13 ff. (→ arsēn is sometimes used instead of anēr, linking up with the OT; cf. Matt. 19:4 par. Mk. 10:6 and Rom. 1:26 ff. with Gen. 1:27). anēr is used without emphasis in Acts 3:14; 10:28, and as a typical form of address in Acts 15:7, 13 and passim; (b) Mk. 10:2, 12; cf. Matt. 19:3, 9; Rom. 7:2 f.; Eph. 5:22 ff.; Tit. 1:6; of a betrothed person (cf. Matt. 1:19; 2 Cor. 11:2; Rev. 21:2 with Deut. 22:23); (c) 1 Cor. 13:11; cf. Jas. 3:2; (d) including maturity and dignity (Lk. 23:59; Acts 6:3, 5); (e) Lk. 5:8; Jas. 1:20 (modelled on Gk. and also OT usage).

anēr occurs most frequently in Lk. and Paul. Paul often uses anēr to distinguish man from gynē (e.g. in 1 Cor. 7:1–16). Lk. uses anēr usually in the more general meaning of → anthrōpos (as in Lk. 11:31; 19:7; Acts 2:5 and passim).

2. The organization and leadership of the Christian community in the NT (→ Church) was largely male-orientated, just as Jesus' circle of the Twelve comprised only men (but cf. → Woman, art. gynē NT). But the man did not receive his special position because of his natural fitness for the cult. This much came rather from Christ, by whom he was honoured and whom he was called upon to reflect (1 Cor. 11:7). In the sequence God–Christ–man–woman (1 Cor. 11:3 ff.), each one is the → "head" of the following, and, conversely, each member is the reflected splendour (doxa → glory) of the preceding one. This qualification of the man, however, no longer indicates preferential status but man's special task and responsibility, just as the woman has hers. For before God, according to Gal. 3:28 (cf. 1 Pet. 4:7), man and woman are, in the last analysis, on the same level. This establishment of the equality of the sexes before God which does not imply any levelling-out of their human differences – is something new and worthy of note in Christianity. It throws into sharp relief the distinction between the Christian view and the otherwise widespread contempt for women in the ancient world.

When Christ and man are put in parallel in Eph. 5:25 and 28 (cf. also Col. 3:19; 1 Pet. 3:7), the point of comparison is the responsibility of the man to love his wife in the same way as Christ loves his church, i.e. with a life of total, selfless, self-sacrificial devotion, comparable with that of Christ for the church. The exhortation andrizesthe, lit. "be men" (RSV "be courageous") is a summons like that to "be alert [grēgoreite]" and to "stand firm in faith [stēkete en tē pistei]" (1 Cor. 16:13; cf. 2 Sam. 10:12 LXX; Pss. 26[27]:14; 30:25 [31:24]; Josephus, War 6, 50). It is a powerful form of demand aimed at the whole community: their ultimate goal should be to become "a perfect man [andra teleion]" (Eph. 4:13 AV).

H. Vorländer

3. anēr is used in the sense of husband in the phrase "husband of one wife [mias gynaikos anēr]" which occurs in the Pastoral Epistles as one of the qualifications stipulated for bishops (1 Tim. 3:2), deacons (1 Tim. 3:12) and elders (Tit. 1:6). The latter were evidently the same as bishops (→ Bishop, Presbyter, Elder). Roman Catholic exegesis tends to take the phrase to mean that the office holder may be married, but anyone who has remarried after the death of his first wife or who has remarried after divorce (in the case of a pagan convert) is automatically excluded (cf. C. Spicq, Les Épîtres Pastorales, 1947, 78f. who quotes extensively from patristic sources). A similar view is evidently adopted by the RSV which translates the phrase "married only once." Whilst such an interpretation may be consonant with later developments in the church, the literal interpretation of the text, i.e. that the man should not have more than one wife who is alive, seems to fit the first-century situation better. On the one hand, it would exclude polygamy which did occur in the first century (→ Marriage, art. gameō OT 7) and in this respect would meet the OT norms for marriage. On the other hand, it would also exclude divorcees who had remarried, since the first wife is still regarded as the wife despite the divorce (cf. Mk. 10:11; Lk. 16:18b; → Divorce). The converse of this phrase occurs in 1 Tim. 5:9 in the case of the enrolment of widows who must be "the wife of one man [henos andros gynē]." To exclude widows who had been "married more than once" (RSV) would seem unjust, especially in cases of levirate marriage (→ Marriage, art. gameō OT 4, 7). But the ruling is understandable, if the woman has not been involved in divorce or a polygamous marriage. It should be remembered that the passage is not concerned about welfare in general and the Christian's attitude to anyone in need, but with those within the church who have a claim on church resources. Elsewhere Paul advised remarriage in case of need (1 Cor. 7:8 f., 39 f.). C. Brown

ἄνθρωπος

ἄνθρωπος (anthrōpos), man; ἀνθρώπινος (anthrōpinos), human.

CL anthrōpos, attested from Mycenaean times, means a human being, and also a man. The fem. equivalent is → woman, often in a contemptuous sense. The etymology is disputed, though it may be a compound of anēr and ōps, i.e. man's face. The adj. anthrōpinos is a derivative word meaning human, belonging to humanity. It is used from pre-Socratic writers and Hdt. onwards.

In secular Gk. anthrōpos means man, as opposed to beasts, or also to gods (in Homer). In a contemptuous sense, it means a slave (used also as fem. by Hdt. and others). There is also a voc. usage, originally employed for slaves (Hdt.), with undertones of reproachfulness: "Man!" (Plato). anthrōpos, as a general designation, is often rendered by "one".

OT 1. The Heb. words corresponding to anthrōpos are 'ādām, 'îš or 'enôš. 'ādām is used to designate his nature, as contrasted with God in 1 Sam. 15:29, and with animals in Gen. 1:26. In its generic use it includes both man and woman (cf. Gen. 2:7 ff., 18 ff.; → anēr; → Woman, art. gynē). It is also the word for → Adam. 'îš occurs, e.g., in Gen. 2:24. 'enôš often signifies the aspect of weakness, mortality (cf. Ps. 8:5).

In both accounts of creation (Gen. 1:1 ff.; 2:4b ff.) the creation of man is the high-point. In Gen. 1 he is the crowning culmination; in Gen. 2 he is the mid-point of the creation. His humanity resides in the life he has been given (2:7b) in his correspondence to God (1:27a). He is deemed worthy to be spoken to by God and to be given a task (2:16 f.; 1:28). Through disobedience he falls victim to death. 'ādām, a word connected with 'adāmâh, earth, now no longer simply alludes to his creatureliness (2:7) but also to his transitoriness (3:19).

2. The OT is not acquainted with anything corresponding to the Gk. division of man into two or three parts, consisting of nous, psychē, and sōma (mind, soul, and body). The following concepts indicate, in rough outline comparison, different aspects of man, always seen as a whole. They do not represent different parts.

(a) → Flesh (Heb. bāśār) often indicating man's transitoriness (Ps. 78:39). (b) → Spirit (Heb. rûaḥ) man as a living being (Ps. 146:4), as a person (Ezek. 11:19; spirit and heart are mentioned in reference to man in relation to God). (c) → Soul (Heb. nepeš) man as life bound up with his body (1 Sam. 19:11b), as an individual (Deut. 24:7a; Ezek. 13:18 f.). The soul is neither pre-existent nor immortal, for it is the whole man (Gen. 2:7). (d) → Heart (Heb. lēḇ, lēḇāḇ) the essential, inner man, as opposed to his outward appearance (Job 12:3; 1 Sam. 16:7b). Due to the translation of the LXX, Gk. currents of thought became bound up with these concepts, and gained ground in Judaism, as the NT picture shows.

3. A pessimistic conception of man is found in a section of the wisdom literature (e.g. Eccl. and Job 14) which is radicalized in the Qumran texts. The utter vanity, transitoriness and sinfulness of man is presented in a wide variety of formulations. According to the Catechism of the Community Rule (IQS 3:13–4:26), men fall into two groups: the "Sons of Light" who are ruled by the spirit of truth (→ Light) and the "Sons of Darkness", who are both fighting simultaneously for the domination of man's heart. This accounts for the sins even of the pious.

Another branch of Judaism reveals the development to a body-soul dualism (4 Macc. 2:21 f.), which in Hellenistic Judaism led to an attitude of loathing for the body (2 Esd. 7:88, 100). According to Josephus, there was widespread belief that → redemption is the liberation of the → soul from the → body (War 2, 8; 7, 8; Ant. 18, 1; → Soul, art. psychē OT 2). The → image of God in man is restricted to the nous, his → mind and → reason.

4. This dualistic view of man in the Hellenistic world is found above all in gnosticism (cf. Corp.Herm. 1, 15, 18, 21), which certain sections of the NT endeavour to combat (e.g. John). The thought of man's being related to God derives from the Stoics, and this is taken up in Acts 17:28 f. (→ God, art. theos NT 4 (b)).

NT In the NT, as in the OT, the question about man is essentially that concerning his → sin and → redemption. Abstract definitions find no place here. Man differs from → animals and plants (Matt. 4:19; 12:12; 1 Cor. 15:39; Rev. 9:4), from → angels (1 Cor. 4:9; 13:1), from Christ (Gal. 1:12; Eph. 6:7), and from God (Matt. 7:11; 10:32 f.; Mk. 10:9; Jn. 10:33; Acts 5:29; Phil. 2:7). anthrōpos is used in order to belittle in Jas. 1:7; with reference to Jesus in Matt. 26:74 par. Mk. 14:71 and Jn. 19:5. Jesus is called anthrōpos in respect of his true humanity in Phil. 2:7 and 1 Tim. 2:5. Jesus' own self-designation was ho hyios tou anthrōpou, (→ Son of God; → Child). kata anthrōpous and kata anthrōpon, lit. according to men, in a human fashion, are used as common synonymous phrases for anthrōpinos, human (cf. Rom. 3:5; 1 Cor. 3:3; 15:32; 1 Pet. 4:6; and Rom. 6:19; 1 Cor. 10:13). If anthrōpos is defined as to sex, it can be used, as in secular Gk., synonymously with → anēr, a man (see Matt. 11:8; 19:5; 1 Cor. 7:1).

The NT is not interested in an isolated self-contained anthropology any more than the OT. Statements about man are always partly theological pronouncements. He always appears as man vis-à-vis God: in his creatureliness (as distinct from other creatures and from God), in being addressed and chosen by God, in his transitoriness and disobedience, and as subject to the wrath and grace of God.

The unity and equality of mankind are not postulates of abstract ideas: they are realized in the Christian community (Gal. 3:28; Rom. 10:12; cf. 3:22, 29; Jas. 2:1 ff.). Through Christ the "one new man [hena kainon anthrōpon]" (Eph. 2:15 AV) comes into being. At the same time new differentiations come to light through God's electing activity in Christ (Matt. 20:16) and through the variety of the → gifts of the Spirit in the church (1 Cor. 12).

1. The Synoptics. Man as a creature owes God obedience and service without any prior claim to reward (Lk. 17:17 ff.). Jesus' universal call to repentance assumes that all are sinners (Mk. 1:15; Matt. 6:12; cf. 5:45; 9:13; Lk. 15:7; → Sin, art. hamartia). At the same time, there are the statements concerning the great value God puts on a man (Matt. 6:26b; 10:29 f.), even as a sinner (Lk. 15). His vocation is to be a son of the → Father and to be perfect like him (Matt. 5:45, 48). Lk. 2:14 speaks in Semitic fashion of anthrōpoi eudokias. This does not mean, as the Vulg. translates, men of good will (Lat. hominibus bonae voluntatis). Rather, the gen. expresses a possessional relationship: men as the possession of the divine favour (cf. Lk. 3:22; 1QH 4:32 f.; 11:9). What is thus meant is "the elect Messianic community of salvation" (Jeremias, TDNT 1 365; cf. J. Jeremias, "Anthrōpoi eudokias", ZNW 28, 1929, 13–20; E. Vogt, " 'Peace Among Men of God's Good Pleasure' Lk. 2:14", in K. Stendahl, ed., The Scrolls and the New Testament, 1958, 114–17).

2. Paul. The old man without Christ (palaios anthrōpos), the unconverted man, is either devoted to the law (Rom. 2:17 ff.) or in rebellion against it (Rom. 1:18 ff.); he perverts his knowledge of God, and in so doing becomes himself perverted (Rom. 1:21 ff.). In either case he is unfree and culpable. Alongside statements about man's responsibility stand those about his incapability (cf. his inexcusability in Rom. 2:1 with his inability to do good in 7:18 f.). This is a tension which Paul sees removed only in God and overcome in Christ (Phil. 2:12b, 13). Through Christ, the new man (kainos anthrōpos) and the last → Adam (Rom. 5:9 ff.; 1 Cor. 15:21 f., 45 ff.), man becomes free. He himself becomes a new creation (2 Cor. 5:17; cf. Eph. 4:22 ff.; Col. 3:1–4:6). Baptism signifies the death of the old man with Christ (Rom. 6:6). Through incorporation into the → body of Christ man is born as a new man (→ Birth, art. palingenesia). To the new man is directed the imperative to be what Christ has made him (Eph. 4:22 ff.; Rom. 6:6 ff.; Col. 3:9 ff.). It is not in man's natural capacities to become this; it comes about through being renewed in Christ and in living out this new life. Rom. 8:1–17 depicts this in terms of being led by the Spirit. Rom. 7:14 ff. sees man as what the Reformers called simul iustus et peccator (at once just and a sinner). Paul distinguishes further between the inner and outer man, esō kai exō anthrōpos (2 Cor. 4:16), that is, between his essential being, often expressed in terms of the kardia (→ heart), and his outward appearance.

In addition, these are the most important anthropological concepts found in Paul (cf. with this OT 2). (a) sōma, → body, not only the physical body but the whole person, the self, "I" (see Phil. 1:20; and, for the double significance, cf. 1 Cor. 15:44 with Phil. 3:21). The body is not despised (1 Cor. 15:35 ff.; 6:19). (b) sarx, → flesh occasionally synonymous with sōma, speaks of the transience of man (2 Cor. 4:10 f.). It furthermore signifies his sinfulness (Rom. 8:1 ff.; 1 Cor. 15:50), but in the realm, not so much of nature as of history (→ Adam) and → guilt. (c) psychē, → soul, man as a living being, a person (2 Cor. 12:15). 1 Cor. 15:44 relates its existence to this life as contrasted with the next: "It is sown a physical body [sōma psychikon], it is raised a spiritual body [sōma pneumatikon]" (RSV). (d) pneuma, → spirit. In certain passages its meaning overlaps with that of sōma and psychē and refers to the inner self. It bears a certain resemblance to the modern concept of self-consciousness (cf. Rom. 8:16 where the Spirit is said to bear witness with our spirit that we are children of God, in that we cry to him as Father). (e) From Gk. thought, and found primarily in Paul, are: nous, → mind (→ Reason) which focusses attention on man as a conscious, rational being; and syneidēsis, → conscience. Rom. 2:15 refers to the conscience of the Gentiles and its rôle in their knowledge of God.

3. John. Johannine statements view man as prey to the kosmos, the world in opposition to God, and therefore missing his real self (→ Lie, art. pseudomai on Jn. 8:41–7; 1 Jn. 1:10; 2:22; 5:10; Rev. 2:2). The coming of Jesus confronts man with a decision. In contrast with gnostic dualism Jn. presents a dualism of decision which in Jn. 3:3 ff. is linked with being born again (→ Birth). This decision demonstrates "whence" the man comes – whether he is "of the world" or "from God" (cf. Jn. 8:47 and 1 Jn. 4:5 with e.g. Jn. 5:24 alongside the call to decision of Jn. 6:44, 65, 12:32). But, equally, there is no depreciation of matter here (Jn. 1:14). On the contrary, the whole man is made free through Jesus (Jn. 8:31 ff.), and thus gains life (5:24; 11:25 f.). H. Vorländer

4. The NT and Modern Psychology. Biblical psychology is practical rather than scientific, but is understandable in its context. Thus, since strong emotion frequently affects the lower parts of the body from the solar plexus downwards, the bowels (→ Mercy, art. splanchna) is the term used where we today, in equally popular terms, would speak of the heart (e.g. 2 Cor. 6:12; 7:15; Phil. 1:8; Phlm. 7, 12). At the opposite extreme nous is the mind, intellect, or understanding (e.g. Rom. 12:2; 1 Cor. 14:19; → Reason, art. nous). kardia (heart) stands somewhere between the two, being sometimes emotional, though less warm than splanchna (e.g. Rom. 1:24; Jas. 3:14), and sometimes representing the inner set of the life-pattern, including volition (e.g. 2 Cor. 4:6; 9:7; Eph. 4:18).

Thus the NT seizes on commonsense descriptive terms to describe centres of emotion, feeling, volition, life-pattern, and comprehension. One may class these aspects of the personal psychē (variously → soul, animal life, person), but the Bible is concerned, not with theory, but with bringing every single part of the person into an effective whole through the Holy Spirit giving continuous life to the human pneuma, → spirit. (e.g. Jn. 3:6; 1 Cor. 2:10–16). The usage of all these words is discussed in detail under separate entries.

Man is seen as a whole being, and whatever touches one part affects the whole. The NT would agree with the modern term psychosomatic, but would want to turn the word into pneumatopsychosomatic.

To write in detail about modern schools of psychology lies outside the scope of this lexicon, but one can distinguish certain general aspects of psychological thinking that are likely to continue in one form or another, regardless of the prevailing fashions in psychology. The NT would have no quarrel with the investigations of academic and laboratory psychology, which explore the functions of the brain, nervous system, glands, and the animal responses of the human body. It is worth noting that the function of the brain as the organ of thought was an occasional hypothesis and not an accepted fact in the ancient world. Thus, while Plato in the Timaeus 69–72 made it the centre of the rational soul, Aristotle treated it as a cooler of the blood (Part.An. 2, 7). It is interesting that Ephesians makes Christ the head and ruler of the body (4:15, 16).

The Bible would, however, cross swords with some modern conclusions that the bodily responses that psychology can investigate are a total explanation of man, i.e. that man is wholly body, and consequently cannot survive death. One need not postulate what has been called "the ghost in the machine" (cf. G. Ryle, The Concept of Mind, 1949) if one sees man as a personality who responds to the world of time and sense through the body and brain, and at the same time responds to mental, aesthetic, and spiritual concepts, which are real, even though they are beyond the reach of the physical sciences. The death of the body temporarily shuts off one dimension until the resurrection, but does not destroy the whole person (cf. 1 Thess. 5:23).

Psychologists of the behaviourist schools interpret man as no more than a complicated build-up of conditioned reflexes. As has often been pointed out, if this theory is true, it cannot be true, since truth would have no meaning. One psychologist would be conditioned to certain conclusions, another to other conclusions. Obviously the NT does not deny the build-up of patterns of life through conditioning. Conditioning may produce hardness of heart (e.g. Mk. 3:5; Heb. 3:13) or reactions of self-interest (e.g. Acts 19:25–27). The renewal of the personal responses through the Holy Spirit is a form of conditioning, so that one intelligently and gladly reacts to the will of God (e.g. Rom. 12:1, 2). In other words, God has made man capable of building up a pattern of life which becomes, as we say, second nature to him.

Where the NT differs from behaviourist psychology is over the actual reality of the work of the Spirit, and the God-given ability of man to respond deliberately to the call of Jesus Christ. A psychologist takes a Christian conversion, and accounts for it after it has happened in terms of natural responses arising from such states as fear and inner stress. The NT would not deny such stresses, including guilt, but gives primacy to the Holy Spirit breaking in and supplying the dynamics of new life. The ensuing knowledge of God in and through Jesus Christ is objectively real. Certainly conditioning techniques, as at a highly emotional meeting, may produce a temporary conversion or an outburst of strange manifestations, but a truly Christian experience leads the person on afterwards in a proper walk with Christ after the NT pattern.

Other forms of psychology pay more regard to an inner world of man, postulating a realm of the unconscious, which stores up early memories and experiences, and often real or imagined occasions of guilt. These under repression may break out in disguise, and produce abnormal feelings, attitudes, and reactions. Jungian psychologists see the unconscious also as the sphere of positive dynamic drives.

This reminds us of the NT teaching of the fallenness of man, with the heart as the storage place of the host of evils that emerge in the life (e.g. Matt. 15:18, 19). A non-Christian psychologist may uncover the originating cause of some trouble, such as rivalry with one's father in infancy, and thus bring the patient to terms with himself and society. But full adjustment, as the NT sees it, involves cleansing from all sin, known and unknown, and a new relationship to God in and through Jesus Christ, and this is not given by a psychologist as psychologist.

One further school emphasizes the need for life to make sense, with purposelessness as a cause of breakdown. The NT entirely agrees, as witness Paul's words about the goal of his life in Phil. 3:12–16, and the wisdom of the gospel in 1 Cor. 2:6–13.

There is nothing in NT teaching which runs counter to sound psychological practice, but the NT has the necessary overplus of God-relationship as needed for full maturity of man in himself and in relation to his fellows in the church and in society.

J. Stafford Wright

ἄρσην

ἄρσην (arsēn), male; θῆλυς (thēlys), female; ἀρσενοκοίτης (arsenokoitēs), male homosexual, pederast, sodomite.

CL arsēn occurs in cl. Gk. from Homer onwards, sometimes in the Attic form arrēn (often in papyri, and also Philo, Josephus and Rom. 1:27 v.l.). (On the form see Funk § 34 (2); Moulton, Grammar, II, 103.) It means male as opposed to female, thēlys (cf. Plato, Leg. 2, 9 p. 665c; K. Preisendanz, Papyri Graecae Magicae, I, 1928, 15, 18). thēlys is also found from Homer onwards as an adj. meaning female, but also with the art. meaning woman (e.g. Hdt. 3, 109; Xen., Mem. 2, 1, 4). On the phrase arsēn kai thēlys, male and female, cf. Plato, Rep. 454d; Aristot., Met. 988a 5.

OT arsēn occurs some 54 times in the LXX canonical and uncanonical writings, chiefly for the Heb. zāḵār. It appears in the phrase arsen kai thēly, male and female, in Gen. 1:27 (Heb. zāḵār ûnᵉqēḇâh) of the creation of male and female in the → image of God (cf. also Gen. 5:2; 6:19 f.; 7:2 f., 9, 15 f.; Lev. 3:1, 6; 12:7, referring not only to man and woman but to the male and female of animal species in the flood story and in sacrifice). The male is referred to on his own in Gen. 17:14, 23 (the institution of male → circumcision as the → covenant sign); Exod. 1:16 ff., 22; 2:2 (Pharaoh's attempt to exterminate the Israelites by destroying male infants); Exod. 12:5 (the Passover → lamb had to be a male without blemish); and Lev. 1:3, 10; 4:23; 22:19; Mal. 1:14 (in connection with sacrifice); Lev. 6:12(29), 37(7:6) (of priests); Lev. 18:22; 20:13 (in condemnation of homosexual practices); Lev. 27:3, 5 ff. (in the valuation of the people); Num. 1:3(2); 3:40 (in the census of the people); Num. 31:17 f.; Jos. 17:2; Jdg. 21:11 f. (in historical narratives); Job 3:3; Isa. 26:14; 66:7; Jer. 20:15; 37(30):6; Sir. 33:26 (23); 2 Macc. 7:21; 4 Macc. 15:30 (of males generally). The references to the male and female correspond to those to man and woman generally in the OT. On the one hand, there is the recognition in Gen. of the divinely instituted parity in that man and woman together constitute the image of God, and their complementary roles in the transmission of life in both the human and the animal realm. On the other hand, there are certain rôles (e.g. in receiving the covenant sign, in the priesthood, and in certain → sacrifices) that only the male may fill.

NT 1. The creative act in Gen. 1:27 is referred to in Matt. 19:4 par. Mk. 10:6 in connection with → divorce. Jesus' reply to the Pharisees takes it as the major premise for his teaching on → marriage: "from the beginning he created them male and female." This leads to the minor premise quoted from Gen. 2:24: "for this reason a man shall leave his father and mother [Matt. also gives "and shall cleave to his wife"] and the two shall be one flesh" (Matt. 19:5; Mk. 10:7 f.). The conclusion is drawn: "So they are no longer two but one flesh. What therefore God put together, let not man put asunder" (Matt. 19:6; Mk. 10:8 f.). Gen. 1:27 is also referred to in 1 Clem. 33:5 and 2 Clem. 14:2.

2. Lk. 2:23 tells how Jesus' parents offered the sacrifice prescribed for males by Exod. 13:2, 12 at his birth (→ Bird).

3. Paul's use of arsēn is interesting in that it exhibits a tension between the creation ordinances and their abolition in the gospel age. By contrast the ungodly have abolished the creation ordinances for sexual relations in a way which can only bring judgment.

(a) In Rom. 1:27 arsēn (v.l. arrēn) is used 3 times which RSV translates by "men": "and the men likewise gave up natural relations with women and were consumed with passion for one another, men committing shameless acts with men and receiving in their own persons the due penalty for their error." In this passage sexual perversion is seen as a result of (and to that extent as a judgment on) man's sin in worshipping the creature rather than the creator. Because he has put something else in the place which can only properly belong to God, man's natural relationships have become perverted. Josephus also pointed out that unnatural relations between males was punishable by death (Ap. 1, 199; cf. Lev. 20:13; 18:22, 29). On Rom. 1 generally, see G. Bornkamm, "The Revelation of God's Wrath (Romans 1–3)", Early Christian Experience, 1969, 47–70. Paul uses the noun arsenokoitēs, a male homosexual, pederast, sodomite (→ Marriage, art. koitē), as one who is excluded from the kingdom (1 Cor. 6:9) and condemned by the law (1 Tim. 1:10; cf. Gen. 19; Lev. 18:22, 29; 20:13; Deut. 23:17; → Punishment).

(b) On the other hand, Gal. 3:28 asserts that "There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither slave nor free, there is neither male nor female; for you are all one in Christ Jesus." This, however, is not a call to abolish all earthly relationships. Rather, it puts these relationships in the perspective of salvation history. As Paul goes on to say, "And if you are Christ's then you are Abraham's offspring, heirs according to promise" (Gal. 3:29; cf. also Rom. 10:2). All who are in Christ have the same status before God; but they do not necessarily have the same function. In the context of the → circumcision question in Gal., the assertion is doubly relevant. For women could not be recipients of the sign which Judaizers were insisting as a prerequisite for full salvation. There may also be an underlying Adam-typology in the passage. Some rabbis asserted that Adam was originally androgynous (cf. J. Bligh, Galatians: A Discussion of St Paul's Epistle, 1969, 326).

4. Rev. 12:5, 13 takes up the imagery of Isa. 66:7 and Ps. 2:9 in the vision of the → dragon's attack on the woman with the male child: "she brought forth a male child, one who is to rule all the nations with a rod of iron, but her child was caught up to God and to his throne. . . . And when the dragon saw that he had been thrown down to the earth, he pursued the woman who had borne the male child." Whereas the child is here clearly Christ, the woman, in the light of the following verses, represents the mother of Jesus and also the church whose other "offspring" are now pursued by the dragon. C. Brown

→ Adam, → Blood, → Body, → Brother, → Child, → Earth, → Father, → Flesh, → Hand, → Head, → Heart, → Image, → Life, → Marriage, → Son, → Soul, → Spirit, → Woman

(a). J. Barr, The Semantics of Biblical Language, 1961; and "Man and Nature – the Ecological Controversy and the Old Testament", BJRL 55, 1972–73, 9 ff.; C. K. Barrett, From First Adam to Last, 1962; K. Barth, Christ and Adam: Man and Humanity in Romans 5, SJT Occasional Papers 5, 1962; and CD III, 2 The Doctrine of Creation (volume dealing with man); G. C. Berkouwer, Man: The Image of God, 1962; T. Boman, Hebrew Thought Compared with Greek, 1960; N. P. Bratsiotis, 'iš, TDOT I 222–35; E. Brunner, Man in Revolt: A Christian Anthropology, 1939; and The Christian Doctrine of Creation and Redemption, Dogmatics II, 1952; R. Bultmann, "Romans 7 and the Anthropology of Paul", and "Man between the Times according to the New Testament", Existence and Faith, (1961) 1964, 173–85, and 293–315; "The Understanding of Man and the World in the New Testament and in the Greek World", and "Adam where art Thou?" Essays Philosophical and Theological, 1955, 67–89, and 119–32; D. Burkhard, ed., Man before God: Toward a Theology of Man, 1966; E. de Witt Burton, Spirit, Soul and Flesh, 1918; S. Cave, The Christian Estimate of Man, 1944; W. Eichrodt, Man in the Old Testament, SBT 4, 1951; and Theology of the Old Testament, II, 1967, 118–50, 231–495; J. de Fraine, Adam and the Family of Man, 1965; R. H. Gundry, Sōma in Biblical Theology with Emphasis on Pauline Anthropology, Society for New Testament Studies Monograph Series 29, 1976; D. Jenkins, The Glory of Man, Bampton Lectures for 1966, 1967; J. Jeremias, Adam, TDNT I 141 ff.; anthrōpos, TDNT I 364–67; P. K. Jewett, Man as Male and Female, 1975; R. Jewett, Paul's Anthropological Terms: A Study of the Use in Conflict Settings, Arbeiten zur Geschichte des antiken Judentumsund des Urchristentums, 10, 1971; A. R. Johnson, The Vitality of the Individual in the Thought of Ancient Israel, 1964²; R. Koch and A. Deissler, "Man", EBT 542–51; L. Köhler, Hebrew Man, (1956) 1973; W. G. Kümmel, Man in the New Testament, 1963; J. Laidlaw, The Bible Doctrine of Man, 1895; R. Laurin, "The Concept of Man as a Soul", ExpT 72, 1960–61, 131–134; A. R. C. Leaney, "The Doctrine of Man in 1 Corinthians", SJT 15, 1962, 394–99; F. Maas, 'ādām, TDOT I 75–87; S. V. McCasland, " 'The Image of God' according to St. Paul", JBL 69, 1950, 85–100; H. D. McDonald, I and He, 1966; E. L. Mascall, The Importance of Being Human: Some Aspects of the Christian Doctrine of Man, 1959; J. Moltmann, Man: Christian Anthropology in the Conflicts of rhe present, 1974; D. W. Mork, The Biblical Meaning of Man, 1967; C. F. D. Moule, Man and his Nature in the New Testament: Some Reflections on Biblical Ecology, (1964) 1967; R. Niebuhr, The Nature and Destiny of Man: A Christian Interpretation, I–II, 1941–43; A. Oepke, anēr, andrizomai, TDNT I 360–63; W. Pannenberg, What is Man? Contemporary Anthropology in Theological Perspective, 1970; H. W. Robinson, The Christian Doctrine of Man, (1911) 1926³; H. H. Rowley, "The Nature and Need of Man", The Faith of Israel: Aspects of Old Testament Thought, 1956, 74–98; E. C. Rust, Nature and Man in Biblical Thought, 1953; R. P. Shedd, Man in Community, 1958; R. L. Shinn, Man: The New Humanism, New Directions in Theology Today, 6, 1968; C. R. Smith, The Bible Doctrine of Man, 1951; W. D. Stacey, The Pauline View of Man, 1958; G. E. Whitlock, "The Structure of Personality in Hebrew Psychology: The Implication of the Hebrew View of Man for Psychology", Interpretation, 14, 1960, 3–13; H. W. Wolff, Anthropology of the Old Testament, 1974; G. E. Wright, The Biblical Doctrine of Man in Society, Ecumenical Biblical Studies 2, 1954; J. S. Wright, What is Man? A Christian Assessment of the Powers and Functions of Human Personality, 1955, revised edition re-issued under the title Mind, Man and the Spirits, 1967; W. Zimmerli, Man and his Hope in the Old Testament, SBT Second Series 20, 1971.

(b). L. Adler, Der Mensch in der Sicht der Bibel, 1965; P. Althaus, Paulus und Luther über den Menschen, 1963⁴; E. Brandenburger, Adam und Christus, WMANT 7, 1962; N. P. Bratsiotis, bāśār, TWAT I 850–67; F. Delitzsch, System der biblischen Psychologie, 1861²; A.-M. Dubarle, "La condition humaine dans l'Ancien Testament", RB 63, 1956, 321 ff.; A. Flitner, ed., Wege zur pädagogischen Anthropologie, 1963; K. Galling, Das Bild vom Menschen in biblischer Sicht, 1947; G. Gerlemann, bāśār, THAT I 376–79; W. Gutbrod, Die paulinische Anthropologie, 1934; M. Hengel, "Was ist der Mensch?" in H. W. Wolff, ed., Probleme biblischer Theologie. Gerhard von Rad zum 70. Geburtstag, 1971, 116–35; E. Jüngel, "Grenzen des Menschseins", in H. W. Wolff, ed., op. cit., 199–205; E. Käsemann, Leib und Leib Christi, 1933; J. Kühlewein, 'iš, THAT I 130–38;

J. Jervell, Imago Dei, FRLANT 58, 1960; W. D. Marsch, "Christliche Anthropologie und biologische Zukunft des Menschen", Past. Theologie 58, 1969, 91 ff.; H. Mehl-Koehnlein, L'Homme selon l'Apôtre Paul, 1951; H. Mynarek, Der Mensch, das Wesen der Zukunft, 1968; E. Otto, "Der Mensch als Geschöpf und Bild Gottes in Ägypten", in H. W. Wolff, ed., op. cit., 335–48; H. van Oyen, "Verantwortung und Norm in Hinblick auf die Situationsethik", ThZ 25, 1969, 91 ff.; G. Pidoux, L'Homme dans l'Ancien Testament, 1953; G. von Rad, H. Schlier, E. Wolf, Der alte und der neue Mensch. Aufsätze zur theologischen Anthropologie, BEvTh 8, 1942; C. H. Ratschow, A. S. Kapelrud, N. A. Dahl, "Mensch", *RGG*³ IV 860 ff.; L. Scheffczyk, ed., Der Mensch als Bild Gottes, Wege der Forschung 124, 1969; K. H. Schelkle, Theologie des Neuen Testaments, I, 1968, 91 ff.; J. N. Sevenster, "Die Anthropologie des Neuen Testaments", Anthropologie Religieuse, Numen Supplements 2, 1955, 166–77; F. J. Stendebach, Der Mensch, wie ihn Israel vor 3000 Jahren sah, 1972; H. J. Stoebe, H. J. Wachs, W. Trillhaas, H. Plessner, "Anthropologie", EKL I 131 ff.; W. Zimmerli, Das Menschenbild des Alten Testaments, ThEH Neue Folge 14, 1949.

Mark, Brand

στίγμα

στίγμα (stigma), mark, brand.

CL stigma is related to the vb. stizō, to prick, to mark with a pointed instrument, and when applied to the flesh of men and animals, to brand, to tattoo.

Several well-defined areas of application are seen, as stigmata were used to mark cattle and other animals as a protection against theft. Horses were so branded as a mark of ownership (Aristophanes, Knights 602; Clouds 122, 1298: all referring to sigma-brand). When stigmata were applied to the human body, this denoted a sign of disgrace, suitable for deserters (Herodotus, 7, 233, 2: "branded with the king's marks"). Criminals were marked as a punishment (Plato, Laws 9, 854d) and especially slaves suffered this penalty if they ran away and were caught (Aristophanes, Birds 760; Lysistrata 331) or broke the law in some other way (Diogenes Laertius, 4, 7, 46). The slave was called stigmatias, branded desperado, if he received this penalty (Xenophon, Hellenica 5, 3, 24) and it is suggested that the letters used as a brand on his hands or face were F(UG) for fugitivus or FUR for thief. In the imperial period the branding of slaves as a mark of ownership was practised. The mark was usually placed on the forehead, whereas soldiers who enlisted in the Roman army received a tattoo mark, in the shape of the abbreviated name of the emperor, on their hand (Aetius Amidenus, Libri Medicinales 8, 12).

Stigmata were also applied as sign of religious devotion to the gods (Herodotus 2, 113, stigmata hiera, sacred marks; Lucian, Syr. Dea 59 "bearing stigmata" in honour of the goddess).

OT The LXX has stigmata (used in the plur.) only once in the non-significant passage of Cant. 1:11, "ornaments [pointed pieces of jewelry] of gold." Nonetheless, the idea behind the word is present in the OT in the several instances where slaves were marked as a badge of ownership (Exod. 21:6; Deut. 15:16 f.); where Cain is given a sign of Yahweh's preservation of his life by a mark (Gen. 4:15); where the remnant of Israelite faithful are marked with the Heb. letter Tau as a pledge of their safety against the day of judgment (Ezek. 9:4; the letter Tau in ancient script was a cross, a feature giving rise to later Christian speculation); and especially where Yahweh's people are bidden to inscribe his name on their hands as a promise of fidelity (Isa. 44:5).

Real stigmata were expressly forbidden in Israel according to the rubric of Lev. 19:28. Only in her apostate days did Israel borrow this practice from the Gentile nations (Jer. 16:6; 41:5; cf. Jer. 47:5; 48:37). True Yahwism is thus differentiated from the fertility-cult practices of the nations in Canaan (1 Ki. 18:28). But 1 Ki. 20:41 may be an exception if the prophet had Yahweh's "mark" on his forehead.

In the inter-testamental period Jews were branded by their captors (Ps.Sol. 2:6) and slaves were branded to prevent their escape (T.Mak. 4:15). The Hellenistic persecution of the Jews took the form of the forcible imposition of pagan symbols, and Philo, Spec.Leg. 1, 58, regards the willing acceptance of a brand "with a red-hot iron" as a hallmark of apostasy. Circumcision was commonly regarded as the effective antidote to the desire to be tattooed, since the loyal Jew had this badge of his membership of the elect race and needed no other religious marking. Marks on bodies (in a figurative sense) and on grave sites in a literal fashion suggest a protective claim to belong to Yahweh (see the use made of Ezek. 9:4 in the Damascus Rule 9:10–12 of those who seek relief from the eschatological terror by the possession of this sign, and in Ps.Sol. 15:6–9). The sign of the cross on Jewish tombs and ossuaries is a development of Ezek. 9:4.

NT The single occurrence of the noun is in Gal. 6:17. Various possibilities of meaning are: that Paul asserts by this reference his claim to ownership by the Lord Jesus whose slave (doulos) he is; that he carries a badge of protection that none of his enemies in Galatia can ignore with impunity. The Galatians would be familiar with this idea of a religious teacher being under the care of the gods and so immune from attack; that the stigmata are the Christian counterpart to Jewish circumcision and are a sign of eschatological fulfilment marking out the new Israel (Gal. 6:16) as the true circumcision as in Phil. 3:3. On this verse Dibelius comments: "The thought is not that of a bodily mark but of the church's consciousness of being the new people of God". See too Rom. 2:25–29 and Col. 2:11–13.

The stigmata are not to be seen as symbols however (such as Paul's having tattooed the sign of the cross or the name of Jesus on his flesh). Rather they are scars and wounds received in his missionary service on behalf of the Gentile churches as the eschatological apostle (Col. 1:24; Eph. 3:1, 13).

Marking of God's people in Rev. 7:2 f.; 9:4; 14:1; 22:4 with seals is a metaphorical usage (→ charagma). R. P. Martin χάραγμα (charagma), mark, stamp, graven object.

| χάραγμα |

CL The underlying vb. charassō, to cut to a point, then to inscribe, which is the meaning in Sir. 50:27 and in one version of Ezek. 4:1 (LXX) where it translates the MT ḥqq. The noun means a mark, a sign caused by engraving, etching, or branding.

The vb. charassō means to cut to a point, to sharpen, in Hesiod, Works and Days 387, 573 ("whet the sickle"). The later technical sense of inscribing on wood, stone, brass is attested. Then, in a specialized meaning, it describes the casting of a die, and so the minting of coins. In the Hellenistic papyri anything written down on writing material is dia charagmatōn. This phrase in P. Lond. 5, 1658, 8 seems to mean "I pray for your health in this letter" (so Ghedini, referred to in Moulton-Milligan). Ownership of property is secured by the brand-mark (charagma). Documents are validated as true by the imposition of a stamp or seal (charagma). Imperial decrees are shown to be genuine by the same token. Currency carries the impress (charagma) as a sign of its genuineness, so Plutarch, Agesilaus, 15:6; De Lysandro 16:2; and P.Oxy. 1, 144, 6: "gold in stamped money", i.e. in coins (chrysou en obryzō charagmati).

OT charagma does not appear in LXX but the vb. charassō occurs in the texts noted above. In 3 Macc. 2:29 charagma is used for Jewish markings with pagan cult symbols. Cf. Ps.Sol. 15:8–10 where the righteous who are loyal to Israel's heritage are "marked" for God.

NT In Rev. 13:11–18 there is an apparent reference to the imperial priesthood under the figure of the second beast. It requires that universal recognition and homage be given to the "first beast" (the imperial line). The image of the emperor is made to speak (v. 15). The counterpart to this claim to divinity is that all trading is possible only as men have the "mark" (charagma) of the first beast on their right hand or forehead. That "mark" is identified with the beast's → name or → number (v. 18). Contrast Rev. 7:3 ff. where a similar "mark" denotes divine protection. In 13:16 ff. it signifies the "protection" of Satan.

This stigmatization was common in the ancient world (→ stigma), denoting ownership and preservation. Repeatedly in the Apocalypse the charagma tou thēriou, mark of the beast, denotes subservience to anti-Christian powers (14:9; 20:4; cf. 13:17; 14:11; 16:2; 19:20). This situation is matched by a "sign" from God (7:1–8) and wrath is threatened to all who bear the first mark (14:9, 11). Those who do not wear the satanic mark are promised the right to judge the evil powers (20:4).

In Acts 17:19 charagma is used in the sense of handiwork, creation, produced by the artist or craftsman.

R. P. Martin

καυστηριάζω

καυστηριάζω (kaustēriazō), mark by a branding iron, brand.

CL Cognate nouns are kaustērion (P.Lond. 2, 391, 7 ff.) meaning kiln and kautērion, branding iron. The vb. means to burn with hot iron, to brand.

Branding iron (kautērion) is possibly attested in Euripides, Fr. 815 (conj.), while the vb. is found in Strabo, Geog. 5, 1, 9: "a great herd of unbranded [akautēriastōn] horses", and in a possible reading in BGU, III, 952, 4 (Wilcken's reconstructed text is: [kaustēria]zousi tēn gypson).

OT The LXX does not have the vb., but 4 Macc. 15:22 has kautērion in the sense of branding iron.

NT The sole NT occurrence is 1 Tim. 4:2. False teachers have their conscience "branded [kekaustēriasmenōn]". The brand mark is the sign of ownership (→ stigma), and the condition of these heretics is probably that of men who are possessed by Satan and demonic forces. Alternatively it means that their conscience is "cauterized", or "seared" (RSV), i.e. made insensible to moral distinctions.

→ Cross, → Image R. P. Martin

On stigma:
(a). Arndt, 776; O. Betz, stigma, TDNT VII 657–64; M. Black, "The Chi-Rho Sign – Christogram and/or Staurogram?" in W. W. Gasque and R. P. Martin, eds., Apostolic History and the Gospel, Biblical and Historical Essays Presented to F. F. Bruce, 1970, 319–27; T. W. Crafer, "The Stoning of St. Paul", The Expositor, 8th Series 6, 1913, 375–84; A. Deissmann, Bible Studies, 1909, 349 ff.; E. Dinkler, "Comments on the History of the Symbol of the Cross", Journal for Theology and the Church 1, 1965, 124–45; J. H. Moulton, "The Marks of Jesus", ExpT 21, 1909–10, 283 f.; Moulton-Milligan, 590; W. M. Ramsay, A Historical Commentary on St. Paul's Epistle to the Galatians, 1900, 472 ff.
(b). F.-J. Dölger, Sphragis, 1911, 39 ff.; and "Beiträge zur Geschichte des Kreuzzeichens", Jahrbuch für Antike und Christentum 1958–61; A. Oepke, Der Brief des Paulus an die Galater, Theologischer Handkommentar zum Neuen Testament, 1964², 163–66; O. Schmitz, Die Christus-Gemeinschaft des Paulus im Lichte seines Genitivusgebrauchs, 1924, 185–94.

On charagma:
(a). A. Deissmann, Light from the Ancient East, 1927, 341; and Bible Studies, 1909, 240–47; Moulton-Milligan, 683; U. Wilckens, charagma, TDNT IX, 416 f. Commentaries on Revelation by R. H. Charles, I–II, ICC, 1920; and G. R. Beasley-Murray, New Century Bible, 1974.
(b). E. Lohmeyer, Die Offenbarung des Johannes, HNT 16, 1926, 1970³; and E. Lohse, Die Offenbarung des Johannes, NTD 11, 1960, on Rev. 13:8; E. Stauffer, "666", in Coniectanea Neotestamentica 11, 1947, 237 ff.

On kaustēriazō:
(a). Moulton-Milligan, 339; J. Schneider, kaustēriazomai, TDNT III 644 f. Commentaries on the Pastoral Epistles by M. Dibelius and H. Conzelmann, Hermeneia, 1973; B. S. Easton, 1947; E. K. Simpson, 1954; J. N. D. Kelly, Harper-BNTC, 1963.
(b). SB III 579; C. Spicq, Les Épîtres Pastorales, 1969⁴.

Marriage, Adultery, Bride, Bridegroom

γαμέω

γαμέω (gameō), marry; γάμος (gamos), wedding; γαμίζω (gamizō), give in marriage; γαμίσκω (gamiskō), give in marriage.

CL gameō is derived from the root gam- or gem-, to fit together, pair. The root is possibly related to gennaō, beget, bring forth. The noun gamos means wedding, marriage, consummation of marriage, whether regarded as temporary or permanent, the wedding feast. The vb. gameō means to marry, celebrate a wedding, have sexual relations. gamizō and gamiskō are later forms meaning give in marriage, i.e. a daughter.

Even though we may find numerous traces of polygamy and polyandry in the Gk. myths, monogamy predominated in the Gk. world in the historical period. Morality within marriage was strict. The Homeric hero had one wife, who was faithful and inviolable, a good manager of the home and mother. Gk. marriage was monogamous. On the other hand, the man had great freedom. He could have concubines or have relations with harlots (→ Discipline, art. porneuō CL). Adultery in the Gk. states and under Roman law was severely punished, especially in the case of the woman (cf. OCD 10 f., 649 f.).

In the Hellenistic period marriage morals had become generally looser. There was much prostitution in the towns, especially in the ports, above all in Corinth. The oriental cults had introduced sacred prostitution. Sexual relationships with the priestesses became part of the cultus and granted a sharing in the divine, and were referred to by the term hieros gamos, sacred marriage.

OT 1. The terms gameō and gamos are only seldom found in the LXX. gamos (Heb. mišteh) occurs in the canonical books only at Gen. 29:22; Est. 2:18; 9:22. The OT law contains no prescribed form of marriage ceremony. In spite of this, marriage is in fact of great importance. Both in primeval history and in that of the patriarchs the history of tribes and people is narrated as family histories. In the genealogies (e.g. Gen. 5) marriage and the begetting of children (especially males) are the most important features of the lives mentioned. Even though from → Abraham down to the kings there is evidence for polygamy (e.g. Gen. 16:1 ff.; 25:6; 29:21–30; 1 Sam. 18:27; 25:42 f.; 2 Sam. 3:2–5), monogamy occupies the central position, especially in those passages that are important for our understanding of marriage. It is presupposed in Gen. 1:26 ff. and 2:18–24. The royal law in Deut. also demands of the king that "he shall not multiply wives for himself, lest his heart turn away" (Deut. 17:17; cf. 1 Ki. 11:1–11).

In the OT marriage is clearly regarded from the husband's standpoint and serves above all for the begetting of offspring (cf. Gen. 1:28). In order to achieve this end a man might take another wife (cf. Gen. 16:1 ff., → Abraham; levirate marriage, Deut. 25:5–10, but note Lev. 20:21; → 5 below). At the same time the wife is loved and taken seriously as a partner (Gen. 2:23 f.). She is a partner in a sexual and personal sense (Gen. 1:27 f.) and in the second creation narrative she is described as a "helper" (Heb. 'ēzer; LXX boēthos) (Gen. 2:18b). The partnership continues in the fall and in the problems of sexuality created by it (Gen. 3).

2. Adultery was severely punished in the OT (Deut. 22:22–27; Exod. 20:14; Lev. 18:20; 20:10; Deut. 5:18). Even adultery committed unwittingly is hateful to God (Gen. 20:3–7). Adultery was also understood as a feature of paganism; God's people were to be fundamentally different in sexual practices and marriage (cf. 1 Cor. 6:12–20; 5:9–12). This prepares us for the prophetic picture of marriage for man's relationship to God (see below 3).

Originally → divorce depended solely on the man (cf. Deut. 24:1–4; Jer. 3:8), but later it became possible also for the woman (Elephantine). The many laws about the various sexual offences show how the elemental power of sexuality, which threatens the family and society, should be restrained and directed into the channels willed by God. Especially in the later period concern was felt with the problem of mixed marriages with foreigners which were forbidden (Deut. 7:3 f.; 20:16 ff.; 21:10 ff.; Ezr. 9 f.), though earlier cases of such marriages are exemplified (Gen. 41:45, Joseph; Exod. 2:21; Num. 12:1, Moses; Jdg. 14:1; 2 Sam. 11:3). Heathen marriages undermined allegiance to Yahweh especially in the case of Solomon (1 Ki. 11:1–11).

3. If adultery was a violation of the divine law and so also an offence against the → covenant, participation in the Canaanite fertility rites was an offence against both marriage and God. Hosea was the first to express the people's apostasy as harlotry and a breach of the marriage bond between God and Israel, and he did it more clearly than any other (Hos. 1 ff.; cf. Jer. 2:2, 10, 25; 3:1–25; Ezek. 16, 23; Isa.

50:1). His own act in marrying a harlot at the divine behest (Hos. 1:2) was symbolic of Yahweh's relationship with Israel. It is mercy, stretching far beyond all law, which causes God not to annihilate or cast off his people, as the law of marriage demanded, but to turn to them again in spite of all their disloyalty and even to promise them a new covenant. W. Günther

4. The law contained certain forbidden degrees of marriage and sexual intercourse (Lev. 18:6–18). The Israelite was forbidden "to uncover the nakedness" of his mother, stepmother, sister or half-sister, grand-daughter, daughter of a stepmother, aunt, daughter-in-law, brother's wife (unless she died childless, see levirate marriage, below 5), a woman and her daughter, a woman and her granddaughter, two sisters at the same time, or mother-in-law. Intercourse during menstruation was forbidden, as was adultery generally, homosexual practices and defilement with animals (Lev. 18:19–33). Certain of these offences were punishable by death (Deut. 27:20–23), whereas in other instances there is the warning that the offending parties shall bear their iniquity and die childless (Lev. 12:12–18; 20:19 ff.; but cf. also the story of Tamar, the daughter-in-law of Judah, who bore twins to him, Gen. 38).

In addition, certain prohibitions were attached to the priesthood. The high-priest was permitted to marry only a virgin selected from his own people (Lev. 21:13 f.), and priests were forbidden to marry prostitutes and divorced women (21:7). Num. 36:5–9 contains a prohibition against an heiress marrying outside her own tribe (cf. Tob. 7:10).

A man who falsely accused his bride of not being a virgin could be fined a hundred shekels, whipped, and compelled to take her as his wife (Deut. 22:13–19). But if his accusation proved true, the woman was to be stoned to death (Deut. 22:20 f.). A man who raped a virgin who was already betrothed (in open country where she could not summon help) was liable to the death penalty (Deut. 22:25 ff.). But in the case of a woman who was not betrothed, the man was to take her as his wife and pay the girl's father the sum of fifty shekels (Deut. 22:28 f.).

5. The so-called levirate marriage (from the Lat. levir, brother-in-law) refers to the marriage of a man with his deceased brother's widow in the event of his dying childless. The widow was not to remarry outside the family and the unmarried brother was to perform the duties of a husband to her to raise up children to the deceased, in order to perpetuate his name in Israel. If the man refused, the woman was entitled to subject him to public disgrace before the elders (Deut. 25:5–10). The practice was not peculiar to the Jews in their early history. It has been found among numerous Eastern peoples, particularly in Arabia and the Caucasus. The OT contains two instances of the practice. In the patriarchal period Onan deliberately spilled his semen on the ground, lest the offspring should be counted as his brother's. His own subsequent death was pronounced a divine judgment on him (Gen. 38:8 ff.). The book of Ruth tells the story of Ruth offering herself to Boaz, believing him to be the nearest kinsman to her deceased husband. However, Boaz at first declined on the grounds that there was a nearer kinsman. Only when the latter refused did Boaz take Ruth to wife (Ruth. 4:1–13). (On Ruth see further H. H. Rowley, "The Marriage of Ruth", in The Servant of the Lord and Other Essays on the Old Testament, 1965², 169–94; D. A. Leggett, The Levirate and Goel Institutions in the Old Testament with Special Attention to the Book of Ruth, 1974; S. B. Parker, "The Marriage Blessing in Israelite and Ugaritic Literature", JBL 95, 1976, 23–30).

The practice of levirate marriage seems to be presupposed in the question of the Sadducees concerning the marital status in the resurrection of a woman who had married seven brothers each dying childless (Matt. 22:22–33; Mk. 12:18–27; Lk. 20:27–38). Jesus' reply rebuked the Sadducees for not knowing the scriptures or the power of God. For in the resurrection the present marital relationships with their physical ties are transcended and the dead raised are like the angels (hōs angeloi, Matt. 22:30, Mk. 12:25; isangeloi†, Lk. 20:36). Nevertheless, they live because God is the God of the living (Matt. 22:32; Mk. 12:27; Lk. 20:38; cf. Exod. 3:6).

6. No restrictions on the age of marriage are given in the OT, though early marriage is sometimes spoken of with approval (Prov. 2:17; 5:18; Isa. 62:5). In the patriarchal age it was considered the duty of the bridegroom's father to secure a bride for his son (Gen. 24:3; 38:6; Exod. 2:21; but cf. Gen. 21:21 when this fell to the mother). The selection of the bride was followed by formal betrothal, confirmed by oaths and a dowry (Heb. mōhar, Gen. 34:12; Exod. 22:16; 1 Sam. 18:25). The OT law contained no formal marriage ceremony. Gen. 29:22, 27 suggests that the custom at the time of Jacob was for a feast to be given by the bride's father at which the bride was given to the groom. The union was then consummated. The feast could last as long as seven and even fourteen days (cf. Jdg. 14:12; Tob. 8:19). The fact that Jacob was permitted after seven days to take Laban's other daughter, Rachel, in addition to Leah, suggests that polygamy was openly countenanced. Certain passages suggest a ratification by oath (Prov. 2:17; Ezek. 16:8; Mal. 2:14) and that a blessing was pronounced (Gen. 24:60; Ruth. 4:11 f.). The OT expression "to take a wife" seems to express the literal truth of what happened (Num. 12:1; 1 Chron. 2:21; cf. the action of Ruth in approaching Boaz, Ruth 3:6 ff.). The action was normally expressed in the ceremonial taking of the bride from her father's house to that of the bridegroom or his father. The practice of companions attending the groom (Jdg. 14:11) seems to have continued in the NT period (Matt. 19:15). He was preceded by singers or musicians (Gen. 31:27; Jer. 7:34; 16:9; 1 Macc. 9:39) and accompanied by torch-bearers or lamp-bearers (2 Esd. 10:2; Jer. 25:10; Matt. 25:7; Rev. 18:23). The bride awaited the groom with her maidens who conducted the whole party back to his own home (Matt. 25:6; Cant. 3:11). In NT times and no doubt earlier friends and neighbours participated in the feast that then took place (Matt. 22:1–10; Lk. 14:8; Jn. 2:2). A newly betrothed man was exempt from military service for a year lest he be killed in battle (Deut. 20:7). Similarly, the newly married man was exempt from military service and any public business that might take him away from his wife for a whole year (Deut. 24:5).

7. There is evidence of the practice of polygamy in Palestinian Judaism in NT times (cf. J. Jeremias, Jerusalem in the Time of Jesus: An Investigation into Economic and Social Conditions during the New Testament Period, 1969, 90, 93, 369f.). Herod the Great (37–4 B.C.) had ten wives (Josephus, Ant. 17, 19f.; War 1,562) and a considerable harem (War 1,511). Polygamy and concubinage among the aristocracy is attested by Josephus, Ant. 12, 186ff.; 13, 380; War 1, 97. The continued practice of levirate marriage (Yeb. 15b) evidently led to polygamy, which was countenanced by the school of Shammai but not by that of Hillel. For detailed evidence of polygamy see J. Leipold, Jesus und die Frauen, 1921, 44–49. The practice of taking a second wife, if there was dissension with the first, was evidently often due to the high price fixed in the marriage contract which made divorce prohibitive (Yeb. 63b). According to the investigations of H. Grandqvist, in the village of Aretas near Bethlehem twelve out of 112 married men had more than one wife (Marriage Conditions in a Palestinian Village, II, 1935, 205).

8. According to Philo, the Essenes condemned marriage (Hypothetica 11, 14). Josephus reported that they disdained marriage, although one order of Essenes allowed it so as to propagate the race (War 2, 8, 2 and 13). The Community Rule (1 QS) is curiously silent on the subject, but the Messianic Rule permits sexual relations, i.e. marriage, on reaching maturity, i.e. the age of twenty (1QSa 1:6–11). M. Black sees in the Essene attitude an underlying tendency to regard all sexual functions and relations as unclean (The Scrolls and Christian Origins: Studies in the Jewish Background of the New Testament, 1961, 29). Total renunciation meant complete holiness, especially in a priestly sect. It may also be connected with the idea of the consecration of the warrior in the holy war (cf. The War Scroll, 1QM), the protest against the corrupt temple priesthood (cf. CD 8:8–18) and the Pharisaic permission of divorce (op. cit., 29–32; cf. also A. R. C. Leaney, The Rule of Qumran and its Meaning, 1966, 31ff., 170f., 211). C. Brown NT 1. The use of this word-group in the NT can hardly be distinguished from that in secular Gk. On principle the words are not used in the NT for extra-marital relationships. In Matt. 22:11 f. the gen. gamou is used for the adj. in the expression endyma gamou, wedding garment.

For the OT, Palestinian rabbinism and for Gk. Hellenistic civilization marriage and married life are self-evident institutions, and so they are taken for granted in the NT. Hence, the verb (e.g. Mk. 6:17; Lk. 14:20), and the noun (Jn. 2:1 f.) are used without any theological connotation.

The NT deals with questions concerning the relationship of men and woman far more frequently than the use of this word-group might suggest (→ Woman; → Divorce; → Discipline, art. porneuō; → Join, Cleave to; and below → art. nymphē). Sexual offences are fundamental offences against marriage. The fact that they are repeatedly mentioned in lists of sins shows that they are especially signs that sin is dependence on the sarx (→ Flesh).

2. Marriage as an institution is clearly presupposed in the NT. It is not based on human regulations but on God's commandment. This is shown by the frequent references to the creation story (Gen. 1:27; 2:24; cf. Mk. 10:6 f.; Matt. 19:4 f.; 1 Cor. 6:16; Eph. 5:31). It always refers to the shared life of a man with a woman. Though the NT also essentially looks on marriage from the man's standpoint (as the kephalē, head, 1 Cor. 11:3; Eph. 5:23), the Gk. and the OT traditions are so transcended that the man's special rights fall away, and throughout the NT the shared life of husband and wife stands in the foreground (cf. 1 Cor. 7:3; Eph. 5:21–33; Col. 3:18 f.). The NT attacks both → divorce and sexual impurity (→ Discipline). In one place there is also an attack on false teachers who in fanatical exaggeration forbade marriage (1 Tim. 4:3). An unbroken marriage is assumed as something self-evident for the Christian (Matt. 5:27–31; 19:9; Mk. 10:11 f.; Lk. 16:18; 1 Cor. 7:10–16; 1 Thess. 4:4; 1 Tim. 3:2, 12; Heb. 13:4).

3. In the Sermon on the Mount Jesus speaks about the seventh commandment (Matt. 5:27 f.; cf. Exod. 20:14; Deut. 5:18). In the dawning kingdom of God adultery is a sin which shows that one's heart is attached to man, not to God. In God's sight the lustful eye and the desiring thought are reckoned as the completed act. The pericope concerning the woman taken in adultery is not in the oldest manuscripts of Jn. (Jn. 7:53–8:11), but nevertheless belongs to an early tradition. It shows Jesus, the Judge, as the Saviour who is prepared to forgive this sin also. Thereby he showed himself to be the sovereign Lord of Creation, of its order and of the Law. On this passage see also J. D. M. Derrett, "The Woman Taken in Adultery", Law in the New Testament, 1970, 156–88.

In the same context (Matt. 5:31 f.) Jesus speaks also of → divorce. In the law Deut. 24:1 in principle permits divorce, but there was controversy among the rabbis as to the grounds which justified it (Matt. 19:3; cf. SB I 303 ff.; II 23 f.). Jesus, however, met this permission in principle with a radical prohibition (Mk. 10:2–2). Only in Matt. 5:32 and 19:9 is divorce permitted on the grounds of porneia, unchastity (→ Discipline, art. porneuō). The question of divorce occupies a relatively important place in the NT (Mk. 10:2–12; Matt. 19:3–9; Lk. 16:18; 1 Cor. 7:10 f.). The fundamental rejection of divorce is based on God's command and order (Matt. 19:5 f.). (For further discussion → Divorce.)

4. Facing the question of the Sadducees concerning the status in the resurrection of a wife who had had more than one husband (Matt. 22:23–33; Mk. 12:18–27, Lk. 20:27–38) Jesus pointed to God and the dawning kingdom, where the problem raised by the scribes would lose all relevance, for marriage as an institution would then no longer exist. Jesus' statements are always to be understood in the light of the fact that the new age was dawning in his person (cf. Matt. 24:38; Lk. 17:26). In other words, passages like Matt. 19:9–12 do not simply proclaim the end of the OT marriage law. It is rather a question of the correct interpretation of this law and grasping God's will for this eschatological age. Jesus was in the perspective of Matthew, as it were, the second Moses, the law-giver of the eschatological era. The question concerning → eunuchs (Matt. 19:12) is also to be understood eschatologically. The exigencies of the times call for celibacy from those who have the gift. Those who had received it could voluntarily renounce marriage, for such a step was seen as necessary for the service of God (dia tēn basileian, for the sake of the kingdom of heaven). John the Baptist, and later Paul, remained unmarried. They show symbolically that marriage is only something provisional in the light of the coming kingdom (cf. 1 Cor. 7:1–9, 26–29).

5. Both in the OT and among Jesus' contemporaries a wedding was the occasion for a festive meal. Hence gamos can also mean the wedding feast; such a feast is described in Jn. 2:1–11. In Matt. 22:1–14 Jesus uses a royal wedding feast as a parable. As background for it we have the parallelism of God and the king, the concept of the eschatological feast (cf. Isa. 25:6), the Rab. picture of the marriage feast of the messiah with his people (SB I 517), the exposition of Cant. as expressing the love between Yahweh and his people, and the prophetic picture of marriage to represent the relationship between Yahweh and Israel given from Hosea on. Earthly marriage is to be superseded by the eschatological union of God with his people. As the messiah Jesus is the true bridegroom (→ art. nymphē). The decisive factor is sharing his feast (Matt. 25:1–13; cf. Lk. 12:36–40). The record of the institution of the → Lord's Supper (especially Matt. 26:29; Lk. 22:30) links the messianic meal with the explanation of the death of Jesus. The marriage feast of the → Lamb (Rev. 19:7 ff.) means the final union of the triumphant Christ with his own.

6. (a) Arising out of certain happenings in the Corinthian church Paul deals in 1 Cor. 5 ff. with various questions concerning marriage. He starts with a warning against all kinds of unchastity, and then deals with marriage itself. He appeals to the word of Jesus and rejects divorce (1 Cor. 7:10; cf. Mk. 10:9 ff. par. Matt. 19:6–9; Lk. 16:18). Paul looks on marriage as secondary when compared to faith. He goes so far as to recommend celibacy as a special gift in the light of the near end (7:1, 7; cf. Matt. 19:12). Marriage, like all worldly activity, stands under the hōs mē, as if not (7:29 ff.); those who have should live as if they had not. This is the standpoint from which the question of mixed marriages with unbelievers is handled (7:12–16). The unbelieving partner is to decide whether it is to continue. The Christian partner, on the other hand, should be prepared to let it continue, i.e. only the heathen partner has freedom of choice. The consecration of such a mixed marriage by the believing partner is to be understood as a very real power, for here grace is stronger than the unbelief of the heathen partner. It is the means of bringing the children within the covenant relationship, for otherwise they would be unclean. It may also result in the salvation of the unbelieving partner.

The meaning of 1 Cor. 7:36 ff. is not absolutely clear. We do not know whether it refers to a couple living together ascetically in so-called spiritual marriage, to whom Paul is giving permission later to enter into full physical union, or to a father (or a guardian or master) who did not wish to offend against custom or Rab. command by not marrying off his daughter (ward, slave-girl) at the usual age (cf. A. Robertson and A. Plummer, The First Epistle of St. Paul to the Corinthians, ICC, 1911, 159; SB III 376 f.). The use of the verb gamizō, give in marriage, in v. 38 makes the second interpretation more probable. gamizō, a synonym of gamiskō, is found in the NT only in Matt. 22:30; 24:38; Mk. 12:25; Lk. 17:27; 20:20:34 f.; 1 Cor. 7:38. Except in the last passage it clearly means to give in marriage. It is a term that is normally applied only to the father, guardian or owner who gives a girl under his control in marriage to another man. The interpretation that we are here dealing with a spiritual marriage can be held only if one assumes that gamizō here is equivalent to gameō (cf. Arndt). AV, RV, Weymouth, Knox, JB, NEB mg all take gamizō as give in marriage; Moffatt, Phillips, RSV, NEB tx take it as equivalent to gameo. → hyperakmos below. On the interpretation of 1 Tim. 3:2, 12 and Tit. 1:6 → Man, art. anēr NT 3.

(b) Paul also saw marriage as a picture of man's relationship to God. In Rom. 9:25 f. he quotes Hos. 2:23 alluding to the names of Hosea's children lō' ruḥāmâh (Not Pitied) and lō' 'ammî (Not my People) (cf. Hos. 1:6 ff.). For despite these names Yahweh will nevertheless have pity on his people and restore them. Paul sees in this promise grounds for the inclusion of Gentiles in the people of God. He uses the picture of marriage in 2 Cor. 11:2 to warn against apostasy. It is reversed in Eph. 5:22 ff. Because Christ is the bridegroom of the church, marriage should be held holy. In Eph. 5:32 the marriage relationship is described as a mystērion, which is symbolic of the relationship of Christ to the church. It is all the more reason why husbands and wives should love one another. The picture of marriage lies also behind the expression "adulterous generation" (Matt. 12:39; 16:4; Mk. 8:38). It is possible that these passages are referring to the factual moral conditions among the people, but the context and OT linguistic usage suggest that Jesus was alluding to the people's attitude to God (→ Generation). "The woman Jezebel" (Rev. 2:20 ff.) and "the great harlot" (Rev. 17:1) are pictures of the great apostasy from God, the great Husband and Lord. The former alludes to the wife of King Ahab who served Baal and sought the life of → Elijah (1 Ki. 16:31; 18:4, 13; 19:1 f.; 21:5–25; 2 Ki. 9:7–37). The church at Thyatira is warned against tolerating the woman Jezebel (i.e. those who practice and teach things characterized by her name). The great harlot is identified as → Babylon (17:5) who typifies the world. W. Günther μοιχεύω μοιχεύω (moicheuō), commit adultery; μοιχεία (moicheia), adultery; μοιχός (moichos), adulterer; μοιχαλίς (moichalis), adulteress, prostitute.

CL moicheuō and its Doric counterpart moichaō mean to commit adultery (with acc.). Sometimes they are used more generally, seduce a woman, violate; hence in mid. let oneself be seduced, in pass. be seduced to adultery. The derivatives include moicheia, adultery, harlotry (cf. porneia → Discipline); moichos, Adulterer; moichalis, first an adj. meaning adulterous, and, secondly, a noun meaning adulteress, harlot.

Adultery was punishable already in the old law codes going back to the second millennium B.C., e.g. the Lipit-Ishtar Code, the Code of Hammurabi, the old Ass. laws (cf. ANET, 159 ff., 163–88). Every form of sexual relationship outside marriage was forbidden to the wife, for she was the real guarantor of the integrity of the family and clan, and by adultery she broke her own marriage and she destroyed the integrity of the whole clan. A man on the contrary committed adultery only by sexual relationships with a married woman, i.e. when breaking into another's arrangement. At the same time traces of older concepts behind these legal views from different cultures may be detected: (a) adultery with a married woman involves an offence against property, i.e. the invasion of the area of another's possessions, and (b) the woman committing adultery opens the clan to the influence of evil powers. The punishment of adultery by death, ill-treatment or the payment of an expiatory fine was normally left to the private initiative of the wronged husband or of his clan.

OT 1. The LXX uses the Gk. word-group for Heb. nā'ap̄ and its derivatives. There adultery, as in other societies, covered (i) every extra-marital sexual relationship by a married woman; (ii) the extra-marital sexual relationship of a man with a married or engaged woman (Gen. 16:1–4; 30:1–4; 38:15 f.; Lev. 19:20 ff.; Deut. 22:28 f. are examples of extra-marital sexual relationships by a man). Adultery was punishable by death, normally by stoning (but cf. Gen. 38:24), of both parties (Lev. 20:10; Deut. 22:22 ff.; Ezek. 16:40; cf. Jn. 8:5). In contrast to usage outside Israel (see above CL) adultery was a matter of public concern, since it offended not only against the foundations and personal rights of marriage and family but also against the law of God (Exod. 20:14) and so threatened the basis of the people's existence (Deut. 22:22b). Hence, the punishment had to be inflicted by the community. If a woman was suspected of adultery a test of guilt or innocence was prescribed (Num. 5:11–31) to be carried out by the priests who required her to take an oath of innocence and drink the water containing the ashes of a cereal offering.

2. In Hosea's life and message marriage and adultery are used allegorically for the relationship between Yahweh and his people (→ gameō OT 2, NT 6 (b)). The actual reason for the use of this picture may well have been the introduction of Canaanite wedding and fertility rites into Israel's life (4:12 ff.; 9:1 ff.). When Israel separated from Yahweh and sacrificed to strange gods, the nation acted as an adulteress who leaves her husband and plays the harlot with other men (2:2 ff. [MT 2:4 ff.]). God would severely punish this adultery (5:7 ff.), but this would not have as its purpose the complete destruction of the adulteress but her repentance (3:5). This picture was later taken up by Jeremiah (cf. Jer. 2:2; 3:1–10; 5:7; 13:22, 26) and by Ezekiel during the exile (cf. Ezek. 16:1–63; 23:37–45).

3. The very serious warnings against adultery in the wisdom literature (cf. Prov. 6:20–35; cf. Sir. 25:2) show a weakening of strict marriage morality in the course of Israel's history (cf. especially Prov. 6:35, which suggests compensation by money payment, and Mal. 2:14 ff.). It is the mark of the fool to be led astray by the harlot. His action will bring not only disgrace but also ruin and judgment (cf. also Prov. 2:16 ff.; 7:5–27; 30:20). The serious social consequences of adultery were also a cause for concern.

4. There are also stern warnings in Test. XII (Test.Jos. 4:6 ff.; 5:1), Philo (Decal. 121 f., 124, 126, 129, 131), the Mishnah (especially the Tractate Sotah [The Adulteress]), and the Talmud (see further TDNT IV 731 f.). In Roman times the death penalty was no longer exacted (cf. A. N. Sherwin-White, Roman Society and Roman Law in the New Testament, 1965², 40 f.; TDNT IV 732 f.).

NT The word-group is used in the NT with the same meaning, both direct and metaphorical, as in secular Gk. sometimes quoting Exod. 20:14 (Deut. 5:18), e.g. Matt. 19:18 f.; Mk. 10:19; Lk. 18:20; Jas. 2:11; Rom. 13:9.

1. At the same time the NT's understanding of marriage and hence of adultery is carried forward to a position known neither to secular Gk. nor the OT. (a) Adultery in the man is unreservedly measured by the same standards as in the woman (Matt. 5:32; Mk. 10:11 f.; Lk. 16:18). (b) The desire, i.e. the willingness to commit the act, is equivalent to adultery itself (Matt. 5:27 f.). (c) Since the NT considers marriage by its nature to be indissoluble (Mk. 10:8), remarriage following divorce permitted by the OT on the grounds of the hardness of men's hearts enters the realm of adultery (Matt. 5:31 f.; 19:9). Admittedly, marriage in Matt. 5 is considered from the standpoint of the wife and its breach is judged accordingly (cf. Rom. 7:3 with CL and OT 1 above). In Matt. 19:9, however, Jesus applies the statement also to the man who divorces his wife, marries again, and so commits adultery. In both passages, in contrast to Mk. 10:11 f., Lk. 16:18, Matt. recognizes an exception on the grounds of porneia that permits divorce (→ Discipline, art. porneuō; → Divorce). (d) Adultery is incompatible with the hope of life in the kingdom of God (1 Cor. 6:9 f), and is under God's judgment (Heb. 13:4). It is therefore characteristic that a destructive libertinism (2 Pet. 2:14) goes hand in hand with doubts about the return of Christ and the judgment to follow (2 Pet. 3:3–7).

2. Jesus' severe condemnation of adultery does not exclude God's mercy to the repentant sinner, whose conversion he desires (Matt. 21:13 f.; Lk. 18:9–14; cf. 1 Cor. 6:9 ff.). The adulteress, who had earned the death-penalty, had her guilt forgiven while the apparently guiltless multitude had a mirror held up to their hypocritical self-righteousness (Jn. 8:3–11). At the same time the impenitent perverts are excluded from the kingdom (1 Tim. 1:10; Heb. 13:4; Rev. 21:8; 22:15).

3. The theme of adultery is used in the NT in a metaphorical sense as in OT prophecy (cf. Jas. 4:4), where adulterers (moichalides; RSV "unfaithful creatures!") are lovers of the world. Similarly Israel is called "an evil and adulterous generation [genea ponēra kai moichalis]" as it is typified by its religious representatives; → Pharisees and scribes (Matt. 12:39), → Sadducees (Matt. 16:4). Although some expositors see in the phrase a judgment on the factual, moral situation, a metaphorical explanation is probable. This contemporary → generation, a people shown to be disloyal to God by its rejection of Jesus (cf. Mk. 8:38), is characterized by its desire for a → sign when there is already proof enough of God's love present in Jesus. H. Reisser νύμφη (nymphē), bride; νυμφίος (nymphios), bridegroom; νυμφών (nymphōn), wedding hall, bride chamber.

νύμφη

CL nymphē is found already in Mycenaean Gk. (linear B) and is linked with Lat. nurus. It means the bride or betrothed. The use of the term is not restricted to the context of the wedding ceremony. It can be equally applied to a virgin, a young woman and a young wife. Similarly nymphios means both the bridegroom, the betrothed and the young husband. nymphē is also a term used for feminine deities of lower rank (→ Woman).

In Hellenism, especially in the gnostic systems, the picture of bridegroom and bride is used for the relationship of the sōtēr, saviour, to men, and is taken into the concept of hieros gamos, sacred marriage. This prepared the way for religious eroticism, which even today prefers to use the allegory of engagement and marriage to express the mystical relationship of the individual soul to the deity (→ art. gameō).

OT The later NT linguistic usage is primarily determined by the earlier Jewish customs and ideas. In the OT there are incidental references to the customs that preceded the wedding (e.g. Gen. 24:59 ff.; Jos. 15:18 f.; Jdg. 14; Isa. 61:10; Cant.). A girl was capable of marriage at twelve, a young man at fifteen. While their personal choice probably played a part, an agreement made between their families was essential. Because Heb. kallâh covers both, the LXX uses nymphē also for daughter-in-law (cf. Gen. 11:31; 38:11; Ruth 1:6).

In the foreground of the OT passages mentioning bride and bridegroom stands the joy that they have in one another. This finds its finest expression in Cant. (cf. also Ps. 45; Isa. 61:10; 62:5; Jer. 7:34; 16:9). This joy is applied metaphorically to the relationship between Yahweh and Israel, and especially to the worship in which the congregation rejoiced in Yahweh as the eternal king and founder of the kingdom of peace in Zion (Ps. 45; Isa. 60:1 ff.). This picture corresponds to the title of Israel as bride of Yahweh (Jer. 2:2; Isa. 49:18; 62:5).

Late Jud. continued this fig. usage. Cant. was recognized as canonical, because it was interpreted as an allegory of the relationship of Yahweh to Israel. The expected salvation was described as a marriage, i.e. as the final and complete union of God with his people (SB I 517).

NT nymphē is used almost exclusively as a metaphor in the NT. In Matt. 10:35 and Lk. 12:53 it means, conformably with Jewish usage, daughter-in-law. The bride can also be called gynē (→ Woman), because by Jewish laws of marriage the engaged woman was already regarded as wife. This usage is found in Matt. 1:20, 24; Rev. 19:7; 21:9 (cf. SB II 393 ff.). nymphios in the NT is bridegroom, literally and metaphorically (Jn. 2:9; 3:29; Matt. 25:1, 6; Rev. 18:23). The hyioi tou nymphōnos, the "children of the bride chamber" (AV) were the relations and friends; "the bridegroom's friends" (NEB) is preferable to "the wedding guests" (RSV). They were indispensable for the carrying through of the festive ceremonial (Matt. 9:15; Mk. 2:19 f.; Lk. 5:34; cf. Jn. 3:29; cf. SB I 500–18; F. W. Lewis, "Who were the Sons of the Bride-Chamber? (Mark ii. 18–22)", ExpT 24, 1912–13, 285).

1. The wedding period is, as in the OT, a time of joy, especially of anticipation of joy. These ideas in the NT are part of the eschatological imagery (→ gameō). In Matt. 9:15 par. Mk. 2:19 f. and Lk. 5:35 Jesus → rejects the need to → fast at the present time. The time of the messiah's presence was commonly compared to a wedding (Isa. 62:5). The implication is that with Jesus the messianic age has dawned. The disciples were filled with joy because Jesus was with them. The parable of the ten virgins (Matt. 25:1–13) belongs also in this setting, though it is also a parable of judgment, stressing the need for being awake and waiting. The OT parallelism bride and bridegroom, symbolizing Israel and Yahweh, is here applied to the church and Jesus (cf. SB I 501–18; 898; IV 432 f.).

2. In Jn. 3:29 f. the relationship of the Baptist to Jesus is described as that of the bridegroom's "friend", ho philos tou nymphiou, whose part was that of the best man. The final age first begins with Jesus, but the "friend" prepared the way for him and has no greater joy than in seeing the wedding come to pass, i.e. the dawn of reconciliation and of the kingdom in Christ. On philos → love, art. phileō NT 2.

3. The picture of the bridegroom and bride applies to Christ and the church in 2 Cor. 11:2. Paul describes himself as the one who presented them to Christ "as a pure bride to her one husband" (here parthenos means virgin, i.e. bride; → Woman). But he fears lest they be led astray from pure devotion, just as Eve was led astray (11:3). The picture of marriage is applied to Christ and the church in Eph. 5:22–32 (→ gameō).

4. In the last chs. of Rev., which describe the final consummation, we find the picture of the church-bride waiting for her heavenly bridegroom, here called the → Lamb of God. Joy once again stands in the foreground (19:7, 9). The church rejoices and adorns herself so as to welcome Christ as her Lord (21:2, 9 ff.). She is the heavenly → Jerusalem, the eschatological church, who in longing like that of a bride looks for the final fulfilment of her existence and calls out "Come, Lord Jesus!" (22:17, 20). W. Günther κοίτη | κοίτη (koitē), bed, marriage bed, intercourse.

CL In secular Gk. koitē, besides its common meaning bed, connotes the marriage bed (Aeschylus, Sophocles). It was used also of the den of an animal or the nest of a bird as well as of a box or basket.

OT In Wis. 3:13 the word is used in the phrase hētis ouk egnō koitēn en paraptōmati ("who has not known intercourse in transgression") to describe an illicit union. In Wis. 3:16 koitē occurs in combination with sperma in a sense similar to the use of šiḵbaṯ-zera' (lit. discharge of seed) in Heb. where the connotation is that of coitus (Lev. 15:18; 18:20; 19:20; Num. 5:13; cf. Lev. 15:16 f., 32; 22:4; see further below). The Greek expression is modified by paranomou (unlawful) to connote the concept of illicit sexual congress. In Sir. 23:18 v.l. the word koitē occurs in the phrase pornos parabainōn apo tēs koitēs autou to describe "a fornicator who strays from his marriage bed."

In the LXX koitē stands for a number of Heb. words, most frequently forms of the verb šāḵaḇ, lie down. It represents the noun miškāḇ on numerous occasions with the basic meaning of bed, as the place of sleep or rest (e.g. 2 Sam. 11:13; 1 Ki. 1:47; Mic. 2:1). In Exod. 10:23 koitē represents the Heb. taḥaṯ, place, in the context of the plague of darkness on Egypt. The expression is probably used more generally in the Heb. than the LXX allows, for the word taḥaṯ may denote a place of sitting as well as lying. In Daniel the word miškāḇ is represented by koitē in the LXX and, in each instance, refers to the bed as a place of rest. In Isa. 56:10 koitē is used in the sense of rest in the phrase enypniazomenoi koitēn, dreaming of rest.

The word koitē stands for several Heb. words that connote the home of an animal such as the Heb. rēḇeṣ (Jer. 50:6) which means sheepfold. The word also represents the verbal form rāḇaṣ in the phrase koitēn poimniōn, fold of flocks, in Isa. 17:2. In Isa. 11:8 koitē stands for the Heb. m^e'ûrâh which connotes the den of a snake, and in Mic. 2:12 it represents the Heb. dōḇer, pasture. The noun mā'ôn, lair, is represented by koitē in Jer. 10:22. And the noun m^e'ōnâh, dwelling, lair, is represented by koitē in Job 37:8; 38:40. The word koitē is used of the sick bed in the LXX as in Ex. 21:18 where it represents the Heb. miškāḇ. See also Job 33:19; Psa. 40(41):3.

In the LXX koitē also stands for the Heb. š^eḵāḇâh. The Heb. word can connote the idea of layer or deposit as in a layer of dew (Exod. 16:13, 14) as well as the act of lying. The word occurs in the latter sense in the phrase šiḵbaṯ-zera' (lit. "a laying of seed"), a technical term in the Levitical legislation used to refer to the emission of semen. In Lev. 15:18 the expression šiḵbaṯ-zera' occurs as the cognate accusative of šāḵaḇ, lie, in a section describing the means of cleansing in the case of sexual defilement. Literally the statement says "If a man should lie with a woman 'a laying of semen,' " and thus describes the act of "laying" in the sense of completion of coition. A similar usage of the expression occurs in Lev. 19:20; Num. 5:13. The word š^eḵāḇâh seems to have another connotation in the same expression, however, for it is used in Lev. 15:16, 17 of emission of semen apart from coitus in which instance the word seems to be used in the sense of "deposit," hence emission. The concluding statement to this legislative section (Lev. 15:32) uses the phrase šiḵbaṯ-zera' to cover both instances of emission. The expression is used similarly in Lev. 22:4.

The word miškaḇ is represented by koitē in the LXX in a number of instances where the connotation is that of bed in the sense of a place of rest but with associative sexual implications deriving from Levitical regulations relating to various forms of sexual impurity (Lev. 15:21, 23, 24, 26). In Prov. 7:17 the word is used of the harlot's bed thus connoting in an implicit sense sexual intercourse. It is used similarly in Isa. 57:7 where the prophet berates the people for setting their beds on the mountains. The reference is to idolatry and hence is used also here in the sense of spiritual fornication.

Frequently the word koitē reflects a distinctly metaphorical use of the Heb. miškāḇ as a surrogate for sexual congress as in Lev. 18:22; 20:13, where the word occurs in the plural construct state with 'iššâh, woman. In Num. 31:17, 18, 35 and Jdg. 21:11, 12 koitē is used in a similar fashion in the expression yāḏa' miškaḇ zāḵār, to know the bed of a male. The Heb. šᵉḵōḇeṯ is translated by koitē and also connotes the concept of copulation. It always occurs in construction with nāṯan, give. This expression occurs in Lev. 18:20, 23; Num. 5:20. In each instance the term connotes illicit sexual relationships.

The word koitē also represents Heb. words connoting the marriage bed as Gen. 49:4 where miškāḇ is used, and 1 Chron. 5:1 where the Heb. word is yāṣûa', a poetic word for bed.

NT In the NT koitē occurs on 4 occasions. In Lk. 11:7 it is used in the sense of bed as a place of rest. In this context, an individual in Jesus' parable protests that he cannot help someone who has solicited aid because he is in bed.

In Rom. 9:10 the word occurs in the expression koitēn echousa, and is a euphemism for coitus, and, by expansion, conception and pregnancy. In this sense it is similar to the use of miškāḇ as a surrogate for coition, but no clear instance exists in Heb. where the word may connote the result of coition, i.e., conception. The theological point of the passage is that Rebekah conceived children "by one man, our forefather Isaac." Yet before either of these male twins had done anything good or bad God in his divine sovereignty had decreed that "the elder shall serve the younger" (Rom. 9:12; cf. Gen. 25:23). The argument forms an important part of Paul's case demonstrating to Jewish readers the consistency of divine sovereignty in the inclusion of the Gentiles in the people of God.

The word koitē is used in the plur. in Rom. 13:13 in the sense of illicit sexual union. In this context the word is accompanied by such terms as revelling (kōmos), → drunkenness (methē), and licentiousness (aselgeia), all of which are also in the plur. Believers are warned to avoid them, together with quarreling (eris) and jealousy (zēlos), "but to put on the Lord Jesus Christ, and make no provision for the flesh to gratify its desires" (Rom. 13:14).

In Heb. 13:4 the word occurs in the sense of "marriage bed" as it does in the OT. In this context the writer affirms that the marriage relationship is an honourable one, and at the same time it is to be kept honourable. T. McComiskey

ὑπέρακμος

ὑπέρακμος (hyperakmos), past the peak, overripe, begin to fade; or, overwhelmingly strong, overpassionate.

CL & OT The word is formed from the prep. hyper, for, beyond, and the noun akmē, peak, which is used in the sense of the peak or high point in human development in Plato, Rep. 5 p. 640e and Philo, Leg.All. 1, 10. Diod.S. 32, 11, 1 speaks of the akmē tēs hēlikias of a woman (on hēlikia → Age, Stature) and also uses it of a virgin (Frag. 34, 35, 2, 39). Diog.L. 5, 65 tells of the pity felt for a father of a virgin who because of the smallness of her dowry goes beyond the prime of her age (ektrechousa ton akmaion tēs hēlikias kairon). J. M. Ford links the word with the Mishnaic Heb. bôgereṯ, lit. "wrinkled", but in this kind of context "past her girlhood" or "at the age when levirate marriage is incumbent on her" ("The Rabbinic Background of St. Paul's Use of hyperakmos", Journal of Jewish Studies 18, 1966, 89 ff.). On the other hand, cognate words have been found in relation to human desires: akmaia epithymia (Pseudo-Clementines, Homily p. 8, 17 Lag.; akmazō, Syntipas p. 10, 14).

NT The word occurs only at 1 Cor. 7:36. Two opposing lines of interpretation have been put forward. On the one hand, the subject of the verse has traditionally been taken to refer to the father of a virgin daughter. In this case, the interpretation would be: "If anyone [i.e. any father] thinks that he is not behaving properly to his virgin [parthenon; sc. daughter], and if she be beyond age [ean ē hyperakmos], and it has to be, let him do as he wishes; he does not sin – let them marry [gameitōsan]." This is further supported by the use of gamizō twice in v. 38 which normally means to give in marriage. Thus: "So that he who gives in marriage [ho gamizōn] his virgin does well; and he who does not give in marriage [ho mē gamizōn] does better." On parthenos in these verses → Woman, art. parthenos.

On the other hand, there is the interpretation which takes the subject of these verse to be the man who has some kind of liaison with the parthenos. This is not explicitly defined. It may imply a betrothal where marriage has been put off on the grounds of the spiritual considerations that Paul is urging in this passage. Some interpreters take this to refer to a spiritual marriage which has not been consummated physically. But evidence for such marriages is considerably later than the NT period, and the use of gamizō in v. 38 would hardly seem appropriate, if this were the case. In this case the interpretation of the verse would be: "If anyone thinks that he is not behaving properly to his virgin, and he be overpassionate [hyperakmos], and it has to be, let him do as he wishes, he does not sin – let them marry. But he who is firmly established in his heart, having no necessity, has power over his own will, and has judged this in his heart to keep her as his virgin, he will do well. So that he who marries his own virgin does well, and he who does not marry does better" (vv. 36 ff.). This interpretation involves no change of subject in v. 36, and offers a thoroughly realistic assessment of the situation. Moreover, there are exceptions to the general rule that gamizō means to give in marriage (cf. Moulton-Milligan, 121).

In view of this last point, it would also be possible to take the subject of this verse to be the man and still refer hyperakmos to the virgin, i.e. the man should go ahead and marry her on the grounds of her age.

In the last analysis, one cannot rule out any of these interpretations as impossible. However, the general tenor of Paul's recommendations remains clear. It is not a sin to marry; out of personal humanitarian considerations it may be right to do so. On the other hand, times make celibacy preferable. C. Brown

→ Child, → Discipline, → Divorce, → Father, → Son, → Woman

(a). J. J. von Allmen, Pauline Teaching on Marriage, Studies in Christian Faith and Practice 6, 1963; O. J. Baab, "Marriage", IDB III 278–87; K. Barth, CD III, 4, 116–240; S. R. Brav, Marriage and the Jewish Tradition, 1951; J. B. Bauer, "Marriage", EBT II 551–56; R. Batey, "The mia sarx Union of Christ and the Church", NTS 13, 1966–67, 270–81; and New Testament Nuptial Imagery, 1971; E. Brunner, The Divine Imperative, 1937, 340–83; M. Burrows, The Basis of Israelite Marriage, 1938; D. R. Catchpole, The Synoptic Divorce Material as a Traditio-Historical Problem, 1976; J. D. M. Derrett, "The Woman Taken in Adultery" and "The Teaching of Jesus on Marriage and Divorce", in Law in the New Testament, 1970, 156–88 and 363–88; R. J. Ehrlich, "The Indissolubility of Marriage as a Theological Problem", SJT 23, 1970, 291–311; J. H. Elliott, "Paul's Teaching on Marriage in I Corinthians: Some Problems Reconsidered", NTS 19 1972–73, 219–25; L. M. Epstein, Marriage Laws in the Bible and the Talmud, 1942; J. M. Ford, "Levirate Marriage in St Paul", NTS 10, 1963–64, 361–65; "St Paul, the philogamist (1 Cor. vii in Early Patristic Exegesis)", NTS 11, 1964–65, 326–48; and "The Rabbinic Background of St Paul's Use of hyperakmos", Journal of Jewish Studies, 18, 1966, 89 ff.; W. J. Harrington, The Bible on Matrimony, 1963; F. Hauck, moicheuō etc., TDNT IV 729–35; A. Isaksson, Marriage and Ministry in the New Temple: A Study with Special Reference to Mt. 19,3–12 and 1 Cor. 11,3–16, 1965; J. Jeremias, nymphē, nymphios, TDNT IV 1099–1106; P. K. Jewett, Man as Male and Female, 1975; L. Köhler, Hebrew Man, 1956; K. Kahana, The Theory of Marriage in Jewish Law, 1966; D. A. Leggett, The Levirate and Goel Institutions in the Old Testament with Special Reference to the Book of Ruth, 1974; W. Lillie, Studies in New Testament Ethics 1961, 118–28; A. Mahoney, "A New Look at the Divorce Clauses in Mt. 5, 32 and 19, 9", Catholic Biblical Quarterly 30, 1968, 29–38; M. Mielziner, The Jewish Law: Marriage and Divorce, 1901; R. C. Mortimer, chairman, Putting Assunder: A Divorce Law for Contemporary Society. The Report of a Group Appointed by the Archbishop of Canterbury in January 1964, 1966; I. A. Muirhead, "The Bride of Christ", SJT 5, 1952, 175–87; E. Neufeld, Ancient Hebrew Marriage Laws, 1944; J. Pedersen, Israel: Its Life and Culture, I-II 1926, 60–81; H. Riesenfeld, "The Pericope de adultera in the Early Christian Tradition", The Gospel Tradition, 1970, 95–110; H. Root, chairman, Marriage, Divorce and the Church, The Report of a Commission appointed by the Archbishop of Canterbury to prepare a staement on the Christian Doctrine of Marriage, 1971; H. H. Rowley, "The Marriage of Ruth", HTR 40, 1947. 77–99 (reprinted in The Servant of the Lord and Other Essays on the Old Testament, 1965², 169–94); J. P. Sampley, "And the Two Shall Become One Flesh": A Study of Traditions in Ephesians 5:21–33, Society for New Testament Studies Monograph Series 16, 1971; E. Schillebeeckx, Marriage: Secular Reality and Saving Mystery, I Marriage in the Old Testament and the New Testament, II Marriage in the History of Church, 1965; R. Schnackenburg, The Moral Teaching of the New Testament, 1965, 132–43, 144–57; A. van Selms, Marriage and Family Life in Ugaritic Literature, 1954; J. van Seters, "The Problem of Childlessness in Near Eastern Law and the Patriarchs of Israel", JBL 87, 1968, 401–8; E. Stauffer, gameō, gamos, TDNT I 648–57; H. Thielicke, The Ethics of Sex, 1964; M. Thurian, Marriage and Celibacy, 1959; R. de Vaux, Ancient Israel: Its Life and Institutions, 1961, 19–40; G. N. Vollebregt, The Bible on Marriage, 1965; E. Westermarck, History of Human Marriage, I–III, 1922⁵; J. W. C. Wand, chairman, The Church and the Law of Nullity of Marriage. The Report of a Commission appointed by the Archbishops of Canterbury and York in 1949 at the request of the Convocations, 1955; H. W. Wolff, Anthropology of the Old Testament, 1974, 166–76; R. Yaron, "The Restoration of Marriage", Journal of Jewish Studies 17, 1966, 1–11.

(b). H. Baltensweiler, Die Ehe im Neuen Testament. Exegetische Untersuchungen über Ehe, Ehelosigkeit und Ehescheidung, AThANT 32, 1967; A. Bardtke and H. Thimme, "Ehe", EKL I 994 ff.; U. Becker, Jesus und die Ehebrecherin, BZNW 28, 1963; J. Blinzler, "Die Strafe für Ehebruch in Bibel und Halacha", NTS 4, 1957–58, 32–47; J. Cambier, "Le grand mystère concernant le Christ et son Église, Éph. 5, 22–13", Biblica 47, 1966, 43–90; H. Crouzel, "Séparation ou remariage selon les Pères anciens", Gregorianum 47, 1966, 472–94; G. Delling, "Ehe", RAC IV 666 ff.; J. Gnilka, " 'Bräutigam', spätjüdisches Messiasprädikat?", Trierer Theologische Zeitschrift, 1960, 298 ff.; R. Goeden, Zur Stellung von Mann und Frau, Ehe und Sexualität im Hinblick auf Bibel und alte Kirche, Dissertation Göttingen, 1969; H. Greeven, "Zu den Aussagen des Neuen Testaments über die Ehe", Zeitschrift für evangelische Ethik 1, 1957, 109 ff.; and "Ehe nach dem Neuen Testament", NTS 15, 1968–69, 365–88; U. Holzmeister, "Die Streitfrage über die Ehescheidungstexte bei Mt. 5, 32 und 19, 9", Biblica 26, 1945, 133–46; F. Horst and H. Greeven, "Ehe", *RGG*³ II 361 ff.; H. Hübner, "Zölibat in Qumran?", NTS 17, 1970–71, 153–67; J. Jeremias,

"Die missionarische Aufgabe in der Mischehe", in W. Eltester, ed., Neutestamentliche Studien für Rudolf Bultmann, BZNW 21, 1954, 255–60; W. G. Kümmel, "Verlobung und Heirat bei Paulus (1 Kor. 7, 36–38)", BZNW 21, 1954, 275–95 (reprinted in Heilsgeschehen und Geschichte. Gesammelte Aufsätze 1933–1964, 1965, 310–27; J. Leipoldt, Die Frau in der antiken Welt und im Urchristentum, 1955[3]; E. Linnemann, "Die Hochzeit zu Kana und Dionysos", NTS 20, 1973–74, 408–18; E. Lövestam, "Ehe", BHHW 1 369 f.; R. Patai, L'Amour et le Couple aux Temps Bibliques, 1967; W. Palutz, "Monogamie und Polygamie im Alten Testament", ZAW 75, 1963, 3–27; H. Preisker, Christentum und Ehe in den ersten drei Jahrhunderten, 1927; B. Reicke, "Neuzeitliche und neutestamentliche Auffassung von Liebe und Ehe", NovT 1, 1956, 21–34; K. H. Rengstorf, Mann und Frau im Urchristentum, 1954; K. H. Schelkle, "Ehe und Ehelosigkeit im Neuen Testament", Wissenschaft und Weisheit 29, 1966, 1–15; H. Schlier, Christus und die Kirche im Epheserbrief, 1930.

Melchizedek, Salem

Μελχισεδέκ

Μελχισεδέκ (Melchisedek), Melchizedek, ancient Canaanite king of Salem (→ Salēm).

OT Melchizedek (Heb. malkî-ṣeḏeq, "king of righteousness", "my king is righteous") is a proper name of Canaanite origin closely akin to Adonizedek (Jos. 10:1). Melchizedek emerges without warning in the primitive history (Gen. 14:18–20) following Abram's rout of the forces of Chedorlaomer. Melchizedek is introduced as "king of Salem" (→ Salēm), presumably monarch of Jerusalem, which is situated not far from the Valley of Shaveh, or the King's Valley (cf. 2 Sam. 18:18). As an expression of Near Eastern hospitality, Melchizedek supplies bread and wine for the physical refreshment of Abram and his victorious warriors. The Genesis narrative concludes with the remarkable observation that the Canaanite blessed Abram and received a tenth of the spoils of battle from him, Abram thereby acknowledging the prominence of Melchizedek's priesthood.

The only other mention of Melchizedek in the OT occurs in Ps. 110:4, where the Lord (Yahweh) addresses David's Lord ('āḏôn) with the acclamation: "You are a priest for ever after the order of Melchizedek." Ps. 110:4 thus intimates that the priest-king of messianic expectation would be installed in a new non-Aaronic sacerdotal order patterned after that of Melchizedek of old. In both the pre-Christian and early Christian eras the Psalm-text was interpreted by the Jews in a messianic sense. Strack-Billerbeck argues that the disappearance of the messianic interpretation of the Psalm between c. A.D. 50 and 250 was due to heightened tensions between the expanding church and the Synagogue (SB IV 452 f.). By substituting a non-messianic interpretation for Ps. 110, the Rabbinate sought to undermine the church's appeal to this text in its teaching and preaching.

Philo clothes the OT figure of Melchizedek in the garb of Platonic philosophy. Here Melchizedek is presented as an incarnation of the Logos (→ word), the ideal form (idea) of the creation, which spans the chasm between God and nature. The "righteous king" and the "king of peace" (Leg.All. 3, 79) learned the traditions of his priesthood from none save himself (De Congr. 99). Philo's extreme allegorization of Gen. 14:18–20 reduces the historical features of the OT text to timeless philosophical principles. Melchizedek is royal Mind (nous) who, unlike despotic kings, decrees pleasing laws and who "offers to the soul food of joy and gladness" (Leg.All. 3, 81). He is priestly Reason (logos) who with the gift of wine releases the soul from earthly contemplation and intoxicates it with esoteric heavenly virtues. Thus through his offering of bread and wine Melchizedek mediates the soul's direct access to God. Abraham's presentation of the tithe is similarly spiritualized: "he gave him a tenth of all [Gen. 14:20]; from the things of sense [aisthēsis], right use of sense; from the things of speech [logos], good speaking; from the things of thought [nous], good thinking" (Congr. 99).

In pre-Christian Samaritan tradition Melchizedek figured prominently in the establishment of the sanctuary of the sect, apparently as its first priest. Not only is Salem (→ Salēm) identified with Shechem, but Mt. Gerizim (Gk. oros hypsistou, "mountain of the highest God") is named after Melchizedek, the "priest of God most high."

Josephus accepts the historicity of the Gen. 14:18–20 pericope and characterizes Melchizedek as "a potent man among the Canaanites . . . the first priest of God" (War 6, 10, 1).

Melchizedek occupies a prominent place in the 11Q Melchizedek Qumran scroll, which quotes Ps. 82:1, 2 and transfers its meaning to Melchizedek: "as it is written concerning him in the hymns of David who says: 'the heavenly one ['elōhîm, sing.] standeth in the congregation of God; among the heavenly ones ['elōhîm, plur.] he judgeth.'" Melchizedek is thus depicted in the scroll as a paramount heavenly angel standing in the tribunal of God, who preserves the faithful and executes eschatological judgment upon the perverse spirits.

Rabbinic Judaism traditionally identified Melchizedek with Shem, the most pious of Noah's sons. According to R. Ishmael, the priesthood was taken from Melchizedek and transferred to Abraham because the Salemite addressed the patriarch before God (Ned. 32b; Sanh. 108b). Elsewhere in late Jewish literature Melchizedek was variously interpreted as an incarnate angel who performed priestly functions, as the archangel Michael, or as an idealized high priest of the messianic age (kōhēn-ṣeḏeq) who emerges alongside the messiah.

NT Only the author of Hebrews in the NT took interest in the enigmatic figure of Melchizedek. The idea of the Melchizedekian priesthood of Christ is introduced in Heb. 5:6, 10, but full explication of the concept is interrupted by a paraenetic digression (5:11–6:19) necessitated by the dullness and immaturity of the readers. Ch. 7 is devoted to a detailed development of the novel concept of priesthood "after the order of Melchizedek" (7:1–10), and its application to the high priest of the new covenant (7:11–28).

In 7:1, 2a the writer presents a selective recitation of Gen. 14:18–20 (conspicuously omitting reference to the bread and wine, which Roman Catholic theology regards as a type of the Eucharist), followed in 7:2b, 3 by a skilful reinterpretation of the Genesis text in the light of Ps. 110:4. Via a subtle typological exegesis the writer establishes Melchizedek as a fitting model of the radical non-legal priesthood embodied by Jesus (7:1–3). (a) 7:1 – The Salemite priest-king as a harbinger of the one who would unite in his person the dual honours of royalty and priesthood. (b) 7:2b – Etymological exegesis of Melchizedek's name ("king of righteousness") and title ("king of peace") points to the messiah whose person and ministry is characterized by righteousness (Isa. 32:1; Jer. 23:5, 6; 33:15 f.; Mal. 4:2; 1 Cor. 1:30) and peace (1 Chron. 22:9; Zech. 9:10; Eph. 2:14 f.). "Both graces perfectly meet in Christ" (B. F. Westcott, The Epistle to the Hebrews, 1892, 172). (c) 7:3a – Melchizedek exercised a priesthood entirely independent of priestly pedigree.

"The parents, ancestors, children, and posterity of Melchizedec are not descended from Levi, as it had to be in the case of the Levites (ver. 6), and they are not even mentioned by Moses" (J. A. Bengel, Gnomon of the New Testament, IV, 1857, 403). Herewith the priesthood of Melchizedek violated the conditions of Aaronic order, which stipulated paternal descent from Aaron (Exod. 28:1; Num. 3:10; 18:1) and maternal descent from a pure Israelite (Lev. 21:7, 13 f.; Ezek. 44:22). Melchizedek thus adumbrates the messianic high priest who was descended from the non-sacerdotal tribe of Judah. (d) 7:3b – The OT figure of Melchizedek was symbolically what Christ is in reality: a ministrant who suddenly emerged from the distant reaches of eternity and who later vanished into its depths equally as mysteriously. The notion of eternity, deduced from absence of recorded birth and decease, is understood in the light of the Jewish axiom: "quod non in Thora non in mundo [What is not in the Torah is not in the world]" (SB III 694). (e) 7:3c – Melchizedek exercises a priesthood of uninterrupted duration, since he neither succeeded another nor was he himself succeeded in office.

Having sketched Melchizedek's similarity to Christ, the writer argues his dissimilarity to → Abraham (and hence to the → Levites), thereby demonstrating Christ's superiority to the antiquated legal order (7:4–10): (a) 7:5, 6a – Melchizedek received the tithes from Abraham; (b) 7:6b, 7 – The Gentile bestowed the blessing upon the patriarch; and (c) 7:8 – Melchizedek "lives on" in Scripture unlike the Levitical priests who succumbed to death.

The remainder of the chapter (7:11–28) delineates the merits of Christ as Melchizedekian priest and high priest. Expounding the implications of the Davidic Psalm-text, the writer demonstrates that the high priest of the new covenant is vastly superior to the ministrants of the old annulled order. As high priest for ever "after the order of Melchizedek", Christ's priesthood is indissoluble (7:16), inviolable (7:24), efficacious (7:25) and perfect (7:28). The one foreshadowed in the distant past by the fleeting figure of Melchizedek is the great high priest par excellence.

B. A. Demarest

Σαλήμ	Σαλήμ (Salēm), Salem, seat of Melchizedek's rule.

OT 1. Salem, Greek form of an ancient Palestinian city, is associated by most authorities from earliest times with Jerusalem. A less convincing proposal identifies Salem with Salim (Gk. Saleim), a town eight miles south of Scythopolis in the region where John baptized (Jn. 3:23). Philo, working an etymological exegesis similar to the writer of Hebrews, hails the monarch of Salem as "king of peace" (Leg.All. 3, 79).

2. Proper noun. As a place name šālēm occurs only twice in the OT: (a) in Gen. 14:18; and (b) in Ps. 76:3 where it is most likely a poetic abbreviation of → Jerusalem (Heb. yᵉrûšālayim, "possession of peace" or "foundation of peace"). In the mind of the Psalmist Salem, the dwelling place of God, is pre-eminently a place of peace. Josephus reflects the Jewish tradition that the ancient Canaanite settlement known as Salem was later renamed Jerusalem by the priest-king Melchizedek.

3. Adjectival form. šālēm, a common OT cognate of šālôm ("wholeness", "peace") bears the meaning peaceful in the MT in the sense of a → covenant of peace between men (Gen. 34:21). More frequently, it signifies perfect, blameless (i.e. at peace with) as a description of man's spiritual relation to God (1 Ki. 8:61; 11:4; 15:3; 2 Chron. 16:9).

NT In the NT Salēm occurs only in the Epistle to Hebrews (7:1, 2). After identifying Melchizedek as "king of Salem" on the strength of Gen. 14:18 the writer, in similar manner to Philo, hastens to unfold the deeper spiritual meaning implicit in Melchizedek's royal title. To the eyes of faith the "king of Salem" is "king of peace" (→ Peace, art. eirēnē). Hebrews reflects little interest in the geographical location of Salem. The paramount interest is to deduce from the etymology of Salem a principal characteristic (i.e. peace) of the reign of the end-time priest-king.
→ Abraham, → Jerusalem, → Priest, → Sacrifice B. A. Demarest

(a). B. A. Barrois, "Salem", IDB IV 1966; B. Demarest, A History of the Interpretation of Hebrews 7, from the Reformation to the Present, Beiträge zur Geschichte der biblischen Exegese 19, 1976); J. A. Fitzmyer, "Further Light on Melchizedek from Qumran Cave 11", JBL 86, 1967, 25–41 (reprinted in Essays on the Semitic Background of the New Testament, 1971, 245–67); and " 'Now this Melchizedek . . .' (Heb. 7:1)", op. cit., 221–44; J. G. Gammie, "Loci of the Melchizedek Tradition of Genesis 14:18–20", JBL 90, 1971, 385–96; F. L. Horton, The Melchizedek Tradition: A Critical Examination of the Sources to the Fifth Century A.D. and in the Epistle to the Hebrews, Society for New Testament Studies Monograph Series 30, 1976; O. Michel, Melchisedek, TDNT IV 568–71; J. J. Petuchowski, "The Controversial Figure of Melchizedek", Hebrew Union College Annual 28, 1957, 127–36; H. H. Rowley, "Melchizedek and Zadok", in W. Baumgartner ed., Festschrift für A. Bartholet, 1950, 461 ff.; R. Williamson, Philo and the Epistle to the Hebrews, 1970; A. S. van der Woude and M. de Jonge, "11Q Melchizedek and the New Testament", NTS 12, 1965–66, 310–26; Y. Yadin, "The Dead Sea Scrolls and the Epistle to the Hebrews", Scripta Hierosolymitana 4, 1958, 36–55.
(b). G. Bardy, "Melchisédech dans la tradition patristique", RB 35, 1926, 496–509, and 36, 1927, 24–45; J. Calvin, "Trois sermons sur l'histoire de Melchisédec", Corpus Reformatorum, LI, 641–82; M. Friedländer, "Melchisédec et l'Épître aux Hébreux", Revue des Études Juives 5, 1882, 188 ff.; F. J. Jerome, Das geschichtliche Melchisedek-Bild und seine Bedeutung im Hebräerbrief, 1920; H. E. del Medico, "Melchisedek", ZAW 69, 1957, 160–70; G. Schille, "Erwägungen zur Hohepriesterlehre des Hebräerbriefs", ZNW 46, 1955, 81–109; C. Spicq, "L'Origine Johannique de la Conception du Christ-Prêtre, dans l'Épître aux Hébreux", Festschrift M. Goguel, 1950, 258–69; and L'Épître aux Hébreux, I–II, 1952–53; H. Stork, Die Sogenannten Melchisedekianer, Forschungen zur Geschichte des Neutestamentlichen Kanons 8/2, 1928; G. Wuttke, Melchisedech der Priesterkönig von Salem. Eine Studie zur Geschichte der Exegese, BZNW 5, 1927.

Mercy, Compassion

This article brings together three different Gk. words, eleos, oiktirmos and splanchna. In their original use eleos refers to the feeling of pity, oiktirmos, and especially its root oiktos, to the exclamation of pity at the sight of another's ill-fortune, and splanchna to the seat of the emotions, the inward parts or what today would be called the heart. The corresponding verbs in the active express these feelings shown in the sense of to help, feel pity, show mercy; where they are used in the passive, they express the experience of these emotions.

ἔλεος

ἔλεος (eleos), compassion, mercy, pity; ἐλεέω (eleeō), feel compassion, show mercy or pity; ἐλεήμων (eleēmōn), merciful, compassionate; ἐλεεινός (eleeinos), pitiful; ἐλεημοσύνη (eleēmosynē), charity, alms; ἀνέλεος (aneleos), without pity; ἀνελεήμων (aneleēmōn), merciless.

CL eleos (masc. but normally neut. in the LXX and the NT) is found from Homer onwards. It is "the emotion roused by contact with an affliction which comes undeservedly on someone else" (R. Bultmann, TDNT II 477), viz. compassion, pity, mercy. These feelings are the reverse of envy at another's good fortune. There is also an element of fear that one might have to suffer in the same way. Aristotle in his Poetics stated that tragedy aroused pity and terror and these caused katharsis, purging. From Plutarch onwards we find the expressions eleon echō, to find mercy, and kat' eleon, out of compassion. eleos was used as a technical term for the end of the speech for the defence, in which the accused tried to awaken the compassion of the judges. In Plato's Apology Socrates refused to conform to the pattern (23 f., 34b–35d).

aneleos, an attributive compound showing mutation (Funk § 120:2), meaning unmerciful, without compassion, is found only in the NT, and replaces the Homeric nēlees, and Att. anēleēs (found in the LXX but not the NT). aneleēmōn has the same adjectival meaning; it is found from Antiphon (480–411 B.C.) onwards as an adv. It is the privative form of eleēmōn (Homer onwards), compassionate, merciful. eleeinos (Homer onwards, but not in the LXX) is mainly used of a person's passive condition as causing compassion, hence pitiable, distressing.

The vb. eleeō (Homer onwards) means to have compassion, be sorry for, show compassion, be merciful. The Koine form eleaō is found twice in the LXX, 3 times in the NT. The cry eleēson, have mercy, was addressed to the gods. With or without logois (with words) the vb. also means deplore, sympathize with. In the pass. it means to find mercy (in the NT also eleos lambanō). The derived noun eleēmosynē (Callimachus of Alexandria, c. 250 B.C., onwards) was originally the same as eleos but was then applied to the act of kindness following compassion. It then obtained the specialized meaning of a contribution for or gift to the poor (cf. our alms); it finds its earliest use in the LXX (Dan. 4:27) and in profane writings in Diog. Laert. (3rd cent. A.D.).

OT 1. eleos and its derivatives are found nearly 400 times in the LXX. It normally represents ḥeseḏ; only 6 times raḥᵃmîm. The vb. normally represents ḥānan (→ Grace), but also rāḥam; eleēmosynē renders ṣᵉḏāqâh.

2. These Heb. concepts betray a completely different background of thought from the predominantly psychological one in Gk. They are based on legal concepts. Hence, we have to interpret the LXX translation from the standpoint of the Heb. original, and not the other way round. Philo is the first Jewish writer in whom a penetration of the Gk. concepts is observable in our word-group.

(a) ḥeseḏ means proper covenant behaviour, the solidarity which the partners in the covenant owe one another (→ Covenant). The covenant may be between equals, or it may be made by one who is stronger than his partner in it. In either case it may result in one giving help to the other in his need. So the connotations of eleos meaning ḥeseḏ may stretch from loyalty to a covenant to kindliness, mercy, pity. This is especially the case when it is linked with oiktirmos meaning raḥᵃmîm

(e.g. Isa. 63:7b; Hos. 2:21[MT 2:19]; Zech. 7:9; Pss. 25:6[LXX 24:6]; 40:11 [MT 40:12; LXX 39:12]; 51:1[MT 51:3; LXX 50:3]; 69:16[MT 69:17; LXX 68:17]). Because of Yahweh's superiority as the partner in the covenant who remains faithful, his eleos was understood for the most part as a gracious gift. He promised it at the making of the covenant, and he constantly renewed it. Hence Israel might request eleos from him including the mercy of forgiveness, when it had broken the covenant (e.g. Exod. 34:9; Num. 14:19; Jer. 3:12). When God acts like this and also when man acts similarly the stress is not on the basic attitude in eleos but on its manifestation in acts.

(b) ṣᵉḏāqâh is normally rendered by dikaiosynē (→ Righteousness). But "since the judgment in which God's ṣᵉḏāqâh is active will be in favour of His people . . . we can understand the rendering eleēmosynē" (R. Bultmann, TDNT II 486; cf. e.g. Isa. 1:27). Just as Yahweh enforces his covenant law mercifully, so eleēmosynē may also be used for human kindness, charity and even alms (though this last is found only in late Jud.) when these conform to the pattern of this law.

3. The linguistic usage of late Palestinian Judaism is that of the OT. ḥesed is very common in the Qumran texts: the Essene community used it to praise the loyalty of God to the covenant which they had experienced in the establishment of the new, eschatological covenant. See 1QS 1:8, 22; 2:1, 4, 24; 4:4 f.; 5:4, 25; 8:2; 10:4, 16, 26; 11:12 f.; 1QM 12:3; 14:4, 8 f.; 18:11; 1QH 1:32; 2:23, 25; 4:37; 5:22; 6:9; 7:18, 20, 27, 35; 9:7, 10, 14; 10:14, 16; 11:5, 17 f., 28, 30 f.; 12:14, 21; 13:5; 16:9, 12, 16; CD 13:18; 19:1; 20:21.

NT 1. eleos and its derivatives are found 78 times in the NT, mainly in the Pauline writings (26 times) and Luke-Acts (20 times with preference for eleos itself). It is found 15 times in Matt. Only in Jn., Phil., 1–2 Thess. is the group completely absent.

2. Synoptic Gospels. In the Synoptics eleeō is found mainly in the narratives. Exceptions are Matt. 5:7; 18:33; Lk. 10:37; 16:24. The opposite is true of eleos, which, with the exception of Lk. 1:58, is used only in reports of speech.

(a) The vb. marks that breaking in of the divine mercy into the reality of human misery which took place in the person of Jesus of Nazareth with his work of freeing and healing which demonstrated his authority. Jesus answered the cry for help "Have mercy on me" (Mk. 10:47, 48 par. Matt. 9:27; 15:22; 17:15; Lk. 17:13) from the sick or the relatives of the demon-possessed (Matt. 15:22; 17:15) by healing. On one occasion (Mk. 5:19) he commanded a man from whom he had driven out demons to tell those at home how the Lord (here in the OT sense of "God") had had mercy on him. Normally on these occasions Jesus was addressed by the messianic title → "Son of David" (→ Son); once we find epistata (Lk. 17:13), Master (lit. "foreman"). (epistata also occurs in Lk. 5:5; 8:24, 45; 9:33, 49; see Arndt, 300.) Matt. adds the post-resurrection title of kyrios (→ Lord), or uses it to replace the presumably historical address of "Teacher" (didaskale, cf. Matt. 17:15 with Mk. 9:17, Lk. 9:38). This makes the cry, "Lord, have mercy", a confession of faith in the divine authority of Jesus.

(b) Mercy from man to man is expressed by eleeō or eleēmōn only twice in the teaching in Matt. (5:7; 18:33), and once in the material peculiar to Lk. (16:24), but in each case the motivation is clearly God's mercy. In Matt. 5:7 the merciful (eleēmōn) are promised God's mercy – the vb. is pass. to avoid using the name of God. In the parable of the unforgiving servant (Matt. 18:23–35) the demand for mercy (v. 33) is based on the limitless compassion of his lord (vv. 35, 27; → splanchna). The rich man, who had been merciless during his life, calls in his suffering on → Abraham, exalted to fellowship with God, with the same words for mercy as are otherwise used only in calling on God (Lk. 16:24).

(c) In the rest of the teaching in Matt. and Lk. we find only eleos. A reference, often direct, to the OT is noticeable. In his controversies with the → Pharisees Jesus bore witness to the sovereign mercy of God, which seeks a response not in ritual detail but in solidarity through action with the lowly (→ Poor) and hungry (→ Hunger) (Matt. 9:13; 12:7; cf. 1 Sam. 15:22; Hos. 6:6). In his "woes" he also levelled against them the charge that in their interpretation of the → law they had shifted the main stress from "justice and mercy and faithfulness" to a more casuistic formalism (Matt. 23:23; cf. also Lk. 10:37 where the showing of mercy is demanded as the moral of the parable of the good → Samaritan). In the prologue to his Gospel Lk. announced its main theme in the two great psalms of praise (Lk. 1:46–55, 68–79); that the covenant loyalty of God, promised in the OT and shown in action in the history of Israel, would reach its climax in the gracious self-humiliation of God to the humble (→ Poor) in the event of Christ (1:50, 54, 72, 78); v. 78 speaks of the → splanchna eleous, the "merciful heart", of our God. Note the many OT quotations in these psalms (cf. Lk. 1:46 with 1 Sam. 2:1–10; Lk. 1:48 with Pss. 113:5 ff.; 11:4; Lk. 1:50 with Ps. 103:13, 17; Lk. 1:51 with 2 Sam. 22:28; Lk. 1:52 with Ps. 147:6; Job 12:19; 5:11; 1 Sam. 2:7; Ezek. 21:31; Lk. 1:53 with Pss. 34:11; 107:9; 2 Sam. 2:5; Lk. 1:54 with Isa. 41:8; Ps. 98:3; Lk. 1:55 with Mic. 7:20; Gen. 17:17; 18:18; 22:17; Lk. 1:68 with Pss. 41:14; 72:18; 89:53; 106:48; Lk. 1:69 with 1 Sam. 2:10; Pss. 18:3; 132:17; Lk. 1:71 with Ps. 106:10; Lk. 1:72 with Pss. 105:8; 106:45; Lev. 26:42; Gen. 17:7; 22:16; Mic. 7:20; Lk. 1:74 with Ps. 97:10; Lk. 1:76 with Mal. 3:1; 4:5; Lk. 1:77 with Jer. 31:34; Num. 24:17; Isa. 60:1 f.; Lk. 1:79 with Isa 9:1 f.; 42:7). The thought of these two psalms in Lk. is saturated with OT ideas of judgment and mercy. (On the first two chapters of Lk. see further R. Laurentin, Structure et Théologie de Luc I–II, 1964.)

3. eleēmosynē, as alms charity. Matt. reports only Jesus' criticism of the attempt to obtain public praise and acknowledgment in the giving of alms (→ Poor NT) (Matt. 6:1–4), but Lk. has the definite teaching: alms instead of ritual purity (Lk. 11:41, in an argument with the Pharisees), and lays down as a rule for the disciples and the church the giving away of one's possessions to the poor (Lk. 12:33). In Acts Tabitha (9:36) and Cornelius (10:2) are singled out for their charity and as recipients of singular blessing. The former was perhaps a Hellenistic Jewess (her name is explained as Dorcas or Gazelle) and was a resident of Joppa. She fell sick and died (Acts 9:37), but was restored through Peter. Cornelius was a centurion of the Italian Cohort at Caesarea and was "a devout man who feared God eusebēs kai phoboumenos ton theon" (on the significance of these terms → Conversion). God honoured him by receiving his prayers and accepting his alms (10:4, 31), and bestowing on him the Holy Spirit (10:44 ff.). Whereupon he was the first Gentile to be received into the church (10:47 f.). This also took place at Joppa. In his defence before Felix in Acts Paul mentioned the bringing of alms for his people as the purpose of his last journey to Jerusalem (24:17). By using the term "doing alms" (eleēmosynas poieō, Heb. 'āśâh ṣ^{e}dāqâh), a Semitic expression, he stressed his active responsibility. In Acts 3:1–8 Peter by his healing of the lame man symbolically ended the time of begging and imperfect mercy by the full mercy brought in the name of Jesus Christ (3:6).

4. Paul. Paul wished to be regarded as one who had received mercy (ēleēthēn) that he might become an → apostle (1 Tim. 1:13, 16), and who by the Lord's mercy (ēleēmenos) had been made trustworthy (1 Cor. 7:25). In view of the wide-scale rejection of the gospel by → Israel, he strove in Rom. to make clear that God's free mercy did not contradict his covenant loyalty (Rom. 9:15, 16, 18; v. 15 is a quotation of Exod. 33:19). God's plan of salvation, now for the Gentiles (Rom. 9:23 f.; 11:30; 15:9), then for the Jews (11:31), and so both for Jews and Gentiles (Rom. 11:32) is based on his mercy. The salvation of those made alive for faith and renewal in the Holy Spirit is based on this mercy, not on good works (Eph. 2:4–9; Tit. 3:5). Hence they are admonished to pass on the mercy they have experienced (2 Cor. 4:1; Rom. 12:1, oktirmos, plur.) cheerfully (Rom. 12:8), so that mercy becomes one of the signs by which a disciple can be known; cf. "full of mercy [mestē eleous]" in the list of virtues in Jas. 3:17, while "unmerciful [aneleēmonas]" (RV, RSV "ruthless"; NEB "without pity") is the lowest rung in the downward ladder of Rom. 1:29–32 and so the completest negation of the knowledge of God.

Paul and other NT writers (2 Jn. 3; Jude 2), in their confidence in God's gracious giving can greet their readers at the beginning (1 Tim. 1:2; 2 Tim. 1:2; Tit. 1:4, some MSS) or end (Gal. 6:16) of their letters with a prayer for the mercy of God and of Jesus Christ – mostly combined with → "grace" and → "peace". In so doing they took over Jewish greeting forms and expanded them. The mercy of God can heal, e.g., Epaphras (Phil. 2:27); it is a present gift for the "household" (2 Tim. 1:16); and the final, future gift ensuring salvation (2 Tim. 1:18). Paul proclaimed the Christian hope of a future resurrection of an imperishable body by contradicting the sectarian group in Corinth which affirmed that the bodily resurrection was already past; he describes those who confine this hope to this life as "most to be pitied [eleeinoteroi]" (1 Cor. 15:19).

5. Other NT Writings. (a) 1 Pet. begins by praising the mercy of God (1:3), by which Christians "have been born anew to a living hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead" (cf. Eph. 2:4; 1 Cor. 15:19; see above). Just like Paul in Rom. 9:25 f., he praises the enlargement of God's mercy to take in the Gentiles (2:10) by using Hosea's words (Hos. 2:23[MT 2:25]).

(b) James impressed on an indolent church that mercy shown here on earth has its bearing on the final → judgment, and that "judgment without mercy" (aneleos, only here in the NT) awaits the one who has shown no mercy (2:13; cf. Lk. 16:24 f.; Matt. 18:33 f.; 25:40, 45).

(c) Jude, after mentioning the love of God which they have experienced and their expectation of a final merciful judgment by Jesus Christ, urges his readers to exercise a discriminating mercy to those around them (vv. 21–23; the force of v. 23a is uncertain).

(d) Rev. 3:17, just like 1 Cor. 15:19, convicts a church, that of Laodicea, of its pitiable (eleeinos) condition in spite of its earthly riches, and places it under the judgment of Christ, which alone is valid. (On the church at Laodicea → Cold, art. chliaros.)

(e) Heb. uses the type of the high priest in the OT and his functions on the great Day of Atonement (Lev. 16) to show the solidarity of Christ, who is greater than any high priest, with his brethren, which guarantees a merciful and boundless understanding (2:17; cf. 4:15), and so gives the despairing church confidence to draw near the throne of grace to find mercy (4:16). H.-H. Esser

οἰκτιρμός

οἰκτιρμός (oiktirmos), compassion, pity; οἰκτίρω (oiktirō), have compassion, show pity or mercy; οἰκτίρμων (oiktirmōn), compassionate.

CL The root word ho oiktos (Aesch. and Soph. onwards) means the lamenting or regretting of a person's misfortune or death, then metaphorically sympathy, pity. ho oiktirmos (Pindar onwards) was originally a poetic form of oiktos. The derivative oiktirmōn, compassionate (Gorgias, 5th cent. B.C., onwards), is seldom found; oiktros, lamenting, and lamentable, is commoner. The vb. oiktirō, also oiktizō, (Homer onwards) means to have compassion, to pity, in the sense both of mere feeling and of active merciful action; it is often a synonym of eleeō (→ eleos).

OT The words of this group are found about 80 times in the LXX, both the noun and the vb. appearing c. 30 times each; they are used with the same meaning as in secular Gk. The Heb. equivalents are mostly derivatives of the root rḥm, have compassion, but also of the root ḥnn, be gracious, all of which could have equally well been translated by → eleos and its derivatives. They are found most frequently in the Pss. Because of the Heb. plur. form raḥᵃmîm, oiktirmos occurs always in the plur. (2 Sam. 24:14; Isa. 63:15; Pss. 25:6 [LXX 24:6]; 40:11[MT 40:12; LXX 39:12]; 51:1 [MT 51:3; LXX 50:3]; cf. Funk § 142).

NT 1. In the NT the noun occurs 4 times in Paul, once in Heb.; the vb. twice in Paul, the adj. twice in Lk. and once in Jas.

2. Since God is "the Father of mercies" (for the use of plur. see OT above) and as such shows mercy to men (2 Cor. 1:3), Paul can use "the mercies of God" (Rom. 12:1) as the bridge between doctrine and exhortation in Rom. Just as the phrase sums up God's saving acts and plan of salvation previously outlined in Rom. 11, so also God's mercies are the presupposition – the grounds of the "therefore" (12:1) – for the Christian life. Because of them heartfelt sympathy (Phil. 2:1, splanchna kai oiktirmoi) which creates unity of spirit must be expected from Christians; they are to put on heartfelt sympathy (Col. 3:12, splanchna oiktirmōn). Heb. 10:28 f. points out that the punishment of the man who has "outraged the Spirit of grace" and "has spurned the Son of God" will be even less merciful than that meted out to the violater of the law of Moses.

3. The vb. is found only in Rom. 9:15, a quotation of Exod. 33:19, where it is in parallelism to eleeō (→ eleos NT 4), with the sense of have compassion.

4. The adj. is found in Jas. 5:11, quoting Pss. 103:8 (LXX 102:8); 111:4 (LXX 110:4) together with polysplanchnos, merciful (→ splanchna NT); it expresses a quality of God. In the Sermon on the Plain (Lk. 6:20–49) Jesus calls for merciful behaviour (v. 36), putting God's merciful attitude as the measure of human action. H.-H. Esser

σπλάγχνα

σπλάγχνα (splanchna), inward parts, entrails, hence as the seat of emotion, the heart, love; σπλαγχνίζομαι (splanchnizomai), have pity, show mercy, feel sympathy; πολύσπλαγχνος (polysplanchnos), sympathetic, compassionate; εὔσπλαγχνος (eusplanchnos), tenderhearted, compassionate.

CL to splanchnon (Homer onwards), used almost entirely in the plur., originally meant the inward parts, or entrails (of the sacrificial animal), especially the more valuable parts, the heart, lungs, liver, but also the spleen and the kidneys. Since immediately after the killing of the animal they were removed, roasted and eaten as the first part of the sacrificial meal, the word came to mean the sacrificial meal itself. From Aesch. (5th cent. B.C.) onwards we find splanchna used also for the human entrails, especially for the male sexual organs and the womb, as the site of the powers of conception and birth; hence children were sometimes called splanchna, and ek splanchnōn means from one's own flesh and blood. Since the intestines were regarded as the site of the natural passions, e.g. anger, fretful desires, love, the word came to have the fig. meaning of heart (as the organ of feelings and emotions), or the sense of premonition; finally it meant even affection and love. Hence in the sing. (Soph. – 5th cent. B.C. – onwards) it means pity, compassion, love. The oldest form of the vb. is splanchneuō, eat the entrails, prophesy from the entrails. The later form splanchnizomai is found only once in secular Gk., in a 4th cent. B.C. inscription from Cos, with the same meaning. The metaphorical meaning have mercy on, feel pity, is found only in the writings of Judaism and the NT.

OT The LXX has the noun 15 times, the vb. twice. Only twice does the noun translate Heb. words. In Prov. 12:10 it represents raḥ^{a}mîm (→ eleos OT and oiktirmos OT) mercy, and in Prov. 26:22 beṭen, inner parts, belly, The remaining cases are in books like 2 Macc. and 4 Macc. with no Heb. original. We find the meanings intestines (2 Macc. 9:5; 4 Macc. 5:30; 10:8), mother-love (4 Macc. 15:22, 29), heart (2 Macc. 9:6).

Test. XII is the first book to contain the predominant meaning merciful, show mercy, in the frequent use of both noun and vb. They represent raḥ^{a}mîm and rḥm and form the preparation for the NT use (cf. Test.Zeb. 7:3; 8:2, 6 with 1QS 1:21; 2:1; cf. H. Köster, TDNT VII 552).

NT 1. Apart from its use with → eleos (NT 2 (c)) in Lk. 1:78 splanchna and its adjectival derivatives are not found in the Synoptics, but the vb. is found only in them.

2. There the vb. splanchnizomai is used (a) of the attitude of Jesus, (b) of the actions of key persons at the turning points of three parables.

(a) The meaning goes beyond the lit. one of "his heart contracted convulsively" at the sight of crying human need and characterizes the messianic compassion of Jesus (cf. H. Köster, TDNT VII 554); the cases are a → leper with his petition (Mk. 1:41), the people like sheep without a shepherd (Mk. 6:34; Matt. 14:14; cf. also Mk. 8:2; Matt. 15:32: "I have compassion" in direct speech), the sight of the harassed and exhausted crowd shortly before the sending out of the Twelve (Matt. 9:36), two blind men who besought him (Matt. 20:34), and the widow at Nain mourning her only son (Lk. 7:13). In Mk. 9:22 it is used in the petition for the driving out of a demon (→ eleos NT 2 (a) on Matt. 17:15).

(b) In the two parables, Matt. 18:23–35, the unforgiving servant (→ eleos NT 2 (b)), and Lk. 15:11–32, the prodigal son, splanchnizomai expresses the strongest feeling of a merciful (Matt. 18:27) or loving (Lk. 15:20) reaction which forms the turning point of the story. In contrast to both these cases we have the strongest expression of righteous rejection (→ Anger) in Matt. 18:34 and Lk. 15:28 (cf. TDNT VII 554). In both parables splanchnizomai makes the unbounded mercy of God visible; in the former we see also his deadly and decisive anger against the one who having experienced mercy denies the fact by being unmerciful himself. In the parable of the good Samaritan (Lk. 10:30–37) splanchnizomai in v. 33 expresses the attitude of complete willingness to use all means, time, strength, and life, for saving at the crucial moment. It contrasts with the passing by on the other side (vv. 31, 32). Since seeing and being prepared to help are one, it sets in motion as with Jesus himself, a whole chain of events which together are called eleos (v. 37a). Humanity and neighbourliness are not qualities but action (v. 37 f.).

3. In Paul the noun refers to the whole man, viz. in his capacity to love or as one who loves (cf. Köster, TDNT VII 555 f.). Hence, it could be replaced by his name or the corresponding personal pron. The frequent translation "heart" is suitable, if we understand heart as the centre of loving action. In 2 Cor. 6:12 Paul accuses his readers of giving their ability to love him only limited space, while in 7:15 he says of Titus that his heart goes out to them. In Phil. 1:8 the use of the qualifying "Christ" indicates that Christ is the source of the love that embraces and lays claim to the apostle's whole personality. In Phlm. 7 and 20 the refreshing of ta splanchna of the saints and of Paul (RSV heart), means the refreshing of the whole person; there would be no change in meaning if it were either omitted (cf. NEB), or rendered "altogether", except that it draws attention to the conscious joy that Philemon has given. In v. 12 it could be rendered "as a piece of me" (cf. NEB, Phillips), or as "as though I myself were coming." That the word is used three times in this short letter shows Paul's inner participation, his personal concern in this matter. For Phil. 2:1, Col. 3:12 → oiktirmos NT 2.

4. In Acts 1:18 the bowels in the physical sense are meant. 1 Jn. 3:17 means the heart as the source of action that helps and relieves need.

5. For polysplanchnos (Jas. 5:11) → oiktirmos NT 4. eusplanchnos, tenderhearted, is found in lists of Christian virtues in Eph. 4:32 and 1 Pet. 3:8.

→ Brother, → Heart, → Love, → Man, → Righteousness H.-H. Esser

(a). R. Bultmann, eleos etc., TDNT II 477–87; and oiktirō etc., TDNT V 159 ff.; J. D. M. Derrett, "The Parable of the Good Samaritan", in Law in the New Testament, 1970, 208–27; R. Jewett, Paul's Anthropological Terms: A Study of their Use in Conflict Settings, 1971; A. R. Johnson, "ḥeseḏ and ḥāsîḏ", in N. A. Dahl and A. S. Kapelrud, eds., Interpretationes ad Vetus Testamentum pertinentes Sigmundo Mowinckel Septuagenario missae, 1955, 100 ff.; E. Käsemann, "Worship and Everyday Life: A Note on Romans 12", in New Testament Questions of Today, 1969, 188–95; H. Köster, splanchnon etc., TDNT VII 548–59; W. F. Lofthouse, "ḥēn and ḥesed in the Old Testament", ZAW Neue Folge 10, 1933, 29–35; N. H. Snaith, The Distinctive Ideas of the Old Testament, 1944, 94–130; H. W. Wolff, Anthropology of the Old Testament, 1974, 63–66.

(b). F. Asensio, Misericordia et Veritas, 1949; J. Begrich, "bᵉrîṯ. Ein Beitrag zur Erfassung einer alttestamentlichen Denkform", ZAW 60, 1944, 1–11 (Gesammelte Studien zum Alten Testament, ed. W. Zimmerli, 1964, 55–66); G. Braumann, "Jesu Erbarmen nach Matthäus", ThZ 19, 1963, 305 ff.; G. Delling, "Das Gleichnis vom gottlosen Richter", ZNW 51, 1962, 1 ff.; G. Eichholz, Jesus Christus und der Nächste, BSt 9, 1951; and Einführung in die Gleichnisse, BSt 37, 1963, 78 ff.; N. Glueck, Das Wort ḥeseḏ im alttestamentlichen Sprachgebrauch, BZAW 47, 1927; L. Gulkowitsch, Die Entwicklung des Begriffes ḥāsīḏ im Alten Testament, 1934; H. Gollwitzer, Das Gleichnis vom barmherzigen Samariter, BSt 34, 1962; G. Harder, Paulus und das Gebet, 1936, 88 f.; E. Kamlah, Die Form der katalogischen Paränese im Neuen Testament, WUNT 7, 1964; W. Monselewski, Der Barmherzige Samariter, 1967; L. Schmidt, Die Ethik der alten Griechen, II, 1882, 290–94; E. Sjøberg, Gott und die Sünder im palästinensischen Judentum, BWANT 4, 1939; H. J. Stoebe, "Die Bedeutung des Wortes ḥeseḏ im Alten Testament", VT 2, 1952, 244 ff.; S. Wibbing, Die Tugend- und Lasterkataloge im Neuen Testament, BZNW 25, 1959.

Might, Authority, Throne

The word dynamis suggests the inherent capacity of someone or something to carry something out, whether it be physical, spiritual, military or political. It also denotes the largely spontaneous expression of such dynamis. exousia, on the other hand, is used only with reference to people. It indicates the power to act which given as of right to anyone by virtue of the position he holds. Such authority exists, quite independently of whether it can be exercised in given circumstances. thronos, throne, is also relevant in this context. Originally it meant the seat of government, and then, equally, someone who was in such a position of authority or strength. The words bia, ischys, keras and kratos are discussed under → Strength.

δύναμις

δύναμις (dynamis), power, might, strength, force, ability, capability, deed of power, resources; δύναμαι (dynamai), to be strong enough to, be able to; δυνάστης (dynastēs), a ruler, sovereign; δυναμόω (dynamoō), strengthen; ἐνδυναμόω (endynamoō), strengthen; δυνατός (dynatos), powerful, strong, mighty, able; δυνατέω (dynateō), be strong, able, strong enough; ἀδύνατος (adynatos), powerless, impotent.

CL 1. dynamis, from the stem dyna-, means power, strength, might; cf. also the vb. dynamai, be able, have the strength to, and the noun dynastēs, a ruler (since Soph.); further, the later vbs. dynamoō and endynamoō, strengthen, and finally the adj. dynatos, strong, mighty, and the vb. derived from it which is only attested in the NT, dynateō, be strong, have the strength to.

2. dynamis, frequently found from Homer onwards, means ability to achieve, physical strength; and then troops, fighting forces, and political power. Where Gk. philosophy and medicine reflect on the nature of man, the concept appears in its original sense of the strength or ability to live and to act which is dependent on physical strength and spiritual faculties.

dynamis figures in the realm of nature, e.g. in the power of heat and cold, and the healing power of plants and elements. In Hellenistic times the word took on metaphysical connotations. Posidonius saw the principle of being in an elementary force (cf. K. Reinhardt, Poseidonius, 1921; Kosmos und Sympathie, 1926). The Stoics equated the all-pervading creative-force with God (Alexander of Aphrodisiensis, 2, 308, 35 ff.; cf. J. von Arnim, Stoicorum Veterum Fragmenta, I–IV, 1921–4). The gnostics honoured God as the Almighty, and hoped for men's redemption through their incorporation into the heavenly powers (Corp.Herm., Poimandres, I, 26). Men tried, above all through → magic, to obtain a share in the supranatural powers (Iamblichus, De Mysteriis 2, 1); sick people looked for healing through a demonstration of the power of the god Asclepius (P.Oxy. XI, 1381, 206 ff.).

OT 1. In the LXX dynamis, as a rule, is used to translate the Heb. ḥayil (138 times) or ṣābā' (113 times), and generally means military forces. It can also stand for gᵉḇûrâh (power e.g. of a ruler), as in Jdg. 5:31;5:21, or for 'ôz (e.g. Ps. 68 [67]:28). The plur. ṣᵉḇā'ôṯ often refers to the heavenly hosts (Ps. 102[103]:21); God is "Yahweh Sabaoth", i.e. the Lord of the heavenly hosts (Ps. 45[46]:7, 11; 47[48]:8; → God, art. theos OT 2). The personal God now becomes the subject of the transcendent powers; autonomous powers of nature and magic are pushed into the background. God's might is primarly revealed on the level of history, and to a particular people. The proof of God's power, so fundamental for Israel, was the miraculous deliverance at the Red Sea (Exod. 15:6, 13; Deut. 3:24; 9:26, 29). The subsequent theological struggle with Canaanite religion led to the introduction of → nature into the field of God's activity and power; the most comprehensive demonstration of God's power is then seen to be the creation of the world (Jer. 34[27]:5; 39[32]:17). On the basis of the nation's experience, individuals can also praise God as their refuge and strength (Ps. 45[46]:1; Sam. 22:32 ff.). God's power, at work in the believer, is the → Spirit (Mic. 3:8). God is Spirit, not flesh: he far transcends the whole creation (Isa. 31:3 f.). It is not, however, dynamis, but ischys (→ Strength) that is mostly used as a translation for Heb. kôaḥ and 'ōz in the LXX: Israel did not only potentially, but actually experience the manifestation of God's power.

2. Jewish apocalyptic lived in the expectation of the judgment of the world in the near future by God, hoping to see a display of the might of which Israel, as a nation, currently experienced so little. kôᵃḥ and 'ôz are used less, and gᵉḇûrâh comes into the foreground: this represents the power of God at work in the last days. The writings from Qumran foresee the triumph of God's might in the war of the Children of Light against the Children of Darkness. The end of the age brings the conclusive and world-embracing demonstration of God's mighty deeds (gᵉḇûrôṯ), previously experienced by Israel alone (1QM 11:1–12:5). In this, God's power is expressed through the action both of human fighters and of the "mighty ones" (gibbôrîm), i.e. the angels. But God himself can also engage in battle as a mighty hero (gibbôr), and give the cosmic struggle its decisive turn (1QM 12:9; 1QH 6:30). The world war thus becomes a world-judgment, above all ending the rule of the devil (cf. Ass.Mos. 10:1; Test.Dan. 5:13–6:4). According to popular expectation, the messiah, too, will be a victorious warrior, and will be the instrument of God's final demonstration of power (Pss. Sol. 17:24, 42 f., 51). The Teacher of the Qumran community already knows the experience of God's might (1QH 4:23), through the Holy Spirit, who dwells in him as the gift of God, and as a promise of the eschatological fulfilment (1QH 7:6 f.; cf. 1QS 3:20–22). The Teacher sees his task as that of making known God's mighty deeds to all the living (1QH 4:28 f.).

The strong feeling that it was God's might that was his essential characteristic also illuminates the fact that, in Rabbinic writings, gᵉḇûrâh serves as a circumlocution for the name of God; but it is never used of the forces of the devil and his demons who oppose God. In the apocalyptic writings, the natural phenomena between heaven and earth are called powers or powers of heaven (Eth.Enoch 40:9; 61:10; 82:8; 91:16). These were placed by God under the rule of → angels (Jub. 2:2 f.). Wisdom can be described as a mirror of the power of God (Wis. 7:25 f.); and even the Torah is called "my power" by God (Mek.Exod. 3:1 on 15:2), doubtless because it is the instrument of creation and the power or order in the cosmos (cf. Ab.R.N. 3:14).

NT In the NT dynamis is found 118 times, and relatively frequently in the Pauline writings except in 1 Tim., Tit., Philemon; there is no use of the noun in any of the Johannine writings, nor in Jas. or Jude. dynamoō and dynateō only occur rarely in Paul, but the vb. dynamai, to be able (expressing possibility or capability), occurs as well in all those writings where the noun is not found, except for Tit. and Phil.

1. The Synoptic Gospels and Acts. Here dynamis denotes the power of God, the heavenly powers (in the plur.), miraculous power (in the plur., mighty deeds, miracles) and the power which brings salvation to completion.

(a) God is the Mighty One (Lk. 1:48); and, according to Mk. 14:62, Jesus himself used the reverential circumlocution of "the power" for the name of God. All his work is supported by the knowledge of the almighty power of God: with God all things are possible (Matt. 19:26 par. Mk. 10:27, Lk. 18:27; Mk. 14:35). At the end, his power is declared pre-eminently in the resurrection of the dead (Mk. 12:24).

(b) The NT also speaks of "powers", i.e. cosmic powers between heaven and earth that can appear in person (Mk. 13:25; cf. Rom. 8:38; Eph. 1:21; 1 Pet. 3:22). Significantly, superhuman representatives of evil are also credited with having power, but it is always pointed out, either that their power has already been broken, or that it will shortly be abolished (cf. Matt. 12:29 par. Mk. 3:27, Lk. 11:22; Lk. 10:19; 1 Cor. 15:24; 2 Thess. 2:9; Rev. 13:2; 17:13 f.; → Angel). It is characteristic for the NT and fundamental for its proclamation of "good news", that through and in Christ, those things have taken place to which both the OT and Judaism looked forward, God's demonstration of power in the last days, and his triumph over the climactic rise of evil.

(c) Christ was powerful in speech and action (Lk. 24:19). His → miracles are called dynameis (cf. Heb. g^{e}ḇûrôṯ; i.e. "mighty deeds"), because in them God's rule on earth begins to have a powerful effect, and the fight against the devil is carried out on the level of human existence (Matt. 12:22–30; Mk. 6:2, 5; Lk. 19:37; Acts 10:58). Jesus is the "mightier one" who, as God's representative, subdues the strong man, i.e. the devil (cf. Mk. 1:8 with 3:22–30). Jesus' miracles are worked by a power within himself (Mk. 5:30 par. Lk. 5:17; Mk. 6:14). Lk. links this God-given power with the Holy → Spirit in Lk. 1:35; 4:14; Acts 1:8; 10:38. The miracles, therefore, are regarded as evidence from God that Jesus is the messiah, the One anointed with the Spirit (Acts 2:22; 10:38). The exaltation of the messiah further makes him the mediator of God's saving might. For it is by the power of the Spirit, bestowed on them by Jesus, that his servants perform mighty acts (Acts 4:7; 6:8; 8:13; 19:11). The apostles' authoritative preaching (Acts 4:33; cf. 6:8–10) is seen as proof of a supernatural power.

(d) All these proofs of the Spirit and of power, of course, are only recognized as such where there is → faith. They cannot take place in an area of unbelief

(Mk. 6:5). But the final demonstration of Christ's power will be both public and irresistible. This will be at the time of his return (Matt. 24:32 par. Mk. 13:28, Lk. 21:29), when the → kingdom of God will be consummated "in power [en dynamei]" (Mk. 9:1), or "with power [meta dynameōs]" (Matt. 24:30 par. Mk. 13:26, Lk. 21:27). In this "latter-day" demonstration of God's power the believer already now has a share, which is why no limits are put to his actions, since all things are possible for him (Mk. 9:23).

2. John's Gospel and Revelation. (a) In the Gospel of Jn. the word dynamis does not occur, because here the messianic activity of Jesus is based on the sending of the Son, and on the unity of will of both Father and Son. The Son can do nothing without the Father (5:19, 30, dynatai); his miracles are signs which reveal the divine power of Jesus (see 3:2; 9:16; 10:21 – always dynatai). Conversely, the inability of men to believe in Jesus and to enter the sphere of God's reality is due to their being imprisoned in the world of darkness (3:3; 8:43; 14:17, ou dynatai). Only → election (6:44) and rebirth (3:5) secure their release.

(b) Rev. sees the saints in a vision praising Christ who, by his enthronement in heaven, has crowned his redeeming work on earth. Admittedly it is God who is worshipped in the hymn of praise, for his honour and might (dynamis) and power (Rev. 4:11; 7:12; 19:1), but the exalted Christ is also worthy to receive such soverign power, and that on the grounds of his sacrificial death (5:13; 12:10). For it was through Christ that God broke the power of evil rulers of the world (13:2); Christ made possible the victorious culmination of God's sovereign rule (11:17; 12:10; → Kingdom). In John's vision, the night-visions of the Son of Man are given a christological interpretation (cf. Rev. 13:1–14 with Dan. 7), and polemically contrasted with Roman world-domination and the Caesar-cult.

3. Paul. Paul lays a greater emphasis on the present experience of the revelation of God's might, which he understands primarily in terms of the power which raises the dead in the last days, and the new creativity of the Holy Spirit. This power of God which is at work in the last days was perceptible in Christ, the Risen One; and now Christ, the Exalted One, is the bearer and mediator of this same power. Admittedly God's invisible power can be deduced from the works of → creation (cf. Rom. 1:20). But it is the raising of Jesus from the dead that represents the central eschatological proof of God's might (cf. Rom. 1:4; 1 Cor. 5:14; 2 Cor. 13:4; Phil. 3:10; also Heb. 11:19). With the resurrection goes the exaltation (Eph. 1:20 f.), whereby Christ becomes the "power of God" (1 Cor. 1:24), i.e. the constantly available source of the power of God for his church. Paul in fact uses the vb. endynamoō, to strengthen, to describe this work of the exalted Christ in the lives of individual believers in Phil. 4:13 (also Eph. 6:10; 1 Tim. 1:12; 2 Tim. 4:17; and 2:1). In Christ's mediating work there is a double revelation of God's eschatological power: the → Word which brings salvation and the Holy → Spirit who creates and makes new.

(a) The gospel is effective as the power of God which brings salvation, partly because the preacher speaks in the power of Christ (2 Tim. 1:8 f.; 4:17), but above all because, as the Word of God, it grants salvation to all men (Rom. 1:16; 1 Cor. 1:18). It announces the → love of the God whom men fear as the condemning judge of the world, which was visibly proved on the → cross, where Christ died for us, while we were still sinners (Rom. 5:8). As the good news of reconciliation, the gospel itself becomes the power which creates freedom and salvation, when it is recognized and accepted as such in → faith (see Rom. 1:16). The believer sees, through the gospel, that the promises which were given in the OT have now come into force; and he discovers the previously-announced gospel of God in OT prophecy (Rom. 1:2).

(b) The natural man does not have the power to please God or to fulfil the → law. (cf. Rom. 8:7 f.; Gal. 3:21). In his weakness he even experiences the law to be a power which misleads him into → sin (cf. 1 Cor. 15:56). The believer, on the other hand, like his Risen Lord, lives in the power of God and of Christ (2 Cor. 6:7; 13:3 f.; also Eph. 1:19). It is not obedience to the law (contrast CD 16:4 f.), but the love of Christ, manifest in power, which protects him from all the cosmic powers (Rom. 8:38 f.). The kingdom of God is experienced in power, in sharp contrast to mere words (1 Cor. 4:19 f.) and merely exterior piety (2 Tim. 3:4). Because it is intended for the glorification of Christians, there is a close link between the power of God and → glory (doxa; cf. Rom. 1:4 with 6:4). Paul also connects the power of God with the Holy Spirit. He is the power of the → resurrection and of the life in the new aeon, and the power which works signs and wonders (Rom. 15:19; 1 Cor. 12:10; 28; Gal. 3:5), which also vindicate Paul's apostleship (2 Cor. 12:12). dynamis therefore denotes here the → Spirit insofar as he is revealed in the mighty works of those gifted with the Spirit (pneumatikos, cf. 1 Cor. 2:13, 15; 3:1; 14:37; Gal. 6:1).

(c) It is the Spirit, who, as the power of Christ, realizes the authority of the heavenly Lord in the earthly community. It is he who, to use E. Käsemann's phrase, is Christus praesens. ([Ed.] This is shown, for example, in the way that Paul describes the Christian life sometimes in terms of a relationship with Christ [e.g. Rom. 5:1; 1 Cor. 1:30; 2 Cor. 5:19 ff.; Gal. 2:20 f.; 4:6 ff.; Phil. 2:21; 3:8 ff.] and sometimes as a relationship with the Spirit [e.g. Rom. 8:11, 14 ff.; 1 Cor. 2:4, 12 f.; 2 Cor. 3:6; 5:5; Gal. 4:6]. Paul is describing the same basic experience, but in the one case he is approaching it from the standpoint of Christ and in the other case from that of the Spirit through whom Christ is made present to the believer. The two thoughts are brought together in, e.g., Eph. 2:18; Phil. 1:19, cf. 26.) The Spirit has power to purify and judge the church (1 Cor. 5:4). He strengthens it and trains it in patience, so that its members are kept in faith till the day of judgment (1 Pet. 1:5; cf. Col. 1:11; Eph. 3:16 f.; 2 Thess. 1:11 f.). Since the Spirit is the representative of the exalted Lord, he cannot be manipulated like the power of → magic in the hands of a magician (cf. Acts 8:18–20). Nor is he simply an extra addition to men's physical and spiritual powers. On the contrary, his supernatural origin and his characteristic as the power of God is proved by the fact that it is in weak men that he is powerful (2 Cor. 12:9 f.; cf. 1 Cor. 1:26–29; 2 Cor. 4:7; 6:4–10). For Paul, God is truly revealed as God where from a human standpoint there is nothing to hope for. God gives life to the dead, and calls into existence non-existent things (Rom. 4:17). That is why, from the human point of view, God chose weak and unworthy things to be the objects of his demonstrations of might (1 Cor. 1:27): the insignificant Israelites; Paul, the persecutor of Christians; and the social nonentities of Corinth.

However, the greatest proof of this law of divine action and the justification of the despised Christian way of life is to be found in the → cross. Christ died on the cross in weakness having renounced all personal claims to power, and now he lives by the power of God (2 Cor. 13:4). Exactly the same is true of the Christian: he is weak, but that is the very reason why God's power equips him for life with Christ. Accordingly, God's work in the life of a Christian is always contrary to human expectations. Paul, in prison, is able to say that he can do all things through the one who makes him strong (Phil. 4:13). The strong in Christ, for their part, are to regard themselves as under obligation to serve their weaker brothers. Thus they will avoid the danger of forgetting that the strength they have is not their own, but given them by Christ, and of misusing it for their own ends (Rom. 15:1). It is questionable whether Paul's opponents in 2 Cor. thought of Jesus and themselves analogously with the Hellenistic "divine man [theios anēr]", and so performed all kinds of powerful deeds by virtue of the dynamis of Christ always in them, as Dieter Georgi and others have suggested (cf. D. Georgi, Die Gegner des Paulus im 2 Korintherbrief, 1964, with the discussion of C. K. Barrett, A Commentary on the Second Epistle to the Corinthians, 1973, 102 ff.).

(d) By the power of God, the Christian is assured of future perfection. The present inner transformation, which has already begun, will be followed by the visible and total transformation of the body for eternal life. This will take place when the Christian is himself raised from the dead by the same power of God which raised his Lord (1 Cor. 6:14; cf. 2 Cor. 4:14). Christ will then change him, by his power, and so transfigure his lowly earthly body that it will be like his own glorified body (Phil. 3:21). On this account, the Christian hope is based on the resurrection, and is concerned to know the power which was made visible when Christ was raised from the dead (Phil. 3:10; cf. 1 Cor. 4:19 f.).

4. The adj. adynatos, powerless, impotent, is used of the lame man at Lystra, crippled from birth (Acts 14:6) who was healed in response to Paul's command to stand on his feet. It denotes what is impossible with men (Matt. 19:26; Mk. 10:27; Lk. 18:27), but which is not with God. In Rom. 15:1 it is used as a noun in the contrast: "We who are strong [hēmeis hoi dynatoi] ought to bear with the failings of the weak [tōn adynatōn], and not to please ourselves." In Heb. 6:4 adynatos denotes the impossibility of restoring those who commit apostasy, which stands in contrast to the impossibility of God proving false (6:18). In Heb. 10:4 it occurs in the assertion that it is impossible that the blood of bulls and goats should take away sin. This too stands in contrast with the fact that without faith it is impossible to please God (11:6). O. Betz

ἐξουσία

ἐξουσία (exousia), freedom of choice, right, power, authority, ruling power, a bearer of authority; ἐξουσιάζω (exousiazō), have the right or power, exercise authority; κατεξουσιάζω (katexousiazo), exercise authority over, misuse official authority, tyrannize; ἔξεστι (exesti), 3rd person sing. of the unused vb. ἔξειμι (exeimi) which is used impersonally in the sense: it is permitted, it is possible, proper, or even lawful.

CL exousia (derived from exesti, it is possible, permitted, allowed) denotes unrestricted possibility or freedom of action; and then power, authority, right of action. From the noun comes exousiazō, to exercise one's rights, have full power of authority; and katexousiazō, a word scarcely attested in secular Gk., meaning exercise, or misuse, of the authority of one's office.

1. By contrast with → dynamis, where any potential strength is based on inherent physical, spiritual or natural powers, and is exhibited in spontaneous actions, powerful deeds and natural phenomena, exousia denotes the power which may be displayed in the areas of legal, political, social or moral affairs (Plato, Definitiones 415b). For instance, it is always linked with a particular position or mandate; so that it refers to the right of a king, a father or a tenant to dispose as he wishes (P.Oxy. II, 237); or the authorization of officials or messengers (Diod.Sic. 13, 36, 2; 14, 81, 6); but also the moral freedom of people to allow or to do something (Plato, Definitiones 412d). The word is thus used only of people; it cannot be applied to natural forces.

2. exousia is often (a) official power (cf. Lat. potestas) which does not necessarily require enforcement; it can simply rest, or just stand in contradiction to the existing power-structures. exousia can be delegated. Hence, where it is illegally seized or unsurped, it can mean (b) despotic rule. These legal applications of the word exousia explain the further derived meanings, (c) the office appropriate for the authority; and in the plur. (d) office-holders and "the authorities".

OT 1. In the LXX exousia occurs much less commonly than dynamis (50 as against c. 400 times), and the vb. is also rare. exousia only rarely translates a Heb. word, such as memšālâh, dominion, kingdom (2 Ki. 20:13; Isa. 39:2). It is found more commonly in the Gk. books of the Apocrypha, already used with its (for the Rabbis) significant reference to the law, and with the meaning of permission to do something (Tob. 2:13 S). The book of Daniel is important as background material for the NT use of the word, where exousia, both in the LXX and in the translation of Theodotion, is used as the Gk. equivalent for Aram. šoltānā', dominion, power, with reference even to the whole world. The authority of the human world-rulers originates from the supernatural realm; it is delegated by God, the Lord of history. He whose rule is eternal (Dan. 4:31) installs and removes kings (2:21), and can take their dominion away from them all (7:12). The unsatisfactory and provisional nature of human government is grounded, in Dan. 7, in the origin of the world-powers in the dominion of Chaos, opposed to God, and in their denial of their divine commission. Therefore, at the end of the times, and when human rule has reached its lowest point, the "Son of Man" (i.e. man) is enthroned to symbolize the rule of God's mercies, and for that very reason, of true humanity. He is invested with might, glory and sovereign authority to rule all nations. His dominion is an everlasting dominion, which never passes away (7:14). The "Son of Man", according to Dan. 7:27, means "the people of the saints of the Most High", the true Israel of the last days. They shall receive kingly power, and all sovereignties must obey them. In the Similitudes of Eth.Enoch and in 2 Esd., the night-vision of Dan. 7 undergoes further exegetical development and the "Son of Man" is equated with the final judge of the world or with the messiah (→ Son of God, art. hyios tou anthrōpou).

2. Josephus and Philo. Both these writers follow the general Gk. usage, but stress the aspect of authoritative, ruling power. Thus, in Josephus exousia means the governmental power of kings (Life 112; Ant. 14, 302); in Life 72 the delegated power of a ruler or officials (Life 72), or permission (Ant. 20, 193). It is also a basic premise for Josephus that the power of the world's governments is not gained without God (War 2, 140), and that no-one can escape from the power of God (Ant. 5, 109). exousia, used concretely in the plur., means the authorities (War 2, 350). Freedom of action, in the area of obedience to the Torah, can also be described as exousia (Ant. 4, 24). Philo follows secular Gk. usage. exousia denotes the absolute power of the king (Leg.Gai. 26, 54, 190), governor (Op.Mund. 17), people (Jos. 67), and God (De Cherubim 27; Leg.All. 1, 95; Sacr. 60).

3. Rabbinic Usage. The range of meaning of exousia in the NT is particularly influenced by the use of a word, not found in the OT, but of importance in the teaching in the Rab. schools, the Heb. rāšûṯ, ruling power, government; and r^{e}šûṯ (Aram. r^{e}šûṯā'), power of attorney, power to act, freedom to do something.

(a) rāšûṯ denotes worldly government as a whole, especially the Roman empire, which was regarded with distant suspicion (Aboth 1: 10; 2: 3). Worldly rule, here below, was distinguished from the heavenly rule above (T. J. San. 6, 23d), but God's own authority was not directly designated as rāšûṯ, probably because it is underived. In addition, the Rabbis were fighting the doctrine of the two powers to which dualistic and gnostic thinkers and exegetes attributed the creation of the world (Gen.R. 1:10; cf. B. San. 38a and B. Hag. 15a). Such views were rightly condemned as heretical, for they endangered Jewish monotheism.

(b) rāšûṯ denotes (i) authoritative power of action, competency within particular social groupings, e.g. among members of a family (Ned. 10:2–4), the rights of a house-owner (Bab.K. 5:3), and then the power of attorney linked with a particular commission, such as that of an ambassador (Kidd. 4:9). (ii) In a juridical sense, the word is used for the right to teach (B.San. 5a), to inherit (Ket. 9:5), to marry (Yeb. 4:11). All power is delegated by God. He even gives the destroying angels authority to carry out their pernicious work (B.Pes. 112b; cf. Mek. Exod. 4 on 19:21. (iii) rāšûṯ means, finally, freedom of action, in the God-given order of the Torah: it refers to what is allowed, as opposed to the commandments and the halachic duties (Baba Kamma 3:5; B.Hull. 106a; B.Ber. 27b). R. Akiba taught the paradoxically juxtaposed doctrines of the divine foreknowledge of all events and freedom of human action (Aboth 3:15 f.).

4. Qumran. The idea of rāšûṯ does not appear in these writings, but it is important to see in them the appointed presence of the dominion of the devil and of the power of darkness (1QS 1:18, 23 f.; 2:19; 3:23; 1QM 13:5 f.; 14:9; 17:5 f.). These will be destroyed at the end by the kingdom of the Archangel Michael (→ Angel, art. Michaēl), and by the Israel he represents (1QM 18:7 f.). The word memšālâh, used in these references for kingdom or dominion, corresponds with the Gk. exousia, which itself translates memšālâh in the LXX from time to time. In Test.Lev. 3:8 the heavenly powers are called exousiai (cf. Eth.Enoch 61:10). This plur. usage has the same meaning as dynameis. As with the similarly used archai, powers (→ Beginning), this word will have been influenced by Heb. r^{e}šûyôṯ powers.

NT In the NT exousia appears 108 times, most frequently in Rev., Lk., and 1 Cor.

It is used in a secular sense, meaning the power to give orders (Matt. 8:9 par. Lk. 7:8; Lk. 19:17; 20:20); in a concrete sense, meaning jurisdiction (Lk. 23:7); and in the plur., meaning officials, authorities (Lk. 12:11; Tit. 3:1). In Rom. 13:1, the "powers that be [exousiais hyperechousais]", as the "authorities [archontes]" in v. 3, should be understood as state officials, not (as some suggest) as angelic powers. See further M. Black, Romans, New Century Bible, 1973, 158 ff., who notes the following recent studies on the question: O. Cullmann, "Zur neuesten Diskussion über die Exousiai in Röm. 13, 1", ThZ 10, 1954, 321 ff.; and The State in the New Testament, 1957; C. D. Morrison, The Powers that Be: Earthly Rulers and Demonic Powers in Romans 13.1–7, SBT 29, 1960; E. Wolf, "Politischer Gottesdienst", Festschrift K. O. Schmidt, 1961, 51–63; V. Zsifkovits, Der Staatsgedanke nach Paulus in Rom. 13, 1964; H. von Campenhausen, "Zur Auslegung von Röm. 13. Die dämonistische Deutung des Exousia-Begriffs", Aus der Frühzeit des Christentums, 1963, 81 ff.; E. Käsemann, "Principles of the Interpretation of Romans 13", in New Testament Questions of Today, 1969, 196–216; C. E. B. Cranfield, "Some Observations on Rom. 13:1–7", NTS 6, 1959–60, 241–49; A. Strobel, "Zum Verständnis von Röm. 13", ZNW 47, 1956, 67–93; O. Michel, "Das Problem des Staates in neutestamentlicher Sicht", TLZ 83, 1958, 161–66; E. Bammel, "Ein Beitrag zur paulinischen Staatsanschauung", TLZ 85, 1960, 837–40; G. Delling, Röm. 13.1–7 innerhalb der Briefe des Neuen Testaments, 1962.

It is characteristic for the NT that exousia and dynamis are both related to the work of Christ, the consequent new ordering of cosmic power-structures and the empowering of believers. Both words are brought together in Lk. 9:1. exousia is not attributed to the gift of the Spirit; whereas Jesus' dynamis has its foundation in his being anointed, his exousia is founded on his being sent. exousia is that power, authority and freedom of action which belongs: (1) to God himself; (2) to a commission in the last days; and (3) to a Christian in his eschatological existence.

1. God's exousia. (a) God's eschatological authority is linked with his rôle as disposer of world history, and as → judge of the world. By his own authority, he has fixed the dates and times of the end, and has the termination of history in his control (Acts 1:7). He has the power to consign men to eternal ruin (Lk. 12:5). Existential consciousness of the absolute freedom of God finds its expression in his predestination: Paul compares God with a potter, who can do what he likes with the clay (Rom. 9:21; cf. Isa. 29:16; 45:9; Jer. 18:6; Wis. 15:7; Sir. 36[33]:12 f.; → Determine; → Election).

(b) God can delegate eschatological authority, for instance, to the angel who punishes at the judgment (Rev. 6:8); and other creatures can be involved (Rev. 9:3, 10, 19). By way of contrast, the heavenly powers (exousiai) are scarcely taken into consideration in this eschatological event. They are generally mentioned along with the archai, and have the same significance as the dynameis (Eph. 1:21; 3:10; Col. 1:16; 2:10 → Beginning). Christ's exaltation means that they have been subjected to him (Eph. 1:21; 1 Pet. 3:22). But the opposition has not yet all been broken: this means that the messiah's rule must continue for the time being (1 Cor. 15:24). The natural man, as the Qumran writings also saw, stands under the domination of → darkness and the lordship of the devil (Col. 1:13; Acts 16:18). In opposition to that stands the realm of → light, the kingdom of the Son, and God himself (ibid.). In comparison with the Qumran writings, the devil (→ Satan) appears, in fact, to have increased power: he is called the "prince [or ruler] of this world [ho archōn tou kosmou toutou]" (Jn. 12:31; 14:30; 16:11), even "the god of this world [ho theos tou aiōnos toutou]" (2 Cor. 4:4; → Time, art. aiōn). The devil, like God, can delegate his rule over the world to others, e.g., the → Antichrist (cf. Rev. 13:2, 4, 12). He even tempted Jesus with such an offer (Lk. 4:6). But dualism is avoided, because even the devil's power is allotted him by God (ibid.); his activity fits into God's plan and is therefore limited (Lk. 22:53). Statements about the power of the devil are not to be assigned a place in a pessimistic view of the world, but in the Good News of the redemptive work of Christ. It is precisely where Jesus speaks of the devil as the "prince of this world" that he announces his downfall.

2. The exousia of Jesus. (a) The work of the earthly Jesus announces that the devil (→ Satan) and the → demons have been deprived of their power: the One who is sent by God has the authority to destroy the works of the devil and to snatch men from his rule. Exorcism is therefore attributed to the authority of Jesus (Lk. 4:36), which he can also pass on to the disciples he sends out (Matt. 10:1 par. Mk. 3:15, Lk. 9:1; Mk. 6:7; Lk. 10:19). Jesus acted with God's authority when he forgave a man his sins and confirmed the power of his word by a healing miracle (Matt. 9:2–8 par. Mk. 2:3–12, Lk. 5:18–26; cf. Ps. 103:3). Jesus' eschatological commission, his purpose of saving God's children, brought him into collision with the → law as the → Pharisees understood it. Jesus rejected the literalistic understanding of the letter of the law according to Rab. Halachah which stood in the way of God's saving will (Matt. 12:10, 12; Mk. 3:4; Lk. 14:3; Jn. 5:10). Jesus' authority could be seen in this → teaching, which provoked astonishment (Mk. 1:22, 27; Matt. 7:29; Lk. 4:32), because he did not teach like the scribes. The latter were guided by their teaching tradition (Matt. 7:29), whereas Jesus, the anointed One, not only received his words from the mouth of God, like Moses and the prophets, but spoke with the unique authority of the → Son who alone knows the → Father and who alone can reveal him (Matt. 11:27; Lk. 10:22; cf. also Matt. 28:18; Jn. 3:35; 13:3; 10:15; 17:25). The cleansing of the → Temple (Matt. 21:12 f.; Mk. 11:11–17; Lk. 19:45 f.; Jn. 2:13–17; Exod. 30:13; Lev. 1:14; Isa. 56:7; Jer. 7:11) also presupposes a consciousness of messianic authority.

(b) In John's Gospel Jesus' plenitentiary authority is based on the fact that he is the Son and that he is sent (cf. e.g. Jn. 17:2); he has also been given the authority of the judge at the end of time (Jn. 5:27). But in the Johannine writings, as the Synoptics, Jesus seeks to save men rather than judge them. His power is not forcible domination, but absolute freedom to be a servant to the world. He has the exousia to give his life and to take it again (Jn. 10:18). Jesus' sacrifice opens the way for believers to the Father (Jn. 3:16; 14:6). Those who receive him and believe in his name are given exousia to become → children of God (Jn. 1:12).

(c) This representation of Jesus' authority in the Fourth Gospel anticipates the resurrection. For with his exaltation, which followed on from Easter (→ Height), Jesus received from God all power in heaven and on earth (Matt. 28:18). This fulfilled Daniel's vision of the enthronement and granting of power to the Son of Man (cf. Dan. 7:14). But now in place of the collective "saints of the Most Hi⁻h", stands Christ. Further, God's power is not realized by violently subjugating the nations, but by the spread of the → gospel, winning the world to faith in Christ. Hence it is the church, not the sovereign rule of → Israel, which outwardly expresses the reign of the messiah on earth (Acts 1:6–8). For the cross and the exaltation of Christ signify the disarming of the evil one, the judgment and the turning-point of the ages. This must be preached as Good News to all the world. The exalted Lord therefore sends out his messengers and empowers them for their service in the gospel (Matt. 28:18–20). Analogous with Jesus' earthly ministry, and in accord with the contents of the Easter message, the → apostles of Christ received power to confer the Holy Spirit (Acts 8:19; 19:6; but cf. 2:38; 10:44–48), and to build up rather than to destroy (2 Cor. 10:8; 13:10). Because of his spiritual ministry as a servant in the church, an apostle has the right to have his physical needs looked after by the church (1 Cor. 9:4–6; 2 Thess. 3:9). exousia in these passages means a right or prerogative.

3. The exousia of believers. The authority of a Christian believer is founded on the rule of Christ and on the disarming of all powers. It implies both → freedom and service. As Luther put it in The Freedom of a Christian (1520): "A Christian is a perfectly free lord of all, subject to none. A Christian is a perfectly dutiful servant of all, subject to all" (Luther's Works, ed. H. T. Lehmann, XXXI, 1957, 344). He is free to do anything (1 Cor. 6:12; 10:23; exestin); this assertion which was made initially by the sectarian enthusiasts at Corinth, was taken up by Paul who acknowledged it to be correct. The believer has full freedom of action, because the law, as a prohibitive barrier, has been broken down through Christ's redeeming and saving act, and because he has received the gift of the Spirit of freedom. He has the freedom and the power to dispose everything as he will, because, now that Christ has been exalted, nothing is any longer under the rule of the powers. In practice, however, this theoretically unrestricted freedom is governed by consideration of what is helpful to other individual Christians and the congregation as a whole, in view of the fact that the complete redemption is still to come (1 Cor. 6:12; 10:13). Since God's eschatological work has not yet been consummated either in individual Christians or in the structures of the world, it is important that people should be sensible, and take into account both their own Christian lives, still bound to "the flesh of the old Adam", and also the → conscience of weaker brothers (1 Cor. 10:28, 31 ff.), and not plunge into unbridled freedom, as if the resurrection of believers had already taken place! It is just such an unrestrained use of one's freedom which could precipitate a Christian into a new servitude. Hence he is not to let anything be his master. " 'All things are lawful [exestin] for me', but not all things are helpful. 'All things are lawful [exestin] for me', but I will not be enslaved [exousiasthēsomai] by anything" (1 Cor. 6:12). " 'All things are lawful [exestin]', but not all things are helpful. 'All things are lawful [exestin]', but not all things build up. Let no one seek his own good, but the good of his neighbour" (1 Cor. 10:23 f.). The quotations within these quotations are probably the slogans of the libertines at Corinth. Paul counters them by admitting their truth, but by showing that it is not the whole truth. O. Betz θρόνος (thronos), throne, seat.

| θρόνος |

CL 1. thronos comes from the Indo-Germanic root dhere-*, to hold, and is related to the Lat. firmus (firm, steadfast, powerful) and Ger. dingen (to secure). In Homer, it means a chair with an attached foot-stool (thrēnos; cf. Homer Od. 19, 57); later mainly with a high back-rest and arm-rests. The word, used originally without any particular symbolic force, was very widely used, by contrast with the Lat. thronos, first used by Suetonius and referring only to the seat of a god (cf. Octavius Augustus Caesar 70). The Gk. word only took on this meaning later in its history. It could also be used metaphorically, as in the plur. thronoi, for power (cf. Aesch., Prometheus 228; and cf. Col. 1:16 of angelic powers). To be seated on the throne (kathēmai, set oneself, sit) is a sign of regal or divine majesty (cf. Homer, Il. 4, 1; Od. 13, 264; → Sit).

2. In the Gk. world, from Mycenaean times, the seat of the master of the house was a seat of honour – a conception taken over via Crete from the Orient. But it is also offered to guests and bards: it does not indicate a superior position in the oriental sense. In bas-reliefs the dead are given such a chair; in epic poetry the gods (Aesch., Eumenides 229), and especially Zeus (Homer, Il. 8, 436–442), are so honoured, and represented in sculpture. This can hardly be called a throne-cult. Representations of an empty divine throne are rare and late.

OT 1. The royal throne, in the strict sense, derives from the Orient. Sitting on the throne denotes the unique exaltation of the absolute ruler, his total superiority over against those who are subject to him. It is the sole right of the ruler to sit (kathēmai) on the throne; the suppliant or servant stands before him – (cf. the Hammurabi Stele; see illustration in L. H. Grollenberg, Atlas of the Bible, 1957, plates 79–81 on p. 31). Only when the king sits on the throne does he finally take his power. The magnificent ornamentation indicates his divine dignity; at the side of the throne, to right and left, stand attendant heavenly beings, → cherubim, winged creatures with human heads or lions, as pictorial symbols of ruling power (cf. 1 Ki. 10:18 ff.). Characteristic for oriental thought is the mutual interplay of ideas of regal and divine power, something which was foreign to Greece until the time of Alexander the Great (356–323 B.C.). The earthly ruler was honoured as the "Son", or even (as in Egypt) as the incarnation of the divine. The nature of their kingship was similarly represented.

2. In the first instance the OT reflects, as one would expect, the world of oriental throne symbolism. Since the institution of the monarchy the throne (Heb. kissē') was the sole prerogative of the ruler (Gen. 41:40), his relatives (1 Ki. 2:19) or representatives (Neh. 3:7). Since the → king was originally also the → judge, the throne was both a visible symbol of regal power (2 Sam. 3:9; 14:9) and of justice (Ps. 122:5). The throne was thus a constant factor, over against the changing bearers of power. In this way, Nathan's promise of the permanence of the Davidic rule (2 Sam. 7:13) was linked with the throne (cf. also 1 Chr. 28:5; 29:23). This formed the primary link with the later hope of the everlasting throne of the messiah. But, in Judaism it was not identical with the throne of God (see below OT 5).

3. Naturally in the OT the throne represents God's power and righteousness. This can never be simply identified with the king's power, however much the oriental court style was taken over. The Israelite king stood in an adoptive relationship with Yahweh (Ps. 2:7). Yahweh's throne is variously described and located in the OT. Jeremiah specified Jerusalem, on the one hand (3:17), and Israel, on the other (14:21, thronos doxēs "throne of glory" is more a metaphorical sense). Ezekiel, in his great vision of the future, saw the new → temple as the abode of the divine throne (43:7); while in Isa. 66:1 heaven is said to be Yahweh's throne (cf. Isa. 6:1; 14:13).

The special nature of the divine kingship is seen in the awesome throne-vision of Isaiah (6:1–13; cf. also 1 Ki. 22:19), but most clearly in Ezekiel (1:4–28). Here Yahweh's kingly power is seen under the symbolism of transcendent creatures, representing the world-rule of their Lord. They each have four faces, representing God's omnipresence, and face the world, while above their out-spread wings "glittering like an awe-inspiring crystal" (1:22) stands the vault of heaven which, according to the account of creation in Gen. 1:6 f., keeps the destroying floods away from the creation. It is above this world, that is to say, entirely and inaccessibly out of men's reach, that God's throne is seen, surrounded by an unearthly brightness. Here is a pictorial, rather than a conceptual description, both of the sheer transcendence of God, and of his omnipresence in the world.

The throne of the "Ancient of days" in Dan. 7:9 probably has a similar significance (cf. Ps. 97:2; Eth.En. 14:18 f.) The other thrones mentioned, which have given rise to much debate, are probably for the assessors or the jury in the court proceedings. It is not certain who these would originally be. Later interpretation makes them the elect saints (cf. Matt. 19:28; 1 Cor. 6:2; Rev. 20:4). See further H. H. Rowley, Darius the Mede and the Four World Empires in the Book of Daniel, 1935; J. A. Emerton. "The Origin of the Son of Man Imagery", JTS New Series 9, 1958, 225–42; N. W. Porteous, Daniel: A Commentary, 1965, 107 ff.

4. The hidden dynamic of this throne-theology is revealed by the rite of Yahweh's ceremonial enthronement, which is reflected in the evidence, e.g., of Pss. 24; 93; 96–99. Yahweh's kingship is not an inactive representation, but a fight that has just been won. This is particularly clear in Ps. 93; but the fight-motif comes again in Pss. 46 and 89:7 ff. According to S. Mowinckel, "The [enthronement] festival celebrates Yahweh as the creator of the world, as king and ruler of the world, in his victory over the dragon, the flood and all his enemies" (Religion und Kultus, 1953, 76). In this ritual, which was part of the New Year Festival, the Ark of the Covenant is thought to have represented the unoccupied throne of God: Yahweh is pictured as present, though invisible, "enthroned on the cherubim" (Ps. 99:1), which were on both sides of the flat surface of the ark. The Ark was "the earthly counterpart of the heavenly throne" (W. Eichrodt, Theology of the Old Testament II, 1967, 193). For further discussion of kingship and the enthronement Psalms → Myth, art. mythos OT; → King, Kingdom, art. basileia OT; and the following literature: G. Fohrer, History of Israelite Religion, 1973, 139–50; J. de Fraine, L'Aspect religieux de la Royauté Israelite, 1954; H. Ringgren, The Messiah in the Old Testament, 1956; and Israelite Religion, 1966, 220–38; I. Engnell, Studies in Divine Kingship, 1943; G. Widengren, Sakrales Königtum, 1955; A. R. Johnson, Sacral Kingship in Ancient Israel, 1955; G. W. Ahlström, Psalm 89, 1959; S. H. Hooke, ed., Myth, Ritual and Kingship, 1958; S. Mowinckel, The Psalms in Israel's Worship, I–II 1962; and He That Cometh 1954; A. A. Anderson, The Book of Psalms, I–II, 1972; and literature in the bibliography under → King.

5. Late Judaism, in connection with Ps. 93, counted the throne of Yahweh as one of the "pre-cosmic works of God" (O. Schmitz, TDNT III 163). Yahweh's throne is described in detail in Eth.Enoch 14:18 ff. and Sl.Enoch 2–20; but a messiah sitting on this throne is only mentioned in Eth.Enoch 51:3; 55:4; 62:2, 3, 5 ff. This would have been a profanation for Judaism, which regarded the messiah as a man. In Eth.Enoch, the messiah, who is here a heavenly figure, administers justice before the throne of God (45:3).

6. 11QMelchizedek refers to → Melchizedek taking his seat on high as head of the heavenly court in response to Ps. 7:7b (cf. RSV). There are also references to the throne of the coming son of David in 4Q161 (pesher on Isa. 11:1 ff.) and 4Q174 (pesher on 2 Sam. 7:14).

NT 1. The NT adds little to these OT conceptions. It takes them over quite naturally and without emphasis, except for Rev., where the throne plays a dominant role. The word occurs there 41 times, over against 14 instances in the rest of the NT. In Matt. 5:34, Jesus speaks of → heaven as God's throne and for that reason forbids men to swear by it. The promise to Nathan is alluded to in Lk. 1:32, with extended reference to the messianic throne (2 Sam. 7:12, 16; cf. also Acts 3:20 f.). Genitive phrases, modelled on LXX usage, are found, such as "throne of glory" (Matt. 19:28; 25:31; cf. 1 Sam. 2:8) and "throne of grace" (Heb. 4:16). The latter is the antitype to the "mercy seat [hilastērion]" in the earthly sanctuary (Heb. 9:5; cf. F. F. Bruce, Commentary on the Epistle to the Hebrews, NLC, 1964, 86; → Reconciliation, art. hilaskomai).

2. A striking point in the NT is that the → Son of man sits on the divine throne of judgment. It is not the conception as such that is new (see above OT 5) but the claim of a historical man to be this eschatological judge. Matt. 19:28 even promises such ruling authority to the twelve apostles, as co-judges over Israel (→ Disciple, art. akoloutheō). In Matt. 25:31 ff. the Son of man judges the world from his throne of glory entirely on his own. That is the provocative claim of Jesus. There is a pictorial tension between these statements and those (following Ps. 110:1) which view the messiah "sitting at the right hand of God" (→ Hand, art. dexios); but there is no material contradiction.

3. (a) In Heb. the phrase "the throne of grace [thronos tēs charitos]" (4:16) appears, in implicit antithesis to the usual Rab. concept of two divine thrones – that of justice, and that of grace. In exhortation to stand fast to our confession, Heb. 4:15 f. declares: "For we have not a high priest who is unable to sympathize with our weaknesses, but one who in every respect has been tempted as we are, yet without sinning. Let us then with confidence draw near to the throne of grace, that we may receive mercy and find grace to help in time of need."

(b) In what is widely considered to be a baptismal hymn, Col. 1:15–20, thronoi are mentioned along with sovereignties (kyriotētes), powers (archai) and authorities (exousiai). This list, dependent on Sl.Enoch 20 and Test.Lev. 3, is dealing with the various groups of angels, who belong to the council of the heavenly throne (cf. 1 Ki. 22:19). The designation thronoi could derive from the fact that thrones stand at the disposal of this group of angels (cf. Rev. 4:4; and TDNT III 16 f.). Within the compass of the hymn, this enumeration declares that Christ's creative power does not only embrace what is visible, the earth, but also what is invisible – the world of angels. See further E. Lohse, Colossians and Philemon, Hermeneia, 1971, 51 ff.

4. (a) The picture of the throne in Rev. is based particularly on Ezek., and is further developed especially in ch. 4. The throne signifies again the transcendent majesty of God. The "crystal sea" of v. 6 is not the sea of nations, but the vault of heaven, as it is in Ezek. 1. The twenty-four elders on their thrones are new (v. 4); they are the heads of the heavenly court-council. They represent the old and new Israel, consisting of the heads of the twelve tribes together with the twelve apostles. Their function is like that of the heavenly beings. They constantly adore "him who is seated on the throne" (v. 10) before whom they fall down and cry: "Worthy art thou, our Lord and God, to receive glory and honour and power, for thou didst create all things, and by thy will they existed and were created" (4:11).

(b) A new factor appears for the first time in Rev. 5:6 ff. "In the middle of the throne [en mesō tou thronou]" (not "between", as RSV and some translations render it), that is, right in the centre, as the divine judgment of the world begins, appears the One who is to carry it out, "the Lamb that was slain". Christ, in highest glory, is here pictured in terms of complete defencelessness. Nowhere is the paradox of the NT revelation of Christ shown so clearly as here. God's power is, from the human point of view, total powerlessness. Christ carries out the judgment in, and as, a self-sacrifice. The One who sits on the throne was man. He turned power into service and brotherhood. To him, at the end of time, the whole creation pays its homage (Rev. 5:13).

(c) Alongside this Christian conception of the throne as seen by faith, appears in Rev. (and similarly in 2 Thess. 3:4) the opposing throne of the → Antichrist, who, on his side, proclaims his power and demands submission (13:4 ff.). This throne, too, speaks of dominion – not of the → Lamb, but of the → Dragon (12:2). But his dominion succumbs to the wrathful judgment of the Lamb (16:10). Contrary to all appearances, it cannot last. The throne of the Lamb is ultimately triumphant. From it flows the river of the water of life in the new → Jerusalem (22:1).

C. Blendinger

→ Angel (see especially the bibliography for further literature), → Beginning, → Caesar, → Demon, → King, → Spirit, → Strength

(a). W. Beilner, "Authority", EBT I 52–55; M. Bouttier, Christianity according to Paul, SBT 49, 1966, 66 ff.; G. B. Caird, Principalities and Powers, 1956; H. von Campenhausen, "The Problem of Order in Early Christianity and the Ancient Church", in Tradition and Life in the Church, 1968, 123–40; and Ecclesiastical Authority and Spiritual Power in the Church of the First Three Centuries, 1969; O. Cullmann, The State in the New Testament, 1957; D. Daube, "exousia in Mark 1, 22 and 27", JTS 39, 1938, 45–59; W. Foerster, exousia etc., TDNT II 562–75; B. Gerhardsson, Memory and Manuscript: Oral Tradition and Written Transmission in Rabbinic Judaism and Early Christianity, Acta Seminarii Neotestamentici Upsaliensis 22, 1961; W. Grundmann, dynamai etc., TDNT II 284–317; A. T. Hanson, "The Conquest of the Powers", in Studies in Paul's Technique and Theology, 1974, 1–12; J. Jervell, "The Twelve on Israel's Thrones: Luke's Understanding of the Apostolate", in Luke and the People of God, 1972, 75–112; E. Käsemann, "Principles of the Interpretation of Romans 13", in New Testament Questions of Today, 1969, 196–216; H. Kleinknecht, G. von Rad, K. G. Kuhn, K. L. Schmidt, basileus etc., TDNT I 564–93; J. Michl, "Principalities and Powers", EBT II 712–16; C. D. Morrison, The Powers that Be: Earthly Rulers and Demonic Powers in Romans 13.1–7, SBT 29, 1960; R. Murray, "Authority and the Spirit in the New Testament", in J. Dalrymple et al., Authority in a Changing Church, 1968; C. H. Powell, The Biblical Concept of Power, 1963; O. Schmitz, thronos, TDNT III 160–67; H. Schlier, Principalities and Powers in the New Tesatment, 1961; C. Schneider, kathēmai etc. TDNT I 440–54; W. Zimmerli, Ezekiel, I, Hermeneia, 1976.

(b). E. Bammel, "Ein Beitrag zur paulinischen Staatsanschauung", TLZ 85, 1960, 837–40; H. Bardtke and H. D. Wendland, "Macht", EKL II 1205 ff.; L. Bieler, Theios anēr. Das Bild des "göttlichen Menschen" in Spätantike und Frühchristentum, I–II, 1935–36; and "dynamis und exousia", Wiener Studien 55, 1935, 182–90; H. von Campenhausen, "Zur Auslegung von Röm. 13. Die dämonistische Deutung des Exousia-Begriffs", in Aus der Frühzeit des Christentums, 1963, 81 ff. (reprinted from memorial volume for A. Bertholet, 1950, 97 ff.); O. Cullmann, "Zur neuesten Diskussion über die Exousiai in Röm. 13.1", ThZ 10, 1954, 321 ff.; G. Delling, Röm. 13, 1–7 innerhalb der Briefe des Neuen Testaments, 1962; M. Dibelius, Die Geisterwelt im Glauben des Paulus, 1909; W. Eichrodt, Der Prophet Hesekiel, ATD 22, 1965²; L. Goppelt, "Der Staat in der Sicht des Neuen Testaments", Christologie und Ethik, 1968, 190 ff.; W. Grundmann, Der Begriff der Kraft in der neutestamentlichen Gedankenwelt, 1932; K. Hartenstein, Der wiederkommende Herr, 1954³, 82 ff.; O. Michel, "Das Problem des Staates in neutestamentlicher Sicht", TLZ 83, 1958, 161–66; F. Neugebauer, "Zur Auslegung von Röm. 13, 1–7", KuD 8, 1962, 151 ff.; E. Schweizer, Die Herrschaft Christi und der Staat im Neuen Testament, BEvTh 11, 1949; O. Schmitz, "Der Begriff dynamis bei Paulus", Festschrift für A. Deissmann, 1927, 139 ff.; J. Schniewind, "Die Archonten dieses Aeons, 1 Kor. 2.6–8", in Nachgelassene Reden und Aufsätze, ed. E. Kähler, 1952, 104–9; N. Söderblom, D. Georgi, K. E. Løgstrup, R. Dahrendorf, "Macht", *RGG*³ IV 564 ff.; A. Strobel, "Zum Verständnis von Röm. 13", ZNW 47, 1956, 67 ff.; R. Walker, Studie zu Röm. 13, 1–7, ThEH Neue Folge 132, 1966; V. Zsifkovitis, Der Staatsgedanke nach Paulus in Röm. 13, 1–7, 1964.

Mind

φρόνησις

φρονέω (phroneō), think, judge, give one's mind to, set one's mind on, be minded; φρόνημα (phronēma), way of thinking, mentality; φρόνησις (phronēsis), way of thinking, frame of mind, intelligence, good sense; φρόνιμος (phronimos), intelligent, discerning, sensible, thoughtful, prudent.

CL Words derived from the stem phren- occur frequently in classical Gk. literature, the vb. phroneō from Homer onwards, the nouns phronēma and phronēsis from Aeschylus and Sophocles respectively, and the adj. phronimos likewise from Sophocles. The words are found most often in their ordinary meanings as above, although phronēsis frequently has the fuller sense of discernment, judicious insight, particularly in Plato and Aristotle. Similarly phronimos means intelligent, discerning, judicious.

OT All the words appear in the Gk. translations of the OT. The Heb. equivalents are ḥāḵam and bîn with their respective derivatives, the second occurring slightly more often than the first. Various meanings are possible, e.g., in Job 5:13 phronēsis stands for cunning, craftiness, phronimos having the corresponding adj. sense in Gen. 3:1. In one place phronēsis means a peasant's knowledge of his job (da'aṯ) (Prov. 24:5), and on two occasions in Theodotion's translation of Dan. it means intellectual acuteness, either in the interpretation of dreams (5:12) or as a qualification for training in the palace of the Persian king (1:4). The words occur predominantly, however, (especially as nouns and adjs.) in the OT Wisdom Literature, where the prevailing meaning is that of discernment. Both noun and adj. are regularly used with reference to men, though phronēsis occasionally denotes the creative understanding of God (e.g. Isa. 40:28; Jer. 10:12; Prov. 3:19, in these last two passages the word being used in parallel with sophia, wisdom). In the LXX, therefore, one can detect a tendency to fill out the meaning of these words in accordance with the OT doctrine of → wisdom (art. sophia OT).

NT 1. The tendency found in the LXX hardly continues into the NT, one possible reason being the NT's predominant use of the vb. as opposed to the nouns and

adj. phroneō occurs 26 times, of which no less than 23 are in Paul, while phronēma is found only 4 times (all in Rom. 8), phronēsis twice and phronimos or the adv. phronimōs 15 times altogether. The point is that, unlike phronēma and phronēsis, the vb. tends to retain its ordinary meaning; it is, so to speak, more neutral and requires a context to indicate its true sense. This can be seen in passages where phroneō means to think, judge (e.g. Acts 28:22; 1 Cor. 13:11; Phil. 1:7; 4:10), where the reference is not so much to the process of thinking in itself, but rather to the content of what is thought.

This is even clearer in those places where phroneō, for the most part used absolutely, acquires its proper meaning only from its immediate grammatical context, e.g. from its use with the prefix hyper-, think more highly (Rom. 12:3), or with some characteristic word like sōs (as in sōphronein also in Rom. 12:13, "to think with sober judgment), tapeinos (cf. the compound tapeinophrosynē, Phil 2:3; → humility, art. tapeinos), or the object ta hypsēla lit. "do not think high things", i.e. "do not become proud" (Rom. 11:20 RSV; cf. 12:16). These words, some of which form compounds with phroneō (e.g. hyperphroneō, sōphroneō, Rom. 12:3), all indicate direction ("upwards" or "downwards") and impart to phroneō its specific meaning in a given context. Paul's whole use of language in Rom. 12:3 indicates how deeply a person's thoughts are affected by their object and their direction.

2. It follows that, although the vb. as such has no particular content, there can nevertheless be no such thing as neutral thinking. Man is always aiming at something. Striving and endeavour are part of his nature. He must seek to possess, and he must be committed. This is the idea behind phronēma, which occurs only in Rom. 8 and which is well translated by "setting the mind on" (cf. RSV). In the context of this chapter, which describes the new life in Christ as a life in the Spirit of God, Paul testifies that a man's mind is set on certain things, and that what these are depends on whether he is in → "the flesh" or in → "the Spirit". Thus, those who live according to the flesh (hoi kata sarka ontes, Rom. 8:5) set their minds on the things of the flesh, i.e. their thinking and striving are directed, as is the whole of their life, towards those things which are "merely human, the earthly-transitory" (R. Bultmann, Theology of the New Testament, I, 1952, 238). On the other hand, those who are living in the → Spirit of God (hoi de kata pneuma ontes) (Rom. 8:5) endeavour to live in the light of the promised gift of the Holy Spirit and under his control. To them that are thus minded there is a promise of "life and peace" (Rom. 8:6). But to set one's mind on the flesh means death, not only because there is an inevitable connection between the two (cf. Rom. 5:21; 6:23), but also because fleshly-mindedness is rebellion against God, and must be, since it cannot submit to his → law (Rom. 8:7). This passage makes it abundantly clear that the way one thinks is intimately related to the way one lives, whether in Christ, in the Spirit and by faith, or alternatively in the flesh, in sin and in spiritual death. A man's thinking and striving cannot be seen in isolation from the overall direction of his life; the latter will be reflected in the aims which he sets himself.

This close inter-relationship between life and thought is echoed by the wide range of meanings attaching to phroneō. It expresses not merely an activity of the intellect, but also a movement of the will; it is both interest and decision at the same time. Hence the meaning can actually extend to the idea of "taking sides" with someone or something. There is just a hint of this in Rom. 8:5, while the idea is uppermost in Mk. 8:33 (par. Matt. 16:23). Peter is reproved by Jesus because his thought and will are taking the side not of the things of God but of the things of man (which are opposed to God). It is God's will that Jesus should be offered as a sacrifice, and by opposing the divine will Peter is furthering the cause of God's enemies, indeed he is on the side of the adversary himself (hence the sharp rebuke "Get behind me, Satan!").

3. But what should a Christian strive towards? What should be his aim? What kind of thinking is fitting for him (cf. Rom. 12:3)? The answer which seems most obvious to the natural man, namely that a man should strive for high ideals, is at first sight attractive to the Christian too. After all, God has given him gifts which, as a Christian, he could seek to perfect and use for exalted purposes. But this striving after "high things" can lead to jealousy, disappointment and schisms in the church, as is shown by the example of Corinth. Hence the apostle exhorts his readers to think with sober judgment according to the "measure of faith [metron pisteōs]" (Rom. 12:3), for "whatever does not proceed from faith is sin" (Rom. 14:23), and faith, i.e. their new life in Christ, will direct their thinking aright, keep it within proper limits and save it from pride.

The warning that a man who sets his mind on "high things" runs the risk of becoming arrogant is also found in Rom. 11:20, where hypsēla phronein clearly means to cherish proud thoughts, to be haughty. In Rom. 12:16 Paul warns: "Do not be haughty, but give yourselves to humble tasks" (or "associate with the lowly", as RSV, depending on whether tois tapeinois is taken as neut. or masc.). For those who consider themselves clever (phronimoi par' heautois, Rom. 12:16b, adapting Prov. 3:7) are under God's judgment: "God opposes the proud, but gives grace to the humble" (1 Pet. 5:5, quoting Prov. 3:34; see below 6 (b)). Whether Paul is warning "charismatic" believers to beware of spiritual pride (as presumably he is in Rom. 12:16), or censuring Gentile Christians for arrogance towards the Jews (as in Rom. 11:20), the message to Christians is clear: they are to aim not higher but lower, in order to identify with the lowly and the humble, and are to strive towards the unity of the church, which is endangered by the arrogance of individuals or of whole groups.

4. Moreover, as so often in Paul, a Christian's aims are closely intertwined with the motives underlying them. The apostle frequently issues exhortations along these lines; e.g. at least 6 times his readers are commanded to "be of the same mind" (to auto phronein, think the same, Rom. 12:16; 15:5; 2 Cor. 13:11; Phil. 2:2; 4:2; to hen phronein, lit. "think the one", i.e. be "of one mind", Phil. 2:2 RSV; similarly ouden allo phronein, lit. "think no other", cf. RSV "take no other view", Gal. 5:10; cf. Phil. 3:15). Such exhortations, which are frequently linked with warnings against arrogance (e.g. Rom. 12:16; 15:5; implicitly in Rom. 11:20; Phil. 3:15), do not spring simply from a pragmatic outlook which on purely practical grounds puts church unity above all else. Paul argues back to the fact of Christ, since he it is upon whom the church is built and by whom it is sustained. A very good example of this occurs in the introductory verses to the "Christ-hymn" of Phil. 2:6–11. There is a lavish use of language in v. 2 to impress upon church members the need for being "of one mind", then the motivation given in v. 5 ff. is that Christians are in Christ, and are so by virtue of his life of self-abasement.

The translation and hence the interpretation of Phil. 2:5 is disputed; at first sight the AV may appear convincing: "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus." In that case, Christ's self-abasement would be the model for a similar attitude on the part of church members. The question is, however, whether en Christō Iēsou ought not to be regarded as a formula, as so often in Paul, for the individual believer's relationship to Christ: "Have the same thoughts among yourselves as you have in your communion with Christ Jesus" (Arndt, 874; cf. C. H. Dodd, The Apostolic Preaching and its Developments, 1944², 64). If this is so, then the call to unity would be based upon the fact that the → church possesses new life under the → lordship of Christ (cf. vv. 10 f.), new life which springs from his life of self-abasement. This interpretation is supported by Phil. 4:2, where church members are required to be "of the same mind in the Lord [to auto phronein en kyriō]". Here the phrase "in the Lord" is presumably a formula for the believer's new life in Christ (cf. Arndt, 259; → Body). Among other passages where the apostle calls for a harmonious attitude of mind, his prayer in Rom. 15:5 is noteworthy for the grounds on which he bases it: he prays that God may grant to the church to auto phronein kata Christon Iēsoun, lit. "to think the same according to Christ Jesus." This means both "according to the pattern of Jesus Christ" ("for Christ did not please himself") (v. 3), and also "according to the Spirit of Christ." In other words, God has given to men the opportunity of achieving unity and harmony in Christ. This would then be one of those passages supporting the statement that in the NT, and particularly in Paul, attitude of mind is closely connected with spiritual status: the believer's new standing in Christ both creates and demands a new mentality, which comes to concrete expression in the unity of the church.

5. Similar considerations underlie Paul's injunction in Col. 3:2: "Set your minds on things that are above, not on things that are on earth". Here ta anō (→ heaven) refers not to anything humanly exalted but to that heavenly sphere where the exalted Christ exercises his lordship (cf. Col. 3:1). He frees his people from all that would hold them down; contrast Phil. 3:19, where Paul accuses his opponents of having their "minds set on earthly things [ta epigeia phronountes]" and of making a god out of their → "belly".

6. The adj. phronimos occurs 9 times in the Gospels and 5 times in Paul. The adv. phronimōs occurs only at Lk. 16:8.

(a) In the Gospels the words are confined to parables or figurative language, and refer to that wise, judicious behaviour which should characterize those in the kingdom of God. The examples are taken from everyday life, though occasionally they are significantly exaggerated: the wise man builds his house on the rock (Matt. 7:24); the five wise virgins have a supply of oil (Matt. 25:1 ff.); a wise and faithful steward watches and is ready at the coming of his master (Matt. 24:45; par. Lk. 12:42); the unrighteous steward acts wisely, for "the sons of this world are wiser in their own generation than the sons of light" (Lk. 16:8; on this parable see J. D. M. Derrett, "The Parable of the Unjust Steward", Law in the New Testament, 1970, 48–77; → Possessions); and in Matt. 10:16 the wisdom of serpents is held up as an example to Christ's disciples. It has to be said, however, that the wisdom which is presented to the disciples as being in keeping with the kingdom of God is not just ordinary human common sense. Rather, the fact that phronimos is contrasted with mōros, foolish (→ Wisdom, Folly, art. mōria), in the first two parables mentioned above (Matt. 7:26; 25:2 f., 8), shows that here the OT idea of wisdom is involved: the wise man is he who does the will of the Lord (Matt. 7:24); the foolish man is he who refuses obedience. Hence the idea behind phronimos in the Gospels may be summarized thus: the believer's wisdom lies in his obedience.

(b) The Pauline passages clearly arise from the slogan which seems to have been in circulation among the "charismatic" Corinthians: hēmeis de phronimoi, "But we are intelligent [or discerning]", a claim which Paul controverts in 1 Cor. 4:10; cf.10:15; 2 Cor. 11:19. The wisdom claimed by such people was a purely human wisdom, which because of their arrogance jeopardized the unity of the church (see above NT 3, 4). Therefore, Paul counters it both with a reference to his own suffering as an apostle (not without a touch of irony, e.g. 1 Cor. 4:10; 2 Cor. 11:19) and with the warning, supported by the OT, that the man who regards himself as wise falls under the judgment of God (Rom. 11:25; 12:16). → Cross; → Wisdom, Folly.

7. Of all the words under discussion, phronēsis comes nearest to the OT concept of wisdom (see above OT; → Wisdom, art. sophia). In Eph. 1:9, where it stands beside sophia, it means discernment, insight. In Lk. 1:17 it could mean simply mental attitude, mentality, but the fact that it occurs in the combination phronēsis dikaiōn and in a context strongly reminiscent of the OT, suggests that the correct translation is "the wisdom of the just". Such wisdom, however, is not merely rational discernment, but is the result of God's people being turned to the obedience of faith, in accordance with OT prophecy. J. Goetzmann

→ Empty (for discussion and literature on Phil. 2), → Head, → Heart, → Humility, → Knowledge, → Reason, → Think, → Wisdom

(a). G. Bertram, mōros etc. TDNT IV 832–47 and phrēn etc., TDNT IX 220–35; G. Bornkamm, "Faith and Reason in Paul", and "On Understanding the Christ-hymn (Philippians 2.6–11)", in Early Christian Experience, 1969, 29–46, 112–22; R. Bultmann, Theology of the New Testament, I, 1952, 214; G. Fohrer and H. Wilckens, sophia etc., TDNT VII 465–528; W. Grundmann, tapeinos etc., TDNT VIII 1–26; R. P. Martin, Carmen Christi: Philippians ii.5–11 in Recent Interpretation and in the Setting of Early Christian Worship, Society for New Testament Study Monograph Series, 4, 1967; C. F. D. Moule, "Further Reflections on Philippians 2:5–11; in W. W. Gasque and R. P. Martin, eds., Apostolic History and the Gospel, Biblical and Historical Essays presented to F. F. Bruce, 1970, 264–76; J. T. Sanders, The New Testament Christological Hymns, Society for New Testament Studies Monograph Series 15, 1971, 58–74; E. Schweizer, Lordship and Discipleship, SBT 28, 1960.

(b). G. Braumann, Vorpaulinische christliche Taufverkündigung bei Paulus, 1962, 56 ff.; A. Feuillet, "L'hymne christologique de l'épître aux Philippiens", RB 72, 1965, 352 ff., 481 ff.; E. Fuchs, Die Freiheit des Glaubens, 1949; D. Georgi, "Der vorpaulinische Hymnus Phil. 2,6–11", in E. Dinkler and H. Thyen, eds., Zeit und Geschichte. Dankesgabe an Rudolf Bultmann zum 80. Geburtstag, 1964, 263 ff.; J. Jeremias, "Zur Gedankenführung in den paulinischen Briefen", in Studia Paulina in Honorem J. de Zwaan, 1953, 146 ff. (reprinted in Abba, 1966, 269 ff.); E. Käsemann "Kritische Analyse von Phil. 2, 5–11", in Exegetische Versuche und Besinnungen, I, 1960, 51 ff.; E. Lohmeyer, Kyrios Jesus. Eine Untersuchung zu Phil. 2, 5–11, (1928) 1961; Das Evangelium des Markus, KEK 1/2, 1967[17]; and Der Brief an die Philipper, KEK 9/1 (1930) revised by W. Schmauch, 1953[9]; K. H. Rengstorf, Das Evangelium nach Lukas, NTD 3, 1952[6]; J. Schniewind, Das Evangelium nach Markus, NTD 1, 1949[5]; and Das Evangelium nach Matthäus, NTD 2, 1968[12]; G. Strecker, "Redaktion und Tradition im Christus-Hymnus Phil. 2, 6–11", ZNW 55, 1964, 63–78.

Miracle, Wonder, Sign

Etymologically the words miracle and wonder refer to the astonishment and amazement, created by an unusual or inexplicable event. In a religious context such an event is traced back to transcendent divine influence, but the unusual need not necessarily contradict the normal laws of nature. However, Christian faith has from the first attempted to understand and to interpret the happenings which have been experienced. The astonishment and amazement felt when confronted by such a spectacle or such an impression is rendered by the word-group thaumazō. teras is a specifically religious concept stemming perhaps from mantology and → magic, and throwing into relief the aspect of the extraordinary, and originally also the aspect of terror in a miraculous sign. By contrast, the originally non-religious word sēmeion stresses more the functional aspect of an event as a sign which draws attention (in the first instance visually) to the significance of an event. Only when this condition is fulfilled can we properly speak of miracles. This aspect is one which is frequently stressed when sēmeion is combined with teras. The investigation of the historicity of miracles lies outside the scope of this work, but details of studies dealing with this aspect of the subject are given in the bibliography.

θαῦμα

θαυμάζω (thaumazō), be astonished, wonder at, be surprised; θαῦμα (thauma), object of wonder, wonder, marvel, miracle; θαυμάσιος (thaumasios), wonderful, remarkable; θαυμαστός (thaumastos), wonderful, marvellous, astonishing; ἐκθαυμάζω (ekthaumazō), be greatly amazed; θαμβέω (thambeō), be astounded, amazed; ἐκθαμβέω (ekthambeō), be amazed, alarmed; ἔκθαμβος (ekthambos), utterly astonished; θάμβος (thambos), astonishment, fear; θορυβέω (thorybeō), throw into disorder, pass. be troubled, distressed; θόρυβος (thorybos), commotion, uproar, turmoil; θορυβάζω (thorybazō), cause trouble, pass. be troubled, distressed.

CL 1. The word-group associated with thauma and thaumazō is found in Gk. from the 8th and 7th cents., to designate that which by its appearance arouses astonishment and amazement. The root is cognate with theaomai, to look at. The reason for the amazement is expressed by the acc. in the trans. use of thaumazō, and with prepositions (dia, en, peri) in the intrans. use.

apothaumazō (Sir. 11:13) and ekthaumazō (Sir. 27:23), to be greatly amazed, are intensive compounds. The adjs. thaumastos and thaumasios take on particular nuances in Biblical usage.

2. Synonymous with these is the word-group associated with thambos (Hom. onwards), astonishment, dread (the latter meaning especially in LXX usage, cf. Ezek. 7:18); and thambeō, frighten, be frightened (trans., 2 Sam. 22:5; intrans. and pass., Wis. 17:13). The compound ekthambeō, terrify (Sir. 30:9), and the adj. ekthambos, terrifying, terrified (Dan. 7:7 Theodotion) are also intensive. Synonymous, too, is the group thorybos, commotion, uproar (Prov. 1:27); thorybeō, to throw into disorder (Wis. 18:19), is used from the 6th and 5th cents. B.C. onwards. Both word-groups are rare in biblical Gk. → Ecstasy; → Godliness; → Fear.

Examples of thaumazō as the human reaction to the working of a deity in the revelation of its divine power can be seen extensively in the history of Gk. religion, and are already to be found in the Homeric epics (e.g. Od. 1, 323; Il. 3, 398). From Hellenistic times mention may be made of Aelius Aristides (2nd cent. A.D.), the orator and devout worshipper of Asclepius, who in his writings alludes to the marvellous (thaumastas) and powerful deeds of the god (G. Bertram, TDNT III 28). These examples, of course, only give us a very slight idea of the significance which thaumazō came to have in biblical writings.

OT In the LXX thauma appears only 4 times; 3 times in the phrase thauma echein (= thaumazō), Job 17:8; 18:20; 21:5 (v.l. thaumasate); and also Job 20:8 as v.l. for phasma, vision (Heb. ḥezyôn). The vb. thaumazō occurs chiefly in Job, Isa., and Sir. thaumazō is often combined with prosōpon, face; it means (like the Heb. nāśā' pānîm) to lift up the countenance, show favour towards, be partial towards (Prov. 18:5; Job 13:10); in Deut. 10:17 and 2 Chr. 19:7 it is expressly denied that God as judge is partisan. In a more general sense it denotes a friendly disposition which readily grants requests (e.g. Gen. 19:21, of God), a taking into consideration (Deut. 28:50) and a being highly favoured (2 Ki. 5:1, pass.). In this kind of usage, for which examples could be multiplied, the essential point is that the element of fear is not included in thaumazō. It is different where thaumazō comes to stand for the Heb. equivalent šāmam, be petrified with fear (Lev. 26:32; Job 17:8; 21:5; Dan. 8:27 Theodotion, or tāmâh, be astounded, horror-stricken (Ps. 48:6; Jer. 4:9; Heb. 1:5). The latter passages, in particular, show how the idea of astonishment passes over to that of horror. The human reaction to God's activity, which is here depicted for us, is an astonishment mingled with fear and horror. One can see the range of the word thaumazō in a comparison of Job 21:5 and 42:11 in the LXX text; the sight of Job suffering and stricken by God arouses a terrified astonishment (21:5), but astonishment is also caused by the marvellous help which he receives from God (42:11).

The adjs. thaumastos and thaumasios are found chiefly in the Pss. and Sir. The Heb. equivalent for thaumastos is often nôrā', terrible: Daniel prays to the great and marvellous, i.e. fear-inspiring, God (Dan. 9:4 Theodotion). Many similar examples are found in the Pss.: God is marvellous, i.e. awe-inspiring amongst his holy ones (Ps. 68[67]:36); he is marvellous in the execution of his decrees (Ps. 45[44]:5). thaumastos stands chiefly for words formed from Heb. niplā'ôṯ (cf. the vb. pālā', to be extra-ordinary, or marvellous): in Ps. 106[105]:22 where the marvellous and terrible acts of God (in "the land of Ham" and at the Red Sea) are compared; and in Ps. 118[117]:23 where that event is described as marvellous which in the NT is applied to Christ: the stone which the builders rejected has become the cornerstone (cf. Matt. 21:42; Mk. 12:10 f.; Lk. 20:17; Acts 4:11; 1 Pet. 2:7). With the adj. thaumasios the Heb. equivalents are again words formed from pālā' (occasionally occurring with thaumastos). thaumasia is the regular designation for the marvellous acts of God, which it is one of the Psalmists' basic concerns to proclaim and praise. These marvellous acts embrace all God's activity in creation and history (cf. Pss. 9:2; 26[25]:7; 71[70]:17; 86[85]:10). The praise of the Psalmists is continued in the book of Jesus Sirach, Ecclesiasticus (cf. Sir. 18:6; 38:6; 42:17; 48:14). Even the stars, the sun and the moon are included in this paean of praise (Sir. 43:2, 8).

In later Judaism the hymn-roll, or Hodayot, of the Dead Sea Scrolls took up the praise of the marvellous acts of God (cf. 1QH 1:30, 33; 3:23; 4:28, 29; 6:11).

NT 1. In the NT the noun thauma is found only twice; once in the phrase ou thauma, "it is no wonder" (2 Cor. 11:14), which is borrowed from Hellenistic diatribe (H. Windisch, KEK 9, 1924, ad loc.); then in the formulation in Rev. 17:6 ethaumasa . . . thauma mega, "I was greatly astonished". thaumasios is found only in Matt. 21:15 for the miraculous deeds of Jesus. The adj. thaumastos occurs 7 times: twice (Matt. 21:42; Mk. 12:11) in the quotation of Ps. 118:23 concerning the corner stone which the builders rejected, which is applied to Jesus (cf. above OT; → Rock, Stone, Corner Stone). In 1 Pet. 2:9 the light to which God has called Christians is called thaumaston, and its relationship to the divine sphere thus stated (Ps. 68:36, see above OT). In Jn. 9:30 the man healed by Jesus describes as "astonishing", "a marvel" (RSV), the attitude of the Jews who refuse to acknowledge where Jesus has come from. For Rev. 15:1, 3 see below, 6.

thaumazō is the word that occurs most frequently (42 times). In the Synoptic Gospels 25 certain examples are found (including the variant exethaumazon in Mk. 12:17), of which 13 are in Lk. Jn. offers 6 instances. The word comes 5 times in Acts, 4 times in the NT letters, and the same number of times in Rev.

The word-group containing thambos (astonishment, fear, Lk. 4:36; 5:9; Acts 3:10), thambeō (be astounded, Mk. 1:27; 10:24, 32; Acts 3:11 D; 9:6 TR), ekthambos (utterly astonished, Acts 3:11), and ekthambeō (be amazed, alarmed, Mk. 9:15; 14:33; 16:5 f.) is comparatively rare in the NT. There is a similar number of instances of thorybos, noise, clamour, turmoil (Matt. 26:5; 27:24; Mk. 5:38; 14:2; Acts 20:1; 21:34; 24:18), and thorybeō, throw into disorder (Acts 17:5; 21:13 D), pass. be troubled, distressed, in disorder (Matt. 9:23; Mk. 5:39). Matt. 26:5; 27:24 and Mk. 14:2 are concerned with disturbances in the nation which could arise from action taken against Jesus, and of which the chief priests and Pilate are afraid. Matt. 9:23 and Mk. 5:38 f. report of the din in the house of Jairus which followed the death of his little girl. According to Acts 17:5, the Jews in Thessalonica threw the town into an uproar in order to disrupt Paul's missionary work. In Acts 20:1 thorybos denoted the silversmiths' riot in Ephesus (Acts 19:23 ff.), and in 21:34 the riot amongst the people of Jerusalem (Acts 21:30 ff.) which led to Paul's imprisonment. The vb. and noun are also used in a similar sense in Acts 20:10 and 24:18.

2. In the Synoptic accounts thaumazō describes the impression which men get of Jesus' healing activity and miraculous power, such as in the case of the healing of the Gerasene demoniac (Mk. 5:20), the cursing of the fig-tree (Matt. 26:20; → Fruit, art. sykē), and the healing of a dumb demoniac (Matt. 9:33; Lk. 11:14). In Matt. the impression is put into words: "such a thing has never before been seen in Israel!" In the transmission of the story of the storm on the sea it is noticeable how closely astonishment and → fear belong together: Matt. speaks of astonishment (8:27), Mk. of being afraid (4:41), and Lk. combines both (8:25). Terror and astonishment are similarly juxtaposed in Lk. 9:43. The reaction of astonishment to Jesus' miraculous deeds is mentioned in a summarizing account in Matt. 15:31; the Marcan par. 7:37 speaks of terror.

If thaumazō includes an element of fear, Lk. 11:38 perhaps constitutes an exception. This speaks of the → Pharisees' amazement at Jesus' disregard for the Jewish purificatory prescriptions. Otherwise, however, thaumazō and thambeō or ekplēssesthai are closely related in the Gospels. ekplēssesthai is also related to the word of Jesus: "They took fright at his teaching" (Matt. 7:29 par. Mk. 1:22, Lk. 4:32; Matt. 19:25, par. Mk. 10:26; Mk. 11:18; Matt. 22:33), rendering impossible any clear division between his acts and teaching (cf. Mk. 1:27). Jesus speaks as one who abolishes all otherwise valid criteria. Both Mk. and Lk. use thambeisthai or thambos (Mk. 1:27; Lk. 4:36; cf. thambos in Lk. 5:9, the account of the miraculous catch of fish).

Jesus' appearance in Nazareth seems to be depicted rather differently by Lk.: "All spoke well of him and wondered at the gracious words which proceeded out of his mouth" (Lk. 4:22a). But this did not stop the same people from trying to kill Jesus (4:29). Mk. reports only briefly the astonished alarm (6:2), which is the effect of Jesus' sovereign majesty. According to Mk. 9:15, even the sight of Jesus was enough to produce ekthambeisthai. On the way to Jerusalem Jesus' followers were filled with fear and astonishment (10:32). Hence, it must be asked whether the amazement to which Jesus' discussion with the → Pharisees gave rise, when they questioned him concerning the tax for the emperor, may not have contained an element of fear (Matt. 22:22 par. Mk. 12:17, Lk. 20:26). Such amazement, of course, in no way presupposes faith, though it may well presuppose an inkling of the presence of divine authority. Do the evangelists also postulate such a premonition on the part of Pilate, of whom they record that he was amazed that Jesus did not defend himself against his accusers (Matt. 27:14; Mk. 15:5), or that he was astounded by Jesus' speedy death (Mk. 15:44)?

There are two reports of Jesus' being surprised: at the faith of the centurion at Capernaum (Matt. 8:10; Lk. 7:9) and at the unbelief of the people in Nazareth (Mk. 6:6). A case of Jesus' ekthambeisthai, being frightened, is transmitted to us in the scene in Gethsemane (Mk. 14:33).

In Luke's infancy narrative (chs. 1 and 2) a thaumazein is spoken of 4 times. Zechariah's long delay in the temple, together with his loss of speech, caused the people surprise (1:21 f.); they took it as an indication that something extraordinary had happened, and that he had seen a vision. The same is true of the → name given to John the Baptist which his father could not utter and which evoked astonishment from the people (1:63). The Christmas message of the shepherds aroused amazement (2:18), as did the encounter of Jesus' parents with Simeon, and his words in the temple (2:33). The whole event has an air about it which caused men to marvel. The Lucan Easter narrative uses the word in two places. In Lk. 24:12 Peter ran to Jesus' grave in response to the message of the women and found it empty. Whereupon he returned home, amazed at what had happened. (The verse is absent from important textual witnesses, and its originality is admittedly not guaranteed. It is, however, supported by Metzger, 184.) Lk. depicts in 24:41 how the disciples were unable to believe for joy and astonishment, when Jesus appeared to them. The fact that the sight of the risen Lord aroused fear has already been stated in v. 37 (cf. the hint in Jn. 21:12). But the Easter joy was not mitigated by it (Matt. 28:8; Lk. 24:41; Jn. 20:20). The appearance of the → angels at the grave was also frightening (ekthambeisthai twice in Mk. 16:5, 6; cf. also Matt. 28:3, 5).

3. In the Fourth Gospel thaumazein is rarely used to denote human reaction to Jesus' attitudes and behaviour. In reply to the expressed amazement that Jesus possesses knowledge of scripture without having received instruction in it (7:15), he replied (7:16) by pointing out that his teaching comes from the Father who has sent him. In 7:21 Jesus drew the attention of the Jews to the fact that they are surprised (thaumazete) and annoyed by a work which he has performed on the → Sabbath (7:23), whereas for the sake of circumcision they would regularly break the Sabbath. Jesus' → works will inevitably provoke astonishment, "For the Father loves the Son, and shows him all that he himself is doing; and greater works than these will he show him, that you may marvel" (5:20). To Nicodemus Jesus directed the challenge mē thaumasēs: "do not be surprised!" (3:7 JB; cf. Eccl. 5:7). Nicodemus is not to take offence at the initially unintelligible language concerning the new → birth (art. palingenesia), about which he can only ask: "How can that be possible?" (v. 9 JB): he is to open his heart to it in faith. The formula mē thaumasēs is also found in 5:28 f. (the listeners are not to be surprised at Jesus' language about the → resurrection of the dead to → life and to → judgment, with which they must come to terms), and 1 Jn. 3:13 (here it is the hatred of the world, which Christians are not to be surprised at when they meet it, because it is the offence with which they will have to be able to cope).

4. According to Acts 2:7, when the Spirit was poured out, the assembled crowd of Jews were bewildered with astonishment. Terrified astonishment is the reaction of the people to the healing of the lame man (thambos kai ekstasis, "wonder and amazement", 3:10; cf. v. 12 ti thaumazete, "why do you wonder?"). For the high priests the object of astonishment is the boldness of Peter and John and the fact that they were "uneducated, common men" (4:13). Elsewhere the term occurs in Acts when OT stories are related (7:31; cf. Dan. 8:27) or quoted (13:41; cf. Hab. 1:5). The question may be asked whether the relative frequency of the word thaumazō in the Lucan writings is connected with the proximity of his style to the language of the LXX.

5. From among the NT epistles (apart from 2 Cor. 11:14, cf. above 1) two Pauline passages require mention. In Gal. 1:6 the apostle expresses his amazement that the Galatians have so quickly allowed themselves to be won over to another → gospel; this leads into Paul's debate concerning the Galatian teachers of false doctrine. 2 Thess. 1:10 uses thaumazō in an eschatological context: the Lord will come in order to be glorified among his saints (Ps. 68[67]:36) and to be marvelled at among those who believe in him (the pass. thaumasthēnai is not rare in the LXX [cf. 2 Ki. 5:1; Isa. 61:6]). In Jude 16 the language is Jewish-Christian, expressing in the manner of the LXX the partiality shown to people (thaumazontes prosōpa). On 1 Jn. 3:13 cf. NT 3, above.

6. In Rev. thaumazō occurs 4 times in 13:3 and 17:6 ff. Rev. 13:1 ff. reports that at the emergence of the beast (→ Animal, art. thērion) from the sea, the embodiment of the anti-Christian power, "the whole earth had followed the beast with astonishment" (v. 3). This astonishment leads to adoration of the beast and of the power behind him, the → dragon. The astonishment in 17:8 also refers to this adoration. The model for the apocalyptic picture was the cult of the Roman Caesars. The astonishment of the seer in 17:7 is different; this concerns the mystery of → "Babylon the great", which is → drunk with the → blood of the saints and of the witnesses of Jesus (vv. 5, 6). Further, Rev. 15:1 speaks of a great and marvellous (thaumaston) sign (→ sēmeion). The seer sees seven angels bringing the seven final plagues in which the divine judgment of wrath is consummated. But before this event of terror comes to pass, the seer catches a glimpse of the multitude who have conquered and who sing the song of → Moses and the → Lamb (15:2). In this song there resounds the song of praise of the great and marvellous (thaumasta) works of God (→ Work; → Earth), which the devout men of the old covenant praised (15:3). W. Mundle σημεῖον | σημεῖον (sēmeion), sign, wonder, miracle.

CL sēmeion, attested from Aesch. and Hdt. onwards, is a derivation from sēma, sign, a word common in early Gk. epic and synonymous with sēmeion, but one whose etymology has not yet been satisfactorily clarified. The word does not originally come from the sphere of religion, but it takes on theological colouring in appropriate contexts.

1. The basic meaning of sēmeion is a sign (as a rule, visually perceived, but occasionally also heard) by which one recognizes a particular person or thing, a confirmatory, corroborative, authenticating mark or token. Of the variety of nuances in meaning (see K. H. Rengstorf, TDNT VII 204–7) mention may be made of the foretoken or omen, which announced coming events. As distinct from → teras, sēmeion and its older form sēma do not necessarily have the character of the miraculous. Also – and again differently from teras – "its reference is to disclosure as the indispensable presupposition of all knowledge" (TDNT VII 204), without requiring explanation or interpretation.

2. When a sēmeion does have the character of the marvellous, the word acquires the meaning of "miraculous sign". It can then denote in general a miracle worked by the divinity or a miracle-worker which contradicts the natural course of things. This meaning is also found in the phrase sēmeia kai terata, "signs and wonders", first attested in Polyb. 3, 112, 18 in the 2nd cent. B.C.

OT 1. In the LXX sēmeion is predominantly a translation of the Heb. word 'ôṯ, and, like it, means: (a) sign, mark, token; (b) miraculous sign, miracle.

(a) Whether directly or by authorized men, whether unrequested (e.g. 1 Sam. 10:1 ff.) or in answer to prayer (e.g. Jdg. 6:17, 36 f.), Yahweh grants and works signs, which accompany his word and vouch for its validity and reliability. Thus the sign of Cain (Gen. 4:15) vouches for the promise of divine protection, the blood on the houses of the Israelites (Exod. 12:13) vouches for the promised exemption. As the rainbow guarantees God's → covenant promise (Gen. 9:8 ff.), so → circumcision (Gen. 17:11) and → Sabbath (Exod. 31:13, 17) are also "signs of the covenant", which express and seal the particular relationship between Yahweh and Israel. Signs which reinforce the promise of the saving presence of Yahweh are spoken of in Exod. 3:12; Jdg. 6:16 ff., 36 ff.; 1 Sam. 10:1 ff.; and Isa. 7:10 ff. Yahweh's messengers can authenticate their mission and message by signs performed (Exod. 4:1 ff.) or predicted (1 Sam. 10:1 ff.; 1 Ki. 13:1 ff.; 2 Ki. 19:29). The symbolic actions of the prophets are a way of making visible the word of God (1 Ki. 11:29 ff.; Isa. 8:1 ff.; 20:1 ff.; Jer. 19:1 ff.; 27:1 ff.; 32:6 ff.; Ezek. 4–5; 24:15 ff.; Hos. 1–3). They are not simply pictorial illustrations of the oral proclamation, but, like the prophetic word itself (cf. Isa. 55:10 f.), tokens of the power which shapes history. The prior representation of that which is coming sets the realization of the thing designated creatively in motion. "The prophetic symbolic act is simply an intensified form of prophetic speech" (G. von Rad, Old Testament Theology, II, 1965, 96). Even the prophet, as a witness of the message, can himself become a "sign" (Isa. 8:18; Ezek. 12:3 ff., 17 ff.; 21:11 f.; 24:24, 27).

(b) Alongside such signs, which are either quite ordinary incidents or ones where the aspect of the marvellous does not lie in the sign itself but in the prophetic prediction (e.g. 1 Sam. 10:1 ff.; and the announcement in Isa. 7:14 ff. that the child will be a son, → God, art. Emmanouēl), there are others which possess a thoroughly miraculous character. In this category belong the signs worked by Moses, for example (Exod. 4; 7–12; 14; 17; Deut. 34:11) and those granted to Gideon (Jdg. 6) and Hezekiah (2 Ki. 20:8 ff.; cf. Isa. 38:7 ff.). In the sense of a miraculous sign 'ôṯ and sēmeion are closely linked with môp̄ēṯ and teras. The phrase 'ōṯôṯ ûmôp̄ᵉṯîm = sēmeia kai terata, signs and wonders (where the original distinction between the two terms can no longer be felt), is found primarily in those texts which describe the time of Moses as a time of Yahweh's marvellous action in history (Exod. 7:3; cf. Deut. 4:34; 6:22; 7:19; 29:2; Jer. 32:20 f.; Ps. 78[77]:43; 105[104]:27; 135[134]:9; Neh. 9:10; also Bar. 2:11; Wis. 10:16). Moreover, there are numerous miracles witnessed to in the OT, which God works directly or through charismatic figures (e.g. Gen. 17:17; 18:11; Jos. 3; 6; 10; 1 Ki. 17 f.; 2 Ki. 6 f.). Such signs are considered to be extraordinary occurrences, but not unnatural, since the OT does not know of a natural law as an independent entity on a level with Yahweh. Every event goes back to God, nothing is impossible for him (Gen. 18:14). All signs are pointers to Yahweh himself, a revelation of his → might, and → glory. In them → Israel – indeed, all the nations of the world – are to encounter Yahweh and to recognize that he alone is God (cf. Deut. 4:35; 1 Ki. 18:36 ff.; Ps. 86[85]:10). Since the ultimate goal of signs is the universal glorification of the divine → name (Ps. 72[71]:18 f.), unbelief and disobedience in the face of the demonstrative experience of signs are regarded as the expression of an utterly incomprehensible hardness of heart (Num. 14:11, 22; Ps. 78[77]; 95[94]:8 ff.). O. Hofius

(c) In point of fact, miraculous signs are not uniformly distributed throughout the OT. They are largely grouped in three main periods, each of which was marked by a life-and-death struggle for the people of God and which put Yahweh's saving power and will to the proof. These periods were: (i) The redemption of the people of God from → Egypt and their establishment in Canaan; (ii) the conflict with pagan religion under → Elijah and Elisha; (iii) the time of Daniel during the exile when the supremacy of Yahweh and the faithfulness of Daniel and his companions were vindicated. The common feature of these periods is the extremity of the people of God which is answered by Yahweh's action in abnormal events which are in themselves saving acts and at the same time pointers to an even greater salvation. The same could be said for the fourth period of miraculous signs, the coming of Jesus and the gospel age.

Outside these periods miracles are rare. Possible instances are the so-called translation of Enoch (Gen. 5:24; cf. Heb. 11:5) and the birth of Isaac to → Abraham and Sarah despite their advanced age (Gen. 21:1 ff.). With regard to Enoch, the Bible itself does not engage in the speculations of Wis. 4:10 ff. and various books of Enoch. The text need imply no more than that he was taken to the direct presence of God at the end of his life. (On Enoch in intertestamental literature see

F. F. Bruce, The Epistle to the Hebrews, NLC 1964, 286–89; ODCC, 459 f.) The prolonged childlessness of Abraham and Sarah may have been due to the fact that Sarah was Abraham's step-sister (Gen. 20:12). The birth of Isaac was miraculous in the sense that it was deemed beyond the normal course of nature.

Many of the other miraculous events in the OT did not involve suspension of natural causes. The locusts which plagued Egypt were blown there by a strong east wind and were blown away by a strong west wind (Exod. 10:13, 19). The arrival of the quails coincided with the spring migration (Exod. 16:13). On the manna which may have attracted the quails → Bread, art. manna. The parting of the Red Sea was caused by "a strong east wind" blowing all night (Exod. 14:21). In such instances the event is a providential ordering of natural causes for the benefit of the people of God. Similarly, the fire falling on the sacrifice of Elijah on Mount Carmel (1 Ki. 18:38) was probably a thunderbolt. In the cases of the healing of Naaman (2 Ki. 5) and the restoration to life of children (1 Ki. 17:17–24; 2 Ki. 4:18–37) we have instances of paranormal healings beyond normal medical explanation. The long day in Joshua 10 may well be a poetic description of the invigoration of Joshua's soldiers. Alternatively it has been explained as an abnormal refraction of the rays of the sun and moon and as a supernaturally induced thunderstorm giving the men relief from the burning heat (cf. B. Ramm, The Christian View of Science and Scripture, 1955, 107–10). The sun dial of Ahaz (Isa. 38; 2 Ki. 20) was probably a series of steps (cf. Josephus, Ant. 10, 2, 1). The return of the shadow ten degrees may have been due to the Shekinah Glory which lighted up the steps (A. S. D. Maunder, "The Shadow Returning on the Dial of Ahaz", Journal of the Transactions of the Victoria Institute 64, 1932, 83–92; for further discussion see B. Ramm, op. cit., 110 ff.). In the case of 2 Ki. 6:5 ff., John Gray comments, "The factual basis of the 'miracle' of the floating axe-head may be that Elisha with a long pole or stick probed about the spot indicated (an important point in the text) until he succeeded either in inserting the stick into the socket, or, having located the hard object on the muddy bottom, moved it until the man was able to recover it" (I & II Kings, 1964, 460). It may be noted that the text itself does not call the event a miracle or even a sign. Nevertheless, the event was evidently remembered as indicative of Yahweh's providential help.

The view that one takes of Daniel in the fiery furnace and the lions' den (Dn. 3 and 6) will depend on the view that one takes of the Book of Daniel as a whole. Many scholars place the book in the Maccabean period and see it as a work written to encourage pious Jews to withstand the attacks on their religion by Antiochus Epiphanes. The stories then might have a didactic value, but little basis in historical reality. Alternatively, they might be a figurative, stylized way of describing some historical event. On the other hand, the book itself is set in the exilic period. The furnace may be thought of as the kilns of the period used for baking bricks or smelting metals (cf. K. A. Kitchen, "Brick-Kiln", NBD, 168; T. C. Mitchell, "Furnace", NBD, 443; J. B. Alexander, "New Light on the Fiery Furnace", JBL 69, 1950, 375 f.). A sudden gust of flame or explosion killed the men who brought Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego down to where the kilns were (Dn. 3:22), but the latter survived their ordeal possibly protected by their clothing mentioned in the narrative. In the case of the lions, a spiritual presence inhibited the lions from attacking Daniel (Dn. 6:22). For various interpretations of the Book of Daniel see J. A. Montgomery, The Book of Daniel, ICC, 1927; E. W. Heaton, The Book of Daniel, 1956; N. Porteous, Daniel: A Commentary, 1965; E. J. Young, The Prophecy of Daniel: A Commentary, 1949; and the specialist literature referred to in these books. C. Brown

2. According to Exod. 7 f., the Egyptian magicians had the power to perform miracles by secret magical arts, but they are inferior to the miracles of Yahweh (→ Magic). In Deut. 13:2 ff. the false prophet who wishes to seduce Israel to apostasy from Yahweh is attributed the power to perform signs and wonders. These are recognized to be opposed to God in that the word that they are intended to authenticate brings separation from him instead of binding one to him. Hence even though a prophet may perform such signs, he is to be tested by his teaching. If his teaching would lead to other gods, he is to be rejected.

3. The meaning of the apocalyptic sign of the end, portent, which → teras has in Joel 2:30 (LXX 3:3), is not attested for sēmeion in the LXX, but it is found in 2 Esd. 4:51 f.; 6:11 f.; 8:63, where the Lat. signum goes back to the Gk. sēmeion. In Sib. 3:796 ff. the older sēma is used. The signs of the end are partly concerned with horrible and frightening portents, which indicate that the last days are dawning. In so far as these portents are convulsions of a cosmic nature, they announce the transformation of the world – the dissolution of the old → creation and the reconstitution of the whole of → nature. On the interpretation of the cosmic language of Joel in the NT and the cosmic language of prophecy → Generation, art. genea NT 4; → Pentecost; → Fullness, art. plēroō NT 1.

4. In Rabbinic literature, where 'ôṯ (and more rarely sîmān = sēmeion) has the meaning, amongst others, of miraculous sign or miracle, God's miracles, the miraculous working of great men of God and of the Rabbis, and also miracles of the messianic age are frequently spoken of (see the index in SB IV 1277). According to the Rabbinic conception, a prophet has to prove his identity by means of signs and wonders (cf. SB I 726 ff.; II 480; cf. Matt. 16:1; Jn. 6:30; and also Jn. 3:2). Miracles are equally regarded as divine confirmatory signs for the proclamation of a Rabbi (SB I 127; IV 318 f.).

NT sēmeion is found 77 times in the NT, predominantly in the Gospels (48 times) and Acts (13 times), but also in Paul (8 times), Heb. (once) and Rev. (7 times). In the other literature the term is entirely lacking. The linguistic usage of the LXX is adopted: sēmeion means: (1) sign, mark (Matt. 26:48; 2 Thess. 3:17), token (Lk. 2:12); (2) miraculous sign, miracle (Jn. 2:11; 18, 23 et passim; Acts 4:16, 22; 8:6; 1 Cor. 1:22). The phrase sēmeia kai terata, signs and wonders, occurs many times (Matt. 24:24 par. Mk. 13:22; Jn. 4:48; Acts 2:19 [Joel 2:30], 22, 43 [cf. 5:12; 14:3]; 4:30; 6:8; 7:36; 15:12; Rom. 15:19; 2 Cor. 12:12; 2 Thess. 2:9; Heb. 2:4). The apocalyptic meaning of sign of the end (see above OT 3) is found, e.g., in Mk. 13:4; Matt. 24:3; Lk. 21:11, 15 f.

1. It is the OT conception of the → prophet as Yahweh's sign that underlies Jesus' being the God-given sign (Lk. 2:34), by which the rise or fall, the salvation or ruin of every man is decided. In this connection we also have Jesus' rejection of the demand for signs (Matt. 16:1 par. Mk. 8:11, Lk. 11:16), which is linked in Matt. 12:38 ff.; 16:1 ff., Lk. 11:16, 29 ff. with the mention – although its interpretation is disputed (cf. TDNT III 406–10) – of the sign of → Jonah. Jesus unmasks the demand for signs as a subterfuge concealing a refusal to repent. Anyone who does not believe the final word of God going forth in him will not be brought to repentance even by miracles (cf. Lk. 16:27 ff.). The only sign which God will give to the unrepentant → generation is God's representative who will be shown to be such by his deliverance from death. As once Jonah came back from the dead, so at his parousia (→ Present, art. parousia) the Son of man will come in → judgment (cf. Matt. 24:30; → Son, art. hyios tou anthrōpou). The parabolic actions of Jesus which betoken the dawn of the age of salvation (e.g. Mk. 2:18 ff.; 3:13 ff.; Matt. 2:1 ff., 12 ff.) are to be compared with the prophetic symbolic actions of the OT. Thus, Jesus' table-fellowship with sinners (Lk. 5:29 f.; Matt. 9:9–13; Mk. 2:13–17; 15:1 ff., 19:7) is a prophetic sign, a valid anticipation of the acquittal of the final judgment, and a practical illustration in advance of the messianic meal in the age of salvation.

2. Alongside the miracles performed by God himself (e.g. Acts 5:19; 12:3 ff.; 16:25 ff.) one can also distinguish in the NT: (a) the miracles of Jesus; (b) the miracles of his witnesses; and (c) the miraculous power of elements hostile to God.

(a) The Gospels record numerous healing miracles of Jesus (e.g. the healing of those possessed by evil spirits, → lepers, → blind → lame, → deaf-mutes (→ Demon; → Heal), three instances of people being raised from the dead (Jairus' daughter, Matt. 9:18–26; Mk. 5:21–43; Lk. 8:40–56; the widow of Nain's son, Lk. 7:11–17; and Lazarus, Jn. 11; cf. the raisings in 1 Ki. 17:17–24; 2 Ki. 4:32–37), and eight so-called nature miracles (the stilling of the storm, Matt. 8:18, 23–37, Mk. 4:35–41, Lk. 8:22–25; the feeding of the five thousand, Matt. 14:13–21, Mk. 6:32–14; Lk. 9:11–17; Jn. 6:5–13; the feeding of the four thousand, Matt. 15:32–39, Mk. 8:1–10; the walking on the water, Matt. 14:22–33, Mk. 6:45–52, Jn. 6:15–21; the cursing of the fig tree, Matt. 21:18 f., Mk. 8:12 ff., cf. Lk. 13:6–9 (→ Fruit, art. sykē); the coin in the fish's mouth, Matt. 17:24–27; the draught of fishes, Lk. 5:1–11; cf. Jn. 21:1–19; and the water into wine, Jn. 2:1 ff.). Critical sifting of this material has led some scholars to conclude that some of these narratives contain reduplication (e.g. the feeding of the four and five thousand, cf. J. Jeremias, New Testament Theology, I, 1971, 86 ff.). But it also confirms the presentation of the Synoptic Gospels, where the essential characteristic of the effective work of Jesus is seen in the combination of proclamation and healing work (cf. Mk. 1:38 f.; Matt. 4:23; 9:35; Lk. 9:11; cf. also Jesus' testimony to himself in Lk. 13:32, and the juxtaposition of seeing and hearing in the logion Matt. 13:16 f. par. Lk. 10:23 f. [cf. Jn. 8:56; Heb. 11:13; 1 Pet. 1:10 ff.; Isa. 6:9 f.]).

There also exist accounts of miracles of Jewish and pagan miracle-workers of antiquity (on this see C. F. D. Moule, ed., Miracles: Cambridge Studies in their Philosophy and History, 1965; H. van der Loos, The Miracles of Jesus, 1965, 139–50). A comparison of these accounts with those of the Gospels shows that the NT miracle traditions have adopted certain narrative forms and motifs from their milieu, but also draws attention to the particularities of the Gospel witness. With Jesus → magic, conjuration, cursing of people and spells are all absent. He performed miracles by his authoritative → word, to which can be added a gesture (e.g. Mk. 1:31, 41; 5:41; Matt. 9:29). Jesus carried out no miracles of punishment (cf. Lk. 9:51 ff. with 2 Ki. 1:10 ff.). He declined to perform miracles in order to rescue himself (Matt. 4:1 ff. par. Lk. 4:1–4; 26:51 ff.; 27:39 ff. par. Mk. 15:29 ff.; Lk.

23:35), and rejected demonstrations of power designed to prove his divine sending (Matt. 4:5 ff. par. Lk. 4:9–12; Matt. 16:1–4 par. Mk. 8:11 f.; Lk. 11:29). Jesus forbade those whom he had healed to relate his miracles to others (e.g. Matt. 8:30; Mk. 5:43; 7:36; Lk. 8:56); in the case of the healed lepers the man was to show himself "to the priest, and offer what Moses commanded, for a proof to the people" (Mk. 1:44; cf. Lev. 13:49; 14:2–22; Matt. 8:2–4; Lk. 5:12–16; this suggests that Jesus was not only fulfilling the law but directing his work in the first instance to the priests). It is not personal gain but thanks to God that Jesus looked for in men who have known his miraculous help (Lk. 17:11 ff.). By and large the accounts pay little attention to the miraculous process as such; they concentrate on the encounter of Jesus with the whole man in his physical and spiritual needs. The case of the Gadarene swine (Matt. 8:28–34; Mk. 5:1–17; Lk. 8:26–37) illustrates not only something of the nature of demon possession but also the preference of the people of those parts for their swine (in any case unclean → animals) to the healing presence of Jesus. In Matt. 9:2–8 par. Mk. 2:3–12, Lk. 5:18–26 → forgiveness of sins is linked with the healing. Healing becomes a turning point in the life of the healed person (cf. Matt. 9:32; 20:34; Mk. 5:18 ff.; 10:52; Lk. 18:43). Anyone who experiences a miracle of Jesus is thereby placed on the road of → discipleship, in the same way that miracles in general are related to → faith. Only faith, i.e. trust in the power of Jesus which transcends all human possibilities, can receive miracles (Mk. 2:5; 5:34; 7:29; 9:23 f.; Matt. 8:10; 9:28 f.; cf. Jn. 4:50; 11:40); unbelief is denied miracles (Matt. 13:53–58; Mk. 6:1–6; cf. Lk. 4:16–30). It is noteworthy that Jesus' miracles presuppose → faith, they do not first create it. Miracles are not proofs which silence all opposition: if the believer sees God at work, the verdict of his opponents is that Jesus is in league with → Satan (Matt. 12:24; Mk. 3:22; Lk. 11:15).

What finally and radically distinguishes Jesus' miracles from those of Jewish and Hellenistic narratives is their eschatological reference. As Matt. 11:2 ff. par. Lk. 7:18 ff. and Lk. 11:20 clearly show, they are signs of God's kingly rule, the dawn of which Jesus announced in his → proclamation (Matt. 4:23; 9:35; Mk. 1:39; 6:6; Lk. 4:14 f., 44). Jesus' words and works are the beginning of the age of salvation, and the miracles are a foreshadowing and a promise of the coming universal redemption. Ultimately, it is in this eschatological context that the accounts of Jesus' miracles are to be read. Thus, the casting out of demons signals God's invasion into the realm of Satan and its final annihilation (Matt. 12:29 par. Mk. 3:27, Lk. 11:21 f., cf. Isa. 49:24 f.; Lk. 10:18; Jn. 12:31; Rev. 20:1 ff., 10); the raising of the dead announces that death will be forever done away with (1 Cor. 15:26; Rev. 21:4; cf. Isa. 25:8); the healing of the sick bears witness to the cessation of all suffering (Rev. 21:4); the miraculous provisions of food are foretokens of the end of all physical need (Rev. 7:16 f.); the stilling of the storm points forward to complete victory over the powers of chaos which threaten the earth (Rev. 21:1). "When the biblical miracle stories excite serious and relevant wonderment, they intend to do this as signals of something fundamentally new, not as a violation of the natural order which is generally known and acknowledged. . . . Though these changes were isolated and temporary, they were nevertheless radically helpful and saving. What took place were promises and intimations, anticipations of a redeemed nature, of a state of freedom, of a kind of life in which there will be no more sorrow, tears, and crying, and where death as the last enemy will be no more" (Karl Barth, Evangelical Theology: An Introduction, 1963, 68 f.).

The eschatological reference of Jesus' miracles is also expressed in its particular way by John's Gospel. For a redaction-critical approach see R. T. Fortna, The Gospel of Signs: A Reconstruction of the Narrative Source Underlying the Fourth Gospel, 1970. The Gospel itself stresses the historical reality of the events. At the same time the miracles are understood as signs pointing beyond themselves to the One who performs them. They prove Jesus' identity as the Christ of God (20:30), who brings the fullness of eschatological salvation (2:1 ff.; wine is already a symbol of the age of salvation in the OT, cf. Isa. 25:6; → Vine), and offers the → bread of life (6:1 ff.), grants resurrection and eternal life (11:1 ff.; cf. also 4:47 ff.; 5:1 ff.) and drives out darkness (9:1 ff.). In the miracles Jesus reveals his → glory (2:11; 11:4), which is the glory of God himself (1:14). Admittedly, the miracles have this power of statement only for those whose eyes God himself opens (12:37 ff.; cf. Isa. 6:1, 10; 53:1), so that in faith they become aware of the glory of Jesus (2:11; 11:40). Unenlightened men, by contrast, react to Jesus' miracles with sham faith (2:23 ff.) or unbelief (12:37–43; cf. Isa. 53:1; 6:1, 10).

The NT witnesses agree that the uniqueness of Jesus is also expressed in the miracles – his compassionate love as well as his divine authority (cf. also Acts 10:38). "He has done all things well" (Mk. 7:37). In him God himself "has visited his people" (Lk. 7:16). This is the pledge and promise of the consummation of salvation described in Rev. 21:1 ff.

(b) According to the witness of the Synoptic Gospels, Jesus sent out his disciples to preach and to perform miracles (Matt. 10:7 f.; Mk. 3:14 f.; Lk. 9:1 f.; 10:9; cf. Mk. 6:7 ff.; Lk. 9:6). The same is reported in the longer ending of Mk. (16:9–20) concerning the sending-out of the disciples by the Risen Christ (v. 15 ff.; on the various versions of the ending of Mk. see Metzger, 122–26; W. R. Farmer, The Last Twelve Verses of Mark, 1974).

Similarly, Acts mentions many times the correlation of apostolic proclamation and apostolic miracle-working (2:2 f.; 4:29 f.; cf. 3:1 ff.; 4:16, 22; 5:12; 6:8; 8:6 ff.; 9:32 ff.; 15:12; 20:7 ff.). The miracles are co-ordinated with the preaching – they are "accompanying signs", by which Christ confirms the word of the witnesses (Acts 14:3; cf. Mk. 16:20). As in the authoritative word (Acts 6:10) so in the signs is manifested the power of the Holy Spirit promised to the disciples (Acts 1:8).

For Paul, too, "word and deed", preaching and signs belong together; in both Christ is at work in the power of the Spirit (Rom. 15:18 f.). Signs and wonders accompany the proclamation which takes place "in demonstration of the Spirit and power" (1 Cor. 2:4; cf. 1 Thess. 1:5). They are marks of the divine legitimation and authority of the apostolic office and work (2 Cor. 12:12; cf. Rom. 15:18 f.). To the hearers of the preaching also the Holy Spirit mediates miraculous powers (Gal. 3:5). That is why alongside the gifts of proclamation the charisma of healing and the power to perform miracles belong to the living gifts of the Spirit in the church (1 Cor. 12:8 ff., 28; cf. Jas. 5:14 f.).

Finally, Hebrews also bears witness that God confirms the preaching of salvation, which proclaims the dawn of the age of salvation, by signs and wonders (2:3 ff.), which, as "powers of the world to come" (6:5), foreshadow the completion of salvation. Kerygma and charisma, preaching and miracles thus belong essentially together, according to the NT. In both Jesus Christ proves himself to be the living Lord, present in his church in the Holy Spirit.

(c) As the OT, so also the NT reckons with signs and wonders worked by false prophets and pseudo-messianic figures (Mk. 13:22; Matt. 24:24; Rev. 13:11 ff.; 16:14; 19:20) by whom men will be seduced into apostasy from God. The → Antichrist is also expected to perform signs and wonders "in the power of Satan" (2 Thess. 2:3 ff.). O. Hofius

τέρας

τέρας (teras), miraculous sign, prodigy, portent, omen, wonder.

CL teras is attested in literature from Hom. onwards, though its etymology is obscure.

It denotes terrible appearances which elicit fright and horror, and which contradict the ordered unity of nature. This gave rise to the meaning of teras as a miraculous sign, or portent. The word already has the meaning of a sign from the gods in Hom., especially in the sense of some uncanny foretoken or omen requiring interpretation by a seer; this could reveal links with earlier ideas of popular religion. See further K. H. Rengstorf, TDNT VIII 113–17.

OT In the LXX teras is chiefly the rendering of Heb. môpēt, token, sign, miracle.

Its meaning is determined by this, and is thus essentially different from the secular Gk. usage. It is true that the character of the unusual also belongs to the word in the OT, but this is "based on the biblical concept of God as the Creator and Lord of all events and thus transferred from the sphere of the marvellous and unnatural", and also "demarcated from the world of myth" (K. H. Rengstorf, TDNT VIII 119). Essential for môpēt and teras is always the reference to the self-revelation of Yahweh. The word thus designates a → prophet who is made a sign (Isa. 8:18; 20:3; Ezek. 12:6, 11; 24:24, 27), and further, a man who becomes a manifestation of the wrath of God and a sign of horror (Ps. 71:7; cf. 31:12; cf. also 1QH 13:16; 15:20). An event which announces future judgment can also be called a sign of horror (1 Ki. 13:3, 5). In apocalyptic contexts teras in Joel 3:3 (LXX 2:30) is a baneful "sign of the end" (→ sēmeion, OT 3). Finally, the word can denote miracles in general (Exod. 7:9; 11:9; 2 Chr. 32:31, especially when linked with → sēmeion; cf. 2 Chr. 32:24).

NT In the NT teras occurs 16 times (9 in Acts), exclusively in the plur. and only in combination with → sēmeion (q.v. for individual details). O. Hofius

→ Blind, → Bread, → Deaf, → Heal, → Hunger, → Lame, → Leprosy, → Resurrection, → See, → Wine

(a). P. J. Achtemeier, "Toward the Isolation of Pre-Markan Miracle Catenae", JBL 89, 1970, 265–91; and "The Origin and Function of the Pre-Marcan Miracle Catenae", JBL 91, 1972, 198–221; G. Bertram, thambos etc., TDNT III 4–7; and thauma etc., TDNT III 27–42; G. H. Boobyer, "The Miracles of the Loaves and the Gentiles in St. Mark's Gospel", SJT 6, 1953, 77–87; and "The Eucharistic Interpretation of the Miracles and the Loaves in St. Mark's Gospel", JTS New Series 3, 1952, 161–171; C. Brown, "History and the Believer", in C. Brown, ed., History, Criticism and Faith, 1976; R. E. Brown, "Signs and Works", The Gospel according to John ,I, 1967, 525–32; "The Gospel Miracles", New Testament Essays, 1965, 168–91; and The Virginal Conception & Bodily Resurrection of Jesus, 1973; A. B. Bruce, The Miraculous Elements in the Gospels, 1886; R. Bultmann, The History of the Synoptic Tradition, 1968²; and "The Question of Wonder", Faith and Understanding, I, 1969, 247–61; J. M. Court, "The Philosophy of the Synoptic Miracles", JTS New Series 23, 1972, 1–15; J. D. M. Derrett, "Water into Wine" and "Peter's Penny", Law in the New Testament, 1970, 228–46 and 247–65; R. T. Fortna, The Gospel of Signs: A Reconstruction of the Narrative Source Underlying the Fourth Gospel, Society for New Testament Studies Monograph Series 11, 1970; R. H. Fuller, Interpreting the Miracles, 1963; A. de Groot, The Bible on Miracles, St Norbert Abbey Series 19, 1966; R. M. Grant, Miracle and Natural Law in Graeco-Roman and Early Christian Thought 1952; H. J. Held, "Matthew as Interpreter of the Miracle Stories", in G. Bornkamm, G. Barth and H. J. Held, Tradition and Interpretation in Matthew, 1963, 165–299; H. J. Helfmeyer, 'ôṯ, TDOT I 167–88; R. F. Holland, "The Miraculous", American Philosophical Quarterly, 2, 1965 (reprinted in D. Z. Phillips, ed., Religion and Understanding, 1967, 155–70; E. Hoskyns and F. N. Davey, The Riddle of the New Testament, 1936², 145–57; D. Hume, "Of Miracles", Section X of Hume's Philosophical Essays Concerning the Human Understanding, 1748 (see the edition of Hume's Enquiries: Concerning Human Understanding and Concerning the Principles of Morals, edited by L. A. Selby-Bigge, revised by P. H. Nidditch, 1975); M. Inch, "Apologetic Use of 'Sign' in the Fourth Gospel", EQ 42, 1970, 35–43; J. Jeremias, The Parables of Jesus, 1963²; and New Testament Theology, I, 1971; J. Kallas, The Significance of the Synoptic Miracles, 1961; E. and M.-L. Keller, Miracles in Dispute: A Continuing Debate, 1969; H. Knight, "The Old Testament Concept of Miracle", SJT 5, 1952, 355–61; M. J. Langford, "The Problem of the 'Meaning' of Miracle", Religious Studies 7, 1971, 43–52; J. S. Lawton, Miracles and Revelation, 1959; C. S. Lewis, Miracles, 1947; H. van der Loos, The Miracles of Jesus, Supplements to NovT 8, 1965; S. V. McCasland, "Signs and Wonders", JBL 76, 1957, 149–52; and "Miracle", IDB III 392–402; J. F. Miller, "Is 'Miracle' an Intelligible Notion?", SJT 20, 1967, 25–36; L. Monden, Signs and Wonders – A Study of the Miraculous Element in Religion, 1966; L. Morris, "Miracles", The Gospel according to John, 1971, 684–91; C. F. D. Moule, ed., Miracles: Cambridge Studies in their Philosophy and History, 1965; J. B. Mozley, Eight Lectures on Miracles, Bampton Lectures for 1865, 1865; F. Mussner, The Miracles of Jesus: An Introduction, 1970; J. H. Newman, Two Essays on Biblical and on Ecclesiastical Miracles, (1870) 1892¹⁰; W. Nicol, The Sēmeia in the Fourth Gospel: Tradition and Redaction, Supplements to NovT 32, 1972; A. Oepke, iaomai etc., TDNT III 194–215; E. Pax, "Miracle", EBT II 584–89; F. S. Parham, "The Miracle at Cana", EQ 62, 1970, 107 ff.; I. T. Ramsey, G. H. Boobyer, M. C. Perry, H. J. Cadbury, The Miracles and the Resurrection, SPCK Theological Collections, 3, 1964; K. H. Rengstorf, sēmeion etc., TDNT VII 200–69; and teras, TDNT VIII 11326; A. Richardson, The Miracle-Stories of the Gospels, 1941; and History: Sacred and Profane, Bampton Lectures for 1962, 1964; P. Riga, "Signs of Glory. The Use of 'Sēmeion' in St. John's Gospel", Interpretation 17, 1963, 402–24; R. Schnackenburg, "The Johannine Signs", in The Gospel according to St John, I, 1968, 515–28; and "Miracles in the New Testament and Modern Science", in Present and Future: Modern Aspects of New Testament Theology, 1966, 44–63; S. S. Smalley, "The Sign in John xxi", NTS 20, 1973–74, 275–88; R. D. Smith, Comparative Miracles, 1965; J. P. M. Sweet, "A Sign for Unbelievers: Paul's Attitude to Glossolalia", NTS 13, 1966–67, 240–57; R. Swinburne, The Concept of Miracle, 1970; F. R. Tennant, Miracle & its Philosophical Presuppositions, 1925; B. B. Warfield, Counterfeit Miracles, 1918 (reprinted as Miracles: Yesterday and Today, True and False, 1954).

(b). H. Baltensweiler, "Wunder und Glaube im Neuen Testament", ThZ 23, 1967, 241–56; J. Becker, "Wunder und Christologie", NTS 16, 1969–70, 130–48; L. Bieler, Theios anēr. Das Bild des "göttlichen Menschen" in Spätantike und Frühchristentum, I–II, 1935–36; D. Connolly, "Ad miracula sanationum apud Mt.", Verbum Domini 45, 1967, 306–25; G. Delling, "Das Verständnis des Wunders im Neuen Testament", ZSTh 24, 1955, 265–80; E. Fascher, Kritik am Wunder, 1960; P. Fiebig, Jüdische Wundergeschichten des neutestamentlichen Zeitalters, 1911; Rabbinische Wundergeschichten, (1911) 1933²; and Antike Wundergeschichten, (1911) 1921²; G. Fohrer, Die symbolischen Handlungen der Propheten, AThANT 54, 1953; A. Fridrichsen, Le Problème du Miracle dans le Christianisme Primitif, 1925; K. Gutbrod, Die Wundergeschichten des Neuen Testaments, 1967; J. Haspecker, "Wunder im Alten Testament", Theologische Akademie 2, 1965, 29–56; A. Heising, Multiplicatio Panum: Die Botschaft der Brotvermehrung, 1966; J. Hempel, Heilung als Symbol und Wirklichkeit im biblischen Schrifttum, Nachrichten der Gesellschaft der Wissenschaften zu Göttingen, Philosophisch-historische Klasse 3, 1958; C. A. Keller, Das Wort

'ôṯ als "Offenbarungszeichen Gottes". Ein philologisch-theologische Begriffsuntersuchung zum Alten Testament, 1946; B. Klappert, "Die Wunder Jesu im Neuen Testament", in Das Ungewöhnliche, Aussaat-Bücherei 45, 1969, 25 ff.; E. Linnemann, "Die Hochzeit zu Kana", NTS 20, 1973–74, 408–18; G. Mensching, Das Wunder im Glauben und Aberglauben der Völker, 1957; G. Mensching, W. Vollborn, E. Lohse, E. Käsemann, "Wunder", RGG^{3} VI 1831 ff.; R. Pesch, Jesu ureigene Taten? Ein Beitrag zur Wunderfrage, Questiones Disputatae 52, 1970; G. Quell, "Das Phänomen des Wunders im Alten Testament", in Verbannung und Heimkehr. Festschrift W. Rudolph, 1961, 253–300; R. Reitzenstein, Hellenistischen Wundererzählungen, 1906; R. Renner, Die Wunder Jesu in Theologie und Unterricht, 1966; J. Scharbert, "Was versteht das Alte Testament unter Wunder?" BuK 22, 1967, 37–46; G. Schille, Die urchristliche Wundertradition Ein Beitrag zur Frage nach dem irdischen Jesus, 1966; A. Schlatter, Das Wunder in der Synagoge, 1912; W. Schmithals, Wunder und Glaube. Eine Auslegung von Mk. 4, 35–6, 6a, BSt 59, 1970; J. P. Seierstad, W. Phillipp, K. Nitzschke, "Wunder", EKL III 1860 ff.; G. Siegmund, "Theologie des Wunders", Theologische Revue, 58, 1962, 289 ff.; A. Smitmans, Das Weinwunder von Kana. Die Auslegung von Joh. ii. 1–11 bei den Vätern und Heute, 1966; G. Stählin, "Die Gleichnishandlungen Jesu", in Kosmos und Ekklesia, Festschrift W. Stählin, 1953, 9 ff.; F. Stolz, 'ôṯ, THAT I 91–95; A. Suhl, Die Wunder Jesu, 1968; O. Weinreich, Antike Heilungswunder, 1909.

Moses

Μωϋσῆς	Μωϋσῆς (Mōÿsēs), Moses.

OT 1. The Gk. form of the name (from the LXX on) probably originates from Egyptian sources. The first syllable (Mōÿ-) renders a Coptic, not a Heb. ō-sound (Pauly-Wissowa, XVI, 1, 360). The Heb. mōšeh is prob. to be derived from old Egyptian ms(y), with the meaning "son" (cf. Thutmosis, Son of Thoth). Moses is a short form of the name without the element of the name of the god (cf. S. Herrmann, "Mose", EvTh 28, 1968, 303 f.).

2. The following reconstruction represents a cross-section of scholarly opinion. The older OT tradition characterizes Moses as the charismatic leader of a nomadic group of people which had been thrown together from various elements, and which had been condemned to forced labour in the towns of Pithom and Ra'amses (Exod. 1:11). Through Moses' contacts with the nomadic Midianites (2:15 f.; 3:1–4:20), this group of Hebrews eventually fled from → Egypt (14:5). The destruction in the sea of a troop of Egyptian war-chariots which had been sent out to pursue them led to the call of this group of nomads by the God Yahweh, whose action the prophetess Miriam had seen in the event (15:20 f.). For the duration of a generation this group appears to have continued to live in the desert, before it decided to emigrate into another cultural territory. During this period of time it had its central shrine at Sinai; but, in addition, visited the shrines of the Mountain of God and of Massah-Meribah (Kadesh). Moses stands here on a level with the patriarchs, even though he had to lead a presumably numerically stronger group.

Before the exile, Mosaic tradition appears to have played a rôle only in the northern kingdom; it gained its fundamental significance through the association of Moses with the giving of the religious legislation in the Book of the Covenant (Exod. 20:22–23:20), linking on with the ancient note in Exod. 32:16. With the increasing significance of divine justice went a growth in the significance of Moses. He appears in the Deuteronomic law-code as the great law-giver, who shows

Israel the way of life and death. These traditions became important in the post-exilic restoration under Ezra, where the law was expounded as the essential basis of Judah's existence. Thus Moses was revered as the central Revealer of Israel. The Prophets, who mention Moses only rarely and in insignificant contexts (such as Jer. 15:1; Mic. 6:4; Isa. 65:1; Hos. 12:14), now become messengers of God's demand for obedience, as the Deuteronomistic history shows. H. Seebass

3. Although the above account represents a marked advance upon the position once held that Moses could not be regarded as a historical figure, the Bible itself represents the life of Moses in much greater detail. In Stephen's speech in Acts his life was divided into three periods of forty years spent respectively in Egypt, Arabia and finally in leading Israel through the wilderness (Acts 7:23, 30, 36).

The Book of Exodus sets the birth of Moses in the context of the history of the descendants of Joseph who remained in Egypt after his death. Whereas they had once been favoured on his account, there arose "a new king over Egypt, who did not know Joseph" (Exod. 1:8), and fearing the growth of the Israelites subjected them to slavery, setting them to work on the store cities of Pithom and Ra'amses (Exod. 1:11). At the time of his birth there was a decree commanding the slaying of all male Israelites at birth (Exod. 1:16, 22). However, Moses who was born into a Levite family (Exod. 2:1) was saved by being hidden in a basket among the reeds along the bank of the Nile, being adopted by Pharaoh's daughter (Exod. 2:1–10). His name is explained in v. 10 from the vb. māšâh, draw out (cf. Jos. 8:6; 2 Sam. 22:17), "for she said 'Because I drew him out of the water.'" His own mother served as his nurse.

As a young man, he killed an Egyptian who was beating a fellow Israelite, and was forced to flee for his life (Exod. 2:11–15). He fled to the land of Midian in the Arabian Peninsula, where he adopted the nomadic way of life, marrying Zipporah, the daughter of Reuel or Jethro (cf. Exod. 2:18 with 3:1), a priest of Midian, who bore him a son, Gershom (Exod. 2:16–22). The latter's name is explained from the noun gēr, sojourner, "for he said, 'I have been a sojourner in a foreign land' " (2:22). Moses was summoned from his nomadic existence by Yahweh who had heard the groaning of his people in → Egypt (Exod. 2:23 ff.). He revealed himself to Moses in the theophany of the burning bush at Horeb, "the mountain of God", declaring his name (→ God, art. theos, OT 2) and commissioning him to lead his people out of Egypt to the land of the Canaanites, Hittites, Amorites, Perizzites, Hivites and Jebusites, "a land flowing with milk and honey" (Exod. 3:1–22). Initially Moses was to ask Pharaoh to let the people go three days' journey into the wilderness to sacrifice to Yahweh. When Moses hesitated to assume this daunting task, he was given signs (Exod. 4:1–9) and permitted to let Aaron, his brother, be his spokesman (Exod. 4:10–17). Moses then took his wife and son whom he had omitted to → circumcise, though this was rectified by his wife (Exod. 2:18–26), and joined Aaron. Together they delivered Yahweh's call to the people of Israel who responded in faith (Exod. 2:27–31).

Together Moses and Aaron confronted Pharaoh with the request to let the people go three days' journey into the wilderness to sacrifice to Yahweh. In response Pharaoh redoubled the burdens of the Israelites (Exod. 5:1–23). In despair Moses reproached Yahweh for this impossible task but received the renewed promise of Yahweh's help (Exod. 6:1–7:7). At the time Moses was eighty and Aaron eighty-three years old (Exod. 7:7). Then followed the contest between Moses and Pharaoh in which the ten great plagues were sent on Egypt: the Nile was turned to "blood" (Exod. 7:19–25), i.e. blood colour caused by some chemical pollution which doubtless led to other plagues; the plague of frogs (Exod. 8:1–14); that of lice (Exod. 8:16–19; RSV "gnats"); that of flies (Exod. 8:20–32); that of the cattle (Exod. 9:1–7); that of boils (Exod. 9:8–12); that of hail (Exod. 9:13–35); that of the locusts (Exod. 10:1–20); that of darkness (Exod. 10:21–29); and the slaying of the firstborn (Exod. 11:1–12:30); though Israelite families were spared as they celebrated the Passover for the first time (Exod. 12:1–28). (On the plagues see K. A. Kitchen, "Plagues of Egypt", NBD, 1001 ff.; W. White, "Plagues of Egypt", ZPEB IV 804–7.) At this point Pharaoh relented and the exodus commenced (Exod. 12:31 ff.).

According to Exod. 13:17 f., the route taken avoided a possible clash with the Philistines lest the Israelites should be daunted and turn back. God "led the people round by the way of the wilderness of the Red Sea", carrying the bones of Joseph with them (v. 19). They were guided by a pillar of cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night. (On the route of the exodus see K. A. Kitchen, "Exodus", NBD 402 ff.; C. De Wit, The Date and Route of the Exodus, 1960; and G. I. Davies, "The Wilderness Itineraries", TB 25, 1974, 48–81. On the NT interpretation see R. E. Nixon, The Exodus in the New Testament, 1963.) Places mentioned along the route are: Marah, where the bitter waters were sweetened (Exod. 15:23); Elim, where there were twelve wells of water and seventy palm trees (Exod. 15:27); the wilderness of Sin, where the people grumbled for want of food and were supplied with quails (→ Bird) and manna (→ Bread) (Exod. 16); and Rephidim, where the smitten rock of Horeb gave water (Exod. 17:1–7). At Rephidim they were attacked by the Amalekites and defeated them through the intercession of Moses whose arms were upheld by Aaron and Hur (Exod. 17:8–16). Thereafter Moses was joined by Jethro who brought with him Zipporah, Gershom and his other son, Eliezer (from 'elî, my God, and 'ēzer, help, "for he said, 'The God of my father was my help, and delivered me from the sword of Pharaoh' ", 18:4). At Jethro's suggestion Moses appointed rulers of thousands, hundreds, fifties and tens to assist in judging the people (Exod. 18:24 ff.).

After Rephidim Israel encamped before Mount Sinai where Moses and the people prepared to receive a fresh revelation (Exod. 19:1–13). Here he received the Ten Commandments (Exod. 19:14–20:17; → Command). After reading to the people the laws of the community (Exod. 21:1–23:33), Moses renewed the → covenant between Yahweh and Israel (Exod. 24). Details of the tabernacle and its contents were given to Moses by God (Exod. 25–31; → Tent). While Moses was with Yahweh on Mount Sinai the people turned back to the worship of the gods, symbolized in the golden calf made by Aaron which Moses destroyed on his return (Exod. 32). Moses' indignation led him to break the tables of the law which he had made (Exod. 32:19). The → glory of Yahweh was revealed to Moses, although he was not allowed to see Yahweh's face directly (Exod. 33:12–23). The tables of the law were renewed (Exod. 34:1–4), and the covenant further renewed (Exod. 34:10–27). After this forty day sojourn on the Mount Moses returned with the tables, his shining face covered by a veil (Exod. 34:28–35). The remainder of the book of Exodus tells how Moses superintended the erection of the tabernacle (chs. 35–40).

Leviticus (1:1) names Moses as the one to whom Yahweh gave the numerous statutes for cultic → sacrifice (chs. 1–7), and for the consecration of Aaron and his sons for the priesthood (chs. 8–9). Judgment fell on Nadab and Abihu for offering unholy → fire before Yahweh (Lev. 10). Lev. 11–27 contains numerous regulations governing religious and daily life. Each chapter begins: "And the LORD said to Moses", some adding "and Aaron", especially those concerning cultic matters.

The Book of Numbers represents Yahweh's continuing dealings with Israel through Moses. In ch. 1 Moses is charged with numbering the people. Ch. 2 gives their camping and marching order. Through Moses the → Levites are assigned their particular tasks (chs. 3 and 4). Through Moses directions are given concerning unclean persons, trespass, Nazirites etc. (chs. 5 and 6). Num. 7 describes how Moses received dedicatory gifts from the leaders of the tribes. It was Moses who consecrated the Levites (Num. 8). Num. 9:1–10:10 describes the preparations for the onward journey which recommences with Num. 10:11. Features of the journey narrative in Num. are: the fire at Taberah which was quenched at Moses' intercession (Num. 11:1–3); the appointment of seventy elders to assist Moses (Num. 11:10–30); the sedition of Miriam and Aaron on account of Moses' Cushite wife (Num. 12:1–16); the mission of the spies (Num. 13–14); the rebellion of Korah, Dathan and Abiram (Num. 16); the sprouting of Aaron's rod (Num. 17); the smiting of the rock at Meribah which yielded water at a time of drought (Num. 20:1–14); the deaths of Miriam (Num. 20:1) and Aaron (Num. 20:22–29); the plague of the serpents (Num. 21; → Dragon, art. ophis); the abortive attempt of Balak to make Balaam → curse Israel (Num. 22–24); the worship of the Baal of Peor and the sexual relations of the people with the Midianites (Num. 25); the census (Num. 26); the appointment of Joshua as Moses' successor (Num. 27); the command to make war on the Midianites (Num. 31); the assignment of the inheritance to the Reubenites and Gadites (Num. 32); the description of the stages of the journey and arrangements for the allocation of the promised land (Num. 33–36). Interspersed with this narrative are further cultic regulations.

Deuteronomy contains a resumé of the journey and various statutes from the perspective of Moses (Deut. 1:1; cf. 31:24). It is presented as Moses' farewell address and concludes with his blessing (Deut. 33). Moses was permitted to see the promised land from Mount Pisgah, but not to enter it (Deut. 34) on account of his sin at Meribah (Num. 20:12). Deut. 18:15 contains the promise: "The Lord your God will raise up for you a prophet like me from among you, from your brethren – him you shall heed." In the NT this was given a christological interpretation (Acts 3:22 f.; 7:37; on the subsequent Jewish interpretation of Deut. 18:15 in both a messianic and a non-messianic sense see J. Jeremias, Mōÿsēs, TDNT IV 857 ff.). Deut. itself concludes with the declaration: "And there has not arisen a prophet since in Israel like Moses, whom the Lord knew face to face, none like him for the signs and the wonders which the Lord sent him to do. . . ." (Deut. 34:10 f.).

The authorship of the Pentateuch was traditionally ascribed to Moses, except of course the account of his death. The following passages are explicitly ascribed to him: the historical and legal narrative of Deut. 1:1–31:23; the song of Moses (Deut. 32:1–43); the blessing of Moses (Deut. 33:1–29); and Ps. 90. After the defeat of the Amalekites Moses was commanded to write a memorial in a book that God would blot out all remembrance of them under heaven (Exod. 17:14). Exod. 24:4 reports that "Moses wrote all the words of the Lord." He delivered the Ten Commandments (Exod. 20:1–17; cf. Deut. 5:5–21). Exod. 24:7 refers to the "Book of the Covenant" which Moses read to the people. According to Num. 33:2, Moses wrote down all the camp sites by divine command. According to Deut. 31:9, "Moses wrote this law, and gave it to the priests the sons of Levi, who carried the ark of the covenant of the Lord, and to all the elders of Israel" (cf. 31:24 ff.). It was to be read to all Israel every seven years (Deut. 31:11). In addition, Moses commanded the law to be written on stones to be set up on Mount Ebal by the Israelites when they had passed over the Jordan (Deut. 27:2–8; cf. Jos. 8:30–35). Various warnings are given against not keeping "all the words of the law written in this book" (Deut. 28:58; cf. 28:61; 29:19 f., 26; 30:10). Genesis, however, contains no reference to Moses as its author.

The remaining reference to Moses in the OT occur chiefly in Jos. (1:1–17; 3:7; 4:10 ff.; 8:31–35; 9:24; 11:12–23; 12:6; 13:8–33; 14:2–11; 17:4; 18:7; 20:2; 21:2, 8; 22:2–9; 23:6; 24:5). He figures occasionally in other historical books (Jdg. 1:16, 20; 3:4; 4:11; 1 Sam. 12:6, 8; 1 Ki. 2:3; 8:9, 53, 56; 2 Ki. 14:6; 18:4, 6, 12; 21:8; 23:25; 1 Chron. 6:3, 49; 15:15; 21:29; 22:13; 23:13 ff.; 2 Chron. 1:3; 5:10; 8:13; 23:18; 24:6, 9; 25:4; 30:16; 33:8; 34:14; 35:6, 12; Ezra. 3:2; 6:18; 7:6; Neh. 1:7 f.; 8:1, 14; 9:14; 10:29; 13:1. Outside the historical books the name of Moses is mentioned in Pss. 77:20; 90 (title); 99:6; 103:7; 105:26; 106:16, 23, 32; Isa. 63:11 f.; Jer. 15:1; Dan. 9:11, 13; Mic. 6:4; and Mal. 4:4. Many of these passages, especially in the historical books, refer to what Yahweh has said or commanded through Moses. C. Brown

4. In the Hellenistic world, information about Moses is found almost without exception in anti-Jewish utterances. As the Jews in general, so Moses was reckoned as an Egyptian (a priest from Heliopolis). He was regarded as law-giver, organizer of the nation (the twelve tribes), and founder of the Jewish state, its capital and temple. Since, in Judaism outside Jerusalem, there was no longer any sacrificial cult, Jews were regarded now as atheoi, those who did not give the gods their due respect, and as demon-worshippers. Moses was viewed as the scorner of every cult, or as a magician and a deceiver – his name was often used in magical formulas. Hecataeus and Posidonius alone spoke of Moses in terms of admiration. Hecataeus praised Moses for having venerated heaven as God without any images; and Posidonius relates that, though Moses had been an Egyptian priest, he left Egypt voluntarily, because their anthropomorphic and theriomorphic concepts of divinity did not correspond with his. He founded a society originally free from law (the Jewish Law provided a major stumbling-block for the whole Hellenistic world) and worshipped "what we collectively call heaven, the universe and nature" (I. Heinemann, "Moses", Pauly-Wissowa, XVI, 1, 361 ff.). See further W. A. Meeks, The Prophet-King: Moses Traditions and the Johannine Christology, Supplements to NovT 14, 1967.

5. Hellenistic Judaism produced its apologies in reply. Following the Gk. scientific method, they concluded that agreement implied original borrowing; and so, since the Hellenistic world regarded Egyptian culture as the most ancient, the apologists attributed this to the patriarchs, and also extolled Moses as the discoverer of writing (cf. Eusebius, Praep.Ev. 9, 27). The rise and growth of the so-called Moses-romance is important. According to this, Egyptian magicians prophesied to Pharaoh the birth of a man who would save the Jews and defeat the Egyptians. For this reason he ordered all the children to be killed. But a childless daughter of Pharaoh rescued Moses and gave him an Egyptian name (Pauly-Wissowa XVI, 1, 367 ff.).

6. Throughout Palestinian Judaism Moses was the revealer without equal. For the Rabbis, the prophets were simply the bearers of the oral tradition which Moses received at Sinai. Their successors were the scribes (TDNT VI 817 ff.; cf. Matt. 23:2). Moses and his age were counted as the pattern of the messianic age, in accordance with the conception of the second exodus as marking the inauguration of salvation. As Moses suffered, so also the redeemer will suffer. According to R. Akiba, the messiah would hunger and thirst forty years in the wilderness. Before manifesting himself he would sojourn in Rome, the city of the enemies, as Moses sojourned in Egypt, and return from there like Moses' wife and sons (Exod. 4:20) (cf. TDNT IV 860 f.; SB III 824 ff.). In Qumran Moses is also often named and celebrated as a law-giver of Israel (e.g. 1QS 1:3; 5:8; 8:15, 22; 1QM 10:6; 1QH 17:12; 1Q22 1:1, 11; 2:5, 11; 4:3; 4Qflor 2:3; 4Qtest 1; 6QD 3:4; CD 5:8, 18, 21; 8:14; 15:2, 9, 12; 16:2, 5; 19:26; cf. W. A. Meeks, op. cit.).

NT In the NT Moses is the most frequently-mentioned OT figure. Jesus shook the foundations of contemporary Judaism by coming forward as a revealer like Moses, not as his interpreter, as the OT prophets had been, but distinct from him, preaching and living in the name of the final arrival of the → kingdom of God. The NT tradition presents the relationship between Moses and Christ in differing ways.

1. Mark. Moses is recognized as law-giver (1:44). His law establishes the resurrection of the dead, as against the Sadducees (12:19, 26); and establishes the commandment of Exod. 20:12, as against scribal tradition (Mk. 7:10 f.; in v. 14 f. Jesus reveals his new authority). At the transfiguration, → Elijah and Moses appear; they both suffered (as Jesus does now) under the hatred of their own people (9:4 f.), on account of their commission. Peter misunderstands the heavenly appearance, thinking that it is an earthly one, and that the new period in the wilderness has begun, since the three eschatological figures of Moses, Elijah and the messiah are here united (see Jn. 1:21, 25; cf. CD 9:11; 4Qtest. 5 ff.).

2. Matthew sees a close correspondence between Jesus and Moses. On the birth narrative (2:1–23) cf. the details and the shape of the Moses-tradition (see above OT 2), and the reference to → Egypt as the place to which they fled (cf. Matt. 2:20 with Exod. 4:19; and 1:15 with Hos. 11:1; → Fullness, art. plēroō). Jesus stayed in the wilderness for forty days without food and drink, as did Moses on Sinai (4:1 f.; cf. Exod. 34:28). Above all, Jesus is the new law-giver (cf. 5:1 with law given from Sinai, Exod. 19 and 20), who, like Moses, dispenses → blessing (5:3 ff.) and → curse (23:13 ff.). The Mosaic teaching-office of the scribes is recognized (23:2 f.), but at the same time superseded in that, under the guidance of Jesus, one is to display a better righteousness than the → Pharisees (5:17–20). (See further the discussion of Jesus in relation to the Pentateuch, the exodus and Moses in W. D. Davies, The Setting of the Sermon on the Mount, 1964, 14–108.)

3. Luke sees Jesus' connection with Moses as given in the function of the prophet. Acts 3:22 and 7:37 quote Deut. 18:15 cf. 18: "a prophet like me [Moses]". As Moses was mighty both in word and deed (7:22), so Jesus was a mighty → prophet before God and the people (Lk. 24:19; cf. 7:16; 4:24; 13:33). Like Moses, Jesus gives chosen men a share in his power and Spirit (10:1, 17 ff.), the seventy (or seventy-two; on the v.l. see Metzger, 150 f.), and later, above and beyond Moses, to the whole church. As Moses suffered (Acts 7:25 ff.), and as the people disowned him, even though God had sent him as a ruler and redeemer (7:35), so Jesus had to be consigned to death, according to Moses and the prophets, by the chief priests and scribes, and be raised by God to be ruler (Lk. 24:27, 44; cf. Acts 26:22; 28:23). Whoever, therefore, does not listen to Moses and the prophets will also not believe the resurrected One (Lk. 16:29–31). It is not true that Stephen (Acts 6:11 ff.) and Paul (21:20 ff.; cf. also 18:18; 21:24 ff.) preached a regression from the "customs" of Moses: freedom from the requirement of circumcision was demanded by Paul, with Peter's concurrence, only for the non-Jews (15:1–21; cf. 16:3). But the righteousness of faith, which Jesus gives as a gift, Moses' law could not bring (13:38).

4. Paul places Moses and Christ in antithesis to one another. As law-giver (Rom. 5:14; 1 Cor. 9:9), Moses gives only the letter (gramma) – the man who fulfills the righteousness of the law will live (Rom. 10:5). It is in this way that Paul expresses Moses' "dispensation of death"; it possesses only a fading glory (2 Cor. 3:7; cf. Gal. 3:17 ff.). By way of contrast, the "dispensation of the righteousness which leads to faith" (2 Cor. 2:9) possesses the → Spirit (pneuma) and a permanent glory (eisegesis of Exod. 34:29 ff.). The "dispensations" represent synagogue and → church. To this day the Jews have a "veil over the heart" when "Moses" is read (v. 15). But the new Israel beholds the glory of the Lord "with unveiled face" and is transformed from one degree of glory to another. All this comes from the Lord who is the Spirit (3:17 f.). If Israel would open his heart to the Lord, the veil would disappear (v. 16), and Moses would be recognized as a witness to the righteousness of God. God chooses solely on the basis of his promise, not on the basis of human zeal (Rom. 9:15 f.); the calling of the Gentiles shows that Israel's law creates no privilege in God's sight (10:19). Baptism into Moses (a formation built on the analogy of "baptism into Jesus") was a promise, not a natural law. Those baptized did indeed receive the gifts of the Spirit, but since they did not remain within the promise, they perished (1 Cor. 10:2–5).

5. John stands starkly opposed to Judaism. The teaching of Jesus which interprets the Scriptures comes directly from God, not from their own study (7:15 f.). Anyone who wants to do God's will – the first commandment, not the individual commandments! – will know whether the teaching is from God (v. 17). But none of the Jews keep the law, for they base their lives on its letter and not, as the law itself demands, on God and his revealer (v. 19). Moses' law, as such, is surpassed by Jesus (1:17). Nevertheless, it accuses the Jews before God, because it witnesses (5:39, 45 ff.) to the revealer who will be like Moses (Deut. 18:15, 18). The people rightly recognize that Jesus is the promised prophet (6:14), but in trying to make him king they fail to understand that his kingdom is not of this world (18:36). The leaders of the people call themselves Moses' disciples (9:28), but in untruth. For the new revealer has come (1:17), and he is the true bread of life; those who ate the bread Moses gave them died (6:32–35, 48–51). Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness to preserve people's earthly lives; but when Jesus is "lifted up", everyone who believes in him will have eternal life (3:14 ff.; → Dragon, art. ophis).

6. Hebrews stresses that the pattern given by Moses has been surpassed and fulfilled in Christ. Jesus' faithfulness is greater than Moses', because he, as the Son, came from God's high heaven, and is not only, like Moses, a servant in God's house (3:2 ff.). Jesus is the High Priest in the heavenly sanctuary, which Moses once saw and of which he tried to build the earthly copy (8:5). The church of Christ is not led to Sinai which terrified Moses with its fire and smoke, lightning and thunder (12:18 f.): it can approach with confidence. Even it must not refuse him who is speaking (12:25) for judgment awaits those who spurn God. Moses is pictured in 11:23 ff. as a pattern for faith, even in suffering. In 3:16 he is recalled as the leader out of Egypt; and in 7:14 and the law-giver.

7. There are three further isolated references in the NT. In Rev. 15:3 the passing through the sea is a pattern for the deliverance of the saints from suffering in the last days. The fragment of Jude 9 is based on later traditions preserved in the apocryphal Assumption of Moses and various fathers which said that Satan fought with Michael when over the body of Moses (cf. E. M. B. Green, The Second Epistle General of Peter and the General Epistle of Jude , 1968, 169 f.; J. N. D. Kelly, A Commentary on the Epistles of Peter and Jude, 1969, 264 f.; cf. also TDNT IV 854 f.). In 2 Tim. 3:8, Jannes and Jambres were the Egyptian magicians, according to the Moses-romance, who imitated the miracle of turning a staff into a serpent (see SB I 660 ff.). Their names are not mentioned in the account of Exod. 7:11 (cf. C. Spicq, Les Epîtres Pastorales, 1947, 370 ff.). H. Seebass

→ Command, → Egypt, → Israel, → Law, → People, → Wilderness

(a). E. Arden, "How Moses Failed God", JBL 76, 1957, 50 ff.; E. Auerbach, Moses, 1953; B. W. Bacon, Studies in Matthew, 1930; D. Beegle, Moses, the Servant of Yahweh, 1972; J. Bright, A History of Israel, (1960) 1972; M. Buber, Moses, 1947; G. I. Davies, "The Wilderness Itineraries", TB 25, 1974, 46–81; W. D. Davies, The Setting of the Sermon on the Mount, 1964, 25–108; D. Daube, The New Testament and Rabbinic Judaism, 1956, 5–12; and The Exodus Pattern in the Bible, 1963; W. Eichrodt, Theology of the Old Testament, I, 1961, 189–96; G. Fohrer, History of Israelite Religion, 1973, 66–86; S. Freud, Moses and Monotheism, 1939; J. G. Gager, Moses in Greco-Roman Paganism, 1972; T. F. Glasson, Moses in the Fourth Gospel, SBT 40, 1963; J. Jeremias, Mōÿsēs, TDNT IV 848–73; R. F. Johnson, "Moses", IDB III 440–50; T. Keneally, Moses the Law-giver, 1976; G. D. Kilpatrick, The Origins of the Gospel according to St. Matthew, 1946; K. A. Kitchen, "Moses," NBD 843–50; M. G. Kyle, Moses and the Monuments, 1920; J. MacDonald, "The Samaritan Doctrine of Moses", SJT 13, 1960, 149–62; W. A. Meeks, The Prophet-King: Moses Traditions and the Johannine Christology, Supplements to NovT 14, 1967; A. Neher, Moses and the Vocation of the Jewish People, 1959; R. E. Nixon, The Exodus in the New Testament, 1963; M. Noth, A History of the Pentateuch Traditions, 1972; G. von Rad, Old Testament Theology, I, 1962, 289 ff.; and The Problems of the Hexateuch and Other Essays, 1965; M. Rist, "Moses, Assumption of", IDB III 450 f.; H. H. Rowley, From Joseph to Joshua, 1950; "Moses and the Decalogue", in Men of God, 1963, 1–36; and From Moses to Qumran: Studies in the Old Testament, 1963; O. Schilling, "Moses", EBT II 593–96; H. M. Teeple, The Mosaic Eschatological Prophet, JBL Monograph Series, 1957; I. H. Weisfeld, This Man Moses, 1966; G. Widengren, "What do we know about Moses?", in J. I. Durham and J. R. Porter, eds., Proclamation and Presence: Old Testament Essays in Honour of Gwynne Henton Davies, 1970, 21–47; F. V. Winnett, The Mosaic Tradition, 1949; C. De Wit, The Date and Route of the Exodus, 1960. (b). C. Barth, "Mose, Knecht Gottes", in Parrhesia. Karl Barth zum achtzigsten Geburtstag, 1966, 68–81; H. Cazelles et al., Moïse, L'Homme de l'Alliance, 1955; H. Gressmann, Mose und seine Zeit, 1913; A. H. J. Gunneweg, "Mose in Midian", ZTK 61, 1964, 1 ff.; I. Heinemann, "Moses", Pauly-Wissowa, XVI, 1, 359–75; S. Hermann, "Mose", EvTh 28, 1968; 301 ff.; K. Kastner, Moses im Neuen Testament, dissertation, 1967; C. A. Keller, "Vom Stand und Aufgabe der Moseforschung", ThZ 13, 1957; H. Kremers, "Mose", EKL II 1458 ff.; E. Osswald, "Moses", *RGG*³ IV 1151 ff.; and Das Bild Mose, 1962; H. Schmid, Mose. Überlieferung und Geschichte, BZAW 110, 1968; H. Seebass, Mose und Aaron, Sinai und Gottesberg, 1962; E. Sellin, Mose und seine Bedeutung für die israelitisch-jüdische Religionsgeschichte, 1922; R. Smend, Das Mosebild von Heinrich Ewald bis Martin Noth, 1959; F. Stier and E. Beck, Moses in Schrift und Überlieferung, 1963; P. Volz, Mose und sein Werk, 1932².

Myth

μῦθος | μῦθος (mythos), myth, story.

CL In Homer mythos is used of any kind of speech (e.g. mythoisi kekasthai, Od. 7, 157, means to be skilled in speech) and sometimes even of unspoken thought, a plan conceived in the mind (e.g. echet' en phresi mython, Od. 15, 445, "you have a plan in your mind"). More particularly it is used of a story, whether true or false (all' age moi tou paidos agauou mython enispes, Od. 11, 92, "come, tell me the news of that noble son of mine"). In this usage there is no distinction between mythos and logos (→ Word); cf. Aeschylus, Persae 713, akousei mython en brachei logō, "you will hear a story in brief utterance [in few words]." But as early as Pindar a distinction appears between mythos, fiction, and logos, factual narrative: "popular report which exceeds the true account [logos]" tends to consist of "tales [mythoi] decked out with variegated lies" which "lead people astray" (Ol. 1, 28 f.), and even Homer's lore "deceives people, leading them astray with tales [mythoi]" (Nem. 7, 23).

Thucydides mentions the story-telling propensity (to mythōdes) of the chroniclers (logographoi) who preceded him, whose aim was "to please the ear rather than to speak the truth"; by contrast, he allowed that readers might be put off by the lack of this feature (to mē mythōdes) in his own work, but claimed that his aim was to provide an everlasting possession rather than a passing pleasure (History 1, 21 f.). Among those predecessors he may have had in mind Herodotus, who believed that a good story was worth recording, whether it was credible or incredible, like the "silly fable [euēthēs mythos]" which, he says, the Greeks tell about Heracles's adventures in Egypt (Hist. 2, 45).

The mythos plays a special part in Plato's exposition of truth. When philosophical debate leads him so far on his quest but cannot proceed further, the poet in Plato takes over and expresses in the form of an imaginative story or parable the insight which is the goal of his quest. His mythopoeic workmanship is indebted to the myths of epic poetry and to those of Orphism and the Eleusinian mysteries, but the Platonic myth has a quality of its own. Examples are the two myths of Eros (Symp. 189c–193d; 202d–212a), and those of creation (Tim. 29d–92b), of the world to come (Gorgias 523a–524a) and of the judgment of the dead (Rep. 10, 614a–621d).

The word mythos was a technical term in classical Greek for the plot of a tragedy or comedy (Aristotle, Poetics 1449 b 5; 1450 a 4; 1451 a 16). This usage probably goes back to the time when these art-forms were wholly religious: the mythos or hieros logos was a sacred story involving the gods, and the drama (from draō, do, act) was the ritual enactment of the story, each being necessary to the other and to the whole production.

OT This last use of mythos in classical Greek has been thought to be applicable to the world of the OT. The vocabulary of Greek dramatic tradition has been taken over in the 20th century by the "myth and ritual" school of Near Eastern religious history ("school" being used here in a very imprecise sense). T. H. Gaster, for example, has explained the religious texts from Ugarit as the mythoi of seasonal rites of "emptying" and "filling" which he tries to reconstruct (Thespis, 1950). Some scholars have postulated a ritual pattern over a great area of the ancient Near East, exemplified in the Akitu or New Year festival in Babylon and in a reconstructed festival of the enthronement of Yahweh at the autumnal Feast of Tabernacles in Israel. In this pattern the myth of the dying and rising god (representing originally such phenomena as the annual withering and revival of vegetation) figured prominently; in the ritual his place was supposedly taken by the king, worsted in ritual combat, dethroned and humiliated, but subsequently restored to life and power. The king might be regarded as the embodiment of the god (divine kingship) or as his mediatorial representative among the people (sacral kingship). References to the king in the Psalms have been freely interpreted in terms of this hypothesis (e.g. in Ps. 89:38–45 he is ritually vanquished and banished to the underworld; in Ps. 18 he returns thanks for his deliverance from the power of death; in Pss. 2 and 110 he is reinstated on his throne). That the kingship of Yahweh was festally celebrated in Israel is certain: "God has gone up with a shout; Yahweh with the sound of a trumpet" (Ps. 47:5) points to some action suitable to the words. But it is much more likely that in such a celebration the sacred ark, not the king, represented the divine presence.

In a more general way, the narrative of Exod. 1–15 has been viewed as the "story" accompanying and explaining the annual passover meal (cf. J. Pedersen, Israel III–IV, 1940, 726); but if so, the story is not a seasonal myth but the record of a deliverance accomplished once in Israel's national history and annually commemorated thereafter, so that successive generations might "re-live" the event. (We may compare the reading or recitation of part of the passion narrative in the course of the holy communion; that is the story which explains the commemorative action.)

In LXX mythos appears very seldom, and never in books translated from the Hebrew Bible. In Sir. 20:19 (in a section for which no Heb. text is extant) an ungracious man is compared to "a story told at the wrong time [mythos akairos], which is continually on the lips of the ignorant." In Bar. 3:23 "the story-tellers [mythologoi] and the seekers for understanding have not learned the way to wisdom". In both these places the word has its most general sense of "story". In Wis. 17:4(A) mythos appears as a meaningless scribal error for mychos, inner chamber ("not even the inner chamber that held them protected them from fear").

NT In NT mythos is found only in the Pastoral Epistles and 2 Peter, and always in a disparaging sense. Timothy is told to forbid "certain persons" at Ephesus to "occupy themselves with myths and endless genealogies which promote speculations" (1 Tim. 1:4). Irenaeus (Haer. 1, praef.), followed by Tertullian (De praescr.

7; 33; Adv.Val. 3) supposed this to be a reference to the cosmological genealogies of Valentinianism. The context of the Pastorals, however, suggests a Jewish element in these myths; cf. the injunction to "avoid stupid controversies, genealogies, dissensions, and quarrels over the law" (Tit. 3:9). Perhaps a mixture of Jewish and incipient gnostic speculation is indicated, as in the mythical Ophite genealogies mentioned by Irenaeus (Haer. 1, 30, 9). The "profane and old wives' fables" (mythoi) of 1 Tim. 4:7 (so AV; RSV has the less colourful "godless and silly myths") are probably of the same sort (cf. Plato, Rep. 1, 350c, tais grausi tais tous mythous legousais, "the old women who tell fables"), as are the "myths" into which hearers with "itching ears" are led astray by false teachers (2 Tim. 4:4) or the "Jewish myths" to which the Cretan Christians must be admonished to turn a deaf ear (Tit. 3:14). These myths are set in contrast to "the truth"; they are subversive of sound faith. The gospel belongs to quite a different category: it is a record of fact, for "we did not follow cleverly devised myths when we made known to you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but we were eyewitnesses . . ." (2 Pet. 1:16).

A new aspect of myth in relation to NT story was opened up with the launching in 1941 of the "demythologizing programme" specially associated with the name of R. Bultmann (see bibliography). Bultmann's thesis, in brief, is that if the gospel is to make its proper impact today, it must be freed from those features which belong to the world-view of the culture in which it was first preached and presented in terms which will expose the hearers immediately to its challenge and its "offence". These dispensable features include not only the three-decker universe but the concept of our world as open to invasion by transcendent powers – including such credal elements as the pre-existent Christ, his being sent into this world by the Father, his historical resurrection, and the personal activity of the Holy Spirit. Such demythologizing, Bultmann believes, is a necessary continuation of the work of the Reformers: security based on good works and security based on objectifying knowledge are alike inimical to the gospel of justification by faith alone. Demythologizing is naturally a negative process, and to list the negative features of Bultmann's programme may give a distorted impression of his intention, which must be seen from the perspective of his theology as a whole.

One form of demythologizing was practised by the NT writers themselves. When Paul demoted the "principalities and powers" which dominated the lives of men and women without Christ to the status of "weak and beggarly elemental spirits" (Gal. 4:9), conquered and bound by Christ who liberates their former captives (Col. 2:15), he was in effect demythologizing them; we may compare the reinterpretation of the traditional Antichrist in 1 John 2:18 in terms of the false teachers of John's day.

Many of the NT elements designated mythological by the demythologizing school are related by it to a redeemer-myth held to have originated in Iranian religion (in which the part of the redeemer was taken by Gayomart, the primal man) and to have been taken over by gnosticism. In its developed form, this gnostic myth portrays a heavenly essence which falls from the upper realm of light into the lower world of material darkness where it is imprisoned in a multitude of earthly bodies. To liberate it from its imprisonment a saviour comes from the realm of light, who accomplishes his mission by the impartation of true → knowledge (gnōsis). By the acceptance of this true knowledge from one who is both redeemer and revealer, the pure essence attains release from the bonds of matter and re-ascends to its proper abode.

This gnostic myth appears in its most lucid form in the Mandaean literature, which, however, is several centuries later than the NT documents. Even the Iranian redeemer-myth presumed to lie behind it is not attested until the 7th century A.D. and later. It is doubtful, indeed, if the primal man of the Iranian tradition and the concept of the redeemer-revealer were ever brought together in the characteristic gnostic myth except under the influence of the gospel. It is certainly very difficult to find evidence of the gnostic myth in the apostolic age, let alone in pre-Christian times. The most that can be said of the doctrinal deviations attacked in Colossians and 1 John is that they reflect incipient forms of gnosticism.

But forms of the gnostic myth have been recognized not only in deviations attacked in the NT but even more plainly in positive expositions of the gospel. R. Bultmann, who already accepted R. Reitzenstein's case for the pre-Christian dating of the Iranian redeemer-myth, published in 1925 an epoch-making article "Die Bedeutung der neuerschlossenen mandäischen und manichäischen Quellen für das Verständnis des Johannesevangeliums", ZNW 24, 100–146, in which he argued for an affinity between the discourses of the Gospel of John and the Mandaean redeemer-myth – an affinity which could be explained only if the Mandaean texts were primary and the Johannine discourses derivative. This thesis was later elaborated in Bultmann's magisterial commentary on The Gospel of John (1st edition, 1941; E. T. 1971).

Again, H. Schlier, formerly a disciple of Bultmann, maintained in Christus und die Kirche im Epheserbrief (1930) that the Letter to the Ephesians derived some of its dominant motifs from the world of gnostic thought, such as the redeemer's ascent to heaven, the heavenly wall (Eph. 2:14), the heavenly man, the church as the → body of Christ, the body of Christ as a heavenly building, and the heavenly bridal union. (It is a measure of Schlier's departure from the school in which he was brought up that by 1965, in the 5th edition of his commentary, Der Brief an die Epheser, he was able to combine this position with an acceptance of Pauline authorship.) But, as has been said, until more positive evidence of the pre-Christian date of this elaborate myth is forthcoming than hypothetical reconstructions from late Mandaean texts can supply, theses like Bultmann's and Schlier's cannot be regarded as having adequate foundation.

Quite different is the approach of C. Williams, C. S. Lewis and others, who have maintained that in Christianity the ancient myths have come true, that when God became Man, as Lewis put it, "Myth became Fact", so that the aspirations and insights of the human soul which have from ancient times found mythological expression have been given a satisfying answer in the historical events of the gospel.

F. F. Bruce

(a). I. G. Barbour, Myths, Models and Paradigms, 1974; H. W. Bartsch, ed., Kerygma and Myth, E. T., I, 1953; II, 1962; U. Bianchi, ed., Le Origini dello Gnosticismo, 1967; F. F. Bruce, "Myth and History", in C. Brown, ed., History, Criticism and Faith, 1976, 79–100; R. Bultmann, "New Testament and Mythology" (1941) in Bartsch, op. cit., I, 1–44; Jesus Christ and Mythology, 1960; D. Cairns, A Gospel without Myth, 1960; B. S. Childs, Myth and Reality in the Old Testament, SBT 27, 1962²; F. L. Cross, ed., The Jung Codex, 1955; A. Cunningham, The Theory of Myth, 1974; F. W.

Dillistone, ed., Myth and Symbol, SPCK Theological Collections 7, 1966; J. S. Dunne, The City of the Gods, 1974; I. Engnell, Studies in Divine Kingship in the Ancient Near East, 1967²; T. Fawcett, Hebrew Myth and Christian Gospel, 1973; H. Frankfort, Kingship and the Gods, 1948; H. Frankfort and others, Before Philosophy, 1946; T. H. Gaster, Thespis, 1950; F. Gogarten, Demythologizing and History, 1955; H. Harris, David Friedrich Strauss and his Theology, 1973; and The Tübingen School, 1975; I. Henderson, Myth in the New Testament, 1952; S. H. Hooke, The Origins of Early Semitic Ritual, 1935; Middle Eastern Mythology, 1963; S. H. Hooke, ed., Myth and Ritual, 1933; The Labyrinth, 1935; Myth, Ritual and Kingship, 1958; A. R. Johnson, Sacral Kingship in Ancient Israel, 1967²; R. A. Johnson, The Origins of Demythologizing: Philosophy and Historiography in the Theology of Rudolf Bultmann, Studies in the History of Religions, Supplements to Numen, 28, 1974; W. Johnstone, "The Mythologizing of History in the Old Testament", SJT 24, 1971, 201–17; H. Jonas, The Gnostic Religion, 1958; G. V. Jones, Christology and Myth in the New Testament, 1956; C. W. Kegley, ed., The Theology of Rudolf Bultmann, 1966; M. T. Kelsey, Myth, History and Faith, 1974; C. S. Lewis, Till we have Faces, 1956; "Is Theology Poetry?" in Screwtape Proposes a Toast and Other Pieces, 1965, 41–58; J. Macquarrie, The Scope of Demythologizing, 1960; A. Malet, The Thought of Rudolf Bultmann, 1969; L. Malevez, The Christian Message and Myth, 1958; G. Miegge, Gospel and Myth in the Thought of Rudolf Bultmann, 1960; S. M. Ogden, Christ Without Myth, 1962 (cf. D. L. Deegan, "Article Review: Christ Without Myth", SJT 17, 1964, 83–9); W. Pannenberg, "The Later Dimensions of Myth in Biblical and Christian Tradition", Basic Questions in Theology, III, 1972, 1–79; A. S. Peake, Faded Myths, 1908; G. Quispel, "From Mythos to Logos", Eranos Jahrbuch 39, 1970, 323–340; H. Riesenfeld, "The mythological background of New Testament Christology", in W. D. Davies and D. Daube, eds., The Background of the New Testament and its Eschatology, In Honour of Charles Harold Dodd, 1954, 81–95; J. W. Rogerson, Myth in Old Testament Interpretation, BZAW 134, 1974; W. Schmithals, An Introduction to the Theology of Rudolf Bultmann, 1968; G. Stählin, Mythos, TDNT IV, 762–795; J. A. Stewart, The Myths of Plato, 1905; D. F. Strauss, The Life of Jesus Critically Examined, (ET 1846) ed. P. C. Hodgson, 1973; B. H. Throckmorton, The New Testament and Mythology, 1960; P. Tillich, "Myth and Mythology", in Twentieth Century Theology in the Making, ed. J. Pelikan, II, 1970, 342–354; G. Wagner, Pauline Baptism and the Pagan Mysteries, 1967; K. Ward, "Myth and Fact in Christianity", SJT 20, 1967, 385–96; R. McL. Wilson, The Gnostic Problem, 1958; Gnosis and the New Testament, 1968; E. Yamauchi, Pre-Christian Gnosticism, 1973; varii, La Regalità Sacrà/The Sacral Kingship, 1959.

(b). G. Backhaus, Kerygma und Mythos bei David Friedrich Strauss und Rudolf Bultmann, 1956; P. Barthel, Interprétation du Langage Mythique et Théologie Biblique: Étude de Quelques Étapes de l'Evolution du Problème de l'Interprétation des Représentations d'Origine et de Structure Mythiques de la Foi Chrétienne, 1967; G. Bornkamm, Mythus und Legende in den apokryphen Thomasakten, 1933; R. Bultmann, "Die Bedeutung der neuerschlossenen mandäischen und manichäischen Quellen für das Verständnis des Johannesevangeliums", ZNW 24, 1925, 100–146; C. Colpe, Die religionsgeschichtliche Schule, 1961; C. Hartlich and W. Sachs, Der Ursprung des Mythosbegriffes in der modernen Bibelwissenschaft, Schriften der Studiengemeinschaft der evangelischen Akademien 2, 1952; H. W. Hässig, Wörterbuch der Mythologie, I–II, 1973; K. Reinhardt, Platons Mythen, 1927; R. Reitzenstein, Die hellenistischen Mysterienreligionen, 1910; Das iranische Erlösungsmysterium, 1921; H. Schlier, Christus und die Kirche im Epheserbrief, 1930; J. Sløk, J. Haekel, S. Mowinckel, R. Bultmann, E. Fuchs and H. Meyer, "Mythos und Mythologie", *RGG*³ III, 1263–1283; G. Widengren, Sakrales Königtum im Alten Testament und im Judentum, 1955.

N

Name

ὄνομα

ὄνομα (onoma), name; ὀνομάζω (onomazō), to call, name; ἐπονομάζω (eponomazō), call by a name, give a surname; ψευδώνυμος (pseudōnymos), bearing a false name.

CL onoma, from the Indo-Germanic *(e)nomn- (cf. Lat. nomen), means name.

Derived from the noun are two vbs.: (1) onomazō, name, specify, designate, tell, express, indicate, assent, promise; and (2) eponomazō, apply a word as a name, denominate, give a second name or surname, nickname. pseudōnymos, formed from the addition of pseud-, false, means bearing a false name; or falsely, incorrectly, inappropriately named.

1. In the faith and thought of virtually every nation the name is inextricably bound up with the person, whether of a man, a god, or a demon. Anyone who knows the name of a being can exert power over it. In → magic the potential energy which resides in the name can be translated into effective power if the name is mentioned or used in an oath (details in K. Preisendanz, Papyri Graecae Magicae, I–III, 1928–42; see also TDNT V 250 ff.).

In the Gk. thought of the 5th and 6th cents. B.C. the question arose of the relationship between the name and the thing or being so named. Among the Sophists, the prevalent opinion was that the name did not belong to things by nature. In the Cratylus Plato was concerned with problems of linguistic philosophy: in what relationship do words and things, concepts and thought stand to one another? For Plato, words are phonetic symbols, which receive their meaning through custom, general agreement and thought, and are thus of little relevance for true knowledge. The Stoics declared that speech originated by physical necessity (physei) in the → soul of man, and that words represented things in accordance with their nature; as regarded content, the spoken word, the concept and the object itself were all alike (TDNT V 248). This opinion was very widely held later on.

The discussions of the names of the gods were important for the relationship between language and its object. Hesiod had already tried to find the key to the nature of the gods from the etymology of their names. The names of the gods were viewed as "verbal cult-pictures" (Democritus, Frag. 142, in Diels-Kranz[5] I, 170, 9). The aspect of the terrible and unapproachable was thus appropriate for them (Plato, Philebus 12c; Cratylus 403a). Others, such as Menander and Aristides, represent the view-point that the higher a god stood, the more names he had. Alternatively, the Stoics attempted to overcome polytheism by transferring all the many names to one god, Zeus: here, the plurality of names expressed fullness of being. But the many names of the god of the universe can be transmuted into namelessness, in that no name does justice to the fullness of the godhead. This line of thought has continued right up to modern times (cf. Goethe's Faust, "Who may name him?"). The magical phrases and formulae found on the papyri of late antiquity reveal the belief in the power and effectiveness of the names of gods and demons.

OT The Heb. šēm appears some 770 times in the OT, the Gk. onoma in over 1000 references in the LXX.

1. The Israelites were also well aware of the significance of personal and proper names. The best-known example is that of Nabal, who is a fool, as his name suggests (1 Sam. 25:25). In this context belong also the numerous (national) etymological interpretations which are offered where people and places are given names: Eve, "the mother of all living" (Gen. 3:20; → Adam, art. Heua); Cain, "I have gotten a man with the help of the Lord", cf. qānâh, get (Gen. 4:1); Babel, "because the Lord confused the language of all the earth", cf. bālal, confuse (Gen. 11:9; → Babylon). The name Isaac is a reminder of his parents' laughter (Gen. 17:17; 18:12; → Abraham, art. Isaak); Jacob holds the heel (Gen. 29:31 ff. → Israel, art. Iakōb). To give a name is, in addition, to exercise lordship and dominion: cf. that of Adam over the animals in Gen. 2:19 f.; over a town in 2 Sam. 12:28; and over a land in Ps. 49:11. Women long to take the name of a man, and so to become his possession and enjoy his protection (Isa. 4:1). As the one who gives names to the stars, Yahweh is their Creator and Lord (Ps. 147:4); in the same way he calls → Israel by name and makes him his possession (Isa. 43:1; 63:19). Absalom, who has no son to perpetuate his name, erects a monument as a memorial to his name (2 Sam. 18:18).

Changes of name also testify to their significance (Gen. 41:45; 2 Ki. 23:34). Even Yahweh can undertake to change someone's name, when he gives his chosen ones a new importance in their own situation or for the future. Thus Abram becomes → Abraham, the father of many nations (Gen. 17:5); Jacob becomes → Israel, because he has fought with God (Gen. 32:28). Abraham's name, and also the names of Ephraim and Manasseh, have an importance over and above the actual bearers of the name (Gen. 48:20). Jerusalem receives a new name in the last days (Isa. 62:2); Isaiah gives his children symbolic names (Isa. 7:3; 8:3); and the names of the bearers of salvation are a guarantee of Yahweh's grace (Isa. 7:14; Zech. 6:12).

2. Of primary significance is the name of Yahweh, which he himself made known in his revelation (Gen. 17:1; Exod. 3:14; 6:2; → God, art. theos OT 2). One of the most fundamental and essential features of the biblical revelation is the fact that God is not without a name: he has a personal name, by which he can, and is to be, invoked. When appeal is made to Yahweh, he comes near and makes his promise true: "in every place where I cause my name to be remembered I will come to you and bless you" (Exod. 20:24; cf. Num. 6:24 ff.; → Remember). Priests and Levites, and even the king, → bless in the name of Yahweh (Num. 6:27; Deut. 10:8; 2 Sam. 6:18). The name of Yahweh, indeed, is such a powerful expression of his personal rule and activity that it can be used as an alternative way of speaking of Yahweh himself (Lev. 18:21; Ps. 7:17; Amos 2:7; Mic. 5:4). It is the side of Yahweh which is turned towards men, in which Yahweh reveals himself. His historical dealings with men in the past (Exod. 3:6, 13, 15), present (Exod. 20:7) and future (Ezek. 25:17; 34:50 et al.) are inextricably bound up with his name. Misuse of this name in → magic or in false oaths (for oaths were accompanied by mention of Yahweh's name; → Swear) is forbidden (Exod. 20:7), for the name of Yahweh is a gift of the revelation which is not at man's disposal (Gen. 17:1; Exod. 3:14; 6:2). The name of Yahweh is committed in trust to Israel: the heathen do not know it (Ps. 79:6). Israel has the task of hallowing it. This takes place in the cult, at sacrifice, in prayer, in blessing and cursing, and also in the holy → war (Ps. 29:8), in other words, in serving Yahweh, and him alone, and in obeying his commands. To take part in the cult-worship of another god therefore involves profanation of the name of Yahweh (Lev. 19:21). The invocation of his name over → Jerusalem (Jer. 25:29), over the → temple (Jer. 7:10) and over the ark (2 Sam. 6:2), consecrating them and associating them with him, is the sole basis of that sanctity (→ Holy).

3. Deut. gives the following answer to the question as to how Israel can have dealings with Yahweh: Yahweh himself dwells in heaven, but he chooses on earth a place where he causes his "name" to dwell (Deut. 12:11; 14:23; cf. 2 Sam. 7:13; 1 Ki. 3:2; 5:17). In that his name dwells in the → temple, Yahweh's presence is itself guaranteed; but only in such a way that even if the temple is profaned, Yahweh's transcendence remains preserved (cf. 1 Ki. 8:13, where Yahweh dwells in thick darkness with 1 Ki. 8:14 ff., where Yahweh's name dwells in the temple). Yahweh's name, like Yahweh himself, remains sovereign.

4. As a result of this, Yahweh's name assumes a powerful and independent existence of its own, although it is naturally still very closely linked with Yahweh himself. Through its mighty sway, the godly experience Yahweh's protection and help (cf. Prov. 18:10; Mal. 1:11; Ps. 54:6). His name almost becomes a hypostasis of Yahweh himself (cf. Pss. 54:1; 89:24; 118:10 ff.). It occupies the place taken in other religions by the cultic image (cf. G. von Rad, Old Testament Theology, I, 1962, 183 f.).

5. In later times Yahweh's name is frequently used in the sense of the "praise" or "glory" of Yahweh (Isa. 26:8; 55:13; Ps. 41:10). Turns of expression, such as "for the sake of Yahweh's name" or "Yahweh is his name" (Exod. 15:3; Isa. 51:15; Jer. 10:16; Amos 4:13; Ps. 23:3), point in the same direction, indicating Yahweh's claim to sovereign authority and glory in the world and amongst those nations to whom Israel makes it known (Isa. 12:4; Ps. 105:1–3). "Indeed in the end Jahweh is to be revealed to the world in such a way that all worship of idols vanishes away, and every knee will bow to his name alone (Zech. XIV. 9; Isa. XLV. 23)" (von Rad, Old Testament Theology, I, 185).

6. (a) The expression "in the name" (Heb. bᵉšēm) occurs very frequently in the OT. Linked with the names of places or people it can mean by name (Jos. 21:9), after the name of (Jdg. 18:29), in the name (1 Ki. 21:8; Est. 3:12), on behalf of (1 Sam. 25:9).

(b) But the phrase appears most often in association with the name of Yahweh, with the primary meaning of calling upon, invoking Yahweh by his name, that is, worshipping him in the cult (cf. Gen. 4:26, 12:8). The formula is also used in order to → swear, to bless (→ Blessing) and to → curse, since by the use of the expression, Yahweh's might is called upon to interpose (Deut. 5:13; 10:8; 2 Sam.

6:18; 2 Ki. 2:24). It means further "on behalf of" Yahweh (Ex. 5:22 f.; Deut. 18:18 ff.). The appeal of false prophets to Yahweh is illegitimate, for they have received neither their commission nor their words from him (Deut. 18:20; Jer. 14:14 f.; 23:25; 29:9),

7. Philo, speaking in connection with Exod. 3:14 (LXX), and influenced by Stoic philosophy, says that God is the Existent One; being belongs to him alone as of right. But this cannot be uttered, and so God's real name never reaches men. God says to Moses, "For me, to whom alone belongs Being as of right, there is absolutely no name which fits my nature" (Vit.Mos. 1, 75). To men came only the name kyrios ho theos, the Lord God (Mut.Nom. 11 f.). Men can invoke God only with the relative name of "the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob" (Abr. 51). For Philo, in total opposition to the OT, God has no personal name. The words theos God, and kyrios, Lord, according to Philo merely indicate powers in God: "Lord" the power of lordship and "God" the power of grace. Philo's opinion that the power of Being has many names is also Stoic (Som. 2, 354). But one must still hallow even the purely relative names of God, which do not designate his essential Being; one must beware of misusing, of blaspheming these names, and of using awful and terrible names (Spec.Leg. 4, 40; 2, 8; Decal. 93 f.).

8. It is possible that Josephus, who was a priest, could have known the Heb. name Yahweh, but he never uses it. He does not even use the Gk. kyrios, Lord, which was used in Hellenistic Judaism to translate Yahweh. This shows the extent to which, already in Josephus, fear of uttering the name of God had gone. Instead, he uses onoma, and has a predilection for prosēgoria, address, appellation, title, even where Yahweh's name is under consideration. Thus he writes that on the headband of the High Priest the prosēgoria, address, appellation, of God is engraved (Ant. 3, 7, 6; cf. Exod. 38:36 f.). In another place he speaks in the same context of the onoma of God, to which Alexander the Great rendered worship (Ant. 11, 8, 5). This oscillation between the two words can also be seen in his rendering of Exod. 3, where he adds that he is not allowed to say anything at all about the name (Ant. 2, 12, 4 f.). According to Josephus, the name of God does not dwell in the temple either, but only a portion of God's spirit (Ant. 8, 4, 3). Israel's temple is the epōnymon of God, i.e. it bears God's name, like coins which are thus shown to belong to him, and like heathen temples which bear the names of their gods (Ant. 16, 2, 3; 4, 8, 10). It does not necessarily mean that it was the name of Yahweh when it says that they called on "the awful name of God" (War 5, 10, 3).

9. The Qumran writings follow exactly the same paths as the OT, as far as the use of the name of God is concerned. Names figure largely in the War Scroll (cf. 1QM 2:6; 3:4, 13 ff.; 4:1–13; 5:1 ff.; 11:2 f., 12:2; 13:7; 14:4, 8, 12; 18:6, 8) and the Hymns (cf. 1QH 1:30; 2:30; 3:23; 9:38; 11:6, 25; 12:3; 17:20; 18:8). According to Josephus (War 2, 8, 7), the Essenes had to swear, amongst other things, to keep the names of the angels secret.

10. Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha. The account in Gen. 6 of the fall of the angels occupied people's imagination. In Eth.Enoch 6:7 it took the form that the names of the "leaders of tens" (i.e. → angels) were given names. Heb. Enoch is largely an angelology, a tract in which the names of innumerable angels are communicated. In 2 Esd. 7:132–139 seven names of God are mentioned: he is the Compassionate, the Gracious, the Forbearing, the Generous, the Merciful, the Noble, the Forgiving. The remarkable thought appears in Eth.Enoch 69:13–21 that the name of God, by which men swear, is itself the oath, and that that is how the creation was called into being. The name of the Son of man (and thus his person?) is pre-existent (Eth.Enoch 46:7 f.).

11. (a) Among the Rabbis the name is important in the teaching of tradition. One may only pass on a doctrine or tradition if one names (b^{e}šēm, in the name) the authority from whom one has received it (Aboth 6:6). With reference to the NT, the expression l^{e}šēm, "into" the name, is also significant. On the one hand, it is used in a final sense, with the intention that something shall happen. A man may make an offering l^{e}šēm haššēm, "for the name of the name" (i.e. for Yahweh), i.e. one offers a sacrifice to Yahweh. A freed slave takes a ritual dip in the bath "to the name of the free man", in order to become a free man. A proselyte is circumcised "to the name of the proselyte" to become a Jew. On the other hand, the expression is used in a causal sense: e.g. l^{e}šēm šāmayim, "on account of the name of heaven", i.e. for God's sake (cf. Matt. 10:41; Mk. 9:42).

(b) The name of Yahweh is avoided if at all possible (cf. Josephus), to avoid infringing the third commandment (Exod. 20:7; → Lord, art. kyrios). According to one old story, after the death of Simon the Just (c. 200 B.C.) the priests discontinued uttering Yahweh's name in blessings (T.Sot. 13, 8). In the temple cult Yahweh's name was still used in the High Priest's blessing on the Day of Atonement; but in scriptural quotations the word Yahweh came to be replaced by šēm, name, in the teaching schools. So the tetragrammaton YHWH ceased to be used and its pronunciation was forgotten. The consequence was that the name of God became a secret name which was used as a means of magical power, particularly in the piety of the lower strata of society. In addition to the existent name of God composed of four letters, other such names were known, consisting of 13, 43 or even 72 letters.

NT In the NT onoma occurs 228 times, most commonly relatively in Lk. (34 times in the Gospel; 60 times in Acts) and Rev. (37 times). eponomazō, commonly used in ancient writings, is found only once in the NT (Rom. 2:17), pseudōnymos only in 1 Tim. 6:20. onoma in the NT also means reputation (Mk. 6:14; Rev. 3:1) and person (Acts 1:15; Rev. 3:4; 11:13).

1. Names of men and other beings. The names of the Twelve Apostles on the foundation-stones of the new → Jerusalem (Rev. 21:14), and the names of the twelve tribes of Israel on its gates (Rev. 21:12) proclaim the final unity of the old and the new people of God. Jesus proves himself to be the Good → Shepherd by calling his sheep by name and knowing them personally (Jn. 10:3). In giving his → disciples new names, he draws them in a special way into his service (Matt. 10:2 ff.; Mk. 3:16 ff.; Lk. 6:14 ff.). On the name of Peter → Rock, art. petros. Mk. 3:17 mentions "James the son of Zebedee and John the brother of James, whom he surnamed Boanerges [Boanērges], that is, sons of thunder." Some MSS apply the name Boanerges to all the twelve, but this is too weakly attested to be likely. The word is probably an attempt to transliterate an Aramaic or Heb. phrase. Boanē- evidently represents b^{e}nê (sons of). The ending -rges is not the ordinary word for thunder, but it may represent Heb. rōgez (agitation, excitement, raging;

cf. Job 37:2 of thunder); Aram. rᵉgāz (anger); or Heb. regeš (throng; cf. Ps. 55:14[15]; in later Heb. commotion, vibration; cf. Aram. rigšā', noise). The Arabic word related to regeš means thunder. Although J. Rendel Harris suggested that the reference was to their being twins (Expositor 7, Series 3, 1907, 146 ff.; ExpT 36, 1934–25, 139), the more likely explanation is to be found in the outbursts that are related in Mk. 9:38 and Lk. 9:54. As Peter's name means rock and thus contains a promise, perhaps there is also the implied promise that their witness will be as mighty as thunder (C. E. B. Cranfield, The Gospel according to Saint Mark, 1959, 131). The fact that the names of the disciples are written in heaven (Lk. 10:21) means that they belong to God and to his kingdom (Rev. 3:5). The new name which the victor receives expresses his inalienable fellowship with Christ himself (Rev. 2:17).

Evil spirits have names, too, which predicate something of their nature or power (Mk. 5:9). Thus, the "beast" in Rev. 13:1 (→ Animal, art. thērion; → Antichrist) bears blasphemous names, i.e. he is given names and honorific titles which belong to God or Christ alone. His name is contained in a → number (Rev. 13:17 ff.), and his adherents also bear it (Rev. 13:17; 15:2). The name of the "great harlot" (Rev. 17:1, cf. v. 3), "Babylon the great, mother of harlots and of earth's abominations" (Rev. 17:5), stands in contrast to the woman of Rev. 12 who bears the male child and who is the mother of all the faithful (cf. 12:4 f. with v. 17).

2. The name of God. God's name belongs with his → revelation: God as person turns to the person of man. God reveals himself as the loving Father, in glorifying his name in Jesus' saving work (Jn. 17:12, 26). It accords with this that Jesus, and he alone, reveals the name of God as the name of the Father to men (Jn. 17:6). In Jn. 12:28 → "Father", "glorify" (→ Glory) and "name" are closely bound together. That the disciples are "kept in the name of God" indicates that they live in the sphere of an effective power, which protects them from ruin and unites them with each other (Jn. 17:11 f.). The goal of the proclamation of the name of God as Father is that the love of the Father for the Son is also to be found in believers (Jn. 17:26). In these affirmations of John's Gospel, and above all in those of the High Priestly Prayer of Jesus (ch. 17), we have the christological interpretation of the OT affirmations concerning the name of Yahweh. The Fourth Gospel thus picks up and follows through the lines of the ancient biblical tradition, that God's revelation is bound to a personal name – to → Jesus Christ (cf. on this Matt. 11:27 and 28:18 with Jn. 3:35; 5:20; 13:3; 7:29; 10:15; 17:25).

Jesus thus acts in the name of, and on behalf of, God in fulfilment of his will and as proof of his sonship (Mk. 11:19 f.; Jn. 10:24 f.). At his parousia he will come "in the name of the Lord" (Matt. 23:39). When the name of God is conjoined with that of the Son and of the Holy Spirit it assumes the character of completeness and fullness (Matt. 28:19); this is trinitarian thought, even if a precise trinitarian formula is lacking (on this → God, art. theos NT 8). The first request of the Lord's Prayer concerns the hallowing of God's name (Matt. 6:9; cf. Isa. 29:23; Ezek. 36:23; → Holy, art. hagios NT 1 (c)). In the → kingdom of God, God's name is no longer profaned through sin. God is asked in prayer to further the hallowing of his name himself, and to bring in his kingdom. A man who despises God's will and commands, or a Christian slave who is disobedient to his master is, in effect, slandering God's name (Rom. 2:24; 1 Tim. 6:1). The beast in

Rev. 13:6 also reviles the name of God and his dwelling, as do those who suffer under the plagues of the last days (Rev. 16:9).

3. The name of Jesus. (a) The significance of Jesus' life and activity is evident in his name (Matt. 1:21; → Jesus art. Iēsous; on Emmanuel in Matt. 1:23 → God, art. Emmanouēl). He bears the sublime name of → Son (Heb. 1:4 f.). His name is "the Word of God" (Rev. 19:13; cf. Jn. 1:1). God's name of → Lord also becomes his name (Phil. 2:9 f.; Rev. 19:16). Above and beyond this, he bears a name which he alone knows (Rev. 19:12), "and the name by which he is called is The Word of God" (Rev. 19:13). The name "Jesus" can be replaced simply by "the name" (Acts 5:41; 3 Jn. 7; cf. the Jewish replacement of Yahweh by šēm). The whole content of the saving truth revealed in Jesus is comprised in his name (Acts 4:12; 1 Cor. 6:11). Belief in the name of the Son, i.e. belief in Jesus' messianic mission (Jn. 3:18), is God's command (1 Jn. 3:23; 5:13). Anyone who believes in his name receives → forgiveness of sins (Acts 10:43; 1 Jn. 2:12), has eternal → life (Jn. 20:21; 1 Jn. 5:13) and escapes the judgment (Jn. 3:18). A Christian's whole life is dominated by the name of Jesus (Col. 3:17), whose glorification is the goal of faith (2 Thess. 1:12).

The name of Jesus is the basis of the → proclamation to all nations (Acts 8:12; 9:16; Rom. 1:5). Because of the preaching of Jesus and his work, the authorities at Jerusalem forbad the apostles to preach "on the basis of this name [epi tō onomati toutō]" (Acts 5:17 f.; 5:28, 40). Faith and proclamation include confession of the name (Rev. 2:13; 3:8) and readiness to suffer for his name's sake (Matt. 10:22; 24:9). Faith and faithfulness to Jesus is the same as holding fast to his name (Rev. 2:13; 3:8). The name of Christ contains the implication of glory, and 1 Pet. 4:14 declares: "If you are reproached for the name of Christ you are blessed, because the spirit of glory and of God rests upon you" (cf. Isa. 11:2). Whoever calls on the name of the Lord belongs to the church (Acts 9:14; 1 Cor. 1:2) and is saved (Acts 2:17–21; Rom. 10:13; cf. Joel 2:32). Christians were so called because of this name (Acts 11:26; cf. 26:18; 1 Pet. 4:16). It is the "honourable name" which is given to the followers of Christ (Jas. 2:7). One of the gifts of final perfection is that the victors will bear the name of the → Lamb (Rev. 3:12; 14:1; 22:4).

(b) The formula "in the name of Jesus". God gives the Holy Spirit in the name of Jesus (Jn. 14:26). Thanks are given in that name (Eph. 5:20). The nations place their hope in it (Matt. 12:21; cf. Isa. 42:4). And in his name the congregation prays (Jn. 14:13 f.; 15:16) – that is, according to his will and instruction, in order that the commission may be fulfilled, which Jesus gave to his own. This is the reason why their prayers are heard. Since the disciples are sent out by Jesus they are able to act on behalf of him and in his power, performing miracles and acts of compassion (Lk. 10:17; Mk. 8:38 f.). After Easter, the name of Jesus continues to maintain its power (Acts 3:6; 14:10). Name and "power" (→ Might, art. dynamis) are used parallel to one another (Acts 4:7; 16:18). Jesus himself gives help and is present in his name (Acts 9:34), but not when unbelievers attempt to misuse it in magical exorcisms (Acts 19:13–16; → Magic). Such statements show that the OT manner of speaking of the name of Yahweh has been transferred to Jesus and his name. Because he was called by Jesus, Paul was able to admonish (2 Thess. 3:6; dia, by or through him, 1 Cor. 1:10), and give judgment "in the name of Jesus", as one commissioned and authorized by him (1 Cor. 5:4; 2 Thess. 3:6).

(c) Baptism "in the name of Jesus". The baptismal formula eis to onoma, "in [to] the name", corresponds with the final sense of the expression from the Rab. schools l^ešēm (see above OT 6). The literal meaning is that, → baptism symbolically assigns the person baptized to Christ for forgiveness of sins (Acts 8:16; 19:15; 1 Cor. 1:13, 15; cf. Matt. 28:19). The same meaning can be intended where baptism epi, to, or en, in the name, is spoken of (cf. Acts 2:38; 10:48 with LXX Jos. 9:9; 2 Sam. 22:50; Sir. 47:13; where the original Heb. text has l^ešēm, which would normally be translated eis, to: but LXX renders en or epi). The fullness of Christ's saving work is contained in his name (as Yahweh's saving work was in his) and is present in the church. This is symbolized by the individual's baptism, since he has been caught up into Jesus' death and resurrection (Rom. 6:1–11; Col. 2:12; cf. 2 Cor. 4:10).

4. The vb. onomazō, derived from the noun, occurs in the NT only 9 times. The name and service of an → apostle are traced back to Jesus (Lk. 6:13). A man who bears the name of brother, but lives unworthily of it, is to be denied fellowship (1 Cor. 5:11). The congregation is so detached from sin that it is not even to be named in it, i.e. it is not even to be spoken about (Eph. 5:3; cf. 2 Tim. 2:19). God names every family in heaven and on earth and so is the Father of all (Eph. 3:15; on this passage see 6 below). eponomazō, name after, give a nickname, give a second name, occurs in the NT only at Rom. 2:17: "If you call yourself [eponomazē] a Jew". Here Jew is a title of honour, the heir to the legacy described in vv. 17–20. Paul attacks the inconsistency of claiming to be a Jew and at the same time countenancing sin. The Jews stand under the divine judgment like the Gentiles. The vb. is also found in the v.l. of Lk. 6:14D.

5. pseudōnymos is attested from Aesch. and means bearing a false name. In the NT it occurs only at 1 Tim. 6:20: "Avoid godless chatter and contradictions of what is falsely called knowledge [tēs pseudōnymou gnōseōs]." Paul here warns against a movement which gives the lie to its name and leads from faith into error (cf. v. 21). H. Bietenhard

6. Eph. 3:14 f. probably means that God is "the Father [patēr] from whom every fatherhood [patria] in heaven and on earth is named", the paronomasia being deliberate: "every patria is so named after the patēr" (G. Schrenk, patria, TDNT V 1017). God is the archetypal Father; all other fatherhood is a more or less imperfect copy of his perfect fatherhood. M. Barth, in a full comment on this passage, mentions this among four possible interpretations, but concludes that, because of the lack of evidence for patria in the sense of an "abstract 'fatherhood' " as early as this, "this beautiful exposition can at best be considered a homiletical corollary to 3:15" (Ephesians 1–3, Anchor Bible, 1974, 379–384). But this "unique sense" (Arndt, 642) of patria is not abstract; it is not far removed from its classical sense of "lineage" (cf. Moulton-Milligan, 498). According to Clem.Alex., in what seems to be a reference to this passage, epi ton poiētēn ton theon pasa anatrechei patria, "every lineage [or fatherhood] runs back to God the maker" (Strom. 6, 7). See the excellent treatment by H. Schlier, who argues that God is here called the Father of all fatherhood, as he is called the creator of all things in v. 9, in order to emphasize, against gnostic misrepresentations, that he is Father not only as redeemer but also as creator – creator of angelic patriai in heaven (cf. Eth.En.

69:2 f.) as well as of human patriai on earth (Der Brief an die Epheser, 1957, 167 f.). He mentions the earlier statement of this interpretation by G. Estius, In omnes D. Pauli epistolas . . . commentarii, 1858–59, ad loc. F. F. Bruce

→ God, → Jesus Christ, → Magic

(a). R. Abba, "Name", IDB III 500–8; J. Barr, "The Symbolism of Names in the Old Testament", BJRL 52, 1969–70, 11–29; J. B. Bauer, "Name", EBT II 611 ff.; H. Bietenhard, onoma etc., TDNT V 242–83; B. S. Childs, Memory and Tradition in Israel, SBT 37, 9–30; O. Eissfeldt, "Renaming in the Old Testament", in P. R. Ackroyd and B. Lindars, eds., Words and Meanings: Essays Presented to David Winton Thomas, 1968, 69–80; G. B. Gray, Studies in Hebrew Proper Names, 1896; and "Name", HDB III 478–85; G. Foucart, D. S. Margoliouth, A. T. Clay, J. D. Ball, J. Moffatt, G. B. Gray, L. H. Gray, T. Harada, I. Abrahams, C. J. Billson, S. H. Langdon, E. W. Brooks, "Names", ERE IX 130–78; L. Hartman, "Into the Name of Jesus", NTS 20, 1973–74, 432–40; W. C. Kaiser, Jr., "Name", and "Names, Proper", ZPEB IV 360–70; A. F. Key, "The Giving of Proper Names in the Old Testament", JBL 83, 1964, 55–9; H. Kosmala, "In My Name", Annual of the Swedish Theological Institute, 5, 1966–67, 87 ff.; G. van der Leeuw, Religion in its Essence and Manifestation, 1964² (see index); J. A. MacCulloch, "Nameless Gods", ERE IX 178–81; J. A. Motyer, The Revelation of the Divine Name, 1959; J. Pedersen, Israel: Its Life and Culture, I–II, 1926, 245–59; G. von Rad, "Deuteronomy's 'Name' Theology and the Priestly Document's 'Kabod' Theology", Studies in Deuteronomy, SBT 9, 1953, 37–44; and Old Testament Theology, I, 1962, 197–87; H. H. Rowley, Dictionary of Bible Personal Names, 1968.
(b). A. M. Besnard, Le Mystère du Nom, 1962; H. Bietenhard, "Der Name Gottes in der Bibel", in Das Wort Sie Sollen Stehen Lassen, Schädelin Festschrift, 1950; H. A. Brongers, "Die Wendung *b*ᵉ*sem* YHWH im Alten Testament", ZAW 77, 1965, 1 ff.; G. Delling, Die Zueignung des Heils in der Taufe. Eine Untersuchung zum neutestamentlichen "Taufen auf den Namen", 1961; F. Dumermuth, "Zur deuteronomistischen Kulttheologie und ihren Voraussetzungen", ZAW 70, 1958, 59–98; O. Eissfeldt, "Jahwename und Zauberwesen", Kleine Schriften, II, 1963; J. Fichtner, "Name", EKL II 1499 ff.; O. Grether, Name und Wort Gottes im Alten Testament, BZAW 64, 1934; M. von Grünwald, Die Eigennamen im Alten Testament, 1895; W. Heitmüller, Im Namen Jesu, 1903; S. Herrmann, "Der altestamentliche Gottesname", EvTh 26, 1966, 281 ff.; B. Jacob, Im Namen Gottes, 1903; Mandelkern, II, 1349–1539 (for list of OT proper names); E. Nestle, Die israelitischen Eigennamen nach ihrer religionsgeschichtlichen Bedeutung, 1976; M. Noth, Die israelitischen Personnamen, 1928; W. Philipp, "Name Gottes", *RGG*³ IV 1298 ff.; C. A. Schmitz, K. Baltzer, B. Reicke, "Namenglaube", *RGG*³ IV 1301 ff.; J. J. Stamm, "Namengebung im Alten Testament", *RGG*³ IV 1300 f.; R. de Vaux, "Le lieu que Yahvé a choisi pour y etablir son nom", in Das ferne und nahe Wort, Festschrift L. Rost, BZAW 105, 1967, 219–29.

Nature

φύσις

φύσις (physis), nature, condition, kind, φυσικός (physikos), natural.

CL physis is a word from the Gk. world of ideas. Attested since Homer, it became a key concept among the Pre-Socratic philosophers in considering the nature of the world, and similarly the Sophists in the question of the foundation and basis of law.

The noun physis comes from the vb. phyō, to grow (trans. and intrans.), which is attested as early as Mycenaean Gk. Its root is connected with Lat. fu- and with Ger. bauen (build). The root phy- indicated being or presence.

1. physis denotes source, commencement, origin, descent (e.g. Hdt. 7, 134), and also the lineage of adults or of children (Aristot., Met. 1014ᵇ16; e.g. kata physin hyion, "his son in the line of descent", Polyb., 3, 12, 3). Aristotle (Met.

1014^b 22) regards it as the primal substance compounded from the elements. (On Aristotle see J. C. Owens, "Matter and Predication in Aristotle", in J. M. E. Moravcik, ed., Aristotle: A Collection of Critical Essays, 1968, 191–214.)

2. From the basic understanding of presence and existence due to growth, physis denotes the natural condition, quality or state (e.g. of the air, of blood, or the physical features of a land, Hdt. 2, 7); outward form and appearance (Hdt. 8:38); and stamp or character, e.g. of Solon who was philodēmos tēn physin, "patriotically minded" (Aristoph., Nubes 1187). The sexes (Diod.Sic., 16, 26, 6; Plato, Leg. 944d, 770d), the sex organs and characteristics (Diod.Sic., 32, 10, 7; Hippocrates, Gynaikeia 2, 143) can also be designated by physis. When set alongside ethos, custom, and logos, reason, it means (human) nature (Aristot., Pol. 1332^a 40) or the imperishable – and perishable – nature of existence of the gods (Diod.Sic., 3, 9, 1). ta prōta kata physin, " the first according to nature", is Zeno's description of the mental and spiritual endowment of man. One can read of the koinē physis, the common moral nature of all human beings (Chrysippus in Plut., De Stoicorum Repugnantiis 9, p. 1035c). The famous quotation from Aristot. accords with this: Man is, by virtue of his natural make-up, "a political creature [politikon zōon]" (Aristot., Pol. 1253^a 3). physis can be used both for the bodily physique of individuals, and for the institutions and constitutions of states (Isoc. 12, 134).

3. physis can further denote the → creation, the world of nature, e.g. the creatures who live in the sea (Soph., Antigone 345), and also the individual genera and species within nature (Plato, Rep. 429d).

4. physis is also the efficacious generative power, the charm which causes plants to appear and (e.g.) hair to grow (Hippocrates, Peri physios paidiou 20). physis, as power, and hexis, as bodily constitution, are thus placed alongside each other (Hippocrates, Peri diaitēs oxeōn [notha] 43). This nature is endowed with reason and determined by its end; it produces nothing without purpose or in vain (Aristot, Cael. 291^a33). Aristotle mentions nature and God in the same breath (ibid., 271^b33), distinguishing nature (physis) both from tychē, fate, to automaton, that which takes place of its own accord, and technē, skill (Met. 1070^a8). Aristotle, in fact, developed a complete theory of natural things, of the physeion. For Ionic philosophy, nature is the growth of plants and animals, both as phenomenon in itself, and as the power of growth.

5. physis also stands for the regular order of nature. The unity formulated in the law is contrasted with what has come about or grown in nature. (Antiphon Sophista, 44, A, I, 32). In the natural order of things, all men have come to be in a similar way, despite all the differences between Gks. and barbarians (Antiphon Sophista, 44, B, II, 10). By means of hair, nature distinguishes in its own way between the sexes (Epict., Dissertationes 1, 16, 10). Nature has powers and elements (Corp.Herm. 1, 8). Nature is self-sufficient and strong, as compared with tychē, fate, which is unstable (Democritus, 176). Men's lives are determined by the twin forces of nature and laws (Dem., 25, 15). This order fixes the natural end of life (Plut., Vit., Comparatio Demosthenis et Ciceronis). Nature, fate and necessity are thus in control of one's existence (Philodemus, De Pietate 12).

Among the Stoics, physis became a god of the universe, as in the famous quotation from Marcus Aurelius, ō physis, ek sou panta, en soi panta, eis se panta, "O Nature, from you comes everything, in you is everything, to you goes everything"

(4, 23). Of importance for the Stoic ethos is the assertion of Chrysippus (SVF III, 5) that one should akolouthōs tē physei zēn "live by following [by keeping close to] nature." The distinction between nature and law as two different entities by which one's life is determined was sharply perceived at an early date in Gk. thought. Reference may be made to the Archelaus-fragment (Diels-Kranz, II, 45, 6): kai to dikaion einai kai to aischron ou physei, alla nomō, "Justice and disgrace exist not by nature but by law," i.e. it falls into the sphere of law, not of nature. Nature is here conceived of as that which is in harmony, good in itself and resting, and thus distinguished from the field of morals and ethics.

OT 1. There is no Heb. equivalent in the OT for physis. The Hebrews lacked the Greek conception of nature. This is connected both with the fact that all existing things are referred to the → creation or to the Creator God, and also with the stronger historical thought of the OT. In the LXX physis occurs only in Wis. (three times) and in 3 and 4 Macc.

(a) It is used in the sense of endowment and character (alongside virtue and communal living, 4 Macc. 13:27); it can indicate a quality, such as the power of love for one's children (4 Macc. 16:3), and also for instance (with reference to material objects) the fire-extinguishing property of water (Wis. 19:20b). physei, by nature, fundamentally, all men are foolish (Wis. 13:1).

(b) 4 Macc. 5:25 speaks of the law being adapted to our nature: "for believing our Law to be given by God, we know also that the Creator of the world, as a Lawgiver, feels for us according to our nature. He has commanded us to eat the things that will be convenient for our souls, and he has forbidden us to eat meats that would be contrary."

(c) In 4 Macc. 15:25, where physis stands alongside genesis, creation, and philoteknia, filial love, it denotes the regular order of nature. In 3 Macc. 3:29 it means created beings, the whole world of creation, including man. In 4 Macc. 1:20, linked with physeis pathōn, growths of instinct, human characteristics are in mind. But in Wis. 7:20 it refers to species of living beings. Nature is also spoken of as seen as a dispenser of good things: "Truly it is folly not to enjoy innocent pleasures, and it is wrong to reject Nature's favours" (4 Macc. 5:8).

2. Philo was probably the first to take over the word consciously. But at the same time he modified it, in order to utilize it to expound the Jewish faith in its strength and breadth.

(a) It goes without saying that for Philo God stands in the foreground. physis is now no longer itself the origin or the creative power; it is an agent of the divine activity. God has bound bodies into a context, that of nature (in this case, vital energy), and that of the → soul and man's rational soul (Deus Imm. 35). This vital energy consists of powers which vary and increase (ibid. 37). The soul is a vital energy which has assumed to itself conceptional potential and motion (Leg.All., 2, 23).

(b) This physis which belongs to God is that which brings forth, e.g. all men (Decal. 41). It is immortal (Sacr. 100). It teaches the division of time into day and night, waking and sleeping, and it creates space, which remains confined to three dimensions (Decal. 25). It reveals man to be the one who disposes over plants and animals; it has given man speech (Spec.Leg. 2, 6; Rer.Div.Her. 302) and sexual relations (Abr. 248).

Philo, in fact, ascribes to physis much of what, from the OT point of view, is the → work of God. Nature, like wisdom, according to Philo, is a power which participates in God's work of creation. For Philo, nature is God, tris makaria physis, "thrice-blessed nature" (Spec.Leg. 4, 123; cf. Abr. 87), but the converse is not true. God himself stands outside material nature (Migr.Abr. 192) in so far as nature is understood as the totality of natural phenomena and forces.

(c) Philo interprets the regular order of nature in the same way. He can describe the nomos, the → law, as the orthos physeōs logos, "the true word of nature" (Omn.Prob.Lib. 62), because the law follows nature (Virt. 18), and because the prescriptions of the law are in agreement with nature (Virt. 5). They are themselves sealed with nature's own seals (Vit.Mos. 2, 14). That is why one must follow nature and its developments (Spec.Leg. 2, 42; similarly Omn.Prob.Lib. 160). Nature ratifies the law: this is the sole foundation on which the world is built.

(d) physis is used to designate the being and natural condition of things, e.g. of the elements (Som. 1, 33). It can also refer to the being of God (Plant. 91), or the (twofold) properties of light (Abr. 157).

(e) physis in either the masc. or the fem. (Spec.Leg. 2, 27) can denote the nature of man, which is compounded from mortal and immortal elements (Praem. 13). Philo regards nature as capable of receiving virtue (Post.C. 150); conscience makes use of it, because it hates evil and loves good (Decal. 87). To nature belong godliness and love of mankind (Abr. 208). Philo thus likes to link physis with askēsis and mathēsis, practice and learning (Som. 1, 1967; Praem. 65).

(f) The formula "by nature", "contrary to nature", "according to nature" is found very frequently. The body is by nature (physei, or ek physeōs) firm (Op. Mund. 36). A regulation can be in accordance with nature (kata physin, Aet. Mund. 34). Things can be compelled to come together contrary to nature (para physin, Aet.Mund. 28).

(g) Finally, physis denotes the world of creation, including the high and pure (Leg.All. 3, 162), the mortal and the immortal (Decal. 101), the earthly and the perishable (Leg.All. 2, 89), the divine and the human (Spec.Leg. 2, 225), the rational and the irrational (Fug. 72).

3. Josephus has similarly taken over and adopted in large measure this Gk. concept to his Jewish outlook. physis in Josephus stands for:

(a) The condition and characteristics of animals and humans (War 2, 8, 1), and of natural self-love (Ant, 5, 5, 4; 5, 6, 3). It is almost synonymous with character. Josephus can speak of physis which is chrēstē, dikaia, eusebēs, a nature which is good, righteous and religious (Ant. 9, 13, 1). The opposite is an unjust, evil disposition (Ant. 10, 5, 2). It can also denote the being of God (Ant. cf. Preface with 4, 8, 26; 8, 13, 5; 10, 8, 3; Ap. 1, 224) or of all things, tōn holōn physis (Ant. Preface; 3, 6, 4), or of the elements (Ant. 3, 7, 7).

(b) Natural qualities. Thus suicide is foreign to the common nature of all living beings (War 3, 8, 5). It can also mean the natural situation of a place (e.g. of the citadel of Alexander Janneus, War 7, 6, 2), and bodily physique (Ant. 6, 9, 1).

(c) The regular order of nature and its laws (War 3, 8, 5), juxtaposition of divine and natural law (Ant. 4, 8, 48).

(d) Nature as a whole (Ant. 1, 3, 2), the whole created world (War 7, 5, 5), natural instincts (Ant. 7, 7, 1). Thus a person can be active by nature (War 1, 10, 5), or naturally freedom-loving (War 4, 4, 3). A place can lack a natural harbour (War 3, 9, 3). On the other hand, sexual deviations are para physin, contrary to nature (Ap. 273, 275).

NT The majority of instances of physis in the NT is to be found in Paul or more precisely in Romans (7 times; also 2 instances of the adj. physikos); the word occurs otherwise only in isolated passages: in 1 Cor., Gal., Eph., Jas. and 2 Pet. It is found with the following shades of meaning which correspond to the previous usage of the word.

1. The use of the word in Gal. 2:15, physei Ioudaioi, "Jews by birth", is like that of Philo and Josephus, meaning descent, extraction. Rom. 2:27 corresponds with this: hē ek physeōs akrobystia, lit. "the uncircumcision by nature", i.e. those who remain physically uncircumcised from birth: the line of descent is the reason why someone has not received circumcision. But Paul also says that such a man fulfils the law and so performs God's will (by nature?) without belonging to → Israel. (On the interpretation of this passage → see further 2 below.)

God will not spare the wild olive shoot (the Gentile Christians) if he did not spare the branches which belonged to the rich → olive tree kata physin, by nature, in the natural way (Rom. 11:21). This use of physis is found once more in the same parable: the wild olive shoot is cut from the wild olive tree to which it belongs kata physin, by nature, and grafted para physin, contrary to nature, into the cultivated olive tree. Paul's argument a minore ad maius concludes: how much more can the olive branches which belong to the rich olive tree by nature be grafted back (again) into their own olive tree (Rom. 11:24). Paul is here following Hellenistic linguistic usage, such as we met in Philo and Josephus, with reference to the distinction between Jews and non-Jews. The heathen are, as sinners and as transgressors of the first commandment by nature, by descent (physei) children of wrath (Eph. 2:3; cf. Wis. 13:1). But this situation is ended by the → grace of Christ in the lives of those whom God has made alive (Eph. 2:5–10).

2. physis stands further for the regular order of nature, which determines the distinction between the sexes. God has given up the idolaters, so that they have exchanged natural (physikēn) sexual intercourse between man and woman for unnatural (para physin, Rom. 1:26). But there are heathen who do not have the Torah but who do what the law demands physei, by nature, in so far as they live in accordance with their own nature. It is not as if they read off the law from the natural order – rather this reveals itself in them to be a power which brings its own realization, as their lives and actions show; their deeds prove the law of morality to be at work in their lives. As those who fulfil the law, they become a law to themselves (Rom. 2:27), they fulfil the law which they themselves are by nature under the protection of the natural order. We are dealing here (see above OT 2 (c)) with the typically Stoic thought of the moral law founded in nature, which was taken over by Judaism and applied to the Torah. In this way the Mosaic law becomes the universal perfect expression of the moral law founded in nature (H. Lietzmann, HNT 8, excursus on Rom. 2:14–16). Law and universe are in common agreement and harmony (cf. Philo, Op.Mund. 3, Abr. 5). ([Ed.] For an alternative interpretation of this passage which sees it as a description of what actually has come to pass among Gentile believers in fulfilment of the promise of the new covenant [Jer. 31:31 ff.] → God, art. theos, NT 4 (b).)

Paul's prescription concerning coiffure is thus not based only on the scriptures, nor solely on Haggadah, but also on Stoic thought: nature teaches that it is degrading for a man, but a source of pride for a woman, to have long hair (1 Cor. 11:14; → Head).

3. The word occurs in 2 Pet. which can even speak of believers as partakers of the divine nature: "by which he has granted to us his precious and very great promises, that through these you may escape from the corruption that is in the world because of passion, and become partakers of the divine nature [theias koinōnoi physeōs]" (2 Pet. 1:4). This is seen as a result of the → "knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ" (1:8; cf. v. 3) and → "election" (1:10). The thought is evidently not that of a metamorphosis into quasi-deity, for the results of this participation are expressed in positive human qualities. It is rather that to be truly human one needs an enabling which comes from God himself. The teaching is comparable with Paul's teaching on the → new → creation and the teaching in John on being born again (→ Birth, art. gennaō). As with being born again in Jn. 3:3, 5, participation in the divine nature and its outworking in life are prerequisite for "entrance into the eternal kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ" (2 Pet. 1:11). In contrast to the divine nature stands the use of the adj. physikos which is applied to man in his natural state. The result is the diametrical opposite in both quality of life and outcome: "But these, like irrational animals, creatures of instinct, born to be caught and killed [aloga zōa gegennēmena physika eis halōsin kai phthoran], reviling in matters of which they are ignorant, will be destroyed in the same destruction with them" (2 Pet. 2:12). The corresponding adv. occurs only once in the NT in a passage which may be dependent on the latter passage: "But these men revile whatever they do not understand, and by those things that they know by instinct [physikōs] as irrational animals do, they are destroyed" (Jude 10). The thought of 2 Pet. 1:4 may be compared with the formulation of Athanasius: "For he became man that we might become divine [autos gar enēnthrōpēsen, hina hēmeis theopoiēthōmen]" (De Incarnatione 54, which was written some time before A.D. 323). Here the thought is not that man is transformed into the deity, but that man is enabled to share in immortality through the incarnation of the Word of God.

4. Jas. 3:7 twice uses physis in the correct Gk. sense of "kind": "for every kind of beast [pasa gar physis thēriōn] and bird, of reptile and sea creature, can be tamed and has been tamed by humankind [tē physei tē anthrōpinē]." The thought again corresponds with the conception of a regular order of nature. The point of the allusion is to emphasize by contrast the fact that "no human being can tame the tongue – a restless evil, full of deadly poison" (v. 8).

5. physis, then, is a typically Gk. and, in particular, a Stoic, concept. It was taken up by Hellenistic Judaism and thus also found a place in Christian thought. It was used mainly by Paul, though it never became a major theological concept. His use of it points in two apparently opposing directions. On the one hand, it emphasizes the gap between Jews and non-Jews. On the other hand, it indicates what they have in common, and in this sense the Stoic usage is particularly marked. G. Harder

→ Adam, → Animal, → Bird, → Creation, → Fish, → Fruit, → Man, → Seed, Harvest

(a). A. J. L. Adams, "The Law of Nature in Greco-Roman Thought", Journal of Religion 25, 1945, 97–118; H. H. Barnette, "Towards an Ecological Ethic", Review and Expositor 69, 1972, 23–35; J. Barr, "Man and Nature – The Ecological Controversy and the Old Testament", BJRL 55, 1972, 9–32; J. W. Beardslee, The Use of PHYSIS in Fifth-Century Greek Literature, Dissertation, Chicago, 1918; G. Bornkamm, "The Revelation of God's Wrath (Romans 1–3)", Early Christian Experience, 1969, 47–70; R. G. Collingwood, The Idea of Nature, 1945; C. H. Dodd, "Natural Law in the New Testament", New Testament Studies, 1953, 129–42; P. Evdokimov, "Nature", SJT 18, 1965, 1–22; B. Gärtner, The Areopagus Speech and Natural Revelation, Acta Seminarii Neotestamentici Upsaliensis 21, 1955, 73–116; E. R. Goodenough, By Light Light, 1935; R. M. Grant, Miracle and Natural Law in Graeco-Roman and Early Christian Thought, 1952; W. A. Heidel, "Peri physeōs. A Study of the Conception of Nature among the Pre-Socratics", Proceedings of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences 45, 1910, 77–133; R. W. Hepburn, "Nature, Philosophical Ideas, of", in P. Edwards, ed., The Encyclopedia of Philosophy, 1967, V, 454–58; H. Köster, "NOMOS PHYSEOS. The Concept of Natural Law in Greek Thought", in Festschrift for E. R. Goodenough, 1968, 521–41; and physis etc., TDNT IX 251–77; A. Lovejoy, "The Meaning of Physis in the Greek Physiologers", The Philosophical Review, 18, 1909, 369–83; and The Great Chain of Being, 1936; H. E. W. Montefiore, ed., Man and Nature, 1975; C. F. D. Moule, Man and his Nature in the New Testament, 1964; E. C. Rust, Nature and Man in Biblical Thought, 1953; and "Nature and Man in Theological Perspective", Review and Expositor 69, 1972, 11–22; S. Sambursky, Physics of the Stoics, 1959; N. B. Stonehouse, The Areopagus Address, 1949 (reprinted in Paul before the Areopagus and Other New Testament Studies, 1957, 1–40).
(b). G. Bornkamm, "Gesetz und Natur. Röm. 2, 14–16", Studien zu Antike und Urchristentum, 1963², 93–118; H. Diller, "Der griechische Naturbegriff", Neue Jahrbücher für Antike und deutsche Bildung 2, 1939, 241–57; F. Heinimann, Nomis und Physis. Herkunft und Bedeutung einer Antithese im griechischen Denken des 5. Jahrhunderts, Schweizerische Beiträge zur Altertumswissenschaft 1, 1945; H. Leisegang, "Physis", Pauly-Wissowa XX 1130–64; and "Physis" in Lexikon der Alten Welt, 1965; S. Lyonnet, "Lex naturalis et iustificatio Gentilium", Verbum Domini 41, 1963, 238–42; R. Muth, "Zum Physis-Begriff bei Platon", Wiener Studien 64, 1950, 53–70; H. Patzer, Physis. Grundlegung zu einer Geschichte des Wortes, 1940; W. Philipp, "Naturphilosophie", EKL II 1516 ff.; M. Pohlenz, Der hellenische Mensch, 1947; "Paulus und die Stoa", ZNW 42, 1949, 69–104; "Nomos und Physis", Hermes 81, 1953, 418–38; and Die Stoa, I, 1959², II 1964³; B. Reicke, "Natürliche Theologie nach Paulus", Svensk Exegetisk Årsbok 22–23, 1957–58, 154–67; K. H. Schelkle, Theologie des Neuen Testaments, I, 1968; O. Thimme, PHYSIS, TROPOS, ETHOS, Dissertation, Göttingen, 1935; W. Trillhaas, "Im welchem Sinn sprechen wir beim Menschen von Natur?" ZTK 52, 1955, 272 ff.; and "Natur und Christentum", *RGG*³ IV 1326 ff.; R. Walker, "Die Heiden und das Gericht", EvTh 20, 1960, 302–14; W. Wieland, Die aristotelische Physik, 1962, 231 ff.

Necessity, Must, Obligation

The Gk. approach to life was largely shaped by the consciousness of a necessity in existence and events which is subject to the laws and norms of fate. The impersonal verb-form dei (it is necessary) is the most comprehensive expression for this life. It reflects the sense of a determining constraint, no matter whether it was exerted by magic or laws, by men or by gods. The general concept which expresses this feeling of having been consigned to fate (a situation which not only embraces human existence, but, in personifying a universal principle, also dominates the lives of the gods themselves) is anankē. By contrast with the words which are associated with fate and nature the vb. opheilō originally belonged to the legal sphere; it expressed initially one's legal and economic, and then later one's moral, duties and responsibilities to the gods and to men, or to their sacrosanct regulations. Whereas opheilō also expresses human and ethical responsibility in the NT, the typically Gk. concepts of dei and anankē could only be taken over with some modification which personalized and re-interpreted them so that they express the will of God.

ἀνάγκη

ἀνάγκη (anankē), compulsion; ἀναγκαῖος (anankaios), necessary; ἀναγκάζω (anankazō), compel, force; ἀναγκαστῶς (anankastōs), by compulsion.

CL All words based on the word-stem anank- (from an [ank] with reduplication) denote in varying gradations every form of outward or inward pressure which is exerted on men.

For the Greeks anankē was the power which determined all reality, the principle which dominated the universe. At various times men ascribed a divine character to it; Plato (Leg. 818c) in fact ranked it higher than the gods. Man is under a constraint because of his natural being; the final limitation of his existence by death is also part of this compulsion (cf. W. Grundmann, TDNT I 344 f.).

OT In the OT the naturalist outlook of the Gk. world is replaced by a historical one. anankē translates several Heb. words which denote the afflictions and distresses of illness, persecution, enmity etc. which were often taken by Israelites to indicate God's alienation from them. They include ṣar (Job 7:11; 15:24; 36:19) and ṣārâh (Job 5:19; 27:9; 31[30]:7; Prov. 17:17) both meaning distress; māṣôq (1 Ki. 22:2; Ps. 119[118]:143) and mᵉṣûqâh (Pss. 25[24]:17; 107[106]:6, 13, 19, 28; Zeph. 1:15), meaning stress, distress. In the last resort, it is Yahweh alone who can save men from anankē (Ps. 25[24]:17), and even lead a person into it (Job 20:22; cf. Jer. 9:[15]14, laʿᵃnâh; 15:4 zᵉwāʿâh or zaʿᵃwâh). He will raise up the great anankē on the day of his wrath (Zeph. 1:15), a conception which had powerful effect on the thought of post-exilic Judaism. anankē occurs without Heb. equivalent in Tob. 3:6; 4:9; Ep.Jer. 37; 2 Macc. 6:7; 15:2; 3 Macc. 1:16; 4:9; 5:6; 4 Macc. 3:17; 5:13, 16, 37; 6:9, 24; 8:14; 22, 24; 9:6.

NT In the NT the noun anankē occurs 17 times, the adj. anankaios 8 times and the vb. anankazō 9 times. All are predominantly part of the Pauline vocabulary. The vb. anankazō in the NT serves in both act. and pass. to describe a compulsion or a being compelled which does not rest on the use of outward force (Matt. 14:22; Acts 28:19; Gal. 2:3). Lk. 14:23 is undoubtedly not thinking of the use of force. The adj. anankaios refers once to close friends in the sense of those to whom one is bound (anankaious philous, "close friends", Acts 10:24 RSV), but is otherwise used predicatively meaning necessary. In Acts 13:46 this necessity is to be understood analogously to the Lucan dei (Lk. 24:7, 26; Acts 1:16; 21; → dei NT 2) as an exposition of the concept of salvation-history which is sustained by a belief in the providence of God governing the processes and events of history. The noun anankē can be used in everyday language in place of the vb. to denote compulsion: kai echō anankēn exelthōn idein, "and I must go out and see it" (Lk. 14:18; cf. 1 Cor. 7:37). In Phlm. 14 and 2 Cor. 9:7 constraint is contrasted with free will. The law involves all kinds of legal necessities (Heb. 7:12; 9:16, 23), of which one (the daily sacrifice which the High Priest offers for himself and the people) is no longer necessary for Christ on account of his one unique sacrifice (Heb. 9:25 f.).

The thought of providence in the history of salvation (→ dei) is found in passages such as Matt. 18:7 ("it is necessary that temptations come [anankē gar elthein ta skandala]"); Rom. 13:5 ("one must be subject [dio anankē hypotassesthai]"); and 1 Cor. 9:16 ("necessity [anankē] is laid on me"). Without being confined to any particular phase of salvation-history, anankē is used finally almost as an alternative to thlipsis (→ Persecution art. thlipsis) and to describe the tribulations which continually recur and break in upon believers from outside (1 Cor. 7:26; 2 Cor. 6:4; 12:10; 1 Thess. 3:7). It is against this background that Lk. 21:23 is to be understood: "For great distress [anankē] shall be upon the earth." Lk. omits the relative clause of Mk. 13:19 which in fact uses thlipsis. anankē here does not mark the end of the aeon, only that of → Jerusalem (Lk. 21:20), and with this the times of salvation for the Gentiles begin (Lk. 21:24). R. Morgenthaler

δεῖ

δεῖ (dei), it is necessary, one must; μοῖρα (moira), fate.

CL dei (attested since Homer) and deon estin, it is necessary, one must, both denote a compulsion of some undefined sort. Since the impersonal verb-form does not name the originator of the compulsion, the precise meaning is dependent on the context and on whatever force the necessity evokes. In Gk. thought the coercive power can be someone's will (Polyb., 7, 5, 2), the state laws (Xen., Mem. 1, 2, 42) or a spell (K. Preisendanz, Papyri Graecae Magicae, I, 4, 2255 ff.). But by far the most powerful and comprehensive force is Fate (moira) which determines the necessities of human, historical and cosmic life (Appian, Libykē 122, 578: Carthage just had to be conquered; cf. Corp.Herm., 11, 6a: everything always has to happen in every place; → anankē). Even the gods are subject to moira. This led, notably in the later stages of Hellenism, to an anxiety-filled and fatalistic approach to life.

OT The Heb. OT does not have any word corresponding to the Gk. dei. The reason for this is that the Gk. conception of a necessity which works in the manner of fate is foreign to Israel. The OT picture of God is a complete contrast, conceiving him as a personal will powerfully active in history, who claims for himself the lives of individual men. Through the introduction of the notion of dei into the LXX the OT understanding of God was influenced by Hellenism, but on the other hand, dei was itself transformed by the underlying OT idea of the necessity of the divine will. Alongside its non-theological usage (e.g. 2 Ki. 4:13 f.) the word is found particularly in the context of the law and of apocalyptic expectation. In Lev. 5:17 LXX the cultic prohibitions are called entolai kyriou, hōn ou dei poiein, "commands of the Lord concerning those things which one must not do." The impersonal formulation makes it possible for the personal claims of Yahweh's will – the Heb. text uses the 2nd person form – to retreat into the background (cf. Prov. 22:14a). dei in the LXX most commonly renders the Heb. infin. (construct) and prep., "in order to". In this way originally final or future statements receive a slightly deterministic re-interpretation. This happens, for example, in the apocalyptic texts of

Dan. (e.g. 2:28: God has revealed what must take place [LXX:dei]), whereas the Aram. text reads "what will take place" (cf. 2:29). Another good example is 2:45 where the LXX rightly translates ta esomena, "the things that shall be", whereas Theodotion writes ha dei genesthai, "the things that must happen."

NT In the NT the Hel. Gk. dei and deon estin are used with surprising frequency (102 times), in the main in the Gospels, and especially in Lk. (44 times). But the words are freed from their traditional Gk. associations even more decisively than in the LXX. By being connected with God's saving work they are charged with new meaning. The concept of dei plays a distinct rôle in three contextual areas: (1) eschatological – apocalyptic expectation; (2) the salvation history interpretation of the way of Jesus; and (3) the context of the Christian life.

1. Apocalyptic contexts. dei as an apocalyptic term refers to the future cosmic drama which will inevitably break in upon the world. But it is not a matter of some unalterable fate. Rather, it is a necessity determined by the divine will. In the so-called eschatological discourses war, hunger and a time of great distress are announced: this must all take place (dei genesthai) (Mk. 13:7 par. Matt. 24:6, Lk. 21:9; cf. the dei genesthai of Dan. 2:28) as must the universal preaching of the → gospel (Matt. 24:14 par. Mk. 13:10) before the end comes (→ Goal).

The beginning of Rev. (1:1) is also based on Dan. 2:28: "The revelation of Jesus Christ which God gave him to show to his servants what must soon take place" (cf. 4:1; 22:6). With this "must" of → judgment and salvation belong the individual acts of the final apocalyptic drama: the enemies of God's witnesses must be killed (11:5), the monster of the last days (the seventh emperor) must remain a little while (17:10), and → Satan must be loosed for a little while (20:3), before the ultimate victory of the → Lamb (22:3).

Paul too is aware of eschatological necessity, such as the final judgment (2 Cor. 5:10), the transformation at the general → resurrection of the dead (1 Cor. 15:52 f.) and the reign of Christ "until he [God] has put all his enemies under his feet" (1 Cor. 15:25; cf. Ps. 110:1 and the whole eschatological context vv. 23–28).

2. Jesus' life and way as salvation history. Through his use of dei Lk. expresses in numerous ways the fact that Jesus' way was not the result of chance or accident, but that the saving will of God has made history in the life of Jesus into salvation history. A divine necessity expressed by dei requires that the twelve years old Jesus must be in his Father's house (Lk. 2:49). In his interpretation of the law Jesus' dei conflicts with the dei of the Rabbis (Lk. 13:14, 16, the healing on the → Sabbath day). Justice and love are the divine dei of the Torah (11:42). Jesus' preaching is directed by the divine will (4:43; 13:33). So too his road to suffering is expressly designated as a divine "must" (9:22; 17:25). It is Lk.'s underlying concern not to depict Jesus' death as the tragic failure of a prophet but to present the death and resurrection of Jesus as necessary saving acts of God; "Was it not necessary that the Christ should suffer these things and enter into his glory?" (24:26; cf. 24:7; Acts 3:21). The Scriptures must be fulfilled (24:44). The will of God manifested and recorded in the OT attained in Christ its complete fulfilment and exposition; this is what Lk. intends to say through his use of the divine dei of the way of Jesus.

In the other Gospels dei refers primarily the death of Jesus as a divine necessity (Mk. 8:31; Matt. 16:21; Jn. 3:14). Matt. and Jn., like Lk., understand it as a necessary fulfilment of the Scriptures (Matt. 26:54; Jn. 20:9). "The whole will of God for Christ and for man is comprehended in this dei as Luke conceives it" (W. Grundmann, TDNT II 23).

3. dei in the life of the Christian. The divine dei covers not only the past history of Jesus and future eschatological events; it also embraces the present life of Christians. Especially in Acts are men implicated in God's saving activity. Paul is not the only one to be led in the plan of God from the days of his conversion to his journey to Rome (Acts 9:6, 16; 19:21; 23:11; 27:24). God's saving will applies to all men. "There is no other name under heaven given among men by which we must be saved" (Acts 4:12).

Jn. 3:7 designates regeneration as a divine "must" for men (→ Birth). Not only the way to salvation, but the Christian life itself is subordinated to the will of God dei is found, finally, in the paraenetical material of the NT: in the exhortation to persistent prayer (Lk. 18:1; Jn. 4:24; Rom. 8:26), to conduct that is pleasing to God (1 Thess. 4:1), to discipleship (2 Thess. 3:7) and to peaceableness (2 Tim. 2:24). E. Tiedtke, H.-G. Link

ὀφείλω

ὀφείλω (opheilō), owe, be indebted to; ὀφείλημα (opheilēma), what is owed, a debt; ὀφειλέτης (opheiletēs), debtor; ὄφελον (ophelon), O that, would that, if only; ὀφειλή (opheilē), obligation.

CL 1. The word-group formed from the stem opheil- belongs originally to the sphere of law. opheilō, attested since Mycenaean Gk., means: (a) when linked with an obj., to owe someone something, e.g. money, a loan (cf. Egyptian sources in BGU III, 846, 16; IV, 1149, 35); and (b) with an infin., to owe in the sense of being indebted (Plato, Leg. 4, 717b). An opheiletēs is (a) a debtor (Plato, Leg. 5, 736d); (b) someone who is under an obligation to achieve something (not found in this sense in the LXX). opheilē (rare, and not in the LXX) and the more common opheilēma (in the LXX only in Deut. 24:10; 1 Macc. 15:8) denote a debt, particularly of a financial nature, ophelon, originally an aorist participle of opheilō with the addition of estin (is), became the set expression for the optative "O, that", "would that", "if only" (cf. Epict., Dissertationes 2, 22, 12).

2. Alongside financial there are also moral obligations in respect of people or of state laws. Thus a culprit is often punished by being required to pay compensation to the injured party (Plato, Cra. 400c: until he has made the necessary payments). Infringement of divine regulations and thanks which must be rendered in return for benefactions of the gods also make men debtors, in requiring from them some cultic penance or act. Thus in Plato, Phaedo 118, the dying Socrates says: "We owe Asclepius [the god of healing] a cock." Correlates and formations from opheilō thus contain both the negative component of debt and the positive one of obligation.

OT 1. In the LXX opheilō occurs with striking rarity (12 times in the OT; 10 in the Apocrypha). It is used either in the optative formula ophelon, which commonly renders the Heb. particle lû or lū' (Num. 14:2; 20:3), or in connection with the law of debt, as the equivalent of Heb. nāšā', lend (what is lent becomes what is owed, Isa. 24:2) and ḥôḇ, a debt (Ezek. 18:7). In Deut. 15:2 loans are regulated in such a way that it was characteristic for sacral law in Israel, as distinct from other nations of the ancient world, that monetary debts were not permanently enforced for life. Every seven years they were to be remitted by the creditor (Heb. šᵉmiṭṭâh, Deut. 15:1 f., 9; 31:10; LXX aphesis, remission of debt). The stipulation concerning pledges in Deut. 24:10 (opheilēma) has a pronounced humanitarian character (cf. 1 Macc. 10:43; 13:39, remission of state taxes).

2. The OT does not make use of the concept of legal debt in order to depict obligation to Yahweh. This was due to the fact that man's relationship with God in the OT was not yet conceived as a business agreement between business partners, but as obedience to the will of Yahweh (→ dei).

The situation is different in later Judaism, where opheilō renders the late Heb. word ḥôḇ, which means: (a) to come off badly (from what is demanded of one), i.e. to be guilty, liable to punishment; and (b) (positively) to be indebted. opheilēma translates ḥôḇ or ḥôḇâh, which now comes to refer to arrears in payment, a debt, obligation, and to sin. Sin is plainly no longer now conceived of as intrinsic disobedience, but as an outstanding debt, forwhich one can compensate by appropriate accomplishments (cf. SB I 421, 800; IV 11, 14). The Qumran texts, significantly, do not reveal a knowledge of this kind of language.

NT In the NT opheilō is found linked with the dat. of persons and objects in the acc. (commonly in Matt. and Lk.), and still more often with the infin. (chiefly in Paul and in other epistles). The word-group is lacking in Mk., the Catholic Epistles (except 1 and 3 Jn.) and Rev. opheilō is used in the main in two particular sets of contexts: (1) to designate men's relationship with God (in the Gospels, especially in Matt.); (2) as a paraenetical concept (in the epistles, especially in Paul).

1. From a formal point of view Jesus spoke of men as debtors to God, just as Judaism did. The difference lies in the fact that, unlike Judaism, Jesus took the business relationship to be not the reality, but a parable of men's relationship to God. Consequently the concept of debt (opheilēma) is linked by Jesus not with achievements or demands concerning payments of arrears, but with → forgiveness (aphesis).

(a) Both these differences are made clear in the parable of the unmerciful servant (Matt. 18:23–35). The picture of the creditor (daneistēs) and the debtor (opheiletēs) reveals men's dependence on and responsibility to God, who (as Matt. emphasizes again and again) will settle accounts with his servants (Matt. 18:23). The fantastically high sum of money that is stated to be owed (10,000 talents, i.e. about $10,000,000 expresses the nature of the debt: it cannot be paid. Every attempt to repay the debt, even at the expense of the lives of the debtor and of his family, is from the outset an illusion. Only through the compassion of the creditor can the debt be remitted (cf. the context with Deut. 15:2). On the other hand, the parable reveals men's responsibility ("should not [ouk edei] you have had mercy" v. 33; → dei). By virtue of the great debt that has been remitted by God, men ought to forgive one another the laughably small debts which by comparison their "fellow-servants" owe them, instead of insisting on their legal rights. In v. 28 the 100 denarii is 0.00001% of the 10,000 talents! (On this parable see J. D. M. Derrett, "The Parable of the Unmerciful Servant", Law in the New Testament, 1970, 32–47.)

(b) A certain parallel is offered in the parable of the two debtors, which Lk. has woven into the narrative of the sinful woman (Lk. 7:41–43), in order to point out the connection between the greater or lesser degree of love and the greater or lesser degree of debt forgiven. Compare also the falsification of debts in the parable of the unjust steward (Lk. 16:5–7). (See further J. D. M. Derrett, op. cit., 48–77.)

(c) Only in Matt. 6:12 does opheilēma correspond to the Rab. ḥôḇ, meaning debt (elsewhere in the NT replaced by hamartia; → Sin). The fifth request of the Lord's Prayer stresses the correspondence between divine forgiveness of debts and human readiness to → forgive. Human forgiveness is neither a pre-condition for God's forgiveness, nor can it make any claim to it; rather, it is an echo and a command of the forgiveness received (cf. the paraenetic expansion in 6:14 ff.). "The aorist of Mt. (aphēkamen) expresses the seriousness of the desire for reconciliation by the completed act, whereas the present of Lk. (aphiomen) expresses it by the constant readiness to forgive" (F. Hauck, TDNT V 563; cf. Matt. 6:12 with Lk. 11:4).

2. If opheilō in the Gospels has the primarily negative meaning of being in debt, in the Epistles it predominantly denotes the positive sense of responsibility which arises out of one's belonging to Christ. In Rom. 13:8 Paul uses the double meaning of opheilō to exhort his readers to the → love which is at the same time a task and a debt to one's neighbour which can never be paid. In Rom. 15:1 ff. the connection between ethical obligation and the foundation work of Christ becomes particularly clear: "We who are strong ought [opheilomen] to bear with the failings of the weak, and not to please ourselves. . . . For Christ did not please himself." 1 Cor. 11:7 and 10 speak of the duty of discipline in the congregation (→ Head); 2 Thess. 1:3 and 2:13 of the duty of gratitude for the spiritual growth of the congregations; 2 Cor. 12:14 of responsible parenthood; 1 Jn. 3:16 of the sacrifice of one's life; and 2 Cor. 4:11 of mutual brotherly love. 1 Jn. 2:6 summarizes the individual exhortations, "He who says he abides in him ought [opheilei] to walk in the same way in which he walked." Heb. uses opheilō (2:17; 5:3) in parallel to dei and → prepei, in order to underline the divine purpose in what befell Christ in the divine work of salvation.

3. The optative particle ophelon is found only in Paul (1 Cor. 4:8; 2 Cor. 11:1; Gal. 5:12) and in Rev. (3:15). opheilē denotes monetary debt in Matt. 18:32, civil dues in Rom. 13:7, and the command to marital sexual intercourse in 1 Cor. 7:3. opheiletēs is a debtor (Matt. 6:12), and one who is under obligation (e.g. Paul in Rom. 1:14) to world mission. In Gal. 5:3 it expresses the obligation to keep the whole law if one practises → circumcision. By contrast, Rom. 8:12 speaks of believers who "are debtors, not to the flesh, to live according to the flesh," and Rom. 15:27 of the debt in Christian giving. E. Tiedtke, H.-G. Link

πρέπω

πρέπω (prepō), be fitting, seemly or suitable.

CL & OT prepō is found in cl. Gk. from Homer onwards most frequently in the impersonal forms eprepen, it was fitting, and prepei, it is fitting. Whereas dei and opheilō express necessity and obligation, prepō expresses that which is proper and appropriate. It is found in the LXX in Pss. 33(32):1 (for nā'weh); 65(64):1 (for dûmiyyâh); and 93(92):5 (for nā'âh in the piel). In post-canonical literature it is found without Heb. equivalent in Sir. 33:28 (30:27); 32(35):3; 1 Macc. 12:11; 3 Macc. 3:20, 25; 7:13, 19. It occurs also in several variant translations of Aquila, Symmachus and Theodotion.

NT In the Gospels it occurs only in Matt. 3:15 in Jesus' reply to the protestations of John the Baptist at Jesus' desire to be baptized: "Let it be so now; for thus it is fitting [prepon estin] to fulfil all righteousness" (→ Baptism; → Fullness, art. plēroō; → Righteousness). In discussing the question of the veiling of women in worship, Paul asks: "Judge for yourselves, is it proper [prepon estin] for a woman to pray to God with her head uncovered?" (1 Cor. 11:13; → Head). In the paraenetical passage Eph. 4:3 asserts: "But immorality and all impurity or covetousness must not even be named among you, as is fitting among saints [kathōs prepei hagiois]." The Pastoral Epistles give direction for appropriate conduct for women and the Christian teacher. The women should adorn themselves "by good deeds, as befits [ho prepei] women who profess religion" (1 Tim. 2:10). Titus is urged to "teach what befits [ha prepei] sound doctrine" (Tit. 2:1). Finally, Heb. makes two observations on the appropriateness of the way Jesus acted. "For it was fitting [eprepen] that he, for whom and by whom all things exist, in bringing many sons to glory, should make the pioneer of their salvation perfect through suffering" (Heb. 2:10). "For it was fitting [eprepen] that we should have such a high priest. holy, blameless, unstained, separated from sinners, exalted above the heavens" (Heb. 7:26). The former passage is concerned to show the identity of Christ with men; the latter with the difference between him and sinful men. The common factor of all these instances of the word is the absence of external constraint and absolute necessity. In each case the person concerned could have acted otherwise. On the other hand, righteousness and the exigencies of the situation make the conduct specified not only appropriate but imperative. C. Brown

(a). W. Grundmann, anankazō etc., TDNT I 344–47; and dei etc., TDNT II 21–25; F. Hauck, opheilō etc., TDNT V 559–66; E. Käsemann, "A Pauline Version of the 'Amor Fati' ", in New Testament Questions of Today, 1969, 217–35.

(b). E. Fascher, "Theologische Beobachtungen zu dei", in Neutestamentliche Studien für Rudolf Bultmann, BZNW 21, 1954, 228 ff.; M. Pohlenz, To prepon, Nachrichten der Gesellschaft der Wissenschaften zu Göttingen, 1933, 53–92; H. Preisker, "Mensch und Schicksal in der römischen Stoa und im Neuen Testament", Forschungen und Fortschritte 25, 1949, 274 ff.

New

New and old are correlative and contrary ideas. In temporal terms that which is neos, new, young and previously non-existent stands over against that which was at the → beginning (archē). palaios (→ Old, art. palai), old (with the negative overtone of obsolete, worthless, and unserviceable), is materially distinguished from kainos, new in the qualitative sense of something previously unknown, unprecedented, marvellous. In the course of time the differences of meaning between neos and kainos became blurred, even to the point of occasional synonymity. But the NT has significantly used kainos with its more qualitative sense in order to give expression to the fundamentally new character of the advent of Christ. The qualitative difference between old and new comes to light most clearly in the NT contrast between the old (→ Old, art. palai, NT 2 (b)) and the new man (→ art. kainos NT 2 (c)).

καινός

καινός (kainos), new; καινότης (kainotēs), newness; καινίζω (kainizō), renew; καινόω (kainoō), make new; ἐγκαινίζω (enkainizō), make new, consecrate; ἀνακαινόω (anakainoō), renew; ἀνακαίνωσις (anakainōsis), renewal.

CL kainos is derived from the root qen, turn out fresh (cf. Lat. recens), and denotes that which is new in its own way. Derivations include: kainotēs, newness; anakainōsis, renewal (first used in Koine Gk.); kainizō (also enkainizō and anakainizō), renew; and kainoō (also anakainoō), use for the first time, to make new.

In secular usage kainos denotes that which is qualitatively new as compared with what has existed until now, that which is better than the old, whereas → neos is used temporally for that which has not yet been, that which has just made its appearance. But the longer these words were used, the less strictly was the conceptual differentiation maintained.

OT 1. The LXX usually translates Heb. ḥāḏāš by kainos, indicating in daily secular usage something new, something previously not there (e.g. Exod. 1:8, a new king; Deut. 20:5, a new house; Jos. 9:13, new wine-skins; 1 Ki. 11:29, a new cloak).

2. kainos finds its theological place chiefly in the eschatological message of the prophets, who bring into question Israel's previous experience of salvation in history and announce a new and saving divine activity in the future. This new move of Yahweh's consists, according to Jeremiah, in the establishment of a new → covenant (Jer. 31 [LXX 38]: 31 ff.: diathēkē kainē), in contrast to the covenant at Sinai, in which Yahweh will put his will in Israel's heart, in order to bring about a new obedience among his people. Ezekiel makes a very similar promise of a new → Spirit and a new → heart, which Yahweh will create within man himself (Ezek. 11:19; 18:31; 36:26). Isa. 43:18 f. (NEB) presents the programmatic and antithetical formulation of "Cease to dwell on days gone by and to brood over past history. Here and now I will do a new thing" (cf. Isa. 42:9; 48:6). He understands Yahweh's new activity in leading Israel back out of the Babylonian exile as new → creation which will embrace the nation and the whole created order (Isa. 43:16–21). Isa. 65:17 f. proclaims the creation of a new → heaven and a new → earth (Isa. 65:17 f.). The "new thing" which is awaited and promised in the eschatological proclamation of the prophets as Yahweh's future act reaches from the inner parts of man himself right to the universal dimensions of a new world. The Israelite covenant community responds to both the experienced and expected saving deeds of Yahweh in the new song which is sung aloud in the Psalms (33:3; 40:3; 144:9; 149:1 ff.).

NT 1. (a) The NT also follows the secular usage of kainos. It occurs in the sense of unused (Matt. 9:17; 27:60; Mk. 2:21; Lk. 5:36; Jn. 19:41), unfamiliar, interesting (Mk. 1:27; Acts 17:19, 21) and novel (Matt. 13:52; 2 Jn. 5).

(b) But everything in the NT which is connected with Jesus' saving work is also characterized as new; a new → covenant (Matt. 26:28; Lk. 22:20; 1 Cor. 11:25; 2 Cor. 3:6; Heb. 8:8, 13; 9:15), a new → commandment (Jn. 13:34; 1 Jn. 2:7, 8), a new → creation (2 Cor. 5:17; Gal. 6:15), the new existence of → life in the → Spirit (kainotēs, newness, Rom. 6:4; 7:6), the new → man (Eph. 2:15; 4:24; cf. anakainoō, renew, 2 Cor. 4:16; Col. 3:10), a new → heaven and a new → earth (2 Pet. 3:13; Rev. 21:1), a new → name (Rev. 2:17; 3:12), the new → Jerusalem (Rev. 3:12; 21:2), a new → song (Rev. 5:9; 14:3).

2. Leaving secular usage aside, the following features emerge from an investigation of theological usage.

(a) Most important is the use of kainos with diathēkē (→ covenant), in both the Synoptic and Pauline traditions of the Last Supper, in the words spoken over the cup: "This cup is the new covenant [kainē diathēkē] in my blood" (1 Cor. 11:25; cf. Lk. 22:20). In Mk. 14:24 and Matt. 26:28 only the Koine-texts have added kainē to diathēkē (→ Lord's Supper). The words signify that the → blood, or the → death, of Jesus is the basis of the new covenant. This is an evident link with the promise of Jer. 31:31 ff. Heb. develops the theme of the new covenant further, contrasting the imperfect old covenant of Sinai with the perfect new one (Heb. 8:6, 7). The quotation from Jeremiah 31:31–34 is explained thus: "In speaking of a new [kainēn] covenant he treats the first as obsolete [pepalaiōken tēn prōtēn]" (Heb. 8:13). Again and again the statements of Heb. circle around the newness of this covenant (9:15), which can also be called the second (8:7), a better (8:6) or an eternal covenant (13:20). Through Jesus' death and mediating work "those who are called" are in him to "receive the promised eternal inheritance" (9:15).

Paul interprets the new covenant as a covenant of the Spirit in opposition to the old covenant with its written code (2 Cor. 3:6). "We serve in the newness [kainotēti] of the Spirit and not in the oldness [palaiotēti] of the letter" (Rom. 7:6).

(b) The Synoptics use kainos from time to time with the same meaning as neos in order to distinguish the new which is an integral part of the appearance of Jesus from the old already in existence, as, for instance, in the parables of new wine in old wine-skins and new patches on an old garment, where neos and kainos are used synonymously (Mk. 2:21 f.). It is the same when Mk. 1:27 depicts the alarming impression which Jesus' teaching created with the words "a new teaching full of authority [didachē kainē kat' exousian]." The nature of the newness is characterized by its contrast with the casuistic Rabbinic method of teaching (Mk. 1:22), by its authoritativeness, and by its power to effect what it says (as the context of the healing of the spirit-possessed man shows).

(c) Paul, in Gal. 6:15, designates God's saving act in the cross of Christ as a new creation (kainē ktisis; cf. v. 14), and sets it in opposition to the legalistic way of salvation advocated by those who said that God must be honoured by fulfilling his law which meant that → circumcision was obligatory for all male believers. For Paul God's saving act is something fundamentally new. The new creation of God embraces not only humanity (1 Cor. 8:6) but the whole creation (Rom. 8:18 ff.; cf. Isa. 43:18 ff.).

In 2 Corinthians 5:17 Paul declares: "Therefore, if anyone is in Christ, he is a new creation. The old has passed away, behold the new has come [hōste ei tis en Christō, kainē ktisis. ta archaia parēlthen, idou gegonen kaina]" (RSV). Although the word ktisis here can mean creature (cf. RSV mg), it more frequently means → creation. It may also be noted that the words "he is" are absent from the Gk. which has no vb. at this point. C. K. Barrett translates the verse: "A further consequence is that if anyone is in Christ, there is a new act of creation: all old things have gone, behold new things have come into being" (The Second Epistle to the Corinthians, BNTC, 1973, 162). Barrett links the verse with vv. 14 f. and sees vv. 16 and 17 as parallel, being negative and positive statements of the same truth (op. cit., 173). He regards the phrase "in Christ" not as mystical but as eschatological, "a transference by faith in Christ, who experienced the messianic affliction and was raised from the dead as the firstfruits of the resurrection, from the present age into the age to come." As such it is "a new act of creation", analogous to the original creative act by which the world came into being. ktisis, therefore, refers not to the believer in the first instance, but to the creative act of God. Its meaning is essentially the same as that in Gal. 6:15, and it takes up Paul's earlier thought of God's new creative act in Christ in 2 Cor. 4:6: "For it is the God who said, 'Let light shine out of darkness,' who has shone in our hearts to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Christ" (cf. Gen. 1:3).

Barrett points out that the idea of parallels between God's original creation and final act of redemption was familiar in Judaism (ibid.). These parallels go back at least as far as Isa. 51:9 ff. and 54:9 f., and the same book contrasts the old and the new as Paul does here (Isa. 42:9; 43:18 f.). On the rabbinic discussion of new creation (b^{e}riyyâh ḥ^{a}dâšâh) see further W. D. Davies, Paul and Rabbinic Judaism, 1955^{2}, 119 f.; SB II 421 ff.; III 519; E. Sjöberg, "Wiedergeburt und Neuschöpfung in palästinischen Judentum", StTh 4, 1950, 44–85; → Baptism, art. baptizō OT 3. Thus Rabbi Simon (fl. A.D. 280) said that not everyone who wishes to say a Psalm may do so; rather it is certain of anyone to whom a miracle has occurred and said a Psalm, that his sins have been forgiven and he has become as a new creature (Midrash Ps. 18 §6 (69^{a}). Barrett sees a basic difference between Paul and rabbinic thought on the new creation. For the rabbis the emphasis falls on the new creature, whereas Paul is concerned with the new act of creation. He thinks it unlikely that Paul was borrowing a rabbinic expression, and in any case it cannot be demonstrated that the expression was current in Paul's day. He also finds unconvincing the attempts to relate Paul's thought to that at Qumran. Nor is there any concrete evidence for thinking that Paul is drawing on a baptismal tradition here.

In Gal. 4:5 Paul expresses this new reality in terms of adoption. This is not a matter of gaining some new psychological or ethical quality, or of making a new resolution. It entails a daily process of renewal: "Though our outer nature [ho exō hēmōn anthrōpos, lit. our outer man] is wasting away, our inner nature is being renewed [anakainoutai] day by day." This takes place through the creative and recreative power of the Spirit given by Christ "in the newness of the Spirit [en kainotēti pneumatos]" (Rom. 7:6; cf. Tit. 3:5).

The existence of the new creature involves a new way of life. Since the new life does not exist on or derive from the natural plane, it is hidden with Christ in God (Col. 3:3). Those who enter upon it need the apostolic exhortation to hold fast to their new life and to put on the new man: "Now that you have discarded the old nature with its deeds and have put on the new nature, which is being constantly renewed [anakainoumenon] in the image of its Creator and brought to know God . . . put on the garments that suit God's chosen people" (Col. 3:9, 10, 12 NEB; cf. Eph. 4:23 f.; Rom. 12:2). The imperative does not invalidate the indicative; rather, the concealment of the existence of the new creation is itself the basis for the energetic imperative to the new way of life (cf. Gal. 5:25). It is in the dialectic of indicative and imperative, gospel and law, gift and task, that, according to Paul, the new life of the Christian moves. It is lived in the unavoidable tension between dedication to the existence of the new creation and appropriation of the new man (cf. G. Bornkamm, "Baptism and New Life in Paul (Romans 6)", Early Christian Experience, 1969, 71–86).

The vb. anakainoō, renew, occurs in the NT only in Paul in the two passages already noted (2 Cor. 4:16; Col. 3:10). In both cases it is in the passive. The corresponding noun anakainōsis, renewal, is not known outside Christian literature and is found only twice in the NT. In Rom. 12:2 believers are exhorted to let this renewal affect their social attitudes: "Do not be conformed [syschēmatizesthe] to this world but be transformed by the renewal [metamorphousthe tē anakainōsei] of your mind, that you may prove what is the will of God, what is good and acceptable and perfect" (→ Form, arts. schēma and morphē). Tit. 3:5 sees salvation grounded in renewal: "he saved us, not because of deeds done by us in righteousness, but in virtue of his own mercy, by the washing of regeneration and renewal in the Holy Spirit [anakainōseōs pneumatos hagiou]" (→ Birth, art. palingenesia).

(d) John's Gospel speaks of the new → commandment, kainē entolē, of brotherly love. "I give you a new commandment: love one another; as I have loved you, so you are to love one another" (13:34 NEB). The commandment is new for the reason Jesus was the first to reveal fully what → love means (cf. 15:13; 1:17). Here, too, the imperative to love is grounded in the indicative of the love of Jesus. Because the Christian community has experienced the reality of the self-sacrificial love of Jesus it is freed and summoned at the same time, to transform concern for self into concern for others (cf. R. Bultmann, The Gospel of John, 1971, 525). It is not a question of an ethical principle, but of becoming new in love by virtue of the new love of Christ.

In 1 John the point at issue is also that of brotherly love (2:7 ff.). The commandment is called, strikingly, old and new at once (2:7 f.; cf. 2 Jn. 5). The exposition is obviously directed against the schismatic desire for innovation. By "old" one should understand the beginning of the Christian life: "the old commandment is the word which you have heard" (2:7). As to content, it is simply the new love for one's brothers that is meant though the christological foundation of Jn's Gospel is not explicitly expounded (2:8–11).

(e) The vb. enkainizō occurs only in Heb. Arndt (214) suggests that its meaning in Heb. 10:20 is "open a way" (cf. 1 Sam. 11:14; 1 Clem. 18:10; Ps. 51:10 [50:12]). Thus believers have confidence to enter the sanctuary "by the new and living way which he opened for us [enekainisen] through the curtain, that is, through his flesh" (RSV). On the other hand, the meaning of inaugurate, dedicate is suggested for Heb. 9:18. RSV has "ratified": "Hence even the first covenant was not ratified [enkekainistai] without blood" (RSV; cf. Deut. 20:5; 1 Ki. 8:63; 2 Chr. 7:5; IG XII 5, 712, 58).

(f) kainos plays an important role in the visions of Revelation. Those who are victorious over their earthly temptations will receive a white stone with a new name

(2:17; cf. 13:12). The white stone (psēphon leukēn) may have been the white stone used by jurors to signify acquittal (Ovid, Metamorphoses 15, 41); a token entitling one to free entertainment at royal assemblies (Xiphilin., Epit.Dion., p. 228), hence that which admitted one to the heavenly feast; the precious stones which in rabbinic tradition fell with the manna (Yoma 8); the precious stones on the breastplate of the high priest (Exod. 35:27; 39; cf. 28:28 f.); the white stone regarded as a mark of felicity (cf. Pliny, Ep. 6, 11, 3); or a combination of several of these images (cf. R. H. Charles, The Revelation of St. John, ICC, I, 1920, 66). The new name would not be that of the bearer, but the one giving authority to the bearer. The context of the vision of Rev. 1 suggests that the new name is that of Christ as Lord (cf. 1:8, 10, 12–20; with Phil. 2:11). For he is the one who has conquered and has assumed Lordship (cf. 2:17a with 5:5 ff.; 22:13, 20). It is he that makes the new reality possible. The heavenly community of the redeemed will strike up a new song in honour of the Lamb who was slain (5:9; 14:3). When the great and final apocalyptic battle has been fought out against Satan, and all the enemies of the Lamb have been defeated, the new → Jerusalem will arise (21:2), and a new heaven and a new earth will be created (21:1; cf. 2 Pet. 3:13). Then there will be no tears, suffering, pain or → death (21:4). In accordance with the expectations of the new in the OT the new element which entered the world with Jesus Christ stretches from the realization of the new man right to the universal hope of a new heaven and a new earth. The One who sits on the throne of the new Jerusalem says: "Behold, I make all things new" (Rev. 21:5).

H. Haarbeck, H.-G. Link, C. Brown

νέος

νέος (neos), new, young, fresh; νεότης (neotēs), youth; νεώτερος (neōteros), younger, a younger person; νεόφυτος (neophytos), newly planted; ἀνανεόω (ananeoō), renew.

CL neos, from the Indo-Germanic neuos*, derived from the adv. nu, now, has the temporal sense of belonging to the present moment, and so new, not previously existent, just now appearing, in short: new, young.

1. Secular Gk. uses neos as an adj. (attested since Mycenaean Gk.) for things, generally in a temporal sense, new, fresh (cf. Hdt. 5, 19, 2, neōtera prēgmata, revolution); and in a fig. sense, occasionally of persons with some recently gained honour or position (cf. Aesch., PV 955, 960, hoi neoi theoi, the new gods). neos is most commonly used, chiefly in the comparative, to designate the age-range of youths from 20 to 30 years old as distinct from the presbyteroi or gerontes, but also now and again as a noun to denote an inexperienced person, a novice. There is no strict differentiation between neos and the generally synonymously used adjs. → kainos and prosphatos (originally a sacrificial term; pros and phatos [a verbal adj. cognate with phonos, slaughter], just slaughtered, and therefore fresh).

2. The Hellenistic and Roman world was fond of linking neos with the name of some god such as Asclepius or Dionysus in their emperor-cults. The ruler, revered as God, was to be celebrated as the visible representation of the divinity. In gnostic and Manichaean religious language one could also speak of the new,

i.e. the redeemed man. But this betrays a dependence on early Christianity (cf. Hippol., Haer. 6, 35, 4; J. Behm, TDNT IV 897).

OT 1. The LXX uses neos chiefly in the comparative form neōteros with the meaning of younger, a younger person. neōteros is so used for the following Heb. words: ṣā'îr, young(er), small(er) (e.g. Gen. 19:31, 34 f., 39); qāṭān and qāṭōn, small, young(er), youngest (36 times altogether; e.g. Gen. 9:24; 42:13, 15, 20, 34; Gen. 43 and 44 passim); na'ar, young man (e.g. Jdg. 8:20; 2 Chr. 13:7; Job 24:5); yeleḏ, child (2 Chr. 10:14). In Num. 28:16 the LXX renders bikkûrîm, first-fruits, by ta nea (the new things) and translates Abib ('āḇîḇ), the month of the ripening of the corn, as the month of the first-fruits (mēn tōn neōn; Exod. 13:4; 23:15; 34:18; Lev. 2:14; Deut. 16:1). neos is used to translate ḥāḏāš, new, only 4 times (Lev. 23:16; 26:10; Num. 28:26; Cant. 7:13[14]); otherwise the regular equivalent is kainos.

2. In the Apocrypha and inter-testamental literature neos comes increasingly to denote youthful inexperience, immaturity and susceptibility (cf. Tob. 1:4; Sir. 9:10; 42:8; 1 Macc. 6:17; 11:54, 57; 13:31; 4 Macc. 2:3; 6:19).

NT 1. The instances of neos in the NT, though not so frequent as those of → kainos, are scattered in numerous writings. neos occurs 7 times in Lk., twice each in Matt. and Mk., once in Jn., 8 times in Paul (6 of them in the Pastorals), and once each in Heb. Jas. and Acts. With neos the temporal aspect is dominant, marking out the present moment as compared with a former: new dough (1 Cor. 5:7), freshly prepared and not yet blended with → leaven; new wine, fresh wine, still fermenting (Matt. 9:17, par. Mk. 2:22, Lk. 5:38); a new man, God's new creation (Col. 3:9 f.) the new covenant, God's new design as contrasted with the old covenant broken by men (Heb. 12:24). neos, when meaning young (Tit. 2:4), is mainly used in the comparative in the NT (Lk. 15:12; Acts 5:6; Jn. 21:18; 1 Tim. 5:1 f.; Tit. 2:6; 1 Pet. 5:5); neotēs accordingly means youth (Mk. 10:20; Lk. 18:21; Acts 26:4; 1 Tim. 4:12). In Lk. 22:26 ho neōteros means the youngest. The vb. ananeoomai occurs only in Eph. 4:23 where it signifies the "being renewed" of the inner nature, as does anakainoomai in Col. 3:10 (see below 5, and kainos NT 2 (c)). Heb. 10:20 speaks of the new (prosphatos, newly consecrated) way to the sanctuary of God which Christ has first already travelled through his suffering, death and resurrection and which he has thus inaugurated (enekainisen) and made accessible to us (→ kainos, NT 2 (e)).

2. neos in the NT thus characterizes the new thing which Jesus has brought to men both as gift and as task, the new salvation and life which commences at his coming and is completed at his return. neos therefore stands in necessary opposition to that which was palai, earlier on, of old (Heb. 1:1), that which is palaios (→ Old). The palaios anthrōpos, the old man, is the autonomous man under sin (Rom. 7:6) which is laid aside (Eph. 4:22) and must be purified from the palaia zymē, the old → leaven of unregenerate ways. God himself has declared that the earlier worship which had become so superficial is obsolete. He has abrogated it (palaioō, Heb. 8:13), and his will is that believers serve him, not en palaiotēti grammatos (Rom. 7:6), in the old and worthless worship of the letter, the written code, but en kainotēti pneumatos, in the renewal, in the newness of the Spirit.

3. By contrast with palaios, old, both neos and → kainos denote the new salvation which Christ has brought, and the new life of faith in him. The picture of new wine and old wine-skins (Matt. 9:17; Mk. 2:22; Lk. 5:38) makes a sharp distinction between the new (the person and preaching of Jesus) and the old (Judaism and John the Baptist's followers). Jesus calls for a clean break between old and new, since both could only be linked together with resultant mutual disadvantages. The parable is to be understood against the background of the incompatible opposition in which Jesus stands to everything that has gone before. The new wine at the wedding feast at Cana also shows that the new is better than the old (Jn. 2:1–11), even though the words new and old are not used in the account.

4. The picture of the congregation as new dough (neon phyrama) which is separated from the → leaven of "malice and evil" takes the thought a step further (1 Cor. 5:7). Just as the old leaven has to be cleansed out annually at the Passover (Deut. 16:3 f.) and a fresh start made, so nothing of the old life should be allowed to corrupt the new. In context Paul is talking about → boasting which ill befits the Corinthians in view of their recent case of gross immorality (1 Cor. 5:1–6). He goes on to urge the Corinthians to celebrate the festival "with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth" (5:8). For the church has entered a new era, a new Passover time, "For Christ, our paschal lamb, has been sacrificed" (5:7).

5. The vb. ananeoō occurs in the NT only at Eph. 4:23, where it is best taken as a passive: "and be renewed [ananeousthai] in the spirit of your minds." The following v. adds: "and put on the new nature [ton kainon anthrōpon], created after the likeness of God in true righteousness and holiness" (→ kainos).

6. Even though the word-groups neos and kainos are largely used synonymously, the observation may still be made that neos tends to stress the reality of salvation in the present, whereas kainos emphasizes more strongly the character of eschatological fulfilment. H. Haarbeck

→ Old

(a). J. Behm, kainos etc., TDNT III 447–54; and neos etc., TDNT IV 896–901; G. Bornkamm, "Baptism and New Life in Paul (Romans 6)", Early Christian Experience, 1969, 71–86; R. Bultmann, The Gospel of John, 1971, 526 f.; R. A. Harrisville, "The Concept of Newness in the New Testament", JBL 74, 1955, 69–79.
(b). G. Harbsmeier, " 'Alt' und 'Neu' in der Verkündigung", EvTh 27, 1967, 286 ff.; F. Hahn, "Die Bildworte vom neuen Flicken und vom alten Wein", EvTh 31, 1971, 357 ff.; A. von Harnack, "Die Terminologie der Wiedergeburt und verwandter Erlebnisse in der ältesten Kirche", TU 42, 1918, 101 ff., 135 ff.; W. Nagel, "Neuer Wein in alten Schläuchen (Mt. 9, 17)", Vigiliae Christianae 14, 1960, 1 ff.; P. Stuhlmacher, Gerechtigkeit Gottes bei Paulus, FRLANT 87, 1966², 213 ff.

Nicolaitan

Νικολαΐτης | Νικολαΐτης (Nikolaitēs), Nicolaitan; cf. Νικόλαος (Nikolaos), Nicolas.

1. Member of a sect of primitive Christian times, apparently formed from the personal name Nicolas or Nicolaus. The term occurs in the NT only at Rev. 2:6 and 2:15, in the epistles to the churches in Ephesus and in Pergamum. The first passage commends the church's rejection of them without specifying the nature of their teaching. It is an open question whether they are to be identified with the "false apostles" of v. 2. The more explicit context of Rev. 2:15 must be the basis for any interpretation of the tenets of the group. There they are equated in some sense with Balaam, who taught Israel "to eat things sacrificed to idols, and to commit fornication" (cf. Num. 25:1–3; 31:16). The same sins are also ascribed to the teaching of "Jezebel" at Thyatira (Rev. 2:20), but she is never called a Nicolaitan, though the trend of her influence is represented as similar. Both passages, as far as we may judge from them, seem to concern errors of practice rather than of speculative doctrine, though the phrase "they have not known the depths of Satan" (2:24) suggests the possibility of some kind of gnostic background for the Jezebel teaching.

2. The value of the later references to Nicolaitans is debatable. Irenaeus (Haer. 1, 26, 3) makes them the followers of Nicolas the deacon of Acts 6:5, but adds nothing which might not possibly be explained as inference from Rev. In Haer., 3, 11, 7, he treats them as the earliest exponents of the error of Cerinthus and ascribes to them a gnostic cosmology. This might however be an inference from a tradition connecting John's opponents with the "gnōsis falsely so-called" (1 Tim. 6:20), to which Irenaeus here appears to refer. These tenets might then merely have been read back from subsequent developments.

Others condemn the Nicolaitans as teaching hedonism and immorality (Clem. Alex., Strom. 2, 20; Apost.Const. 6, 8, 2; Ignatius (long recension) Trall. 11; Philad. 6; Tertullian, Adv.Marc. 1, 29; De Pudic. 19), following Rev. without otherwise specifying their doctrines. In Tertullian, Praescr.Haer. 33, and Hippolytus, Haer., 736, they are associated or compared with gnostic groups, but neither passage is explicit.

3. It is sufficiently clear from the primary references that Nicolaitanism was a libertarian or antinomian movement, whatever else it may have been or become also. The most promising key to a more precise interpretation is the parallel with Balaam in Rev. 2:14–15. Balaam's evil counsel is never explicitly recorded in the OT, but the inference from comparison of Num. 31:16 with Num. 25:1–2 is that he was responsible for contriving the sin of Israel with the daughters of Moab, an incident which became much elaborated in Jewish tradition by the first century A.D. (cf. Philo, Vit. Mos., 1, 54, 295 ff.; Joephus, Ant., 4, 6; 6, 126 ff.).

C. A. Heumann in 1712 first proposed that an etymological play was intended on the names "Balaam" and "Nicolas", both being taken to mean "lord" (Heb. ba'al) or "destroyer" (Heb. bāla') "of the people". The artificiality of this etymology is not necessarily decisive against it: the question is whether it was current in antiquity. It is very probably no more than a modern fancy. Yet Balaam is unexpectedly prominent in Jewish tradition. He was a type of lawless wickedness, the antagonist of → Moses the law-giver. And in the NT Jude 11 and 2 Pet. 2:15 refer to controversies involving his name. There is some reason to think that a polemical use of the name was already current in the milieu of the Asian churches (cf. the messianic use of Balaam's prophecy in Num. 24:17, echoed in Rev. 2:26–28). Jewish sources sometimes associated Balaam with Jesus as a representative opponent of the Torah (R. T. Herford, Christianity in Talmud and Midrash, [1903] 1972, 63 ff.). The point of the objection may have been that the followers of Jesus opposed faith to law and therefore appeared to sanction an antinomianism which gave licence to immorality. Paul was ever conscious that his gospel was open to this perversion, but refused to countenance it (cf. e.g. Rom. 6:1).

Balaam's advocacy of eating idol-offerings and of fornication brings us also to the terms of the Apostolic Decree of Acts 15:20, 29, which echo Num. 25:1–2. The Acts represents Paul, to whom antinomians might appeal, as having assented to these terms.

In Rev. John rejects the application of the term "Balaam" to Christians as such, while turning the word against a perversion to which the gospel of faith apart from works was open.

4. It is not clear whether the Nicolaitans are necessarily to be seen as gnostics, as Harnack formerly argued. But changing conditions might bring new arguments to the fore, and those who once appealed to Pauline teaching might later use such new fashions of thought as suited their end. Nor can we judge the vexed question whether the Nicolaitans are to be connected with the antinomians of Jude and 2 Pet.

The churches of Asia were, I suggest, under severe pressures under Domitian and could secure their position only by accommodation either to Judaism or to the dictates of pagan society. The Nicolaitans (and Jezebel) are mentioned in connection with those three cities where we have reason to think the pagan compromise was most insistent. The temptation to idolatry at Thyatira may plausibly be connected with the strength of the pagan trade-guilds in that city: the Christian who valued his livelihood was under pressure to participate in the idolatrous feasts of his guild. At Ephesus there was the power of the Artemis cult. Pergamum was the provincial centre of the imperial cult, and a new rigour of enforcement of that cult by Domitian faced the church with an acute dilemma. Safety might be assured only by what John saw as amounting to apostasy. The Nicolaitans and their kind were plausible advocates of the pagan compromise (cf. further C. J. Hemer in PEQ. 105, 1973, 6–12, and literature there cited). C. J. Hemer

(a). G. R. Beasley-Murray, The Book of Revelation, New Century Bible, 1974, 85–91; H. Cowan, "Nicolaitans", HDB III 547 f.; E. S. Fiorenza, "Apocalyptic and Gnosis in the Book of Revelation and Paul", JBL 92, 1973, 565–81; A. von Harnack, "The Sect of the Nicolaitans and Nicolaus, the Deacon of Jerusalem", Journal of Religion 3, 1923, 413–22; C. J. Hemer, A Study of the Letters to the Seven Churches with Special Reference to their Social Background, Dissertation, Manchester, 1969, 191–206; R. W. Moss, "Nicolaitans", ERE IX 363–66; W. M. Ramsay, The Letters to the Seven Churches, 1904, 299–302, and 335–53.
(b). N. Brox, "Nikolaos und Nikolaiten", Vigiliae Christianae 19, 1965, 23–30; M. Goguel, "Les Nicolaïtes", Revue de l'Histoire des Religions 115, 1937, 5–36.

Nineveh

Νινευή

Νινευή (Nineuē), less common: Νινευί (Nineui), Nineveh; Νινευίτης (Nineuitēs), Ninevite.

CL Nineveh (Gk. Ninos, Ninus) is cited copiously in the classical Gk. historians.

Xenophon refers to the city of Mespila (Anab. 3, 4, 10) observing that it was once inhabited by the Medes. Mespila is modern Mosul, the city opposite Nineveh on the west bank of the Tigris. Nineveh is cited by Herodotus on a number of occasions and Dio (Roman History) cites it in a description of the Roman incursion into Assyria. Diodorus and Strabo make mention of the city as well. Josephus makes numerous references to the city (e.g. Ant. 9, 10, 21; 9, 11, 3) attributing its founding to Assyras.

OT The references to Nineveh in the LXX (cf. Gen. 10:11 f.; Isa. 37:37; Jon. 1:2; Zeph. 2:13) are similar to the references in the Heb. OT. The Heb. form nînᵉwēh denotes both the district (Ass. ninua[ki]) and the metropolis ([āl]-ninua).

Nineveh is mentioned 17 times in the OT. According to Gen. 10:11, 12, the city was founded by Nimrod and, in 2 Ki. 19:36, Sennacherib is described as returning to his royal residence at Nineveh after his failure to conquer Jerusalem (cf. also 2 Ki. 18:15). A parallel reference occurs in Isa. 37:37.

The city figures prominently in the prophecy of → Jonah (1:2; 3:2, 3,4, 5, 6, 7; 4:11) where its wickedness is described as the cause for its threatened destruction. The three days' journey required to cross it (Jon. 3:3) possibly refers to the administrative district of Nineveh (Hatra-Khorsabad-Nimrud). The preaching of the prophet Jonah led to repentance on the part of the citizens of that city which averted the impending catastrophe (Jon. 3:10).

The city of Nineveh also figures prominently in the prophecy of Nahum. The book of Nahum is a prophetic oracle dealing solely with the destruction of Nineveh (cf. Nah. 1:1; 3:7). The reference to the opening of the river gates (Nah. 2:6) may picture the inundation of part of the city effected by a coalition of Medes, Babylonians and Scythians who conquered Nineveh.

Nineveh is cited in the prophecy of Zephaniah (2:13) where its destruction is mentioned along with the destruction of other peoples in an oracle depicting God's → judgment on Israel's enemies and Israel's eventual vindication.

Nineveh is mentioned in cuneiform sources from the reigns of Gudea (2200 B.C.) and Hammurabi (c. 1750 B.C.). Extensive archaeological excavation at the site of ancient Nineveh has revealed occupation from prehistoric times. In the reigns of Shamshi-Adad I (c. 1800 B.C.) and Hammurabi the city's importance as the site of the temple of Ishtar was maintained in the restoration and beautification of the temple. With the restoration of Assyria's fortunes under Shalmaneser I (c. 1260 B.C.) Nineveh gained in importance and became one of the royal residences.

Perhaps the Assyrian king who made the greatest contribution to the greatness of Nineveh was Sennacherib who rebuilt the defences of the city and constructed a system of dams and canals. A number of buildings and parks were constructed during his reign as well (704–681 B.C.).

Several important cultural contributions were made by Ashurbanipal (669–627 B.C.). Bas-reliefs from this time witness to the high degree of skill achieved by the artists who were encouraged by Ashurbanipal's love for the arts.

With the death of Ashurbanipal there began the events which led to the decline of the Assyrian empire and the demise of Nineveh. The alliance of Babylonians, Medes and Scythians was able to effect the fall of Nineveh in 612 B.C. after a siege of several months. Thereafter Nineveh became a symbol of Assyria's utter collapse.

Archaeological excavations have been carried on extensively at the site of ancient Nineveh beginning with the work of Austen Layard in 1847. The present site of Nineveh is marked by two mounds, Tell Quyunjiq ("hill of many sheep"), a name reminiscent of Zephaniah's prophecy concerning Nineveh (Zeph. 2:14), and Tell Nebi Yunus ("hill of the prophet Jonah") which is still covered by a village.

As the chief city of Assyria Nineveh was the crystallization of the culture and power of that kingdom. As such, it represented to the OT prophets the seat of the cruelty and oppression that the Assyrian empire had brought to bear on Israel.

T. McComiskey

NT Nineveh is referred to in the Matthaean and Lucan versions of the saying concerning the sign of the prophet → Jonah. "The men of Nineveh will arise at the judgment with this generation to condemn it; for they repented at the preaching of Jonah, and behold, something greater than Jonah is here" (Matt. 12:41 par. Lk. 11:32). The wording is identical, but whereas Matt. 12:42 goes on to cite a similar instance of the pagan "queen of the South" (the queen of Sheba, 1 Ki. 10:1–13) coming from the ends of the earth to hear the wisdom of Solomon, Lk. inverts the two illustrations. The point of both stories is to contrast the responsiveness of outsiders with the chosen people which Jesus calls "this generation". For not content with what Jesus has already said and done, they still sought a sign (cf. also Matt. 16:1; 1 Cor. 1:22). Jesus replies that "An evil and adulterous generation seeks for a sign; but no sign shall be given to it except the sign of the prophet Jonah. For as Jonah was three days and three nights in the belly of the whale, so will the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth" (Matt. 12:39 f.; cf. Lk. 11:29). The reply was enigmatic, for it was, as one might expect, not the → generation that was judged but the prophet. In the first instance the sign indicates the rejection of the prophet (cf. Jon. 1:4, 10, 12, 15). But it also indicates that death will not be the end of the Son of man, and that his vindication will soon come. Then follows the reference to the citizens of Nineveh who responded to the preaching of Jonah when the prophet proclaimed that the Lord intended to overthrow the city because of its wickedness (cf. Jon. 3:1–10). The allusion invites a similar response, so that judgment may be averted. This is underlined by the implicit contrast between the hearers of Jesus who were not pagans (like the people of Nineveh) but members of the people of God, and by the explicit contrast between Jonah and Jesus. The expression "and behold, something greater than Jonah is here" invites the hearers to think for themselves as to who Jesus is and what was his relation to the kingdom of God which he proclaimed (cf. Matt. 16:13 ff.; Mk. 8:27 ff.; Lk. 9:18 ff.).

Lk.'s account omits the reference to the three days and nights. It focuses entirely on the response of the Ninevites: "For as Jonah became a sign to the men of Nineveh, so will the Son of man be to this generation" (Lk. 11:30). The implication is that Jonah preached to the Ninevites as one who had come from the dead.

M. Black suggests that the vb. anastēnai . . . meta (arise with) represents a well-attested Semitism meaning dispute, and that the words en tē krisei were added in the Gk. to make the Aramaic idiom intelligible (An Aramaic Approach to the Gospels and Acts, 1967², 134).

C. Brown

→ Jonah, → Judgment, → Resurrection

A. H. Layard, Nineveh and its Remains, I–II, 1849; and Discoveries in the Ruins of Nineveh and Babylon, 1853; A. Parrot, Nineveh and the Old Testament, 1955; G. Smith, Assyrian Discoveries, 1875; E. A. Speiser, "Nineveh", IDB III 551 ff.; R. C. Thompson and R. W. Hutchinson, A Century of Exploration at Nineveh, 1929; R. C. Thompson, "The Buildings on Quyunjiq, the larger mound of Nineveh", Iraq 1, 1934, 95–104; R. C. Thompson and R. W. Hutchinson, "The site of the palace of Ashurnasirpal at Nineveh", Liverpool Annals of Archaeology and Anthropology 18, 1931, 79; "The British Museum Excavations on the Temple of Ishtar at Nineveh", ibid. 19, 1932, 55–116; R. C. Thompson and M. E. L. Mallowan, "The British Museum Excavations at Nineveh, 1931, 1932", Liverpool Annals of Archaeology and Anthropology 20, 1933, 71–120; D. J. Wiseman, "Nineveh", NBD 888 ff.; and "Nineveh", ZPEB IV 440–44.

Noah

Νωέ	Νωέ (Nōe), Heb. nōaḥ, Noah.

OT 1. Noah (Heb. nōaḥ, probably cognate with nûaḥ, "rest") was the tenth in line of descent from Adam (Gen. 5:28 f.) and figures as the hero of the flood narrative (Gen. 6:11–9:19), as an outstandingly righteous man (Gen. 6:9, 7:1; Ezek. 14:14, 20) who "found favour in Yahweh's eyes" (Gen. 6:8), and as the first man to plant a vineyard (Gen. 9:20) – which was apparently the fulfilment of his father Lamech's prophecy at his birth: "Out of the ground which Yahweh has cursed this one shall bring us relief [y^{e}naḥ^{a}mēnû] from our work and from the toil of our hands" (Gen. 5:29). With his wife, his three sons and their wives, he survived the flood in the ark which he constructed at God's command, and became the ancestor of the new, post-diluvial world.

He is mentioned in Ezek. 14:14, 20, where God affirms that, if Noah lived in Jerusalem in the period preceding its destruction by the Babylonians, his righteousness would avail to deliver himself alone (not even, presumably, the seven members of his family who were delivered with him at the time of the flood). On a more cheerful note, on the eve of the return from the Babylonian exile Jerusalem is assured that Yahweh's steadfast love to her will be as irrevocable as his covenant with the human race in "the days of Noah" (Isa. 54:9 f.; cf. Gen. 9:8–17).

2. The Jewish wisdom writers found in Noah an example of true wisdom. Because he "was found perfect and righteous", says Ben Sira, "a remnant was left to the earth when the flood came" (Sir. 44:17 f.). "When the earth was flooded", says the author of Wisdom, "wisdom saved it again, steering the righteous man in a cheap structure of wood" (Wis. 10:4). Philo notes that Noah is "the first man recorded as righteous in the sacred scriptures" (Congr. 90) and gives "righteousness" alongside "rest" as the meaning of his name (Abr. 27). He praises him as a victorious athlete, who won his citation because "he had been well-pleasing to God" (Abr. 35; cf. Gen. 6:9 LXX).

3. The Ethiopic Enoch incorporates parts of one or more Noah apocalypses (6–11; 54:7–55:2; 60; 65:1–69:25; 106; 107). Most of these are concerned with the fall of the angels, the ensuing → judgment of the flood and the age of blessing to follow. One of them, however (106:1–19), describes the new-born Noah as a wonder-child: Lamech suspects that he may be the son of an intrusive angel, and consults his father Methuselah, who in turn goes to "the ends of the earth" to consult his father Enoch. Enoch confirms that Noah is indeed Lamech's son, and that God will do "a new thing on the earth" in his day. Essentially the same story appears in the Genesis apocryphon from Qumran (1Q GenApoc. 2) and in fragments from Cave 4, one of which even gives the baby's weight (J. T. Milik, Ten Years of Discovery in the Wilderness of Judaea, 1959, SBT 26, 35).

NT 1. In the teaching of Jesus the flood of Noah's day is recalled, like the destruction of Sodom and the neighbouring cities, as a pattern of the judgment that will overtake the world at the coming of the Son of man, especially in its swiftness and suddenness (Lk. 17:26 f.; cf. Matt. 24:37–39).

2. In Heb. 11:7 Noah's faith is emphasized; the quality of his faith was manifested by his prompt obedience to the divine admonition (cf. Gen. 6:22). Thus he "condemned the world" (i.e. exposed the perversity of those who refused to believe God) and (like Abraham at a later date) was justified by faith.

3. In 1 Pet. 3:19 ff. there is a reference to the spirits imprisoned because of their disobedience "when God's patience waited in the days of Noah, during the building of the ark, in which a few, that is, eight persons were saved through water." To these spirits Christ is said to have made proclamation – proclamation, it may be inferred, of his triumph which finally sealed their doom. The relevance of the flood narrative to the life-setting of 1 Peter lies in its providing an OT counterpart to Christian → baptism which the readers of the letter were "now" receiving (v. 21).

4. In 2 Pet. 2:4 f. the preservation of Noah, "with seven other persons", is set in antithesis to the imprisonment in Tartarus of the rebel angels until the last judgment (cf. Jude 6) – a guarantee of God's power to preserve the godly and punish the wicked. Noah is here called "a herald [kēryx] of righteousness"; cf. Jos., Ant. 1, 74; Sib.Or. 1:125 ff.; 1 Clem. 7:6; 9:4, and Gen. R. 30:7 (on Gen. 6:9) which says that "God had a herald [kārôz] in the generation of the flood." In 2 Pet. 3:5–7 the destruction by water of "the world that then existed" is viewed as a harbinger of the destruction of the present world by fire.

5. The absence of any mention of Noah in the Pauline letters is noteworthy. Although he was the second father of the human race, he is not treated as a typical figure like Adam (Rom. 5:12 ff.). Neither does Paul make any reference to the "Noachian decrees" – the injunctions of Gen. 9:1–7 which were held in rabbinical teaching to be binding on all Noah's descendants, Gentiles as well as Jews. According to the oldest forms of this teaching, six of the seven "Noachian decrees" had already been enjoined on Adam; only the seventh (the prohibition of eating flesh with the blood in it) was given for the first time to Noah (SB III 36). Paul regarded the ungodliness of the pagan world (Rom. 1:18 ff.) as disobedience to God's creation ordinances.

The "Noachian decrees" may be reflected in the apostolic ruling of Acts 15:20, 29; 21:25, especially in the Western text, where the original wording, with its emphasis on food restrictions, has been given the form of a mainly ethical requirement that Gentile converts to Christianity should abstain from idolatry, fornication and → "blood" (it being left uncertain whether this means eating with the blood or shedding human blood). F. F. Bruce

(a). C. K. Barrett, From First Adam to Last, 1962, 23–26, 30; A. Heidel, The Gilgamesh Epic and Old Testament Parallels, 1946; W. G. Lambert and A. R. Millard, Atrahasīs: The Babylonian Story of the Flood, 1969; B. Reicke, The Disobedient Spirits and Christian Baptism, 1946; E. Schürer, A History of the Jewish People in the Time of Jesus Christ II, ii, 318 f.; S. S. Schwarzschild and S.

Berman, "Noachide Laws", Encyclopaedia Judaica, 1972, II, 1189–1191; D. Young, E. Hallevy, et al., "Noah", Encyclopaedia Judaica, 1972, XII, 1191–1198.
(b). G. Fohrer, "Noah", *RGG*³ III 1501 f.; G. Strecker, "Noachidische Gebote", *RGG*³ III, 1500 f.

Number

ἀριθμός	ἀριθμός (arithmos), number.

CL arithmos, is derived from a root ar*, to fit; cf. ara, fitting; harmonia, construction; arthmos, connection, friendship; Lat. ars, art.

1. arithmos denotes in general Gk. usage (a) that which has been brought together, a quantity, total, number, extent, amount (e.g. chrysiou, of gold, Xen., Cyr. 8, 2, 16). But it can also mean (b) the assessment of numbers, i.e. count, muster (Hdt., 8, 7), and then a troop, a military unit (CIG, V, 187). Anyone who (c) is included in the count is a man of distinction or reputation (Homer, Od. 11,449; Eur., Frag. 519). Conversely en oudeni arithmō einai (to be in no number) is to be ignored, disregarded. Where arithmos is understood as quantity as opposed to quality it can be (d) the virtual embodiment of that which is worthless, futile, empty (cf. arithmos logōn, empty words, Soph., OC 382). Occasionally (e) arithmos has the sense of code, cipher.

2. In the popular and religious and philosophical thought of Hellenism gematria (the process of encoding a word by adding together the numerical value of its component letters) gained great significance. The decoding of a gematrical number was only possible for the initiated, since the sum itself is ambiguous. The scribbling found on a wall in Pompeii (before A.D. 79) which runs: "I love her whose number is 545" might be called a kind of gematrical frivolity. The combination of three words with the numerical value 284 (Gaios – hagios – agathos, found by adding together the value of the individual letters) in a Roman inscription is even more odd. Gaios (numerical value: 3 + 1 + 10 + 70 + 200) is at the same time to be called a hagios (pure; numerical value: 1 + 3 + 10 + 70 + 200) and an agathos (good, fine; numerical value: 1 + 3 + 1 + 9 + 70 + 200) man. The words are interchangeable from the point of view of gematria, because they are of equal value. The "number of the year" Abrasax, 365, mentioned in the Leiden magical papyrus, betrays the stamp of a speculative gematria, which arbitrarily replaces the number of days in a year by a meaningless – but therefore all the more mysterious – word; the word Abrasax retains its mysterious character in later gnostic texts.

OT 1. The LXX renders several Heb. and Aram. terms by arithmos, most commonly mispār, number, corresponding as a rule with the general Gk. meaning (a) (above CL) e.g. Gen. 34:30; Exod. 16:16. arithmos has the same sense when translating middâh, measure (Ps. 38[39]:5); rō'š, (lit. head) sum, total (Num. 1:49); miḵsâh, number, amount (Exod.12:4; cf. Lev. 27:23); and Aram. minyān, number (Ezr. 6:17); and when rendering bim^{e}ṭē m^{e}'âṭ, with few people, in small numbers (Deut. 26:5); 'ēn mispār or 'ēn qēṣeh, without end, i.e. innumerable (Gen. 41:49; Isa. 2:7); and 'āṣ^{e}mû missappēr, to be exceedingly numerous (Ps. 40:5 [39:6]). The meaning CL 1 (b) occurs (inter alia) in 1 Chr. 7:5 (yāḥaś in hithp.), enroll by genealogy (in the family register); Isa. 34:2 (ṣāḇā', host); 2 Chr. 17:14 (p^equddâh, muster, enumeration). Meanings CL 1 (c)–(e) are not attested in the OT.

2. In Rabbinic and Jewish Hellenistic literature, however, as well as the meanings 1 (a) and 1 (b) (e.g. 2 Macc. 8:16; 3 Macc. 5:2), gematria is also found as an exegetical method and for coding, without arithmos always occurring specifically or the gematrical process being identified as such. Tg.O., for example, replaces the information in Num. 12:1 that → Moses took a "Cushite" (heathen) wife by the information that the woman was "lovely to look at"; both produce the numerical value 736. (For a further succession of gematriae cf. Sib. 5:12 ff.)

NT 1. The NT links up with the LXX linguistic usage in that it generally only has the meanings CL 1 (a) 1 (b) for the word arithmos, which in any case only occurs 18 times (including 10 passages in Rev., and 4 in Acts). Meaning 1 (a) without concrete numerical details is found in Rom. 9:27; Rev. 20:8 (quotation of Isa. 10:22, though not the LXX); and with numerical details in (e.g.) Jn. 6:10; Acts 4:4, Rev. 5:11; 7:4. Meaning 1 (b), in the writer's opinion, appears in Lk. 22:3 (company). No usage of CL 1(c) and 1 (d) can be detected, although in Rev. 13:17 f. there is found the formulation "the name of the beast or the number of his name", an express summons to calculate "the number of the beast" which is "the number of a man". The number itself is given as 666, or according to other less significant MSS 616 (probably not original). This is thus an instance of 1 (e) (cf. also 15:2).

2. Rev. 13:17 f. is the sole place where the word arithmos assumes exegetical importance in the NT. Doubtless the matter in hand here is a functional gematria, which on obvious grounds puts into code the name of the person intended. The context speaks pictorially of a "beast" (→ Animal, art. thērion), which in church and exegetical tradition has been customarily and probably pertinently interpreted of the → Antichrist. "The number of the beast", which is stated to be "the number of a man", shows that behind the beast and the number there is concealed a human figure known to the hearers and readers of the text of that time. This excludes all attempts to decode the number which do not relate to a human figure. (In passing it may be noted that the text does not make it explicit whether one is to employ the Gk. or Heb. alphabet for the interpretation of the number 666, though the text itself is in Gk.)

Of the many attempts at interpretation the consonantal Heb. script for "Caesar Nero" (qsr nrwn = 100 + 60 + 200 + 50 + 200 + 6 + 50 = 666), for example, has some probability. This solution is all the more attractive in that, combined with 17:11 ("the beast which was and is not"), it could refer to the legend of Nero redivivus, so that the Antichrist would thus be painted in the colours of the hated Nero. The fact that the story of Nero redivivus is also known from Judaic apocalyptic literature (cf. e.g. Sib. 5:138 ff.) would support this. But no definite interpretation of Rev. 13:17 f. can be given; E. Stauffer interprets it of Domitian in "666", Coniectanea Neotestamentica 11, 1947, p. 237 ff. The same applies to the number of 153 fish in Jn. 21:11 which may also be regarded as a cipher. (See further W. Bousset, Die Offenbarung Johannis, KEK 16, [1906] 1966, 368–79; J. Behm, Die Offenbarung Johannis 1920, I, 364–68; NTD 11, 1949, 79 ff.; R. H. Charles, The Revelation of St. John, ICC, II, 70 f., 76–87; G. B. Caird, The Revelation of St John the Divine, BNTC, 1966, 174 ff., 216 ff.)

As the process of gematria has already shown, numbers in the ancient world do not merely indicate quantities but also qualities. Some numbers, in addition to their quantitive meaning, also possess an almost fixed inner symbolic meaning. This is especially true of the numbers four, seven and twelve, which are found in the NT with a striking cumulative frequency. E. D. Schmitz

Care must be taken not to attribute theological significance to the use of particular numbers where it is arguable that no such significance was intended. Many cases are better treated as literal or rhetorical or as round-number approximations where these explanations seem natural and sufficient. Thus the particular frequency of multiples of five and ten is in part a natural consequence of the use of decimal reckoning. So too the prevalence of reference to the third, sixth and ninth hours stems from the duodecimal pattern of the day.

Some cases are less obvious. In Matt. 1 the genealogy of Jesus is schematized into sequences of fourteen, which is double seven. The enumeration here is selective and cannot be treated as being exhaustive. It is therefore reasonable to suppose that the generations listed have been chosen with a purpose. The question remains how far that purpose was theologically significant rather than merely rhetorical or mnemonic.

The total of 153 fish in Jn. 21:11 is another debatable instance. There is ancient precedent for symbolic interpretation here (Jerome, Comm.Ezek. 14 ad Ezek. 47:6 ff. [MPL XXV, 474C]; Augustine, Tract. in Ioh. 122, 8). Modern scholars have explained the figure by gematria (J. A. Emerton and P. R. Ackroyd), or as a "triangular" number, following Augustine (F. H. Colson and R. M. Grant; see bibliography). The present writer prefers to follow J. H. Bernard (The Gospel according to St. John, ICC, I, 1928, lxxxvii, 699 f. ad loc.) and L. Morris (The Gospel according to John, NLC 1971, 867 ad loc.) in taking the number literally. For the practice of counting a catch for sharing among the participating fisherman see E. F. F. Bishop, " 'A fire of coals with fish laid thereon, and Bread' ", ExpT 50, 1938–9, 265). John elsewhere gives precise numbers where it would be superfluous to look for a symbolical meaning (46 in 2:20; 38 in 5:5), and his constant emphasis is on witness, not on esoteric gnōsis. See further Bernard's careful consideration of "allegorical method" in the interpretation of John (op. cit., I, lxxxiii–xc). This prompts caution, and his conclusions inform and control his treatment of numerical details. It is indeed noteworthy that the number seven, so often symbolic elsewhere, never appears in the Fourth Gospel.

There is however no doubt that numbers are often used symbolically in the Rev. Yet even here it is sometimes needful to ask whether the symbolic explanation is sufficient, or excludes the literal. It is surely significant in the context of this book that there were seven churches of Asia. Yet the enumeration is of a named group, whose choice seems to have been dictated by geographical particularities, and which may indeed have functioned regularly as the most efficient centres of communication for the churches of the province (W. M. Ramsay, Letters to the Seven Churches, 1904, 171–196).

There is then, I submit, need for discriminating appraisal of complex possibilities in the study of particular numerical usages. OT, apocalyptic, Philonic and other parallels may need consideration, but are not necessarily determinative. There are notably diverse backgrounds of thought within the NT writings themselves. And their earliest surviving interpreters were not necessarily in line with the writers' own meaning.

The following notes on some additional numbers must be highly selective. They will inevitably focus on symbolic or otherwise significant numerals, but some cases are exegetically important for other reasons. C. J. Hemer

δύο

δύο (dyo), two.

1. The word dyo occurs some 135 times in the NT, but there are few of real importance. Two is the smallest expression of plurality, and naturally points to alternatives or contrasts (cf. Matt. 6:24; 21:28; 24:40–41). Emissaries are often represented as acting and travelling in pairs (cf. Mk. 6:7; Matt. 11:2; 21:1). "Two or three" is a frequent approximation for a very few. None of these obvious usages need delay us.

2. In Jn. 8:17 we read that "the testimony of two men is true": Jesus himself and the Father are the two who bear witness to him. There is evident reference here to the Jewish law of evidence deriving from Num. 35:30; Deut. 17:6; 19:15. False witnesses are suborned in pairs (1 Ki. 21:10; Matt. 26:60). There are several NT references to the need for two or three witnesses (Matt. 18:16; 2 Cor. 13:1; 1 Tim. 5:19; Heb. 10:28). Perhaps the motif may reasonably be traced elsewhere in the gospel events (Matt. 17:1 par. Mk. 9:2, Lk. 9:28; Matt. 26:37 par. Mk. 14:33; Lk. 24:13; Jn. 1:35 ff.).

3. The only significant usage of the simple numeral two in Rev. seems to be at 11:4–11. Again the theme is witness. The imagery goes back to that of Zech. 4:2–3, 11–14. Here, however, the two witnesses have powers corresponding to those of → Moses and → Elijah (Rev. 11:6), who are not named, but represent the testimony respectively of the Law and the Prophets (cf. again the Transfiguration narratives. → also on "three and a half" below).

4. In Rev. 1:16 a sharp, two-edged sword (rhomphaia distomos) proceeds from the mouth of the risen Christ. The elements of the concept are repeated in the letter to Pergamum in 2:12 and 16. Again the language recalls the OT (Isa. 11:4; 49:2), but is applied to the need of the Pergamene Christian who faced judicial execution by the Roman authority. rhomphaia was typically the foreigner's sword. Its double edge describes the Roman weapon, and the Roman proconsul wielded the "power of the sword" (ius gladii). But here it is Christ who holds the ultimate executive and judicial authority. The sword is associated with the "word of God" (Rev. 19:13; 15; Heb. 4:12; Eph. 6:17). C. J. Hemer

τρεῖς

τρεῖς, τρία (treis, tria), three; τρίς (tris), three times.

1. This number and its derivatives are very common throughout the biblical literature, but great caution is called for in evaluating significant usages. Three is a very common and natural rhetorical number, and threefold repetition or grouping occurs often where the number itself is not mentioned. Many repetitive narratives and parables have three elements. Many basic concepts are readily formalized on a tripartite pattern: beginning, middle, end; past, present, future; body, soul, spirit. Diverse examples are numerous: there are three enduring gifts in 1 Cor. 13:13, three witnesses in 1 Jn. 5:8, threefold titles of Christ and of God in Rev. 1:4 and 4:8.

2. A period of three days is very commonly mentioned in the OT. It is often the length of a journey or of an interlude before a crisis (cf. Gen. 30:36; 40:12 ff.; Exod. 3:18). Note the easy transition to the phrase "the third day" (e.g. 40:20; → tritos below), and to the fuller expression "three days and three nights" (1 Sam. 30:12; Jon. 1:17). As the ancients reckoned inclusively, this might denote a period considerably shorter than seventy-two hours.

We should not attach too much importance to these phrases in their OT context, but some of them are taken up significantly in the NT with reference to the death and resurrection of Jesus. This is particularly striking in the allusion to Jonah (Matt. 12:40), a figure elsewhere prominent in the Gospels (Matt. 16:4; Lk. 11:29–32). See also Matt. 26:61; 27:40, 63; Mk. 8:31; 14:58; 15:29; Jn. 2:19–20.

3. Although three has widely been thought a sacred number, specifically religious uses of it in the Bible seem to be relatively few. In the OT it is frequent in cultic contexts (e.g. Exod. 23:14, 17). In the Rev. it is not so noteworthy as might have been expected. In the structural pattern the characteristic seven sometimes divides into four and three (Rev. 8:13 and implicitly elsewhere), and the twelve is composed of four threes (Rev. 21:13). There is, however, no reason to think that religious symbolism there attaches to three itself.

Yet the number three assumes peculiar importance indirectly in connection with the concept of the Trinity. There are threefold formulae listing the Persons in such passages as Matt. 28:19; Jn. 14:26; 15:26; 2 Cor. 13:13; 1 Pet. 1:2 (→ God, art. theos NT 8). There seems to be no precursor of this idea in any significant usage of the numerical concept in the OT, nor may it reasonably be connected with the occurrence of triads of deities in ancient Near Eastern paganism.

C. J. Hemer

τρίτος — τρίτος (tritos), third.

1. The ordinal tritos occurs 72 times in the Rev., more often than any other ordinal, and much more than the cardinal treis. In 14 of these cases it represents the fraction $\frac{1}{3}$, referring to disasters in which a "third" part is destroyed. This idea in Rev. 8 and elsewhere may be compared with Ezek. 5:2, 12. Rev. 12:4 is problematic: see Dan. 8:10, where however the fraction is not mentioned. For discussion of suggested parallels see R. H. Charles, Revelation, ICC, I, 1920, 310–314, 319. Cf. also Baba Metzia 59^{b}.

2. The characteristic uses of tritos in the Gospels and elsewhere are quite different. Of 53 occurrences outside the Rev., 13 refer to the resurrection of Christ "on the third day". This was evidently a characteristic motif of primitive Christian preaching (Acts 10:40; 1 Cor. 15:4). The scripture to which the latter passage refers is evidently Hos. 6:2, which speaks in context of the restoration of the apostate kingdom of Israel. Compare the parallel usages of "three days" above, and also the enigmatic expression in Lk. 13:32.

3. 2 Cor. 12:2 speaks of "the third heaven". Some have seen allusion here to a Jewish conception of seven heavens (Test. Lev. 2, 3; Sl. Enoch 3–21). This explanation is questionable: Paul would seem to imply that he was carried to the highest heaven, not to a lower place in a hierarchy of heavens. Nor is it clear that the largely Gentile Corinthians would have understood this kind of Jewish speculation. "Paradise", however, mentioned in 2 Cor. 12:4, was linked with the "third heaven" of the series (→ Heaven; → Paradise). C. J. Hemer ἐνιαυτοὺς τρεῖς καὶ μῆνας ἕξ | ἐνιαυτοὺς τρεῖς καὶ μῆνας ἕξ (eniautous treis kai mēnas hex), three years and six months, three and a half years.

This number is curiously prominent under various guises both in Dan. and in Rev., and seems to denote an interval of calamity and suffering pending God's deliverance. It is the half of seven. It is also "a time and times and the dividing of time", or $1 + 2 + \frac{1}{2}$ (Dan. 7:25; Rev. 12:7). Historically the three-and-a-half-year period may have been associated with the length of Antiochus Epiphanes' possession of Jerusalem, which Josephus reckons thus (War 1, 7, 19). Lk. 4:25 and Jas. 5:17 treat the drought and famine of 1 Kings 17:1 as lasting three and a half years, a detail absent from the OT text (cf. however "the third year" in 1 Ki. 18:1). It seems clear that the three-and-a-half-year period was significant in apocalyptic tradition (cf. G. H. Box on 4 Ezra 5:4 in Charles, Pseudepigrapha, 569). In Rev. the forty-two months of Gentile or bestial domination (Rev. 11:2; 13:5) and the 1260 days of God's providing (11:3; 12:6; cf. 1 Kings 17:4) are equivalents of it (cf. again the different and varying resolutions of the $3\frac{1}{2}$ years in Dan. 8:14; 12:11, 12). At Rev. 11:9, 11 the interval shifts to three-and-a-half days before the rising of the witnesses. Note the fluidity of the use of OT allusion and of symbolism here, as in the successive links of different symbols with the Elijah motif (→ dyo above). See further for "$3\frac{1}{2}$" H. Burgmann in Revue de Qumran 8, 1972, 65–73.

C. J. Hemer

τέσσαρες | τέσσαρες (tessares), four.

CL The symbolic significance of the number four (tessares) is derived from the four points of the compass and the four directions of the wind (whereby the earth is pictured as a four-cornered disc), and also from the four seasons and the corresponding constellations. In Babylonian mythology the four signs of the Zodiac, Taurus, Leo, Scorpio and Aquarius, appear as powerful figures which support the firmament of heaven by its four corners, or as the four beasts of burden of the four-wheeled heavenly chariot. The number four thus symbolizes the totality of earth and universe.

OT The OT makes use of the number four in this traditional sense, but without taking over the mythical connotations (Ezek. 1:4 ff.; 15 ff.). Thus, in accord with ancient geography, four streams of Paradise encircle the four quarters of the globe (Gen. 2:10 ff.). In Zech. 1:18 ff. the four horns represent four empires, the four smiths Yahweh's omnipotence which stands ranged against them; in Zech. 6:5 the "four chariots driving out from 'the Lord of the whole earth' . . . [express] Yahweh's omnipotence, effective in all directions" (W. Zimmerli, Ezechiel, BKAT 13, 53). The four winds or corners of the earth are mentioned (e.g.) in Isa. 11:12 and Jer. 49:36. In Judaism, and particularly in apocalyptic, the mythology of the number four is again powerful (e.g. Eth.Enoch 18:2; 77:1 ff.; 82:11 ff.; but also R. Johanan ben Zakkai and his school). A multiple of four also occurs as a round figure for a limited totality, such as a generation, a man's age; e.g. 40 (tessarakonta) years (Gen. 25:20 etc.); 400 years, i.e. 10 generations (Gen. 15:13); 40 days (Gen. 7:4 ff.; Ezek. 24:18 etc.), where the rough period of a month possibly played a rôle.

NT In the NT the number four occurs in the purely numerical sense, e.g. Mk. 2:3; Jn. 11:17; 19:23 where the division of Jesus' clothes into four presupposes four watches or squads of soldiers (tetradion, cf. Philo, Flacc. 111; Acts 12:4); Acts 21:9, 23; 27:29. In Peter's vision of the great sheet with four corners containing clean and unclean → animals denoting God's acceptance of the Gentiles the imagery may suggest the four corners (Acts 10:11; 11:5) of the vault of heaven. The four horns of the altar are mentioned in Rev. 9:13 (cf. Exod. 30:1–3; → Sacrifice, art. thyō). But in addition, especially in apocalyptic texts, the number four occurs with a symbolic meaning. All these passages reflect the imagery of their original background, but the latter is no longer literally decisive for the meaning of the text: thus the idea of gathering the elect from the four winds (Matt. 24:31 par. Mk. 13:27) is comparable with saying from all quarters. In Rev. 4:6, 7, 8, 9; 5:6, 8, 11, 14; 6:1, 3, 5, 6, 7; 7:11; 14:3; 15:7; 19:4; cf. Ezek. 1:5–22, the imagery of the ancient world is formally adopted but with a transformed significance. The four beings (tessara zōa), originally figures of the Zodiac supporting the vault of heaven, become (by analogy with Isa. 6:2 f.) beings who praise God's holiness by day and by night (→ Cherub). The four angels at the "four corners of the earth" who hold the winds (Rev. 7:1) and later let them go (Rev. 9:14 f.) are creatures who serve God. Rev. 20:8 makes use of the ancient geographical idea of the four-cornered disc of the earth, in the middle of which lies the holy city. In this context the expression means no more than that the nations approach the holy city for the final → war at the end "from all sides" or "from every quarter".

In addition, the number 40 (tessarakonta) e.g. Matt. 4:2 par. occurs in Lk. 4:2; Mk. 1:13; Acts 1:3; 23:12, 21 in OT quotations and allusions, as does 400 (tetrakosioi) (Acts 5:36; 7:6; 13:20; Gal. 3:17) more frequently as round figures, but also in connection with specific numbers. E. D. Schmitz πέντε (pente), five.

| πέντε |

Five is common and natural as a round number wherever the decimal system is in use. Such usages as in Matt. 25:20; Lk. 12:52; 14:19; 16:28 call for no further comment. There is no clear evidence that this number should be given any symbolic meaning in the NT. The "five months" of Rev. 9:5, 10 are just a limited period of chastisement. It is an attractive conjecture that the figure is reminiscent of the actual life cycle of the locust (R. H. Charles, Revelation, I, ICC, 243). This concrete touch has no precedent in Joel. C. J. Hemer

ἑπτά

ἑπτά (hepta), seven; ἑπτάκις (heptakis), seven times.

CL The qualitative significance attaching to the number seven (hepta) throughout the whole history of religions can be explained from the original amazement felt at the regularity of the passage of time in seven-day periods consonant with the four phases of the moon, and secondarily from other astronomical observations. Since for primitive man there is no linear time-sequence, and he could only apprehend time as a period, seven became the symbol of the fulfilled and perfectly completed period. In Babylonian the number seven (kissatu) is synonymous with fullness, totality; correspondingly Heb. šᵉḇaʿ, seven, denotes fullness (Prov. 3:10, where "with plenty" RSV translates the Heb. for "seven"). Seven is the symbol of perfection. Philosophical speculations concerning the meaning of the number seven are known from Greece (Solon, Pseudo-Hippocrates), which Philo took up (e.g. Op.Mund. 90 ff.). In other respects Judaism up till the time of the NT followed OT usage.

OT The OT adopted the symbolic imagery content of the number seven in numerous ways: the completion of → creation in seven days (Gen. 1:1 ff.); seven-day feasts are fulfilled times (Lev. 23:6, 34); sprinkling of blood, seven times repeated (heptakis), brought Israel complete purification (Lev. 16:14, 19); Yahweh promised Cain sevenfold, i.e. comprehensive, vengeance (Gen. 4:15); Yahweh sees everything with seven eyes (Zech. 4:10); one of the marks of the fulfilment of the age of salvation is a sevenfold increase in the sun's illuminating power (Isa. 30:26); a man's full life-span is 10 × 7 years (Ps. 90:10; Isa. 23:15); a multiple of seven chiefly stands for a round figure, comprising the whole (Gen. 46:27; Jdg. 20:16; cf. also the seven Jewish brothers in 4 Macc. 8 ff. – their mother is called "mother of the nation" in 15:29); in proverbs seven can virtually signify all (Prov. 26:16). According to Jewish conceptions, a total of seventy nations live on the earth (Eth. Enoch 89:59 f.), an idea which is based on the table of the nations in Gen. 10, where 70 (LXX:72) nations are enumerated, and which was also determinative of the name "Septuagint", the translation of the OT into Gk. for the "70" nations of the world (cf. Aristeas with the legend of the origin of the LXX). Lk. 10:1 ff. should also be understood against the background of the idea of the 70 nations of the earth: the sending of the 70 disciples is aimed at the nations of the world.

The number seven is also encountered as a stylistic principle of arrangement, both in Rab. and in apocalyptic literature. (On the significance of seven in ancient thought see K. H. Rengstorf, TDNT II 627 ff.) For discussion of the cosmic week and the millennium → chilias.

NT 1. In the NT epistles the number seven occurs only with background reference to the OT: Rom. 11:4 (cf. 1 Ki. 19:18); Heb. 4:4 (cf. Gen. 2:2); 11:30 (cf.

Jos. 6:1 ff.). In Rom. 11:4 Paul adduces from 1 Ki. 19:18 that in his time there is already a Christian remnant of Israel, which represents the full total of Israel as dawn heralds the day (Rom. 11:16). In Mk. 12:18 ff. the → Sadducees imagine a case where a woman contracts a levirate marriage (Deut. 25:5 ff.) six times over. They wish to indicate by taking this example of a marriage, seven times repeated, that every case of levirate marriage, which was an institution by divine commandment, reduces the resurrection to an absurdity (→ Marriage, OT 5).

2. Someone possessed by seven pneumata, spirits (Matt. 12:43 ff. par. Lk. 11:26), or by seven daimonia, demons (Lk. 8:2), is totally possessed. In Matt. 18:21 Peter inquires concerning the limits of forgiveness: "As many as seven times?" There the seven has numerical significance. But Jesus replies that forgiveness has to take place "seventy times seven times", i.e. totally and without limit (cf. Lk. 17:4). For Lk. 10:1 ff., where the number suggests a mission to the nations, see above OT and below → hebdomēkonta.

3. Despite all the individual differences, the genealogical trees of Jesus in Matt. and Lk. are both orientated around the number seven. Matt. 1:17 f. has three groups of fourteen → generations: from → Abraham to → David, from David to the deportation to Babylon, and from then to Christ ($3 \times 14 = 3 \times 2 \times 7$). Lk. 3:23 ff. cites seventy-seven ancestors of Jesus: from Adam to Abraham (3×7), from Isaac to David (2×7), from Nathan to Shealtiel, i.e. the end of the Exile (3×7), from Zerubbabel to Jesus (3×7). Both evangelists are obviously interested in the fulfilment of history in the person of Jesus Christ; of salvation-history (Matt.) and world-history (Lk.). In other respects Matt. shows a particular predilection for the number seven as a scheme for the arrangement of his gospel (e.g. ch. 13; 23:13 ff.). It is the stylistic expression of his theology of fulfilment.

4. Rev. uses the number seven most frequently of all the NT writings. It is directed to seven churches of proconsular Asia, i.e. all churches (1:4, 11; 2 f.). Then there are seven spirits (1:4; 4:5; 5:6), seven seals (5:1), the → Lamb with seven horns and eyes (5:6), seven angels with seven trumpets (8:2–40:1), seven thunders (10:4 ff.). The number seven here denotes in general the final eschatological appearance of God, encompassing everything and setting everything in motion, on behalf of his church. Correspondingly, on the side opposed to God, there is a final action which is well-nigh able to withstand the power of God (e.g. the Dragon with seven crowned heads 12:3 etc.).

([Ed.] The number seven plays an important part in the structure of Rev. The book consists of seven series of visions, each in turn consisting of seven items. Moreover, the seven visions appear to correspond to the seven days of the creation story in Gen. 1. Whereas the Gen. story deals with the physical creation, Rev. deals with physical world in the light of the new creation from a christological standpoint. The broad outline is as follows: Day 1, the theme of light: Christ as the light amid the seven churches as lampstands in a dark world [Rev. 1–3]; Day 2, the firmament: world history from the perspective of heaven, the seven seals revealing what will come to pass [Rev. 4:1–8:2]; Day 3, the land, sea and vegetation: the future of the physical world revealed through the vision of the seven trumpets [Rev. 8:3–11:18]; Day 4, the sun, moon and stars: the seven things seen [Rev. 11:19–16:1]; Day 5, life and death from the waters: the seven bowls [Rev. 15:2–18:24]; Day 6, man: the seven last things seen taking up the theme of Adam and Eve in terms of the corruption of man by the great harlot and the judgment on Satan and death leading to a vision of a new heaven and earth, the restoration of what was lost through the fall [Rev. 19:1–21:8]; Day 7, the eternal sabbath: depicted in terms of the new Jerusalem [Rev. 21:9–22:21]. The seven series of visions appear not to be consecutive series of events, each one starting where the last leaves off, but a series of visions of world history from the ascension of Christ to the consummation, looking at the world from different standpoints and gradually building up to the end of history and the new creation.)

5. Seven appears as a round summary number in Acts 20:6; 21:4; 28:14 and possibly also in Matt. 15:34, 36, 37; 16:10; Mk. 8:5, 8, 20 (cf. A. Farrer, St Matthew and St Mark, 1954, 57–80). E. D. Schmitz ὀκτώ ὀκτώ (oktō), eight.

"Eight", like "six" in Lk. 13:14 and even "five" in Rev. 17:10, is occasionally involved in the significance attached to "seven", but is rarely important in itself. Thus "eight days" is just inclusive reckoning for a "week" (Lk. 9:28; Jn. 20:26). The Jewish male child was circumcised on the eighth day (cf. Gen. 17:12; Lev. 12:3; Lk. 1:59; 2:21; Phil. 3:5).

A difficulty is raised by two much debated passages, 1 Pet. 3:20 and 2 Pet. 2:5. In the latter case "Noah the eighth" is to be explained from the Greek idiom ogdoos autos, to give the sense "Noah and seven others". The parallel is then with 1 Pet. 3:20, not with Jude 14, and the two passages may be considered as having a similar reference. The emphasis is upon the fewness of those saved, an enumeration of → Noah's family. The concepts of 1 Pet. 3:20 were already the subject of allegoric interpretation in Justin, Dial, 138, 1, where the eight persons stand for the eighth day of resurrection and salvation. See further J. N. D. Kelly, The Epistles of Jude and of Peter, BNTC, 1969, 158 ff. It may, however, be doubted whether this was the original writer's intention or whether it represents a later and rather artificial elaboration of his typology. There is no parallel for later uses of the "eighth day" idea within the NT writings. Cf., however, Ep.Barn. 15:8–9.

C. J. Hemer

δέκα δέκα (deka), ten; δέκατος (dekatos), tenth; ἡ δεκάτη (hē dekatē), [the] tithe; δεκατόω (dekatoō), to tithe.

1. Ten, as the decimal base, is naturally very common, especially in round numbers and approximations, and in its large multiples (1 Cor. 4:15; 14:19; Rev. 5:11; etc.). The most noteworthy usages are contained in Rev.

2. The "ten days" of Rev. 2:10 are usually said to denote a typically short, or alternatively a typically prolonged but limited, period of tribulation. The phrase is commonly referred back to Dan. 1:12 ff. But it is not clear whether this allusion would have been readily perceived in Smyrna unless mediated through some more specific tradition, for the imagery of the letters is often concrete and pointed. No firm solution, however, can be offered on these lines. An interesting apocalyptic parallel might be seen in the ten generations of Sib. 4:45–87, which is probably close to Rev. in time and place. The phrase is differently paralleled in the reference to "five days" (hēmerōn pente) in an inscription of Smyrna, published by L. Robert (Hellenica V, 81–82), where the context is explained as gladiatorial. The present writer plans to discuss the problem further elsewhere.

3. Rev. refers to a dragon and a beast with seven heads and ten horns (Rev. 12:3; 13:1; 17:3, 7, 12, 16; → Animal, art. thērion). The beast has ten royal diadems on its horns (13:1), and the horns represent kings (17:12). The image is evidently derived from Dan. 7:24, where the horns stand for ten kings of the fourth world kingdom. But here it is differently used and the application is debated. The emperors are linked with the seven heads: the horns are eschatological beings rather than identifiable rulers. The number here may fairly be regarded as standing for the universal extension of their ephemeral power.

4. A special usage is the "tenth part" or "tithe". The substantival form dekatē is found in the secular papyri (e.g. P.Hibeh I, 115, 1): the verb (apo)dekatoō alludes to the specifically Jewish practice. The OT law enjoined the payment of one tenth for the support of the Levite (Num. 18:21 ff.). On tithing in the OT see further Gen. 28:22; 1 Sam. 8:15, 17; Lev. 27:30–33; Num. 18:20–32; Deut. 12:6–19; 14:22–27; 26:1–15; Neh. 10:37 f.; 12:44; 13:5, 12; 2 Chr. 31:5–12; Amos 4:4; Mal. 3:8, 10; → First; → Gift; → Sacrifice. The → Pharisees had made of this a legalistic burden (Luke 11:42; 18:12; → Herb).

The idea of the tithe is taken up in the argument of Heb. 7, which refers to Gen. 14:20. The → Levites who received the tithe prescribed by the law were the descendants of → Abraham: yet Abraham himself had given a tenth to → Melchizedek, as the lesser to the greater. How much greater then was the priesthood to which Abraham yielded place than that which his descendants exercised towards others under the law. C. J. Hemer

δεκάτη

δεκάτη (dekatē), a tenth part, tithe; δεκατόω (dekatoō), receive tithes, (pass.) pay tithes; ἀποδεκατόω (apodekatoō), give a tenth part, collect a tithe; ἀποδεκατεύω (apodekateuō), give one tenth, pay a tithe.

CL Instances of the vb. dekatoō appear to be lacking in secular Gk. and the papyri. It was probably coined to match the technical religious term dekatē, "tithe" (Moulton-Milligan, 140) that outside Jewish circles denoted (in particular) the tenth part of the spoils of battle that the Greeks regularly dedicated to some god (e.g. Xen., Anab. 5, 3, 4). apodekatoō and apodekateuō also seem to be terms found only in biblical Greek.

OT The verbs apodekatoō (6 uses in the LXX) and dekatoō (only in Neh. 10:37, LXX) both render Heb. 'āśar (piel, hiph., "pay tithes", "receive tithes"), while dekatē renders ma'ᵃśēr ("tithe") 9 times. The Hebrews were obligated to tithe their cereal and fruit crops and their livestock (Lev. 27:30–33), paying their tithes to the → Levites (Num. 18:20–24) or later to the descendants of Levi who served as priests (cf. Heb. 7:5). Payment was made in → Jerusalem (Deut. 12:5–6, 11, 17–18) or each third year in their home communities (Deut. 14:28–29; 26:12). Moreover, the Levites themselves were required to give one tenth of this tithe to the priests (Num. 18:26, 28; Neh. 10:38–39).

NT 1. Gospels. It is in connection with the → Pharisees that the 3 NT uses of the compound verbs occur. The self-righteous Pharisee of Jesus' parable (Lk. 18:9–14) seems to be claiming that by tithing all types of income (apodekateuō panta) he had gone beyond the law and so had put God in his debt. Perhaps the classic example of Pharisaic zeal and fastidiousness about tithing – to the neglect of "the weightier demands of the law" such as justice, mercy and fidelity – was their care to tithe (apodekatoute) even common garden plants that were used as condiments or as medicinal → herbs (Matt. 23:23; Lk. 11:42) although this may not have been required by the law (Deut. 14:22–23; Lev. 27:30–32).

2. Hebrews. Seven of the NT uses of dekatē and its verbal equivalents are found in Heb. 7:1–10. First (in vv. 1–2a) the author repeats the OT account (Gen. 14:17–20) of the priest-king → Melchizedek who met → Abraham returning from the slaughter of the Elamite king Chedorlaomer and three other rulers, blessed him and then received from him a tenth part (dekatēn, v. 2) of everything (= "the spoils of war", v. 4). Then follows (v. 2b) an explanation of the etymological meaning of Melchizedek's name and his title ("king of Salem"), and the observation that since scripture contains no record of his parentage, genealogy, birth or death, he resembles the → Son of God in remaining a → priest "for ever" (v. 3).

In vv. 4–10 the author establishes the superiority of the priesthood of Melchizedek to the levitical priesthood on three grounds. (1) Although not a Levite, Melchizedek received tithes (dedekatōken, v. 6) from Abraham, the ancestor of the Levites, and himself blessed Abraham who had already received the promises (vv. 4–7). (2) In Israelite law mortal men belonging to the levitical priesthood received tithes (dekatas). However, in the scriptural record, Melchizedek, to whom Abraham gave tithes, is never said to have forfeited his priesthood by death (v. 8; cf. v. 3). (3) Through the act of his ancester Abraham, Levi himself can in one sense be said to have paid tithes (dedekatōtai) to Melchizedek (vv. 9–10).

3. The NT and tithing. Is tithing an obligation under the new covenant? The NT writers maintain an eloquent silence on the matter (note especially 1 Cor. 9:13), choosing rather to emphasize: (1) the need for spontaneous generosity (Lk. 21:4; Acts 11:28–30; 2 Cor. 8:1–3, 7; 9:5–10; Eph. 4:28; 1 Tim. 6:18; Heb. 13:16; Jas. 2:15–16) in response to God's limitless giving (2 Cor. 8:8–9; 9:15; 1 Jn. 3:17); (2) the need for individual decision (1 Cor. 16:2; 2 Cor. 9:7; cf. Acts 11:29) apart from external pressure (2 Cor. 8:8; 9:5, 7); (3) the blessedness of giving (Acts 20:35); and (4) the consequence of giving as being the glory of God or Christ (2 Cor. 8:19; 9:12–13).

See further F. F. Bruce, Commentary on the Epistle to the Hebrews, NLC, 1964, 133 ff.; J. A. MacCulloch, "Tithes", ERE, XII 347 ff.; O. Michel, Melchisedek, TDNT IV 568 ff.; M. E. Tate, "Tithing: Legalism or Benchmark?", Review and Expositor 70, 1973, 153 ff.; L. Vischer, Tithing in the Early Church, 1966.

M. J. Harris

δώδεκα

δώδεκα (dōdeka), twelve.

CL The number twelve (dōdeka) gets its symbolic meaning from the twelve months; it is thus also originally an astronomical number.

OT "In the Bible one can no longer trace any memory of this. Rather, the use of the number twelve is founded almost exclusively on the number of the tribes of Israel" (*RE*³ XXI 606). The number twelve (e.g. Num. 1:4–49; 10:15–27; 13:2–15; 26:4–63; 34:13–28) again most probably goes back to the ancient Israelite amphictyony. M. Noth holds that care of the cult was shared by the twelve tribes, the responsibility for the upkeep of the common sanctuary alternating monthly between the tribes (M. Noth, The History of Israel, 1958, 87 ff.). Even after the dissolution of this institution the OT people of God continued to understand itself as the twelve tribes of the people of → Israel (cf. Gen. 49; Jos. 19:1–22:21; 2 Chron. 6:60–80; cf. Acts 7:8). The number twelve in Holy Scripture primarily denotes the people of God in its totality. It is only in Jewish apocalyptic that an occasional astral-theological usage of the number twelve turns up (cf. e.g. Eth.Enoch 76:1 ff.; 82:11), without the concept of the twelve tribes of the people of God being lost, however.

NT The thought of the twelve tribes as the people of God is still alive in the NT, not only as historical reminiscence (Acts 7:8), but also when Paul, before Agrippa, counts himself as a member of the twelve tribes (dōdekaphylon), and appeals to the promises made to them, which apply to him (Acts 26:7; cf. also Phil. 3:5). The circle of "the twelve" (Matt. 10:1 par. Mk. 6:7, Lk. 9:1; Matt. 10:2 par. Mk. 3:14, 16, Lk. 6:13, Jn. 6:70; Matt. 10:5; 11:1; 19:28 par. Lk. 22:30; Matt. 20:17, par. Mk. 10:32, cf. 9:35; Lk. 18:31; Matt. 26:14 par. Mk. 14:10, 20, 43, Lk. 22:3, 47, Jn. 6:71; Matt. 26:20 par. Mk. 14:17; Mk. 4:10; 11:11; Lk. 8:1; 9:12; Jn. 6:67; 20:24; Acts 6:2; 1 Cor. 15:5) is to be seen against this background of the twelve tribes, since it owes its existence to a particular calling by the earthly Jesus. On the Twelve and other followers of Jesus → Disciple (art. mathētēs); → Apostle (art. apostolos). "The number twelve symbolizes the tribes of Israel (Mt. xix 28; Lk. xxii. 30)" (G. Bornkamm, Jesus of Nazareth, 1960, 150). "The twelve do not only point back to the historical twelve tribes of the people of Israel, but also forwards to the eschatological" (N. A. Dahl, Das Volk Gottes, 1941, 158). In view of the fact the → kingdom of God has just come upon them, their commission (Mk. 3:14 f.) points them primarily to the lost sheep of the old twelve tribes of the → house of Israel (Matt. 10:6; 15:24), although they also have a representative function in the post-Easter church. The NT people of God can be addressed in Jas. 1:1 as "the twelve tribes in the diaspora" of the world (cf. 1 Pet. 1:1), whereby not only is a dignified title of the OT people of God taken over, but a continuity of salvation–history is also maintained.

There is an echo of the astral–religious significance of the number twelve in Rev. 12:1 in the vision of a woman clothed with the sun, wearing a crown with twelve stars on her head. But the → woman is here only the symbol of the daughter of Zion, and the twelve stars of the crown signify the twelve tribes, the OT people of God, from whom the messiah comes and to whom also belong those who confess the name of Jesus (v. 17). Correspondingly the NT people of God, composed of Jews and Gentiles, is described in 7:4 ff. in the $12 \times 12{,}000 = 144{,}000$ who are sealed (→ Seal, NT 3 (c)) from the tribes of Israel; cf. also 14:3. Thus the number 144,000 does not denote a numerical limitation of those who are sealed; it symbolizes the final perfection of the people of God (cf. also 7:9). In this respect when John sees them, as opposed to hearing the number of the sealed, they are "a great multitude which no man can number, from all tribes, peoples and tongues" (cf. Rev. 7:9 with 7:4).

The number twelve in the description of the new Jerusalem (21:12 ff.) is used as an expression of its glory, which is sufficient for the eschatological people of God – "the one people of God in the city of God" (TDNT II 323). In other respects twelve is also used in its numerical sense and as a round figure (Matt. 9:20 par. Mk. 5:25, Lk. 8:43; Mk. 5:42 par. Lk. 8:42; Mk. 8:19; Lk. 2:42; Acts 19:7; 24:11). E. D. Schmitz τεσσεράκοντα τεσσεράκοντα (tesserakonta), forty.

Periods of forty days occur repeatedly in the OT (Gen. 7:4; 8:6; Exod. 24:18; etc.). Forty years was the duration of Israel's wanderings in the wilderness (Exod. 16:35; etc.). There seems to be no explicit biblical evidence for the frequent suggestion that forty years was the regular round number reckoning of a generation, though the idea is very plausible (cf. G. F. Moore, Judges, ICC, 1898², xxxviii). The figure is constantly associated with long periods of human endurance and with the duration of successive developments of God's redemptive acts. So Jesus was forty days in the wilderness (Matt. 4:2; Mk. 1:13; Lk. 4:2), and remained with his disciples forty days after the resurrection (Acts 1:3). There is a partial parallel in apocalyptic, where forty days is the proper period for a term of instruction (2 Bar. 76:4; cf. 4 Ezra 14:23). Again, at Qumran, the war of the Sons of Light and the Sons of Darkness was to last forty years in all (1QM 2:6; etc.), and in Sanhedrin 99a Eliezer ben Hyrcanus infers from Ps. 95:10 that the times of the messiah should last forty years.

There are several references in Acts and Hebrews to the forty-year period of Israel in the wilderness, and it seems to have been a theme of early Christian preaching (Acts 7:36, 42; 13:18; Heb. 3:9, 17; cf. Acts 7:23, 30; 13:21). The significance of the parallel is not spelled out, but it has been suggested that Heb. envisages another forty-year period of probation for Israel between the death of Jesus and the disaster he foretold (F. F. Bruce, Hebrews, NLC, 1964, xliv, 65 n.).

The uncompounded numeral forty does not appear in the Johannine literature or in Rev.

For the Jewish scrupulosity in not exceeding the maximum of forty stripes (Deut. 25:3; 2 Cor. 11:24) see Makkoth 22a-b, and for first-century practice cf. Josephus, Ant. 4, 8, 21 (238); 4, 8 23 (248). C. J. Hemer ἑβδομήκοντα ἑβδομήκοντα (hebdomēkonta), seventy.

This number is often significant in the OT. The captivity of Judah in Babylon was to last seventy years (Jer. 25:11), and in Dan. seventy weeks are appointed as the period in which messianic redemption would be accomplished (Dan. 9:24). Seventy elders were appointed to assist Moses (Num. 11:16). And in apocalyptic there are the seventy (? angelic) shepherds of Eth.En. 89:59 ff.

Only two NT passages call for brief comment. Jesus commends forgiveness until "seventy times seven" (or ? "seventy-seven times"), that is, without limit. Contrast Gen. 4:24: unlimited vengeance has given place to unlimited forgiveness.

In Lk. 10:1 Jesus sends out seventy (or seventy-two) disciples. The textual evidence for or against dyo is finely balanced. In either case symbolic meaning has been attached to the figure. It is pointed out that the nations enumerated in Gen. 10 total seventy in the Hebrew, but seventy-two in the LXX. Again Josephus (Ant. 12, 2, 5) follows the tradition in the Letter of Aristeas which lists the LXX translators as seventy-two in number (Aristeas 47–50; 6 times 12 tribes), but goes on to call them "seventy" (Ant. 12, 2, 7). (See further B. M. Metzger, "Seventy or Seventy-Two Disciples?" Historical and Literary Studies, Pagan, Jewish and Christian, New Testament Tools and Studies VIII 1968, 67–76.)

Other large numbers. The NT does not present here the special difficulties of the OT. Some large numbers just express indefinite multitude (1 Cor. 4:15; Rev. 5:11). Those which are plainly symbolic are mostly large multiples of four, seven or twelve.

For the "thousand years" of Rev. 20:1–7 → chilias. The Epistle of Barnabas 15:4–5 expounds Gen. 2:2 with Ps. 90:4 in terms of a "cosmic week", a 6000-year scheme of history being followed by a millennial "cosmic sabbath" (see E. Lohse, TDNT IX 470 f.).

The 1600 furlongs of Rev. 14:20 are problematic. The figure may be explained as 400 times 4, or, indeed, as forty squared, but it is not clear why this amount is chosen. There is no force in the suggestion that this was the length of Palestine, and A. M. Farrer (Revelation, 168) is excessively over-subtle.

The array of examples considered in the above articles will serve to point the caution offered at the outset. The exegetical significance of numbers is very diverse. They may be approximate, rhetorical, schematic, proverbial or symbolic, and such explanations may or may not exclude the literal. Each case needs to be taken individually on its merits in its total context, with reference to the genre to which the passage belongs. Straightforward principles of exegesis often, I think, oblige us to take literally what has been too readily spiritualized, especially where ancient allegorical interests have offered precedent. But the world of the NT itself was complex in its intellectual heritage. There is a real danger of over-interpretation. And some numbers are a subordinate element in a complex concept: we should not look for a special numerical symbolism in a cat's "nine lives" or in a "nine days' wonder". The choice of "nine" in these phrases may be explicable, but is virtually arbitrary.

The ancients, it is true, sometimes endowed numbers with a conceptual vitality which seems forced and foreign to us. But often they did not. If the Fourth Evangelist never uses seven or forty, we may well hesitate to seek mathematical properties in his other, ostensibly precise and irregularly factual, numbers.

C. J. Hemer

χιλιάς χιλιάς (chilias), a thousand; χίλιοι (chilioi), a thousand.

CL & OT 1. The noun chilias is found from Hdt. and Aesch. onwards and the adj. chilioi from Homer. Both forms are found in the LXX, though chilias (which occurs some 250 times) is much more frequent and is particularly common in Num. and the historical books. It represents the Heb. 'elep̄.

2. 'elep̄ occurs in the numbers giving the sizes of the tribes (e.g. Num. 1:23–46; 2:4–32; 1 Chr. 7:2–40), but it also refers to the numerical part of a tribe (1 Sam. 10:19; Jdg. 6:15), alternating with mišpāḥâh (1 Sam. 10:21). The 'alᵉpê yiśrā'ēl, the clans or tribes of Israel, are mentioned in Num. 1:16; 10:4, 36; Jos. 22:21, 30; cf. Ps. 68:18; 1 Sam. 23:23; Isa. 60:22; Zech. 9:7; 12:5 f. The historical books display an interest in the thousands involved in battles (e.g. Jdg. 1:4; 3:29; 4:6–14; 20:2–46; 1 Sam. 4:2, 10; 6:19; 2 Sam. 10:6, 18; 24:9, 15; 1 Chr. 12:20–37; but cf. Amos 5:3 which asserts Yahweh's power to decimate the mighty). There is also an interest in the numbers involved in building the temple (1 Ki. 5:11–16 [25–30]; 2 Chr. 2:2–18 [1–17]). There is, however, a strong case for thinking that in many contexts 'elep̄ does not literally mean a thousand but is a term for a considerably smaller unit or perhaps meant 'allûp̄, captain of a band; this would make feasible the apparently large numbers in OT records (cf. J. W. Wenham, "Large Numbers in the Old Testament", TB 18, 1967, 19–53). Ezek. is concerned with the measurement and proportions of the land, representing the perfect ordering of the people of God (Ezek. 45:1–6; 48:8–35).

3. The plur. chiliades is often used for very large numbers which cannot be reckoned. Yahweh shows steadfast love to thousands of those who love him and keep his commandments (Exod. 20:6; cf. 34:7; Deut. 5:10; 7:9; Jer. 39[32]:18). His power is described in terms of "mighty chariotry, twice ten thousand, thousands upon thousands" (Ps. 68[67]:18). "A day in thy courts is better than a thousand elsewhere. I would rather be a doorkeeper in the house of my God than dwell in the tents of wickedness" (Ps. 84[83]:10). The hosts of God's servants cannot be counted (Dan. 7:10). The greatness of Yahweh is also expressed in Ps. 90[89]:4: "For a thousand years in thy sight are but as yesterday when it is past, or as a watch in the night." What to man seems a great age is as a moment to Yahweh. To someone asleep the four-hour night watch is as nothing. To Yahweh such a span of time (to which even Methuselah and the other ancestral figures mentioned in Gen. 5 did not attain; cf. also Jub. 4:20) is as nothing. A similar thought is expressed in Sir. 18:10, and it is taken up by 2 Pet. 3:8 in arguing that God's time-scale is not to be judged by man's, and hence that man should not presume upon the apparent delay in judgment.

4. Various multiples of a thousand occur in Gen. 24:60; Exod. 12:37; 32:28; 38:26; Num. 3:43; Jdg. 8:10; 12:6.

5. In the inter-testamental literature innumerable hosts figure in the apocalyptic writings of Eth.En. 14:22; 40:1. The notion of thousands features in eschatological expectation: the thousands of children of the righteous (Eth.En. 10:17); superabundance of wine (Eth.En. 10:19; Syr.Bar. 29:5). The number features in speculations about the duration of the world and the new aeon. These included the idea of a cosmic week of seven millennia followed in some instances by a new era, an eighth millennium (Test.Abr. 7 [2nd cent. A.D.]; Pseudo-Philo, Antiquitates 28, 2; Sl.Enoch 33:1; 33:4; cf. E. Lohse, TDNT IX 468). Other writings saw the seventh epoch as the final one (Sanh. 97 a–b Bar.; cf. E. Lohse, ibid., who notes that Samaritan eschatology taught that the world would last 6,000 years). The length of the messianic age varied from 1,000 years to 7,000 years. Although the idea of a thousand-year messianic age is found only from the 1st cent. A.D., Lohse thinks it likely to derive from an older tradition (ibid.; cf. SB III 827; Test.Isaac 8:20).

6. The number 1,000 features in the military structure of the Qumran community (1QS 2:21 f.; CD 13:1 f. [15:4]; cf. 1QM 12:4). Each thousand had its commander to lead it into battle (1QM 4:2; 1QSa 1:14, 29). (See further Y. Yadin, The Scroll of the War of the Sons of Light against the Sons of Darkness, 1962, 49–53, 59 ff.) The community believed that those who kept God's commandments would live for a thousand generations (CD 7:6 [8:21]; 19:1 f. [8:21 f.]; 20:22 [9:45]; cf. Deut. 7:9).

NT 1. Various multiples of a thousand occur in the NT. dischilioi, two thousand, was the approximate number of the Gerasene swine (Mk. 5:13). About three thousand (trischilioi) souls were added to the church at → Pentecost (Acts 2:41). About five thousand men (hōs chiliades pente) heard and believed the word (Acts 4:4). The same number were fed by Jesus (pentakischilioi andres) were fed by Jesus (Matt. 14:21; Mk. 6:44; 8:19; Lk. 9:14; Jn. 16:10). (On the possible symbolism in these narratives see G. H. Boobyer, "The Miracles of the Loaves and the Gentiles in St. Mark's Gospel", SJT 6, 1953, 77–87; A. Farrer, St Matthew and St Mark, 1954, 57–80.) In Matt. 15:38 and Mk. 8:9, 20 four thousand (tetrakischilioi) were fed. Acts 21:38 mentions the revolt of the Egyptian who led tetrakischilious, four thousand, men. In dealing with the question whether God has rejected Israel for good, Paul recalls the remnant of seven thousand men who did not bow the knee to Baal (Rom. 11:4; 1 Ki. 19:18). But the instance is at the same time a reminder that it is God who preserves the remnant, and therefore those who are saved are "chosen by grace" (Rom. 11:5). The alternative would be salvation by works (Rom. 11:6). In 1 Cor. 10:8 Paul recalls how twenty-three thousand of the wilderness generation fell in a single day through idolatry (cf. Num. 25:1–18). The military sense of a thousand is perhaps present in Jesus' question whether a king does not first take counsel whether he is able to meet with ten thousand (deka chiliasin) his adversary who comes against him with twenty thousand (meta eikosi chiliadōn) (Lk. 14:31). The question culminates a series of illustrations on counting the cost of discipleship. Confronted by overwhelming odds, the king with only ten thousand sends an embassy and asks for peace. The illustration implies not only the need to count the cost but also the impossibility of finding an alternative way out (cf. the instructions to the Israelites in making war in Deut. 20:10–20).

2. chiliarchos is found in cl. Gk. from Aesch. onwards for a leader of a thousand soldiers. It became a loanword in rabbinic writings, and was used in Roman times of the tribunus militum, the military tribune, the commander of a cohort which consisted of about 600 men (cf. Polyb. 1, 23, 1; 6, 19, 1; Josephus, Ant. 17, 9, 3). In this sense it is found in Jn. 18:12; Acts 21:31 ff., 37; 22:24, 26–29; 23:10, 15, 17 ff., 22; 24:7 v.l., 22; 25:23. It is used of a high ranking officer generally in Mk. 6:21; Rev. 6:15; 19:18 (in the last two passages as objects of judgment).

3. chilioi occurs twice in 2 Pet. 3:8 with reference to Ps. 90:4 (see above OT 3) where the readers are urged: "But do not ignore this one fact, beloved, that with the Lord one day is as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day." The context is concerned with man's indifference and sin in the light of the apparent postponement of the day of the Lord. The Psalmist had declared that "a thousand years in thy sight are but as yesterday when it is past." 2 Pet. takes the thought a step further and draws the corollary that "with the Lord one day is as a thousand years." This may represent a combination of Gk. and Heb. thinking, asserting that God is not bound by the time-scale of the physical world. The reason for the delay of the day of the Lord is God's forbearance "not wishing that any should perish, but that all should reach repentance" (2 Pet. 2:9).

4. The remaining 9 instances of chilioi are all found in Rev. (11:3; 12:6; 14:20; 20:2–7). In addition chilias is found in Rev. 19 times (5:11; 7:4–8; 11:13; 14:1, 3; 21:16). These instances represent an apocalyptic interpretation of OT themes. Rev. 5:11 takes up the picture in Dan. 7:10 of the heavenly hosts "numbering myriads of myriads and thousands of thousands" praising God. But the picture is given a christological interpretation, for the object of their praise is the → Lamb (Rev. 5:12 ff.). Rev. 7:4 gives the number of the sealed as "a hundred and forty-four thousand sealed, out of every tribe of the sons of Israel" (→ Seal). Verses 5–8 enumerate the tribes by name, specifying twelve thousand out of each tribe. The number symbolizes the final perfection of the people of God, based on the concept of the twelve tribes of Israel (→ dōdeka) and asserting the historical continuity with Israel. It is worth noting that when John hears the number he hears these round numbers which consist of members of the twelve tribes. But when he looks, the numbers are replaced by a countless host consisting of all peoples: "After this I looked, and behold, a great multitude which no man could number, from every nation, from all tribes and peoples and tongues, standing before the throne and before the Lamb, clothed in white robes, with palm branches in their hands" (Rev. 7:9). The hundred and forty-four thousand are mentioned again in Rev. 14:1, 3.

Rev. 11:3 and 12:6 mention a period of "one thousand two hundred and sixty days". This corresponds to the forty-two months of Rev. 11:2; 13:5 and the time, times and half a time of Rev. 12:14. In Rev. 11:3 it is the period of prophecy and in Rev. 12:6 it is the period of persecution. Both passages refer to the same period, the age of the church which is one of prophetic witness and at the same time one of persecution. In the light of eternity it is a comparatively short period, although when expressed in terms of days it may seem lengthy. In the background stands Dan. 7:25; 12:7 (→ eniatous treis kai mēnas hex), a period which is half of seven, the perfect number, comprising of severe affliction which continues until God accomplishes the end of all things. This affliction is described in Rev. 11:7 ff.; cf. 12:2–6. It will culminate in the judgment of civilization (Rev. 11:3). The seven thousand who perish in the earthquake represent the complete judgment on godless, secular society; the rest who were terrified and give glory to God represent those who respond to the witness and God's judgments.

Rev. 14:20 depicts judgment on the civilized world in terms of the sack of a city: "and the wine press was trodden outside the city, and blood flowed from the wine press, as high as a horse's bridle, for one thousand six hundred stadia." The distance is approximately two hundred miles. The number is a square number, comparable with the hundred and forty-four thousand and the dimensions of the → Jerusalem (cf. Rev. 7:4; 14:1; 21:16). It suggests the area of the four parts of the earth, i.e. the whole earth; the passage refers to the last judgment (cf. Rev. 19:11–21). By contrast, the area of the holy city, the new Jerusalem, is also square, again indicating completeness: "The city lies foursquare, its length the same as its breadth; and he measured the city with his rod, twelve thousand stadia; its length and breadth and height are equal" (Rev. 12:16). The number twelve goes back in this case to the twelve tribes and the twelve thousand from each tribe. The completeness of the new Jerusalem corresponds to the completeness of the people of God.

Rev. 20:2–7 contains 6 references to a period of a thousand years: "Then I saw an angel coming down from heaven, holding in his hand the key of the bottomless pit and a great chain. And he seized the dragon, that ancient serpent, who is the Devil and Satan, and bound him for a thousand years, and threw him into the pit, and shut it and sealed it over him, that he should deceive the nations no more, till the thousand years were ended. After that he must be loosed for a little while. Then I saw thrones, and seated on them were those to whom judgment was committed. Also I saw the souls of those who had been beheaded for their testimony to Jesus and for the word of God, and who had not worshiped the beast or its image and had not received its mark on their foreheads or their hands. They came to life again, and reigned with Christ a thousand years. The rest of the dead did not come to life again until the thousand years were ended. This is the first resurrection. Blessed and holy is he who shares in the first resurrection! Over such the second death has no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and they shall reign with him a thousand years. And when the thousand years are ended, Satan will be loosed from his prison." After this follows the final conflict, the casting of the devil, the beast and the false prophet into the lake of fire and brimstone, together with Death and Hades after the last judgment (Rev. 20:8–15).

The passage has given rise to the concept of the millennium (from Lat. mille, a thousand, and annus, year), a thousand year age of restoration in which evil is banished, and to chiliasm (deriving from the Gk. word for a thousand). The idea of a messianic kingdom, preceding the end and the coming reign of God is attested in Eth.En. 91:12 f.; 93:1–14; Sib. 3, 652–660; 2 Esd. 7:28 f.; Syr.Bar. 29:3; 30:1–5; 40:3 (cf. above OT 5). It extends the older idea of a Davidic king restoring the monarchy by combining it with that of universal judgment, resurrection and the new aeon. According to 2 Esd. 7:28 f., the messiah would reign for four hundred years before dying and the last judgment. The number 1000 is probably connected with the idea of the cosmic week and Ps. 90:4 (see above OT 3, 5). In the early church belief in some form of a literal millennium is attested by Barn. 15:3–9; Papias (cf. Irenaeus, Haer. 5, 33, 4); Irenaeus, Haer. 5, 32–36; Justin, Dial. 81; the Christian additions to the Testament of Isaac (8:11 and 19 f.; 10:11 f.); Tertullian, Adv.Marc. 3, 24; 4, 31; the gnostic Cerinthus (cf. Eusebius, Hist.Eccl. 3, 28). It was attacked by Origen (De prin. 2, 11, 2) and rejected by Augustine (De civ. 20, 7). (For a discussion of these and other views in the early centuries see H. Bietenhard, "The Millennial Hope in the Early Church", SJT 6, 1953, 12–30.) In addition to apocalyptic ideas, Rev. 20 draws on Ezek. 36–48 with its visions of the resurrection of Israel, the conflict with Gog and Magog and the promise of a new Jerusalem.

In modern times three main schools of thought have emerged concerning the interpretation of Rev. 20. The Premillenarians treat the passage as future prophecy in which the second coming of Christ will precede the millennium. Satan will be bound for a thousand years, the martyred dead will be raised, and Christ will reign as King of kings and Lord of lords from Jerusalem. The millennium will end with the final rebellion of Satan, but this will itself be soon put down. The resurrection and judgment of the wicked dead will precede the creation of the new heaven and earth. (For statements of this position see N. West, ed., Premillennial Essays of the Prophetic Conference Held in the Church of Holy Trinity, 1879; N. West, The Thousand Years in Both Testaments, 1880; W. E. Blackstone, Jesus is Coming, 1917; D. H. Kromminga, The Millennium in the Church, 1945 and The Millennium: Its Nature Function and Relation to the Consummation of the World, 1948; C. L. Feinberg, Premillennialism or Amillennialism?, 1954².) Postmillenarians see the second coming of Christ and the events of Rev. 20 as coming in the last thousand years of the present age (cf. D. Brown, Christ's Second Coming: Will it be Premillennial?, 1919; J. H. Snowden, The Coming of the Lord: Will it be Premillennial?, 1919; L. Boettner, The Millennium, 1957). Amillennialists, on the other hand, see the whole passage as an essentially symbolic description of the present age in which Satan is already bound and the dead in Christ are already reigning with him (cf. F. E. Hamilton, The Basis of Millennial Faith, 1942; G. L. Murray, Millennial Studies: A Search for Truth, 1948; W. J. Grier, The Momentous Event, 1945; W. Hendriksen, More than Conquerors, 1947, 221 ff.).

The interpretation of Rev. 20 depends partly on how this particular vision is seen in relation to the general structure of the book. Those who see the different visions in Rev. as visions of successive events will be inclined to see this vision as the last of a series, referring to a unique event immediately prior to the creation of a new heaven and a new earth. On the other hand, there is a very strong case for seeing the whole book as structured into seven series of visions, corresponding to the seven days of the creation story in Gen. 1, each of which looks at the church in the gospel age. The visions are thus seven sets of parallel visions of the church and its tribulations between the two advents of Christ (→ hepta NT 4). On this view the period of a thousand years refers to the present era culminating in a final outburst of Satanic activity prior to the final destruction of all the evils that afflict man.

According to this interpretation, the vision of the binding of Satan has its roots in the saying of Jesus about the binding of the strong man who first has to be bound before his goods may be plundered (Matt. 12:29 par. Mk. 3:27; cf. Augustine, De civ. 20, 7). The activity of Jesus is itself evidence of the binding of Satan. It is further defined in Rev. 20:3: "that he should deceive the nations no more, till the thousand years were ended." This would then refer to the spread of the gospel among the Gentile nations which previously had been deceived by Satan. There is a sense in which Satan has fallen in power already, and this is evidenced by the power of the disciples over demons (Lk. 10:17 f.; cf. Col. 2:15). The event of Rev. 20:1–3 has already been described from another standpoint in Rev. 12:9 ff., and may also reflect the saying in Jn. 12:31. The first resurrection refers to the reign of the saints with Christ now (cf. 4:2–10; 5:6–13; 7:9–17; 8:3; 12:5; 14:3, 5; 19:4 f.; 22:1, 3). The thought may reflect Jn. 5:24 (cf. Jn. 3:18; Col. 3:1). Such a scheme of interpretation is in harmony with that of Jesus and Paul, neither of whom speak of a period of a thousand years and into whose teaching such a period could not easily be inserted (Matt. 24:4–36 par. Mk. 13:5–37, Lk. 21:8–36; cf. 1 Cor. 15:20–28; 1 Thess. 5:1 ff.; 2 Thess. 2:1–12). Moreover, neither Jesus nor Paul (nor, for that matter, John in Rev.) speaks of two second comings of Christ: one before the millennium and one subsequent to it. It would, therefore, seem best to recognize the symbolic character of the apocalyptic language of Rev. 20 and see in the passage an eschatology which is already in process of realization. C. Brown

→ First, Firstborn, → Goal, → King, Kingdom, → One, Once, Only, → Pentecost, → Present, → Time

On numbers in general:
(a). G. A. Barton, "Number", Encyclopaedia Biblica III, 1902, 3434–39; I. T. Beckwith, The Apocalypse of John, 1919, 250–54; R. E. D. Clark, "The Large Numbers of the Old Testament – Especially in Connection with the Exodus", Journal of the Transactions of the Victoria Institute 87, 1955, 82–90 (see also the discussion, ibid., 145–52); J. J. Davis, Biblical Numerology, 1968; G. R. Driver, "Sacred Numbers and Round Figures", in F. F. Bruce, ed., Promise and Fulfilment Essays Presented to S. H. Hooke, 1963, 62–90; A. M. Farrer, A Rebirth of Images: The Making of St John's Apocalypse, 1949, 245–60; S. Gandz, "Complementary Fractions in Bible and Talmud", Louis Ginsberg Memorial Volume, 1945, 143–57; R. A. H. Gunner, "Number", NBD, 895–98; T. Heath, A History of Greek Mathematics, I–II, 1921; E. König, "Number", HDB III 560–67; L. A. Muirhead, "Number", DAC II 92–96; O. Neugebauer and A. Sachs, Mathematical Cuneiform Texts, 1945; O. Neugebauer, The Exact Sciences in Antiquity, 1957; M. H. Pope, "Number", IDB III 561–67; O. Rühle, arithmeō, arithmos, TDNT I 461–64; E. R. Thiele, The Mysterious Numbers of the Hebrew Kings, 1966; J. W. Wenham, "Large Numbers in the Old Testament", TB 18, 1967, 19–53 (reprinted as a separate monograph, no date); W. White, Jr., "Number", ZPEB IV 452–61.
(b). H. Bardtke, "Zahl", EKL III 1883; A.Bea, "Der Zahlenspruch im Hebräischen und Ugaritischen", Biblica 21, 1940, 196 ff.; O. Becker, Das mathematische Denken der Antike, 1957; W. Foerster, "Bemerkungen zur Bildsprache der Offenbarung Johannis", in O. Böcher and K. Haacker, eds., Verborum Veritas. Festschrift für Gustav Stählin, 1970, 225–36 (especially 227–31); P. Friesenhahn, Hellenistische Wortzahlmystik im Neuen Testament, 1935; A. Heller, Biblische Zahlensymbolik, 1936; E. Kautzsch, "Zahlen", RE XXI 598 f.; K. Menninger, Zahlwort und Ziffer, I, 1957, 127 ff.; O. Neugebauer, Vorgriechische Mathematik, 1934; A. Schimmel and W. Funk, "Zahlensymbolik", RGG[3] VI 1861 ff.; K. Sethe, Von Zahlen und Zahlworten bei den alten Ägypten, 1916.

On particular numbers:
(a). P. R. Ackroyd, "The 153 Fishes in John XXI. 11 – A Further Note", JTS New Series 10, 1959, 94; H. Balz, tessares etc., TDNT VIII 127–39; F. H. Colson, "Triangular Numbers in the New Testament", JTS 16, 1914–15, 67–76; G. Delling, treis, tris, tritos, TDNT VIII 216–25; J. A. Emerton, "The Hundred and Fifty-three Fishes in John XXI. 11", JTS New Series 9, 1958, 86–89; C. L. Feinberg, "Tithe", ZPEB V 756 ff.; R. M. Grant, " 'One Hundred and Fifty-three Large Fish' (John 21:11)", HTR 42, 1949, 273 ff.; H. H. Guthrie, Jr., "Tithe", IDB IV 654 f.; F. Hauck, deka etc., TDNT II 36 f.; E. Lohse, chilias, chilioi, TDNT IX 466–71; F. R. McCurley, " 'After Six Days' (Mark 9:2); A Semitic Literary Device", JBL 93, 1974, 67–81; B. M. Metzger, "Seventy or Seventy-two Disciples?" Historical and Literary Studies, Pagan, Jewish and Christian, New Testament Tools and Studies VIII, 1968, 67–76; C. L. Mitton, "Threefoldness in the Teaching of Jesus", ExpT 75, 1963–64, 228 ff.; K. H. Rengstorf, hepta etc., TDNT II 627–35; and dōdeka etc., TDNT II 321–28; H. F. D. Sparks, "The Partiality of Luke for Three", JTS 37, 1936, 141–45.
(b). E. von Dobschütz, "Zwei- und dreigliedrige Formeln", JBL 50, 1931, 117–47; O. Eissfeldt, Erstlinge und Zehnten im Alten Testament, 1917.

On the millennium:
(a). J. W. Bailey, "The Temporary Messianic Reign in the Literature of Early Judaism", JBL 53, 1934, 170–87; G. R. Beasley-Murray, The Book of Revelation, New Century Bible, 1974, 287–92; I. T. Beckwith, The Apocalypse of John, 1919; H. Bietenhard, "The Millennial Hope in the Early Church", SJT 6, 1953, 12–30; L. Boettner, The Millennium, 1957; S. J. Case, The Millennial Hope, 1917; R. H. Charles, A Critical History of the Doctrine of a Future Life, 1913[2]; R. D. Culver, Daniel and the Latter Days, 1957[2]; J. Daniélou, "Millenarianism", EBT II 582 ff.; and A History of Early Christian Doctrine before the Council of Nicea, I, The Theology of Jewish Christianity, 1964, 377–404; G. E. Ladd, A Commentary on the Revelation of John, 1972; E. Lohse, chilias, chilioi, TDNT IX 466–71; J. A. MacCulloch, "Eschatology", ERE V 373 ff.; M. Rist, "Millennium", IDB III 381 f.; J. F. Walvoord, "Amillennialism in the Ancient Church", Bibliotheca Sacra 106, 1949, 291–302; and The Rapture Question, 1957; "Millennium", ZPEB IV 228; B. B. Warfield, "The Millennium and the Apocalypse", The Princeton Theological Review, 5, 1904, 599–617 (reprinted in Biblical Doctrines, 1929, 643–64).

(b). W. Bauer, "Chiliasmus", RAC II 1073–78; H. Bietenhard, Das tausendjährige Reich, 1955²; J. Daniélou, "La Typologie Millénariste de la Semaine dans le Christianisme Primitif", Vigiliae Christianae 2, 1948, 1–16; B. Gatz, Weltalter, goldene Zeit und sinnverwandte Vorstellungen, 1967; A. Gelin, "Millénarisme", Dictionnaire de la Bible, Supplement 5, 1957, 1289–94; L. Gry, Le Millénarisme dans ses Origines et son Développement, 1904; H. Kraft, "Chiliasmus", *RGG*³ I, 1651 ff.; E. Lohse, Die Offenbarung des Johannes, NTD 11, 1960, 20 ff., 74 f.; A. Luneau, L'Histoire du Salut chez les Pères de l'Église, 1964; W. Nigg, Das ewige Reich, Geschichte einer Sehnsucht und einer Entäuschung, 1934; SB III 824 ff.; R. Schmidt, "Aetates Mundi", Zeitschrift für Kirchengeschichte 67, 1956, 288–317; H. Schuhmacher, Das tausendjährige Königreich Christi auf Erden. Eine biblische Untersuchung im Lichte des Fortschreitens der göttlichen Heilsoffenbarung und Heilsgeschichte, 1964; J. Sickenberger, "Das tausendjährige Reich in der Apokalypse", Festschrift S. Merkle, 1922, 300–15; G. Siedenschnur, "Chiliasmus", EKL I 683 ff.; A. Wikenhauser, "Das Problem des tausenjährigenden Reiches in der Apokalypse", Römische Quartalschrift 40, 1932, 13–27; "Die Herkunft der Idee des tausendjährigen Reiches in der Apokalypse", Römische Quartalschrift 45, 1937, 1–24; and "Weltwoche und tausendjähriges Reich", Theologische Quartalschrift 127, 1947, 399–417.

O

Offence, Scandal, Stumbling Block

Two groups of words are here linked: the key nouns are proskomma and skandalon. Originally their meanings were different. Already in the LXX, however, each had taken on the special force of the other. It was in the LXX that both groups first became closely related to human life; both in denotation and connotation the Gk. words were modified by the OT and Judaism.

πρόσκομμα

πρόσκομμα (proskomma), stumbling, offence, obstacle; προσκοπή (proskopē), an occasion for taking offence or making a false step; προσκόπτω (proskoptō), strike, beat against, stumble, be offended; ἀπρόσκοπος (aproskopos), without offence, giving no offence, blameless.

CL The vb. proskoptō (from Aristoph. onwards), derived from koptō, smite, strike, beat, knock (from Homer onwards), means trans. to strike or knock against; intrans. to knock oneself against, trip, or fall. Metaphorically it means both to give and to take offence. proskomma (not found earlier than the LXX) means the cause, the process and the results of the offence, and so an obstacle, offence, fall, damage, destruction. proskopē (from Polyb. onwards) – in the NT only in 2 Cor. 6:3 – means the offence, the dislike which causes one to take offence, the cause and reason for taking offence. The verbal adj. aproskopos, without offence, is seldom found in secular literature; it means both giving no offence, unobjectionable, blameless, and taking no offence, unhurt.

OT 1. Though this group of words is found in secular Gk., it first obtained a theologically relevant meaning in biblical usage. In the LXX it is used predominantly for the Heb. words môqēš, a trap or snare, kāšal, to fall or cause to fall, and also for nāḡap̄, to hit, push; but these are also frequently rendered by → skandalon, skandalizō.

Sin causes a fall. Though the God of Israel guards a man from tripping and falling (Ps. 91:11 f.) and bears the title of the Rock of Israel's strength and salvation (Isa. 17:10; Deut. 32:15), he can become "a stone of offence" (Isa. 8:14) for the apostate, godless man who does not fear him, so that he falls and perishes (→ Rock). The God of Israel is faithful, but he humbles those who do not reverence him as the Holy One and fear him (cf. Ps. 18[17]:26). The cause of the → falling is to be found in the sin and apostasy of the godless. Hence the people are warned against the worship of heathen gods and fellowship with the heathen inhabitants of the land, which would be a snare to them (Exod. 23:33; 34:12).

2. The OT usage lived on in late Judaism. kāšal and the noun miḵšôl are found very frequently in the Qumran texts (cf. 1QS 2:12, 17; TDNT VI 749, 751; → skandalon).

NT In the NT proskomma occurs 4 times in Rom. and once each in 1 Cor. and 1 Pet.; proskoptō twice each in Matt., Jn. and Rom., and once each in Lk. and 1 Pet.; proskopē only in 2 Cor.; and aproskopos once each in Acts, 1 Cor. and Phil. Usage follows the OT and has in the background the picture of tripping over a stone and falling. The following 4 uses may be distinguished.

1. Christ remains obedient to God and true to his task. Hence neither Satan, who alluding to Ps. 91:11 f. says that Jesus as God's Son will not strike (proskopsēs) his foot against a stone (Matt. 4:6; Lk. 4:11), nor the threat of death by the Jews in Jerusalem (Jn. 11:7–10: the only example of the root in the Johannine writings) could cause him to fall and make his messianic mission vain. In the temptation narratives the sense of proskoptō is the lit. one of strike. In Jn. 11:9 f. the vb. is used in the sense of stumble in the contrast: "Are there not twelve hours in the day? If any one walks in the day, he does not stumble [proskoptei], because he sees the light of this world. But if any one walks in the night, he stumbles [proskoptei], because the light is not in him." The reply is given in response to the warning that the Jews were planning to stone him, and that Jesus therefore should not visit the sick Lazarus. "It is a parable of crisis, in which Jesus seeks to impress on his hearers the necessity of taking prompt action before the judgment falls. It is possible, but by no means certain, that stumble is an allusion to the 'rock of stumbling' in Isa. 8:14, alluded to several times in early Christian literature (cf. Rom. 9:32; 1 Cor. 1:23; 1 Pet. 2:6–8)" (B. Lindars, The Gospel of John, New Century Bible, 1972, 390). The parable is similar to that in Matt. 6:22 f. par. Lk. 11:34 ff.; cf. also Gos.Thom. 24.

2. Christ is both the stone which serves as a foundation (→ Firm, art. themelios) for the church and the stone over which one can fall, the stumbling stone (Rom. 9:33; 1 Pet. 2:8; referring to Isa. 8:14; 28:16; Ps. 118:22; → Rock). This explains why men, e.g. many Jews, do not come to salvation. Where Jesus and his message are refused, man finds his eternal destruction (cf. also Lk. 2:34). Lk.'s version of the saying about the corner stone presses the picture even further: "Every one who falls on that stone will be broken to pieces; but when it falls on any one it will crush him" (Lk. 20:18). This combines the saying about the corner stone (Ps. 118:20; Isa. 28:16; cf. Lk. 20:17; Matt. 21:42; Mk. 12:10; Acts 4:11; 1 Pet. 2:7) with Isa. 8:14 f. which declares: "And he [Yahweh] will become a sanctuary, and a stone of offence, and a rock of stumbling to both houses of Israel, a trap and a snare to the inhabitants of Jerusalem. And many shall stumble thereon; they shall fall and be broken; they shall be snared and be taken." But what was said of Yahweh by Isaiah is said of Jesus in Lk. (cf. Rom. 9:33; 10:11; 1 Pet. 2:4 ff.). According to Lk. 20:18, man will be broken by Christ in any case. He will be either broken on him now, as Christ shatters his preconceived plans for his life, or he will be broken by him in judgment.

3. Whether the disciple of Christ may cause offence to others is another matter. Paul expressly forbids the strong to cause the weak to stumble and to hurt their → conscience (Rom. 14:13, 21; 1 Cor. 8:9). Their freedom, though justified in itself, must not cause others to → fall. This is the law of love. He who hurts the → conscience of another creates an obstacle for the gospel (cf. 1 Cor. 9:12 f., 19 f.).

Paul enlarges the circle still further, when he says "Give no offence [aproskopoi . . . ginesthe] to Jews or to Greeks or to the church of God" (1 Cor. 10:32).

([Ed.] The ET "stumbling-block" was first introduced by William Tyndale in his translation of Rom. 14:13: "That no man putt a stomblinge blocke or an occasion to faule [proskomma ē skandalon]" (1526). Later translators preferred to use it for skandalon. The phrase "to stumble at a block", i.e. a tree stump, is exemplified in Capgrave's Life of St. Gilbert 43, 123: "Sche stombeled at a blok which was hid with straw and thus fel sodeynly." After Tyndale the expression was used in the senses of an occasion for moral stumbling, an occasion for falling into calamity, an obstacle to belief, understanding, progress, and more rarely and late lit. of a kind of threshold or object sticking up in a road.)

4. The day of Christ makes it particularly imperative that the Christian should be without offence. Paul prays for the Christians in Philippi that they "may be pure and blameless [aproskopoi] for the day of Christ" (Phil. 1:10). Paul is not referring only to external and ethical behaviour but also to the nature of a man's relationship to Christ (v. 9). His prayer is also a warning to the church. In his defence before Felix Paul rebutted the accusations of Tertullus, declaring that "I always take pains to have a clear conscience [aproskopon syneidēsin] toward God and toward men" (Acts 24:16), i.e. a conscience which has remained undefiled by sin.

J. Guhrt

σκάνδαλον | σκάνδαλον (skandalon), offence; σκανδαλίζω (skandalizō), give offence, lead astray.

CL The noun skandalon, from a root meaning jump up, snap shut, was originally the piece of wood that kept open a trap for animals. Outside the Bible it is not used metaphorically, though its derivative skandalēthron (e.g. a trap set through questions) is so used. No non-biblical example of skandalizō has been found. The Eng. word scandal is derived from the noun via the Lat. scandalum.

OT 1. Both words have been shaped by biblical language; the secular Gk. usage is alien to biblical usage. The LXX uses them mainly to translate Heb. môqēš, bait or lure (cf. Amos 3:5), fig. a snare to destroy a person (cf. Ps. 141:9[140:8]; 1 Sam. 18:21) or to cause him to sin (cf. Jos. 23:13; Jdg. 2:3; 8:27; Ps. 106[105]:36) and miḵšôl, obstacle in the way of the blind (Lev. 19:14), fig. a cause of misfortune (Ps. 119[118]:165) or of troubled conscience (1 Sam. 25:31). skandalizō occurs in Dan. 11:41 LXX for niph. of kāšal and without Heb. equivalent in Sir. 9:5; 23:8; 35(32):15.

2. skandalon and skandalizō are not found in Philo, Josephus, Aristeas or Hellenistic Jewish literature (TDNT VII 343), but they occur in the OT translations of Aquila, and to a lesser extent Symmachus and Theodotion (skandalon only). However, the metaphorical meanings were clearly understood in the NT period, and they feature in the Qumran community with its conscious separation of the righteous and godless and its more legalistic religion. The words kāšal (to stumble; hiph. to cause to stumble; e.g. 1QS 3:24; 11:12; 1QM 14:5; 1QH 5:28, 36; 8:36; 16:5; 17:23) and miḵšōl (offence; e.g. 1QS 2:12, 17; 4:15; 8:35; 9:21, 27; 10:18; 16:15; 17:4) occur frequently in the Qumran literature. All the spirits allotted to the Angel of Darkness "seek the overthrow of the sons of light" (1QS 3:24). On the other hand, there is no cause for offence in God's words. Hence, the word-group becomes a metaphorical expression for sinning, leading to sin, and sin.

NT The NT usage has been fixed essentially by the OT. It is often based directly on OT passages (e.g. Matt. 13:41 on Zeph. 1:3; Matt. 24:10 on Dan. 11:41 [cf. RV and Heb.]; Rom. 9:33 and 1 Pet. 2:8 on Isa. 8:14). Both the noun and the vb. are used frequently in Matt.; they are not so common in Lk. with its less Jewish background. However, the same thought is often expressed in other words (e.g. cf. Lk. 8:13 with Matt. 13:21). Though the word skandalon is not used, the thought is found in Lk. 2:34: "Behold, this child is set for the fall and rising of many in Israel, and for a sign that is spoken against." skandalizō occurs 14 times in Matt., 8 times in Mk., twice in Lk., Jn. and 1 Cor., and once in 2 Cor. skandalon occurs 5 times in Rom., once in Lk., 4 times in Rom. and once each in 1 Cor. and Gal.

The original conception of a bait or trap is found only in Rom. 11:9 ("pitfall", RSV; quoting Ps. 69:22 [68:23]). Otherwise skandalon is used rather with the thought of a stone or obstacle in the way, over which one can trip and fall. It occurs as a synonym of → proskomma (cf. Rom. 9:33; 1 Pet. 2:3). When the sense is to cause people to sin, the connotation of "trap" is still present (cf. Rev. 2:14).

1. If we omit Rom. 11:9, the following meanings are to be found.

(a) The noun means a temptation to sin, an enticement to apostasy and unbelief (e.g. Matt. 18:7; Rev. 2:14; Rom. 14:13; 16:17 ["difficulties" RSV]; of persons, Matt. 13:41; 16:23; Rom. 9:33; 1 Pet. 2:8). It is then used as that which causes offence or scandal, or divisions, or hinders faith (e.g. 1 Jn. 2:10; 1 Cor. 1:23; Gal. 5:11; Matt. 13:41).

(b) Correspondingly the vb. means to lead into sin, to give offence (e.g. Matt. 5:29 f.; 18:6; 1 Cor. 8:13 [in each case cf. RV with RSV]) In the passive it means to take offence, fall away, be misled (e.g. Matt. 13:21; 24:10; Jn. 16:1; 2 Cor. 11:29), to take offence at Jesus (e.g. Matt. 11:6; 13:57; 26:31, 33). It can further mean to offend, provoke, allow to go astray, raise dissensions (e.g. Matt. 17:27; Jn. 6:61; passively in Matt. 15:12 and perhaps 2 Cor. 11:29).

2. (a) The NT stresses that Jesus constantly becomes an offence. The expression skandalizesthai en tini, be repelled by, take offence at, is always used of him. The disciples took offence (RSV "fall away") at his → sufferings (Matt. 26:31), because such suffering was incompatible with their preconceptions. Other instances of this expression occur at Matt. 11:6; 13:57; 26:31, 33; Mk. 6:3; Lk. 7:23. When Peter took offence in Matt. 16:22, his protestation was rejected by Jesus as a Satanic suggestion. Jesus became an offence for John the Baptist (Matt. 11:6; Lk. 7:23), because John had expected him to reveal himself as messiah in a different way. The → Pharisees took offence at Jesus' teaching (Matt. 15:12), because it contradicted their concept of the law, and of man's co-operation with God's grace. How deep-rooted their offence was may be seen from Jesus' comparison of them with weeds to be rooted up (Matt. 15:13; cf. 13:24–30).

(b) The basis of the offence caused by Jesus is the → cross (1 Cor. 1:23), which nullifies all human wisdom, and excludes all human co-operation in salvation (cf. Gal. 5:11 with reference to circumcision). For the preaching of Christ crucified is a skandalon to the Jews (in view of their rejection of him, his death on a tree which was self-evidently a sign of God's curse [Gal. 3:13; cf. Deut. 21:23], and its implications for the law including the practice of circumcision) and mōria, foolishness, to the Gentiles. This infuriating offence must remain, otherwise the gospel will cease to be the message of salvation.

(c) The foundation of the offence caused by Christ is God's decree. The quotation, "Behold, I am laying in Zion a stone that will make men stumble, a rock that will make them fall" (Rom. 9:33, a conflated quotation from Isa. 8:14 and 28:16) is interpreted in the NT, e.g., 1 Pet. 2:8 ("A stone that will make men stumble, a rock that will make them fall") as referring to Christ. This passage explains why the Jews are excluded at first from salvation, but not for ever (Rom.) and why in general unbelief rejects Jesus (1 Pet.). In the offence we see an aspect of God's → election (cf. 1 Pet. 2:8, "as they were destined to do"; and also Lk. 2:34).

Jesus and his → gospel become the cause of sin only when unbelief rejects the salvation which he brings, because as he presented it, it did not correspond with man's expectations. While he who believes in him will not be put to shame (Rom. 9:33b; 1 Pet. 2:66), he who does not believe, stumbles at him (1 Pet. 2:8). It is man's blindness that makes Jesus an occasion for destruction. That is true of the Pharisees (Matt. 15:14), and of the man who walks in darkness because he does not love his brother (1 Jn. 2:11). But he who loves his brother finds no cause for stumbling (1 Jn. 2:10). Many disciples found Jesus saying about his body's being life-giving food "a hard saying", and so took offence and drew back (Jn. 6:60 f., 66). Such behaviour made the disciples guilty, for they saw no more than flesh in Jesus ("the flesh is of no avail", Jn. 6:63).

In his eschatological discourse Jesus speaks especially of the offences of the last days. Many will not bear the tribulations that will come over the church; they will fall away and deny their Lord (Matt. 24:10). This will reveal the identity of true believers. Matt. 13:41 is also to be understood eschatologically. "The Son of man will send his angels, and they will gather out of his kingdom all causes of sin [panta ta skandala] and all evildoers [tous poiountes tēn anomian]." "All things that cause stumbling" (RV), "all causes of sin" (RSV) are the persons called "the sons of the evil one" (v. 38) who do unrighteousness. Then they will be separated from the kingdom and the righteous; at the present time they are active in their midst.

We can see the true character of offences only from an eschatological viewpoint. They lead to destruction and exclusion from Christ's kingdom. The fact that judgment has not already fallen on them is not a sign that God condones them but that the time of judgment is not yet ripe.

In his farewell discourse Jesus declares: "I have said all this to you to keep you from falling away [hina mē skandalisthēte]" (Jn. 16:1). He refers here especially to the promise of the → advocate, paraclete or helper (Jn. 15:18–27), but also to his preaching as a whole (cf. Jn. 6:63).

3. While there is an offence of the gospel, which must not be removed, there is a human offence which must be avoided. Such offences are inevitable (Matt. 18:7b; Lk. 17:1). They belong to the world and make it ripe for condemnation, but woe to the man through whom they come. This is particularly true of those that offend the "little ones" who believe in Jesus (Matt. 18:6 par. Mk. 9:48; cf. Lk. 17:1; → Large, Small, art. mikros). Jesus was probably thinking not only of → children, but of all those who need special help from the church because of their defencelessness when they face the great and strong (→ Weakness). It is easy to give these weak and helpless ones who turn to Jesus an occasion for straying away from Jesus. He who does this is subject to judgment. That is why the strong are exhorted not to cause the weak to stumble (Rom. 14:13, 21; 1 Cor. 8:13), for it destroys the work of God (Rom. 14:20).

We must also beware of falling ourselves by separating ourselves from God by act (Matt. 5:30) or look (Matt. 5:29; → See, art. ophthalmos). The cutting off of part of the body is not to be taken literally: those inclinations are to be rooted out which could become fatal to a man as he meets the world around him (Matt. 5:29 f.; cf. 18:8 f.; Mk. 9:43–48; → Hand, art. cheir; on Matt. 19:12 → Eunuch). One should also beware of the offences caused by a false doctrine, and avoid those who create them (Rom. 16:17). J. Guhrt

→ Child, → Cross, → Fall, → Hard, → Rock, → Sin

(a). A. Carr, "The Use of skandalon and skandalizein in the New Testament", The Expositor Fifth Series 8, 1898, 344–51; and Horae Biblicae, 1903, 58–68; K. Fullerton, "The Stone Foundation", American Journal of Semitic Languages and Literatures 37, 1920–21, 1–50; R. A. Knox, Trials of a Translator, 1949, 66–73; T. W. Lewis, " '. . . And if he shrinks back' (Heb. x. 38b)", NTS 22, 1975–76, 88–94; I. H. Marshall, Kept by the Power of God: A Study of Perseverance and Falling Away, 1969; J. H. Moulton, skandalon, ExpT 26, 1914–15, 331 f.; J. Moffatt, "Jesus upon 'Stumbling-blocks' ", ExpT 26, 1914–15, 407 ff.; G. Stählin, proskoptō etc., TDNT VI 745–58; and skandalon etc., TDNT VII 339–58.
(b). E. Fuchs, "Das entymthologisierte Glaubensärgernis", Zum hermeneutischen Problem in der Theologie, 1959, 230–36; A. Humbert, "Essai d'une théologie du scandale dans les synoptiques", Biblica 35, 1954, 1–28; J. Lindblom, Skandalon. Eine lexikalisch-exegetische Untersuchung, Uppsala Univ. Årsskrift, 1921; and "Zum Begriff 'Anstoss' im Neuen Testament", Strena Philologica Upsaliensis, Festschrift Per Persson, 1922, 1–6; K. Müller, Anstoss und Gericht. Eine Studie zum jüdischen Hintergrund des paulinischen Skandalon-Begriffs, Studien zum Alten und Neuen Testament 19, 1968; K. Schilder, "Over het 'Skandalon' ", Gereformeerd theologisch Tijdschrift 32, 1931, 50–67, 97–130; O. Schmitz, Vom Wesen des Ärgernisses, 1925²; R. Schnackenburg, "Vom Ärgerniss des Kreuzes", Geist und Leben 30, 1957, 90 ff.; G. Stählin, Skandalon. Untersuchungen zur Geschichte eines biblischen Begriffes, 1930.

Oil, Olive, Gethsemane

ἔλαιον

ἔλαιον (elaion), (olive-) oil; ἐλαία (elaia), olive tree, olive (fruit); ἐλαιών (elaiōn), olive-orchard; ἀγριέλαιος (agrielaios), wild-olive; καλλιέλαιος (kallielaios), cultivated olive; Γεθσημανί (Gethsēmani), Gethsemane, transliteration of Aram. gaṯ šᵉmānê, oil press.

CL elaion properly refers to the oil of the olive, which was by far the commonest form of oil in use in the ancient world, though it was occasionlly used for other oily substances. Olive oil was a regular part of the diet of most Mediterranean peoples. It was also used as fuel for lamps, and for medicinal purposes. An important use in Greece was for anointing the body after bathing and before wrestling and other sports. It features in Pliny, Nat.Hist. 15.

OT In the LXX elaion normally translates Heb. šemen, occasionally Heb. yiṣhār. The oil was normally that of the olive, though šemen can also denote a fragrant ointment compounded from various spices with olive oil as its base. Oil was one of the basic agricultural products of Palestine, and was a staple element in the diet (1 Ki. 17:12–16; cf. the common formula "the corn, the wine and the oil", e.g. Deut. 7:13; 11:14; 12:17; 14:23; 18:4, 51; 2 Chr. 31:5; 32:28; Hos. 2:8, 22; Joel 2:19–24; Hag. 1:11). It was also used cosmetically (2 Sam. 14:2; Ps. 104:15; Prov. 27:9; cf. Deut. 28:40), particularly at banquets (Amos 6:6; cf. Ps. 23:5), and so is sometimes a symbol for joy (Ps. 45:7; Isa. 61:3). A fragrant oil was used to anoint the priests. Anointing with oil became a symbol of investing with authority, whether as → priest (Exod. 29:7; 40:15; Lev. 8:12, 30; 10:7; 21:10 ff.), → king (1 Sam. 10:1; 16:1, 13; 1 Ki. 1:33; 2 Ki. 9:3, 6; 11:12), or (on at least one occasion) → prophet (1 Ki. 19:16). Oil was used in the consecration of the tabernacle and its vessels (Exod. 40:9; Lev. 8:10; cf. Jacob's anointing of the stone at Bethel, Gen. 28:18; 35:14). In the temple ritual it was mixed with the cereal offerings and in ritual anointing (Exod. 25:6; 27:20; 29:2, 7, 21, 40; 30:24 f., 31; 31:11; 35:8, 14 f., 28; 37:29, 37 f.; 39:38; Lev. 2:1–16; 5:11; 6:15, 21; 7:10 ff.; 8:2; 9:4; 14:10–29; Num. 4:9, 16; 5:15; 6:15; 7:13–79; 8:18; 11:8; 15:4–9; 28:5–18; 29:3–14; 35:25). It also provided fuel for the lamps (Exod. 27:20; Lev. 24:2). (For fuller details and discussion → Anoint, art. chriō; → Sacrifice; → Temple.) In the teaching of the prophets oil figures chiefly in Ezekiel (16:9, 13, 18 f.; 23:41; 27:17; 32:14; 45:14, 24 f.; 46:5, 7, 11;46:14 f.), but references to oil are occasionally found in other prophetic writings (Isa. 41:19; 61:3; Jer. 31:12; 40:10; 41:8; Hos. 2:5, 8, 22; 12:1; Joel 1:10; 2:19, 24; Mic. 6:7, 15; Hag. 1:11; 2:12). Oil is mentioned in Pss. 23:5; 45:7; 55:21; 89:20; 92:10; 109:18; 141:5; and Prov. 5:3; 21:17; 21:20.

elaia and elaiōn translate Heb. zayiṯ, used both for the olive tree and its produce. The olive-tree matures slowly, so that to grow olives and enjoy their fruit was a common picture of a settled and prosperous condition. The fruitfulness of the olive makes it a suitable metaphor for those who enjoy God's blessing (Pss. 52:8; 128:3), particularly Israel (Jer. 11:16; Hos. 14:6; Hab. 3:17).

NT 1. Most of the practical uses of the olive and its oil mentioned in the OT reappear in the NT. Jas. 3:12 mentions the olive (elaia, for the fruit of the tree) as a crop, and its oil as an item of commerce appears in Matt. 25:9; Lk. 16:6; Rev. 18:13. Its use as fuel for lamps is attested in Matt. 25:3 ff.

The injunction in Rev. 6:6 to spare the oil and the wine even though there is to be a famine of corn, is probably an echo of the standard OT formula, "the corn, the wine and the oil", the three major agricultural products: only one-third of the produce is to be affected, and the rest spared, as in the following vision ("a fourth of the earth", verse 8) and in the plagues introduced by the seven trumpets in chapters 8–9. It may also be significant that while corn is an annual crop, olives and vines would take much longer to recover from devastation; it is, therefore, a temporary period of famine, not total destruction. This point is reinforced by the highly inflated price of wheat and barley which was a necessity more basic than oil and wine. A quart of wheat was generally regarded as the amount of food that a working man would eat in a day, and a denarius was a day's wage for a labourer (Matt. 20:2–13; cf. Mk. 6:37; Jn. 6:7). Thus an entire day's wages would be spent on wheat alone. A family could survive if they bought barley which was inferior. The prices here are eleven to fifteen times those cited by Cicero for wheat sold in Sicily (In Verrem 3, 81; cf. R. H. Charles, Revelation, ICC, I, 1920, 166 f.). The wealthy could afford to be self-indulgent, but the rest will experience very hard times. For similar statements in rabbinic writings about the days prior to the messiah's coming see Sotah 49a and Sanhedrin 97a (cf. G. R. Beasley-Murray, The Book of Revelation, New Century Bible, 1974, 133).

2. Matt. 6:17 suggests that the cosmetic use of oil was still normal in Palestine. In Lk. 7:46 it is expected that the host would anoint his guest at a banquet; the Pharisee's neglect of this simple courtesy is contrasted with the woman's lavish use of the much more expensive myron, oil of myrrh.

The use of anointing with oil as a symbol of joy and honour in Ps. 45:7 is taken up in Heb. 1:9 with reference to Christ, no doubt with the thought of his "anointing" for his messianic task (for which see Lk. 4:18; Acts 4:27; 10:38).

3. The medicinal use of oil on an open wound (cf. Isa. 1:6) is seen in Lk. 10:34, and is in line with widespread current practice. The NT also mentions the practice of anointing with oil in miraculous healing (Mk. 6:13; Jas. 5:14 only); here its effect is not so much medicinal as symbolic, probably as a symbol of the protection and blessing of God on the patient (→ Anoint, aleiphō).

4. The olive-tree is twice used as a symbol in the NT. In Rev. 11:4 the two witnesses of God are described as "the two olive trees and the two lampstands which stand before the Lord of the earth." This is an allusion to Zech. 4:2–14, where the two olive trees whose oil feeds the lampstand represent "the two anointed who stand by the Lord of the whole earth", normally taken to be Zerubbabel and Joshua, whose combined leadership was the channel of God's power to enable Israel to live up to its calling. The two witnesses represent the faithful witness of the church, particularly the Christian martyrs, and the point of the allusion to Zechariah's vision is that their faithful witness, in the power of the Spirit (cf. Zech. 4:6), is the channel of God's power to fulfil his purpose in a hostile world. (See further J. G. Baldwin, Haggai, Zechariah, Malachi, TC, 1972, 118 ff.; R. H. Charles, op. cit., 282 ff.)

In Paul's famous allegory in Rom. 11:17–24 the olive tree represents the people of God. The cultivated olive (kallielaios) is Israel, from which some of the branches were broken (many Jews rejected Christ, and so lost their place as God's people), while shoots of wild-olive (agrielaios) were grafted in their place (the inclusion of Gentiles in the people of God). Eventually, however, God is able to graft the natural branches back into their own stock (Jews who "do not persist in their unbelief" will be restored, and so "all Israel will be saved"). The stock remains the same; it is only in the branches that changes occur. So Israel, the people of God, is a continuous entity (cf. the OT use of the olive as a symbol for Israel), but its membership is subject both to the exclusion of native Israelites and the inclusion of the alien stock of Gentile believers. (The agrielaios is not an uncultivated specimen of the kallielaios, but a different species, probably the oleaster.)

Many commentators assume that Paul's theology is better than his knowledge of horticulture. But, while modern agriculturalists would look askance at the attempt to graft the oleaster on to the olive, this is independently attested in ancient time as a device to rejuvenate an unproductive olive (cf. W. M. Ramsay, Pauline and Other Studies, 1906, 219–50). Philo applied a similar figure of speech to Israelites and proselytes (Exsec. 6; cf. O. Michel, Der Brief an die Römer, KEK 4, 1966[13], 275 ff.; SB III 291). Where Paul does, quite consciously, go beyond nature is in the belief that after branches have been cut off, "God has the power to graft them in again." This is the miracle of God's grace. (See further M. M. Bourke, A Study of the Metaphor of the Olive Tree in Romans 11, 1947.)

5. The Mount of Olives (or Olivet, from Lat. olivetum, olive-orchard) is the ridge on the east side of Jerusalem, across the Kidron valley, on which olive-orchards still grow. It must be crossed by a traveller entering Jerusalem from the east, and so is mentioned in the accounts of Jesus' triumphal entry into Jerusalem (Matt. 21:1 par. Mk. 11:1, Lk. 19:28). Its commanding view of the temple area accounts for Jesus' lament there over Jerusalem's impenitence (Lk. 19:29–44), and his teaching there on the approaching ruin of the temple (Matt. 24:1–3 par. Mk. 13:1–4, Lk. 21:5–7). Somewhere on this ridge Jesus and his disciples spent the nights of his last week (Lk. 21:37), probably in the estate known as Gethsemane ("oil-press", so presumably an olive-orchard) to which they went after the last supper (Mk. 14:26, 32), and which was their regular rendezvous (Jn. 18:1–2). Gethsemane was the scene of Jesus' final commitment to his redemptive suffering, and of his arrest. It was also on the Mount of Olives that Jesus' ascension to heaven took place (Lk. 24:50–51; Acts 1:12); Acts 1:11, taken with Zech. 14:4, has led to the conclusion that it will also be the scene of his return.

→ Anoint, → Incense, → Light, → Sacrifice, → Temple R. T. France

(a). G. A. Barrois, "Olives, Mount of", IDB III 596–99; M. M. Bourke, A Study of the Metaphor of the Olive Tree in Romans 11, 1947; R. J. Forbes, Studies in Ancient Technology, III, 1955, 101–4; A. T. Hanson, "Christ the First Fruits, Christ the Tree", Studies in Paul's Technique and Theology, 1974, 104–25; F. B. Huey, Jr., "Oil", ZPEB IV 513 ff.; J. Jeremias, Jerusalem in the Time of Jesus 1969, 6 f., 55; C. Kopp, The Holy Places of the Gospels, 1963, 335–50; H. N. and A. L. Moldenke, Plants of the Bible, 1952, 97 ff., 157–60; W. M. Ramsay, Pauline and Other Studies, 1906, 219–50; J. F. Ross, "Oil", IDB III 592 f.; W. E. Shewell-Cooper, "Oil Tree", ZPEB III 515; and "Olive, Olive Tree", ZPEB III 528; H. Schlier, aleiphō etc., TDNT I 229–32; and elaion etc., TDNT II 470–73; J. C. Trever, "Oil Tree", IDB III 593; and "Olive Tree", IDB III 596.
(b). G. Dalman, Arbeit und Sitte in Palästina, IV, 1935, 153–290; I. Löw, Die Flora der Juden, II, 1924, 286–95.

Old

πάλαι

πάλαι (palai), formerly, earlier; παλαιός (palaios), old; παλαιότης (palaiotēs), age, obsoleteness; παλαιόω (palaioō), grow old, make or treat as old.

CL palai (from Homer onwards), Aeolic pēlyi, belongs etymologically to the word-group associated with tēle. The original meaning of distant, far away, focuses on the earlier or past in contrast with the present (cf. telos, the end). palaios (also from Homer onwards) is commonly used in secular Gk. meaning old: (a) positively as existing for a long time and hence venerable; (b) negatively as obsolete, worn out, and hence worthless, unusable (cf. Soph., Oedipus Rex 290, etc.). Often archaios, original, venerable, is used in the same sense, but almost always positively. palaioō (from Plato onwards) is found only in the pass. in secular Gk.

OT In the LXX palaios has mostly the meaning of old, last year's, antiquated (cf. Lev. 25:22). It formally translates the Heb. yāšān, old, last year's. palaioō translates in the LXX (a) 'āṭēq (trans.) cause to pass away (cf. Job. 9:5), and (intrans.) pass away, fall into decay (cf. Job 14:18), reach old age (cf. Job. 21:7); and (b) balâh be worn out (cf. Deut. 8:4; 29:5; Jos. 9:5, 13; Neh. 9:21). In this latter sense palaioō is used metaphorically in the exilic and post-exilic writings of the OT for the growing old and transience of man's life and work, and also of heaven and earth (cf. Ps. 32:3; Isa. 50:9; Job 13:28). By giving mankind and the whole creation over to decay and corruption God passes judgment on the sin and fall of mankind (Isa. 51:6; Ps. 102[101]:26).

NT 1. In the NT palai points to something which lies in the recent or remote past: e.g., God spoke "of old" (Heb. 1:1); they would have repented "long ago" (Matt. 11:21 par. Lk. 10:13; Jude 4); "old" sins (2 Pet. 1:9); if he were "already" dead (Mk. 15:44); "all along" (2 Cor. 12:19).

2. In palaios and palaiotēs the old, obsolete past stands in contrast with the completely new (→ New, arts. kainos, neos). The salvation of God in Jesus Christ has already broken into this age and made it obsolete together with its institutions and practices (2 Cor. 5:17; cf. Mk. 2:21 f. on fasting; Rom. 7:6 on the law; 1 Cor. 5:7 on sin). The final fulfilment is still awaited. With the coming again of the Lord this age will be brought to an end and world-history completed (2 Pet. 3:13; → Present).

(a) The parabolic words of Matt. 9:16 f. par. Mk. 2:21 f., Lk. 5:56 f. are probably to be understood in this context, though we cannot be completely sure. Probably they were originally independent, everyday sayings which Jesus used to show that the age of the old world had passed and that the age of salvation had begun. The old, obsolete, world-age is compared with an old garment (v. 21) and with old wine (v. 22). A garment (→ Clothe, art. himation) and → wine were traditional symbols of the cosmos or the age of salvation. In the synoptic context the passage could also mean that the new excludes the old; the new age of salvation demands a new manner of life which cannot be inserted in the old customs, such as fasting and mourning. The old is fulfilled in the new (cf. Matt. 5:17) or, in the case of the natural man, conquered.

The proverb of Lk. 5:39 in this context is evidently ironical: "And no one after drinking old wine desires new; for he says, 'The old is good'" (some MSS read "better"; on the word there → Good, art. chrēstos). It implies that men (in the context those who cling to the Jewish traditions) are incorrigibly attached to the old familiar ways.

In Matt. 13:52 Jesus says: "Therefore every scribe who has been trained for the kingdom of heaven [pas grammateus mathēteutheis tē basileia tōn ouranōn] is like a householder [oikodespotē] who brings out of his treasure what is old and new [kaina kai palaia]." Here the scribe is seen as a steward (→ House, art. oikonomia) who knows both the old, the message of the OT scriptures, and also their fulfilment in the radically new, the message and person of Jesus. The saying stands at the conclusion of Matt.'s account of the parables of the sower, the mustard → seed, the → leaven, the tares, the treasure hidden in a field, the pearl of great price and the fish net. The mention of the householder and the kingdom links up with previous themes. The picture of the → disciple as a scribe is a particularly Matthaean perspective (cf. 23:34; → Scripture). Some scholars see in this an element of Matt.'s Jewishness. At any rate, the disciple in Matt. does what the scribe should be doing, i.e. expound the scriptures as they are fulfilled by Jesus (Matt. 5:17 f.). This is, moreover, what Matt.'s Gospel itself seeks to do (e.g. Matt. 1:22 f., cf. Isa. 7:14; Matt. 2:5 f., cf. Mic. 5:2; Matt. 2:15, cf. Hos. 11:1, Exod. 4:22; Matt. 2:17 f., cf. Jer. 31:15; Matt. 2:23, cf. Isa. 11:1; Matt. 3:3, cf. Isa. 40:3; Matt. 3:15; → Fullness, art. plēroō; cf. also R. H. Gundry, The Use of the Old Testament in St. Matthew, Supplements to NovT 18, 1967; R. T. France, Jesus and the Old Testament, 1971; K. Stendahl, The School of St. Matthew, 1968²). There may be a play on words between the name of Matthew (Matthaios) and the words "who has been trained" (lit. "become a disciple", mathēteutheis) which would further support the view that Matt.'s Gospel exemplifies the dictum here. The scribe was not simply the copyist of the scriptures in post-exilic Judaism; he was the authorized teacher and theologian who interpreted the law (cf. D. Hill, The Gospel of Matthew, New Century Bible, 1972, 240). But it should be noted in this saying that the "scribe" in question is not in the first instance trained in the law. He is trained in the → kingdom and thus is able to bring out old and new from his treasure. In this respect he stands in contrast with those scribes who were trained in "the tradition of the elders" (Matt. 15:1–20 par. Mk. 7:1–23) who for the sake of human tradition make void the word of God (Matt. 15:6; cf. also Matt. 23:1–39). Like Jesus himself, the scribe trained in the kingdom of heaven is able to bring out the true treasure from the law and the prophets.

(b) In Paul and Hebrews the opposition between old and new is to be understood in the same way as in the Synoptics. Baptism represents the death of the old man and the birth of the new. In the picture of the old and new man we have no doubt part of the primitive Christian baptismal exhortation (Rom. 6:6; Col. 3:9; Eph. 4:22 → Baptism; → Body; → Clothe; → Destroy; → Man). The "old" means everything connected with the fall of man and with his subjection to the distress and death of a transitory life, separated from God. In this concept we can hear deep undertones of God's wrath and the wages of sin. At the same time we are pointed to the completely new, to that healing and salvation which are given to man when he is crucified with Christ and raised with him (Rom. 6:3 ff.).

palaiotēs, age, obsoleteness, what is outdated, occurs only at Rom. 7:6, where Paul emphasizes the incompatibility of the old and the new as ways of salvation and life: we serve in the newness of Spirit and not in the oldness of letter (en kainotēti pneumatos kai ou palaiotēti grammatos). Paul has been appealing to the analogy of divorce: a woman is bound to her husband by the law as long as he lives. She is only free to marry someone else if the husband dies. The law is powerless to do anything else. Paul then modifies the picture. By dying to the law "through the body of Christ" (Rom. 7:4), the believer is "discharged from the law, dead to that which held us captive" (7:6a). But if we are dead to the law, we are free to serve in the Spirit. The law is thus dead in that it cannot give life but can only condemn (cf. 7:10 ff.). Life comes as something → new apart from the law and thus makes the letter of the law old (in that it came first) and obsolete (in that it is superseded by the Spirit of Christ) (cf. Rom. 7:6 with 8:5–11; and 2 Cor. 3:6). (On the place of the law in Paul's thought → Law art. nomos NT 2; → Goal, art. telos NT 1; → I Am, art. egō eimi NT 2 (c).)

Because Jesus is the new man, and he who believes in him is also born again to a new → life, the old life, alienated from God, is dead. It is without power or rights, and so it must daily be given over to → death. In 1 Cor. 5:7 f. Paul alludes to an OT commandment (cf. Exod. 12:19; 13:7; Deut. 16:3 f.). Just as the last remnants of the → old leaven must be eliminated before the Passover (→ Feast, art. pascha) so the evil and crookedness of the old life, the old leaven of sin and disobedience, must be cleared out to make room for the new life of sincerity and obedience (1 Cor. 5:6–8). Jesus' message and work bring the new which is promised in the OT and fulfils the old, or deprives it of power. The old life of legality cannot, therefore, be reconciled with faith in Jesus Christ (Rom. 7:6).

Heb. 8:13 takes up the promise of the new → covenant of Jer. 31:31–35: "In speaking of a new covenant he treats the first as obsolete [pepalaiōken]. And what is becoming obsolete [palaioumenon] and growing old [gēraskon] is ready to vanish away." This is entirely God's work. Seeing that God in Christ makes a new covenant, the old covenant of the law has become obsolete. In Christ the first can be regarded only as old and fulfilled (2 Cor. 3:14). Indeed, it may be said that the NT speaks of the old only from the standpoint of the new and for the sake of the new.

3. palaios is used in quite another sense only in 1 Jn. 2:7. The writer of the letter is not communicating a new commandment to his readers, but the old commandment which they had known from their conversion, "from the beginning". In the context of 2:1–6 "old refers to the primitive Christian tradition and not to Lev. 19:18" (H. Windisch, Die katholischen Briefe, HNT 15, 1951³, ad loc.).

→ Age, → Covenant, → Law, → New H. Haarbeck

(a). H. Seesemann, palai etc., TDNT V 717–20.
(b). R. Bultmann, Der alte und neue Mensch in der Theologie des Paulus (reprint of three older articles), 1964; F. Hahn, "Die Bildworte vom neuen Flicken und vom alten Wein", EvTh 31, 1971, 357 ff.

One, Once, Only

The NT uses three different sets of terms to express that someone or something is unique or occurs only once. Their theological interest lies in the passages where they are used in connection with God or Christ. In general terms monos thus has a polemical connotation, in the contrast with other gods, saviours and religions. heis is used to confess the oneness and uniqueness of God. hapax and ephapax stress the once-and-for-all nature of God's actions in history, especially in Jesus.

ἅπαξ

ἅπαξ (hapax), once; ἐφάπαξ (ephapax), once for all.

CL hapax is compounded of ha- (= heis in compounds) and pax (from pēgnymi, make firm, bring together; cf. pagos for anything that is firmly and surely brought together). Its fundamental meaning therefore includes numerical singularity and completeness which needs no additions.

OT In the LXX hapax renders Heb. 'eḥād (masc.), 'aḥaṯ (fem.), one (e.g. Exod. 30:10; Ps. 62[61]:11; and pa'am, a beat, footfall, time (e.g. Neh. 13:20; Ezr. 23:20 LXX). The two Heb. words come together at Jos. 6:3, 14, meaning once, and

Isa. 66:8, meaning at once. The rabbis interpreted 'aḥaṭ in Hag. 2:6 ("For thus says the Lord of hosts: Once again, in a little while, I will shake the heavens and the earth and the sea and the dry land") as only once more, implying the need for special readiness and watching in view of the coming of messianic kingdom (SB III 750).

NT 1. hapax is found only 14 times in the NT: 3 times in Paul and 8 in Heb., once in 1 Pet., and twice in Jude. It means once in contrast to twice, thrice, etc. (2 Cor. 11:25; Phil. 4:16; Heb. 9:7), and once in the sense of an event that cannot be repeated. It is so used of the sacrificial death of Christ (Heb. 9:26 ff.; 1 Pet. 3:18) and negatively of OT sacrifice (Heb. 10:2), of God's saving activity (Jude 3 and 5) and judgment (Heb. 12:26 = Hag. 2:6). With the once-for-all-ness and finality of Jesus' saving work the NT writers contrast the once-for-all-ness and finality of human reaction, either in faith or in unbelief. Those who have once found mercy cannot be restored to repentance if they → fall away (parapesontas) (Heb. 6:4 ff.), just as those whom God brought out of Egypt were destroyed because of their unbelief (Jude 5).

The derivative ephapax is not found in pre-Christian writings. In 1 Cor. 15:6 it means "at one time", i.e. together, as opposed to separately. In the other 4 cases where it is used (Rom. 6:10; Heb. 7:27; 9:12; 10:10) it means once for all and is used of the sacrificial death of Christ.

2. The theological importance of both terms lies in the fact that they stress the historical nature of God's revelation. Just as God revealed himself to Israel in history, when he brought him out of → Egypt, so he revealed himself to his covenant people, once, unrepeatably and finally in Christ. This is of decisive importance in confrontation with those religions where salvation is an ideal concept based on the mere idea of deity and divorced from history (as in gnosticism).

In contrast to the situation of the OT covenant people Heb. argues that, since the sacrificial death of Jesus once for all, we are now in the end time (ephapax, Heb. 10:10; heis, Heb. 10:12, 14). The contrast is drawn between the single, complete act of Christ and the repeated sacrifices of the old covenant which are seen to have been temporary and imperfect from the very fact that they had to be repeated every year. Otherwise those that brought these sacrifices and worshipped God through them would have ceased to bring them. They would have been once purified and would have had no more consciousness of sin (Heb. 10:2) As mere → shadows (skia) of the future and perfect sacrifice, of Christ, they served merely to bring sins to mind (Heb. 10:3, anamnēsis hamartiōn) and so to point to the One to come.

This indicates that the very nature and purpose of the OT sacrificial system were not to purify finally and once for all but to point to the final sacrifice and purification and hence to require repetition (Heb. 10:2 f.). The one true and finally valid sacrifice is Jesus, who is both the sacrifice and high priest in one. Just as man finally dies and faces the judgment, so Jesus' giving himself in death to put away sins is once for all and final (Heb. 9:26 ff.). It is this that distinguishes the activity of the Son made perfect for ever (Heb. 7:27 f.) from that of the earthly high priest with his temporal sacrifice, with its limited validity, offered daily for himself and the people.

The author of Heb. sees the death of Christ as the once-and-for-all sacrifice and the resurrection and ascension of Christ in terms of the high priest entering the Holy Place on the day of atonement (Heb. 9:12; 10:12; cf. Lev. 16). Only the high priest was permitted to do this, which he did only once a year. Having offered sacrifice, he entered the Holy Place taking with him the blood of the sacrifice on behalf of the entire people of God. Christ has entered the immediate presence of God through his heavenly exaltation by his own blood to represent his people before God and obtain for them eternal salvation (cf. Heb. 9:14 with 10:19–25). This is the basis of the Christian faith and Christian way of life.

In Rom. 6:10 Paul writes: "The death he died he died to sin, once for all [ephapax], but the life he lives he lives to God." The statement comes at the climax of a discussion of the problem of antinomianism. If men are saved by "the free gift in the grace of that one man Jesus Christ" (Rom. 5:15) which abounds for many and not because of anything that they do to deserve it, then why not go on sinning that grace may abound (Rom. 6:1)? Paul replies that baptism implies baptism into Christ's death (Rom. 6:3), and that just as he was raised by the glory of the Father, we too should walk in the newness of life (Rom. 6:4). The whole purpose of his death was to free men from the enslavement of sin (Rom. 6:5–9). This he has done once for all; and now he lives to God (Rom. 6:10). "So you also must consider yourselves dead to sin and alive to God in Christ Jesus" (Rom. 6:11). Since the crucified Christ is eternally exalted, "the act of Golgotha is the decisive turning point in history" (G. Schrenk, "Die Geschichtsauffassung des Paulus auf dem Hintergrund seines Zeitalters", Jahrbücher der Theologischen Schule Bethel, 3, 1932, 68).

The finality and unrepeatability of the historic act of salvation is paralleled by the finality of personal salvation. If it is frittered away, it is also unrepeatable. "For it is impossible to restore again to repentance those who have once [hapax] been enlightened, who have tasted the heavenly gift, and have become partakers of the Holy Spirit, and have tasted the goodness of the word of God and the powers of the age to come, if they then commit apostasy, since they crucify the Son of God on their own account and hold him up to contempt" (Heb. 6:4 ff.). The theme of apostasy is a recurring one in Heb. which issues repeated warnings against it (cf. Heb. 3:1–4:16; 6:1–20; 10:26–39; 12:1–29; 13:1 ff., 20 ff.). On the four things mentioned here (been enlightened, tasted the heavenly gift, partaken of the Holy Spirit, tasted the goodness of the word of God and the mighty works of the age to come) see F. F. Bruce, Epistle to the Hebrews, NLC, 1964, 118-24; I. H. Marshall, Kept by the Power of God: A Study of Perseverance and Falling Away, 1969, 136 ff.

Jude 3 urges its readers "to contend for the faith which was once for all [hapax] delivered to the saints." "Clearly the faith is not the believing man's response to Christ (the fides qua creditur), but is to be concretely understood as the fides quae creditur, i.e. the message or body of saving beliefs accepted as orthodox in the Church" (J. N. D. Kelly, The Epistles of Peter and Jude, BNTC 1969, 247; cf. also v. 20). The source of this teaching is ultimately God himself, but it is mediated by the apostles and other human agents (cf. Jude 17 with Lk. 1:2; Acts 16:4; Rom. 6:17; 1 Cor. 11:2; 2 Thess. 2:15; 3:6; 2 Tim. 2:1 f.). The emphasis on a body of truth in opposition to heretical doctrines is more pronounced in later NT writings such as the Pastoral Epistles (cf. 1 Tim. 1:3; 4:6; 2 Tim. 2:2; 4:3 f.; Tit. 1:9). But as Kelly points out, "the idea of tradition, of the gospel as an authoritative message committed to and handed down in the Church, was integral to Christianity from the start" (op. cit., 248; cf. Rom. 10:8; 16:17; 1 Cor. 11:2, 23; 15:1–3; Gal. 1:23; 6:10; → Teach, art. paradidōmi). Jude 5 goes on to remind the readers that they "were once fully informed [eidotas hapax panta]" of the fact that "he who saved a people out of the land of Egypt, afterward destroyed those who did not believe." "Here as in 3b, we have a sharper insistence that the apostolic faith is a complete whole which has been definitely given to men and cannot be altered" (Kelly, op. cit., 254). The warning against apostasy has the same point as that in Heb. The repeated illustration in Heb. 3 and 4 and its use in 1 Cor. 10:1–5 together with the way that it is introduced here suggests that it formed part of common Christian instruction. (On the exodus theme in Christian thought see B. S. Childs, Exodus: A Commentary, 1974, 230–39; A. T. Hanson, Jesus Christ in the Old Testament, 1965, 10–25, 48–65; and Studies in Paul's Technique and Theology, 1974; R. E. Nixon, The Exodus in the New Testament, 1963.) K.-H. Bartels

εἷς

εἷς (heis), one; ἑνότης (henotēs), unity.

CL The masc. form heis derives from Indo-European sem-s* (cf. homos, → Like); the fem. form mia from sm-ia*; and the neut. hen from sem* (cf. Liddell-Scott, 492).

In pre-Socratic nature philosophy to hen, the one, refers to the ultimate unity of being, eternity, that which has not become, the non-transient, underived, simple being (the Eleatic school). Parmenides described being as a sphere, perfect in itself and uniform, and this unique, uniform world-body is at the same time the world-concept, simple and excluding all peculiarities. (On Pre-Socratic thought see W. K. C. Guthrie, A History of Greek Philosophy, I, The Earlier Presocratics and Pythogoreans, 1962; II, The Presocratic Tradition from Parmenides to Democritus, 1965; and more briefly "Pre-Socratic Philosophy" in P. Edwards, ed., The Encyclopedia of Philosophy, VI, 1967, 441–46.)

The Sophists applied these fundamental concepts to ethics. Since all being is absolutely identical, every value judgment becomes impossible. Socrates opposed these doctrines, and posited an abiding unity which would be recognized by all over against the change and multplicity of opinions. The basis for such universally recognized demands is universally valid concepts (cf. W. K. C. Guthrie, Socrates, 1971; I. G. Kidd, "Socrates", The Encyclopedia of Philosophy, VII, 480–86). Plato taught a world of ideas in which reality increases until it reaches its peak on the highest incorporeal idea of the One as the good, divine, world-intellect. The many, the physical, and the lower are clearly differentiated from it (on Plato see A. E. Taylor, Plato, 1926; and G. Ryle, "Plato", The Encyclopedia of Philosophy, VII, 314–33). For the Stoics, however, all existence is ultimately a unity. The divine penetrates everything and manifests itself in diversity, creating order and furnishing a unitary law. All that happens is necessary by the nature of things. The rational is that which is in unison with nature as a whole regarded as divine. The soul of man is by its nature one with the world-soul (on Stoicism see P. P. Hallie, "Stoicism", The Encyclopedia of Philosophy, VIII, 19–22).

In gnosticism the divine world of life, light, spirit is originally and remains by nature one. In a pre-cosmic catastrophe pieces of it were broken off and handed over to the evil, the dark, and the many (creation of the world). The goal of the cosmic drama is the collecting and returning of all the scattered fragments of the spiritual and divine into the unity of God. The marks of the divine, true and good are unity, calm, peace; those of the evil, worldly and physical are manifoldness, scattering, lack of peace. (For literature on gnosticism → Knowledge.)

OT 1. The OT terms are 'eḥāḏ (masc.) and 'aḥaṯ (fem.) meaning: (a) one (Gen. 1:9); (b) the first (Gen. 8:5), especially in summaries (e.g. Gen. 2:11); (c) the one . . . the other (Exod. 18:3); (d) one after the other (Isa. 27:12); (e) one with another (Ezek. 33:30); (f) one to another (Job 41:16[8]); (g) any one (Gen. 26:10); (h) one and the same (Gen. 27:45); (i) one alone, the only one (Isa. 51:2) (→ monos). The plur. is 'ᵃḥāḏîm, some, a few (Gen. 27:44).

The unity of God is particularly stressed in Deut. 6:4. The MT has "Hear O Israel: YHWH 'ᵉlōhēnû YHWH 'eḥāḏ [lit. Yahweh our God Yahweh one]." This has been variously translated: "The LORD is our God is one LORD" (RSV), "the LORD our God, the LORD is one", "the LORD is our God, the LORD is one", "the LORD is our God, the LORD alone" (all RSV mg.), "the LORD is our God, one LORD" (NEB). LXX has "[The] LORD our God is one LORD [Kyrios ho theos hēmōn heis estin]." Thus the RSV follows the LXX rendering of the Heb. (For discussion of the declaration see G. Quell, TDNT III 1079 ff.; and for the passage in general → Command; → God, art. theos OT; → Hear; → Love.)

In the older strata of the OT Israel still spoke of the existence of other gods (e.g. 1 Sam. 26:19 [ironic]; Exod. 15:11). Explicit monotheism became increasingly dominant from the 7th cent. B.C. (e.g. 1 Ki. 8:60; Jer. 2:11; and especially in Isa. 41:29; 43:10; 44:8). But the unique reality of God was firmly anchored in the faith of Israel from the first. This forms the basis for the call to unity among the people (Mal. 2:10). The words of Deut. 6:4 f. form the šᵉma', i.e. the daily confessions by Jews of the unity of God, the basic creed of Jud., by which its separates itself from all paganism and idolatry (cf. the martyrdom of R. Akiba who died with a long drawn out 'eḥāḏ on his lips; Ber. 61b; T. J. Ber. 2:4a: 61; cf. SB I 224).

2. The unambiguous monotheistic character of later Judaism may be seen in the fact that "the One" became a surrogate for God (cf. SB II 28 on Mk. 12:29).

NT 1. Survey of the use of heis in the NT. (a) As a simple numeral. (i) One (Matt. 5:41; Jn. 9:25). We find the same stress on one as in Judaism (e.g. Matt. 26:14; 5:18; Jas. 2:10; cf. also Matt. 23:15). One thing can be decisive (Mk. 10:21; cf. Matt. 19:21; Lk. 18:22); the plagues of judgment come on one day (Rev. 18:8); there is one sacrifice of Christ (Heb. 10:12, 14; → hapax). This means that heis comes to stand parallel to monos (e.g. Mk. 2:7 [heis]; Lk. 5:21 [monos]). The one, only, last son has a particularly high rank (Matt. 21:37; Mk. 12:6; Lk. 20:13). The one who repents is more valuable than the ninety-nine who do not need to repent (Lk. 15:7). God's will finds its climax in one decisive word and command (Gal. 5:14). (ii) The one . . . the other (Matt. 24:40 f.; 6:24). (iii) Each (Matt. 26:22 [RSV and NEB do not distinguish this usage from that in Mk. 14:19, see (iv)]; 1 Cor. 12:18 f.). (iv) One after the other (Mk. 14:19). (v) The first (Matt. 28:1); → First, art. prōtos. (vi) One and only (Mk. 2:7; cf. Lk. 5:21; → monos); this can be explained by Heb. usage.

(b) The one God and Father. The Shema (Deut. 6:4; see OT 1 above) is quoted in Mk. 12:29, cf. v. 32. Jas. 4:12 declares that "there is one lawgiver and judge." In warning against the temptation to exalt oneself to positions which only God can occupy Matt. records the words: "But you are not to be called rabbi, for you have one teacher, and you are all brethren. And call no man your father on earth, for you have one Father, who is in heaven. Neither be called masters, for you have one master, the Christ" (Matt. 23:8 ff.). The uniqueness of God is asserted over against idols in the controversy over eating meat offered to idols (1 Cor. 8:4 ff.). This means that there is but "one God, the Father, from whom are all things and for whom we exist, and one Lord, Jesus Christ, through whom are all things and through whom we exist" (v. 6). Therefore, idols have "no real existence" (v. 4). Nevertheless, on grounds of love and expediency Paul urges the Corinthians not to eat meat that has been first offered to idols. Eph. 4:3 urges unity and peace in the church on the grounds of the unity of God: "There is one body and one Spirit, just as you were called in one hope that belongs to your call, one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of us all, who is above all and through all and in all" (Eph. 4:4 ff.). 1 Tim. 2:5 is a parenthetical reminder that all men have to do with the same God: "For there is one God, and one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus." He it is "who desires all men to be saved and to come to the knowledge of the truth" (v. 4). Therefore, it is appropriate to pray for all men, including kings and those in positions of authority. There is a unity of mankind which derives from man's common origin at the hands of "the God who made the world and everything in it" (Acts 17:24): "And he made from one every nation of men to live on all the face of the earth, having determined allotted periods and the boundaries of their habitation" (v. 26). There is one abiding will of God (Matt. 5:17 f.), and in conformity with the will of this one God there is one church composed of Jews and Gentiles. One of the main themes of the Epistle to the Romans is to demonstrate the continuity of the divine purposes revealed in the OT in the light of the work of Christ and the inclusion of the Gentiles: "Or is God the God of Jews only? Is he not the God of Gentiles also? Yes, of Gentiles also, since God is one, and he will justify the circumcised on the ground of their faith and the uncircumcised because of their faith" (Rom. 3:29 f.).

(c) The one God in the one Lord Jesus Christ. Jesus is the one exclusive teacher, Lord and mediator (Matt. 28:8, 10; 1 Cor. 8:6; Eph. 4:5; 1 Tim. 2:5). He is the One who stands before the Father on behalf of all (Jn. 11:50; 2 Cor. 5:14). Adam, the disobedient one, brought death; Jesus, the obedient One, brought life (Rom. 5:12 ff.; cf. 1 Cor. 15:22; → Adam). He is one with God the → Father (Jn. 10:30; 17:11, 21 ff.). He is the one Lord, with one → faith and → baptism (Eph. 4:5), the one → shepherd with one flock (Jn. 10:14 ff.).

(d) The One God in the one Spirit of Christ. Paul bases his teaching on the multiplicity of gifts in the church and the necessity of order and harmony in their use on the unity of the Spirit who is the giver of the gifts (1 Cor. 12:9, 11, 13). Jews and Gentiles are no longer alien in Christ, "for through him we both have access in one Spirit to the Father" (Eph. 2:18). There should be unity in the church because "there is one body and one Spirit, just as you were called to the one hope that belongs to your call" (Eph. 4:4). The word henotēs, unity, occurs only in Eph. expressing the unity of the church in maturity which is based on the divine unity: "eager to maintain the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace" (4:3); "until we all attain to the unity of the faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God, to mature manhood, to the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ" (4:13).

(e) The one church of the one Lord. (i) There is a unity of believers with their Lord. There is also a unity of man and woman which comes about through sexual intercourse. For this reason the believer should not join himself to a prostitute (1 Cor. 6:16; cf. Gen. 2:24; Matt. 19:5; Mk. 10:8; Eph. 5:31; → Discipline, art. porneuō; → Flesh; → Marriage). The believer's union with Christ is not a physical one but a spiritual one: "But he who is united with the Lord becomes one spirit with him" (1 Cor. 6:17; cf. the marriage analogy of Christ and the church in Eph. 5:28–33; Rev. 21:2; and the images of the → body and → head).

(ii) In Heb. 2:11 "out of one" (ex henos; RSV "one origin"; NEB "of one stock") points to the closest possible unity of believers with Jesus, which is here uniquely expressed in terms of "brothers" in the quotation in v. 12 from Ps. 22:22. There is also a unity of believers in the body of Christ (1 Cor. 12:12 f.; Gal. 2:28; Col. 3:15) through and in the Holy Spirit (Eph. 4:4). The unity of the Lord and his lordship causes the wall of partition between Jews and Gentiles, which was broken down at the cross, to be abolished for good and all, for now there exists only the one, new people of God in Christ (Eph. 2:13–16; Jn. 11:52; 17:23; 17:11, 21). This is a particular emphasis in Jn. Those who are made one have a common life (1 Cor. 12:26; Gal. 6:2; Acts 4:32; Phil. 2:2; Rom. 15:6). Conversely those who are in rebellion against God are one (Rev. 17:13).

2. The Theological meaning of heis in the NT. Unity in the NT is always seen from the standpoint of Christ: "there is salvation in no one else, for there is no other name under heaven given among men by which we must be saved" (Acts 4:12). In Gk. and Roman philosophy the unity of God and the world is demanded by educated reason. In the OT the unity of God is a confession derived from experience of God's unique reality. The decisive advance in the NT, caused by God himself, is the basing of the unity and uniqueness of God on the unique revelation through and in the one man Jesus Christ, the Revealer and Lord (Matt. 23:8 ff.; 1 Cor. 8:4 ff.; Eph. 4:1–16; 1 Tim. 2:5 f.).

That is why Paul, after saying in 1 Cor. 8:4 that there are no real idols in the world and that there is no God but One, can recognize in the following sentence that there are in fact many gods and lords. But (and this is the justification for the original statement) these gods have no reality and are therefore only "so-called gods". They have no claim to lordship over us. If we ask why Paul used the term God in this dialectic way, the answer seems to be: the true unity and uniqueness, and hence the reality, of the one God comes from the fact that for us, i.e. for our gain, there is one Lord Jesus Christ (v. 6). We should not take v. 6 as consisting of two parallel statements simply joined by kai (and). Rather we must interpret kai as meaning: just in the way and with the reality in which we have one Lord Jesus Christ.

This is expressed particularly clearly in Jn. Jn. 10:30 should not be interpreted to mean that the oneness of Jesus with the Father consists of the joining of two persons or beings who were formerly separated. We must understand it in the light of Jn. 14:9: "He who has seen me has seen the Father." In a Christian sense no one can speak of God unless he is speaking concretely of Jesus. Statements like Jas. 4:12 obtain a living meaning only in the light of Jesus. Indeed, the unity of the Spirit is based on Jesus (1 Cor. 13; Eph. 4), not on a unity of outlook based on human enthusiasm.

The "one man Jesus Christ" (Rom. 5:15) is decisive for the salvation of "the many." He died for all the one decisive death (Jn. 11:50, 52; 2 Cor. 5:14; → hapax NT). The obedient death of the one is interpreted by the "much more" of Rom. 5:17. The one man Adam became a curse for humanity, "because all men sinned" (Rom. 5:12); in contrast the one man Jesus Christ brought righteousness and life for all (Rom. 5:17).

Rom. 5:12–20 contrasts the rôles of Christ and → Adam as the respective heads of saved and fallen humanity. Sin came into the world "through one man and death through sin, and so death spread to all men because all men sinned" (Rom. 5:12). "But the free gift is not like the trespass. For if many died through one man's trespass, much more have the grace of God and the free gift in the grace of that one man Jesus Christ abounded for the many. And the free gift is not like the effect of that one man's sin. For the judgment following one trespass brought condemnation, but the free gift following many trespasses brings justification. If, because of one man's trespass, death reigned through that one man, much more will those who receive the abundance of grace and the free gift of righteousness reign in life through the one man Jesus Christ" (Rom. 5:15 ff.; cf. also Jn. 11:50, 52; 2 Cor. 5:14).

The foundation and continuity of the church's unity are grounded in him as the one shepherd of the one flock (Jn. 10:14 ff.). Paul expresses this fact through his picture of the one → body, in which the members are linked and are mutually dependent, a picture used also by the Stoics. The several members cannot live in diversity without the one → head (1 Cor. 12). The counterpart to this in the high priestly prayer in Jn. 17 is the concept of mutual indwelling: Jesus prayed "that they may all be one; even as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be in us, so that the world may believe that thou hast sent me" (Jn. 17:21).

K.-H. Bartels

μόνος — μόνος (monos), alone, only; μονογενής (monogenēs), only (preferable to "only begotten").

CL monos, Ionic mounos, Doric mōnos from Homer on, means only, lonely, alone; sou monos, without you; monos pantōn anthrōpōn, (he had) no other of all men. In an extended sense it means unique. The adv. monōs or monon (neut.) means only, solely. The LXX and the NT do not preserve the variety of usage which existed in cultured Gk. The use of the adj. and adv. run into one another, and the adv. monōs is not found, nor the use with the gen. On the other hand, the form kata monas, alone, does occur. All this shows that monos is used in the NT as in Koine Gk.

OT The LXX uses monos mostly for l^{e}baḏ or (l^{e}) bāḏāḏ (78 times as against 14 for the other Heb. terms), derived from baḏ, that which has been separated. Its basic meaning is in separation from, or in solitude from. Thus in Exod. 30:34 baḏ b^{e}baḏ yihyeh (RSV "of each shall there be an equal part") means that the various spices must be taken separately without contact with each other, and only then be mixed to form → incense (v. 35). To be alone does not imply peace but a troubled mind and restlessness. The bad connotation cannot be missed and comes out clearly in a passage like Isa. 49:21 and Jer. 15:17, where the prophet, bent down by God's hand, and cut off from human contact with the other members of his people, sits alone. This sense is also found in Gen. 2:18. God says that it is not good for the man to be alone; "I will make a helper fit for him."

monos is frequently used for God's uniqueness; e.g. Deut. 32:12 (as leader of the people); Job 9:8 (as Creator). It occurs in the confessional statements in 2 Ki. 19:15, 19; Isa. 37:16. It is frequently found in Pss. (4:8; 33[32]:15; 51[50]:4; 71[70]:16; 72[71]:18; 77[76]:14; 83[82]:18; 86[85]:10; 136[135]:4, 7; 141[140]:10; 148:13). Hence it is often used in statements about the exclusive worship of the one God: e.g. Exod. 22:20(19); Deut. 6:13 (v.l. in LXX); Ps. 71(70):16. Ezek. 14:16 shows that the righteous alone will be delivered. Exod. 24:2 uses monos to stress → Moses' uniqueness. Occasionally, as in secular Gk., monos is intensified. Thus in 1 Ki. 19:10, 14, where → Elijah, persecuted by Jezebel, says in his despondency that he has survived monōtatos, utterly alone, as prophet of the Lord. The despair of this extreme solitude stands in contrast to the superior strength and numbers of the worshippers of Baal which had remained intact in spite of God's judgment in 1 Ki. 18.

NT 1. monos is found 46 times in the NT and monon 66 times. They are found most frequently in Paul (13 and 36 times) and John (9 and 5 times), while neither is found in 2 Pet., Tit. or Phlm. The adj. is used in connection with vbs. like eimi (be), heuriskō (find), kataleipō (leave), and absolutely with nouns and prons. The neut. monon is used as an adv. It means: (a) only, alone (Matt. 9:21; 1 Cor. 15:19; Lk. 24:12; Matt. 5:47); not only but also (Matt. 21:21); not only but much more (Phil. 2:12); and in the limiting sense of not yet but only (Acts 8:16); (b) alone, without others, unaccompanied (Matt. 17:8 par. Mk. 9:8; Jn. 8:16; Rom. 11:3); kata monas, alone by oneself (Mk. 4:10; Lk. 9:18); single (Jn. 12:24); alone without help (Lk. 10:40), alone with, face to face (Matt. 18:15); (e) with noun or pron. it means only in the sense of exclusively (e.g. Matt. 12:4; Lk. 5:21 → heis, NT 1; Rom. 16:27; 1 Tim. 1:17; 6:15 f.; Heb. 9:7; Gal. 6:4; Rev. 15:4); (d) one and only (Jn. 5:44; 17:3; Jude 4, 25).

2. monos becomes theologically significant when it is used in the confession of the one and only God, especially in doxologies (Rom. 16:27; 1 Tim. 1:17; 6:15 f.; Jn. 5:44). Rom. 16:25 ff. refers to God's command "to bring about the obedience of faith" among the nations, and 1 Tim. 6:12–16 calls on Timothy to keep the confession – the context shows the polemical background of the confession – of the one God. It is significant that the confession of the one holy God in Rev. 15:4 is found in the song of praise of the martyrs who "had conquered the beast." Similarly in Jn. 17:3, monos is linked with alēthinos, true, in contrast to the deceptive appearance (pseudos) of all alleged gods and revealers, and in Jn. 5:44 it stands in contrast to the false doxa (→ glory) of the world, which does not seek the true doxa of the one and only God (cf. R. Bultmann, The Gospel of John, 1971, 271, n. 3; E. Norden, Agnostos Theos, 1913, 245 n. 1).

monos is sometimes used to stress the uniqueness of God in polemical contexts. Thus Jesus, the Revealer and Son of God, is declared to be monogenēs (see 4 below). There is a dialectic use of monos in relation to Jesus. On the one hand, already the earthly Jesus in not "alone" in human terms even if all forsake him, for the Father is with him (Jn. 8:16, 29; 16:32). On the other hand, in Jude 4 the uniqueness of God can be applied without qualification to Jesus (cf. Rom. 9:5 (RSV mg., NEB mg.); Jn. 20:28; Tit. 2:13). On Rom. 9:5 → God, art. theos NT 6(a).

4. monogenēs, the only begotten, or only, is found as a christological title only in Jn. Matt. and Mk. use agapētos, beloved (Matt. 3:17 par. Mk. 1:11; Matt. 17:5 par. Mk. 9:7). Paul has ho heautou hyios (Rom. 8:3), ho idios hyios (Rom. 8:32), his own Son, or ho prōtotokos, the first-born (Rom. 8:29). monogenēs is used to mark out Jesus uniquely above all earthly and heavenly beings; in its use the present soteriological meaning is more strongly stressed than that of origin (Jn. 1:14, 18; 3:16, 18; 1 Jn. 4:9). RSV and NEB render monogenēs as "only". This meaning is supported by R. E. Brown, The Gospel according to John, Anchor Bible, I, 1966, 13 f., and D. Moody, "God's Only Son: The Translation of John 3:16 in the Revised Standard Version", JBL 72, 1953, 213–19. Lit. it means "of a single kind", and could even be used in this sense of the Phoenix (1 Clem. 25:2). It is only distantly related to gennaō, beget. The idea of "only begotten" goes back to Jerome who used unigenitus in the Vulg. to counter the Arian claim that Jesus was not begotten but made. monogenēs reflects the Heb. yāḥîḏ of Isaac (Gen. 22:2, 12, 16) of whom it is used in Heb. 11:16. The meaning of monogenēs "is centred in the Personal existence of the Son, and not in the Generation of the Son" (B. F. Westcott, The Epistles of St John, [1883] 1966, 170). Jesus as monogenēs is the One who can say "I and the Father are one [hen esmen]" (Jn. 10:30). Included in the uniqueness of God, Jesus does not disappear in history and the historical, but stands over them as Lord. K.-H. Bartels

→ First, → God, → Number

(a). E. Best, One Body in Christ, 1955; F. Büchsel, monogenēs, TDNT IV 737–41; S. Hanson, The Unity of the Church in the New Testament: Colossians and Ephesians, Acta Seminarii Neotestamentici Upsaliensis 14, 1946; H. Jonas, The Gnostic Religion 1963; E. Käsemann, The Testament of Jesus: A Study of the Gospel of John in the Light of Chapter 17, 1968; G. A. F. Knight, "The Lord is One", ExpT 79, 1967–68, 8 ff.; D. Moody, "God's Only Son: The Translation of John 3:16 in the Revised Standard Version", JBL 72, 1953, 213–19; C. A. Labuschagne, The Incomparability of Yahweh in the Old Testament, 1966; N. Lohfink and J. Bergman, 'ehād, TDOT 1 193–201; T. E. Pollard, " 'That They All May Be One' (John xvii, 21) – and the Unity of the Church", ExpT 70, 1958–59, 149 f.; J. F. Randall, The Theme of Unity in John XVII: 20–23, Dissertation Louvain, 1962; H. H. Rowley, "Moses and Monotheism", ZAW 28, 1957, –21 (reprinted in From Moses to Qumran: Studies in the Old Testament, 1963, 35–63); W. Stählin, hapax, ephapax, TDNT I 381–84; E. Stauffer, heis, TDNT II 434–42; and 'The Creeds of the Primitive Church", New Testament Theology, 1955, 235–57, see especially "Monotheistic Formulae", 242 ff.; E. L. Wenger, "That They All May Be One", ExpT 70, 1958–59, 333; B. F. Westcott, The Epistles of St. John, (1883) revised edition with introduction by F. F. Bruce, 1966, 169–72.

(b). J.-L. d'Aragon, "La Notion Johannique de l'Unité", Sciences Ecclésiastiques II, 1959, 111–19; G. Delling, "Monos Theos", TLZ, 1952, 469 ff.; E. L. Dietrich, "Gott", *RGG*³ II 1713 ff.; E. Fascher, "Gott und die Götter", TLZ, 1956, 279 ff.; H. Jonas, Gnosis und spätantiker Geist, I, 1934; II, 1, 1954; O. Kern, Orphicorum Fragmenta, 1922; E. Käsemann, Das wandernde Gottesvolk, FRLANT Neue Folge 37, 1959³; F. Klinke, Der Monismus, 1911; E. Peterson, Heis Theos, 1926; G. Sauer, 'eḥād, THAT I 104–7; K. Schelkle, "Das Gottesbild des Neuen Testaments: Gott der Eine", BuK 15, 1960, 12 ff.; H. Schlier, Der Brief an die Epheser, 1965⁵; G. Schrenk, "Die Geschichtsanschauung des Paulus auf dem Hintergrund seines Zeitalters", Jahrbücher der Theologischen Schule Bethel 3, 1932, 59 ff.; W. Stählin, Allein. Recht und Gefahr einer polemischen Formel, 1950; W. Thüsing, Herrlichkeit und Einheit. Eine Auslegung des hohepriesterlichen Gebets Jesu (Joh. 17), 1962.

Open, Close, Key

ἀνοίγω

ἀνοίγω (anoigō), open; ἄνοιξις (anoixis), opening; διανοίγω (dianoigō), open, explain.

CL Since Homer (Il. 14, 169; 24, 455) anoignymi occurs together with anoigō meaning to open, remove that which obstructs, though not at first in the pres. tense. The pres. of anoigō is first found in Pindar, and of anoignymi in Lysias. The -mi-forms are the more original ones. Figuratively it can mean to reach the high seas; thalattan is to be supplied. In the NT the original form is replaced by the adjunct form without exception. This is in line with the decline of vbs. in -mi in Koine (Funk §§ 92, 101). The vb. can be used trans. (to open a door, a place, an object, a part of the body) and intrans. (to open; partly in the pass. sense of to be opened).

OT In the LXX anoigō is used predominantly (106 times) as the equivalent for the Heb. vb. pāṯaḥ; 10 times for pāqaḥ, both meaning open; 6 times for pāṣâh, unlock, open up; and in isolated passages for further Heb. vbs. pāṣâh, as a rule followed by peh as obj., means to open the mouth (in order to swallow, Ezek. 2:8). pāqaḥ is used exclusively for opening one's eyes and ears (e.g. Gen. 21:19; Isa. 35:5; 37:17). With pāṯaḥ the object can be a container (a bag, a box, a vessel, a grave; e.g. Exod. 21:33; Jdg. 4:19; Ps. 5:9), a window or a door (1 Sam. 3:15; 2 Ki. 13:17; Isa. 22:22; 26:2), or a book (Neh. 8:5). If the act of opening is related to men, it is usually God who is the subject; objects include the womb (Gen. 29:31); the mouth (Exod. 4:12, 15; Num. 22:28; cf. Ps. 81:10); the eye (Gen. 21:19; Isa. 35:5; 42:7); the ear (Isa. 50:5); the hand (Ps. 145:16). It is a striking fact that pāṯaḥ is not found in passages attributed to the Priestly Code. Gen. 7:11a is widely regarded as P; but 7:11b "and windows of heaven were opened" is thought not to be P. Num. 19:15 is thought to be a quotation taken over by P. The absence of the word has been explained on the basis of the theology of the Priestly Code, which saw God as so transcendent that access to him was possible only through the priest and the cult. To use pāṯaḥ would contradict such a transcendent view of God; for pāṯaḥ presupposes a view of God in which God intervenes, not indirectly, but directly in, e.g., opening a man's mouth.

NT In the NT the vb. anoigō is found 78 times, particularly often in the Johannine literature (27 times in Rev.; 11 times in the Gospel). It is less frequently found in Matt. (11 times) and Lk. (16 times in Acts; 7 times in the Gospel). It occurs only 5 times in Paul (Rom. 3:13; 1 Cor. 16:9; 2 Cor. 2:12; 6:11; Col. 4:3) and in Mk. only at 7:35. Following the LXX pattern the vb. is chiefly trans., and only rarely intrans. (Jn. 1:51; 1 Cor. 16:9; 2 Cor. 6:11). The sole occurrence of anoixis (Eph. 6:19) has a trans. meaning in Paul's request for prayer "that utterance may be given me in opening my mouth [en anoixei tou stomatos mou] boldly to proclaim the mystery of the gospel."

Objects include (as in the LXX) the mouth (Matt. 5:2; 6:8 D; Lk. 1:64; Acts 8:35; 10:34; 18:14), the eye (Matt. 9:30; 20:33; Lk. 24:31; Jn. 9:10, 14, 17, 21, 26, 30, 32; 10:21; Acts 9:8, 40; 26:18), the ear (Mk. 7:35), a door (Acts 5:19; 12:10, 14; 14:27; 1 Cor. 16:9; 2 Cor. 2:12; Rev. 3:20), a place (Matt. 3:16) or an object like a scroll (Rev. 5:2 ff.). If we leave aside consideration of those passages where "to open the mouth" means to begin to speak (e.g. Matt. 5:2; 13:35; Acts 8:35; 10:34), which make use of a Semitic idiom (cf. Job 3:1; 33:2; Dan. 10:16), the vb. is used with a predominantly theological sense: It is God himself who opens.

1. In the writings of Paul anoigō occurs in the quotation from Ps. 5:9 in Rom. 3:13a in the catena of quotations demonstrating the fact that the Jews are guilty sinners, even though they have the law: "Their throat is an open grave [taphos aneōgmenos], they use their tongues to deceive." In 2 Cor. 6:11 Paul writes: "Our mouth is open to you [to stoma hēmōn aneōgen pros hymas], Corinthians; our heart is wide." C. K. Barrett paraphrases this as "I have let my tongue run away with me", i.e. "I have spoken to you in complete freedom" (cf. 7:4; A Commentary on the Second Epistle to the Corinthians, BNTC, 1973, 191). Barrett sees here a Gk. idiom (cf. Aesch., PV 609 ff. with Ezek. 16:63; 29:21; Eph. 6:19). The following clause means that Paul has kept no secrets back from the Corinthians. There not only is room for them in his heart; he positively yearns for them. Apart from these instances, it is God himself who opens. The picture of God opening a door for Paul refers to the possibility of fruitful and effective missionary work. Form-criticism has shown that the expression is a technical term in the vocabulary of mission (1 Cor. 16:9; 2 Cor. 2:12; Col. 4:3; Acts 14:27; Rev. 3:8; cf. J. Jeremias, TDNT III 174). But it is characteristic of Paul that he never uses anoigō with Jesus Christ as subject.

2. Rev. 3:20 speaks of man opening the door to Christ: "Behold, I stand at the door and knock; if any one hears my voice and opens the door, I will come in to him and eat with him, and he with me." The underlying idea is the kingdom of God seen as a feast (Isa. 25:6 ff.; Matt. 8:11; 22:1–14; Mk. 13:29; 14:25; Lk. 12:34 ff.; 22:28 ff.; but cf. the idea of the judge standing at the doors in Jas. 5:9). There are also the promises of feeding on Christ himself (Jn. 6:35 ff., 53 ff.) and dwelling with him (Jn. 14:2 f., 23). The context of Rev. 3:20 is the letter addressed to the lukewarm church at Laodicea (→ Cold, Hot, Lukewarm). As such it is addressed to the church, but the singular subject of the verse invites an individual response.

Elsewhere in the Johannine writings God is the one who opens. It is God who opens → heaven (Jn. 1:51; Rev. 19:11), the → temple (Rev. 11:19), and the holy → tent of heaven (Rev. 15:5). It is on his authority that an angel opens the abyss of the underworld (Rev. 9:2). But the exalted Lord has the authority which belongs to God to open the way of access to God. The letter to the church at Philadelphia begins: "And to the angel of the church in Philadelphia write: 'The words of the holy one, the true one, who has the key of David, who opens and no one shall shut, who shuts and no one opens. "I know your works. Behold, I have set before you an open door, which no one is able to shut. . . ." ' " (Rev. 3:7 f.). The metaphor of the open door is not the technical term of the language of mission (see 1 above). The key of David (→ kleis) recalls the promise to Eliakim (Isa. 22:22) who was given authority to open and none shall shut and to shut and none shall open. Here it is construed as access to God and eternal life, as in Rev. 1:18: "I died, and behold I am alive for evermore, and I have the keys of Death and Hades" (cf. also Matt. 16:19). It is the exalted Lord, the Lamb that had been slain and who has ascended to the throne, who alone is worthy to open the scroll with the seven seals which contains the record of God's plan in history in the last days with all the profusion of eschatological events (Rev. 5:2–9). The earthly Jesus is here seen as equal with God. The Fourth Gospel contains a counterpart to this in the fact that Jesus opens the eyes of the blind which is something which God alone can do (Jn. 9:10, 14, 17, 21, 26, 30, 32; 10:21). He is also the → shepherd to whom "the gatekeeper opens; the sheep hear his voice, and he calls his own sheep by name and leads them out" (Jn. 10:3).

3. Matt. 2:11 speaks of the magi opening their treasures (→ Magic; → Gold; → Incense). Matt. also records Jesus opening the eyes of the blind (Matt. 9:3; 20:33; cf. Mk. 7:35). As in Jn., opening in Matt. is implicitly or explicitly the act of God. It is God who opens the heavens at the baptism of Jesus (Matt. 3:16) symbolizing the favour and openness of God to him and confirming the action (cf. Jn. 1:51 noted above). To those who knock the kingdom of heaven will be opened (Matt. 7:7; cf. 7:13 f.). But to those who do not come at the hour of opportunity it will not be opened (Matt. 25:11). Here it is the eschatological Lord who is speaking and who thus has the authority of God himself to open and shut. Matt. 27:52 refers to the opening of the tombs and the raising of the dead at the moment of the death of Jesus (→ Resurrection). On the coin in the fish's mouth (Matt. 17:27) → Tax.

4. In the writings of Lk. anoigō is particularly associated with Lk.'s concept of time (on the subject of time in Lk. → Present, art. The Parousia and Eschatology in the NT, 2(b).) There is an appropriate time for the devil (Lk. 4:13). But there is also an appropriate time for the opening of Zechariah's mouth (Lk. 1:64) and the opening of heaven after the baptism of Jesus (Lk. 3:21; cf. Matt. 3:16 above). The public ministry of Jesus, and with it the centre of time, begins when Jesus enters the synagogue at Nazareth and opens (Lk. 4:17) the book of the prophet Isaiah and reads from Isa. 61:1 f. thus identifying himself with the one on whom the Spirit of the Lord rests. As befitting the one on whom the Spirit rests, he is the one who opens (Lk. 13:25) and the one to whom the servants must be ready to open (Lk. 12:36). The sayings about asking, knocking and opening (Lk. 11:9 f.) are rounded off in Lk. by the promise of the Spirit: "If you then, who are evil, know how to give good gifts to your children, how much more will the heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to those who ask him?" (Lk. 11:13). This suggests that Luke understood the sayings as having particular reference to the gift of the Spirit. He follows it with the account of the Beelzebul controversy concerning the power and authority by which Jesus acted (Lk. 11:14–26). The references in Lk. suggest that the time to open and the authority to open ultimately rest with God.

Acts 8:35; 10:34 and 18:14 use the idiom of opening the mouth. Acts 8:32 quotes Isa. 53:7: "As a sheep led to the slaughter or a lamb before its shearer is dumb, so he opens not his mouth." This is interpreted christologically by Philip to the Ethiopian eunuch. Acts 9:8, 40 refer to the opening of the eyes physically (in each case after an affliction). But Acts 26:18 uses the metaphor spiritually in its account of Paul's commission to the Gentiles: "to open their eyes, that, they may turn from darkness to light and from the power of Satan to God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins and a place amongst those who are sanctified by faith in me." The words recall the mission of the servant (Isa. 42:6, 17), and in the light of Lk. 4:17 constitute an extension of Jesus' own mission. Peter's vision of the great sheet containing both clean and unclean animals signifying God's inclusion of the Gentiles in his people descends from heaven. The fact that heaven is opened in order to let down the sheet (Acts 10:11) signifies the divine origin and authority of the vision. Several passages refer to the opening of doors. In Acts 5:19; 12:10 and 16:26 f. the doors are prison doors which are opened by divine agency. This contrasts with the doors closed by men, either to imprison the apostles (Acts 5:23) or which are kept closed by the church in incredulity (Acts 12:14, 16). Just as God opens prison doors, he also opens "the door of faith". Paul summed up his first missionary journey by telling the church at Antioch "all that God had done with them, and how he had opened a door of faith to the Gentiles" (Acts 14:27; on this expression see 1 above).

5. The vb. dianoigō occurs in the expression "every male that opens the womb [i.e. every first-born male] shall be called holy to the Lord" (Lk. 2:23; cf. Exod. 13:2, 12). The passage refers to the presentation of the infant Jesus in the temple and the sacrifices that were offered for him (→ Bird art. peteinon OT; → First, art. prōtotokos CL & OT 1). It is used again in the vision of Stephen just before his martyrdom when he saw "the heavens opened, and the Son of man standing at the right hand of God" (Acts 7:56). As with the other references to the opening of heaven, it signifies God's acceptance and blessing of the one who sees the heaven opened, and is a divine confirmation of the rightness of his actions.

dianoichthēti, "Be opened", is given as a translation of ephphatha (Mk. 7:34; cf. v. 35) in the healing of the deaf and dumb man. This Aram. word represents 'eṯpattaḥ, or the contracted 'eppattaḥ, from the vb. pᵉṯaḥ (cf. C. E. B. Cranfield, The Gospel according to Saint Mark, 1959, 252; SB II 17 f. for examples in connection with the curing of blindness). It is not a meaningless magical formula like abracadabra but an intelligible performative utterance (→ Magic, art. mageia NT 5).

In Lk. 24:31 f. it is used of the eyes in the sense of the understanding (cf. Gen. 3:5, 7; 2 Ki. 6:17) in the self-disclosure of the Risen Christ to the disciples at Emmaus. In v. 31 the reference is to recognizing the stranger as Christ. Upon recognition he vanishes from physical sight. In v. 32 the same word refers to the understanding of the significance of the scriptures in relation to Jesus as the Christ. It is also used of Paul's missionary work among the Jews at Thessalonica: "explaining [dianoigōn] and proving that it was necessary for the Christ to suffer and to rise from the dead, and saying, 'This Jesus, whom I proclaim to you, is the Christ' " (Acts 17:3). In each of these three instances of Lk.'s use of the word men require help in order to see Christ. Both the understanding and the scriptures require opening. (→ Explain, art. hermēneuō NT 2.) C. H. Peisker, C. Brown κλείς κλείς (kleis), a key; κλείω (kleiō), to close, shut.

CL The noun kleis, which is cognate with Lat. clavis (key), is used since Homer for a key. kleiō, similarly used since Homer, means to close, or shut. In addition to lit. usage, kleis was used as early as the seventh cent. B.C. in connection with → heaven and the underworld depicted as a house. Certain powers, demi-gods or divinities, had control over the keys to heaven (e.g. Dike) or to the underworld (e.g. Pluto, Persephone). The imagery of the key extended also into everyday life. Thus Pindar (Pyth. 8, 4) could speak of rest as the most important key to deliberation and to wars, i.e. rest is the chief prerequisite for reaching the right decision.

OT In the LXX kleis occurs only 5 times (3 times as equivalent for Heb. maptēaḥ). This was the key to the great wooden doors, which possibly consisted of one long piece of wood with various long iron spikes fixed on to it, and which as a rule was so big that it could not fit in the pocket, but had to be carried on the belt or even on the shoulder (Isa. 22:22). With this key one could turn backwards and forwards the bolt of the door from the outside. One of the particular offices of the Levites was to administer the keys to the rooms and store-rooms of the temple (1 Chr. 9:27). The announcement in Isa. 22:22 of the installation into office of Eliakim, giving him the power of the keys to the house of David, had originally no messianic reference. In later rabbinic thought it was interpreted as conferring teaching authority (Sanhedrin 38a; Gittin 88a; see further SB I 741). In Rev. 3:7 it was interpreted typologically and christologically (→ anoigō NT 2; see also below 4). kleis also occurs in Jdg. 3:25, in Job 31:22 (for šiḵmâh), and without Heb. equivalent in Ad.Dan. Bel 12.

The vb. kleiō occurs in Gen. 7:16; Jos. 2:5, 7; Jdg. 9:51; 1 Sam. 23:20; 2 Chr. 28:24; Neh. 6:10; 13:19; Job 12:14; Eccl. 12:4; Isa. 22:22; 24:10; 60:11; Ezek. 44:1 f.; 46:1 f. (for sāḡar, shut, close); in Neh. 7:3 (for gûp̄, shut); in Cant. 4:12 (for nā'al, bar, of a garden gate); and without Heb. equivalent in Jdg. 20:42; Sir. 30:18; 42:6; Ad.Dan. Bel 12; and several variant translations of various passages.

NT The words occur comparatively rarely in the NT. kleis occurs 6 times (once each in Matt. and Lk.; and 4 times in Rev.), and is used only figuratively. kleiō occurs 16 times (3 times in Matt.; twice each in Lk., Jn. and Acts; once in 1 Jn., and 6 times in Rev.). It is used lit. of closed, shut or locked doors in Matt. 6:6; 25:10; Lk. 11:7; Jn. 20:19, 26; Acts 5:23; 21:30, although Matt. 25:10 and Lk. 11:7 figure in parables (in the former instance illustrating that the time of opportunity is past, and in the latter illustrating the importance of importunity in prayer). Elsewhere the use of both the noun and the vb. is fig.

1. Lk. 4:25 refers to the time of → Elijah, "when the heaven was shut up three years and six months, when there came a great famine over all the land" (cf. 1 Ki. 17:1–18:1; Jas. 5:17 f.). The point alludes to the fact that Elijah was sent not to all the widows in Israel at the time of Elijah, but only to the widow of Zarephath. The implication is that Jesus of Nazareth will pass over a rebellious Israel in favour of the Gentiles.

2. Lk. 11:52 records the accusation: "Woe to you lawyers! for you have taken away the key of knowledge; you did not enter yourselves, and you hindered those who were entering." Whereas the saying in Lk. refers specifically to knowledge, the saying in Matt. 23:13 refers to the kingdom: "But woe to you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! because you shut the kingdom of heaven against men; for you neither enter yourselves, nor allow those who would enter to go in." J. Jeremias cites Rabbah bar Huna (c. A.D. 300): "He who has knowledge of the Torah but no fear of God is like the treasurer to whom one gave the key of the inner rooms without giving him the outer. How can he enter?" (Shabbath 31ab; cf. TDNT III 747). In Lk. the saying comes at the conclusion of Jesus' denunciation of the religious for their hypocrisy, their misguided and perverse legalism, and their persecution of the prophets sent by God. The same points occur in Matt. only in considerably greater detail, and the saying introduces the specific accusations. The difference in the presentation of the saying has been put down to oral tradition (cf. D. Hill, The Gospel of Matthew, New Century Bible, 1972, 311), and the possibility that Jesus made the denunciation more than once and in different forms (Lk. speaks of the key, whereas Matt. uses the vb.) in the course of his condemnation of the religious teachers of his day. Alternatively, the two versions may be interpretative translations: Lk.'s version with its reference to knowledge being addressed to a Gentile readership; whereas Matt.'s is more specifically Jewish in his concern for the kingdom and for the details of the condemnation of contemporary Jewish practices.

3. Matt.'s account of Peter's confession culminates in the promise: "And I tell you, you are Peter, and on this rock I will build my church, and the gates of Hades shall not prevail against it. I will give you the keys of the kingdom of heaven, and whatever you bind on earth shall be bound in heaven, and whatever you loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven" (RSV mg.). The authenticity of this passage has been questioned by many scholars. G. Bornkamm sums up their attitude to these words when he observes: "This is not only because they have no parallel in the other Gospels, and because this is the only place in the whole synoptic tradition where the word 'ekklesia' appears in the sense of the church as a whole. (Only in Mt. xviii. 17 do we come across the word 'ekklesia' again, in connection with Church regulations, but used here in the sense of an assembly of the Church.) But the authenticity of the passage in Matthew xvi is questioned chiefly because it is not easily compatible with Jesus' proclamation of the imminent coming of the kingdom of God" (Jesus of Nazareth, 1960, 187). For further discussion questioning the authenticity of the passage see the writings of H. Braun, R. Bultmann, H. Conzelmann, W. G. Kümmel listed below in the bibliography.

Among the writers who have defended the authenticity of the passage are O. Betz, O. Cullmann, J. Jeremias and A. Oepke (see also the bibliography). Cullmann gives a history of the interpretation of the saying (Peter: Disciple – Apostle – Martyr. A Historical and Theological Study, 1962², 164–76). He himself locates it in the passion period in a setting similar to Lk. 22:31 ff., but stresses that his interpretation does not stand or fall with his view of the setting (op. cit., 176–91). Cullmann argues that the comparative infrequency of the word ekklēsia is indecisive, "for it does not designate anything like a Christian creation, but belongs to the Jewish sphere. . . . We must start with the meaning 'people of God' when we ask the question whether or not Jesus can have spoken of the Church" (op. cit., 194 f.; → Church, art. ekklēsia for the OT concept supporting Cullmann's claim). Moreover, Jewish messianic expectation is inconceivable without a messianic community (op. cit., 195; cf. Eth.Enoch 38:1; 53:6; 62:8; 83:8; 84:5; Dan. 7:9–28). "If he considered himself to be the Danielic Son of Man (Mark. 14:62 and parallels), he also knew that according to Daniel 7:18 the Son of Man represents the 'people of the saints' " (op. cit., 196). The new element in the situation is the reconstitution of the people of God in view of his special messianic deed, the suffering of the servant of God. As Cullmann observes, the argument is bound up with Jesus' messianic consciousness, and it is not surprising that Bultmann who denies this also denies the authenticity of the passage. A further factor is the fact that Jesus now no longer views the messianic community as identical with the Jewish nation. The fact that he speaks of his ekklēsia does not contradict the fact that its building is the work of God.

With regard to the question of whether Jesus could have envisaged a future church in view of his teaching on the imminence of the kingdom, Cullmann points out that the alternative of a present or future messianic community presents a false perspective (op. cit., 199 f.). The Jewish idea of the people of God cannot be forced into this alternative. It is not a case of the early church developing the promised kingdom into an institutional church. "Rather, the fulfilment in the person of Jesus leads directly to the fulfilment in the Church, and the fulfilment in the Church points back in turn to the fulfilment in the person of Jesus. Therefore it is not merely possible that Jesus also sees the people of God already beginning to be constituted in his day; we would almost have to postulate this even if we had no clear texts to prove it. A direct contradiction between the future Kingdom of God and the already realized people of God is only a construction built on the basis of modern thinking" (op. cit., 201). The choice of the twelve disciples reflecting the twelve tribes of Israel is closely bound up with the reconstitution of the people of God. The band of disciples anticipates the messianic community which is constituted by the death of the Christ. But even though the Christ dies the → gates of death will not prevail against it.

Cullmann sees this concept of the church as the messianic community further supported by the saying about raising up the temple which also refers to the time after the death of Jesus (Matt. 26:61; Mk. 14:58; cf. Jn. 2:19) which involves the messianic community (cf. 1 Pet. 2:5 ff.; op. cit., 204 f.). A future community is also implied by the → Lord's Supper, and such passages as Mk. 2:18 ff.; 14:28, 62 imply that Jesus envisaged a time when his followers would continue after his death (op. cit., 206 f.).

For discussion of the significance of the name Peter (petros) and the meaning of the rock (petra) → Rock. The metaphor of building on the rock implies a → house (comparable with the house of Israel) or a → temple. "In Matthew 16:19 it is presupposed that Christ is the master of the house, who has the keys to the Kingdom of Heaven, with which to open to those who come in. Just as in Isaiah 22:22 the Lord lays the keys of the house of David on the shoulders of the servant Eliakim, so Jesus commits to Peter the keys of his house, the Kingdom of Heaven, and thereby installs him as administrator of the house" (op. cit., 209 f.; cf. the illustration of the steward in Mk. 13:34; Lk. 12:42; 16:1 ff.; 1 Cor. 4:1; 1 Pet. 4:10). Peter is given the task of leading the people of God into the resurrection kingdom. In this he stands in contrast with the Pharisees who purportedly had the key to the kingdom but who did not use it to enter and even prevented others from entering (cf. Matt. 23:13; see 2 above). Whereas they compassed land and sea to make proselytes (Matt. 23:15), Peter also has a mission to carry out by his preaching to give men access to the kingdom. His rôle in this capacity is described in Acts, particularly in opening the kingdom to Jewish believers at → Pentecost (Acts 2) and to Gentile believers at Caesarea (Acts 10).

The words bind (deō) and loose (lyō) represent the Aram. 'asar and šerā' (Heb. 'āsar and hittîr). They have been interpreted as meaning prohibit and permit, i.e. establish rules (G. Dalman, The Words of Jesus, 1909, 214), and put under the ban and acquit (A. Schlatter, Der Evangelist Matthäus, 1963⁶, 511 f.; J. Schniewind, Das Evangelium nach Matthäus, NTD 2, 1968¹², ad loc.). Cullmann favours the latter interpretation in view of the connection with the forgiveness of sins and entry into the kingdom, though he would not exclude the other interpretation which is equally well attested in rabbinic texts (op. cit., 211; cf. SB I 738). The power to teach and discipline cannot be sharply separated (→ Bind). As the disciples had already shared in the work of Christ in his earthly ministry (cf. Matt. 9:35–10:42; Mk. 6:7–13; Lk. 9:1–6; 10:1–24), so now they are to share in the highest office of the forgiveness of sins. However, the idea of binding may also refer back to the picture of the binding of the strong man (i.e. Satan) who must first be bound (the same vb. deō) before his goods (i.e. those enthralled by him) may be plundered (Matt. 12:29 par. Mk. 3:27; cf. Lk. 8:21 which does not use the word). Thus Peter would be promised the power that Christ had to bind the powers of evil and to liberate men, and this would hold good not only on earth but also in heaven. Not even death, the power of Hades (→ Gate; → Hell) can thwart it. In the first instance the reference to Hades may be to the death of Christ, i.e. not even the impending death will thwart the messianic community, the church (cf. vv. 21 ff.). Likewise, the power of death will not prevail over the messianic community itself (cf. vv. 24–27).

The passages may be linked with similar promises in Matt. and Jn. which, however, are not specifically related to Peter: "Truly, I say to you, whatever you bind on earth shall be bound in heaven, and whatever you loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven" (Matt. 18:18); "If you forgive the sins of any, they are forgiven; if you retain the sins of any, they are retained" (Jn. 20:23). The passage in Matt. is set in the context of procedure in the church in dealing with problems of discipline caused by one brother sinning against another. The passage in Jn. constitutes the climax of the post-resurrection appearances, and is tantamount to Christ's commission to the church (cf. v. 21). E. Käsemann (see bibliography) has suggested that the mention of Peter in Matt. 16 represents the tendency of a Petrine faction, whereas the omission of his name in the other two passages shows that he did not enjoy special pre-eminence. It might also be argued that Matt. was simply making use of the paraenetical material at his disposal. Cullmann, however, sees the mention of Peter in Matt. 16:17 ff. and his omission from the other passages as fully compatible with what is known of him elsewhere as spokesman and leader in his foundational rôle in the church but as sharing in the binding and loosing with the other disciples (op. cit., 211 f.). (→ Rock for discussion of Peter's rôle in the early church.)

4. 1 Jn. 3:17 uses the vb. metaphorically: "But if any one has the world's goods and sees his brother in need, yet closes his heart against him, how does God's love abide in him?" The phrase kleisē ta splanchna appears to be unique; but cf. Ps. 77:9 (76:10): Has God "in his anger shut up his compassion [synexei tous oiktirmous autou]?"

5. Access to the eschatological Kingdom of God is also the concern of those apocalyptic passages where the key of David is spoken of (Rev. 3:7 f.). The apocalyptic writer interprets Isa. 22:22 messianically of Christ (such an interpretation is lacking in Judaism): As Eliakim received the key to the house of David, and was given the authority to decide over admission to the house of David, so Christ, as the promised descendant of David, holds the perfect key in his hand to decide over admission and exclusion to the future regal city of God. As the crucified and Risen One, he has the keys to the world of the dead (Rev. 1:18), so that → death has lost its final terror for the believer. Possessing the keys to the abyss (Rev. 20:1), he is the Lord who governs the spirits of the underworld (20:3). (On this passage → Number, art. chilias.) D. Müller, C. Brown

→ Apostle, → Bind, → Church, → Gate, → Heaven, → Hell, → Kingdom, → Rock

(a). J. B. Bauer, "Binding and Loosing", EBT I 67; G. R. Beasley-Murray, The Book of Revelation, New Century Bible, 1974; G. Bornkamm, Jesus of Nazareth, 1960; R. E. Brown, K. P. Donfried and J. Reumann, eds., Peter in the New Testament, 1973; F. Büchsel, deō etc., TDNT II 60 f.; H. von Campenhausen, Ecclesiastical Authority and Spiritual Power in the First Three Centuries of the Church, 1969; R. H. Charles, Commentary on the Revelation of St. John, ICC, I–II, 1920; O. Cullmann, Peter: Disciple – Apostle – Martyr. A Historical and Theological Study, 1962²; G. Dalman, The Words of Jesus, 1909; D. Hill, The Gospel of Matthew, New Century Bible, 1972, 258–64; J. Jeremias, kleis, TDNT III 744–53; and thyra, TDNT III 173–80; O. Karrer, Peter and the Church: An Examination of Cullmann's Thesis, 1963; E. Käsemann, "Ministry and Community in the New Testament", Essays on New Testament Themes, SBT 41, 1964, 63–94; "Sentences of Holy Law in the New Testament", and "The Beginnings of Christian Theology", New Testament Questions of Today, 1969, 66–81, and 82–107; K. L. Schmidt, ekklēsia, TDNT III 518–26.

(b). R. Baumann, Fels der Welt, 1956; O. Betz, "Felsenmann und Felsengemeinde", ZNW 48, 1957, 49 ff.; H. Braun, Qumran und das Neue Testament, I, 1966, 30 ff.; and Spätjüdisch-häretischer und frühchristlicher Radikalismus, I–II, BHTh 24, 1928²; R. Bultmann, "Die Frage nach der Echtheit von Mt. 16, 17–19", ThBl 20, 1941, 265 ff. (reprinted in Exegetica, 1967, 255 ff.); G. Dalman, Arbeit und Sitte in Palästina, VII, 53 ff.; F. Kattenbusch, "Der Quellort der Kirchenidee", Festgabe für Adolf von Harnack, 1921, 160 ff.; and "Der Spruch über Petrus und die Kirche bei Mt.", ThSt Kr 94, 1922, 96 ff.; W. G. Kümmel, Kirchenbegriff und Geschichtsbewusstsein in der Urgemeinde und bei Jesus, 1968², 20 ff.; and "Jesus und die Anfänge der Kirche", StTh 7, 1953, 1–27 (reprinted in Heilsgeschehen und Geschichte, 1965, 289–309); G. Lambert, "Lier – Délier", Vivre et Penser 3, 1943–44, 91–103; H. Lehmann, "Du bist Petrus", EvTh 13, 1953–54, 44 ff.; O. Linton, Das Problem der Urkirche in der neueren Forschung, 1932, 157 ff.; O. Michel, RAC II 374–80; F. Obrist, Echtheitsfragen und Deutungen der Primatstelle Mt. 16, 18 f. in der deutschen protestantischen Theologie der letzten 30 Jahre, NTAbh 16, 3/4, 1961; A. Oepke, "Der Herrenspruch über die Kirche Mt. 16, 17–19 in der neuesten Forschung", StTh 2, 1948–50, 110 ff.; SB I 738 ff.; A. Schlatter, Der Evangelist Matthäus, 1963⁶; K. L. Schmidt, "Die Kirche des Urchristentums", Festgabe für A. Deissmann, 1927, 258 ff.; A. Schönherr,' 'Schlüsselgewalt" EKL III 813 ff.; H. Thyen, "Schlüsselgewalt", *RGG*³ V 1449 ff.; A. Vögtle, "Messiasbekenntniss und Petrusverheissung", BZ Neue Folge 1, 1957, 252 ff.; 2, 1958, 85 ff.; and "Jesus und die Kirche", in Begegnung der Kirche, Festschrift für O. Karrer, 1959, 54 ff.; "Der Einzelne und die Gemeinschaft in der Stufenfolge der Christusoffenbarung", in Sentire Ecclesiam, Festschrift für H. Rahner, 1961, 53 ff.; H. Windisch, "Urchristentum", ThR 5, 1933, 251 ff.

Openness, Frankness, Boldness

παρρησία

παρρησία (parrhēsia), openness, confidence, boldness, frankness; παρρησιάζομαι (parrhēsiazomai), speak out, speak openly, speak boldly.

CL 1. The meaning of parrhēsia corresponds to its etymology (pan, all, rhēsis, speech, word, and erō, say, speak, from the root wer-*; cf. Lat. verbum, the Ger. Wort and the Eng. word): freedom to say all. Since in practice this freedom of speech encountered opposition from time to time, parrhēsia acquired the further meaning of fearlessness, frankness. A negative overtone is also perceptible in some instances where freedom of speech has been misused to the point of bluntness and shamelessness. In an extended sense parrhēsia can mean confidence and joyfulness. The corresponding vb. parrhēsiazomai means to speak openly or boldly, and to have confidence.

2. The word group which is first found in Euripides and Aristophanes belonged originally to the sphere of politics. It signifies the democratic right of a full citizen of a Greek city-state (but not that of a → slave or foreigner; → Foreign): in the public assembly of the people one may speak out freely one's opinion (cf. Polyb., 2, 38, 6). This right is the characteristic of a democracy, but there is the danger of misuse, as Plato shows (Rep. 8, 557b). parrhēsia played an important rôle in private affairs, where in the context of teaching on philia (love) it denoted the openness with which one met a friend (cf. Aristot., Eth.Nic. 9, 2). In the course of history a more moral concept evolved out of the originally political one which was of central importance in Cynic philosophy as the correlative to eleutheria, → freedom (H. Schlier, TDNT V 874). Here parrhēsia is no longer a civil right but the mark of someone who is morally free and who does not shun public attention.

OT 1. In the LXX the word-group occurs only rarely (the noun 12 times; the vb. 6 times). In contrast with secular Gk. the concept is used both of God and man who stands over against God. It is used of God in Ps. 94:1 (LXX 93:1) where eparrhēsiasato (lit. "spoke freely") translates the Heb. hôpîa', "thou God of vengeance shine forth" (RSV; from the Heb. vb. yāpa', shine forth). (The Heb. word is used in connection with theophanies [Deut. 33:2; Pss. 50:2; 80:2; Job 10:3, 22; cf. H. Schlier, TDNT V 877].) In Ps. 94 God is called upon to come forth as the avenger and requite the ungodly of their wickedness. A link between such a manifestation of God (cf. Ps. 11:6 LXX) and divine utterance is given in Prov. 1:20 f., where "Wisdom cries aloud in the street; in the markets she raises her voice; on the top of the walls she cries out; at the entrance of the gates she speaks." The LXX renders the second clause en de plateiais parrhēsian agei, "and in the broad places of a city she acts with confidence" (1:20).

parrhēsia occurs in Job 27:10: "Or when trouble comes upon him, has he any confidence before him [mē echei tina parrhēsian enanti autou]?" The vb. features in Job 22:26: "Then you shall have confidence before the Lord, and look upon to heaven with cheerfulness [eita parrhēsiasthēsē enanti kyriou anablepsas eis ton ouranon hilarōs]". In Job 27:10 there is no Heb. equivalent noun. In Job 22:26 the Heb. vb. is 'ānaḡ, to take delight in, which is used to describe the happy relationship of man with God that the righteous will have even in judgment (Wis. 5:1). For other uses of 'ānaḡ see Deut. 28:56; Ps. 34:4, 11; Isa. 55:2; 57:4; 58:14; 66:11.

The remaining instances of parrhēsia occur at Lev. 26:13 (for the unique word qôm^{e}miyyûṯ, adv. upright); Est. 8:13; Prov. 10:10; 13:5; Wis. 5:1; Sir. 25:25; 1 Macc. 4:18; 3 Macc. 4:1; 7:12; 4 Macc. 10:5 (all without Heb. equivalent). The remaining instances of parrhēsiazomai occur at Ps. 12(11):5; Prov. 20:9; Cant. 8:10; Sir. 6:11 (all without Heb. equivalent).

2. The Gk. understanding of parrhēsia was taken over in the literature of Hellenistic Judaism (cf. TDNT V 875–79). But there are traces of OT influence, when, for instance, a good → conscience which no godless person can have is mentioned as a prerequisite for parrhēsia. The word is used to describe a man's attitude in prayer (cf. Philo, Rev.Div.Her. 5–29) and the confidence of the righteous in the end-time (cf. 2 Esd. 7:98 ff.).

NT parrhēsia occurs 31 times in the NT (13 times in the Johannine writings; 8 times in Paul; 5 times in Acts; and 4 times in Heb.; and once in Mk.). The vb. parrhēsiazomai is found 9 times (7 times in Acts; and twice in Paul). The two words vary in meaning from virtually the equivalent of eleutheria, freedom, to elpis, hope.

1. In Jn. parrhēsia is used in the dat. in the unique sense of openly, in public: "And here he is, speaking openly, and they say nothing to him!" (Jn. 7:26; cf. 11:54; 18:20; cf. also Mk. 8:32). In each of these passages in Jn. it refers to Jesus' boldness in teaching in public. It is a rather different sense from that of his brothers who urged Jesus to do something in public in order to convince them (Jn. 7:4). In the case of Jesus parrhēsia does not mean, "as it originally did in Greek, the right or courage to appear in public, freedom of speech, openness . . . but as is common later, it refers to actions performed in public" (R. Bultmann, The Gospel of John, 1971, 291). By contrast Jn. 7:13 reports that no one spoke of Jesus openly for fear of the Jews. In Jn. 10:24; 11:14; 16:25, 29 it has the rather different sense of "plainly".

When Jesus spoke openly in public, this can also mean that he spoke unambiguously and plainly; not only in allusions (Jn. 11:14; cf. 10:24 f.) or in veiled parables (cf. Jn. 16:29). But Jesus spoke so freely only for believers (Jn. 16:25, 29). To the world he spoke in → parables (art. paroimia), which could not be understood without faith. Hence, there is a tension between parrhēsia and paroimia which corresponds to the Johannine dualism of life and death, truth and the lie etc. which demands a decision and which can only be resolved in faith.

2. Corresponding to the parrhēsia of Jesus, there is the open and authoritative testimony of the apostles. Again and again Acts reports how fearlessly Peter, Paul and others stood before the Jews or the Gentiles and proclaimed the works of God. The noun is used in Acts 2:29; 4:13; 29, 31; 28:31; and the vb. in Acts 9:27 f.; 13:46; 14:3; 18:26; 19:8; 26:26. This boldness which provokes astonishment (4:13), division (14:3 f.) and persecution (9:27) is not something that man has under his own control. It is the fruit of the Holy Spirit (4:31) that has to be sought again and again (4:29).

3. This is the view of the parrhēsia of the witness taken by Paul and John. It characterizes effective preaching of the mysteries of God (Eph. 6:19), and the honouring of Christ in life and death (Phil. 1:20). Since perseverence, perhaps in prison, is demanded of the disciple (cf. Eph. 6:20), parrhēsia has here also the sense of boldness and courage (1 Thess. 2:2). Such courage is not a human quality; it comes from God (1 Thess. 2:2) and Christ (Phlm. 8).

We should approach the future not in fear of judgment but in full confidence, openness to God and in the hope of the fullness of the glory of God (cf. 2 Cor. 3:11 f.). Therefore, we should abide in Christ (1 Jn. 2:28; Heb. 3:6; 10:35), who has already triumphed over the principalities and powers in public (en parrhēsia, Col. 2:15), and made possible access into the holiest (Heb. 10:18; cf. 4:16). He who perseveres in faith, holds to Christ in love (cf. 1 Jn. 4:17; cf. also the emphasis laid on parrhēsia gained through faithful service, 1 Tim. 3:13), and who is not condemned by his own heart (1 Jn. 3:21) will have confidence in prayer (1 Jn.

5:14). He will also "have confidence and not shrink from him in shame at his coming" (1 Jn. 2:28). Thus parrhēsia contains the ideas of "trust in God, certainty of salvation, the conquest of the consciousness of sin, sanction and power to pray, and expectation of the future" (O. Michel, Der Brief an die Hebräer, KEK 13, 1966[12], 98). H.-C. Hahn

(a). Arndt, 635 f.; Liddell-Scott, 1344; M. Radin, "Freedom of Speech in Ancient Athens", The American Journal of Philosophy 4, 1927, 215–220; H. Schlier, parrhēsia, parrhēsiazomai, TDNT V 871–86; W. C. van Unnik, "The Christian's Freedom of Speech", BJRL 44, 1961–62, 466 ff.
(b). E. Busch, J. Fangmeier, M. Geiger, eds., Parrhēsia. Karl Barth zum achtzigsten Geburtstag am 10. Mai 1966, 1966 (It should be noted that this is not a study of the concept as such, but essays on a wide variety of themes concerning Christian attitudes to contemporary theological and other questions.); P. Joüon, "Divers sens de parrhēsia dans le Nouveau Testament", Recherches de Science Religieuse 30, 1940, 239 ff.; E. Peterson, "Zur Bedeutungsgeschichte von parrhēsia", Festschrift für R. Seeberg, I, 1929, 283–97; W. C. van Unnik, De semitische Achtergrond van parrhēsia in het Nieuwe Testament, 1962.

Orphan

ὀρφανός	ὀρφανός (orphanos), orphan.

CL In secular Gk. orphanos is used from Homer onwards as an adj. meaning without parents, fatherless or more generally, bereaved, bereft of; and as a noun, orphan. Careful provision was made in ancient Greece for orphan children. A guardian, usually a near relative, was appointed who was responsible for the orphan's maintenance and education. Any assets the child inherited were strictly protected until he came of age. Orphans were exempted from the regular taxes. The state undertook the maintenance of the children of soldiers killed in war (Demosthenes). orphanos is used figuratively of disciples left without a master (e.g. Plato, Phaedo 116a).

OT In the LXX orphanos translates yāṯôm. In the OT the plight of the orphan, whether or not his mother has died (cf. Job 24:9), is that he has lost his father. Without the father "the father's house", the primary unit of family life, ceases to be and the remaining members of the household become vulnerable individuals whose existence is both anomalous and tragic. Thus in many texts the reference is to orphans and widows together (e.g. Deut. 10:18; Ps. 146:9). Because the orphans are so helpless – all they can do is to "wander about and beg" (Ps. 109:9, 10) – there can be nothing more wicked than to exploit or ill-use them (Deut. 27:19; Job 6:27; 22:9; 24:3, 9; Ps. 1:23; 10:2; Jer. 5:28; Ezek. 22:7). The law codes of the OT demand that the rights of orphans be upheld and their needs met. Orphans are to have a share in the special tithe (Deut. 14:28, 29; 26:12–15) and are to be included in the annual feasts (Deut. 16:11, 14). The sheaves, the olives, and the grapes which remain after the harvest are to be left for "the sojourner, the orphan, and the widow" (Deut. 24:17–22). The repentance and moral renewal called for by the prophets must include care for orphans (Isa. 1:17; Jer. 7:6; 22:3; Zech. 7:10).

Behind this insistence on provision for orphans lies the conviction that it is ultimately Yahweh himself who "executes justice for the fatherless" (Deut. 10:18; cf. Exod. 22:22–24; Prov. 23:10–11; Ps. 146:9; Hos. 14:3). Yahweh himself is "father of the fatherless" (Ps. 68:5; cf. Ps. 10:14).

Concern for orphans is urged upon the group to which the Zadokite Documents are addressed (CD 6:17; 14:14). One of the non-biblical psalms of the Qumran community gives praise to the Lord who has not "forsaken the orphan" (1QH 5:20). yāṯôm is here used figuratively to designate the member of the community, persecuted by the ungodly but under the care of God. The image of the orphan as a collective symbol of the people of God is used by Philo. "The whole Jewish race is in the position of an orphan. . . . Nevertheless the orphan-like desolate state of his people is always an object of pity and compassion to the Ruler of the Universe" (Spec.Leg. 4, 176–179).

Later Judaism continued to safeguard the rights of orphans, to legislate for their welfare, and to regard the care of them as meritorious. Until an orphan boy or girl marries he or she is to be maintained from the charity funds (Ket. 67a, b). Deserving of special praise and reward is the one who cares for the orphan in his home; "Whoever brings up an orphan in his own home, scripture ascribes it to him as though he had begotten him" (San. 19b; cf. Ket. 50a). A late Midrash can speak of the care of orphans as one of the "gates of the Lord" through which the righteous enter the future world (Midrash Ps. 118:19).

NT orphanos occurs twice in the NT. (A few MSS at Mk. 12:40 add "and orphans" to "the houses of widows", but this reading must be taken as secondary.)

1. Jas. 1:27. James enjoins practical concern for those least able to help themselves, "orphans and widows". He follows the OT in mentioning the two groups together, more fundamentally in insisting that claims to be religious are futile unless the one who makes them exercises justice and compassion (cf. especially Jer. 7).

2. Jn. 14:18. "I will not leave you orphaned" (or "[as] orphans"). This is the one instance in the Bible of the figurative use of orphanos. It recalls the use of the term in secular Gk. to describe the feelings of disciples bereft of their teacher. But the image draws its force from the OT estimate of the family as primarily "the father's house", a household living a single corporate life whose centre and source is the father. With the father's death his house is no more and thus the desolation of the orphan is the loss of all by which he lives. The relationship of Jesus to his disciples is presented here as that of a father to his children (cf. Jn. 13:3). His death will make them "orphans". There can be no more powerful symbol of the measure of their loss. But they will not be left in this pitiable situation. He will come to them. The metaphor of orphanos implies that this promise is to be fulfilled at the resurrection (rather than at the coming of the Spirit or the Parousia) for "orphans", unless intervention is swift, have small hope of survival. Easter ends the disciples' bereavement. "The very word which describes their sorrow confirms their sonship" (B. F. Westcott, The Gospel according to St. John, 1881, 206). J. Pridmore

(a). H. Kirschenbaum, "Orphan", in C. Roth and G. Wigoder, eds., Encyclopaedia Judaica XII 1478 f.; H. Seesemann, orphanos, TDNT V 486 ff.

(b). M. Cohn, "Jüdisches Waisenrecht", Zeitschrift für vergleichende Rechtswissenschaft 37, 1920, 417–45; M. Grünwald, "Jüdische Waisenfürsorge in alter und neuer Zeit", Mitteilungen zur jüdischen Volkskunde 23, 1922, 3–29; F. Windberg, orphanos, Pauly-Wissowa XVIII, 1, 1197–1200.

Other

ἄλλος, ἕτερος

ἄλλος (allos), other; ἄλλως (allōs), otherwise; ἀλλότριος (allotrios), belonging to another, strange, alien, hostile; ἀλλογενής (allogenēs), foreign; ἀλλόφυλος (allophylos), foreign; ἕτερος (heteros), other; ἑτέρως (heterōs), differently; ἑτερόγλωσσος (heteroglōssos), speaking another tongue; ἑτεροζυγέω (heterozygeō), be unequally yoked, be mismated.

CL In secular Gk. heteros and allos have essentially the same meaning, other. When they are used as noun or adj., they introduce a new person, thing or group. Originally heteros was a dual pron. and presupposed pairs of individuals or groups. Hence hoi heteroi can mean the other group. It is entirely lacking in modern Gk.

OT In the LXX allos refers to that already mentioned in contrast to others and can even render a demonstrative pron., e.g. the Heb. 'ēlleh, that. heteros had a personal connotation and was used to translate words like 'îš, rēa', 'āḥ (man, neighbour, brother). allos is used about 100 times; heteros about 150.

NT This distinction is found relatively seldom in the NT, where it is striking that the use of heteros (98 times in all) relative to allos (155 times in all) decreases in the later books. In Jn. (except 16:12), 1 and 2 Cor., Tit., 1 and 2 Pet., 1, 2, 3 Jn. and Rev., but also in 1 and 2 Thess. and Mk. (except 16:12, see below) heteros is lacking. Luke (both Gospel and Acts) prefers heteros. The polemic factor is one of the reasons why allos is found so frequently in 1 and 2 Cor.

1. The following details of usage may be noted.

(a) Both words are used to denote another person, thing or group; e.g. allos (Matt. 5:39; 12:13; Jn. 5:32); heteros (Lk. 5:7; 23:40). Hence tē hetera can mean the next day (Acts 20:15; 27:3).

(b) The same use is found in the plur. (e.g. Matt. 20:3, 6; Lk. 10:1; Jn. 7:12; 9:16; Acts 2:13).

(c) In enumerations (Matt. 13:5, 7 f.: Lk. 8:6 ff.) and in contrasts (Heb. 11:35 f.) heteros and allos are often used alternately. In enumerations heteros can become a definite numeral, e.g. in Lk. 19:16, 18, 20 it has the force of "the third" (RSV "another").

(d) Used as a noun ho heteros has the force of the neighbour that God has put in my way (1 Cor. 10:24; Rom. 2:1; 13:8; Gal. 6:4).

2. These words become important theologically when they express a more or less qualitative difference, external or internal (Mk. 12:32; 2 Cor. 1:12; 1 Cor. 3:11).

Jesus appeared to his disciples after his resurrection in another → form (Mk. 16:12), so that they did not recognize him (cf. Lk. 24:16; Jn. 20:15). At the transfiguration Jesus' appearance was similarly changed (Lk. 9:29); in this manifestation Jesus was revealed as the Son of man. The new can only be compared to the resurrection body in 1 Cor. 15:39 ff. in an argument against the denial of the → resurrection. Matt. 11:3 implies a question whether the messiah must be of another kind than Jesus.

The interpretation of Acts 2:4 ("And they were all filled with the Holy Spirit and began to speak in other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance") raises the question of whether the gift of tongues at → Pentecost was a form of ecstatic utterance or whether the disciples on whom the Spirit came were in fact speaking other languages which they presumably did not know before. The mistaken presumption of some of the onlookers that they were "filled with new wine" (v. 13) suggests that this was ecstatic speaking in tongues as in Acts 10:46; 19:6; 1 Cor. 12:10, 30; 14:1–4. On the other hand, others among the crowd who were Jews and proselytes visiting Jerusalem from various parts of the Roman empire asked in amazement: "Are not all these who are speaking Galileans? And how is it that we hear, each of us in his own native language? . . . we hear them telling in our own tongues the mighty works of God" (Acts 2:7 f., 11). The story of Pentecost is a preparation for the apostles' missionary preaching and pictures the outpouring of the Spirit in a twofold manner: the speaking in tongues as a sign of the outpouring of the Spirit as prophesied by Joel 2:25–28 (cf. Acts 2:17–21) showing the last days spoken of by the prophet had now come; and the proclamation of the word of God. At Pentecost it was proclaimed to Jews and proselytes in Jerusalem. The event marks the beginning of the fulfilment of Acts 1:8 ("But you shall receive power when the Holy Spirit has come upon you; and you shall be my witnesses in Jerusalem and in all Judea and Samaria and to the end of the earth"), and forms the transition to Peter's missionary preaching.

([Ed.] For further discussion of the phenomenon → Pentecost; → Word. It may well have been that among the hundred and twenty or so followers [Acts 1:15] there were those who already knew something of the languages mentioned, and for whom therefore the gift was primarily an enabling to proclaim "the mighty works of God" [2:13]. The assumption that all the followers of Jesus were Galileans [2:7] was made by the onlookers. Whilst it may have been true that the core of Jesus' following came from Galilee, the followers may have included others like Simon of Cyrene [Matt. 27:32; Mk. 15:21; Lk. 23:26] and possibly Lucius of Cyrene [Acts 13:1] who may have been among those who spoke to those who came from "the parts of Libya belonging to Cyrene" [Acts 2:10]. Similarly Acts 11:20 mentions "men of Cyprus and Cyrene" who preached the Lord Jesus and who might have belonged to the original band at Jerusalem. There were various synagogues in the city which catered for the needs of those who came from the dispersion [cf. Acts 6:9], and the population of Jerusalem evidently included a large number of Hellenists [Acts 6:1 ff.]. It is not beyond the bounds of possibility that some of these already belonged to the followers of Jesus before Pentecost.)

1 Cor. 14:21 uses the compound heteroglōssos, speaking another tongue, speaking a foreign language. The word is found in Polyb., 23, 13, 2; Strabo, 8, 1, 2; Philo, Conf.Ling. 8; and Aquila's translation of Ps. 113:1; Isa. 33:19. In dealing with the question of speaking in tongues, Paul argued: "Brethren, do not be children in your thinking; be babes in evil, but in thinking be mature. In the law it is written, 'By men of strange tongues and by the lips of foreigners [en heteroglōssois kai en cheilesin heterōn] I will speak to this people, and even then they will not listen to me, says the Lord.' Thus, tongues are a sign not for believers but for unbelievers, while prophecy is not for unbelievers but for believers." Paul is here quoting Isa. 28:11 f. perhaps in a version known also to Aquila (Origen, Philocalia 9, 2; cf. C. K. Barrett, The First Epistle to the Corinthians, BNTC, 1968, 322). In the prophecy Yahweh is threatening his people, who have failed to respond to his word delivered to them in their own language by Isaiah, with the foreign speech of the Assyrian invader. It is thus a judgment on the people of God to have such a thing inflicted on them. This is underlined by the unintelligibility of the other tongue. To be thus addressed is a sign that God is treating one as an unbeliever (cf. 1 Cor. 14:22). Such a sign may be compared with the sign of the naked prophet in Isa. 20:3 which signified the impending catastrophe and servitude of the people. In 1 Cor. 14 Paul draws an analogy between the event of Isaiah's day and the enthusiasm for glossolalia in the Corinthian church. To speak in another tongue is ineffective for building up the church and promoting faith. Indeed, it might even be regarded as a judgment on the community. Whereas prophecy can edify the believing congregation, since it is intelligible, speaking in tongues cannot. For only what is intelligible can edify others; at best only the one who speaks in tongues is edified in the case of glossolalia (cf. vv. 2–19). An utterance in another tongue can only serve to harden the unbeliever, because it communicates nothing to him, and does not show him how to be reconciled with God. The unbeliever may even conclude that the practitioners of glossolalia are mad; but if he hears prophecy he may well be convicted (vv. 23 f.).

In 2 Cor. 11:4 and Gal. 1:6 ff. Paul stresses the uniqueness of the salvation offered by his gospel. Another → gospel would not be the gospel, any more than another spirit can be the Holy Spirit (cf. J. B. Lightfoot, St. Paul's Epistle to the Galatians, 1870,[10] 1876, 76; W. M. Ramsay, A Historical Commentary on St. Paul's Epistle to the Galatians, 1899, 260 ff.). The other gospel referred to in Gal. which is in fact no gospel is the teaching of the Judaizers which insisted on → circumcision for Gentile converts, so that they would meet the requirements of the old → covenant. Paul sees that such a demand involves a matter of principle concerning the ground of salvation. To attempt to fulfil the demands of the law in this way would be to put forward a righteous act by man as a basis for salvation. The whole theme of Gal. treats the issues involved which confront men with the choice of the free grace of God in Christ or salvation by human endeavour. The "gospel" of this latter alternative is anathema to Paul (Gal. 1:8; → Curse, art. anathema).

In Rom. 7:23 the other → law, i.e. the carnal egoistic urge, as a tool of the law of sin fights against the good law of God, which the mind agrees with (cf. v. 25). (On this passage → I Am, art. egō eimi NT 2 (c).)

Phil. 3:15 contains the sole NT instance of the adv. heterōs, differently, otherwise. In all probability Paul is arguing against enthusiasts who claimed perfection for themselves and special revelations. Paul takes up the slogan of perfection and applies it to Christians. The perfect (teleioi; RSV "mature"; → Goal, art. telos) are, in fact, those who know that they are imperfect and are aware of the need to press on to what lies ahead, forgetting what lies behind (vv. 12 f.). They know that they have not yet reached their goal and do not yet possess "the prize of the upward call of God in Christ Jesus" (v. 14). They will await transformation (v. 21). The practical conclusion is given in v. 15; "Let those of us who are mature be thus minded; and if in anything you are otherwise minded, God will reveal that to you." The last point is evidently directed at the claim to special revelations. Paul is confident that by being realistic and patient, they will grow in insight. (See further J. B. Lightfoot, St. Paul's Epistle to the Philippians, 1868, 153.)

3. In addition to heteroglōssos there is the compound heterozygeō, be unevenly yoked, and several compounds with allos in the NT. 2 Cor. 6:14 refers to the practice of yoking together animals of different species, e.g. an ox and a donkey, in order to draw burdens. Such practices were forbidden by the law which banned the use of oxen and asses ploughing together (Deut. 22:10; cf. also the practices mentioned in Lev. 19:19; Philo, Spec.Leg. 4, 203; Josephus, Ant. 4, 228). In 2 Cor. 6:14 Paul applies the idea to relationship of believers with unbelievers: "Do not be unevenly yoked together with unbelievers. For what partnership have righteousness and iniquity? Or what fellowship has light with darkness?" The argument goes on to refer specifically to idol worship, and compares the people of God with the → temple and therefore urges moral purity and separation from the corrupt practices of paganism. The RSV translation "Do not be mismated" reflects the injunction of Lev. 19:19 not to let cattle breed with a different kind, where the LXX uses the corresponding adj.

allotrios means what belongs to another, therefore strange, alien, unsuitable, hostile (→ Foreign, art. allotrios). It normally renders the Heb. nokrî, but also sometimes zār. It is found in Matt. 17:25; Lk. 16:12; Jn. 10:5; Acts 7:6; Rom. 14:4; 15:20; 2 Cor. 10:15 f.; 1 Tim. 5:22; Heb. 9:25; 11:34. Only in the latter passage does it mean hostile, and it is never used in the sense of alien to God. The vb. apallotrioō, estrange, alienate, occurs only in the prison epistles (Col. 1:21; Eph. 2:12; 4:18) in the perf. pass. part., where men are said to be alienated from God. It is the state that they are in prior to reconciliation, and is parallel to being an → enemy (echthros) of God and a stranger (xenos; → Foreign).

allogenēs, foreign, is found only in Jewish and Christian literature. It is used for zār (e.g.. Exod. 29:33; Num. 16:40 [17:5]; Lev. 22:10) and for various other words. It is found only in the NT of the grateful → Samaritan (Lk. 17:18). allophylos, foreign, Gentile, heathen, is found in Isa. 61:5; 2:6; 1 Sam. 13:3; Ps. 108:10 for various Heb. terms, but in the overwhelming majority of its LXX occurrences it renders "Philistines". In Acts 10:28 it denotes the Gentiles from the Jewish standpoint. The obscure word allotriepiskopos (1 Pet. 4:15) has been variously interpreted as a concealer of stolen goods, a spy or informer, one who meddles in things that do not concern him, a revolutionist (details in Arndt, 39 f.).

→ Foreign F. Selter, C. Brown

Arndt, 39 f., 314 f.; H. W. Beyer, heteros, TDNT II 702 ff.; F. Büchsel, allos etc., TDNT I 264–67; Moulton-Milligan, 23, 257.

P

Parable, Allegory, Proverb

It has been estimated that roughly one third of the recorded teaching of Jesus consists of parables and parabolic statements, and that there are some forty of the former and twenty of the latter (A. M. Hunter, Interpreting the Parables, 1960, 10 ff.; for a list see below, NT 5). In its broadest sense a parable is a form of speech used to illustrate and persuade by the help of a picture. In ancient writing, including the Bible, the use of figurative speech was widespread in giving concrete, pictorial and challenging expression to religious ideas for which there were no corresponding abstract concepts. Figurative speech is still part and parcel of every day life. On a philosophical and theoretical level religious language is interpreted in terms of abstractions and concepts relative to a contemporary world view. But this is merely to translate one set of thought forms from one conceptual scheme into those of another. In so doing care must be taken to avoid losing the original content of the picture and also the challenge which was an essential feature of the language. In discussing the character of the parable, scholars distinguish the parable proper from figurative language in general, metaphors, similes and similitudes, parabolic stories, illustrative stories, and allegories. These seven categories are all linked to parabolē. The proverb (paroimia) also has a didactic religious function and is therefore treated in this article.

παραβολή (parabolē), type, figure, parable; παραβάλλω (paraballō), throw alongside, compare; αἴνιγμα (ainigma), riddle, indistinct image; ἀλληγορέω (allēgoreo), speak allegorically.

CL parabolē, from Plato and Isocrates on, is to be derived from paraballō (para, alongside; ballō, throw, bring, place) to place alongside, hold beside, throw to, compare (Plato, Gorgias 475e; Isocrates, 9, 34). It means: (a) holding beside, comparison (Plato, Philebus 33b; Isocrates, 12, 227); (b) placing beside, meeting, conjunction (as a technical term in astronomy); (c) venture; (d) parabola in conic section (as a technical term in mathematics).

1. In rhetoric the word, on the basis of its first meaning, became the technical term for a specific form of speech, which is distinguished from others. Classical rhetoric made us of the following figures of speech: (a) the image (eikōn); (b) the metaphor (metaphora); (c) the comparison (homoiōsis); (d) the parable (parabolē); (e) the illustrative story (paradeigma); and (f) the allegory (allēgoria).

According to Aristotle, the similitude and the pure parable serve as an introductory means of proof (Rhet. 2, 20). Through the comparison of the known with the unknown, in which the listener himself has to find the similarity (the tertium comparationis is not in general named, in order to set in motion the listener's thought processes of grasping, comparing and considering), the point of the analogy is reached (cf. also Plato, Leg. 6, 758a; Phaed, 82e; 85e; 87b; Apol. 30e; and the Stoic-Cynic diatribes, e.g. Epict., Dissertationes 1, 24, 19 f.; 2, 14, 21 f.; 4, 7, 22 f.). The Homeric parables, on the other hand, often aim merely to illustrate or have a purely poetic function (189 pure parables occur in the Iliad.; 39 in the Odyssey). What characterizes all these comparisons and pure parables is the fact that their imagery is drawn mostly from life, the reality which is accessible to everyone.

2. In rhetoric allegory is clearly distinguished from these forms, although Quintilian (Oratoria 8, 6, 48) comes near to recommending mixed forms. The noun allēgoria (alla agoreuō, say something different) is found in Cicero (Orationes 27, 94), but the vb. not until Philo (De Cherubim 25; Som. 2, 31; Vit.Cont. 28), Josephus (Ant. Preface 24) and later in Athenaeus (2, 69c). This relatively late occurrence makes it probable that it originated in Hellenistic times, possibly in the Stoic-Cynic diatribe. The vb. means: (a) to speak allegorically; (b) to allegorize. Allegorizing has always played an important rôle where sacred writings are concerned. When they became antiquated, a new, contemporary content was injected into them by means of allegorical explanations and their canonical authority was preserved. Thus allegorization is "a late, almost decadent, literary form. It presupposes a stage of development which has already, essentially, had its day. But, although it has been left behind, people try to salvage something from it" (C. H. Peisker, "Das Alte Testament – Gabe und Aufgabe" in Kleine Predigttypologie, II, 1965, 17). (On allegory in Hellenistic and early Christian thought see R. P. C. Hanson, Allegory and Event: A Study of the Sources and Significance of Origen's Interpretation of Scripture, 1959.)

3. The riddle has nothing to do with literary forms in general or with allegory in particular, although to an uninitiated listener allegory remains enigmatic. The ainigma, dark saying, puzzling saying, riddle, is found from Pindar and Aeschylus (PV 613) on. It is the opposite of haplous logos, a plain, straightforward or simple word, and is related in origin (as in Eng. and Heb.) with the vb. read (Old Eng. rede, to take counsel, advise, commend; cf. paraineō, exhort, recommend, advise; aineō, praise, approve, recommend). The riddle likes to use the literary form of metaphor, but it is to be understood rather as a wise saying. The riddle was considered, therefore, as a touchstone of wisdom. The riddle really belongs to oracular and prophetic speech (→ Prophet CL). Thus the sayings of the Sibyl, for example, could be enigmatic (Sib. 3, 811 f.; cf. Sophocles, OT 1525; Euripides, Phoen. 1688, etc.).

OT In the LXX parabolē is always the equivalent of the noun māšāl or the vb. māšal (paraphora or periphora should be read in Eccl. 2:12). māšāl means: (a) a saying containing a comparison or taunt; (b) a wise saying, the instruction by wisdom; (c) the parabolic form (see NT 1 (a)–(g)). The vb. correspondingly means to speak or tell a māšāl.

The vb. meant originally to be similar, like. Therefore, the noun would originally have had the meaning of comparison, making like. In its long history, which passed from (1) popular speech to (2) the language of wisdom and later (3) to prophetic speech, it acquired a very broad semantic field. This was taken over, with its sharply differentiated contents, by the LXX, the Rabbis and, subsequently, the NT. It is always used, however, unambiguously as a technical term for one or other particular types or forms but not as a "general concept in which the individual genera (i.e. types and forms) are comprehended" (O. Eissfeldt, Der Maschal im Alten Testament, BZAW 24, 1913, 33).

1. Thus māšāl in popular speech first means a proverb (→ paroimia), which may often contain a comparison (Ezek. 18:2; 1 Sam. 10:12; 24:14). If the saying or comparison is about a person and makes fun of or disparages him as a bad example, māšāl means a taunt (Hab. 2:6; Isa. 14:4).

2. Later māšāl became a technical term among the wise and means a wise saying, rich in comparisons (→ paroimia OT; cf. Prov. 26:7, 9) and the instruction of the wise. Prov. and the collections contained in it carry this superscription paroimia, 1:1; paideia, 10:1; 25:1 which RSV translates as "proverbs". Like the oriental, the wise man in the OT loves the enigmatic, dark saying. Hence, in this context māšāl approaches ḥîḏâh, riddle, in meaning for which it can even be used as a synonym (Prov. 1:6).

The LXX translates ḥîḏâh appropriately and correctly by ainigma, i.e. (a) riddle; (b) dark saying. The former (1 Ki. 10:1; 2 Chr. 9:1; Ps. 49:4 [48:5, Aquila]) is part of the cult of wisdom at Solomon's court and has its place in the Wisdom Literature (Prov. 1:6; 30:7–30). The only OT riddle given word for word is in Jdg. 14:12–20 (ḥîḏâh translated in the LXX by problēma), the solution of which is another riddle (14:18). The key-word is "love". The dark saying requires explanatory interpretation. It occurs in oracular speech (e.g. Balaam, Num. 23:7–18; 24:3, 15, 20–23), and in prophecy. God speaks to men – but not to → Moses – in dark speech (Num. 12:8), and prophetic speech also is enigmatic (Ezek. 17:2, Symmachus).

3. In the realm of prophecy (→ Prophet) māšāl has its place. On the one hand, it occurs as proverb and taunt (see above 1). On the other hand, it enters through the fact that, although the word is not present, the object it designates is, and most of the parabolic forms occur (see below NT 1 (a)–(g)). The later we come, the more the developed forms (see below NT 1 (d)–(g)) come into the foreground to clarify, strengthen and lend more urgency to the prophetic message. Allegory, too, aims at urgency, but goes about it another way, i.e. through a certain veiling of the truth it seeks to attract the attention of the listener (cf. Ezek.). Later, allegorical visions occur (→ Prophet OT; Zech.; Dan. 2; 4; 7; 8; Eth.Enoch 85–90; 2 Esd. 9:26–13:56). The symbolic actions of the prophets, whose meaning is called māšāl, stand in close relationship to the prophetic parables (→ Prophet OT). In Rab. writings māšāl and maṭlā' (parable, riddle, comparison) include the whole breadth of meaning which had grown up in the course of time. Although pure parables predominate ("Let me tell you a parable: with what is the thing to be compared?"), the later one comes, the more allegories are found (cf. F. Hauck, TDNT V 750 f.). In Hellenistic Judaism they become an affectation. Against the background of many Rab. parables, those of Jesus display "a definite personal character, a unique clarity and simplicity, a matchless mastery of construction" (J. Jeremias, The Parables of Jesus, 1963², 12).

In striking contrast with this, māšāl is to be found nowhere in the Qumran literature (the vb. only as a different root, to rule), although in the hymns (1QH) many more or less developed series of metaphors and similes occur.

NT In the NT parabolē occurs only in the Synoptic Gospels (48 times) and in Heb. (twice); ainigma only in 1 Cor. 13:12 (indistinct, enigmatic image); and allēgoreō only in Gal. 4:24 (to speak allegorically). The noun allēgoria does not occur in the NT. parabolē in the NT has the following meanings.

1. In Heb. the ritual of the tabernacle is seen as a parabolē (RSV "symbolic") of the time of salvation (9:9), and the restoration of Isaac as a picture of the resurrection ("hence, figuratively speaking [kai en parabolē] he did receive him back", 11:19). In Matt. 15:15 par. Mk. 7:17 it means a saying, and in Lk. 4:23 a proverb. In all other occurrences in the NT it has the meaning of parable in one or other of its various senses:

(a) In figurative sayings image and reality are placed together without a comparative adv. (as), in order that the image (the known) may elucidate the reality (the unknown), e.g. "You are the light of the world" (Matt. 5:14; cf. 25:14; Mk. 2:17, 19; and in the OT Amos 3:8; 6:12; Isa. 40:7; Jer. 12:5; Prov. 6:27–29). In such figurative sayings it often happened that the image was separated from the reality it referred to (though from time to time the latter was often expressed in the context), and was handed on in isolation. In isolation it became detached from its original context, and thus its original point became lost from view. Thus Mk. 9:49 ("For every one will be salted with fire") does not become more intelligible with the secondary addition in the TR ("and every sacrifice will be salted with salt" RSV mg.). The words appear to have been added at an early stage by a scribe who detected a clue to its meaning in Lev. 2:13 (cf. Ezek. 43:24; Exod. 30:5), and other variants were variants of this (cf. Metzger, 102 f.; C. E. B. Cranfield, The Gospel according to Saint Mark, 1959, 314 ff.). (On this passage → Fire, art. pyr; → Salt.) Similarly Matt. 7:6; 24:28 par. Lk. 17:37 do not indicate the original point of comparison. (On these sayings → Animal; → Bird.) In such instances the saying takes on the character of a metaphor (see below).

(b) The metaphor is a figurative expression in which a name or descriptive term is applied to some object to which it is not literally and properly applicable. It often involves the transference of the concrete to the abstract: e.g. "He is the head of the family", or "the spring of life" (cf. further Matt. 7:13 f.; 9:37 f.; 15:13; 1 Cor. 9:9; cf. Isa. 5:1–7, which pictures Israel as a bride and a vineyard, with Matt. 21:33–46; Mk. 12:1–12; and Lk. 20:9–19).

Metaphor places the image not beside the reality, as in the figurative saying, but instead of the reality. One has to know beforehand what reality lies behind the metaphor, or it remains unintelligible. Thus all metaphorical speech rests on convention.

(c) The simile is a sentence in which reality and image are placed beside one another by means of a comparative adv. In this case there is only one principal point of comparison: e.g. "Her hair [the reality] is as fair as straw [the image]" (cf. further Matt. 10:16; Lk. 11:44; cf. Prov. 11:22; 25:11–13; 26:1 ff.; Isa. 16:2; Hos. 2:1–5; 6:9; Ps. 127:4).

Similes occur only rarely. For the most part it will have already passed over into a figurative saying and then become metaphorically coloured in the tradition. The image in a simile is taken from the reality which is accessible to everyone.

(d) The pure parable is a story which has developed out of a simile or a figurative saying. Two things, events or situations (image and reality), which are similar, are compared, so that the known may elucidate the unknown. The image depicts a typical event or circumstance. It "is taken from the reality which is accessible to everyone, and points to things which happen every day, to situations, the existence of which the least willing must acknowledge" (A. Jülicher, Die Gleichnisreden Jesu, I, 1899², 93). There is only one principal point of comparison. For example: "The kingdom of heaven is like leaven . . . " (Matt. 13:33; cf. Lk. 13:20; → Leaven; cf. Matt. 13:31 f.; Lk. 14:28–33; 15:4–10; 17:7–10; Isa. 28:23–25; Jer. 18:1–6).

"The parable anticipates all opposition, in that it speaks only of what is undoubted . . . [It] operates with 'no one', 'none,' 'everyone', 'whenever', 'as often as', etc., and seeks to overwhelm the hearer by the weight of its 'at all' " (A. Jülicher, op. cit., I, 97).

(e) The parabolic story differs from the pure parable only in that its picture, which is a fictional story, is recounted as if it had once happened. "It places before us not what everyone does, what cannot be otherwise, but what someone once did, without asking whether others would act in the same way" (A. Jülicher, op. cit., I, 93). Thus, the parabolic story of the unjust judge begins: "In a certain city there was a judge . . ." (Lk. 18:2 ff.; cf. Lk. 11:5–8; 14:16–24; 2 Sam. 12:1–4. "The parabolic story replaces by its vividness the advantage that the parable has through the authority of the generally known and acknowledged. Indeed, the parabolic story stands higher, being more subtle and revealing is point less. . . . The parabolic story . . . requests, 'Hearer, let me tell you just one story, if it does not convince you, I will be quiet' " (A. Jülicher, op. cit., I, 97 f.).

(f) The illustrative story is a freely invented story which gives an example, a model case, which has to be generalized by the hearer. Thus the story of the good → Samaritan ends with Jesus saying: "Go and do likewise!" (Lk. 10:37). Conversely, the illustrative story of the Pharisee and the tax collector in the temple ends with a warning about those who are like the Pharisee (Lk. 18:10–14; cf. Lk. 10:30–37; 12:16–21; 16:19–31; 2 Sam. 14:5–7). It is noteworthy that the NT illustrative stories only occur in Lk.

(g) Allegory is a freely invented story, which says something other than it appears to say on the surface by heaping metaphor on metaphor. It is a continuous metaphor, e.g. "The kingdom of heaven may be compared to a king who gave a marriage feast for his son . . ." (Matt. 22:2–10; cf. Jn. 10:15; Rom. 11:17–24; 1 Cor. 3:10–13; Ezek. 16; 17; 19; 23; 31; 34; Ps. 80:8–19).

"Allegory seeks to present truth to our minds in a more expressive form by painting it in a series of pictures, which indicate but at the same time conceal the intended truth" (H. Weinel, Die Gleichnisse Jesu, 1929⁵, 2). Like metaphor, allegory rests on convention. It is only intelligible when the metaphors are known, for they have to be translated step by step, and when the matter that they depict is known. It is a literary form intelligible only to the initiated, the function of which is not to make facts known but to appraise known facts. Ezek. 17:12–21 offers a model exposition. Allegories of this kind occur in the NT but they are designated as parabolē and not as allēgoria (Matt. 22:1). (For further discussion of allegory and its possible use in the NT see 9 below.)

2. In section 1 an attempt was made to distinguish various forms. But it must be remembered that parables spring from living speech, and therefore most often appear in mixed forms. At the same time the following further laws or rules may be noted.

(a) The parable as drama. In pure parable and the related forms a distinction may be drawn between the image and the reality. Understanding comes at the point where the two halves intersect, the point of comparison. In the developed forms the picture part of the parable is not static but presents a drama to the hearer which can be divided into scenes. In view of this one may speak of the dramatic half of the parable (cf. G. Eichholz, Einführung in die Gleichnisse, BSt 37, 1963).

(b) The law of conciseness requires that the dramatic half be told concisely and simply. Irrelevant emotions and motives are not disclosed. There never appear more than three characters or groups of characters (the law of three), and there are never more than two actors in one scene (the law of two on the stage). If the conclusion is unimportant or self-evident, it may be omitted.

(c) The law of unity of action demands that only one plot should be developed in the drama, never two or more on parallel lines. To this end the drama is recounted from only one point of view. ([Ed.] This point was stressed by Jülicher and those who followed him, but many scholars feel that this rule can no longer be adhered to pedantically.)

(d) For the expositor the law that the stress comes at the end is important.

(e) The law of listener-relatedness states that the material for the drama is taken from the world of the hearer and reflects his experiences and thoughts. The parables are also spoken directly to the hearer. Thus the question-parables are one single, big question, which compels the listener to reply. To this end he is drawn into the parable, in so far as he finds himself portrayed in the main character and thereby not only moved but caught (cf. H. Greeven, "Wer unter euch . . . ?", Wort und Dienst, Neue Folge 3, 1952, 86–101; G. V. Jones, The Art and Truth of the Parables: A Study in their Literary Form and Modern Interpretation, 1964; and A. C. Thiselton, "The Parables as Language-Event: Some Comments on Fuchs's Hermeneutics in the Light of Linguistic Philosophy", SJT 23, 1970, 437–68).

3. Besides the formal laws there is the question of the effects of tradition. In The Parables of Jesus, 1963², J. Jeremias discusses in detail the transmission of the parables. He considers that many of them acquired new addressees in the course of being handed on, and that sometimes parables directed to outsiders came to be seen as applicable to disciples (op. cit., 96–114). In the case of the parable of the sower (Matt. 13:1–9 par. Mk. 4:1–9, Lk. 8:4–8) there is considerable debate whether the explanation (Matt. 13:18–23 par. Mk. 4:13–20, Lk. 8:11–15) was a later addition by the early church. J. Jeremias argues for this (op. cit., 77 ff.), but against this see C. F. D. Moule, The Birth of the New Testament, 1962, 149 ff. (On this parable see also D. Wenham, "The Synoptic Problem Revisited: Some New Suggestions about the Composition of Mark 4:1–34", TB 23, 1972, 3–38.) Jeremias argues that the tendency to allegorization is due to the influence of tradition (op. cit., 66–89), and G. Eichholz argues that the evangelists' freedom in handling the tradition "is paradoxically to be understood as an attempt at obedience; it springs from the very fact that they are bound to the word handed down" (op. cit., 40). On the other hand, I. H. Marshall observes that "the admission of freedom in handling the sayings of Jesus does not of itself permit us to postulate that the early Church felt free to attribute later sayings to Jesus Himself. There is clearly a difference between handing down sayings with alterations and enlarging the corpus with new sayings" (Eschatology and the Parables, 1963, 14). Jeremias himself maintains that "in dealing with the parables we are dealing with a particularly trustworthy tradition, and are brought into immediate relation with Jesus" (op. cit., 12).

4. The message of the parables cannot be reduced to a single theme; each one must be examined individually. In general one can say that the parables are "shot through with the same Christological significance as the miracle narratives" (E. Hoskyns and F. N. Davey, The Riddle of the New Testament, 1947[3], 134). They are primarily eschatological (cf. C. H. Dodd, op. cit.; I. H. Marshall, op. cit.) and contain two groups of themes, the → kingdom of God and repentance (→ Conversion). (On the question of eschatology → Kingdom; → Present; → Time.) The parables of growth belong to the first group (Matt. 13; Mk. 4; Lk. 8; 13:18–21) as do the parables which speak of God and his activity (Matt. 20:1–16; 25:14–30; Lk. 15:11–32). The second group enjoins the urgency of repentance (Lk. 12:16–20; 13:6–9) which demands decisive (Lk. 16:1–8), radical (Matt. 13:44–46) and watchful action (Matt. 24:42–25:13), because the kingdom is near. The parables which speak of action towards one's neighbour (→ Brother; → Samaritan) also belong to this group (Matt. 18:23–35; Lk. 10:30–37). Much light on the meaning of particular parables has been shed by J. D. M. Derrett in his studies of their teaching against the background of rabbinic law Law and the New Testament, 1971. For further discussion of individual parables see the articles relative to key words in them and the literature noted in the bibliographies below. C. H. Peisker

5. The following is a table of parables and parabolic sayings, set out according to the general context given in the Gospels. It should be borne in mind that there is a measure of scholarly disagreement as to what properly constitutes a parable or parabolic saying. It should also be noted that some parables and sayings are set in different contexts by different Gospels, and that there are variations and similar themes. This should be taken into account in any detailed study.

The Sermon on the Mount (Matt.)
The salt of the earth (Matt. 5:13; Mk. 9:49 f.; Lk. 14:34 f.)
The light of the world (Matt. 5:14 ff.; Mk. 4:21; Lk. 8:16; cf. 11:33; Jn. 8:12)
On treasures (Matt. 6:19 ff.; Lk. 12:33 f.; cf. 16:9)
The sound eye (Matt. 6:22 f.; Lk. 11:34 ff.)
The birds of the air and the lilies of the field (Matt. 6:26 ff.; Lk. 12:24–28)
On serving two masters (Matt. 6:24; Lk. 16:13)
The speck in the eye (Matt. 7:3, 5; Lk. 6:41 f.)
On profaning the holy (Matt. 7:6)
The two ways (Matt. 7:13 f.; Lk. 13:23 f.)
The wolves in sheep's clothing and "By their fruits . . ." (Matt. 7:15–20; cf. 3:10; 12:33 ff.; Lk. 6:43 ff.; 3:9)
The house built on the rock (Matt. 7:24–27; Lk. 6:47 ff.)

Galilaean Ministry
The harvest is great (Matt. 9:35–38; cf. 4:23; 14:14; Mk. 6:6, 34; Lk. 8:1; 10:2; Jn. 4:35)
The two debtors (Lk. 7:41 ff.)
The sign of Jonah (Matt. 12:38–42; 16:1–4; Mk. 8:11 f.; Lk. 11:16, 19–32; Jn. 6:30)
The parable of the sower (Matt. 13:1–9; Mk. 4:1–9; Lk. 8:4–8; cf. 5:1–3)
The reason for speaking in parables (Matt. 13:10–17; Mk. 4:10 ff., 25; Lk. 8:9 f., 18; Jn. 9:39)
The interpretation of the parable of the sower (Matt. 13:18–23; Mk. 4:13–20; Lk. 8:11–15)
He who has ears to hear, let him hear (Matt. 11:15; 13:9, 43; Mk. 4:9, 23; Lk. 8:8; 14:35)
The seed growing secretly (Mk. 4:26–29)
The wheat and the tares (Matt. 13:24–30)
The mustard seed (Matt. 13:31 f.; Mk. 4:30 ff.; Lk. 13:18 f.)
The leaven (Matt. 13:33; Lk. 13:20 f.)
Jesus' use of parables (Matt. 13:34 f.; Mk. 4:33 f.)
The interpretation of the parable of the tares (Matt. 13:36–43)
The hidden treasure and the pearl of great price (Matt. 13:44 ff.)
The fish net (Matt. 13:47–50)
Treasures old and new (Matt. 13:51 f.)
Jesus' true kindred (Matt. 12:46–50; cf. 7:21; Mk. 3:20 f., 31–35; Lk. 8:19 ff.; Jn. 15:14)
The unforgiving servant (Matt. 18:23–35)

On the Way to Jerusalem (Lk.)
The Good Samaritan (Lk. 10:29–37)
The friend at midnight (Lk. 11:5–8)
Light (Lk. 11:33; cf. 8:16; Matt. 5:15; Mk. 4:21)
The sound eye (Lk. 11:34 ff.; Matt. 6:22 f.)
The rich fool (Lk. 12:16–21)
On treasures (Lk. 12:33 f.; cf. above under The Sermon on the Mount)
The barren fig tree (Lk. 13:1–9; cf. Matt. 21:18 f.; Mk. 11:12 ff.)
The mustard seed (Lk. 13:18 f.; Matt. 13:31 f.; Mk. 4:30 ff.)
The leaven (Lk. 13:20 f.; Matt. 13:33)
The great supper (Lk. 14:15–24; Matt. 22:1–14)
Counting the cost of building a tower and going to war (Lk. 14:28–33)
Salt (Lk. 14:34 f.; Matt. 5:13; Mk. 9:49 f.)
The lost sheep (Lk. 15:1–7)
The lost coin (Lk. 15:8 ff.)
The lost (prodigal) son (Lk. 15:11–32)
The unjust steward (Lk. 16:1–9)
On serving two masters (Lk. 16:13; Matt. 6:24)
The rich man and Lazarus (Lk. 16:19–31)
On being unprofitable servants (Lk. 17:7–10)
The unjust judge (Lk. 18:1–8)
The Pharisee and the publican (Lk. 18:9–14)

Ministry in Judea
On riches (Matt. 19:23–30; Mk. 10:23–31; Lk. 18:24–30)

The labourers in the vineyard (Matt. 20:1–16)
The pounds (Lk. 19:11–27; cf. Matt. 25:14–40; Mk. 13:34)

Final Ministry in Jerusalem
The two sons (Matt. 21:28–32)
The wicked husbandmen (Matt. 21:33–46; Mk. 12:1–12; Lk. 20:9–19)
The great supper (Matt. 22:1–14)
The widow's mite (Mk. 12:41–44; Lk. 21:1–4)
The fig tree (Matt. 24:32–36; Mk. 13:28–32; Lk. 21:29–33)
The exhortation to watch (Mk. 13:33–37; cf. Matt. 25:13 ff.; Lk. 19:19 f.; 21:34 ff.)
The flood, watching and the thief in the night (Matt. 24:37–44; Lk. 17:26–36; 12:39 f.; cf. Mk. 13:35)
The good and wicked servants (Matt. 24:45–51; cf. 25:21; Lk. 12:41–46; cf. 19:17)
The ten virgins (Matt. 25:1–13; cf. Mk. 13:33–37; Lk. 12:35–38; 13:25–28)
The talents (Matt. 25:14–30; cf. Mk. 13:34; Lk. 19:11–27)
The sheep and the goats (Matt. 25:31–46)

The Discourses in Jn.
The teaching of Jesus in the Fourth Gospel is contained in discourses and dialogues which nevertheless use parabolic imagery.
The new birth (Jn. 3:1–36)
The water of life (Jn. 4:1–42)
The son (Jn. 5:19–47)
The bread of life (Jn. 6:22–66)
The life-giving Spirit (Jn. 7:1–52)
The light of the world (Jn. 8:12–59)
The good shepherd (Jn. 10:1–42)
The farewell discourses (Jn. 13:1–17:26), including the sayings about the father's house (14:2 ff.), the way (14:6), the vine (15:1–16), and the pains of childbirth (16:2 ff.)
(C. H. Dodd has noted various parabolic forms in Jn. which he believes go back to an early tradition and which preserve valuable elements which the Synoptic evangelists omitted: the grain of wheat [12:24]; the pains of childbirth [16:21]; the benighted traveller [11:9 f.]; the slave and the son [8:35]; the shepherd, the thief and the doorkeeper [10:1–5]; the bridegroom and the bridegroom's friend [3:29] [Historical Tradition in the Fourth Gospel, 1963, 366–87].)

6. A number of parables are contained in the Gospel of Thomas, a 4th-century Coptic MS found at Nag Hammadi in Egypt around 1945. The work is not a Gospel in the canonical sense, but a collection of 114 sayings attributed to Jesus. In its present form the work appears to date from the 4th century, containing a translation of a 2nd century Gk. MS. Some of the parables are substantially the same as those contained in the canonical Gospels: the sower (No. 8), the mustard seed (No. 20), the speck in the eye (No. 27), the rich fool (No. 64), the vineyard (No. 66), and the great supper (No. 65). There is a parable of a fish net which seems to make a point similar to the parables of the hidden treasure and the pearl of great price. "And he said: Man is like a wise fisherman, who cast his net in the sea and drew it out of the sea when it was full of little fishes. Among them the wise fisherman found a large good fish. He cast all the little fishes into the sea. He selected the large fish without difficulty. He who has ears to hear, let him hear" (No. 7; quoted from the translation by W. R. Schoedel in R. M. Grant and D. N. Freedman, The Secret Sayings of Jesus, 1960, 120 f.).

Some of the sayings appear to have a gnostic thrust, e.g. the latter part of No. 25: "He who has ears, let him hear! There is a light within a light-man and it illuminates the whole world; if it does not illuminate it, [it is] darkness" (op. cit., 138). The gnostic is the one who has the illumination. Similarly, the parable of the lost sheep is changed to make the sheep (i.e. the gnostic who is more important than the rest) the motive: "Jesus said: The kingdom is like a shepherd who had a hundred sheep. One of them, the largest, lost his way. He left the ninety-nine and sought the one until he found it. After he had toiled, he said to the sheep, I love you more than the ninety-nine" (No. 104, op. cit., 181).

Some of the sayings are not found in the canonical Gospels but are found in the early fathers. "Jesus said: He who is near me is near the fire, and he who is far from me is far from the kingdom" (No. 82, op. cit., 170; cf. Origen, MPG 13, 531 D-32A; Didymus of Alexandria, MPG 39, 1488D). But other sayings are hitherto unknown. "Jesus said: The kingdom of the Father is like a woman who carries a vessel full of meal and goes a long way. The handle of the vessel broke; the meal flowed out behind her on the way. She did not notice it, she did not know how to work. When she reached the house, she set the vessel down and found it empty" (No. 94, op. cit. 176). Here the point seems to be the error of imagining that one has saving knowledge, when one has lost it. "Jesus said: The kingdom of the Father is like a man who wanted to kill a great man. He drew the sword in his house and ran it through the wall, in order to know whether his hand was strong enough. Then he killed the great man" (No. 95, op. cit., 177). This parable which appears to reflect Zealot aspirations may be compared with the canonical parables which urge the need to count the cost (cf. Lk. 14:28–32).

For further discussion of Gos.Thom. see F. F. Bruce, ZPEB IV 595 f.; and Jesus and Christian Origins Outside the New Testament, 1974, 82–158; B. Gärtner, The Theology of the Gospel of Thomas, 1961; E. Haenchen, Die Botschaft des Thomas-Evangliums, 1965; A. J. B. Higgins, "Non-Gnostic Sayings in the Gospel of Thomas", NovT 4, 1960, 292–306; H. W. Montefiore, "A Comparison of the Parables of the Gospel according to Thomas and the Synoptic Evangelists", NTS 7, 1960–61, 220–48 (reprinted in H. W. Montefiore and H. E. W. Turner, Thomas and the Evangelists, 1962); H.-G. Puech, in Henn. Schn., I, 278–307; R. McL. Wilson, Studies in the Gospel of Thomas, 1960; and "Thomas, Gospel of", ZPEB V 735 f.

7. It is sometimes suggested that Jesus intended his parables to be clearly understood by all, but that Mk.'s conception of the messianic secret led Mk. to present them as deliberately concealing the truth from outsiders and the uninitiated. Thus Mk. 4:10 ff. declares: "And when he was alone, those who were about him with the twelve asked him concerning the parables. And he said to them, 'To you has been given the secret of the kingdom of God, but for those outside everything is in parables; so that they may indeed see but not perceive, and may indeed hear but not understand; lest they should turn again, and be forgiven.' " The same thought is substantially repeated in the parallel passages in Matt. 13:10–15 which quotes from Isaiah's commission (Isa. 6:9 f.) and Lk. 8:9 f. There is a similar explanation of the unbelief of the Jews in Jn. 12:40 (quoting Isa. 6:10), and Isa. is also quoted in Acts 28:26 f. Whereas Matt. quotes the LXX, Mk. agrees with the Targum of Isa. and the Peshitta. Similarly Mk. concludes his account of the growth parables with the words: "With many such parables he spoke the word to them, as they were able to hear it; he did not speak to them without a parable, but privately to his own disciples he explained everything" (Mk. 4:33 f.; cf. Matt. 13:34 f. which cites Ps. 78:2 seeing in Jesus' teaching fulfilment of the saying: "I will open my mouth in parables, I will utter what has been hidden since the foundation of the world").

The idea that Mk. invented the messianic secret was argued by W. Wrede in Das Messiasgeheimnis in den Evangelien, 1901 (ET The Messianic Secret, 1971), and has exerted considerable influence on German scholarship. It has, however, been contested on the grounds that the theme of secrecy and the avoidance of publicity was intrinsic to the whole mission of Jesus (cf. J. D. G. Dunn, "The Messianic Secret in Mark", TB 21, 1970, 92–117; → Secret). Moreover, Jesus' teaching never handed out truth as it were on a plate. For the truth about God and man cannot be learnt directly as if it were a series of mere facts which involved no personal commitment. The parables are language-events which challenge a personal response. They constitute disclosure situations in which the listener becomes aware of his relationship with God through identifying himself with the people in the parable. In this sense the parabolic method is integral to Jesus' entire mission.

Jeremias agrees with T. W. Manson in seeing that the use in Mk. 4:12 of the Targum of Isa. 6:10 which was commonly used in the synagogue "creates a strong presumption in favour of its authenticity" (op. cit., 15; cf. T. W. Manson, The Teaching of Jesus, 1935², 77). He further holds that the word parable in this context means a riddle (op. cit., 16), and thus Mk. 4:11b must be translated: " 'But to those who are without all things are imparted in riddles,' i.e. they remain obscure for them" (op. cit., 16 f.). The conjunction hina (so that) reflects not only the purpose of Jesus but that of God, "in fact it almost amounts to an abbreviation of hina plerōthē, and is therefore to be translated 'in order that'; 'in the case of divine decisions purpose and fulfilment are identical' " (op. cit., 17; cf. Arndt, 378). The conjunction mēpote (lest) is taken by Jeremias to mean "unless", reflecting the Targum and contemporary rabbinic exegesis. The statement thus would mean: "To you has God given the secret of the Kingdom of God; but to those who are without everything is obscure, in order that they (as it is written) may 'see and yet not see, may hear and yet not understand, unless they turn and God will forgive them' " (ibid.). In view of this general statement about the way God works, Jeremias maintains that the logion is not concerned with the parables of Jesus but with his preaching in general. (For further discussion see C. E. B. Cranfield, op. cit., 152–58; and G. V. Jones, op. cit., 225–30, who gives a review of interpretations of this passage.)

8. Apart from the use of the word parabolē and the numerous instances of verbal parables in the Gospels, one may also speak of the parabolic actions of Jesus. Just as OT prophets sometimes performed symbolic acts which were in themselves a message from Yahweh to those with eyes to see it, so Jesus' actions may be construed as unspoken parables. Instances of such actions by the OT prophets include Hosea's marriage with the harlot Gomer (Hos. 1:2 ff.), Isaiah's nakedness (Isa. 20:2 ff.), Jeremiah's hiding of the waistcloth by the Euphrates (Jer. 13:1–11), his breaking of the earthen flask (Jer. 19), and purchase of a field (Jer. 32:7 ff.). Likewise, false prophets could perform symbolic acts, like the iron horns made by Zedekiah to persuade Jehoshaphat to fight at Ramoth-gilead (1 Ki. 22:11; 2 Chr. 18:10). In performing parabolic acts Jesus stood in the tradition of the OT prophets. But the acts which he performed "show that Jesus not only proclaimed the message of the parables, but that he lived it and embodied it in his own person. 'Jesus not only utters the message of the Kingdom of God, he himself is the message' " (J. Jeremias, op. cit., 229, quoting C. Maurer, Judaica, 4, 1948, 147).

Jesus' parabolic actions include his reception of outcasts (Lk. 15:1 f.; 19:5 f.) which corresponds to the parable of the great supper. He included them in his circle of disciples as the new Israel of God (Matt. 9:9 par. Mk. 2:14, Lk. 5:27). The Last Supper was itself a symbolic act (→ Lord's Supper), as were the healings (→ Heal; → Blind), the rejection of → fasting (Matt. 9:14–17 par. Mk. 2:18–22; Lk. 5:33–39), and the plucking of grain on the → sabbath (Matt. 12:1–8 par. Mk. 2:23–28; Lk. 6:1–5). The new age and the new Israel were signified by the bestowal of a → new → name on Peter, linking the → rock with the building of the eschatological → temple. The → number of the twelve disciples, recalling that of the twelve tribes of Israel, also signifies the new Israel, while the seventy disciples recalls the seventy elders of Israel (Lk. 10:1–12; cf. Exod. 24:1; Num. 11:16; and perhaps Exod. 15:27). Jesus' entry into Jerusalem (Matt. 21:1–9 par. Mk. 11:1–10, Lk. 19:28–40) and the cleansing of the temple (Matt. 21:12 f. par. Mk. 11:15ff., Lk. 19:45 f.; cf. Jn. 2:13–17) belong together, signifying Jesus' claims to lordship over Jerusalem, the temple and Israel. His mode of entry symbolized both kingship and humility (cf. Zech. 9:9; → Animal). His washing of the disciples' feet (Jn. 13:1 ff.) enacts the loving humility of the one who alone can make clean. Perhaps the weeping over Jerusalem has also a prophetic dimension (Matt. 23:37 ff. par. Lk. 13:34 f.). Jeremias sees a link between Jesus' action in writing in the sand in the pericope on the woman taken in adultery (Jn. 7:53 ff.) and Jer. 17:13 (op. cit., 228). The cursing of the fig tree (Matt. 21:18 f. par. Mk. 11:12 ff.; → Fruit, art. sykē) is a parabolic act of judgment on a nation which has failed to bear fruit.

9. The concept of allegory discussed above in 1 (g) differs somewhat from the allegorical method of interpreting Scripture, as it is often understood. According to the latter, Scripture should be interpreted to find hidden, spiritual meanings which are often quite different from the apparently intended or historical ones. This technique is found in pre-Christian literature, and was practised by Philo (c. 20 B.C. – c. A.D. 50) to interpret the Jewish law in terms of the Hellenistic philosophy of his day. It was taken over by the Christian Platonist theologians of Alexandria, Clement and Origen. The latter sought to follow a threefold method of interpretation, seeing in most passages a literal, moral and a spiritual meaning. Thus the story of the blind men at Jericho is not only literally true. According to the moral meaning, our eyes must be likewise opened by the Word of God and we must come out of our Jericho. According to the spiritual meaning, the two beggars represent Israel and Judah, whilst Jericho is the world (Matt. 20:29–34; cf. Origen, De prin. 4, 2. 45; Commentary on Matthew 16:9–11; 16:23; cf. R. P. C. Hanson, op.

cit., 235 f.). Similarly, Augustine saw a hidden significance in every aspect of the parable of the Good Samaritan: the man was Adam; Jerusalem, the heavenly city from whose blessedness Adam fell; Jericho, man's mortality; the thieves, the devil and his angels; the stripping of the clothes, man's former immortality; the priest and Levite, the priesthood and ministry of the OT which are ineffective to bring salvation; the Samaritan, the Lord Jesus Christ; the oil, the comfort of good hope; the wine, the exhortation to work with a fervent spirit; the beast, the flesh; the inn, the church; the morrow, the period after the resurrection; the innkeeper, the apostle Paul; the supererogatory payment, either the council of celibacy or Paul's desire not to burden the church with the cost of his upkeep (Quaestiones Evangeliorum, 2, 19; cf. C. H. Dodd, The Parables of the Kingdom, 1936³, 11 f.).

In these instances of allegorical interpretation it is clear that these spiritual meanings are read into a story in a way alien to the original intention of the story. It is also apparent that allegory in this sense is used in a sense different from that in 1 (g) above, where the original story is itself a continuous metaphor which already includes in itself the intention of having more than one point. The question arises, however, whether allegory in the sense of Origen and Augustine occurs in the NT. In 1 Cor. 9:9 Paul appeals to Deut. 25:4 in support of his contention that apostles have the right to be kept by the church: "For it is written in the law of Moses, 'You shall not muzzle an ox when it is treading out the grain.' Is it for oxen that God is concerned? Does he not speak entirely for our sake? It was written for our sake, because the plowman should plow in hope and the thresher should thresh in hope of a share in the flock" (cf. also 1 Tim. 5:18). It would seem that in his handling of the OT Paul follows a method of interpretation exemplified at Qumran of "quotation exposition, a midrash pesher which drew from the text the meaning originally planted there by the Holy Spirit and expressed that meaning in the most appropriate words and phrases known to him" (E. E. Ellis, "A Note on Pauline Hermeneutics", NTS 2, 1955–56, 131 f.). But it should be noted that in this instance there is a common principle underlying the original OT pronouncement and the application which Paul draws, and which can be formulated in terms of principle: those who labour on anything (whether man or beast) have the right to sustenance in view of the fruits of their labour. This applies to the quotation from Deut. 25:4 and to all the other illustrations that Paul adduces in support of the point.

This method of interpretation applies to other instances of alleged allegorical exegesis in Paul: 1 Cor. 5:6 ff. (→ Leaven; → Feast); 1 Cor. 10:4 (→ Eat, art. pinō; → Rock); Gal. 3:16 (→ Abraham); Gal. 4:21–31 (→ Abraham, art. Hagar; → Jerusalem). The vb. allēgoreō occurs only at Gal. 4:24 in a participial form which is perhaps best rendered: "which things are allegorical [hatina estin allēgoroumena]: for these women are two covenants. One is from Mount Sinai, bearing [children] for slavery; she is Hagar." Paul goes on to compare Mount Sinai with the present Jerusalem, symbolizing bondage to the law, which contrasts with the Jerusalem which is above which is free and is "our mother" (Gal. 4:26). In discussing whether this passage should be regarded as an allegory or a type, A. T. Hanson draws the following distinction: "An allegory is an explanation of the text that replaces the literal sense and has a purely arbitrary connection with it. In an allegory each detail corresponds to some idea or person in the complex which it expresses. A type is a pattern or set of circumstances which reproduces beforehand that set of circumstances of which it is a type" (Studies in Paul's Technique and Theology, 1974, 94). He goes on to restate Paul's contrast in the following basic terms:

"Hagar the slave bears a son who persecutes the son of Sarah, the free woman. She and her son are cast out by divine command."	"The unbelieving Jews, enslaved to the Torah, persecute believing Christians, who are free in Christ. The unbelieving Jews are rejected by God."

Hanson concludes that the "allegory" is "really an elaborate piece of typology" (op. cit., 95). It may be added that Paul's use of the vb. allēgoreō should in any case not be interpreted in the light of later usage which was bound up with philosophical ideas alien to Paul. (On Paul's exegesis see further E. E. Ellis, Paul's Use of the Old Testament, 1955; A. T. Hanson, Jesus Christ in the Old Testament, 1965; and "Paul's Interpretation of Scripture", "Paul's Technique of Interpretation", and "Paul as Exegete and Theologian", in Studies in Paul's Technique and Theology, 1974, 136–68, 169–200, 201–224.)

10. The riddle or dark saying (ainigma) is not a NT literary form. The word occurs in Philo, Josephus (Ap. 1, 114 f.), and Sib. 3, 812, but only at 1 Cor. 13:12 in the NT. In the context Paul is contrasting → knowledge with faith, hope and love (v. 13), and points out that blepomen gar arti di' esoptrou en ainigmati (lit. "For now we look through a glass in a riddle"). Looking glasses were made at Corinth, and the fact that they do not give a direct vision of reality underlines Paul's point about the limitations of knowledge. The preposition dia (through) is to be explained by the fact that the image in the mirror appears to lie on the further side (C. K. Barrett, A Commentary on the First Epistle to the Corinthians, BNTC, 1968, 307), and perhaps also by the fact that it is through the medium of phenomena that we apprehend reality. Barrett also points out that the image of the mirror was used by Philo to suggest that man can have a clear and full knowledge of God (Abr., 153), and that the number seven provides a mirror reflecting the way that God orders the universe (Decal. 105). 2 Cor. 3:18 uses the ptc. katoptrizontes, "beholding as in a mirror". With regard to the phrase en ainigmati, Barrett thinks that it reflects Num. 12:8, where God says that he will speak to Moses face to face (v. 12) and not di' ainigmatōn, "through riddles", i.e. obscurely. But the expression would be understandable to members of the Corinthian church not versed in the OT. Apollo was known for delivering obscure riddles (cf. the complaint of the chorus of Cassandra that she spoke in riddles [ex ainigmatōn], Aesch., Ag. 1112). For Paul what we apprehend in the present life is like a riddle. It is obscure and enigmatic. It contrasts with knowledge in the future state, when we shall see face to face and know even as we are already known (cf. Matt. 5:8). C. Brown παροιμία παροιμία (paroimia), proverb, wise saying; dark saying, riddle.

CL The noun paroimia occurs from Aeschylus, Ag. 264 on; cf. Sophocles, Aj. 664; Plato, Rep. 1, 329). Etymologically it is derived from para, along, and oimē path, way, the plot of a story or song, saga, song. The paroimia "states an experienced truth of popular wisdom in a short and pointed form" (F. Hauck, TDNT V 854). As such, it expresses general timeless truth. Its popular and traditional form distinguish it from the aphorism and the maxim (gnōmē; → Knowledge, art. ginōskō). But in Aristotle, Rhet. 2, 21, 1395, 17, the borderline is fluid. The lack of framework distinguishes it from the apophthegm (a saying set in a particular setting). Aristotle counted it with metaphor because of its vivid imagery (Rhet. 2, 11, 1413, 14). Others, because of the frequent references to animals and plants, with fable (Quintilian, Institutio Oratoria, 5, 11, 21). Collections of proverbs were made by Aristotle, Clearchus, Zenobius and Diogenian.

OT In the LXX paroimia only occurs 7 times, including the title of the Book of Proverbs (1:1; 25:1 cf. also 26:7) and in Sir. (6:35; 8:8; 18:29; 39:3; 47:17). In Prov. 1:1; 25:1 it translates Heb. māšāl; elsewhere it occurs in the non-canonical Sir. and occasionally translates māšāl. It is also found in variant translations in other books. In Prov. and Sir. it is virtually a technical term for instruction by the wise (→ parabolē OT 2). In Philo (Abr. 235; Vit. Mos. 1, 156; 2, 29) it occurs with the meaning proverb. Proverbs were very popular among the Rabbis. They were introduced by such clauses as, "Thus people say . . ." and "It is said in the proverb. . . ."

NT 1. The logia of Jesus are often designated in their entirety as sayings. The Gospel of Thomas, P. Oxy. 1, 654 f., 840, and the hypothetical collection of logia (Q) thought to be behind Matt. and Lk. are collections of sayings. Sayings in the sense of the instruction of the wise are to be found among the logia of Jesus (e.g. Mk. 9:50 par. Lk. 14:34; cf. Matt. 5:13; Matt. 5:15 par. Lk. 11:33; 6:19 par. Lk. 12:33; Matt. 6:22 f. par. Lk. 11:34 f.). But they also occur in the epistles (e.g. Rom. 12:20 quoting Prov. 25:21 f.; Heb. 12:5 f. quoting Prov. 3:11 f; Jas. 4:6 quoting Prov. 3:34; 2 Pet. 2:22 quoting Prov. 26:11; 1 Cor. 15:33 with a quotation from Menander's lost comedy Thais, "Bad company ruins good morals" [cf. C. K. Barrett, A Commentary on the First Epistle to the Corinthians, BNTC, 1968, 367]). In the logia of Jesus we find also proverbs which may be taken from Rab. teaching (e.g. Matt. 9:13 par. Mk. 2:17, Lk. 5:31; 4:22 par. Lk. 18:17; Matt. 13:57 par. Mk. 6:4; Matt. 6:21 par. Lk. 13:34; Matt. 6:34; Matt. 7:4 par. Lk. 6:42; Matt. 7:18 par. Lk. 6:43; Matt. 15:14 par. Lk. 6:39; Matt. 24:28 par. Lk. 17:37; Lk. 4:23). It may be that these are sometimes new creations by Jesus, which later became proverbs. In the epistles proverbs occur (e.g. Jas. 3:5, 12). In 2 Pet. 2:22 there is a wise saying and a proverb. Both are intended to demonstrate the contemptible conduct of false teachers.

It is striking that, although sayings that can be classified as proverbs occur in many places in the NT, only in few places (Jn. 10:6; 16:25, 29; 2 Pet. 2:22) are proverbs and sayings designated by the word paroimia. The instances in Jn. occupy an exceptional position.

2. It is only in Jn., in fact, that paroimia occurs (10:6; 16:25, 29) in the sense of dark saying, or riddle. This meaning comes about because of the Heb. equivalent māšāl and the consequent approximation to → parabolē. In retrospect Jesus' discourse on the → shepherd (10:6) and, indeed, his discourses in general (16:25) are characterized as dark sayings. The dark saying is contrasted with the later, clear revelatory saying (16:25, 29). This can be understood chronologically; the earthly Jesus spoke in riddles, the exalted Jesus speaks openly. But this interpretation contains some difficulties. One cannot really characterize Jesus' words in Jn. as intellectually difficult to understand, nor can one distinguish between dark and clear sayings. Dark here probably does not mean intellectually difficult. The darkness of the words does not reside in the words but in the hearer. Therefore the words are dark and clear simultaneously. The words remain dark so long as the hearer tries to understand them intellectually. "It is possible to understand the words of Jesus only in the reality of the believing existence. Before that they are incomprehensible – not in the sense of being difficult to grasp intellectually, but because intellectual comprehension is not enough. It is precisely this that the disciples must realize, namely that the commitment of one's whole existence is required to understand these words. They will be comprehensible in the new (i.e. eschatological) existence: erchetai hōra hote ktl. ['the hour comes when etc.']: only then will Jesus speak to them parrhēsia [openly]" (R. Bultmann, The Gospel of John, 1971, 587). C. H. Peisker

→ Kingdom, → Secret, → Teach, → Wisdom, → Word

On parable:
(a). J. A. Baird, "A Pragmatic Approach to Parable Exegesis", JBL 76, 1957, 201–7; M. Black, "The Parables as Allegory", BJRL 42, 1959–60, 273–87; E. C. Blackman, "New Methods of Parable Interpretation", Canadian Journal of Theology 15, 1969, 3–13; G. Bornkamm, G. Barth, H.-J. Held, Tradition and Interpretation in Matthew, 1963; F. H. Borsch, God's Parable, 1975; R. E. Brown, "Parable and Allegory Reconsidered", in New Testament Essays, 1965, 254–64; F. F. Bruce, "Parable", ZPEB IV 590–97; and " 'Unwritten' Sayings and Apocryphal Gospels", and "The Gospel of Thomas", in Jesus and Christian Origins Outside the New Testament, 1974, 82–109, 110–58; R. Bultmann, The History of the Synoptic Tradition, 1968²; T. A. Burkill, "The Injunctions to Silence in St. Mark's Gospel", TZ 12, 1956, 585–604; "Concerning St. Mark's Conception of Secrecy", Hibbert Journal 55, 1956–57, 150–58; and Mysterious Revelation – An Examination of the Philosophy of St. Mark's Gospel, 1963; F. C. Burkitt, "The Parable of the Ten Virgins", JTS 30, 1929, 267–70; C. J. Cadoux, The Parables of Jesus: Their Art and Use, 1931; C. H. Cave, "The Parables and the Scriptures", NTS 11, 1964–65, 374–87; J. D. Crossan, In Parables: The Challenge of the Historical Jesus, 1973; "The Servant Parables of Jesus" and "Parable and Example in the Teaching of Jesus", Semeia 1, 1974, 17–104; "Parables as Religious and Poetic Experience", JR 53, 1973, 330–58; and "A Basic Bibliography for Parables Research", Semeia 1, 1974, 236–74; N. A. Dahl, "The Parables of Growth", StTh 5, 1951, 132–65; J. D. M. Derrett, Law in the New Testament, 1970; C. H. Dodd, The Parables of the Kingdom, 1936³; and Historical Tradition in the Fourth Gospel, 1963, 366–88; A. Feldmann, The Parables and Similes of the Rabbis, 1927²; J. A. Findlay, Jesus and his Parables, 1950; E. Fuchs, Studies of the Historical Jesus, SBT 42, 1964; and "The New Testament and the Hermeneutical Problem" in J. M. Robinson and J. B. Cobb, eds., New Frontiers in Theology, II, The New Hermeneutic, 1964, 111–45, 232–43; R. W. Funk, Language, Hermeneutic and Word of God, 1966, 133–62; B. Gerhardsson, The Good Samaritan – The Good Shepherd?, Coniectanea Neotestamentica, 16, 1958; H. L. Goudge, "The Parable of the Ten Virgins", JTS 30, 1928–29, 399–401; M. D. Goulder, "Characteristics of the Parables in the Several Gospels", JTS New Series 19, 1968, 51–69; and Midrash and Lection in Matthew, 1974; R. M. Grant and D. N. Freedman, The Secret Sayings of Jesus, 1960; W. J. Harrington, "The Parables in Recent Study (1960–1971)", Biblical Theology Bulletin 2, 1972, 219–41; F. Hauck, parabolē, TDNT V 744–61; A. S. Herbert, "The 'Parable' (māšāl) in the Old Testament", SJT 7, 1954, 180–196; A. M. Hunter, Interpreting the Parables, 1960; J. Jeremias, The Parables of Jesus, 1963²; A. R. Johnson, māšāl, VT Supplement 3, 1955, 162 ff.; G. V. Jones, The Art and Truth of the Parables, 1964; J. D. Kingsbury, The Parables of Jesus in Matthew 13, 1969; "Major Trends in Parable Interpretation", Concordia Theological Monthly 42, 1971, 579–96; "The Parables of Jesus in Current Research", Dialog 11, 1972, 101–7; and "Ernst Fuchs' Interpretation of the Parables", Lutheran Quarterly 22, 1970, 380–95; E. M. Kredel, "Parable", EBT II 625–29; J. Krengel, "Marshal", The Jewish Universal Encyclopedia, 1939 ff., VII, 394 ff.; E. Linnemann, Parables of Jesus: Introduction and Exposition, 1966; C. E. Macartney, The Parables of the Old Testament, 1955²; T. W. Manson, The Teaching of Jesus: Studies of its Form and Content, 1935²; I. H. Marshall, Eschatology and the Parables, 1963; B. M. Metzger, ed. Index to Periodical Literature on Christ and the Gospels, 1966, 165–70 (for journal articles on the parables up to 1961); H. W. Montefiore, "A Comparison of the Parables of the Gospel according to Thomas and of the Synoptic Gospels", NTS 7, 1960–61, 220–48 (reprinted in H. W. Montefiore and H. E. W. Turner, Thomas and the Evangelists, 1962, 40–78; L. Mowry, "Parable", IDB III 649–54; W. O. E. Oesterley, The Gospel Parables in the Light of their Jewish Background, 1936; R. Otto, The Kingdom of God and the Son of Man, 1943²; N. Perrin, "The Parables of Jesus as Parables, as Metaphors, and as Aesthetic Objects: A Review Article", JR 47, 1967, 340–47; "The Modern Interpretation of the Parables of Jesus and the Problem of Hermeneutics", Interpretation 25, 1971, 131–48; "Historical Criticism, Literary Criticism and Hermeneutics in the Interpretation of the Parables of Jesus and the Gospel of Mark Today", JR 52, 1972, 361–75; and Jesus and the Language of the Kingdom: Symbol and Metaphor in New Testament Interpretation, 1976; H. Riesenfeld, "The Parables in the Synoptic and Johannine Traditions", in The Gospel Tradition, 1970, 139–70; D. W. B. Robinson, "The Use of Parabolē in the Synoptic Gospels", EQ 21, 1949, 93–108; J. A. T. Robinson, "The Parable of the Shepherd (John 10.1–5)", and "The 'Parable' of the Sheep and the Goats", Twelve New Testament Studies, SBT 34, 1962, 67–75 and 76–93; J. M. Robinson, "Jesus' Parables as God Happening", in F. T. Trotter, ed., Jesus and the Historian: Written in Honor of Ernest Cadman Colwell, 1968, 134–50; B. T. D. Smith, The Parables of the Synoptic Gospels, 1937; C. W. F. Smith, The Jesus of the Parables, 1948; R. A. Stewart, "The Parable Form in the Old Testament and the Rabbinic Literature", EQ 36, 1964, 133–47; T. Stoneburner, ed., Parable, Myth and Language, 1968; S. Teselle, Speaking in Parables: A Study in Metaphor and Theology, 1975; H. Thielicke, The Waiting Father: Sermons on the Parables of Jesus, 1960; A. C. Thiselton, "The Parables as Language-Event: Some Comments on Fuchs's Hermeneutics in the Light of Linguistic Philosophy" SJT 23, 1970, 437–68; D. O. Via, Jr., The Parables: Their Literary and Existential Dimension, 1967; and "Parable and Example Story: A Literary-Existentialist Approach", Semeia 1, 1974, 105–33; and Kerygma and Comedy in the New Testament, 1974; J. J. Vincent, "The Parables of Jesus as Self-Revelation", StudEv (TU 73), 79–99; R. S. Wallace, Many Things in Parables, 1955; D. Wenham, "The Synoptic Problem Revisited: Some New Suggestions about the Composition of Mark 4:1–34;" TB 23, 1972, 3–38; A. N. Wilder, "Eschatology and the Speech-Modes of the Gospel", in E. Dinkler, ed., Zeit und Geschichte. Dankesgabe an Rudolf Bultmann zum 80. Geburtstag, 1964, 19–30; M. F. Wiles, "Early Exegesis of the Parables", SJT 11, 1958, 287–301.

(b). D. Buzy, Les Paraboles, 1948¹⁰; G. H. Dalman, "Viererlei Acker", Palästina-Jahrbuch 22, 1926, 120–32; G. Delling, "Das Gleichnis vom gottlosen Richter", ZNW 53, 1962, 1–25; J. Dupont, "Le Chapître des Paraboles", Nouvelle Revue Théologique 89, 1967, 800–20; G. Eichholz, "Das Gleichnis als Spiel", EvTh 21, 1961, 309–26 (reprinted in Tradition und Interpretation, ThB 29, 1965, 57 ff.); Jesus Christus und der Nächste, BSt 9, no date; and Einführung in die Gleichnisse, BSt 37, 1963; O. Eissfeldt, Der Maschal im Alten Testament, BZAW 24, 1913; P. Fiebig, Die Gleichnisreden Jesu im Lichte der rabbinischen Gleichnisse des neutestamentlichen Zeitalters, 1912; Der Erzählungsstil der Evangelien, Untersuchungen zum Neuen Testament 11, 1925; G. Fohrer, E. L. Dietrich, N. A. Dahl, "Gleichnis und Parabel II", *RGG*³ II 1615 ff. W. Förster, "Das Gleichnis von der anvertrauten Pfunden", in Verbum Dei Manet in Aeternum, Festschrift für O. Schmitz, 1953, 37–56; K. Frör, Biblische Hermeneutik, 1961; Zum hermeneutischen Problem in der Theologie, 1959; Hermeneutik, 1970⁴; O. Glombitza, "Der Perlenkaufmann", NTS 7, 1960–61, 153–61; "Das grosse Abendmahl. Lukas 14:12–24; NovT 5, 1962, 10–16; M. de Goedt, "L'Explication de la Parabole de l'Ivraie", RB 66, 1959, 32–54; H. Gollwitzer, Das Gleichnis vom barmherzigen Samariter, BSt 34, 1962; H. Greeven, "Wer unter euch . . .?", Wort und Dienst, Neue Folge, 3, 1952, 86–101; H. Gressmann, Vom reichen Mann und armen Lazarus, Abhandlungen der Preussischen Akademie der Wissenschaften, philosophisch-historische Klasse 7, 1918; T. Guttmann, Das Maschal-Gleichnis in tannaitischer Zeit, Dissertation Frankfurt, 1929; V. Hasler, "Die königliche Hochzeit. Matt. 22:1–14", ThZ 18, 1962, 25–35; M. Harmaniuk, Les Paraboles Évangéliques, 1947; L. Hick, "Zum Verständnis des neutestamentlichen Parabelbegriffes", BuK 1, 1954, 4–17; A. Jolles, Einfache Formen, 1956²; A. Jülicher, Die Gleichnisreden Jesu, I–II, 1910²; H. Kahlefeld, Gleichnisse und Lehrstücke im Evangelium, 1963; W. G. Kümmel, "Das Gleichnis von den bösen Weingärtnern (Mk. 12, 1–9)", Aux Sources de la Tradition Chrétienne, Mélanges offerts à M. Goguel 1950, 120–131 (reprinted in Heilsgeschehen und Geschichte, 1965, 207–17); E. Linnemann, "Uberlegungen zur Parabel vom grossen Abendmahl (Lukas 14, 15–24/Matt. 22, 2–14)", ZNW 51, 1970, 246–55; H. Ljungvik, "Zur Erklärung einer Lukasstelle. Lukas XVIII, 7", NTS 10, 1963–64, 289–94; E. Lohse, "Die Gottesherrschaft in den Gleichnissen Jesu", EvTh 18, 1958, 145–57; I. K. Madsen, Die Parabeln der Evangelien und die heutige Psychologie, 1936; W. Marxsen, "Redaktionsgeschichtliche Erklärung der sogenannten Parabeltheorie des Markus", ZTK 52, 1955, 255–71; M. Meinertz, Die Gleichnisse Jesu, 1948⁴; "Die Tragweite des Gleichnisses von den zehn Jungfrauen", Synoptische Studien (presented to A. Wikenhauser), 1954, 94–106; and "Zum Verständnis der Gleichnisse Jesu", Das Heilige Land 86, 1954, 41–47; W. Michaelis, Das hochzeitliche Kleid, 1939; and Die Gleichnisse Jesu, 1956³; W. Monselewski, Der barmherzige Samariter, Beiträge zur Geschichte der biblischen Exegese 5, 1967; R. Morgenthaler, "Formgeschichte und Gleichnisauslegung", ThZ 6, 1950, 1–16; and Kommendes Reich, 1952 (cf. H. Conzelmann, "R. Morgenthaler, Kommendes Reich", ThZ 9, 1953, 306 f.); F. Mussner, "Gleichnisauslegung und Heilsgeschichte. Dargetan am Gleichnis von der selbstwachsenden Saat (Mk. 4, 26–29)", Trierer Theologische Zeitschrift 64, 1955, 257–66; and Die Botschaft der Gleichnisse Jesu, 1961; C. H. Peisker, "Das Alte Testament – Gabe und Aufgabe", in Kleine Predigttypologie, II, 1965; "Das Gleichnis vom verlorenen Schaf und vom verlorenen Groschen", Evangelischer Erzieher, 1967, 58 ff.; and "Konsekutives hina in Mark. 4, 12", ZNW 59, 1, 1968; E. Percy, Die Botschaft Jesu. Eine traditionskritische und exegetische Untersuchung, Lunds Universitets Årsskrift Neue Folge, Avd. I, 49, 5, 1953; J. Piort, Paraboles et Allégories Évangéliques, 1949; G. Schille, "Gleichnis", BHHW I 577 ff.; J. Schniewind, "Das Gleichnis vom verlorenen Sohn", Die Freunde der Busse, 1956, 34–87; H. Schürmann, "Das Thomasevangelium und das lukanische Sondergut", BZ Neue Folge⁷, 1963, 236–60; G. Stählin, "Die Gleichnishandlungen Jesu", in Kosmos und Ekklesia, Festschrift für W. Stählin, 1953, 9–22; W. Stählin, Symbolen. Vom gleichnishaften Denken, 1958; H. Weinel, Die Gleichnisse Jesu, 1929⁵; H. Zimmermann, "Die Botschaft der Gleichnisse Jesu", Bild und Leben 2, 1961, 92 ff.

See also under paroimia for further literature on the Gospel of Thomas.

On allegory, typology and ainigma:
(a). F. Büchsel, allēgoreō, TDNT I 260–63; C. H. Dodd, According to the Scriptures, 1952; A. T. Hanson, Jesus Christ in the Old Testament, 1965; and Studies in Paul's Technique and Theology, 1974; R. P. C. Hanson, Allegory and Event: A Study of the Sources and Significance of Origen's Interpretation of Scripture, 1959; G. Kittel, ainigma, TDNT I 178 ff.; G. W. H. Lampe and K. Woollcombe, Essays on Typology, 1957; H. E. W. Turner, The Pattern of Christian Truth, 1954.
(b). L. Goppelt, Typos, 1939; and "Allegorie", *RGG*³ I 239 f.
On paroimia, proverbs, and sayings:
(a). J. Doresse, Secret Books of the Egyptian Gnostics, 1959; A. Guillaumont, H.-C. Puech, G. Quispel, W. Till and Yassah 'Abd al Masîh The Gospel according to Thomas, Coptic Text Established and Translated, 1959; F. Hauck, paroimia, TDNT V 854 f.; A. J. B. Higgins, "Non-Gnostic Sayings in the Gospel of Thomas", NovT 4, 1960, 292–306; D. Kidner, The Proverbs: An Introduction and Commentary, TC, 1964; T. W. Manson, The Sayings of Jesus, As Recorded in the Gospels according to St. Matthew and St. Luke arranged with Introduction and Commentary, 1949; R. B. Y. Scott, Proverbs. Ecclesiastes, Anchor Bible, 1965; R. N. Whybray, Wisdom in Proverbs, SBT 45, 1965; R. McL. Wilson, Studies in the Gospel of Thomas, 1960.
(b). F. Baumgartner, Israelitische und altorientalische Weisheit, 1933; E. Haenchen, Die Botschaft des Thomas-Evangeliums, 1961; C. A. Keller, "Sprichwort, Spruch", BHHW IIII 1837 f.; U. Skladny, Die ältesten Spruchsammlungen, 1962; C. Westermann, "Rätsel", BHHW III 1552 f.

Paradise

παράδεισος — παράδεισος (paradeisos), garden, park, paradise.

CL 1. paradeisos is a loan-word from the Middle Iranian pardez (Avestan pairidaêza, an encircling wall, circular enclosure, garden), and means a garden, park or paradise. Xen. uses the word of the public gardens of the Persian kings and nobles (Anab. 1, 2, 7; 2, 4, 14; Cyr. 1, 3, 14; Hell. 4, 1, 15).

2. Myths from many nations speak of a land or a place of blessedness in primeval times or (in the present) on the edge of the known world, where gods live and whither heroes or particularly distinguished mortals were carried away or went after death. Within the world of the OT there were the paradise myths of the Mesopotamian or Iranian culture, and also the conceptions of the Phoenicians (cf. Ezek. 28:13 ff.). In Greece people were aquainted with the picture of the Elysian fields and the Isles of the Blessed.

OT In the LXX the word is found 47 times, predominantly as trans. of Heb. gan or gannâh, a garden. Of these passages 13 belong to Gen. 2 and 3, 4 to Ezek., and 3 to Isa. In each case the reference is to the garden of God, either as the Yahwistic narrative describes it or as it is expected to be again. In Neh. 2:8; Eccl. 2:5; Cant. 4:13 paradeisos is a translation of the loan-word pardēs deriving from the Iranian, meaning orchard, forest. In Isa. 51:3 it renders Heb. 'ēḏen.

1. A continuous or coherent paradise-myth cannot be established in the OT. At least, as far as anything of the sort was also known in Israel, it was excluded under the influence of Yahwistic faith, except for a few individual motifs which appear sporadically here and there – the tree of life, the tree of knowledge, the water of life (Gen. 2 and 3; 13:10; Ezek. 28:13 ff.; 31:8 f.; Job 15:7 f.). It is significant that there is no unified answer to the question of place. According to Gen. 2:8, paradise, at the beginning of the creation, lay in the East; according to Gen. 2:10–14, it was possibly in the North. It is conceived of as a lovely orchard in which the tree of → life and the tree of → knowledge stood. Here God walked, and has handed over the garden to men for cultivation. In consequence of the first → sin the first humans were driven out of it. Return to it is impossible since the → cherub stands in front of it guarding all access.

2. In later Judaism there were many varied speculations about the paradise of Gen. 2 and 3. It was assumed that it was created before time, or on the third day of creation, and that in consequence of Adam's sin it was removed and hidden either at the extreme edges of the earth, on a high mountain or in heaven. It is located in the third → heaven (Ap. Mos. 37:5 and Sl.Enoch 8:1).

With the infiltration of the Gk. doctrine of the immortality of the soul paradise becomes the dwelling-place of the righteous during the intermediate state. In time, pious imagination increasingly embellished the conception of paradise. It had walls and gates and angels to watch over it. Light shone on the righteous. The tree of life was there, and fragrant streams flowed through it.

In the renewed creation paradise will again emerge from its concealment. God or the messiah will bring it, as the dwelling-place of the righteous and blessed, to the renewed earth, to Palestine, in the neighbourhood of Jerusalem. Taught by God himself, the righteous will study the Torah in paradise, and God will prepare for them the messianic meal. Above all, they may then enjoy the → fruit of the tree of life.

NT 1. In the NT the word only occurs in 3 places.

(a) In Lk. 23:43 it is no doubt dependent on contemporary Jewish conceptions, and refers to the at present hidden and intermediate abode of the righteous. Jesus promises the robber fellowship with him already "today" in paradise, and thus allows him to share in forgiveness and blessedness. The intermediate state thus becomes essentially fellowship with Christ (cf. Acts. 7:58; 2 Cor. 5:8; Phil. 1:23). It may be noted, however, that E. E. Ellis offers a somewhat different interpretation. According to the late Jewish writing Test.Lev. 18:10, the messiah was expected to "open the gates of paradise". "Luke declares that in his death and resurrection Jesus opened the gates of Paradise and was exalted there with his 'body' " (The Gospel of Luke, New Century Bible, 1966, 269; cf. the same author's "Present and Future Eschatology in Luke", NTS 12, 1965–66, 27–41).

(b) In 2 Cor. 12:4 Paul speaks of an experience of the → Spirit in which he was caught up into paradise (at present hidden), and there heard words "which man may not utter." The statement is parallel to what he says in v. 2; "I know a man in Christ who fourteen years ago was caught up to the third heaven – whether in the body or out of the body I do not know, God knows." The context concerns the → boasts of the Corinthians. Paul counters this by saying: "If I must boast, I will boast of the things that show my weakness" (2 Cor. 11:30). He then relates (in the third person) this experience and declares: "On behalf of this man I will boast, but on my own behalf I will not boast, except of my weaknesses" (12:5). He concludes the argument by telling of his thorn in the flesh which God gave him to prevent him from being too elated (→ Fruit, art. skolops). Despite his persistent prayer for its removal, God did not remove it, but said to him: "My grace is sufficient for you, for my power is made perfect in weakness." From this Paul draws the conclusion: "I will all the more gladly boast of my weaknesses, that the power of Christ may rest upon me. For the sake of Christ, then, I am content with weaknesses, insults, hardships, persecutions, and calamities; for when I am weak, then I am strong" (12:9 f.).

For a full discussion of what Paul meant by "the third heaven" and paradise see C. K. Barrett, A Commentary on the Second Epistle to the Corinthians, BNTC, 1973, 308 ff. The reference to the experience fourteen years previously underlines the fact that Paul had such an experience long before the foundation of the Corinthian church. Barrett does not think that it refers to the Damascus road experience, for Paul did not regard this as a vision. To Philo contact with heaven meant being out of the body, and he held that Moses had such an experience (Som. 1, 36; cf. Josephus, War 7, 349). Paul's insistence that he does not know whether it was in or out of the body contrasts with current and gnostic views of spirituality. "The experience described in our passage may be thought of as an anticipation of the final transference of believers to heaven, or Paradise" (op. cit., 309). Barrett sees here affinities between mysticism and apocalyptic, for apocalyptists describe the future on the basis of insight granted them in the present into what is already in heaven (ibid.; cf. C. K. Barrett, "New Testament Eschatology", SJT 6, 1953, 138 f.). He notes parallels in various fields. Eth.Enoch 39:3 f.; 52:1; Sl.Enoch 7; 8, 11; 18; 3 Bar. 2:2 describe visits to numerous heavens. In rabbinic writing Hagigah 14b mentions four men who entered paradise. But already in Plato's Republic the Myth of Er tell show the soul of Er who had been slain in battle visits the place of judgment and returns with a report to the rest of mankind (10, 614–21). Philo speaks of ecstatic experiences both as the descent of a divine influence coming upon him (Migr.Abr. 34 f.) and as a heavenly ascent (Spec.Leg. 3, 1 f.).

Ancient cosmology pictured three, five, seven, ten and various numbers of heavens, though three was a commonly accepted number (SB III 531 ff.). Paul's use of either this term or that of paradise gives no clear indication of his cosmological views. He may be doing no more than using a commonly accepted image to suggest what by his own account is ineffable (cf. v. 4), though possibly the number three may imply perfection (→ Number, art. treis). Sl.Enoch 8 placed the third heaven in paradise, and Apc.Mos. 37:5 pictures God commanding Michael to lift Adam up into paradise, the third heaven, and leave him there until the day of judgment.

The idea of hearing unutterable (arrhēta) words is found in the mystery religions (cf. Apuleius, Metamorphoses 11, 23). But Barrett thinks that Paul was not dependent on them here (op. cit., 311). Such language is found in Philo (Leg.All. 2, 57; Det.Pot.Ins. 175), and the notion of secret revelation was also current in rabbinic Judaism (J. Jeremias, Jerusalem in the Time of Jesus, 1969, 237–41). The idea of a sealed revelation is found already in the OT (Isa. 8:16; Dan. 12:4; cf. Sl.Enoch 17; Rev. 14:3). In all this Paul is using contemporary images of the transcendent world to describe an ecstatic experience which he himself has had and which was evidently far more impressive than anything of which his opponents could boast. But this was something for his own private, personal edification, which would not have come out but for the boasting at Corinth. What the Christian should boast of is his weaknesses, that God may be glorified.

(c) In Rev. 2:7 the Spirit promises to the church of Ephesus: "To him who conquers I will grant to eat of the tree of life, which is in the paradise of God." The passage may be compared with Test.Lev. 18:11; Eth.Enoch 24:4; 25:4 f. which suggests that as early as the 2nd century B.C. the tree of life was thought of in connection with the temple at Jerusalem (cf. R. H. Charles, The Revelation of St. John, ICC, I, 1920, 54 f.). The thought takes up that of Gen. 3, where after eating of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, man is barred from the tree of life. Those who overcome the trials and temptations of this world (in particular the opposition of the → Nicolaitans) are promised not only restoration of what → Adam lost but access to life in a way which Adam never had. Rev. 22:1 f., 14 gives a final vision of the tree of life in its final vision of paradise (though it does not use the word) in terms of the new → Jerusalem: "Then he showed me the river of the water of life, bright as crystal, flowing from the throne of God and of the Lamb through the middle of the street of the city; also on either side of the river, the tree of life with its twelve kinds of fruit, yielding its fruit each month; and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations. . . . Blessed are those who wash their robes, that they may have the right to the tree of life and that they may enter the city by the gates."

2. In the further course of church history many extra-biblical motifs, pictures and ideas were absorbed into the conception of paradise, in order to paint the state of the blessed after death in bright colours. The point of contrast, on the one hand, was Jesus' word to the robber (Lk. 23:42), which was generalized and referred to every believer, although beyond the promised fellowship with Christ (see above 1) there is virtually no biblical motivation, least of all in the detailed descriptions of paradise. The speculations in the church concerning paradise and the conceptions of popular piety are also linked with the fact that the doctrine of the immortality of the soul came in to take the place of NT eschatology with its hope of the → resurrection of the dead and the new creation (Rev. 21 f.), so that the soul receives judgment after death and attains to paradise now thought of as other-worldly, whereas sinners go to → hell. In this, the statements of Rev. 21 f. are also used to describe → heaven and paradise. H. Bietenhard, C. Brown

→ Adam, → Ecstasy, → Fall, → Heaven, → Hell

(a). C. K. Barrett, A Commentary on the Second Epistle to the Corinthians, BNTC, 1973, 308 ff.; E. E. Ellis, The Gospel of Luke, New Century Bible, 1966, 268 f.; and "Present and Future Eschatology in Luke", NTS 12, 1965–66, 27–41; L. F. Hartmann, "Sin in Paradise", CBQ 20, 1958, 26–40; F. Hvidberg, "The Canaanite Background of Genesis I–III", VT 10, 1960, 285–94; J. Jeremias, paradeisos, TDNT V 765–73; I. Lewy, "The Two Strata in the Eden Story", Hebrew Union College Annual 27, 1956, 93–99; H. K. McArthur, "Paradise", IDB III 655 f.; J. Scharbert and J. Michl, "Paradise", EBT II 629–33.

(b). J. B. Bauer, Die biblische Urgeschichte, 1964²; J. Begrich, "Die Paradieserzählung", ZAW 50, 1932, 33–116; H. Bietenhard, Die himmlische Welt im Urchristentum und Spätjudentum, 1951, 161 ff.; F. M. T. de Liagre Böhl, A. Jepsen, F. Hesse, "Paradies", *RGG*³ V 95 ff.; J. Dus, "Zwei Schichten der biblischen Paradiesgeschichte", ZAW 71, 1959, 97–113; G. Fohrer, "Die Struktur der alttestamentlichen Eschatologie", TLZ 85, 1960, 401–20; J. B. Frey, "La Vie de l'au-delà dans les Conceptions Juives au Temps de Jésus-Christ", Biblica 13, 1932, 129–68; W. Fuss, Die sogenannte Paradieserzählung, 1968; K. Galling, Paradeisos, Pauly-Wissowa, 18, 2, 1131 ff.; H. Gross, Die Idee des ewigen und allgemeinen Weltfriedens im Alten Orient und im Alten Testament, 1956; J. Jeremias, "Zwischen Karfreitag und Ostern", ZNW 42, 1949, 194 ff. (reprinted in Abba, 1966, 323 ff.); G. Lambert, "Le Drame du Jardin d'Éden", Nouvelle Revue Théologique 76, 1954, 917–48; H.-G. Leder, Die Auslegung der zentralen theologischen Aussagen der Paradieserzählung (Gen. 2, 4b–3,24), I, Im Alten Testament, im Judentum und im Neuen Testament, Dissertation, Greifswald, 1960; L. Ligier, Péché d'Adam et Péché du Monde, 1960, 152–231; M. Metzger, Die Paradieserzählung, 1959; H. Renckens, Urgeschichte und Heilsgeschichte, 1959; J. Ringborn, Paradisus Terrestris, 1958; SB IV, 2, 1119–65; T. Schwegler, Die biblische Urgeschichte im Lichte der Forschung, 1960; J. J. Stamm and H. J. Bietenhard, Der Weltfriede im Lichte der Bibel, 1959; P. Volz, Die Eschatologie der jüdischen Gemeinde im neutestamentlichen Zeitalter, 1934²; A. Weiser, "Die biblische Geschichte von Paradies und Sündenfall", Deutsche Theologie 4, 1937, 9–37; H. Windisch, Der Zweite Korintherbrief, KEK, 1924.

Patience, Steadfastness, Endurance

All the words dealt with under this heading refer to man's endurance when faced with the adversities of life, whether his reaction be one of passive submission or of courageous resistance. makrothymia almost always expresses the idea of passivity, while kartereō rarely does so. Being strictly military terms, the various words are readily used as metaphors in connection with the battles of life. The word with the widest range of meaning is anechomai, which originally meant to hold up, lift up, then, intrans., to cease, and mid., to hold oneself erect, to endure. kartereō means to be strong, steadfast, also to do something persistently in the face of opposition; in Gk. ethics it is a technical term for the upright bearing of the wise man. On the other hand, makrothymia, which is rare in Gk., denotes resigned submission to a situation which is to all intents and purposes irremediable. In theology, however, the word acquires a more positive meaning: the makrothymia of God is his long-suffering or forbearance, standing between the extremes of wrath and grace. hypomenō means in the first instance to remain behind, to await. It acquired then the more active sense of overcoming difficulties: to persevere, stand firm, stand one's ground.

ἀνέχομαι

ἀνέχομαι (anechomai), bear, endure; ἀνοχή (anochē), delay, limited period, restraint, forbearance; ἀνεκτός (anektos), bearable, tolerable, endurable.

CL The vb. anechomai is also used in the act. in profane Gk., the prefix ana- giving it a wide range of meanings: with an object to hold up, to honour, to hold back; without an object, to stand out, but also to cease, to persevere, endure. It governs both the acc. and the gen. In the NT the vb. occurs only in the mid., meaning to hold out, endure. This is the form which also predominates in other literature. The Stoics had the motto anechou kai apechou, "Bear with and bear without" (Aulus Gellius 17, 19).

OT In the LXX the vb. translates several Heb. roots, all of which express the idea of restraining some action or emotion. But often the pressure building up behind it eventually causes it to burst forth with dire results. Such statements can refer to men (Gen. 45:1; Job 6:10), or to God (Isa. 1:13; 42:14). There is a tendency, however, to portray God as exercising the restraint, and man as giving way to the vehement reaction: man cries out in anguish at the silence and inaction of God (Isa. 63:15; 64:12). The remaining instances of the vb. occur at 1 Ki. 12:24; Job 6:26; Amos 4:7; Hag. 1:10; Isa. 46:4; Sir. 48:3; 2 Macc. 9:12; 3 Macc. 1:22; 4 Macc. 1:35; 13:27. The noun anochē occurs in the LXX only once (1 Macc. 12:25), and then in the purely temporal sense of "delay".

NT 1. In the NT anechomai occurs 15 times, mainly in Paul (10 times), but with little consistency of usage. Its meaning is difficult to determine because of its frequent occurrence in passages from an earlier tradition and also in formal phrases. In Col. 3:13 its proximity to the catalogue of five virtues is significant, but the pres. part is intended to qualify the final item in the list just enumerated, namely → makrothymia (E. Lohmeyer, KEK 9, ad loc.). "Put on then, as God's chosen ones, holy and beloved, compassion, kindness, lowliness, meekness and patience, forbearing one another [makrothymian, anechomenoi allēlōn]. . . ." The personal object, however, indicates a characteristic aspect of NT usage. When forbearance is exercised, virtue is no longer self-centred; an essential part of the Christian calling is the service of others. Another important point arising from the use of allēlōn (one another) is the reciprocal nature of forbearance, explicitly stated in the verse though clearly implied elsewhere. Eph. 4:2 makes a similar point: as the prisoner of the Lord, Paul urges his readers to walk worthily of their calling "with all lowliness and meekness, with patience, forbearing one another in love [anechomenoi allēlōn en agapē]"..

In love there is mutual forbearance, hence Paul's plea to the Corinthians: "Do bear with me [alla kai anechesthe mou]!" (2 Cor. 11:1b, cf. 1a). He comes to them as weak, and insignificant in presence without any of the outward marks of apostolic authority borne by the "super-apostles" (11:5). But he is an → apostle and, as such, a bearer of the truth of Christ; Christ bears the Corinthians in his love, therefore they should bear with him. The strong theological content of mutual forbearance becomes apparent here. In suffering the one sent to them, the bearers "suffer" or receive the one who has sent him. When they are admonished or instructed, they accept the message as from its divine source, from the God who is full of longsuffering towards them (cf. Job 13:22; 2 Tim. 4:3). There is a play on the vb. throughout the chapter in the contrast drawn with the way that they bear false teachers: "For if some one comes and preaches another Jesus than the one we preached, or if you receive a different spirit from the one you received, or if you accept a different gospel from the one you accepted, you submit to it readily enough [kalōs anechesthe]" (11:4). "For you gladly bear with fools [hēdeōs gar anechesthe tōn aphronōn], being wise yourselves! For you bear it [anechesthe] if a man makes slaves of you, or preys upon you, or takes advantage of you, or puts on airs, or strikes you in the face" (11:19 f.). (For further discussion see C. K. Barrett, A Commentary on the Second Epistle to the Corinthians, BNTC, 1973, 270–92.)

anechometha in 1 Cor. 4:12 should be construed as having a personal object, by analogy with the surrounding vbs. ("we bless" and "we speak peace"). In other words, Paul does not simply "endure" when persecuted: he is longsuffering towards his persecutors. There may be no clear evidence of a reference here to Matt. 25:35, but certainly Paul's words are very reminiscent of this parable.

In Acts 18:14 the vb. is used as a technical term for receiving an accusation in the pronouncement of Gallio, the proconsul of Achaia: "If it had been a question of crime or grave misdemeanour, I should, of course, have given you Jews a patient hearing [kata logon an aneschomēn hymōn]" (NEB).

The only occurrence of the vb. in the Synoptic Gospels is in the question of Jesus: "O faithless and perverse generation, how long am I to be with you? How long am I to bear with you [anexomai hymōn]?" (Matt. 17:17 par. Mk. 9:19, Lk. 9:41). The occasion, as Mk. brings it out, is the disciples' failure to cast out the dumb spirit which was afflicting an epileptic boy. "These words express, not disgust with the people, but the prophetic exasperation of Jesus at the blindness of those who refuse to accept the presence and power of God. A similar idea finds expression in Jn. 14:9" (D. Hill, The Gospel of Matthew, New Century Bible, 1972, 270; → Generation; cf. Deut. 32:5 LXX).

In 2 Thess. 1:4 the reference is to enduring afflictions: "Therefore we ourselves boast of you in the churches of God for your steadfastness and faith in all your persecutions and in the afflictions which you are enduring [tais thlipsesin hais anechesthe]". On the other hand, in Heb. and 2 Tim. the reference is to Christian teaching and exhortation. In the former case the appeal is to the bearing with the word of exhortation contained in the letter (anechesthe tou logou tēs paraklēseōs, Heb. 13:22). In the latter case the allusion is to the fickleness of those who cannot bear sound teaching: "For the time is coming when people will not endure sound teaching [hote tēs hygiainousēs didaskalias ouk anexontai], but having itching ears they will accumulate for themselves teachers to suit their own likings" (2 Tim. 4:3).

2. The noun anochē occurs only in Rom. 2:4 and 3:25, where in both cases it refers to the forbearance of God. The religious Jew is reminded that he is not exempt from judgment just because he is a member of God's chosen people (Rom. 2:3). "Or do you presume upon the riches of his kindness and forbearance and patience [tēs chrēstotētos autou kai tēs anochēs kai tēs makrothymias]? Do you not know that God's kindness is meant to lead you to repentance?" (Rom. 2:4). Later on Paul explains how the age of forbearance is related to the cross of Christ, "whom God put forth as an expiation [or propitiation, hilastērion] by his blood to be received by faith. This was to show God's righteousness, because in his divine forbearance [en tē anochē tou theou] he had passed over former sins [dia tēn paresin tōn progegonotōn hamartēmatōn]" (Rom. 3:25). "God had passed over (the original word means 'connived at', 'ignored') past sins, not forgiven them, but this he had done only in his long-suffering forbearance. In the long run, a righteous God could not 'connive at' iniquity; and the full weight of his righteous anger bore down upon Christ" (M. Black, Romans, New Century Bible, 1973, 70). God restrained his wrath until he openly displayed his righteousness in Christ and brought to an end the period of the law.

Apart from the fact that in the NT anochē is used only of God, there is no clear-cut distinction between anochē and makrothymia, However, certain nuances may be detected. makrothymia is undoubtedly less active and vigorous, and may be equally well translated as patience. Furthermore, it has stronger eschatological overtones, looking forward to God's final judgment, whereas anochē denotes the period of God's gracious forbearance with particular reference in Rom. to Israel and the period up to the cross of Christ.

3. The adj. anektos, bearable, tolerable, occurs in the comparative form in Jesus' pronouncement on the Jewish cities which had rejected him. It will be more tolerable (anektoteron) for Tyre and Sidon (Matt. 11:22; Lk. 10:14) and Sodom and Gomorrah (Matt. 10:15; 11:24; cf. Mk. 6:11 TR; Lk. 10:12) in the day of judgment. The examples are instances of heathen cities on which judgment had fallen (Sodom and Gomorrah, Gen. 19; cf. Isa. 1:9; Jub. 36:10; Lk. 17:29; Rom. 9:29; 2 Pet. 2:6; Jude 7), or on which it had been pronounced (Tyre and Sidon, Isa. 23; Ezek. 26:28; Joel 3:4; Amos 1:9 f.; Zech. 9:2 ff.). There is a certain deliberate paradox in these pronouncements in that these places were notorious centres of wickedness in the OT, whereas the places in Galilee on which Jesus pronounces judgment were relatively insignificant. Moreover, there is the implicit claim that Jesus' appearance is more crucial than any of the prophetic pronouncements and therefore that the guilt of rejection is all the greater.

U. Falkenroth, C. Brown

καρτερέω

καρτερέω (kartereō), be strong, steadfast, persevere; προσκαρτερέω (proskartereō), persevere with, persist in; προσκαρτέρησις (proskarterēsis), persistence, steadfastness, perseverance.

CL & OT kartereō, from kratos, → strength, meaning to remain strong, steadfast, to endure, is found in profane Gk. from the 4th century B.C. and has the same sense in the LXX (cf. Job 2:9 translating Heb. ḥāzaq, hiph., to persist in; Sir. 2:2; 12:15). In Isa. 42:14 it translates pā'âh, groan. Elsewhere it is without equivalent. The word is used in 4 Macc. 9:9, 28 and passim of the patient endurance of Jewish martyrs (cf. 10:1 f.; 13:11; 14:9). The compound proskartereō (with en or the dat.) has the same basic meaning, but gives greater emphasis to the time element: to hold out, to persist, persevere with a person, persist in an opinion or activity. In Num. 13:20(21) the vb. means to persevere; in Tob. 5:8 (Symmachus) to expect; while in Sus. 6 (Theodotion) it refers to a prolonged stay. Outside the NT the noun proskarterēsis is found once in Philodemus (1st cent. B.C.) and twice in inscriptions of the Jewish diaspora (Panticapaeum on the Black Sea).

NT 1. In the NT kartereō is found only in Heb. 11:27, describing the faith of → Moses. According to Heb. 11:1, 3, → faith is a persuasion wrought by God (F. Büchsel, TDNT II 476) of invisible things. Thus Moses is said to have endured as seeing him who is invisible [ton gar aoraton hōs horōn ekarterēsen]. The kind of endurance, which clings tenaciously and expectantly to the invisible God, makes possible that attitude of faith exemplified by Moses, whom Christian readers are to emulate (v. 24–28). (→ Faith, art. pistis; → Form, art. hypostasis; → Guilt, Cause, Convict, art. elenchō). G. H. Whitaker offers an alternative interpretation in view of the meaning that the vb. sometimes has in Plutarch (1, 99; 2, 681; 1, 996), i.e. maintain a fixed unmoved gaze. Thus the verse would mean that Moses kept his eyes on the invisible as one who saw ("Hebrews xi. 27", ExpT 27, 1915–16, 186).

2. The vb. proskartereō is found more frequently (10 times) and especially in Acts. (a) It is sometimes used in a non-religious sense to indicate duration. Thus in Mk. 3:9 Jesus tells his disciples to keep a boat constantly ready for him. Acts 8:13 and 10:7 refer to a prolonged or continuous stay with a person: after his baptism Simon Magus resided with Philip; and soldiers are on the permanent staff of the centurion Cornelius. In Rom. 13:6 Paul says that, as servants of God, rulers are constantly engaged in their duties.

(b) Constancy and perseverance are particularly important in the Christian life. Enduring faith as described in Heb. 11:27 has to be complemented by constancy in → prayer, hence the apostle's earnest exhortations to Christians in Rom. 12:12; Col. 4:2, echoing Christ's teaching in Lk. 11:1–13; 18:1–8. Acts also uses the word proskartereō to denote the spiritual attitude of the early church. The small flock of disciples offered continuous prayer with one accord before → Pentecost, in preparation for the promised filling of the Spirit (Acts 1:14). Similarly after Pentecost "they devoted themselves to the apostles' teaching and fellowship, to the breaking of bread and the prayers" (Acts 2:42). In the early church the experience of Pentecost produced Christians of great constancy and purpose. Immediately after Pentecost they continued with one accord in the temple (Acts 2:46). The → apostles saw it as their function to devote themselves (proskarterēsomen) to the ministry of the word and to prayer (Acts 6:4).

3. In the NT the noun proskarterēsis is found only in Eph. 6:18. Here too Christians are encouraged to persevere in prayer and supplication; this supplication is to be made in the Holy Spirit and is to include the apostle (see also Col. 4:2 f.). "To that end keep alert with all perseverance [en pasē proskarterēsei], making supplication with all the saints, and also for me" (vv. 18 f.). With these solemn words the apostolic injunction receives the emphasis which its importance demands.

W. Mundle

μακροθυμία

μακροθυμία (makrothymia), patience, longsuffering; μακρόθυμος (makrothymos), longsuffering; μακροθυμέω (makrothymeō), be patient, longsuffering.

CL The word makrothymia, unlike other compounds of thymos (→ anger, wrath), appears late in Gk. (from Menander onwards), but is extremely rare. It denotes a purely and typically human virtue: the prolonged restraint of thymos, of anger or agitation, i.e. patience, longsuffering (contrast oxythymia, sudden anger). For whereas the gods know nothing of affliction, man has to bear his lot in patience. There is always an element of resignation in the word, even when it describes the kind of desperate endurance which one can only admire. Positively it expresses persistence, or an unswerving willingness to await events rather than trying to force them. Although perseverance and persistence were familiar to the Stoics, and were, in fact, highly valued by them, makrothymia does not figure in their vocabulary. This was possibly because of the widespread though erroneous belief that its basic idea was one of passive resignation. It must be said that in ancient Greece makrothymia is concerned primarily with the moulding of a man's own character; it is not a virtue exercised towards one's fellows.

OT Although in profane Gk. makrothymia is used in a psychological sense, this usage in the LXX is confined to the wisdom literature. On the other hand, the adj. makrothymos frequently denotes an attribute of Yahweh. The anthropomorphic Heb. phrase 'erek 'appayim (slow to anger) is often rendered by makrothymia or makrothymos (e.g. in Num. 14:18; Ps. 86:15; 103:8; Joel 2:13; Nah. 1:3). These words are, therefore, inseparably linked with the idea of restrained wrath, forbearance being exercised for a limited period only. The Israelites made frequent reference to God's forbearance (e.g. Exod. 34:6) and even appealed to it when conscious of guilt (Wis. 15:1 ff.). They knew that, being a God of forbearance, Yahweh was ready to bestow grace upon his people. But at the same time the godly Israelite was aware of the tension between grace and wrath: it is possible to exhaust God's patience and cause his anger to burst forth (Ps. 7:12 ff.). Even the obedient man sometimes found it hard to acquiesce in God's forbearance (Jer. 15:15; Jon. 4:2), but patience increasingly became a virtue required of the wise (Prov. 19:11; Sir. 29:1 ff.), and was given prominence in the wisdom literature over against other human qualities (Prov. 14:29; 16:32; 25:15). The meaning of makrothymia tended to degenerate into mere leniency, a tendency opposed by the rabbis in their discussions of the word. They considered that God's purpose in exercising forbearance was to lead men to amendment and repentance (J. Horst, TDNT IV 379).

NT In the NT forbearance is a characteristic both of God and of the man who is united with Jesus Christ. The noun is used only in the epistles; none of the words occurs in the writings of John. The subject is treated thematically in Heb. 6:9–15; Jas. 5:7–11; and to some extent in 2 Pet. 3:4 ff. makrothymia usually takes the prep. epi, but pros, eis and dia are also found.

1. The connection between divine and human patience is made clear in the parable of the unforgiving servant in Matt. 18:21–35 (note the use of the vb., makrothymeō, have patience, vv. 26, 29, not the noun). This parable may almost be said to sum up the whole NT teaching on the matter. The parable immediately follows instructions on what to do if a brother sins against one (Matt. 18:15–20) and Jesus' injunction to Peter to be willing to forgive not only seven times (which exceeded the common rabbinic maximum of four times and the three occasions just mentioned in the instructions of Jesus). The follower of Jesus should be willing to forgive seventy times seven, i.e. a virtually unlimited number of times. The number recalls the words of Gen. 4:24 concerning vengeance: "If Cain is avenged sevenfold, truly Lamech seventy-sevenfold". The parable of the unforgiving servant illustrates the divine attitude to forgiveness and to our dealings with our fellow men. The first servant owed the king ten thousand talents (18:24), or something like a billion pounds, a sum which he could not possibly repay. He asks the king to have patience (makrothymēson) and he will repay everything (18:26). But the king does actually more; he remits the whole amount. But the servant then demands the repayment of a hundred denarii (perhaps four or five pounds; a denarius is a labourer's daily wage in Matt. 20:2 ff.) from a fellow servant. He even puts him in prison until he should repay the debt, despite the man's pleas to have patience (again makrothymēson, v. 29). On learning the true facts of the case, the king has the first servant put in prison "till he should pay all his debt" (v. 34). The parable concludes with the pronouncement. "So also my heavenly Father will do to every one of you, if you do not forgive your brother from your heart" (v. 35). It recalls the Lord's Prayer: Forgive us our debts just as we forgive our debtors (Matt. 6:14 f.). "The duty of the servant to forgive is not dependent on ordinary human feelings, but is linked directly to the attitude shown to him: 'as (or because) I had mercy . . . so must you.' This, in a sense, is the real point of the story and the key to the obvious allegorization: the unforgiving will be excluded from God's mercy (verse 35); and those who receive God's pardon must show the same forgiving attitude to others" (D. Hill, The Gospel of Matthew, New Century Bible, 1972, 278). (For detailed discussion of the parable in the light of its legal content and rabbinic parables about debts see J. D. M. Derrett, "The Parable of the Unmerciful Servant", in Law in the New Testament, 1970, 32–47.)

2. A contrast is drawn between a debt so enormous as to defy repayment, and one which could easily be met out of normal income. This is a vivid way of expressing the incomparable greatness of God's longsuffering. At the same time longsuffering makes possible our entry into newness of life. Similarly in Rom. 2:4 Paul reminds us that God's forbearance leads us to metanoia, repentance, by which he means the obedience of the man who has been delivered from the power of sin. In Rom. 2:4, as elsewhere, the background is that of God's righteous anger, but his patience, being linked with kindness (chrēstotēs), asumes the character of benevolence (→ Good). If this longsuffering were to be regarded merely as an opportunity given to men for self-improvement and amendment of life, then his wrath would be rendered innocuous. Paul puts the matter clearly in Rom. 9:22: in his patience God suffers those who are appointed to wrath, in order to display his power and mercy in the salvation of the elect (cf. 1 Pet. 3:20). 1 Tim. 1:16 speaks of the patience of Christ (cf. 2 Pet. 3:15), but likewise stresses its revelatory character: "But I received mercy, for this reason, that in me, as the foremost, Jesus Christ might display his perfect patience [hapasan makrothymian] for an example to those who were to believe in him for eternal life." Paul is a living example of divine patience, a proof of God's mercy to sinners, and thus Timothy should follow his example of patience (2 Tim. 3:10; 4:2).

3. In the parable of Matt. 18 human patience is shown to be related to (and dependent on) divine patience. God in his longsuffering holds open the door to newness of life, but such new life in the believer is proved genuine by the fact that he practises → forgiveness. Thus makrothymia comes into its own in the NT list of virtues. Paul incorporates these lists in his practical exhortations: the virtues referred to are "the fruit of the Spirit" (Gal. 5:22; cf. Col. 1:11; 1 Thess. 5:14; 2 Tim. 3:10) or our "walk in the Spirit" (Eph. 4:2; Col. 3:12). In the light of Matt. 18, however, one cannot regard these as special "charismatic virtues" (cf. H. Schlier, Der Brief an die Galater, KEK 7, 1962[12], ad loc.). They are charismatic in the sense that they are gifts of the Spirit, but they are not in any sense abnormal for the Christian. Rather, they express the way a man behaves who through the forbearance of God has received grace and forgiveness (2 Cor. 6:1 ff.). The fact that chrēstotēs and praÿtēs (→ Humility, art. praÿs) are regularly found in the context indicates that makrothymia in the NT is not what Gk. humanism held it to be, namely a virtuous attitude cultivated exclusively in one's own interests. Rather, it is something active which makes a man always prepared to meet his neighbour halfway and to share his life with him. In other words, human patience or forbearance in this sense is not a character trait but a way of life. Indeed, it is the primary expression of → love, for "love is patient [makrothymei] and kind; love is not jealous or boastful" (1 Cor. 13:4).

4. There is, however, another aspect of patience which is required of believers as they await "the coming of the Lord" (Jas. 5:7). Jas. 5:7–11 links together the two aspects, namely that extended to our fellow-men and that which is needed to cope with all the trials and tribulations of this world until the parousia. Therefore, James exhorts his readers to be patient (Jas. 5:7 f., 10). They are to establish their hearts, for the coming of the Lord is at hand (5:8). They are not to grumble at each other, for the judge is standing at the doors (5:9). They are to follow the example of the suffering and patience of the prophets (5:10) and be steadfast like Job (5:11; cf. Job 1:21 f.; 2:10), remembering that the Lord is compassionate and merciful (5:11; cf. Pss. 10:38; 111:4).

5. Patience is an aspect of faith and hope which was exhibited by Abraham and which will likewise enable the believer to inherit the promises of God. This aspect of patience is developed by Heb.: "And we desire each one of you to show the same earnestness in realizing the full assurance of hope until the end, so that you may not be sluggish, but imitators of those who through faith and patience inherit the promises" (Heb. 6:11 f.). "And thus Abraham, having patiently endured, obtained the promise" (Heb. 6:15; cf. Gen. 22:16 f.).

6. 2 Pet. 3 discusses the apparent delay in the parousia. This is not to be taken as indefinite postponement but as a sign of God's patience to give men full opportunity to repent. "The Lord is not slow about his promise as some count slowness, but is forbearing towards you [makrothymei eis hymas], not wishing that any should perish, but that all should reach repentance" (2 Pet. 3:9). The remark is directed specifically at the readers ("you"). 2 Pet. 3:15 relates this to Paul's teaching: "And count the forbearance [makrothymian] of our Lord as salvation. So also our beloved brother Paul wrote to you according to the wisdom given him" (cf. above 2; → anochē NT 2).

7. The interpretation of Lk. 18:7 has been the subject of considerable discussion. The verse follows the parable of the unjust judge (Lk. 18:1–6), which was told to teach the disciples "that they ought always to pray and not lose heart" (18:1). In the parable the widow finally gets the judge to vindicate her because of her constant petitioning. Similarly, Jesus asks: "And will not God vindicate his elect, who cry to him day and night? kai makrothymei ep' autois?" The RSV translates this as "Will he delay long over them?" This, however, does not bring out the meaning of the vb. E. E. Ellis notes four possible alternative interpretations (The Gospel of Luke, New Century Bible, 1966, 214). (i) "Will not God . . . be patient with their complaint?" Ellis himself favours this, seeing a parallel use in Matt. 18:26. It may be added that the same preposition epi is used in both cases. Thus, whereas the unjust judge vindicated the woman lest "she will wear me out by her continual coming" (18:5), a fortiori God who is both loving and good will be patient with his people and their cries. This fits the context of the parable and seems preferable to the remaining alternatives. (ii) ". . . and be patient with the wicked" (cf. W. Grundmann, Das Evangelium nach Lukas, Theologischer Handkommentar zum Neuen Testament, 1, 1959, ad loc.; cf. 2 Pet. 3:9 f.). (iii) ". . . and he is longsuffering over them" (RV; cf. Rev. 6:11). (iv) ". . . or can he just endure their plight" (cf. H. Ljungvik, "Zur Erklärung einer Lukas-Stelle (Luk. xviii. 7)", NTS 10, 1964–65, 293).

U. Falkenroth, C. Brown

ὑπομένω

ὑπομένω (hypomenō), be patient, persevere, endure, be steadfast; ὑπομονή (hypomonē), patience, steadfastness, endurance.

CL The vb. hypomenō, found since the time of Homer, is formed from the prep. hypo and menō, remain, stay. It means to remain behind, stand one's ground, survive, remain steadfast, persevere and also to wait, and (trans.) await. It is used frequently in military contexts and at first is ethically neutral. From the time of Plato the noun hypomonē also came into use, and from then on both words imply value judgments in both a positive and a negative sense. Positively, steadfastness, constancy and perseverance are among the noblest of manly virtues, equally esteemed in the ethical systems of Plato and Aristotle. A proud Greek freeman endures burdens, difficulties or dangers, without any thought of tangible or moral reward but solely for the sake of his honour. But negatively, there is the dishonourable attitude of mere passive resignation in the face of degradation, abuse, ostracism, slavery or tyranny, whether from fear, weakness or indolence (cf. F. Hauck, TDNT, IV 581 ff.).

OT The LXX uses the vb. predominantly in the sense of wait and await, as a rendering of the Heb. vb. qāwâh, await, and also hope; yāḥal, wait; ḥaḵâh, wait patiently; and other vbs. but which are less theologically significant. This personal expectation seems to be grounded in the → covenant relationship for often it is Israel as a nation that is called to wait upon God, while God himself, who rules over all nations, is called specifically "the Hope of Israel" (Jer. 14:8; 17:13; Ps. 52:9; 130:5 ff.). Ultimately Israel's hopes and longings were directed towards the fulfilment of the covenant promise (Ps. 36:10; 34). Israel's endurance has none of the resigned attitude of a slave but reaches out towards God and draws his strength from him as the object of all his hopes (Isa. 40:13). Thus hypomonē expresses the attitude of the man living in the light of "the last days" (→ Goal, art. eschatos) (Hab. 2:3; Zeph. 3:18; Dan. 12:12), and is later used in this sense in the Synoptic Gospels.

Job and some other later biblical writers also use the word in its Gk. sense of being steadfast, holding one's ground, persevering in distress (Job 6:10; Sir. 22:18), or with some definite object in view. This usage runs through the literature of later Judaism (especially 4 Macc.) and is eventually taken upon in the NT by Paul.

hypomenō is used for qāwâh at Job 3:9; 17:13; Pss. 25(24):3, 5, 21; 27(26):14; 37(36):9, 34; 40(39):1; 52(51):9; 56(55):6; 69(68):6, 20; 119(118):95; 130(129):5; Prov. 20:22; Isa. 25:9; 40:31; 49:23; 51:5; 60:9; Jer. 14:19, 22; Lam. 3:25. The corresponding noun hypomonē stands for nouns formed from the same root: miqweh, hope (1 Chr. 29:15; 2 Esd. 10:2; Jer. 14:8; 17:13); tiqwâh expectation, hope (Job 14:19; Pss. 9:18; 62[61]:5; 71[70]:5); for qāwâh (Ps. 39[38]:7); and without Heb. equivalent at Sir. 2:14; 16:13; 17:24; 38:27; 41:2; 4 Macc. 1:11; 7:9; 9:8, 30; 15:30; 17:4, 12, 17, 23. hypomenō stands for yāḥal at Jdg. 3:25; 2 Ki. 6:33; Job 6:11; 14:14; 32:16; Mic. 7:7; Lam. 3:21, 24; for ḥāḵâh at Job 32:4; Pss. 33(32):20; 106(105):13; Hab. 2:3; Zeph. 3:8; Isa. 64:3(4); Lam. 3:26; Dan. 12:12; for ṭāman, hide, at Job 20:26; for yāšaḇ, tarry, at Num. 22:19; for kûl, contain, endure, at Mal. 3:2; for māhaḥ linger, tarry, at Exod. 12:39; and qûm stand up, endure, at Job 8:15. It is without Heb. equivalent at Jos. 19:47; Ez. 2:19; Tob. 5:7; Job 7:3; 9:4; 15:31; 22:21; 33:5; 41:3(2); Pss. 142(141):7; 145(144):9; Wis. 16:22; 17:5; Sir. 16:22; 22:18; 36:18(21); 51:8; Zech. 6:14; Isa. 64:4(5); 2 Macc. 6:20; 4 Macc. 5:23; 6:9; 7:22; 9:6, 22; 13:12; 15:31 f.; 16:1, 8, 17, 19, 21; 17:7, 10.

NT 1. In the Synoptic Gospels the vb. occurs in the lit. sense of staying (of the boy Jesus remaining in Jerusalem, Lk. 2:43), and in Jesus' teaching where endurance is a prerequisite of salvation. "But he who endures to the end will be saved [ho de hypomeinas eis telos houtos sōthēsetai]" (Matt. 24:13 par. Mk. 13:13). The parallel in Lk. is worded differently, using the vb. instead of the noun: "By your endurance you will gain your lives [or souls] [en tē hypomonē hymōn ktēsesthe tas psychas hymōn]" (Lk. 21:19). The context is the eschatological discourse of Jesus, where the disciples have just been warned of numerous trials including being hated by all for the name of Jesus (Matt. 24:9; Mk. 13:13a; Lk. 21:17). The severity of the situation calls for endurance. Matt. 24:10 ff. mentions that many will fall away, and betray and hate one another. Many will be led astray by false prophets, and because of the proliferation of wickedness, "most men's love will grow cold." D. Hill suggests that the phrase eis telos means "finally", "without breaking down", rather than "to the end" (op. cit., 321). The use of the noun in Lk. recalls the parable of the sower: "And as for that in the good soil, they are those who, hearing the word, hold it fast in an honest and good heart, and bring forth fruit with patience [en hypomonē]" (Lk. 8:15; cf. Matt. 13:23; Mk. 4:20). But only Lk.'s version of the parable mentions hypomonē, whereas Matt. and Mk. mention the superabundance of the yield which Lk. omits. This may be due to the Gentile orientation of his Gospel. Whereas the parable mentions cares, riches and pleasure which may prevent fruit from growing, the eschatological discourse has in mind trials and tribulations. But in both cases patient endurance is the prerequisite: in the one case for salvation, in the other case for bearing the fruit of the word.

The warning about endurance is also given in identical words in Matt. 10:22 in the context of the mission charge to the twelve. Here too there is the warning about being hated by all, and there are eschatological overtones. The blessedness of those who endure recalls Dan. 12:12: "Blessed is he who waits and comes to the thousand three hundred and thirty-five days."

2. Paul. (a) Both the noun and the vb. figure in the argument of Rom. hypomonē is a quality required of men if their lives are to be pleasing to God: "to those who by patience [kath' hypomonēn] in well-doing seek for glory and honour and immortality, he will give eternal life" (Rom. 2:7). Both the active sense of "steady persistence in well-doing" (NEB) and the passive sense of patient endurance under difficulties are possible here (cf. M. Black, Romans, New Century Bible, 1973, 55 f.). In Rom. 5 Paul shows how the justified believer can turn even suffering to good account. He not only rejoices in the "hope of sharing the glory of God" (5:2). "More than that, we rejoice in our sufferings [thlipsesin], knowing that suffering [thlipsis] produces endurance [hypomonēn], and endurance [hypomonē] produces character, and character produces hope, and hope does not disappoint us, because God's love has been poured into our hearts through the Holy Spirit which has been given to us" (5:3 ff.; → Persecution, art. thlipsis). In Rom. 8:25 hope is characterized as waiting for what we do not see with patience (cf. the use of the vb. in v. 24 v.l.). The context here is the travail of the created order "as we wait for adoption as sons, the redemption of our bodies" (8:23). "For in this hope we were saved. Now hope that is seen is not hope. For who hopes for what he sees? But if we hope for what we do not see, we wait for it with patience [di' hypomonēs apekdechometha]" (8:25). Finally, the concept occurs again in the practical exhortations at the end of Rom. "Rejoice in our hope, be patient in tribulation [en thlipsei hypomenontes], be constant in prayer" (Rom. 12:12 f.; cf. the connection between hypomonē and thlipsis here with 5:3; → Persecution). The purpose of the scriptures is to promote hypomonē which moreover reflects the very character of God. "For whatever was written in former days was written for our instruction, that by steadfastness and encouragement of the scriptures [dia tēs hypomonēs kai dia tēs paraklēseōs tōn graphōn] we might have hope. May the God of steadfastness and encouragement [ho de theos tēs hypomonēs kai tēs paraklēseōs] grant you to live in such harmony with one another, in accord with Christ Jesus, that together you may with one voice glorify the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ" (15:3–6; note the reiteration of the themes of Rom. 2:7 and 5:3 ff.).

(b) Whereas hypomonē is a characteristic of hope in Rom. it is seen as a characteristic of love in 1 Cor.: "Love bears all things believes all things, hopes all things, endures all things [panta hypomenei]" (1 Cor. 13:7). In 2 Cor. Paul develops the theme of endurance, especially in the service of Christ for the church. "If we are afflicted, it is for your comfort and salvation; and if we are comforted, it is for your comfort, which you experience, when you patiently endure the same sufferings that we suffer" (2 Cor. 1:6). 2 Cor. 6:4 and 12:12 allude to Paul's own apostolic endurance.

(c) Endurance and patience are qualities for which Paul prays particularly in the Colossian Christians: "May you be strengthened with all power, according to his glorious might, for all endurance and patience [eis pasan hypomonēn kai makrothymian] with joy" (Col. 1:11). In 1 Thess. 1:3 the "steadfastness of hope [hypomonēs tēs elpidos]" of the Thessalonians is a cause for particular thanksgiving, and and in 2 Thess. 1:4 Paul writes of how he boasts of their steadfastness and hope in the churches of God. In 2 Thess. 3:5 Paul prays: "May the Lord direct your hearts to the love of God and to the steadfastness of Christ [eis tēn hypomonēn tou Christou]" (cf. Heb. 12:2 f.). "The Thessalonians are being reminded of the constancy exhibited by their Master, which forms the pattern on which they should model themselves" (L. Morris, The First and Second Epistles to the Thessalonians, NLC, 1959, 250).

(d) In the Pastoral Epistles steadfastness is mentioned as a quality required of Christian workers (1 Tim. 6:11; 2 Tim. 3:10) and older men (Tit. 2:2). It is necessary to endure all things for the sake of the elect (2 Tim. 2:10). Moreover, endurance is a precondition of reigning (2 Tim. 2:12) as in the saying quoted possibly from a liturgical or baptismal hymn: "The saying is sure: If we have died with him, we shall also live with him; if we endure, we shall also reign with him; if we deny him, he also will deny us; if we are faithless, he remains faithful – for he cannot deny himself" (2 Tim. 2:11 ff.).

3. The theme of perseverance and falling away is one of the central themes of Heb. (cf. the quotation of Ps. 95:7–11 in Heb. 3:7–11, 15 and 4:3–11; and the argument of ch. 12). Both the vb. (Heb. 10:32; 12:2 f., 7) and the noun (Heb. 10:36; 12:1) figure in the exhortations to perseverance. It stands in contrast with hypostolē, shrinking back (Heb. 10:39). Continued endurance is urged in the light of past endurance which included the loss of earthly goods (Heb. 10:32, cf. 34), the need of endurance to "do the will of God and receive what is promised" (Heb. 10:36), the fact that discipline is evidence of sonship (Heb. 12:7), and the example of Jesus himself "who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is seated at the right hand of the throne of God" (Heb. 12:2; cf. v. 1; and 2 Thess. 3:5). "Consider him who endured from sinners such hostility against himself that you may not grow weary or faint-hearted" (Heb. 12:3).

4. The noun (Jas. 1:3 f.; 5:11) and the vb. (Jas. 1:12; 5:11) both feature in the Epistle of James. The rôle of steadfastness in producing Christian character in Jas. 1:3 f. may be compared with Paul's argument in Rom. 5:3 ff. and 2 Pet. 1:6. Endurance is necessary to receive the crown of life (Jas. 1:12; cf. Rom. 2:7; 8:25). Jas. 5:11 holds up the example of Job (cf. Job 1:21 f.; 2:10).

5. 1 Pet. 2:20 contrasts suffering for the sake of Christ with endurance of punishment rightly inflicted for a crime. There is no credit in the latter kind of enduring, and believers are warned not to render themselves liable for such punishment. In particular, the context suggests that some Christians thought themselves exempt from obedience to the state (1 Pet. 2:13–18), whilst some Christian slaves believed that they were no longer under obligation to their earthly masters. The argument of the second half of 1 Pet. 2 is that such earthly obligations still hold good, as they are appointed by God. Moreover, in submitting without reviling believers have the example of Christ before them (2:21–25). In 2 Pet. 1:6 hypomonē is twice mentioned in a list of virtues in a way which recalls Rom. 5:3 ff. and Jas. 1:3 f.

6. In Rev. patient endurance is the lot of John himself in his exile on Patmos "on account of the word of God and the testimony of Jesus" (Rev. 1:9). The churches of Ephesus and Thyatira were commended by the Spirit for their patient endurance (Rev. 2:2 f., 19). Similarly, the church at Philadelphia is encouraged: "Because you have kept my word of patient endurance, I will keep you from the hour of trial which is coming on the whole world, to try those who dwell upon the earth" (Rev. 3:10). The conflict with the beast (→ Animal, art. thērion) gives rise to the exhortations: "Here is a call for the endurance and faith of the saints" (Rev. 13:10); "Here is a call for the endurance of the saints, those who keep the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus" (Rev. 14:12).

U. Falkenroth, C. Brown

→ Faith, → Hope, → Persecution, → Suffer, → Tempt

(a). G. Bornkamm, "The Revelation of God's Wrath (Romans 1–3)", in Early Christian Experience, 1969, 47–70; F. Büchsel, elenchō etc., TDNT II 473–76; A. Carr, "The Patience of Job", The Expositor, Eighth Series, 6, 1913, 511–17; W. Grundmann, kartereō etc., TDNT III 617–20; F. Hauck, hypomenō, hypomonē, TDNT IV 581–88; J. Horst, makrothymia etc., TDNT IV 374–87; J. Jeremias, The Parables of Jesus, 1963²; I. H. Marshall, Kept by the Power of God: A Study of Perseverance and Falling Away, 1969; W. Meikle, "The Vocabulary of Patience in the Old Testament", The Expositor, Eighth Series, 19, 1920, 219–25; and "The Vocabulary of Patience in the New Testament", ibid., 304–13; H. Schlier, anechō etc., TDNT I 359 f.; W. Zimmerli, Man and his Hope in the Old Testament, SBT Second Series 20, 1971.
(b). A. M. Festugière, "hypomonē dans la Tradition Grecque", Recherches de Science Religieuse 30, 1931, 477–86; E. Käsemann, "Zum Verständnis von Rom. 3, 24–26", ZNW 43, 1950–51, 150 ff. (reprinted in Exegetische Versuche und Besinnungen, I, 1960, 96 ff.); and Das wandernde Gottesvolk. Eine Untersuchung zum Hebräerbrief, 1957², 19 ff.; H. Riesenfeld, "Zu makrothymein (Lk. 18, 7)", in Neutestamentliche Aufsätze, Festschrift für J. Schmid, 1963, 214 ff.; C. Spicq, "Patientia", Revue des Sciences Philosophiques et Théologiques 19, 1930, 95–106; K. Wennemer, "Die Geduld in neutestamentlicher Sicht", Geist und Leben 36, 1963, 36 ff.; S. Wibbing, Die Tugend- und Lasterkataloge im Neuen Testament und ihre Traditionsgeschichte unter besonderer Berücksichtigung der Qumran-Texte, BZNW 25, 1959.

Peace

εἰρήνη

εἰρήνη (eirēnē), peace; εἰρηνεύω (eirēneuō), live in peace, have peace, keep peace; εἰρηνικός (eirēnikos), peaceable, peaceful; εἰρηνοποιός (eirēnopoios), peacemaker; εἰρηνοποιέω (eirēnopoieō), make peace.

CL 1. eirēnē, peace (from Homer onwards, also in inscriptions and papyri, etymology uncertain), denotes in profane Gk. the antithesis to war, or the condition resulting from a cessation of war. Peace is the state of law and order which gives rise to the blessings of prosperity.

2. In Plato and Epictetus eirēnē can also denote peaceful conduct, though peaceableness towards others is generally rendered by philia (→ love, friendship) or homonoia (unity, concord); and a peaceful frame of mind by galēnē (calm). Not until the Stoics (Epictetus and Marcus Aurelius) does peace occur in the sense of spiritual peace. But even so, the word is not common in their writings, and galēnē is more frequent in Marcus Aurelius (W. Foerster, TDNT II 401). eirēneuō (since Plato, used also in mid.), means to live in peace, to have peace, though in late writers it can occasionally mean to bring about peace (LXX 1 Macc. 6:60; Josephus War 2, 367; Dio Cass. 77, 12, 1; Did. 4, 3; Barn. 19, 12). eirēnikos, peaceful, embraces everything relating to peace (cf. polemikos, bellicose, warlike). The compounds eirēnopoieō, to make peace, establish peace (from the LXX onwards) and eirēnopoios, peacemaker, when found in profane Gk., can very infrequently bear the sense of political pacification by force of arms (e.g. by the Roman emperor) (cf. Lat. pacare, pacify, subdue).

OT 1. (a) In the LXX eirēnē is almost invariably used to translate the Heb. šālôm which occurs more than 250 times in the OT. (Exceptions to this are largely phrases connected with coming and going, and with greetings, e.g. Gen. 26:31; 43:23; but also Jer. 20:10; Isa. 48:22; 57:21; where sōtēria, chairein, etc. are used.) The well-being that comes from God is, however, regularly expressed by eirēnē (G. von Rad, TDNT II 402 f.). In some 15 passages eirēnē corresponds to various other Heb. words which embrace the general area of meaning of rest, safety, freedom from care and trustfulness: šāqaṭ, have rest from (1 Chr. 4:40); beṭaḥ, trust, security (Job 11:18; Prov. 3:23; Isa. 14:30; Ezek. 34:27; 38:8, 11, 14; 39:6, 26); hālaḵ, walk (2 Sam. 3:24); leqaḥ, understanding (Isa. 29:24); ṣaḥ, clear (Isa. 32:4); šalwâh, ease (Prov. 17:1). It is clear that some of these passages use eirēnē to give an interpretative gloss on the original Heb.

Unlike the Gk. eirēnē, the Heb. šālôm is the opposite not so much of war as of any disturbance in the communal well-being of the nation, a disturbance which, of course, may in certain circumstances make it necessary to go to war (cf. 2 Sam. 11:7). Hence in the LXX eirēnē too acquires the sense of general well-being, the source and giver of which is Yahweh alone. Indeed, the Heb. text of Jdg. 6:24 which gives the name of the place of Gideon's altar means: Yahweh is peace (cf. RV "Jehovah-shalom"). šālôm includes everything given by God in all areas of life (TDNT II 402). eirēnē, therefore, coming as it does from God, approximates closely to the idea of salvation (sōtēria; → Redemption; cf. Ps. 84:11). When God withdraws his peace, mourning must inevitably take its place (Jer. 16:5).

(b) Throughout the Heb. OT, šālôm covers well-being in the widest sense of the word (Jdg. 19:20); prosperity (Ps. 73:3), even in reference to the godless; bodily health (Isa. 57:18; Ps. 38:3); contentedness, on departure (Gen. 26:29), on going to sleep (Ps. 4:8), and at death (Gen. 15:15 etc.); good relations between nations and men (1 Ki. 5:26; Jdg. 4:17; 1 Chr. 12:17, 18); salvation (Isa. 43:7; Jer. 29:11; cf. Jer. 14:13). Participation in this peace means sharing in the gifts of salvation which are involved, while expulsion from it means the end of prosperity (Lam. 3:17). šālôm has a social dimension, being bound up with the political aspirations of Israel, and has a public significance far beyond the purely personal. Evidence of this is found in the close association of šālôm with ṣᵉḏāqâh (→ Righteousness; cf. Isa. 48:18; Ps. 85:10); with the concrete ideas of → law and → judgment (mišpāṭ; Zech. 8:16); and even with public officials (Heb. pᵉquddâh, oversight, care; LXX archontas and episkopous, rulers and overseers; Isa. 60:17; → Beginning; → Bishop).

(c) The concept of peace is found at the climax of the blessing in Num. 6:24 ff., where it sums up all the other blessings and where it is closely associated with the presence of Yahweh. The blessing is attributed to Moses who is commanded by Yahweh to transmit this blessing to Aaron and his sons as the form of blessing with which they are to bless Israel (Num. 6:22 f.). "The LORD bless you and keep you: The LORD make his face to shine upon you, and be gracious to you: The LORD lift up his countenance upon you and give you peace" (Num. 6:24 ff.). The following verse adds: "So shall they put my name upon the people of Israel, and I will bless them" (6:27). J. I. Durham comments: "šālôm is the gift of God, and can be received only in his PRESENCE. But the use of šālôm in the blessing also lends credence to the view that šālôm serves as a cultic term and possesses a meaning far more comprehensive than the one usually given to it in the translations and by many commentators. For šālôm in Num. 6:24–26 is intended as a description of the man who is blessed (bārak), guarded (šāmar) and treated graciously (ḥānan) by God; the man who is doubly in God's PRESENCE; the man who is 'fulfilled', and so 'complete'. Indeed has such a man answered the New Testament commandment which is attributed to our Lord: esesthe oun hymeis teleioi hōs ho pater hymōn ho ouranios teleios estin ['You, therefore, must be perfect, as your heavenly Father is perfect', Matt. 5:48]" ("šālôm and the Presence of God", in J. I. Durham and J. R. Porter, eds., Proclamation and Presence: Old Testament Essays in Honour of Gwynne Henton Davies, 1970, 292 f.).

Durham also draws attention to the fact that the LXX uses the adj. teleios, perfect, to render the adjs. from stems šlm and tmm, complete (1 Ki. 8:61; 11:4; 15:3, 14; 1 Chr. 28:9; Deut. 18:13; Jer. 13:19; Exod. 12:5; cf. G. Barth in G. Bornkamm, G. Barth and H. J. Held, Tradition and Interpretation in Matthew, 1963, 98; and Hatch-Redpath, 1342 f. for other cognates of both the Gk. and the Heb. words). Thus teleios renders one aspect of šālôm not immediately apparent in eirēnē.

Durham contends that "šālôm is often indicative, in Old Testament usage, of a comprehensive kind of fulfilment or completion, indeed of a perfection in life and spirit which quite transcends any success which man alone, even under the best of circumstances, is able to attain" (op. cit., 280; cf. e.g. Gen. 15:15; 29:6; 37:14; 43:27 f.; Exod. 18:7, 23; Num. 25:12; Deut. 23:6[7]; Jdg. 18:15; 1 Sam. 17:18; 22; 20:7; 25:6; 2 Sam. 11:7; 18:28 f.; 1 Ki. 22:27 f.; 2 Ki. 22:20; Isa. 45:7; 48:18; 53:5; 54:10, 13; 57:2, 19; 59:8; 60:17; 66:12; Mal. 2:5 f.). In particular, this is illustrated by the promise of Yahweh that Josiah will be gathered to his fathers not "in peace" (so RSV) which was manifestly not the case, but "in success", i.e. having achieved his calling (2 Ki. 22:20; cf. op. cit., 279).

šālôm is ultimately the gift of Yahweh (Gen. 28:21; 41:16; Lev. 26:6; Jdg. 18:6; 1 Chr. 22:9; cf. 12:19; 23:25). This is a particular theme of the prophets who are concerned with the proclamation of peace (Isa. 9:5 f.; 26:6, 12; 45:7; 48:18, 22; 52:7; 54:10, 13; 53:5; 55:12; 57:2, 19, 22; 60:17; 66:12; Jer. 14:13; Jer. 6:13; 8:11, 15; 14:13; 23:17; 28:9; 29:11; 33:6, 9; Ezek. 34:25; 37:26; Mic. 5:5[4]; Nah. 2:1[1:15]; Hag. 2:9; Zech. 6:13; 8:10 ff.; 9:10; Mal. 2:5 f.). Jeremiah, in particular, proclaimed that Yahweh also withdraws his šālôm in judgment (Jer. 12:12; 14:19; 16:5; 25:37). The theme of Yahweh as the giver of peace figures prominently in the Psalms (Pss. 4:8; 29[28]:10 f.; 34:15[33:14]; 35[34]:27; 37[36]:11; 55[54]:18; 73[72]:3; 85[84]:8; 119[118]:165; 122[121]:6 ff.; 125[124]:5; 147:14). It also occurs in Prov. 3:2, 17, 23 and Job 5:24; 15:21; 25:2. Whereas all the passages which see šālôm as a gift of Yahweh imply a presence of Yahweh, a number of passages relate Yahweh's presence to the cult (Gen. 28:10–22; Num. 6:23 f.; Jdg. 18:6; Pss. 4:8 29[28]:10 ff.; 2 Sam. 15:24 ff.).

(d) After the conquest and fall of Jerusalem (597 and 587 B.C.) the promise of peace became central to the message of the prophets, especially Deutero-Isaiah. With the destruction of Jerusalem the false prophets of salvation (Jer. 6:14; 8:11; Ezek. 13:10, 16) were utterly discredited. In Deutero-Isaiah the divine covenant of peace (Isa. 54:10) comes to be viewed eschatologically: righteousness, splendour, salvation and glory (Isa. 62:1, 2) are all expected to be manifest at the end. The created world, which at present is under God's righteous judgment for its sin, and is in conflict with itself, will again be made whole (Isa. 11:6–9; 29:17–24; 62:1–9), when God creates new heavens and a new earth (Isa. 65:17–19; cf. Rev. 21:1–4). The message concerning the renewal of the covenant of peace blossoms into the promise of the universal and everlasting peace, and the coming of the day of salvation is frequently linked with the Prince of peace (Isa. 9:5, 6), who as God's anointed (Isa. 61:1, 2) is the bringer and founder of the kingdom of peace.

2. (a) In Rab. literature it is the šālôm of Yahweh which underlies the whole concept of peace (see above 1 (b)), but it undergoes an enlargement both in the God-man relationship and on the purely human plane. The phrase for "to greet", šā'al b^{e}šālôm, meaning to ask after (someone's) peace, i.e. to wish it for someone, turns the act of greeting into something approaching an act of blessing. šālôm and b^{e}rāḵâh (blessing) begin to correspond (TDNT II 409). šālôm becomes the very essence of that salvation expected by the Jews. It is necessary to pursue such peace (Rabbi Hillel, Aboth 1: 12; cf. SB I 217), and to establish peace among men. Among the rabbis the rôle of the peacemaker is similar to that in the NT, and at this point Rab. Judaism approaches the "new commandment" of the NT (→ Command, art. entolē). The motive-force, however, is not so much positive love for one's neighbour, as the desire to get rid of all that would hinder šālôm. What holds good on the purely human level also applies to the relationship between man and God. Peace thus gains a new dimension, with greater importance being attached both to what man does and to what he leaves undone.

(b) Similarly in the Pseudepigrapha, eirēnē implies salvation, which certainly includes the cessation of war, but goes beyond this. In the Test. XII peace means the withholding of judgment, i.e. sparing the offender out of compassion, or at least deferring his punishment. While Josephus follows the OT Rab. line completely (Ant. 1, 179; 11, 216; 8, 405; War 2, 135), in Philo the concept of peace becomes introverted and signifies peace of mind (Som. 2, 253; Ebr. 97), though this is not divorced from the external and objectively verifiable state of peace. Under the influence of Gk. philosophy, Philo also regards inward peace as being victory over temptation and lust (Jos. 57). Eth.Enoch 52:11 declares: "Blessed is he who brings peace and love."

(c) In its separation from apostate Israel (1QS 8:4–9; CD 1:4 and passim) the Qumran community considered itself to be the eschatological community of the saved; its members have already entered into the enjoyment of eschatological peace. There are references to eternal peace (1QS 2:4), the superabundance of peace (1QS 4:7), peace without end (1QH 7:15), lasting peace (1QH 15:16) and peace without limit (1QH 18:30). Yet the community is still in the midst of conflict (Belial against Israel and Michael, CD 4:13 and passim; the sons of light, 1QM 1:11, against the sons of darkness, 1QM 1:9 f.). The coming of peace is bound up with visitation (1QH 1:17); salvation is confirmed only after its recipients have been tried in the furnace of fire (1QM 17:1). God has already engraved the covenant of peace (= salvation) for all eternity with the stylus of life (1QM 12:3). Such peace no longer meets with rejection (1QH 9:11), being a present refuge replete with the blessings of salvation (1QH 9:33); peace is identical with salvation (→ Redemption, art. sōzō) and with happiness. "The peace of God" (1QM 3:5; 4:14) and "the joy of God" (→ Joy, art. agalliaomai) are the watchwords of God's people upon their safe arrival home (1QM 3:11).

NT eirēnē is found 91 times in the NT, 24 of which are in the Gospels. The 4 occurrences in Matt. are confined to the discourse in ch. 10, where Jesus sends out his twelve disciples (vv. 13, 34); Mk. uses it once (as a valedictory formula, 5:34), and Lk. 13 times. Christ's farewell discourses in Jn. (chs. 14–16; also ch. 20) contain the word 5 times, in each case denoting Christ's gift to his disciples (Jn. 14:27; 16:33; 20:19, 21, 26). Occurrences in the rest of the NT are as follows: 7 in Acts; 43 in the Pauline epistles (including 10 in Rom. and 8 in Eph.); 11 in the Pastoral Epistles, 4 in Heb. and 2 in Rev. On 12 occasions → grace (charis) and peace are mentioned together as coming from God the Father (apo theou patros). The vb. eirēneuō appears 3 times in Paul; eirēnopoios once in Matt. 5:9; and eirēnikos only in Heb. 12:11 and Jas. 3:17. The form predominating in the NT, therefore, is eirēnē itself, always rendered in the Vulg. by pax, except for 1 Pet. 5:14, where gratia is used.

1. It is not possible to trace any development of the idea of eirēnē within the NT. Both in form and content it stands firmly in the LXX and Heb. OT tradition, though in addition the meanings set out under CL continue to make their influence felt. Thus, as in CL 1, peace is the opposite of war (Lk. 14:32, an Aramaism; Acts 12:20). In Lk. 11:21 and Acts 24:2 it denotes external security. OT influence is more apparent in 1 Cor. 14:33, where peace is the opposite of disorder in the church. Similarly it is used for harmony among men (Acts 7:26; Gal. 5:22; Eph. 4:3; Jas. 3:18; negatively in Matt. 10:34), and for messianic salvation (Lk. 1:79; 2:14; 19:42). Hence the word can describe both the content and the goal of all Christian preaching, the message itself being called "the gospel of peace" (Eph. 6:15; cf. Acts 10:36; Eph. 2:17). In other words, the biblical concept of peace (from šālôm) is primarily that of wholeness. This divinely-wrought reality exercises a mighty influence in the present world, though it still awaits final fulfilment. Soteriologically, peace is grounded in God's work of → redemption. Eschatologically it is a sign of God's new creation which has already begun. Teleologically it will be fully realized when the work of new creation is complete. Only in a secondary sense does peace describe human and divine-human relationships, in which case it refers to a psychological state consequent upon sharing in the all-embracing peace of God. On Lk. 2:14 → Please, art. eudokeō NT 3(c).

2. (a) As opposed to akatastasia, disorder, peace is an order established by God as the God of peace (1 Cor. 14:33; cf. also Rom. 15:33; 16:20; Phil. 4:9; 1 Thess. 5:23; Heb. 13:20). The wide-ranging scope of salvation is shown by the fact that peace is linked with → love (agapē) in 2 Cor. 13:11; with → grace (charis) especially in the introductions to the epistles (Rom. 1:7; 1 Cor. 1:3; 2 Cor. 1:2; Gal. 1:3; Eph. 1:2; Phil. 1:2; Col. 1:2; 1 Thess. 1:1; 2 Thess. 1:2; 1 Tim. 1:2; 2 Tim. 1:2; Tit. 1:4; Phlm. 3; 1 Pet. 1:2; 2 Pet. 1:2; 2 Jn. 3; Jude 2; Rev. 1:4). It also features in closing salutations (Rom. 15:33; 16:20; 1 Cor. 16:11; 2 Cor. 13:11; Gal. 6:16; Eph. 6:23, cf. 15; Phil. 4:7, 9; 1 Thess. 5:23; 2 Thess. 3:16; Heb. 13:20; 1 Pet. 5:14; 2 Pet. 3:14; 3 Jn. 15). It is linked with → life (zōē) in

Rom. 8:6, where it is contrasted with → death (thanatos). Similarly in Jn. 16:33 there is an antithesis between peace and tribulation (thlipsis; → Persecution). Peace comes from him who is, who was, and who is to come (Rev. 1:4; cf. Heb. 7:2, a reference to → Melchizedek as a type of the king of peace, basileus eirēnēs). The Gospel of Jn. insists that this peace differs not only quantitatively but also qualitatively from that of the world (Jn. 16:33) in that it is given by Christ himself. Peace in heaven and → glory (doxa) in the highest (Lk. 19:38) also form part of the expected salvation. Peace, if it is to exist at all, must be all-embracing.

(b) Christ is the mediator of peace. He brings in the kingdom of God and is the bearer of reconciliation (Rom. 5:1; Col. 1:20; Lk. 2:14 and 1:79, referring to the birth of Jesus and John respectively). (On Lk. 2:14 → Man, art. anthrōpos NT 1; → Please, art. eudokeō NT 3 (c).) Indeed, he himself is peace (Eph. 2:14–18), as is Yahweh in the OT. While the Gospel of Jn. stresses Christ's gift of peace to his disciples (Jn. 14:27), Christ's missionary discourses make the point that his commissioned followers are to pass it on to others. If it is refused by those to whom it is offered, then it returns to the disciples (Lk. 10:5 f.; Matt. 10:13). The salutation in profane Gk. chairein kai eirēnē (much used at the beginning of letters) is deepened in the greetings of the Pauline epistles (→ Book, art. epistolē NT).

Thus in the NT eirēnē is described as the peace of Christ (Col. 3:15) and as the gift of the Father and the Son (Rom. 1:7; 1 Cor. 1:3 and passim). It is both obtained and maintained through communion with Christ (Jn. 16:33; Phil. 4:7; 1 Pet. 5:14). The whole process of believers' sanctification, preservation and perfecting (1 Thess. 5:23; Heb. 13:20) serves to deepen their participation in the peace of God, and → Satan, who is constantly trying to hinder this work, will be crushed by God himself (Rom. 16:20). Peace may, however, go unrecognized (Lk. 19:42); it may be forgotten and obscured (Rom. 3:12, 17), or refused (Lk. 10:5 f.; Matt. 10:13). In Heb. 13:20, the phrase en panti agathō may be translated "in every good work", or "in all that is good". Therefore, it can have either a moral and ethical meaning, or it can refer to believers' well-being in the broadest sense of the term. Similarly, in 2 Thess. 3:16 the phrase dia pantos en panti tropō, everywhere and in all ways, may include all the benefits of peace (well-being, health, happiness, harmony). But if there is a conflict between these benefits and the peace of God itself, then they must be surrendered, or else there will be disharmony instead of peace (Lk. 12:51 ff.). There is no room for false peace. By its very nature peace is grounded in the righteousness and wholeness which God gives to man for the sake of Christ and his merits (LTK IV 367).

3. Peace, in the sense of wholeness both for men and the world (2 Cor. 5:17; Gal. 6:15), brings a newness to human relationships. Hence the injunction: Be at peace with one another (Mk. 9:50; cf. 2 Cor. 13:11, in association with to auto phroneite, be of one → mind) and with all men wherever possible (see above NT 2 (b)) and so far as it depends upon you (Rom. 12:18). The kingdom of God is righteousness and peace (Rom. 14:17) in the sense of establishing righteous harmony among men. The church is upbuilt in peace, and in the → joy of the Holy Spirit (Rom. 14:17, 19). The peace to which the church is called (1 Cor. 7:15) is the gift of God (see above 2 (b); 1 Pet. 1:2; Jude 2), who fills men with it (Rom. 15:13). It is God who causes it to rule in the heart of men and so reign in the Christian community (Col. 3:15), and manifest itself as the → fruit of the Spirit (Gal. 5:22). God in Christ has come preaching peace (euangelizomenos eirēnēn, Acts 10:36, quoting Isa. 52:7; cf. also Eph. 2:17; → Gospel).

2 Tim. 2:22 and Heb. 12:14 emphasize that peace in the sense of concord and harmony is to be pursued not only in the church but among men generally, so far as is possible (TDNT II 416 f.; cf. Eph. 4:3; 1 Pet. 3:11 quoting Ps. 34:15; Jas. 3:18). Matt. 5:9 states the beatitude: "Blessed are the peacemakers [eirēnopoioi], for they shall be called sons of God." The word eirēnopoios is an adj. meaning making peace, used only here in the NT as a noun, peacemaker. It is rare in secular Gk. (e.g. Xen., 6, 3, 4; Cornutus 16 p. 23, 2; Dio Cass., 44, 49, 2; 72, 15, 5; Plut., Mor. 279b; Pollux, 152; Philo, Spec.Leg. 2, 192), where it is applied in particular to emperors. But in the context of Matt. it is more likely to have a Heb. background, suggesting what to the Jewish hearer would be implied by šālôm. It may also be related to the saying in Matt. 5:48: "You, therefore, must be perfect [teleioi], as your heavenly Father is perfect." With regard to this concept, G. Barth comments: "Matthew does not use teleios in the Greek sense of the perfect ethical personality, but in the Old Testament sense of the wholeness of consecration to God, as the close relationship with the use of tāmîm in 1QS shows. That discipleship itself is 'perfection' and not merely the way to it follows above all from the fact that the necessity of imitation in suffering is not grounded primarily on a goal envisaged in the future but on belonging to the suffering Son of man" (op. cit., 101; cf. 1 QS 1:8 f.; 2:3; 4:22; 5:24; 8:1, 9, 18, 20; 9:2, 5 f., 8 f., 19; 11:11, 17; see above OT 1 (c)). The disciple who is perfect in the sense of bringing the wholeness which comes from God alone and which is intimately bound up with his presence is one who brings peace in the fullest sense of the term šālôm. As such, he is a son of God fulfilling the destiny and title of Israel (cf. Deut. 14:1; Hos. 1:10; Ps.Sol. 17:30; Wis. 2:13, 18). "The peacemakers are the true Israel and acknowledged by God as his children" (T. W. Manson, The Sayings of Jesus, 1947, 151).

4. The adj. eirēnikos occurs only at Heb. 12:11 and Jas. 3:17. In Heb. "the peaceful fruit of righteousness" is said to spring from → discipline (→ also Patience, art. hypomonē). This leads on to the exhortation to "Strive for peace with all men, and for the holiness without which no one will see the Lord" (Heb. 12:14), which is followed by the example of the "immoral and irreligious" Esau (Heb. 12:16; cf. Gen. 25:29–34). Esau's action in trading his birthright shows a failure to seek peace and holiness, by allowing a "root of bitterness" to spring up (Heb. 12:15; cf. Deut. 29:18 LXX). In Jas. 3:17 eirēnikos is also associated with fruit, but here in particular with wisdom. "But the wisdom from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, open to reason, full of mercy and good fruits, without uncertainty or insincerity."

5. The vb. eirēnopoieō is found only at Col. 1:20 where it refers to the cosmic scope of the reconciling death of Christ: "For in him all the fullness of God was pleased to dwell, and through him to reconcile to himself all things, whether on earth or in heaven, making peace [eirēnopoiēsas] by the blood of the cross." The verse is possibly part of a quotation from an early Christian hymn (cf. E. Lohse, Colossians and Philemon, Hermeneia, 1971, 59). The vb. occurs in Prov. 10:10 and Isa. 27:5. On the idea of cosmic reconciliation see Asc.Isa. 11:23 and Lohse, op. cit., 60 f.; also → Blood; → Reconciliation; → Fullness. The aor. of the Gk.

here is better translated as "having made peace", since it refers to the historic event of the → cross (cf. Col. 2:13 ff.).

6. In at least one passage (Rom. 15:13) peace is to be understood as a power which, together with → joy, can pervade the whole person: "May the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing, so that by the power of the Holy Spirit you may abound in hope" (Rom. 15:13; → Hope; → Fullness, art. plēroō). This peace is neither the Stoic's withdrawal from the world nor a pious flight into spirituality and mystical contemplation. It is the joyful assurance of sharing already the peace of God as one goes through life and looks to eternity.

H. Beck, C. Brown

(a). J. I. Durham, "šālôm and the Presence of God", in J. I. Durham and J. R. Porter, eds., Proclamation and Presence: Old Testament Essays in Honour of Gwynne Henton Davies, 1970, 272–92; W. Foerster and G. von Rad, eirēnē etc., TDNT II 400–20; H. Gross, "Peace", EBT II 648–51; J. Pedersen, Israel: Its Life and Culture, I–II, 1926, 263–335; E. Stauffer, New Testament Theology, 1955, 143–46.
(b). K. Bernhardt, ed., Schalom. Studien zum Glaube und Geschichte Israels. A. Jepsen Zum 70. Geburtstag, AzTh 46, 1971; E. Biser, Wege des Friedens, 1961; H. Braun, Qumran und des Neue Testament, 1966; W. Caspari, Vorstellung und Wort "Friede" im Alten Testament, 1910; J. Comblin, Theologie des Friedens, 1963; W. Eichrodt, Die Hoffnung des ewigen Friedens im Alten Israel, 1920; H. Gross, Die Idee des ewigen und allgemeinen Friedens im Alten Orient und im Alten Testament, 1956; W. S. Leeuwen, Eirenē in het NT, 1940; W. Nestle, Der Friedensgedanke in der antiken Welt, Philologus Supplement 31, 1938; N. Peters, Weltfriede und Propheten, 1917; A. Pujol, "De Salutione Apostolorum 'Gratia vobis et pax' ", Verbum Domini 12, 1932, 38–42, 76–82; F. Sauer, Die Friedensbotschaft der Bibel, 1954; E. Schlick and E. Biser, "Friede I", LTK IV 266 ff.; J. J. Stamm and H. Bietenhard, Der Weltfriede im Alten und Neuen Testament, 1959; O. H. Steck, Friedensvorstellungen im Alten Jerusalem, Psalmen, Jesaja, Deuterojesaja, 1972; E. Vogt, "Pax hominibus bonae voluntatis", Biblica 34, 1953, 427 ff.; H. W. Wolff, Friede ohne Ende. Eine Auslegung von Jes. 7, 1–7 und 9, 1–6, BSt 35, 1962; J. Zingerle," Die Weissagungen des Propheten Jesaias (11, 6–8) vom messianischen Friedensreich", ZKT 4, 1880, 651–61.

Pentecost, Feast of πεντηκοστή πεντηκοστή (pentēkostē), Pentecost.

OT 1. pentēcostē is a fem. noun formed from the numeral pentēkostos, fiftieth, which is found in cl. Gk. from Plato onwards. In inscriptions and ostraca hē pentēkostē (meris) is a technical term meaning "the fiftieth (part)", i.e. 2%. But in Jewish and Christian literature the word stands for hē pentēkostē hēmera, the fiftieth day, referring to the festival celebrated on the fiftieth day after Passover (Tob. 2:1; 2 Macc. 12:32; Philo, Decal. 160; Spec.Leg. 2, 176; Josephus, Ant. 3, 252; 13, 252; 14, 337; 17, 254; War 1, 253; 2, 42; 6, 299; → Feast, art. pascha). In Deut. 16:10 it is the ḥag šāḇu'ôṯ, the feast of weeks (in rabbinic writings the ḥag ḥ^{a}mîššîm yôm, the feast of fifty days).

Pentecost was the second great feast of the Jewish year, a harvest festival, when the first-fruits of the wheat harvest were presented to Yahweh. It was celebrated seven weeks after the beginning of the barley harvest (hence "Feast of Weeks"), 50 days after the Passover (hence "Pentecost"). For accounts see Exod. 23:16; 34:22; Lev. 23:15–21; Num. 28:26–31; Deut. 16:9–12; Philo, Spec.Leg. 2, 176–88; Josephus, Ant. 3, 252 ff.

2. Jewish thinking about Pentecost developed during the period before and after Jesus.

(a) Pentecost has become the feast of covenant renewal in Jub. 6:17–21 (c. 100 B.C.) and probably also in the Qumran community (J. T. Milik, Ten Years of Discovery in the Wilderness of Judaea, SBT 26, 1959, 117; cf. 1QS 1:16–2:18), an association already implied in 2 Chr. 15:10–12 (cf. G. Kretschmar, "Himmelfahrt und Pfingsten", Zeitschrift für Kirchengeschichte 66, 1954–55, 226 ff.). This almost certainly meant a link between Pentecost and the covenant of Sinai in particular: both Ex. 19:1 and 2 Chr. 15:10 specify "the third month" (the month during which Pentecost was celebrated), and the same link was made by the Samaritans (J. T. Milik, ibid.).

(b) In Philo the Sinai traditions are themselves developed. The heavenly voice at Sinai (Exod. 19:16–19) "sounded forth like the breath [pneuma] through a trumpet"; "the flame became articulate speech in the language familiar to the audience" (Decal. 33, 46). However, Philo did not associate the Sinai revelation with Pentecost.

(c) In rabbinic Judaism these two developments eventually came together. The association of Pentecost with the giving of the law becomes explicit (Pes. 68b) and the words of R. Johanan are frequently quoted (in various forms), that the (one) voice (at Sinai) divided into (seven voices and these into) seventy languages (so that all the nations heard in their own language) (cf. SB II 604 f.). The link between Pentecost and Sinai is not documented before the second century A.D. (SB II 601) and R. Johanan (died in A.D. 279).

NT 1. The Authenticity of the Pentecost Narrative. In Acts 2:1 Luke dates the giving of the → Spirit at Pentecost. Has Luke's account of the first Christian Pentecost been influenced by these Jewish traditions? Some scholars believe that such traditions play a primary rôle in shaping the narrative of Acts 2:1–13 (cf. E. Zeller, The Contents and Origin of the Acts of the Apostles Critically Examined, 1875, 202 ff.; A. Loisy, Les Actes des Apôtres, 1920, 184–95; E. Haenchen, The Acts of the Apostles, 1971, 166–89). However, the thesis cannot be sustained.

(a) Only one of the developments outlined above was already well established in pre-Christian Judaism – that is, Pentecost as the feast of covenant renewal (see above 2 (a)). But had Pentecost also become specifically the feast which celebrated the law-giving at Sinai? The answer is probably, Yes. The association was inevitable from the time that festivals became also celebrations of Israel's history (Passover, cf. Exod. 12:12 f., 17, 23–7, 39; Tabernacles, Lev. 23:43). The dating of the Sinai revelation to the third month (six to ten weeks after the Passover) must clearly have suggested the association. The giving of the law at Sinai was the most important of the covenants. And the custom of reading Exod. 19 at the Feast of Pentecost was probably already established in the century before Christ (cf. A. R. C. Leaney, The Rule of Qumran and its Meaning, 1966, 97 f.; J. C. Kirby, Ephesians, Baptism and Pentecost, 1968, 90–93).

(b) The Acts 2 tradition is significantly different from the rabbinic legends of Sinai (one heavenly voice from the mountain, proclaiming the law, in seventy languages; many human voices, inspired by the Spirit to praise God, in many languages). The earlier the legend the greater the differences from Acts 2. Philo's treatment of Exod. 19 appears to be nothing more than his own (typical) exposition of a biblical narrative (contrast Heb. 12:19), and the possible point of contact with Acts 2 are minimal.

(c) The rabbis' failure or refusal to recognize a link between Pentecost and Sinai (prior to 2nd century A.D.) is not decisive against the view that the link was already established before Christ. Their silence may simply reflect their low regard for Pentecost (it is the only feast to which no tractate is devoted in the Mishnah and Talmud), which in turn may be due to a reaction on their part against the high esteem accorded to Pentecost in the "heterodox Judaism" of the Essenes and Samaritans (see above 2 (a)). Similarly the Therapeutae regarded Pentecost as the chief feast of the year (Philo, Vit.Cont. 65 f.), a view Philo may well have shared (Spec.Leg. 2, 176 ff.). The Pharisees were also in dispute with the Sadducees on the dating of Pentecost (Menahoth 10:3).

We may conclude therefore that while Luke was probably aware of an already established association between Pentecost and the law giving at Sinai, there is no evidence that this or the more developed Sinai legends present in later rabbinic writings influenced his narrative in Acts 2. Consequently there is no evidence that the dating of the outpouring of the Spirit to Pentecost is due to Lucan redaction. On the contrary, the excitement of the next pilgrim feast day would be a very likely occasion for the first communal experience of Spirit following Jesus' resurrection. It is quite likely then that the Pentecost dating belongs to the original tradition underlying Acts 2 (cf. J. D. G. Dunn, Jesus and the Spirit, 1975, 139–42).

2. Significance of Pentecost for the earliest Christians. (a) Pentecost means first and foremost the outpouring of the Spirit promised by God for the end-time. Charismatic and ecstatic manifestations attributed to God's Spirit were as distinctive and significant a feature of earliest Palestinian Christianity as of later Hellenistic Christianity (cf. e.g. Matt. 3:11 par. Mk. 1:8, Lk. 3:16; Jn. 7:38 f.; Acts 2:38; 6:3 ff.; 8:14–7; 10:44–8; 18–25; 19:1–7; Rom. 8:9, 14 f.; 1 Cor. 12:13; Eph. 4:8; Heb. 2:4; 6:5). In particular, Pentecost was seen as the fulfilment of Joel 2:28; "in the last days" (Acts 2:17) is hardly typical of Lucan eschatology and is therefore probably primitive; and the language of Joel 2:28 ("pour out") has stamped itself on early Christian talk of the Spirit (Acts 2:17 f., 33; 10:45; Rom. 5:5; Tit. 3:6). Acts 20:16 may even indicate that the Jerusalem church observed Pentecost as the anniversary of the Spirit's outpouring (cf. 1 Cor. 16:18; G. Kretschmar, op. cit., 247–53), though the thesis that Eph. is constructed on the basis of a Pentecostal renewal of the covenant baptismal liturgy (cf. J. C. Kirby, op. cit.) is built on too flimsy a foundation. That the first Christian Pentecost was an ecstatic experience involving vision (sound like wind, tongues as of fire) and glossolalia is clearly indicated by the tradition in Acts 2:1–13. In addition, the impression that the glossolalia included recognizable languages may well stem from those whose conversion to the new sect dated from that occasion (cf. similar claims in modern Pentecostalism; J. D. G. Dunn, op. cit., 146–52; → Other, art. allos, heteros.NT 2; → Word, art. glōssa).

(b) This first Pentecost resulted in an enthusiastic community, bound together by common loyalty to the risen and soon coming Jesus and by their common experience of Spirit (Acts 3:19 f.) – the resurrection of Jesus and the gift of Spirit both constituting the beginning of the end-time harvest of final resurrection (Rom.

8:23; 1 Cor. 15:20, 23). Otherwise hardly distinct from the rest of Judaism, they doubtless regarded themselves as constituting eschatological Israel (cf. Matt. 16:18 f.; 19:28; Acts 1:6, 21 f.; J. D. G. Dunn, op. cit., 158–63). The Spirit was experienced primarily as the prophetic Spirit, in accordance with Jewish expectation (thus explicitly, Joel 2:28). This was seen as the privilege of all and not the prerogative of a few (Acts 2:17 f., 38 f.). The already established link between Pentecost, covenant renewal and the giving of the law probably prompted the first believers to interpret their experience of Spirit as the fulfilment of the promise of a new → covenant, as the → law written in their hearts (Deut. 30:6; Jer. 31:31–4; Ezek. 36:26 f.; 37:14; cf. Acts 2:38 f.; 3:25; 1 Cor. 11:25; Heb. 10:15 f., 29). But the implications of this insight for continuing faith and conduct were not recognized and elaborated until Paul (Rom. 2:28 f.; 7:6; 2 Cor. 3; Gal. 3:1–4:7; Phil. 3:3; Col. 2:11; 1 Thess. 4:8).

(c) The outpouring of the Spirit was probably attributed to the exalted Jesus from early on, as is implied by the tradition of the Baptist's predictions (Matt. 3:11 par. Lk. 3:16; cf. Acts 1:5; 11:16) and by Acts 2:33 (cf. 16:6 f.), perhaps also by Rom. 8:15 f.; Gal. 4:6; and the "faithful saying" of Tit. 3:5–7. But the relation between the exalted Jesus and the Spirit does not appear to have been the subject of much reflection prior to Paul and John. The suggestion that the Acts 2 narrative stems from a variant tradition of the resurrection appearance to "more than five hundred brethren" (E. von Dobschütz, Ostern und Pfingsten, 1903, 31–43) can hardly be sustained; the two traditions have no real point of contact. On the other hand, it is probable that most of the resurrection appearances listed by Paul in 1 Cor. 15:5–8 took place after Pentecost (J. D. G. Dunn, op. cit., 142–6).

3. Significance of Pentecost for Luke. (a) In his narrative Luke emphasizes some of the above points. It is important for Luke that Pentecost is the fulfilment of the divine promise (Lk. 24:49; Acts 1:4; 2:33, 38 f.; cf. 2:1; see E. Lohse "Die Bedeutung des Pfingstberichtes im Rahmen des lukanischen Geschichtswerkes," EvTh 13, 1953, 422–36). Thus it is also the fulfilment of covenant promise (2:39; 3:25; 13:23, 32; 26:6), emphasizing the rôle of Pentecost as the institution of the new → covenant. So too his description of events before and after Pentecost underlines that for Luke Pentecost is the birthday of the church (2:38, 41, 42, 43–7). And for Luke the Spirit of Pentecost is pre-eminently the prophetic Spirit, the inspirer of speech (Acts 2:4, 18 – note the addition of "and they shall prophesy"; 4:8, 31; 6:10; 10:46; 13:9; 19:6; → Prophet).

(b) Luke presents Pentecost as the beginning of world mission. The implementation of the programme of Acts 1:8 awaits Pentecost. Those who bear witness to the effects of the Spirit's outpouring and hear the gospel proclaimed by Peter represent "every nation under heaven" (2:5), while the appended list of nationalities embraces a wide sweep of the eastern Mediterranean, though with some odd omissions (2:9–11). The glossolalia is explicitly identified as the languages spoken by these foreign Jews (2:4, 6, 8, 11; cf. 1 Cor. 13:1; but contrast 1 Cor. 14:2; → Other, art. allos, heteros NT 2; → Word, art. glōssa). Finally, Peter's sermon ends with an open invitation and offer of the promised Spirit to "all that are far off" (2:39).

(c) Luke plays down the eschatological dimension of Pentecost-engendered enthusiasm. Whereas for the earliest Christians Pentecost was seen as the precursor of the end (see above 2 (b)), Luke strives to present Pentecost as the beginning of a whole new epoch of salvation-history. This motif is already implicit in the fact that Pentecost begins a second volume rather than rounding off the first (cf. Acts 1:1 ff. with Luke 1:1–4). But it becomes most explicit in the sharp distinction that Luke draws between the epoch of Jesus, ended by resurrection appearances and ascension, and Pentecost, the beginning of the epoch of the Spirit. The two are clearly separated by the ten day "interregnum" when neither risen Jesus nor inspiring Spirit are in evidence and the election of Matthias has to revert to the old epoch's use of lots (Acts 1:26). The "last days" of the Spirit (Acts 2:17) seem to stretch over Luke's horizon (see J. D. G. Dunn, Baptism in the Holy Spirit, SBT Second Series 15, 1970, 44 ff.).

4. Significance of Pentecost for the Fourth Gospel. Jn. 20:22 may properly be called "the Johannine Pentecost", though not because John is contesting the Lucan dating of the outpouring of the Spirit, but rather because he wishes to bring out other aspects of theological significance (J. D. G. Dunn, Baptism in the Holy Spirit, 173–82).

(a) In particular John wishes to emphasize that the gift of the Spirit is not to be separated from the event of Jesus' death, resurrection and ascension; it is the immediate and direct result and consequence of Jesus' "glorification" and "ascending" (6:62 f.; 19:30; cf. 3:3 with 3:13, and 19:34 with 7:38 f.).

(b) So too John wishes to affirm the immediate continuity between Jesus and the Spirit (contrast Luke, see above 3 (c)). The Spirit is the other Paraclete (14:16 f.) whose coming fulfils Jesus' promise to return and dwell in his disciples (14:18–24; → Advocate). The Spirit given by the ascended Jesus constitutes the body and blood of Jesus, that is, gives the believer share in the life of the risen, glorified Christ (6:62 f.; 4:14).

(c) John brings out the epochal significance of the Pentecostal Spirit even more clearly than Luke by his use of the word enephysēsen ("breathed") in 20:22. Clearly echoing the use of the same word in Gen. 2:7, Ezek. 37:9 and Wisd. 15:11, John thereby presents the act of Jesus as a new creation.

(d) Finally, the earlier emphasis on mission is retained by bracketing 20:22 with vv. 21 and 23; → forgiveness or retention of sins is a charismatic authority and part of Pentecostal mission; "the disciples" thereby commissioned are not "the twelve" or "the apostles" (never in John) but those gathered round Jesus during his passion (including women) who represent all who believe in Jesus (7:37 ff.).
→ Feast, → Gift, → Pour, → Spirit J. D. G. Dunn

(a). H. R. Boer, Pentecost and Missions, 1961; J. D. G. Dunn, Baptism in the Holy Spirit: A Re-examination of the New Testament Teaching on the Gift of the Spirit in relation to Pentecostalism today, SBT Second Series 15, 1970, 38–54, 173–82; and Jesus and the Spirit: A Study of the Religious Charismatic Experience of Jesus and the First Christians as Reflected in the New Testament, 1975, 135–56 (see also the bibliography, 457–75); S. M. Gilmour, "Easter and Pentecost", JBL 81, 1962, 62–6; J. H. E. Hull, The Holy Spirit in the Acts of the Apostles, 1967, 49–86; J. C. Kirby, Ephesians, Baptism and Pentecost: An Inquiry into the Structure and Purpose of the Epistle to the Ephesians, 1968; K. Lake, "The Gift of the Spirit on the Day of Pentecost", in F. J. Foakes Jackson and K. Lake, eds., The Beginnings of Christianity: The Acts of the Apostles, V, 1933, 111–21; C. S. Mann, "Pentecost in Acts" in J. Munck, The Acts of the Apostles, Anchor Bible, 1967, 271–75; B. M. Metzger, "Ancient Astrological Geography and Acts 2:9–11", in W. W. Gasque and R. P. Martin, eds., Apostolic History and the Gospel: Biblical and Historical Essays Presented to F. F. Bruce, 1970, 123–33; C. A. A. Scott. "What Happened at Pentecost", in B. H.

Streeter, ed., The Spirit, 1919, 117–57; C. F. Sleeper, "Pentecost and Resurrection", JBL 84, 1965, 189–99; H. J. Wotherspoon, What Happened at Pentecost?, 1937.
(b). N. Adler, Das erste christliche Pfingstfest, 1938; A. Cassien, La Pentecôte Johannique, 1939; E. von Dobschütz, Ostern und Pfingsten, 1903; J. Dupont, "La première Pentecôte chrétienne (Act. 2.1–11)", Études sur les Actes des Apôtres, 1967, 481–502; K. Haacker, "Das Pfingstwunder als exegetisches Problem", in O. Böcher und K. Haacker, eds., Verborum Veritas. Festschrift für Gustav Stählin, 1970, 125–32; J. Kremer, Pfingstbericht und Pfingstgeschehen, Stuttgarter Bibelstudien 63–64, 1973; G. Kretschmar, "Himmelfahrt und Pfingsten", Zeitschrift für Kirchengeschichte 66, 1954–55, 209–53; E. Lohse, "Die Bedeutung des Pfingstberichtes im Rahmen des lukanischen Geschichtswerkes", EvTh 13, 1953, 422–36; and pentēkostē, TDNT VI 44–53; K. L. Schmidt, Die Pfingsterzählung und das Pfingstereignis, 1919.

People, Nation, Gentiles, Crowd, City

The term people signifies a group of human beings who belong closely together because of a common history and a common country. In Gk. this concept is expressed most comprehensively and most frequently by the word ethnos. laos, on the other hand, is a term originating in the military sphere, and retains an archaic, political connotation. dēmos connotes the public nature of the people's assembly, while ochlos is the word for the crowd, the mass, the populace. polis has a definitely political character, signifying a community which lives together under a legal constitution, the city state.

The LXX and the NT have reserved for the old or new people of God the rarely used and not so precisely defined term laos, while other (pagan) peoples are generally called ethnikoi or ethnē (plur.). It may well be significant that the chief concept of Gk. political understanding, the polis, has only a peripheral place in the NT.

δῆμος

δῆμος (dēmos), people, populace, crowd, popular assembly; ἐκδημέω (ekdēmeō), leave one's country, emigrate, take a long journey; ἐνδημέω (endēmeō), be at home; παρεπίδημος (parepidēmos), foreigner, sojourner, stranger; δημόσιος (dēmosios), public.

CL 1. dēmos is derived from the root dai-, divide, and means originally, divided land, then district, province, subdivision of a people. But chiefly it means the people, popular assembly, commons, population. The word is used to refer to the people in contrast to the king, the nobility, or the men of power and landowners. In this kind of context it can have a derogatory sense. "But it can also have a proud ring, as in Athens, where it is used for the free, self-governing citizens" (W. Grundmann, TDNT II 63). In the Hellenistic period the term appears to have diminished in importance. This is connected with the general cultural development. Against the imperialism and expansionism of the Hellenistic and Roman empires, dēmos, like → polis, fell into the background.

2. Derived from dēmos are the vbs. endēmeō, to be in the homeland, at home, in the country, and ekdēmeō (from ekdēmos), to go abroad, go out of the country, travel. The latter is attested in Plato (Leg. 9, 864e; 12, 952d) and Hdt. (1, 30). endēmeo is not common until later (Plutarch, De Genio Socratis 6). A late form is parepidēmos (Polybius, 32, 6, 4), signifying a person who lives with another people in their lands. (For further examples see TDNT II 63 f.)

OT In the LXX the word dēmos is found about 100 times, chiefly to translate mišpāḥâh, family, clan, i.e. a smaller grouping within the whole people or tribe. dēmos is used about 50 times in Num. 3–4 and 26, and frequently also in Jos. (especially chapter 21). Other places where it is found are Jdg., Dan., 1 and 2 Macc. The word is not used in the prophets. In Jdg. 13:2 the tribe of Dan is called a mišpāḥâh, and the LXX consistently translates this by dēmos. In Dan. 8:24; 9:16 dēmos translates 'am, people. In 1 and 2 Macc. there are a number of references to the dēmos tōn Ioudaiōn, people of the Jews (1 Macc. 8:29; 12:6; 14:20–25; 15:17; 2 Macc. 11:34), a manner of description which in these writings can also be used of other peoples. The compounds are not found in the LXX, except for parepidēmos in Gen. 23:4 and Ps. 39:12 for Heb. tôšāḇ, sojourner.

NT 1. In the NT dēmos appears just 4 times in Acts. In Acts 12:22 it refers to the pagan people who were present at the audience which Agrippa I gave to the representatives of Tyre and Sidon, and who flattered him in a blasphemous fashion. In Acts 17:5 it is uncertain whether the popular assembly is meant (W. M. Ramsay, St. Paul the Traveller and the Roman Citizen, 1903[7], 228), before which the apostles are to be brought in Thessalonica, or simply the throng of people who are present (E. Haenchen, The Acts of the Apostles, 1971, 507). In Acts 19:30, 33, it is clearly the crowd that is meant, and not an assembly called according to the legal provisions, as v. 39 demonstrates; dēmos is parallel to → ochlos (v. 33).

2. ekdēmeō, to be out of the country, abroad, and endēmeō, to be in the homeland, at home, in the land, are found in the NT only in 2 Cor. 5:6–9, where each is used three times.

Paul longs for the fulfilment of Christ's work and his parousia (2 Cor. 4:18; 5:10), when according to 1 Cor. 15:43 f., 48–53 he will receive a new → body. Now he contrasts here two realms of existence, or kinds of life, with one another: the this-worldly, present, earthly life, and the other-worldly, future, heavenly. In the present time he, like all men, has an earthly body: endēmountes en tō sōmati, "we are at home in the body." That means, however, at the same time that he is not living with Christ, in the other-worldly, heavenly sphere of existence. He is thus "away from the Lord [ekdēmountes apo tou kyriou]"; he is as it were abroad, not among his own dēmos to which he belongs. The clear and visible evidence of this is the earthly body in which he lives. Only in faith, which is a gift of God, a guarantee (2 Cor. 5:5) of the world to come, can the gap between this world and that – or the present and the future – be bridged, and even then not visibly (v. 7). For this reason there grows out of faith the desire and longing to be with Christ and to enjoy full fellowship with him. This is possible only when one leaves this body, when one goes away from the body (ekdēmēsai ek tou sōmatos) and comes to Christ, to be at home with the Lord (endēmēsai pros ton kyrion, v. 8). Then the Christian will live in full fellowship with the Lord. The present is therefore marked by the combination of "not yet" and "but already": the Christian is not yet perfect, not yet with Christ, but he lives by faith in the certain hope that the consummation will come, when he will be united with Christ. Always, however, whether in the future when at home with the Lord (eite endēmountes) or in the present earthly life, away from home (eite ekdēmountes), Paul strives to be pleasing to Christ (v. 9). From a stylistic point of view it is interesting to note how Paul plays throughout this passage on the vbs. endēmeō and ekdēmeō and their reference to the present and future.

3. apodēmeō, to go out of the country, to travel, is found 6 times in the NT, all in synoptic parables. Matt. 21:33 par. Mk. 12:1, Lk. 20:9 tell of a man (Matt. calls him a householder, oikodespotēs) who let out his vineyard to tenants and went out of the country (on this parable see J. D. M. Derrett, Law in the New Testament, 1970, 286–312). In the parable of the talents the man who is about to go out of the country (apodēmōn) gives his property to his servants to manage (Matt. 25:14), and goes away (apedēmēsen, v. 15) (on the parable see J. D. M. Derrett, op. cit., 17–31). In the parable of the prodigal son the younger son took his share of the inheritance and made a journey (apedēmēsen, Lk. 15:13) into a far country. In the parables of the wicked husbandmen and the talents apodēmeō represents God's absence and the fact that he has given his people an autonomy and responsibility of which they shall have to give account. In the parable of the prodigal son it represents the action of the son is going away from God. In the context of Lk. 15:1 it characterizes the kind of life led by the "tax collectors and sinners" who "were all drawing near to hear him."

4. The word parepidēmos, foreigner, sojourner, which is derived from parepidēmeō, to stay for a short time in a strange place, occurs 3 times in the NT (1 Pet. 1:1; 2:11, Heb. 11:13; → Foreign, art. parepidēmos).

5. dēmosios means public, i.e. belonging to the state (Acts 5:18). In the dat. form dēmosia it is used as an adv., publicly (Acts 16:37; 18:28; 20:20).

H. Bietenhard

ἔθνος

ἔθνος (ethnos), nation, people, heathen, pagans, Gentiles; ἐθνικός (ethnikos), heathen, Gentile; ἐθνικῶς (ethnikōs), like the Gentiles.

CL ethnos, derived from ethos, custom, habit, means a group which is held together by customs, a clan; then, crowd, company, people. The word came to be used in the derogatory sense of common people. ethnos is especially used to mean foreigners, in contrast to the → Greek who is a Hellene (Aristotle, Pol. 1324b, 10). This gives ethnos a derogatory undertone, which approaches barbaros, non-Greek, barbarian. Later ethnos was used to describe subject peoples.

OT 1. ethnos appears in the LXX about 1000 times (mostly in plur.), and in the overwhelming majority of cases it stands for the Heb. gôy and the plur. gôyim, though in something over 130 cases for 'am (→ laos). The various other Heb. words which are translated ethnos are by comparison unimportant. Where mention is made of many peoples, particularly when they are non-Israelite, the plur. 'ammîm is also translated ethnē, not laoi (Exod. 19:5 f.). There is thus a contrast between 'am or → laos, i.e. Israel as the chosen people, and gôyim or ethnē, the Gentiles. The Eng. Gentile derives from the Lat. gens, nation, which was used in the Vulg., and means of or pertaining to any or all the nations other than the Jewish nation. ethnē appears relatively seldom in Exod., Lev., Num., Jos., and Chr., and much more frequently in Gen., Deut., Pss., and the prophets.

2. Israel is the people for God's own possession (Exod. 19:5), while the rest of mankind outside → Israel are called the ethnē, the nations (Deut. 4:27; 18:9). A typical passage is Exod. 33:13, where ethnos is the multitude which by Yahweh's grace becomes his people (→ laos). The contrast is just as stark in Deut. 7:6. Yahweh has separated the ethnē over the earth and fixed their bounds according to the number of the angels of God (angelōn theou, LXX, followed in RSV and confirmed by a Hebrew fragment of Deut. 32 from Qumran; but the MT has bᵉnê yiśrā'ēl, sons of Israel). But Jacob as Yahweh's portion has become the laos of God (Deut. 32:8 f. LXX). On the other hand, Yahweh is certainly seen as King over the nations (Jer. 10:7). This is the point behind Gen. 10, where the thought is not of a uniform humanity sprung from the earliest patriarchs, but of "a group of nations divided according to clans and differing in language, custom and situation" (G. Bertram, TDNT II 367).

The Gentiles are first Israel's neighbours, some of whom live in Palestine itself (Jdg. 3:1). They entice Israel into idolatry, and so to → fall away from Yahweh. Thus we often read of the "abominations of the Gentiles" (e.g. 1 Ki. 14:24; 2 Ki. 16:3). In the face of Israel's sin, the nations can often become the means and instruments of God's wrath and judgment (Hos. 8:10; Amos 9:9). But if they over-reach themselves and go beyond the commission given them by Yahweh, they incur judgment themselves (Isa. 8:9; 10:5). The break-up of the state is a punishment for the falling away of the people into heathen practices (1 Ki. 11:1 ff.; 2 Ki. 17:7–23). On the other hand, the Gentile Cyrus can be called God's anointed and become the saviour of Israel (Isa. 45:1 ff.). A universalizing tendency in the LXX may be detected in the fact that in Dan. 9:6 LXX the prophets are said to have reached to every people on earth. Over against the world empires there stands the kingdom of God (Dan. 4:34). In the end time the nations will come to Mount Zion and there share in salvation (cf. Isa. 2:2–4; 25:6–8; Mic. 4:1–3; Zech. 8:20–23). The nations await the messiah (Gen. 49:10 LXX). Thus the negative evaluation of the Gentile world is, in the last analysis, not lasting and permanent. Even in the present the name of Yahweh is to be glorified among all the Gentiles (Ps. 18:49; 46:10). Dan., Est. and Macc. tell of the troubles of the righteous under the domination of the Gentiles.

3. (a) Judaism. In Jub. 10:22 the origin of the nations is traced to human sin (cf. Gen. 11), whereas in 2 Esd. 3:7, 12 they are said to have arisen naturally (though after the fall), because God gave man the blessing of fertility.

(b) In the view of Rabbinic Judaism, the non-Israelite gôy is a stranger to God and far from him, counting for nothing. The Gentiles are themselves to blame for this state of affairs: they too were offered the Torah, but rejected God's instruction. They are, therefore, condemned to the judgment of → hell, without hope of salvation, and have no part in the world to come. Only in very exceptional cases is a share in the perfect world to come promised to pious Gentiles. The basic conception is formulated in this way: "Rabbi Simeon ben Yochai said: God spake to the Israelites: I am God over all men who come into the world, but my name I have joined only to you; I am called not the God of the nations of the world, but the God of Israel" (Exod. R. 29, 88d; cf. SB III 185). In the other words, God is the creator of all, but he loves Israel alone.

As individuals, Gentiles have been given up to every possible vice (idolatry, immorality). In Jewish eyes the Gentiles were unclean: they themselves, their wives and children, their houses and lands (SB I 540, 571; II 838; IV 374 f.). If in an exceptional instance they do something good, God rewards them at once, in in order to avoid having to reward them in the world to come. The punishment for their sins is delayed by God until the measure is full; then judgment falls upon them. In contrast to Israel, the Gentile world has no eternal existence. The great turning-point will be the messianic age: then the nations who have made Israel their subjects (especially Rome!) will be destroyed by the messiah and finish up in hell. Other nations who have had no contact with Israel will be subjected to the messiah who will thus become ruler of the world. As far as religion is concerned, in the view of one universalistic school of thought, the Gentiles will then be given access to the blessings of Israel's salvation. The messiah is the → light of the Gentiles, who will flock around him; he will save all Gentiles who call on God, and many of them will join themselves to Israel as proselytes.

The political catastrophes of the years A.D. 66–70 and 132–135 created great bitterness among the Jews. The view arose that in the messianic age there would be no more proselytes. Only a person who joins himself to Israel during the time of his sufferings can be a proselyte. Nevertheless, the messiah will lay upon the nations thirty commandments, in order that they may become as much like Israel as possible. But they remain Gentiles, and in the final onslaught of the nations (Gog and Magog) they will join in the attack upon Israel (SB III 120 f., 139–42, 144–55).

(c) Jewish missionary activity and proselytism. In the pre-Christian era and up to A.D. 70 the Jews, particularly the Hellenistic Jews, carried out a strong propaganda and missionary activity or, to be more precise, proselytism (cf. Philo, Vit.Mos. 2, 4, 7). Matt. 23:15 indicates that this was also true of the Palestinian Jews. Josephus (cf. Ap. 2, 10, 36), Seneca, Dio Cassius and others bear witness to the great success of this propaganda (cf. also the many half or full proselytes whom Paul met, according to Acts, in the Jewish Diaspora; → Conversion, art. prosēlytos). A spectacular conversion was that of the royal house of Adiabene (in northern Iraq) to Judaism around A.D. 44 (Josephus, Ant. 20, 2, 4), which was won over by a Palestinian Jew by the name of Eleazar. The number of Jews in the Roman Empire was as a result of this propaganda disproportionately high, viz. some 6–8% of the population.

The position changed after A.D. 70 and A.D. 135, and from then onwards the making of proselytes declined greatly. Those who wanted to become proselytes had to come of their own initiative, though they were received in a friendly manner. An added difficulty arose in A.D. 135, when the emperor Hadrian forbade people to become Jews. It was at this point that the Christians got their great opportunity, for their Jewish rivals were disqualified. Even so, the church was not always clearly distinguished from Judaism (cf. W. H. C. Frend, Martyrdom and Persecution in the Early Church, 1965, 225–8).

(d) Qumran. The linguistic usage of the Qumran writings is not completely consistent. Usually the nations are called gôy or gôyim, but occasionally also 'am, 'ammîm. In each case the context in which the word is used must be studied with care. The attitude to Gentiles is completely negative. The Gentile nations are idol-worshippers, without God (1QpHab 12:13; 13:3 f.) and enemies of God (1QM 12:11). God commits the judgment of all nations into the hands of his chosen ones

(1QpHab 5:4). The War Scroll depicts a great forty-years war in the end time which is directed against all Gentile nations, and in which they will be destroyed (1QM 1:1–7; 2:10–15 and passim). In this way the nations will reap the reward of their wickedness (1QM 6:6). Emphasis is given to the fact that it will be the Qumran people themselves, the "sons of light", who will carry out this work of punishment and destruction (1QM 11:8 f.; 14:7). No foreigner or stranger will enter the eschatological temple (1Qflor 1:4); but the riches of the nations will be brought in through the gates of Jerusalem (1QM 12:14; 19:6; cf. Isa. 60:3, 5 and in the NT Rev. 21:24).

For the present comfort may be taken from the knowledge that God will not allow his people ('am) to be destroyed by the hand of the nations (gôyim, 1QpHab 5:3). A somewhat different note is struck in 1QH 6:12 f.: "All the nations [gôyim] shall acknowledge Thy Truth, and all the peoples [l^e'ummîm] Thy glory. For Thou wilt bring Thy glorious [salvation] to all the men of Thy Council, to those who share a common lot with the Angels of the Face."

NT In the NT ethnos occurs 162 times, including 43 in Acts and 54 in the Pauline letters. It is used about 40 times in quotations from the OT. The ethnē mean all peoples, as is often made clear by the epithet panta, all (cf. Matt. 24:9; 28:19; Mk. 11:17; Lk. 21:24; Rom. 15:11).

1. (a) Even the Jewish people can be called ethnos (in 14 places, e.g. Lk. 7:5; 23:2; Acts 10:22). In the NT it no longer has as matter of course the meaning which overwhelmingly predominates in the OT, i.e. → laos. The context or qualifying phrases makes it clear in each of these cases that the reference is to Jews. In other places, however, (e.g. Acts 26:23) a clear distinction is drawn between → laos, the people of → Israel, and the ethnē or Gentiles. John's Gospel in particular calls Israel ethnos, because he sets himself against faith in Jesus Christ (Jn. 11:48, 50 ff.; 18:35).

(b) ethnē clearly refers to Gentiles in Matt. 4:15 (cf. Isa. 8:23); 20:25; Lk. 21:24; Acts 4:25 (cf. Ps. 2:1 f.); 7:7; 13:19; Rom. 1:5; Gal. 3:8 (the reference to Abraham makes it clear that Gentile nations are meant); Rev. 10:11; 14:8; 15:3 f.

2. In about 100 instances ethnos is used in contrast to Jews and Christians. The disciples of Jesus are told to pray differently from the ethnē (Matt. 6:32), and not to be anxious like them (Lk. 12:30). Gentiles are mentioned alongside → Samaritans (Matt. 10:5). Jesus teaches the future salvation of the Gentiles, although he was sent only to the Jews (Matt. 8:10 f.; 15:24). In the judgment which will come upon → Jerusalem the Gentiles will tread it down until the times of the Gentiles are fulfilled (Lk. 21:24). One of the horrors of the end-time will be the rising of nation against nation (Matt. 24:7 par. Mk. 13:8, Lk. 21:10).

3. The distinction between Jews and Gentiles is spoken of chiefly in Acts and the epistles, i.e. in the missionary documents of the NT. God is not the God of the Jews only, but also of the Gentiles (Rom. 3:29; Rev. 15:3), but the Gentiles do not know God (1 Thess. 4:5) and are led astray to idols (1 Cor. 12:2). They do not know the → law of God and do not keep it (Gal. 2:15); they live in the futility of their minds (Acts 14:16; Eph. 4:17). Although the word ethnos is not used, the Gentiles are meant in Rom. 1:18–32, where Paul speaks of men who do not know God, have fallen into idolatry, and have therefore been given up by God to all kinds of evil. Nevertheless, there are ethnē who fulfil the requirements of the law (Rom. 2:14 f.; → God, art. theos NT 4 (b)). The Gentiles begin life outside the → call of God and outside the salvation of God's people (Eph. 2:11 f.). Jews and Gentiles are alike in rejecting the cross (1 Cor. 1:23).

4. Occasionally Paul can call Gentile Christians simply ethnē (Rom. 11:13; Gal. 2:12; cf. also Eph. 3:1), although the ethnē usually stand in contrast to the Christians (1 Cor. 5:1; 12:2; 1 Pet. 2:12).

5. (a) There is a soteriological distinction and contrast between Jews and Gentiles: Israel is the people whom God has appointed for his own → possession and his service. The Gentiles are outside this unique relationship. By God's own act, however, the difference has been overcome: the messiah has come in the person of Jesus, and now even those born Gentiles have a share in God's → covenant and salvation. (This is in keeping with universalistic thinking in contemporary Judaism.) Thus Peter discovers that the God-fearing Gentile is acceptable to God, so that the Holy → Spirit can come upon him, and Gentiles accept the gospel (Acts 10:35, 45; 11:1, 18; cf. Eph. 2:11 f., 17–22). In 1 Thess. 4:13; 5:6; Eph. 2:3 (cf. Rev. 9:20) hoi loipoi, "the rest", is practically a synonym for ta ethnē, "the Gentiles" (cf. F. M. Chase, The Syro-Latin Text of the Gospels, 1895, 93; M. Black, An Aramaic Approach to the Gospels and Acts, 1967³, 176).

(b) Paul is in a special way the apostle of the Gentiles, in the face of opposition from the Jews (1 Thess. 2:16). To him has been entrusted the mystery (→ Secret) that the Gentiles are called to Jesus Christ apart from the law (Gal. 1:16; 2:7–9; Rom. 1:5; cf. Eph. 3:1–13). This is not to say that Paul in any way denies the prior claim of the Jews. Rather, he strongly emphasizes it. Israel is and remains God's people, and therefore is in possession of all the gifts and titles which mark it out as different (Rom. 9:4 f.). The relationship of Jews to Gentiles is given fundamental treatment in Rom. 9–11 (cf. also Eph. 2 f.). The Gentiles who have come to faith in Jesus Christ have been grafted into the rich olive tree (Rom. 11:17; → Oil, art. elaion), and are supported by it. Hence, there can be no division between Christians and Gentiles. The Pauline churches consist both of born Jews and born Gentiles, and both belong to the people of God by faith in Jesus Christ. They are children of of Abraham by virtue of their faith (Rom. 4:16 f., cf. Gen. 17:5; Gal. 3:7, cf. Gen. 12:3; Gal. 3:13 f., 26–29). Gentiles, who have not pursued righteousness, have become recipients of the righteousness which comes by faith (Rom. 9:30). Salvation has come to them through the fall and unbelief of Israel (Rom. 11:11), and the failure of the Jews has meant riches for the Gentiles (Rom. 11:12). As the apostle to the Gentiles, Paul is seeking to save as many of the Gentiles as possible, in order ultimately to win the Jews for the gospel (Rom. 11:13 f.; cf. 10:19 where Deut. 32:21 is cited). When the full number of the Gentiles has come in, Israel too will turn to Christ (Rom. 11:11 f., 25). The Gentiles are no longer strangers (→ Foreign, art. xenos) and sojourners (→ Foreign, art. parepidēmos), but fellow citizens (sympolitai) and members (oikeioi) of the household of God (Eph. 2:19).

(c) Evidence of the priority of the Jews is apparent in the record of Acts, where Paul preaches to the Gentiles only after the Jews have rejected the gospel (Acts 13:46; 18:6; 19:9). The question of the mission to the Gentiles, as carried out by Paul, is discussed and settled at the so-called Council of Jerusalem (Acts 15). The Jews accuse Paul of teaching the Jews of the Diaspora (those who live among the ethnē) to forsake Moses (Acts 21:21).

6. According to Revelation, Christ has ransomed a church for himself out of every nation, and has made them his → kingdom and → priests (Rev. 5:9 f., following Exod. 19:6). Along with the chosen of Israel is an innumerable multitude from the Gentiles (Rev. 7:9). The exalted Christ will rule the nations with a rod of iron (Rev. 12:5; → Crown, art. rhabdos; → Gold, art. sidēros), and also gives authority to "him who conquers" to do so (Rev. 2:26 f.). He will smite them with the sword in his mouth (Rev. 19:15). In the time of the two witnesses, the temple court is given over to the Gentiles (Rev. 11:2). All nations will see the dead bodies of the two witnesses (Rev. 11:9). The beast has authority over all nations and peoples, whose name is not written in the book of life (Rev. 13:7 f.; → Animal). The eternal gospel will be preached to all nations (Rev. 14:6). As for the harlot → Babylon, all nations have drunk "the wine of her impure passion" and have been deceived by her sorcery (Rev. 14:8; 18:3, 23). In the judgments of God, the cities of the Gentiles will fall (Rev. 16:19). During the millennium Satan is unable to deceive the nations (Rev. 20:3; → Number, art. chilias), but does so again as soon as he is freed (Rev. 20:8). In God's new world the ethnē walk in the light of the new → Jerusalem, and bring their treasures into the new city (Rev. 21:24, 26).

7. ethnikos (adv. ethnikōs) means national, foreign, like a Gentile; and as a noun, Gentile. The word does not occur in the LXX; the adj. appears only 5 times times in the NT, and the adv. once. The Gentile salutes only his brothers; if any of Jesus' disciples behave in the same way, he makes himself like an ethnikos (Matt. 5:47). In prayer the disciple is not to heap up empty phrases (battalogeō) like the Gentiles (Matt. 6:7). M. Black suggests Gentiles here might represent an Aramaic phrase meaning "the rest of men", i.e. those who were not Jesus' disciples (cf. the Bezan text of Lk. 11:2; M. Black, An Aramaic Approach to the Gospels and Acts, 1967³, 176 ff.). He who refuses to listen to a rebuke by the church thereby cuts himself off and joins the Gentiles and unrepentant tax-collectors (Matt. 18:17; → Bind; → Open). In Antioch Peter had eaten with Gentile Christians and so transgressed the Jewish ritual regulations, thus living ethnikōs, like the Gentiles; Paul argues that he therefore can no longer force the Gentile Christians to observe the law (Gal. 2:14). For membership of the Jewish people, determined by the law, has now been superseded by the fellowship of faith in Christ, which unites Jewish and Gentile Christians. H. Bietenhard

λαός

λαός (laos), people.

CL laos (etymology of laos is uncertain; perhaps a foreign word) is a Doric and Aeolic form (Ionic lēos; Attic leōs). In Homer it means a number of men, a crowd (e.g. Il. 18, 497 ff.; 24, 665), and more specifically an army, a military company, men at arms, troops (e.g. Il. 1, 226; 9, 424; 10, 14). At a later period this meaning disappeared, and the word meant the common people, folk, population; in the plur., the multitude of individuals out of whom the people is made up (cf.

→ Church, art. ekklēsia; qāhāl in the OT). In addition to epic poetry (e.g. Od. 3, 214), the word is found in Hdt. (e.g. 8, 136), Pindar (e.g. Pythian Odes 9, 54 f.), the tragedians (e.g. Aesch. Persae 770) and Aristophanes (e.g. Ranae 676). But it is almost entirely lacking in Attic prose. It retains an archaic and solemn, poetic tone (even in Josephus, Ant. 4, 114).

OT 1. In the LXX the word occurs about 2,000 times, with a new meaning which brought it renewed life. The plur. (not quite 140 times) always means nations, and so is synonymous with → ethnē (cf. Ezek. 23:24, → ochlos laōn, a host of peoples, with Ezek. 31:12; laoi tōn ethnōn, the individual nations of the Gentile world, Ez. 9:11 LXX). In this expression laos could be interpreted as a group deliberately formed, and ethnos as a natural grouping bound by clan ties and a common descent.

laos often means the people, in contrast to the ruler or ruling class (cf. Gen. 41:40; 47:21; Exod. 1:22; Jer. 23:34), such as the inhabitants of a city (Gen. 19:4), the members of a tribe (Gen. 49:16), the people who accompanied Esau and the servants of Jacob (Gen. 33:15; 32:8; 35:6). Even the dead belong to it (Gen. 25:8; 49:33). These passages are not, however, typical for the LXX usage of the word.

2. To the translators of the LXX the term laos, derived from the language of high style and ceremony, and infrequently used in the Gk. of their time, seemed ideally suited for expressing the special relationship of → Israel to Yahweh. laos serves in the overwhelming majority of cases as a translation of the Heb. 'am and means Israel as the chosen people of God, just as, on the other hand, the Heb. gôy is used particularly for the Gentiles (ethnē).

About 10 times Israel is called the "people of Yahweh". In another 300 cases we find forms with a pronominal suffix (e.g. 'ammî, "my people"), where the suffix refers to Yahweh. On about 200 occasions Yahweh is called the "God of Israel"; again we must add more than 600 examples with a suffix referring to Israel. In the oldest passage we know in the OT where the expression 'am YHWH, "people of Yahweh", occurs it means the army, the levy of the people, as they march down to battle (Jdg. 5:11, 13). This meaning of the word is still found at a later period (2 Sam. 1:12). Corresponding to it – even before the Song of Deborah – is the expression "Yahweh, God of Israel" (Gen. 33:20; Jos. 8:30; 24:23; cf. Jdg. 5:3, 5; and likewise in the mouth of the people, "Yahweh our God", or in the mouth of Yahweh, "I am Yahweh your God").

3. (a) The tribes which came into Palestine from Egypt brought to Shechem, where the so-called "Leah tribes" had already settled, not only the worship of the God Yahweh, but also the phrase "people of Yahweh". When the two groups of tribes joined one another, the covenant formula was adopted: "Yahweh the God of Israel – Israel his people". Jos. 24:17 f. contains the statement, "Yahweh is our God" (cf. Exod. 24:9 f.); yet the specific pronouncement that Israel is Yahweh's people is still lacking. Admittedly, in the story of the call of → Moses, Yahweh says of Israel, "My people" (Exod. 3:7), "My people Israel" (Exod. 3:10; cf. the word to Pharaoh, Exod. 5:1; 7:16). Moses also speaks in the same way to Yahweh, calling Israel "Thy people" (Exod. 5:23). It is now, however, until the formation of the state that the identification of Israel with the people of Yahweh is clearly made

(1 Sam. 9:16 f.; 10:1). Yahweh's people is now no longer an army brought together by the call to battle, but all Israel, and that permanently. To be "prince" or "king" over Yahweh's people" is the honorific title of the kings (cf. 1 Sam. 13:14; 15:1; 2 Sam. 5:2; 1 Ki. 14:7).

The phrase "Yahweh, God of Israel" is of great importance, and is used particularly in formal speech: in swearing an oath (Jos. 9:18 f.), in prayer (Jdg. 21:3; 1 Sam. 23:10 f.; Ps. 69:6), in praising God (1 Ki. 1:48), or to introduce divine utterances (cf. Jos. 7:13; 1 Sam. 2:30; 1 Ki. 11:31; and often).

(b) In the prophetic crisis, when the relationship between Yahweh and the people has been broken (Isa. 1:3; 5:25), Yahweh turned in words of judgment and threats "against my people Israel" (Amos 7:8, 15; 8:2). To fall away and follow Baal is all the more serious to Yahweh, because for him Israel is "my people" (Hos. 4:6 ff.). The exhortation addressed to them is, therefore, "Return to your God" (Hos. 12:6). Hosea's third child is called lō'-'ammî, "not my people", and the reason given by Yahweh is "You are not my people, and I am not your God" (Hos. 1:9). For Israel has behaved as if she were not Yahweh's people. In contrast to this comes the eschatological promise, "You are my people" (Hos. 2:23); i.e. when Yahweh again turns to Israel, he will again become "My people".

(c) The important mutual declaration between Yahweh and Israel in Deut. 26:16–19, which was possibly pronounced at the → covenant ceremony which took place under king Josiah (cf. 2 Ki. 23:1–3), and which was traced back to → Moses (Exod. 24:7 f.; cf. 20:2; 6:7; Lev. 26:12), became, as the covenant formula, the gateway into the history of Israel. It thus acquired permanent authority and relevance. In the style of an adoption ceremony Yahweh declares both that Israel is to be his people, and that he will be Israel's God. Thus originated the formula which was traced back into the time of Moses: "I will be their God, and they shall be my people" (Jer. 7:23; 11:4). A similar formula is found in the post-exilic writings, as a prophecy for the future: "I will be your God, and you shall be my people" (cf. Jer. 24:7; 30:22; 32:38; Ezek. 11:20; 14:11; Zech. 8:8). The priestly literature also knows the statement that Yahweh will be Israel's God (cf. Gen. 17:7 f.; Exod. 29:45; Lev. 11:45). The Sitz im Leben of the covenant formula may have been priestly instruction or prophetic proclamation.

(d) It is regarded among the people as an established fact that Yahweh is Israel's God. Thus there often appears with the divine name the additional phrase "your God". In the same way 'am, people, is further defined as "people of his possession" (e.g. Deut. 4:20; 7:6), "holy people" (e.g. Deut. 7:6; 14:2). The theme of Deuteronomy is the people of God; the covenant formula is embedded in instruction for the keeping of the law (cf. Deut. 26:12–19). God's gracious approach to the people remains, however, the starting point (cf. Jer. 11:3 ff.). It appears again projected into the future in the promise of the "new covenant" (Jer. 31:31–33; cf. 24:7; 32:38–40; Ezek. 36:26 ff.). The promise of the prophets can also go out beyond the borders of Israel and embrace the Gentile world (Zech. 2:11 f.; 14:16).

4. What makes Israel the laos is Yahweh's → election and → grace, and not mere national, natural and historical factors. This grace must be repeatedly confirmed by faithfulness and obedience. From an earthly, human point of view, unfaithfulness on the part of the people makes him lose everything that makes him the people. He then becomes a people like all the others, and indeed worse off than they (Deut. 28:58–64). But because Yahweh keeps faith with his people despite all its apostasy and all unfaithfulness, Israel remains the people of God. He lives as such not through any achievement of his own, but because of Yahweh's faithfulness towards him. The character of Israel is thus determined not by himself, his origin or history, but solely by the fact that Yahweh keeps faith with him.

5. Judaism. (a) Philo used laos and leōs, especially in his writings on the Pentateuch, but the specific, historical meaning of the word is lost amid his speculations (cf. Sacr. 6 f.). He interprets the "chosen people" (Deut. 7:7) as individual wise men also constitute the head of humanity (Praem. 123, 125). In Josephus' Antiquities the influence of LXX usage may be seen in his use of the word laos for Israel, though occasionally he also uses it for other nations, e.g. Egypt (Ant. 2, 301). In War and Ap. Josephus also uses → ethnos and → dēmos indiscriminately.

(b) In the Rabbinic literature and the Pseudepigrapha it is part of the foundation of all faith that Israel is God's chosen people. Israel is God's possession, his portion, and his lot.

Israel's special relationship to his God is expressed in metaphors taken from family life: Israel is Yahweh's → firstborn son (2 Esd. 6:58), the Israelites are God's brothers and kinsmen (SB III 263 f., 682), royal children (Shabbath 14:4). Even the poorest among them are children of Abraham (SB IV 714). As a special token of Yahweh's love it has been revealed to them that they are children of God (Aboth 3:14), and only they are called God's children (2 Esd. 6:58). Israel is also called the bride, the betrothed, the spouse of God (SB III 822 f.). What is expressed in this terminology is not an ethical relationship but an inborn one.

Alongside these ideas there is that of friendship between Yahweh and Israel (Tanh. 20). As in the OT, Israel is the "holy people", because he has the Torah and does not worship idols (Sifra Lev. 20:7). The world was created for Israel's sake, and without Israel it cannot continue in existence (2 Esd. 6:55 ff.; SB I 833; III 140, 248). Israel is the "righteous one" whom the rest of the world has to thank for its life: were it not for Israel, God would have destroyed the world long since. The present time with its gifts is of little importance in comparison with the coming messianic time. Then the people will receive all God's gifts in their fullness, and dominion over the world, and the people of the world – in so far as they still exist at all – will be his servants. The thought finds expression in the saying in the Mishnah, "All Israelites have a share in the world to come" (Sanhedrin 10:1). The only exceptions are serious sinners and the evil generations mentioned in the scriptures (SB III 293).

(c) In the writings of the Qumran community 'am often means Israel. He is the people chosen from all peoples (1QM 10:9), with whom God has made an eternal covenant (1QM 13:7), and whom he has redeemed to be a people for ever (1QM 13:9). He is the people of God's redemption (1QM 14:5) whom he will not allow to be destroyed by other nations (1QpHab 5:3). The wicked among God's people he will destroy (1QpHab 5:5). Among the people there is, however, a "remnant" (1QH 6:8), the "saints of his people" (1QM 6:6).

The Qumran community thus described itself as the 'am, the people (1QM 1:12), the "people of the saints of the covenant" (1QM 10:10), as the "elect of the holy people" (1QM 12:1). They called themselves the "assembly of the people" (CD 19:35). The "people" is the army in the final conflict (1QM 9:1; 10:2), or a particular company within this army (1QM 8:9; 16:7). In the hierarchy of the Qumran community the "people" has the third place following the priests and Levites (1QS 2:21; 6:9).

In numerous other places 'am and 'ammîm mean the nations, the Gentiles. God is praised as the creator who has brought about the division of the nations (1QM 10:14). A sword is coming over all nations (1QM 16:1), so that they will be shattered (1QH 4:26). Their heroes will be brought low by God (1QM 11:13), and their princes will be thrust down (1QSb 3:28; 5:27).

NT 1. laos occurs 141 times in the NT, 84 being in Luke alone (Gospel and Acts) and 14 in Matt., 12 in Paul, 13 in Heb., 9 in Rev. It is probable that the language and concepts of the LXX are here exerting an influence, though laos often follows a previous reference to → ochlos and carries the same meaning (e.g. Lk. 7:24, 29; 8:42, 47; cf. also Matt. 27:25 f.; Mk. 14:2), or stands instead of ochlos in a parallel passage (e.g. Lk. 19:48, cf. Mk. 11:18; Lk. 20:45, cf. Matt. 23:1). When used on its own, laos can mean also crowd, the common people (e.g. Lk. 1:10; 7:1; 20:1, 9; Acts 2:47). Many of these passages, however, refer to the activity of John the Baptist, Jesus or the apostles, whose ministry was practically restricted to Israel (cf. Matt. 4:23; 26:5; 27:64), and Israel is after all the laos and not an → ethnos (an exception being Jn. 11:50, where both words are used).

The plur. laoi is parallel to ethnē in Lk. 2:31 f. (cf. Isa. 40:5 f.; 42:6); Rom. 15:11 (cf. Ps. 117:1); Rev. 10:11 (cf. Dan. 3:4). The great multitude (→ ochlos) standing before the → Lamb comes from every → ethnos and laos (Rev. 7:9; 11:9; 17:15), and is intended to mean the whole of humanity.

A hyperbolic pas, → all, often precedes laos (e.g. Lk. 3:21; 7:29; Acts. 3:9; 5:34). We also read of the plēthos tou laou, lit. fullness of the people (Lk. 1:10; 6:17; Acts 21:36), which may be variously translated as the great multitude, the whole crowd. As in the LXX, laos can mean the people in contrast to the ruling classes (Lk. 22:2; 23:5; Acts 6:12), or in a cultic setting the broad mass of the people as opposed to the priest (Heb. 5:3; 7:27), or again, the ordinary people as opposed to the few witnesses of the resurrection (Acts. 10:41; 13:31).

2. In keeping with the LXX, → Israel is described as the laos (the laos Israēl, "people of Israel", e.g. Acts 4:10; 13:17; houtos ho laos, "this people", in OT quotations at Matt. 13:15 [cf. Isa. 6:10]; 15:8 [cf. Isa. 29:13]; Acts 28:26 f. [cf. Isa. 6:9 f.]). The idea is also alluded to when the high priests, scribes and elders or leaders of the laos are spoken of (e.g. Matt. 2:4; 21:23; Lk. 19:47; Acts 4:9); when it is said that Jesus will save his people from their sins (Matt. 1:21; → God, art. Emmanouēl; cf. Lk. 1:68, 77; 2:10, 32), or that God has visited his laos by sending his prophet Jesus (Lk. 7:16; 24:19), or that he will not reject his laos, Israel (Rom. 11:1 f.; cf. Ps. 94:14). Even an individual synagogue can be called laos (Acts 13:15); it is God's people in a particular place (→ Church, Synagogue). The same line of thought is present when Israel as the laos is set over against the Gentiles as ethnē (Acts 4:25 ff.; cf. LXX Deut. 32:43; Ps. 2:1; cf. also 26:23; Rom. 15:10). Pilate is here identified with the ethnē, and Herod and Israel with the laoi. Frequently qualifying phrases or the context show that laos means Israel, e.g. in the use of the word as parallel for "Jews" in Acts 12:4; in a list along with "law" and "temple" in Acts 21:28, or "customs of the fathers" in Acts 28:17; in the comment that the God-fearing Gentile Cornelius had done much good to the laos (Acts 10:2).

3. Finally the honoured title of Israel, that of being God's laos, is transferred to the Christian → church. God has taken from the ethnē a laos for his → name (Acts 15:14). He has called a church from the Jews and the Gentiles (Rom. 9:24; Hos. 1:10). This church (even as a local church, cf. Acts 18:10) is the → temple and laos of God (2 Cor. 6:14 ff.; the quotations from Lev. 26:12 and Ezek. 37:27 refer in the original setting to Israel, but are here applied to the Christian church). The description of Israel as the laos periousios, people of his possession (Exod. 19:5 f.; 23:22; Deut. 7:6; 14:2; → Possessions), is likewise claimed for the Christian church (Tit. 2:14; cf. 1 Pet. 2:9).

In Heb., especially, the statements of the OT cultus, seen as types of Christ, are transferred to the church. The Son of God became man to atone for the sins of the laos (Heb. 2:17), which he sanctified with his blood (Heb. 13:12). The church is the laos for whom a → Sabbath rest remains (Heb. 4:9), and it is to the church that the warning of Ps. 135:14 applies (Heb. 10:30). Similarly in Rev. 18:4 (cf. Jer. 51:45) and 21:3 (cf. Zech. 2:10; Ezek. 37:27) OT passages are applied to the church as the new people of God. This means that by faith in Jesus Christ as the kyrios, → Lord, the church becomes the laos theou, people of God, irrespective of the national background of its members (Gal. 3:26 ff.; 1 Cor. 12:13; Col. 3:11). That is not, of course, to say that in the NT the church has simply taken the place of Israel as the people of God, as if Israel had lost the priority given to her by God. This is perhaps the major problem that Paul wrestles with in Rom. His conclusion is that Israel is and remains God's people, and has not been rejected by God (cf. Rom. 9–11, especially, Rom. 9:4 f.; 11:1 f.). "A hardening has come upon part of Israel, until the full number of the Gentiles come in, and so all Israel will be saved. . . . For God has consigned all men to disobedience, that he may have mercy upon all" (Rom. 11:25 f., 32; cf. also chs. 1–4). H. Bietenhard

ὄχλος

ὄχλος (ochlos), (throng of) people, crowd, mob.

CL ochlos (derivation uncertain, attested since Pindar), means a crowd, throng; the public, in contrast to individual people, and particularly in contrast to the nobility or people of rank, "ochlos is often the 'leaderless and rudderless mob,' the 'politically and culturally insignificant mass' " (R. Meyer, TDNT V 583; cf. Plato, Leg. 2, 670b). In the military world the word means a company, troop, army. But it can also mean people. When the thought of size is uppermost it can mean a great crowd.

OT In the LXX ochlos occurs about 60 times, chiefly in later books as a translation of several words including hāmôn, crowd (1 Ki. 20[21]:13; 2 Chr. 20:15; Dan. 11:11 LXX; 10:6; 11:10–13 Theodotion); ḥayil, army; 'am, people (Num. 20:20; Jer. 48[31]:42; 38[45]:1); qāhāl, assembly (Jer. 31[38]:8; Ezek. 16:40; 17:17; 23:24, 46 f.); rabbîm, many (2 Esd. 3:12). In Dan. 3:4 it means people; in Dan. 10:6 (Theodotion) an unruly crowd; in Jer. 31:8 an assembled company of the people. The congregation of the people (qāhāl) which is to stone the adulteress becomes the ochlos in Gk. (Lev. 24:16). In other passages it means the camp-followers (Jud. 7:18; 1 Macc. 9:35), those unable to march; or, the army, mercenaries (1 Macc. 1:17; 20, 29; 2 Macc. 14:23, 43, 45 f.; 3 Macc. 2:7). In Ezek. 23:24 it is used as a term of quantity: ochlos laōn, a host of peoples; cf. the ochloi ethnōn, hosts of nations, in Wis. 6:2. In Bel 30 ochlos means the population of the land in contrast to the Jews.

The term was carried over as a loan-word into the Middle Heb. of the Rab. writings. There it can mean a crowd either of Jews or of Gentiles, or also military bodies of men (in the sense of troop, retinue, bands).

NT In the NT ochlos occurs 174 times. Of these 4 are in Rev., and all the others in the Gospels and Acts. In Mk. 14:43 the word means the armed crowd at the arrest of Jesus, but usually an unorganized crowd of people not formed or characterized by any particular background or custom. There are the people who come to hear John the Baptist (Lk. 3:7, 10) or Jesus, or who expect to be healed by him (e.g. Matt. 4:25; 5:1). It is especially to these people, who have nothing particular to offer, that Jesus directs his teaching and his compassion (Matt. 9:33), and his provision of food (Matt. 14:19; Lk. 9:16; Jn. 6:5). The contrast to these is provided by the ruling classes, the → Pharisees and scribes, who despised the ochlos as the ignorant masses who did not keep the law. To them the masses were accursed (Jn. 7:31, 48 f.; cf. → ethnos, 'am-hā'āreṣ). In Jn. 7:49 ochlos doubtless refers to the term 'am hā'āreṣ, people of the land. In the pre-exilic age the people of the land denoted full citizens who were liable to military service. But in the post-exilic age it denoted the foreign or mixed population, as distinct from the returned exiles. It became a term of abuse, connoting ignorance of and lax attitude towards the law (cf. R. Bultmann, The Gospel of John, 1971, 310 f.). Hence, the religious leaders with their strict attitude to the law regarded them as accursed. Jesus and later Paul were accused of leading the ochlos astray (Jn. 7:12; Acts 19:26). The ochlos was divided, however, in its opinion of Jesus (Jn. 7:43).

Herod Antipas hesitated to kill John the Baptist because he feared the ochlos (Matt. 14:5). The ruling class similarly fear the ochlos and do not dare to lay hands on Jesus (Matt. 21:26, 46); but they stir up the ochlos against Jesus (Matt. 27:20). Pilate acted under pressure from the populace (Mk. 15:15). Jesus told parables to the ochlos (Matt. 13:34). He had a whole ochlos of disciples (Lk. 6:17; cf. Acts 1:15). A great ochlos went to Bethany to see Jesus and Lazarus (Jn. 12:9). Before the throne of God and of the Lamb there stands an innumerable ochlos (Rev. 7:9); and in Rev. 17:15 nations are meant. H. Bietenhard

πόλις

πόλις (polis), city, city-state; πολίτης (politēs), citizen; πολιτεύομαι (politeuomai), be a citizen, take part in government, live, conduct one's life; πολιτεία (politeia), rights of a citizen, commonwealth, state; πολίτευμα (politeuma), commonwealth, state, colony, citizenship; πολιτάρχης (politarchēs), politarch, civic magistrate.

CL 1. The word polis, attested probably from Mycenaean Gk., is perhaps derived from an Indo-Germanic root meaning to fill. This may suggest the polis as a filled-in wall which served as a fortress and refuge. As early as Homer ptolis and its lengthened form ptoliethron meant a city, state, and politēs a citizen. politeuomai means to be a citizen, live as a citizen, to administer the state, and conduct public affairs. The abstract noun politeia means citizen's rights, life of a citizen, his part in the life of the state, the condition or way of life of citizenship, and also civil policy, constitution, the state. The closely related noun politeuma had originally the same meaning. It was then used for individual political acts, measures or intrigues; in Aristotle for government, constitution, and also acts or branches of public administration. Later still the word meant political commonwealth, the state generally, and less frequently, citizens' rights. In the Hellenistic period colonies abroad with established political constitutions are also so described.

2. The development of the city-state in Greece is an historically logical and yet typically Gk. phenomenon. The rule of warrior kings which had been carried over from the period of the great migrations held the people together in only a very loose fashion, since it became effective only in times of war. Hence, there arose an increasing desire for concentration of the political will, not indeed to cover the Greeks as a whole, but individual, overseeable territories or districts. In the 8th and 7th centuries B.C. a large number of settlements came into being, mostly in dependence upon those already in existence. The concentration of political life and the multiplication of tasks within the new framework enabled the nobility, as the assistants of the king, to strengthen their own power and finally to supplant the monarchy. In the period which followed the city-state or polis became the most typical expression of Gk. culture and was regarded as the most important thing in life, to which the free citizen gave his total allegiance, and in the administration and government of which he had a part. The citizen embodied the state; citizenship was identified in terms of the city-state. The political order, defined by laws, was upheld by religious consecration. Religion was an essential part of the polis. The formation of city-states as an independent expression of political will, subject to no one, certainly hindered the unification of larger areas of the Gk. mainland. But even in its perversion, when rule was handed over to the mob in the Athens of the Peloponnesian War, one can see clearly how fruitful the idea of the unification of an overseeable number of free citizens had been. With the rise of the Macedonians and the spread of their blanket super-state (and later that of the Roman empire), the ancient polis came to an end.

OT 1. In the LXX polis occurs about 1,600 times, chiefly to translate 'îr, city (e.g. Gen. 4:17; 10:11 f.; 11:4 f., 8), in Deut. also še'ārîm, gates (e.g. 12:15–21; 20:10 ff.), occasionally qiryâh, city (e.g. Jos. 14:15; 15:9, 13, 15 f.). In Israel the city has a different function from that of the polis in Greece. Israel's constitution is fundamentally a tribal one (→ Tribe). This distinguishes him also from the Canaanite city-states with their monarchy. In the OT, therefore, every fortified height can be called a "city". A memory of the impression which the fortified cities of Canaan made on the immigrating Israelites is probably retained in Num. 13.29 Moreover, it must have taken a long while following the conquest before the established cities could be overcome and occupied (cf. Jdg. 1:27 ff.; 3:1–5). Jerusalem was not conquered until David's time (2 Sam. 5:6 ff.). The city afforded its inhabitants protection against enemies and enabled them to withstand attackers. Very often cities are spoken of, when it is their inhabitants that are meant. Thus the city was to a considerable extent, as in Greece, a community of persons (cf. 1 Sam. 4:13; 2 Sam. 15:14; Est. 3:15; Isa. 40:9).

2. Of particular importance as a city is → Jerusalem. It is referred to simply as the city (Ezek. 7:23). Yahweh has chosen it (2 Chr. 6:38), to make his → name dwell there (cf. Deut. 12:5; 14:23), and that prayers and sacrifices may be offered there. Jerusalem is the "city of God" (cf. Pss. 46:4; 48:1, 8; 87:3), the "city of the great king" (Ps. 48:2; cf. Matt. 5:35), the "holy city" (cf. Isa. 48:2; 52:1). When its citizens did not live up to the character with which God had thus invested it, the prophet called them to repentance (Ezek. 22:2–4). In latter days a new Jerusalem, more in keeping with its original calling, was expected (Isa. 1:26; 32:28; Jer. 31:38; Joel 3:17).

These hopes of the renewal of Jerusalem were kept alive in Judaism (Sir. 36:12 f.; cf. the 14th of the Eighteen Benedictions, for text → Prayer, art. proseuchomai, OT 6). The future Jerusalem is expected to come down from heaven, where it has been kept from the beginning (cf. 2 Esd. 7:26; 8:52).

3. The derived nouns are found almost exclusively in the Books of Maccabees. (a) politēs occurs 10 times in 2 and 3 Macc., and 7 times in the OT besides, where it mostly translates the Heb. rēa', one's neighbour of one's own people (Prov. 11:9, 12; 24:28[43]; Jer. 29[36]:23; 31[38]:34; → Brother, Neighbour). In the sense of citizen, the word is found only at 2 Macc. 9:19 and 3 Macc. 1:22. Other instances are Gen. 23:11; Num. 4:18; Zech. 13:7; 2 Macc. 4:5, 50; 5:6, 8, 23; 14:8; 15:30.

(b) politeia (9 times in 2–4 Macc.) usually means devout way of life (2 Macc. 8:17; 4 Macc. 17:19); in 3 Macc. 3:21, 23, citizens' rights. Other instances are 2 Macc. 4:11; 6:23; 13:14; 4 Macc. 3:20; 8:7.

(c) politeuomai always means to walk (Est. 8:12; 2 Macc. 6:1; 11:25; 3 Macc. 3:4; 4 Macc. 2:8, 23; 4:23; 5:16). politeuma occurs only at 2 Macc. 12:7, where it means community.

NT In the NT polis is found 161 times, being especially frequent in Luke (39 times), Acts (42 times), Matt. (26 times), and Rev. (27 times); rarely in Paul (4 times), and only 8 times each in Mk. and Jn. It never means state, but always city, in the sense of an enclosed settlement or its inhabitants (Matt. 8:34; 21:10; Mk. 1:33). The distinction between it and kōmē, village, often disappears (cf. Matt. 11:20 with Mk. 8:23; Lk. 2:4 with Jn. 7:42).

It is in keeping with OT and Jewish usage when Jerusalem is called the "holy city" (Matt. 4:5; 27:53; Rev. 11:2). This city kills the → prophets (Matt. 23:37) and also kills Jesus (Rev. 11:8; cf. Lk. 13:33). Her downfall is certain (Matt. 24:2 ff. par. Mk. 13:2 ff.; Lk. 21:6 ff.).

1. Over against the present Jerusalem there stands the Jerusalem above, the free Jerusalem, the mother of Christians (Gal. 4:25 f.; → Parable, art. parabolē NT for discussion of allegory and typology here). Heb. in particular contrasts the present and the future Jerusalem. Even the patriarchs knew of this new city and set their hope upon it. Compared with it all earthly cities are mere temporary tent-camps. For the sake of this coming city the patriarchs regarded themselves as strangers (→ Foreign, art. xenos) and sojourners (→ Foreign, art. parepidēmos). This city is Mount Zion and "the city of the living God" (Heb. 11:10, 16; 12:22 ff.).

It awaits the Christians who have here no continuing city (Heb. 13:14; cf. Rev. 3:12; 22:4). The earthly Jerusalem is only a copy and a shadow (Heb. 8:5; 10:1) or a symbol (Heb. 9:9) of the city which is to come, and which is already present in heaven. In this new city those who conquer in times of persecution have citizens' rights (Rev. 3:12). The new Jerusalem will come down upon the new earth (Rev. 21:2, 10 ff.).

2. politēs, citizen, occurs only 4 times in the NT, and has no political emphasis except in Acts 21:39, where Paul says that he is a citizen of Tarsus. Jerome claims that Paul came to Tarsus with his parents as prisoners of war from Gischala in Galilee (De viris illustribus, 5). Alternatively his parents may have come from Gischala, and Paul himself may have been born at Tarsus, where his father, liberated, may have become a Roman citizen (cf. E. Haenchen, The Acts of the Apostles, 1971, 620; → also Jerusalem NT 5 (b)). The other instances of politēs occur at Lk. 15:15; 19:14; Heb. 8:11 quoting Jer. 31:34.

3. sympolitēs, fellow citizen, occurs at Eph. 2:19 and indicates that Gentile Christians share through Christ in the calling of Israel, the people of God, as fellow-citizens.

4. politeia in Acts 22:28 means the Roman citizenship of Paul. In Eph. 2:12 it means the privileged position of Israel in salvation history, to which Gentile Christians now have access by faith in Jesus Christ.

5. politeuma occurs only at Phil. 3:20 where Paul contrasts the Christian life-style with that of the "enemies of the cross of Christ" (3:18): "But our commonwealth [politeuma] is in heaven, and from it we await a Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ" (RSV). The older translation "citizenship" (RV) stresses the status of the believers, whereas "conversation" (AV), i.e. way of life, has affinities with the vb. politeuomai (see 6). M. Dibelius suggests "colony" (An die Thessalonicher, I, II; An die Philipper, HNT, 1937, ad. loc.) But the meaning is more likely to be that of "capital or native city, which keeps the citizens on its registers" (cf. E. Stauffer, New Testament Theology, 1955, 296 f.). The second half of the verse requires a place to be meant here, in order to make sense of the remark "and from it we await". Moreover, "the background of the word, in this context, is the situation of the readers who live in a city which was a Roman military colony directly related to the capital city of Rome" (R. P. Martin, The Epistle of Paul to the Philippians, TC, 1959, 160 f.). As Roman subjects, the Philippian Christians owed an allegiance to the far off capital city of Rome. At the same time, they had "another king, one Jesus" (Acts 17:7). Hence, on earth they are resident aliens who dwell temporarily in a foreign country but who have their capital and homeland elsewhere (cf. 1 Pet. 1:1; 2:11; Jas. 1:1; Heb. 11:13; Ep.Diog. 5).

6. politeuomai is found only at Acts 23:1 and Phil. 1:27, where (as in the usage of Hellenistic Judaism) it means to walk, in a way in keeping with the faith.

7. politarchēs means a civic magistrate, a politarch. In Macedonian cities and occasionally elsewhere a number of politarchs formed the city council. There were five or six in Thessalonica before whom the Jews dragged Jason (Acts 17:6, 8), accusing him of harbouring "these men who have turned the world upside down" and "acting against the decrees of Caesar". The politarchs dismissed the charge thereby putting the Jews in a bad light and the Christians and authorities in a good one (cf. Arndt, 692; E. D. Burton, "The Politarchs in Macedonia and Elsewhere", American Journal of Theology, 2, 1898, 598–632). H. Bietenhard

→ Brother, → Church, → Foreign, → Greek, → Israel, → Samaritan, → Tribe

(a). G. Bertram and K. L. Schmidt, ethnos etc., TDNT II 364–72; R. Bultmann, "Polis and Hades in Sophocles' Antigone", in Essays: Theological and Philosophical, 1955, 22–35; A. Cody, "When is the Chosen People Called a gôy?" VT 14, 1964, 1–6; O. Cullmann, The State in the New Testament, 1957; W. D. Davies, The Gospel and the Land: Early Christianity and Jewish Territorial Doctrine, 1974; J. D. M. Derrett, Jesus' Audience: The Social and Psychological Environment in which He Worked, 1973; V. E. Ehrenberg, "Polis", OCD, 851 f.; and The Greek State, 1960; J. H. Elliott, The Elect and the Holy, Supplements to NovT 12, 1966; W. G. Forrest, The Emergence of Greek Democracy, 1966; G. Glotz, The Greek City, 1929; W. Grundmann, dēmos etc., TDNT II 63 ff.; J. Jeremias, Jesus' Promise to the Nations, SBT 24, 1958; J. Jervell, Luke and the People of God, 1972; A. H. M. Jones, The Greek City from Alexander to Justinian, 1940; G. D. Kilpatrick, "The Gentiles and the Strata of Luke", in O. Böcher and K. Haacker, eds., Verborum Veritas. Festschrift für Gustav Stählin, 1970, 83–88; R. Martin-Achard, A Light to the Nations, 1962; R. Meyer and P. Katz, ochlos, TDNT V 582–90; M. Noth, "God King, and Nation in the Old Testament", in The Laws in the Pentateuch and Other Studies, 1966, 145–78; S. Pancaro, " 'People of God' in St John's Gospel?", NTS 16, 1969–70, 114–29; J. Scharbert, "People (of God)", EBT II 651–58; E. A. Speiser, " 'People' and 'Nation' of Israel", JBL 79, 1960, 157–63; H. Strathmann, polis etc., TDNT VI 516–35; H. Strathmann and R. Meyer, laos, TDNT IV 29–57; S. von Tilborg, "hoi ochloi", in The Jewish Leaders in Matthew, 1972, 142–65; J. D. W. Watts, "The People of God", ExpT 67, 1955–56, 232–37.

(b). N. A. Dahl, Das Volk Gottes, Skrifter utgitt av Det Norske Videnskap-Akademi i Oslo, 1941; C. Dietzfelbinger, Heilsgeschichte bei Paulus?, ThEH Neue Folge 126, 1965; J. Dupont, "LAOS EX ETHNŌN (Act. xv. 14)", NTS 3, 1956–57, 47–50; G. Eichholz, "Der Begriff 'Volk' im Neuen Testament", in Tradition und Interpretation, ThB 29, 1965, 78 ff.; H.-H. Esser, Volk und Nation in der evangelischen Ethik, Das Gespräch Heute 72, 1968; A. Feuillet, "La Demeure céleste et la Destinée des Chrétiens: Exégèse de II Cor. v. 1–10 et Contribution a l'Étude des Fondemonts de l'Eschatologie Paulinienne", Recherches de Science Religieuse 44, 1956, 161–92, 360–402; R. Klöbert, "qhl – laos – ekklēsia", Biblica 46, 1965, 464 ff.; R. Meyer, "Der 'am-hā'āreṣ", Judaica 3, 1947, 166–99; C. Müller, Gottes Gerechtigkeit und Gottes Volk. Eine Untersuchung zu Röm. 9–11, FRLANT 86, 1969; F. Mussner, " 'Volk Gottes' im Neuen Testament", Trierer Theologische Zeitschrift 72, 1963, 169 ff.; and "Das Volk Gottes nach Eph. 1, 3–14", Concilium 1, 1965, 842 ff.; A. Oepke, Das neue Gottesvolk in Schrifttum, Schauspiel, bildender Kunst und Weltgestaltung, 1950; G. Rau, "Das Volk in der lukanischen Passionsgeschichte. Eine Konjektur zu Lk. 23, 13", ZNW 56, 1965, 41 ff.; W. Ruppel, "Politeuma", Philologus 82, 1927, 268–312, 433–52; K. L. Schmidt, Die Polis in Kirche und Welt, 1940; W. Schweitzer, Der entymythologisierte Staat. Studie zur Revision der evangelischen Ethik des Politischen, 1968; F. Thiess, Das Reich der Dämonen 1960; R. Walker, Studie zu Röm. 13, 1–7, ThEH Neue Folge 132, 1966; H. D. Wendland and J. Blau, "Volk", EKL III 1672 ff.; H. Wildberger, Jahwes Eigentumsvolk, 1960; E. Würthwein, Der 'am-hā'āreṣ im Alten Testament, 1936.

Persecution, Tribulation, Affliction

διώκω

διώκω (diōkō), run after, pursue, persecute; ἐκδιώκω (ekdiōkō), drive away, persecute severely; καταδιώκω (katadiōkō), search for, hunt for; διωγμός (diōgmos), persecution.

CL diōkō is perhaps connected with the Homeric diemai, flee. It means lit. to chase, pursue, run after, drive away, and fig. to pursue something zealously, try to achieve something, try to obtain, prosecute.

OT 1. In the LXX diōkō, along with ekdiōkō and katadiōkō, is used primarily of pursuit by hostile soldiers (Exod. 15:9), or by anyone whose intentions are hostile (Gen. 31:23). It translates a number of Heb. vbs., but chiefly rāḏap̄, pursue; the other vbs. occur only in isolated instances. This gives rise to the usage which is characteristic of the Pss. of individual lamentation (e.g. Pss. 7:1, 5[2, 6]; 31[30]:15 35[34]:3; cf. also Jer. 15:15; 20:11), where persecution and persecutors refer to the circumstances and persons that cause the psalmist to suffer, without there necessarily being active persecution in the narrower specific sense.

2. The OT also contains exhortations to strive for a goal. In normal Gk. settings it will be the good, the beautiful, or virtue that is to be pursued. In the LXX it is relationships, e.g. social righteousness (Deut. 16:20; cf. also Josephus, Ant. 6, 12, 7), peace (Ps. 34[33]:14), and righteousness in the sense of true honouring of God (Prov. 15:9), that are to be followed. The corresponding NT usage has its roots here.

NT Summary of NT use. (a) The commonest meaning is to persecute, or be persecuted (some 30 times, especially in the Gospels, Acts, Paul, Rev.). The noun diōgmos refers only to persecution. In 1 Thess. 2:15 the compound ekdiōkō also means to persecute (RSV, NEB drive out). (b) The fig. use is found only in the Epistles, always with a positive meaning; the use in Phil. 3:12, 14 belongs here (cf. also zēteō, → Seek, and zēloō, → Zeal). (c) diōkō (Lk. 17:23) and katadiōkō (Mk. 1:36) mean to run after, follow, in the passages referred to.

1. Persecution: (a) God's messengers in particular meet persecution. This was already the experience of the → prophets (Matt. 5:12; Acts 7:52), and will equally be that of Jesus' → disciples (Matt. 5:11 f., 44; 10:23), the more so as they are followers of the Lord, who had to suffer persecution himself (Jn. 5:16). This connection is clearly expressed in Jn. 15:20: "If they persecuted me, they will persecute you." Paul, once the persecutor of the church (1 Cor. 15:9; Gal. 1:13; 23; Phil. 3:6; 1 Tim. 1:13), experienced persecution himself, once the glorified Lord had made him his messenger (Gal. 5:11; 2 Tim. 3:11). In 2 Tim. 3:12 he expresses the view that being a Christian will always be linked with persecution (→ Suffer).

(b) The message is persecuted in the Christian (Acts 22:4, the "way", the course steered by faith), or Christ himself (Acts 9:4 f.; 22:7 f;. 26:14 f.). According to Jn. 15:18 ff., persecution is caused by the world's hatred of God and his revelation in Christ (cf. also Matt. 10:22; Mk. 13:13; Lk. 21:17; Rev. 12:13). Paul sees behind it the contrast between → flesh and → spirit; the hostility of the natural man against God and so also against the man led by God's Spirit (Gal. 4:29).

(c) Hence persecution may be a sign that one is on God's side. Thus Jesus calls those blessed "who are persecuted for righteous's sake" (Matt. 5:10 ff.; → Blessing).

(d) There is the danger of corrupting the message in order to avoid persecution (Gal. 6:12). Christians are specially challenged to maintain their faith during persecution. They are to meet the hatred of their persecutors by a word of blessing (Rom. 12:14; cf. especially Matt. 5:44).

(e) But it is especially in persecution that Christians experience the help, strength and saving power of Christ (2 Cor. 4:7 ff.; 12:10; Rom. 8:35–39). In persecution Paul set an apostolic example by enduring it patiently (1 Cor. 4:12). It is a special reason for giving God thanks, when persecution is endured with faith (2 Thess. 1:3 f.).

2. Pursuit of Christian objectives. The metaphorical meaning of the word shows more strongly than zēteō, seek, that there are certain things which the Christian must strive after, such as hospitality (Rom. 12:13), mutual peace (Rom. 14:19; 1 Pet. 3:11; Heb. 12:14), holiness, love (1 Cor. 14:1), doing good (1 Thess. 5:15), and righteousness (1 Tim. 6:11; 2 Tim. 2:22). These are lasting objectives in the life of faith, which has as its goal the attaining of the → resurrection from the dead. Paul sees the Christian life as ultimately directed to this goal. He presses on to it like the runner set on winning the victor's prize (Phil. 3:12 ff.), although he knows that "it depends not upon man's will or exertion, but upon God's mercy" (Rom. 9:16; cf. v. 30 f.). G. Ebel

θλῖψις

θλῖψις (thlipsis), oppression, affliction, tribulation; θλίβω (thlibō), press upon, oppress, afflict; στενοχωρία (stenochōria), straits, distress, affliction, difficulty; στενοχωρέω (stenochōreō), crowd, cramp, confine, oppress.

CL The verb thlibō (Aristophanes onwards; from the root thlaō, crush, squash) means press, squeeze, crush, This lit. meaning is found in Mk. 3:9; "lest they should crush him." The perf. part. pass. has the meaning of narrow, strait (cf. Matt. 7:13, of the way to life; → Gate). The fig. use is very common, both in the sense of oppress (external) and of grieve, vex (internal). Epictetus speaks of the pressures of life (ta thliboṇta) which the true Stoic must and can overcome (Dissertationes, 4, 1, 45; cf. 1, 25, 17 and 28; 2, 27, 2 f.; 3, 13, 8).

The noun thlipsis, oppression, distress, affliction, is linked with the vb. It is occasionally found coupled with stenochōria (derived from stenos, or steinos, narrow, and chōria, space, place), which from Thucydides onwards is used to express a narrow place, and hence being pressed by inner and outer difficulties. The corresponding vb. stenochōreō is found in its semi-lit. sense in 2 Cor. 6:12; "you are not restricted [stenochōreisthe] by us."

OT In the LXX thlipsis is used to render a number of Heb. terms, especially ṣārar, ṣar, lāḥaṣ, laḥaṣ. These Heb. words denote need, distress, and various afflictions depending on the context, e.g. war, exile and personal hostility. Here too it is found a number of times linked with stenochōria (e.g. Deut. 28:53, 55, 57; Isa. 8:22; 30:6; Est. 1:1 [LXX, but not MT]), as well as with other terms expressive of fear and pain, in many cases the meaning being almost synonymous. The thlipsis of the LXX is often the oppression which belongs of necessity to the history of Israel and which was regarded by the faithful as part of salvation history. There is a connection between oppression (Exod. 3:9) and deliverance (Exod. 3:10). Even when the oppression is a punishment, its purpose is deliverance (Neh. 9:27; Hos. 5:14–6:2). The eschatological nature of the oppression is often stressed (cf. Zech. 1:15; Hab. 3:16). Dan 12:1 even speaks of "a time of trouble, such as never has been since there was a nation" until the writer's own time. But here also deliverance from trouble is mentioned, and this expresses the faith and hope of the faithful in Israel. "Many are the afflictions of the righteous; but the Lord delivers him out of them all" (Ps. 34:19; cf. Ps. 37:39). This was the unshakeable conviction of the faithful, who were able to pray, "Thou who has made me see many sore troubles wilt revive me again" (Ps. 71:20).

Judaism also knew of the troubles of the people which it expected in the end-time and described in detail in the apocalypses (Eth.Enoch., 2 Esd., Syr.Bar.). The Qumran texts accommodate themselves to this picture. They speak of the last great tribulation (1QM 1:12; 15:1) and of the personal trials of the writer of the Hymns (1QH 5:12; 9:28; 15:16).

NT thlipsis is used 45 times in the NT, thlibō 10 times, always fig. apart from Mk. 3:9 and Matt. 7:13 (see above CL). The RV and RSV translate thlipsis about equally by affliction and tribulation, though the RSV especially also uses other renderings. stenochōria is found 4 times (Rom. 2:9; 8:35; 2 Cor. 6:4; 12:10), and stenochōreō twice (2 Cor. 4:8; 6:12). The usage in the NT is clearly the same as in the OT. The following cases are of importance.

1. thlipsis has an eschatological significance for the church. This may be seen by the quotation in Matt. 24:21 and Mk. 13:19 of Dan. 12:1 (see above OT). The tribulation stands in the closest connection with the → Son of man (Matt. 24:30) of Dan. 7:13 and the birth-pangs of the messiah (Matt. 24:8; → Jesus Christ, art. Christos; cf. SB I 950). This tribulation belongs to the period of catastrophes before the final salvation, and it is characterized by leading astray, hate, political strife and catastrophes of nature. It is all necessary, "for this must take place" (Matt. 24:6; → Necessity). The background of this "must" may be found in Dan. 2:28 f., 45. The same thought is to be found in Rev., not merely in Rev. 2:22 and 7:14 (cf. 3:10), where the great tribulation is referred to, but also in 1:9, where tribulation is once again linked with Dan. 7:13 (cf. v. 7), and Dan. 2:28 (cf. v. 1, "what must soon take place").

2. A second element is expressed by the phrase thlipseis tou Christou, the afflictions of Christ. The OT statement, "Many are the afflictions of the righteous" (Ps. 34:19), is particularly applicable to the truly righteous One (Acts 3:14 f.), and so it is possible to speak of "the afflictions of Christ" (Col. 1:24, only here). It is not only a question of the afflictions left over for the church, but also of the afflictions which the Lord suffered in his unique → suffering (Col. 1:20, 22), with which the church knows itself to be linked in its own affliction. Passages like 2 Cor. 1:5 (cf. vv. 4, 6); 4:10 (cf. v. 8) allow us to infer that the thought of such afflictions was implicit in the proclamation of the passion of Christ. Both they and the whole of Christ's passion are under the divine "must" (dei; cf. W. Grundmann, TDNT II 22 ff.).

3. Only in the light of the two preceding concepts can we properly understand the third concept which is contained in statements about the afflictions of believers.

(a) Believers are implicitly included in the eschatological thlipsis. They are exposed to the tribulations (Matt. 24:9), especially hatred, betrayal and death. It is above all the time of leading astray (cf. Matt. 24:4 f., 11, 24; → Lead Astray), the time of testing (cf. peirasmos in Lk. 8:13, where the par. Matt. 13:21, Mk. 4:17 have thlipsis and diōgmos; → Tempt).

(b) Col. 1:24 (see above 2) makes it clear that Christians experience these afflictions in solidarity with Christ's passion. This is a familiar thought, especially in Paul. All distress and affliction suffered by Christians, which are caused by the pressure of the world on them, must always be understood in the light of this solidarity. Only so can they be rightly explained and endured (cf. 2 Cor. 1:5 with 1:4, 6; cf. 4:10 f. with 4:8; cf. Phil. 3:10; 1 Pet. 4:13). Precisely for this reason tribulation and all other distress cannot separate us from Christ (Rom. 8:35). Because we are suffering with him in these distresses we shall be glorified together with him (Rom. 8:17; cf. 8:37; cf. 1 Thess. 1:6, following Christ in affliction).

(c) The thlipsis does not come unexpectedly to the believer. Its connection with the eschatological and christological tribulation discussed above, both of which depend on the divine "must", makes it a priori probable that the tribulations of Christians are also conditioned by this "must". Moreover, this is stated several times in the NT. Jn. 16:33 says, "in the world you have tribulation". "Through many tribulations we must enter the kingdom of God" (Acts 14:22) was the reason why Paul and Barnabas exhorted the disciples to continue in the faith. It is perhaps most clearly expressed in 1 Thess. 3:3, where Paul writes that he had sent Timothy to exhort the church, "that no one be moved by these afflictions; you yourselves know that this is to be our lot [eis touto keimetha]" (cf. the eis touto keimetha with eis touto gar eklēthēte, "for to this you were called", 1 Pet. 2:21). The apostle Paul had expected nothing else for his own life (1 Thess. 3:4; cf. Acts 20:23), and had experienced it in full measure in his missionary work (2 Cor. 1:4, 6, 8; 2:4; 4:8, 17; 6:4–10; 7:4 f.; 11:16–12:10; Eph. 3:13; Phil. 1:17; 4:14; 1 Thess. 3:4, 7). But it caused him → joy, not grief: "We rejoice in our sufferings, knowing that suffering produces endurance" (Rom. 5:3; cf. Jas. 1:2 f.; → Patience, art. hypomonē).

(d) As a result the tribulation is already a reality in the NT situation. The church in Jerusalem had experienced it (Acts 11:19), and it became a reality for other churches, in Corinth (2 Cor. 1:4), Thessalonica (1 Thess. 1:6; 3:3) and Macedonia generally (2 Cor. 8:2). But these afflictions are determined, so far as believers are concerned, by their goal in God's plan of salvation. They are therefore never purposeless, but produce → hope (Rom. 5:3 ff.). Just as a woman, who has given birth to a child, no longer remembers the anguish in her joy (Jn. 16:21), so believers have sorrow (Jn. 16:22) and tribulation (Jn. 16:33). But Jesus' "be of good cheer" is no empty phrase, because he knows the righteousness of God which repays with affliction those who cause affliction, and grants → rest to the afflicted as compensation (2 Thess. 1:6 f.). R. Schippers

→ Abomination of Desolation, → Animal, art. thērion, → Antichrist, → Fruit, art. skolops, → Judgment, → Number, art. chilias (on the idea of a millennium), → Patience, → Present, → Satan, → Serve, → Suffer, → Time, → War, → Weakness, → Witness

(a). G. R. Beasley-Murray, Jesus and the Future: An Examination of the Eschatological Discourse, Mark 13, with Special Reference to the Little Apocalypse Theory, 1954; and A Commentary on Mark Thirteen, 1957; W. Beilner, "Persecution", EBT II 667 ff.; S. G. F. Brandon, The Fall of Jerusalem and the Christian Church, 1951; S. Brown Apostasy and Perseverence in the Gospel of Luke, 1959; W. H. C. Frend, Martyrdom and Persecution in the Early Church: A Study of Conflict from the Maccabees to Donatus, 1965; L. Gaston, No Stone on Another: Studies in the Significance of the Fall of Jerusalem in the Synoptic Gospels, Supplements to NovT 23, 1970; D. R. A. Hare, The Theme of Jewish Persecution of Christians in the Gospel according to St Mathew, 1967; I. H. Marshall, Kept by the Power of God: A Study of Perseverance and Falling Away, 1969; A. Oepke, diōkō, TDNT II 229 f.; H. Schlier, thlibō etc., TDNT III 139–48.

(b). N. Brox, Zeuge und Märtyrer, 1961; E. Güttgemanns, Der leidende Apostel und sein Herr, 1966; E. Lohse, Märtyrer und Gottesknecht, FRLANT 64, 1955; and Geschichte des Leidens und Sterbens Jesu Christi, 1964; W. Nauck, "Freude im Leiden. Zum Problem einer urchristlichen Verfolgungstradition", ZNW 46, 1955, 68–80; J. Schneider, Die Passionsmystik des Paulus, 1929; A. Steubing, Der paulinischer Begriff Christusleiden, 1905; W. Wichmann, Die Leidenstheologie, 1930.

Pharisee

Φαρισαῖος	(Pharisaios), Pharisee.

OT Pharisaioi is the Hellenized form of the Aram. word pᵉrîšayyā' (Heb. pārûš; from pāraš, to divide, separate), and means "the separated ones". It denotes the representatives of an influential religious group in Judaism. The designation is only attested in Hellenistic Judaism up till the time of the NT, but not at all in the LXX. Rabbinic literature provides the first attestation of the word in the Aramaic-speaking world, although it is frequently found in a negative sense. The word was used in the Gk. form by Josephus and in the NT. The date of the appearance of the designation can no longer be precisely fixed. The first occurrences are from the time of Hyrcanus I (c. 135 B.C.). From the 1st cent. B.C. (under the reign of Alexandra [76–67 B.C.]) onwards, however, the Pharisees were in the public esteem, the most respected and thus the leading group of Judaism.

1. Josephus, himself a Pharisee, came to speak of the movement in differing ways in his writings. Perhaps in order to please his Hellenistic readers he called them one of the many Jewish "philosophies", alongside the Essenes, → Sadducees and the "fourth philosophy" (cf. War 2, 8, 2–14; Ant. 18, 1, 3–6). But much remains unclarified for us in Josephus' writings, including the meaning of the name. Since the representatives of this group never called themselves by this name but spoke of themselves rather as the ḥᵃḇērîm, the comrades of a ḥᵃḇûrâh, a society, the question arises as to whether the designation Pharisaioi is not perhaps a nick-name which the opponents gave to the exponents of that piety. The name implies separation, but it is not clear from what they were separated. Basically, three positions are held.

(a) One view is that it is a group of the Hasidaioi Hasidim (Heb. ḥᵃsîḏîm), the pious, separated from Judas Maccabaeus (cf. 1 Macc. 2:42; 7:13; 2 Macc. 14:6). Although they originally fought alongside the Maccabees against the Seleucids, they later brought about the separation which this name gave them, as a protest against the Hasmonaeans' claims to political domination.

(b) The Pharisees originated out of the group of the ḥᵃḇērîm ("confederates"), which separated itself c. 135 B.C. from the rest of the people who did not keep the → law, in order to follow exactly the individual prescriptions of the law. The name thus goes back to the separation of a group of pious people true to the law from a lawless – and thus godless – people.

(c) The name is a pun on the "separation", i.e. the distinction between the individual prescriptions of the law. "The law was the centre of their thought and practical life and, in continually renewed applications and metaphors, was lauded as Israel's most precious and sacred garment" (H. Lietzmann, The Beginnings of the Christian Church, 1953³, 30).

There is much to be said for the view that the group received their name through understanding themselves as the fellowship which embodied the true → Israel and distancing themselves from the rest of the nation (position (b)).

2. Essential to Pharisaism was the fact that it tried "by obedience to the Law . . . to represent the pure community, the true people of God preparing itself for the coming of the messiah" (E. Lohse, EKL III 181). Their views were sketched by Josephus (War 2, 8; cf. also Pss.Sol. c. 60 B.C. which is Pharisaic in outlook). Characteristic of their outlook are the following points.

(a) The legal prescriptions of Scripture were observed with minute attention to detail (e.g. tithing all goods, attending to all the purificatory regulations, all the sacred times laid down by God and the cultic actions). It is significant that the Halachah, the body of legal decisions which interpreted the law, was reckoned to be equally as binding as the biblical tradition. This is illustrated by Shammai's reply to the question, "How many Toroth do you have?": "Two; the written Torah and the oral Torah" (Shabbath 31a). Josephus reports "that the Pharisees have delivered to the people a great many observances by succession from their fathers, which are not written in the laws of Moses; and for that reason the Sadducees reject them, and say, that we are to esteem those observances to be obligatory which are in the written word, but are not to observe what are derived from the tradition of our forefathers. And concerning these things it is that great disputes and differences have risen among them, while the Sadducees are able to persuade none but the rich, and have not the populace obsequious to them, but the Pharisees have the multitude on their side" (Ant. 13, 10, 6). The Pharisaic experts in the Scripture, the "Scribes", gave a binding interpretation to the laws by way of casuistic exegesis. This casuistry led in part to highly rarified controversial debates and decisions between individual scholars. Thus food could not be cooked on the → Sabbath. But whereas the School of Shammai permitted water to be set on a stove which had been previously heated, the School of Hillel permitted both hot water and cooked food to be placed on it (Sabbath 3:1). Whereas fish might not be caught from a vivarium on a festival day or have food given to them, wild animals and birds could be so treated. "This is the general rule: What must still be hunted is forbidden, but what needs not to be hunted is permitted" (Yom Tob 3:1). Practically every area of human life came to be included and regulated by an abundance of individual prescriptions. The Pharisees, however, did not wish to destroy the law. Rather, they "sought by their interpretations to make the law fit the new environs, believing as they did that God had provided for every circumstance that could arise. In this they had no idea that they were introducing new notes, although of course they were; they were simply discovering old truth" (M. S. Enslin, Christian Beginnings, 1938, 115). The Pharisees set the people a good example in keeping the law, in that they themselves in addition adhered to the strict purificatory rites which were otherwise only binding for priests.

(b) By contrast with the Essenes, who emphasized the complete helplessness of the human will over against God, and the Sadducees, who stressed the unlimited freedom of the will, the Pharisees held firm to a conditional freedom of human will. Man may well not be able to frustrate the will of God, but within the frame of the divine plan he is able to do good or evil (cf. Josephus, Ant. 18, 1, 3; cf. Pss. Sol. 5:6).

(c) The Pharisees took over the partly Persian and Hellenistic conceptions of the → resurrection (cf. Sanhedrin 10:1; Sotah 9:15), of a → judgment after death and of supramundane beings (all of which had made large inroads into Judaism), including very pronounced conceptions of → angels, the Devil (→ Satan) and intermediary beings. Whereas the Pharisees believed that they could read these doctrines out of the sacred writings, the Sadducees rejected the ideas as being irreconcileable with the Holy Scriptures (cf. Acts 23:8).

(d) From the downfall of the Hasmonaeans the Pharisees, by contrast with the Zealots, strictly renounced all use of force. God himself, through his intervention, will give the decisive turn and liberate his people.

(e) The Pharisees awaited the messiah (→ Jesus Christ, art. Christos), whereas the Sadducees did not (cf. Pss.Sol. 17:23–18:9).

In that Pharisaism was sufficiently flexible to adjust itself to the conditions of a changed way of life, it had become the most spiritually formative power in Judaism at the time of Jesus. But with its preoccupation with the fulfilment of the laws, Pharisaism was in fact an intensely narrow and rigid formalism.

NT In the NT the Pharisees are only named in the four Gospels (Matt. 27 times; Mk. 12 times; Lk. 27 times; Jn. 19 times), Acts (9 times), and once in Paul (Phil. 3:5), where Paul himself admits to having been "as to the law a Pharisee".

In Pharisaism Jesus met → Israel as it strove for true → faith and obedience (→ Hear, art. akouō) to God, but which had become totally hardened in formalism and thus barred itself from precisely that for which it was searching – to please God. Jesus and the Pharisees are consequently depicted in Matt., Mk. and Jn. (with the exception of Nicodemus) as embittered opponents (cf. Mk. 3:6; 12:13; Matt. 12:14; the woes of Jesus in Matt. 23; Jn. 3:1, 4, 9; 7:50; 11:46 f., 57; 19:39).

1. It is a striking fact that Lk. does not generally represent the Pharisees as inimical to Jesus. According to Lk., Jesus was a guest of distinguished Pharisees and ate food at table with them (Lk. 7:36 f.; 11:37; 14:1). Lk. 13:31 even reports that Pharisees warned Jesus of Herod's attempts on his life. Pharisees were members of the Christian community (Acts 15:5). It may be that the strained relationship with Jesus subsequently became milder towards the church (cf. Acts 5:34; 15:5; 23:9). It is quite conceivable that Lk. slightly corrects the picture of the Pharisees in his Gospel on the basis of the experiences of the first churches. The particular Lucan material where Jesus is a guest of Pharisees, however, leads up to confrontation in which Jesus makes certain pronouncements. The historicity of Lk.'s account has been questioned on the grounds that the Pharisees would scarcely have invited a wandering preacher to a meal when he violated their purificatory regulations so blatantly (Lk. 11:38). It has also been asked why a man who is deemed worthy of being invited to table should be denied all the customary courtesies of the kiss, the anointing, and the foot-washing (Lk. 7:44 f). To this the answer may be that individual Pharisees (like Nicodemus in Jn. 3) were attracted to Jesus, but that their background prevented them from extending the formal rites of fellowship and acceptance to one who stood outside their number and was so critical of their understanding of righteousness.

2. (a) The equation of oral tradition with the OT law led to serious divergences. The nature of the difference is made clear only in the light of the two opposing understandings of God. For the Pharisees, God is primarily one who makes demands; for Jesus he is gracious and compassionate. The Pharisee does not, of course, deny God's goodness and love, but for him these were expressed in the gift of the Torah and in the possibility of fulfilling what is there demanded (cf. Aboth 3:14 ff.). Adherence to the oral tradition, with its rules for interpreting the law, was seen by the Pharisee as the way to the fulfilment of the Torah (cf. Mk. 7:3, 5; Matt. 12:2 ff.; 15:1 ff.). The individual prescriptions are here on a par with one another. By contrast, in Matt. 12:7 Jesus cites Hos. 6:6 ("I desire mercy and not sacrifice"), and thereby grounds the entire interpretation of the law in the → command of → love (cf. Matt. 22:34–40; Mk. 12:28–34; Lk. 10:25–28). Since God himself is the Loving One, all other commands are fulfilled in loving one's neighbour (cf. Jn. 8:3–11). Jesus' elevation of the double command of love (Matt. 22:34–40) to the level of a norm of interpretation and his rejection of the binding nature of the oral tradition (cf. Lk. 11:38–42) led him into conflict with Pharisaic casuistry (Matt. 15:1–20 par. Mk. 7:1–23; cf. Isa. 29:13; Lk. 6:7; 13:3–6; → Hand; → Gift, art. korban).

(b) Jesus repudiated the exclusion by the Pharisees of the uneducated and notorious sinners (cf. Matt. 9:11; Mk. 2:16; Lk. 5:30) as lack of love. The Pharisees were ostensibly concerned about the judgment of God, forgiveness, and about the holy nation of Israel, but their attitude was the negative one of separation and concern for the minutiae of the law. But Jesus sought to heal the injuries of his people by bringing God's love to the helpless and sick (cf. Matt. 9:12 ff.; Mk. 2:17). The Pharisees ostensibly took God's commands seriously, but their preoccupation with fulfilling the commands exactly became an end in itself which prevented them from entering the kingdom of God themselves and also from letting others enter it (Matt. 23:1–36; → Open).

(c) This segregation essentially led the Pharisees into a conflict between what the Torah demanded and what they actually performed (see the Woes in Matt. 23). The casuistic exegesis of the law with the consequent dissociation from everything impure led them to a distinctly merit-based system of thought in which lay a disastrous self-deception (→ Reward, art. misthos). The Pharisees drew on themselves the accusation of hypocrisy with regard to men (→ Lie, art. hypokrinō) and → pride in relation to God (cf. Matt. 6:5, 16; 23:13, 15, 23, 25, 27 ff.; Lk. 19:10 ff.).

Their understanding of God and their resultant understanding of the law made the Pharisees blind to the true offer and claim of God meeting them in Jesus (cf. Matt. 23:26; Mk. 9:40). The tragedy was that the Pharisees earnestly sought God, but, because a particular picture of God had hardened in their tradition, they decided against Jesus (cf. Matt. 12:14 par. Mk. 3:6; cf. Lk. 6:11) and thus against God (cf. Matt. 12:24–32; Lk. 11:43–54). Thus the Pharisee became in the NT the type of an attitude which is by no means confined to Judaism. D. Müller

→ Command, → Gift, art. korban, → Hand, → Herb, → Law, → Levite, → Lie, Hypocrite, → Open, → Priest, → Sadducee, → Tax, → Tithe

(a). I. Abrahams, Studies in Pharisaism and the Gospels, I, 1917, II, 1924; B. W. Bacon, "Pharisees and Herodians", JBL 39, 1920, 102–112; L. Baeck, The Pharisees, 1957; M. Black, "Pharisees", IDB III 774–81; J. Bowker, Jesus and the Pharisees, 1973; F. C. Burkitt, "Jesus and the Pharisees", JTS 28, 1927, 392–97; R. H. Charles, Religious Developments between the Old and New Testaments, 1914; W. D. Davies, Introduction to Pharisaism, 1967; J. D. M. Derrett, Law in the New Testament, 1970; and Jesus' Audience, 1973; H. L. Ellison, "Jesus and the Pharisees", Journal of the Transactions of the Victoria Institute 85, 1953, 33–46; M. S. Enslin, Christian Beginnings, 1938; W. R. Farmer, Maccabees, Zealots and Josephus, 1961; J. Finkelstein, "The Pharisees: Their Origin and their Philosophy", HTR 22, 1929, 185–261; The Pharisees: The Sociological Background of their Faith, I–II, 1962³; The Pharisees and the Men of the Great Synagogue, Texts and Studies of the Jewish Theological Seminary of America 15, 1950; and "The Ethics of Anonymity among the Pharisees", Conservative Judaism 12, 1958, 1–12; W. Förster, Palestinian Judaism in New Testament Times, 1964; T. F. Glasson, "Anti-Pharisaism in St. Matthew", JQR 51, 1960–61, 316–20; F. C. Grant, Ancient Judaism and the New Testament, 1960²; and Roman Hellenism and the New Testament, 1962, 132–47; M. Hengel, Judaism and Hellenism, Studies in their Encounter in Palestine during the Early Hellenistic Period, I–II, 1974; R. T. Herford, The Pharisees, 1929; M. D. Hussey, "The Origin of the Name Pharisee", JBL 39, 1920, 66–69; J. Jeremias, Jerusalem in the Time of Jesus, 1969, 246–67; A. F. J. Klijn, "Scribes, Pharisees, Highpriests and Elders in the New Testament", NovT 3, 1959, 259–67; J. Z. Lauterbach, "The Pharisees and their Teachings", Hebrew Union College Annual 6, 1929, 69–139; T. W. Manson, "Sadducee and Pharisee: The Origin and Significance of the Names", BJRL 22, 1938, 144–59; and The Servant-Messiah, 1953; R. Marcus, "Pharisaism in the Light of Modern Scholarship", JR 32, 1952, 154–64; and "Pharisees, Essenes and Gnostics", JBL 73, 1954, 155–61; R. Meyer and H. F. Weiss, Pharisaios, TDNT IX 11–48; G. F. Moore, "The Rise of Normative Judaism", HTR 17, 1924, 307–73, and 18, 1925, 1–38; and Judaism (see index); J. Neusner, "The Fellowship (ḥbwrh) and the Second Jewish Commonwealth", HTR 53, 1960, 125–42; H. Odeberg, Pharisaism and Christianity, 1964; W. O. E. Oesterley, The Jews and Judaism during the Greek Period: The Background of Christianity, 1941; C. Rabin, Qumran Studies, 1955, 53–70; and "Alexander Jannaeus and the Pharisees", Journal of Jewish Studies 7, 1956, 3–11; D. W. Riddle, Jesus and the Pharisees, 1928; A. T. Robertson, The Pharisees and Jesus, 1920; T. H. Robinson, "Jesus and the Pharisees", ExpT 28, 1916–17, 550–54; C. Roth, "The Pharisees in the Jewish Revolution of 66–73", JSS 7, 1962, 63–80; S. Safrai, M. Stern, D. Flusser and W. C. van Unnik, eds., The Jewish People in the First Century, Historical Geography, Political History, Social, Cultural and Religious Life and Institutions, I, 1974; Schürer (see index); R. A. Stewart, Rabbinic Theology: An Introductory Study, 1961; S. van Tilborg, The Jewish Leaders in Matthew, 1972; S. Umer, Pharisaism and Jesus, 1962; S. Zeitlin, "The Pharisees and the Gospels", Essays and Studies in Memory of L. R. Miller, 1938, 235–86.

(b). S. Abir, "Der Weg der Pharisäer", Freiburger Rundschau 11, 1958–59, 29–34; L. Baeck, Paulus, die Pharisäer und das Neue Testament, 1961; W. Beilner, "Der Ursprung des Pharisäismus", BZ Neue Folge 3, 1959, 235–51; and Christus und die Pharisäer. Exegetische Untersuchung über Grund und Verlauf der Auseinandersetzung, 1959; E. L. Dietrich, "Pharisäer", *RGG*³ V 326 ff.; W. Foerster, "Der Ursprung des Pharisäismus", ZNW 34, 1935, 35–51; W. Grundmann, "Die Pharisäer", in J. Leipoldt and W. Grundmann, eds., Umwelt des Urchristentums, I, 1967², 269 ff.; F. Heinrichs, Die Komposition der antipharisäischen und antirabbinischen Wehe-Reden bei den Synoptikern, Dissertation, Munich, 1957; W. G. Kümmel, "Jesus und die Rabbinen", in Heilsgeschehen und Geschichte, 1965, 1 ff.; E. Lohse, "Pharisäer", EKL III 181 f.; J. C. Margot, "Les Pharisiens d'après quelques ouvrages récents", Revue de Théologie et de Philosophie, 3, 1956, 294–302; F. Merkel, "Jesus und die Pharisäer", NTS 14, 1967–68, 194–208; R. Meyer, "Die Bedeutung des Pharisäismus für Geschichte und Theologie des Judentums", TLZ 77, 1952, 677–84; and Tradition und Neuschöpfung im antiken Judentum. Dargestellt an der Geschichte des Pharisäismus, Mit einen Beitrag von H. F. Weiss, "Der Pharisäismus im Lichte der Überlieferung des Neuen Testaments", Sitzungsgsberichte der Sächsischen Akademie der Wissenschaften zu Leipzig, philosophisch-historische Klasse, 110, 2, 1965; J. van der Ploeg, "Jésus et les Pharisiens", Mémorial Lagrange, 1950, 279–93; H. Rasp, "Flavius Josephus und die jüdischen Religionsparteien", ZNW 23, 1924, 27–47; J. Schmid, "Die Pharisäer", BuL 3, 1962, 270 ff.; K. Schubert, "Die jüdischen Religionsparteien im Zeitalter Jesu", in K. Schubert, ed., Der historische Jesus und der Christus unseres Glaubens, 1962, 15 ff.; F. Sieffert, "Pharisäer und Sadduzäer", RE XV 264–92; M. Simon, Les Sectes Juives au Temps de Jésus, 1960; M. Weber, "Die Pharisäer", Gesammelte Aufsätze zur Religionssoziologie, III, 1921, 401–42; J. Wellhausen, Die Pharisäer und Sadduzäer, 1924².

Please

ἀρέσκω

ἀρέσκω (areskō), strive to please, accommodate, please; ἀρεστός (arestos), pleasing; ἀρεσκεία (areskeia), the desire to please; εὐάρεστος (euarestos), acceptable, pleasing; εὐαρεστέω (euaresteō), please (someone), take pleasure in; ἀνθρωπάρεσκος (anthrōpareskos), one who tries to please men, a man-pleaser.

CL areskō comes from a root ar-, to fit (from which also comes aretē, virtue), and is originally cognate with Lat. arma, weapons, and ars, art. Attested from Homer onwards, it denotes the pleasure which men or the gods derive from something. From it are derived the adjs. arestos, pleasant, and euarestos, pleasing, content (often attested in inscriptions). The noun areskeia, pleasure, grace, is attested from Aristotle onwards. Formations peculiar to the LXX are euaresteō, find pleasure, be content, and anthrōpareskos, someone who seeks to please men (only in LXX Ps. 53:5[52:6] as a mistranslation of ḥōnāḵ, "he who encamps against you", perhaps through confusion with ḥēn, grace). It is later found in Pss.Sol. 4:7, 8, 19.

OT 1. In the LXX the vb. occurs some 60 times, the adj. arestos 33 times, as a translation of good, be good; right, be right, often with "in the eyes of" added, following the underlying Heb. text. In Dan. (e.g. 3:22) it translates šᵉpar, be beautiful, please (well). It occurs in the expressions "It pleases God . . ." (Num. 23:27), and "the offering of Judah and Jerusalem will be pleasing to God" (Mal. 3:4). A word may be said to please someone, i.e. it meets with his approval, e.g. the king and the assembly (2 Chr. 30:4), the king and his commanders (1 Macc. 6:60).

areskeia is only found in Prov. 31:30 as a translation of ḥēn, grace, favour; euarestos only in Wis. 4:10; 9:10. The vb. euaresteō, to please, to take pleasure in, however, occurs 14 times, generally as translation of Heb. hālaḵ (in the hith.) to walk (with God) (Gen. 5:22, 24; 6:9; 17:1; 24:40; 39:4; 48:15; Exod. 21:8; Jdg. 10:16; Pss. 26[25]:3; 35[34]:14; 56[55]:13; 116[114]:9; Sir. 44:16). Gen. 5:24 is noteworthy here. In the Heb. text attention is directed to the deed of man, expressed by a vb. of action ("Enoch walked with God"), whereas the LXX stresses God's judgment ("Enoch pleased God").

2. In Josephus areskō is found equally of God (it pleased God to make David king, Ant. 6, 8, 1) as of men (King Hyrcanus will do everything that pleases God, Ant. 13, 10, 5).

NT 1. In the NT areskō is found 17 times, of which 14 instances are in Paul and the remaining three are in Matt., Mk. and Acts. The sole instance of areskeia is also in Paul. In general areskō denotes a definite attitude.

1. Paul's use of the vb. three times in Rom. 15:1–3 is noteworthy. Paul charges the self-styled "strong" Christian with being concerned to please himself, i.e. in the last analysis being self-centred (v. 1). The phrase heautois areskein "denotes the inversion of human existence and evasion of God" (O. Michel, Der Brief an die Römer, KEK 4, 1966[13], 354, n. 4). This attitude of unrestrained self-trust is met by Paul with the rejoinder that each person should please his neighbour for his good, to build him up (v. 2). This does not mean seeking to please men in the sense of an attitude which looks for approbation and recognition from others (cf. Eph. 6:6), but enacting the will of God in the form of love for one's neighbour, in the case of the weak → brother. The basic direction of Christian conduct, which Paul appeals to by areskō, is grounded in the attitude of Christ himself (v. 3), who did not live to please himself, ouch heautō ēresen. Rather, he assumed the attitude of the OT servant of God (Ps. 69:9) who submitted himself in obedience towards God.

areskō in Paul is, therefore, a term which characterizes man in both a false or a valid attitude to life. The apostle knows this from his own experience. Through his conversion he has been freed from concern for the favour of men, for he stands under the command of the Lord. He, therefore, wishes to live to please God and Christ. Paul does not preach in order to please men, but God (1 Thess. 2:4). Aligning himself with Christ and the goal set by Christ of saving all, Paul seeks to live with the intention of pleasing Jews and Greeks alike; i.e. he lives for the benefit of the many, that they may be saved (1 Cor. 10:33). The same thought lies behind other passages where the vb. is not used, e.g. Rom. 12:17 f. and 1 Cor. 9:22 (on this see H. L. Ellison, "Paul and the Law – 'All Things to All Men' ", in W. W. Gasque and R. P. Martin, eds., Apostolic History and the Gospel, 1970, 195–202). The Christian congregation must also see how they can please God (1 Thess. 4:1).

2 Tim. 2:4 adopts the picture of the soldier used elsewhere in Hellenistic moral teaching (cf. 1 Cor. 9:7; Phil. 2:25; Phlm. 2). The soldier on active service does not get himself involved in civilian life, but aims to please his commanding officer. It is thus impressed upon the reader that he is not to let himself be diverted from his work for Christ by concern about his earthly welfare. Similarly, the unmarried man who is not tied by marital considerations can direct all his energy to gaining Christ's approbation and recognition (1 Cor. 7:32). On the other hand, "those that are in the flesh [hoi de en sarki ontes] cannot please God" (Rom. 8:8). Here → flesh signifies a self-centred existence guided by human considerations. It is the antithesis of being led by the → Spirit (cf. Rom. 8:4 f., 9, 11, 13, 16). It is defined in terms of having the mind set on the flesh, being hostile to God, and not submitting to God's law (Rom. 8:7). Its end is death (Rom. 8:6, 13). The Jews who put Jesus and the prophets to death "displease God and oppose all men" (1 Thess. 2:15).

2. The adj. arestos, pleasing, occurs 4 times in the NT. In Acts 12:3 the execution of James is said to have been pleasing to the Jews. Elsewhere it is God who is the object of the pleasing. The expression ouk areston estin, it is not right (i.e. before God) (Acts 6:2) reflects LXX-Gk. usage. According to Jn. 8:29, Jesus always did what was pleasing to God, i.e. what was consonant with God's will. arestos underlines once more the unity between the sent and the sender. Because Christians keep God's commandments and do what pleases him, they receive from him in → prayer whatever they ask (1 Jn. 3:22).

3. The vb. euaresteō, please (3 times in Heb.), and the adj. euarestos, pleasing, (8 times in Paul and once in Heb.) also have God or Christ as their object, apart from one exception (Tit. 2:9). Indirectly, even Tit. 2:9 does not deviate from this: slaves are exhorted to be euarestoi to their masters, and so live to their satisfaction, in order, as members of the church community, to give God glory by their conduct and to please him (cf. Eph. 6:6). Children are exhorted to be obedient to their parents, because that is pleasing to the Lord (Col. 3:20). Paul thanks the Philippians for their gift, which is a → sacrifice pleasing to God (Phil. 4:18). The Christians in Rome are exhorted to offer their "living bodies as a holy sacrifice, truly pleasing to God" (Rom. 12:1 f. JB; cf. Eph. 5:10). The Christian's whole existence is offered to God (cf. 2 Cor. 5:9). Anyone who serves (→ Serve; → Slave, art.

douleuō) Christ in righteousness, peace and joy in the Holy → Spirit pleases God and is acknowledged by him (Rom. 14:18). Therefore, we must pray that God may work in us through Christ that which is pleasing in his sight (Heb. 13:21).

Heb. 11:5 f. takes up Gen. 5:24 LXX. It is inferred from the fact that Enoch pleased God (euarestēkenai) that he was a believer; for without → faith one cannot please God. (On Enoch see Jude 14 f.; Eth.Enoch 1:9; 71:14; Sir. 44:16; Jub. 4:17; 10:17; Wis. 4:10 ff. [cf. F. F. Bruce, The Epistle to the Hebrews, NLC 1964, 286–90). In the Christian life charity and acts of love are a "sacrifice" in which God takes pleasure (Heb. 13:16).

4. areskeia only occurs in Col. 1:10. Paul prays that the Colossians may be filled with the knowledge of God's will, so that they may walk worthily of the Lord and always please him.

5. anthrōpareskos is encountered only in the rule to → slaves (Eph. 6:6; Col. 3:22; cf. also 2 Clem. 13:1). Slaves are to obey their masters not in an adulatory fashion, to please men, but in the fear of the Lord.

6. The words of this group are predominantly used in the NT to denote pleasure in the sight of God or Christ which derives from a definite attitude. Even where recognition from the side of men is meant, the gaze generally goes beyond men to God whose pleasure should be sought. H. Bietenhard

εὐδοκέω

εὐδοκέω (eudokeō), be well pleased, regard favourably, take delight in; εὐδοκία (eudokia), good will, good pleasure, favour, wish, desire.

CL The vb. eudokeō is a colloquial term from Hellenistic times (attested from the 3rd cent. B.C.). It is thought to be derived from the hypothetical eudokos, formed from eu, good, and dechomai, to accept. In cl. Gk. it means to be well pleased or content, to consent, approve; in the pass. to be favoured, i.e. prosper; to find favour with. From the vb. the LXX has also formed the noun eudokia, whereas cl. Gk. uses the noun eudokēsis, satisfaction, approval, consent. The goal of the Epicurean philosophy of life is the eudokoumenē zōē, the life with which one is content (Philodemus Philosophus, De Morte 30, 42; cf. G. Schrenk, TDNT II 740).

OT 1. (a) In the LXX eudokeō occurs some 60 times. Where there is an underlying Heb. text, it generally trans. rāṣâh, to take pleasure in, like, enjoy, decide upon, elect, and denotes a passionate and positive volition. The godly man rejoices over the sanctuary (1 Chr. 29:3; Ps. 102[101]:15), and in the works of truth (1 Esd. 4:39). One decides for Alexander Balas (1 Macc. 10:47), elects Simon as leader (1 Macc. 14:41). One is lenient and indulgent (2 Chr. 10:7; Sir. 18:31). With a negative it means to spurn (Hab. 2:4).

Yahweh takes pleasure in his people (Ps. 44[43]:4; 149:4), in a pious man (2 Sam. 22:20), in those who fear him (Ps. 147[146]:11). A man prays that it may please Yahweh to deliver him (Ps. 40[39]:13). On the other hand, Yahweh has no pleasure in the calf (i.e. the strength) of a man's leg (Ps. 147[146]:10), nor in anyone who does evil (Mal. 2:17). A penitent mind is more pleasing to Yahweh than a → sacrifice (Ps. 51:16 ff.[50:18 ff.]; Jer. 14:12).

(b) The noun eudokia occurs 25 times (only in Pss., Cant., 1 Chr., Sir.). In 8 places it is a translation of Heb. rāṣôn (56 times in MT), good-pleasure, grace, the will of God (40 times in MT). eudokia can denote the will or pleasure of man (cf. Ps. 141[140]:5; Sir. 8:14; 9:12), but also the divine good-pleasure, God's grace and blessing (Ps. 5:13; 51:19[50:21]; 89[88]:17; Ps.Sol. 8:22). Sir., in particular, displays the tendency to use eudokia to render Heb. rāṣôn, in order to describe God's good pleasure, his gracious will, activity and election (e.g. Sir. 1:27; 11:17; 15:15 et al.). eudokia denotes the divine purpose or determination in, e.g. Sir. 33:13; 36:13; 39:18.

2. The linguistic usage of Judaism corresponds with that of the OT. In the formula "to do God's good pleasure" which occurs frequently among the Rabbis, the Heb. rāṣôn denotes God's will. The expression "well-pleasing in God's sight", stemming from courtly language, is also common. In prayer the formula "May it be pleasing in thy sight", i.e. may it be thy will, is used. This corresponds exactly with the expression used by Jesus in Matt. 11:26: eudokia egeneto emprosthen sou, "it was well-pleasing in your sight" (cf. Matt. 18:14; Lk. 10:21; 12:32; Ber. 7d; Targ. Cant. 7:14; Tg.O.Gen. 28:17; Num. 14:8; G. Dalman, The Words of Jesus, 1902, 211). But the expression can also denote human good pleasure.

3. The Dead Sea Scrolls speak of "all the sons of his [or your, i.e. God's] good pleasure" (1QH 4:33; 11:9), or of "the elect of [the divine] good pleasure" (1QS 8:6). rāṣôn in the sense of will likewise occurs frequently (1QH 10:2, 6, 9; 14:13; 16:10; 4QpPs 37:2, 5). Parallel expressions are "the elect of heaven" (1QM 12:5), and "the elect of righteousness" (1QH 2:13). "Good-pleasure is a term of electing and predestinarian thought" (J. Maier, Die Texte vom Toten Meer, II, 1960, 105). It is thus not a matter of the good will of men, but of the men whom God has elected – specifically, the members of the Qumran community.

NT 1. eudokeō is found 21 times in the NT, including 11 times in Paul and 3 times each in Matt. and Heb., but never in the Johannine writings. eudokia occurs 9 times, including 6 times in Paul, twice in Lk. The vb. is used of human beings in 7 places, the noun in two.

2. In a number of passages it is man who is the subject. Thus, the congregations of Macedonia decided to make a collection for the parent community of Jerusalem (Rom. 15:26 ff.). Paul considered it preferable to be away from the body and be at home with the Lord (2 Cor. 5:8; → Flesh; → Body, art. sōma). He took pleasure in his → weakness for the sake of Christ (2 Cor. 12:10). He was ready to share not only the gospel with the church at Thessalonica but his own self (1 Thess. 2:8). He decided to stay behind in Athens alone (1 Thess. 3:1). All those who have found pleasure in unrighteousness will be judged (2 Thess. 2:12). In Rom. 10:1 Paul says that it is his heart's wish and his prayer that the Jews may be saved, i.e. that they may come to faith in Jesus. During Paul's time in prison, some people preached Christ out of jealousy and rivalry, but others because they were well-disposed towards Paul (Phil. 1:15).

3. (a) In all other passages it is God's purpose, resolve and choice that is spoken of. God has no pleasure in (ouk eudokēsas) sacrifice (Heb. 10:6, 8; cf. Ps. 40:6 ff.), and those who shrink back (Heb. 10:38; cf. Hab. 2:4). But Christ does the will of God as the One who offers himself as a sacrifice and so gains God's good pleasure.

It is God's purpose to give the kingdom to the little flock (Lk. 12:32). God decided to reveal Jesus Christ to Paul (Gal. 1:15), and to save believers by the folly of the preaching of the → cross (1 Cor. 1:21; → Redemption, art. sōzō). God had no pleasure in the majority of the Israelites in the → wilderness period, and he repudiated them (1 Cor. 10:5). God has decided that all the → fullness of the Godhead should dwell in Christ (Col. 1:19).

(b) At the baptism of Jesus God's voice sounded out from heaven: "This is my beloved Son, with whom I am well pleased" (Matt. 3:17 par. Mk. 1:11; but cf. Lk. 3:22; cf. Ps. 2:7; Isa. 42:1; Gen. 22:2; 2 Pet. 1:17). According to Matt. 17:5, this voice resounded with the same words at Jesus' transfiguration (cf. Matt. 12:18). Here, too, it is a case of God's choice and determination, by which he has installed Jesus as messiah. eudokia in Matt. 11:26 describes the transcendent purpose of God (see above OT 2).

(c) The best-known place in the NT where eudokia occurs is Lk. 2:14. One should here retain the reading en anthrōpois eudokias as the original. The expression corresponds with the phrases adduced above from the Dead Sea Scrolls (see above OT 3). The phrase refers to the men of God's good pleasure whom God has elected in order to bring them his salvation, Christ. The song of the angels proclaims a divine event and activity: God has sent the Christ to earth. For this he is glorified in heaven; the effect on earth is peace. In the birth of the Christ → peace, i.e. eschatological fulfilment, the kingdom of God, begins on earth. We are not, therefore, dealing here with the good will of men, as if they somehow approved of or contributed to this event. However much men are affected as recipients of salvation, the angels' announcement was not directed at those who were at the time well-intentioned. The "men of good will" ought to disappear entirely from Bible translations and Christmas meditations! Rather, we are dealing with God's sovereign and gracious will, which elects for itself a people for salvation and sanctification (→ Man, art. anthrōpos NT 1; cf. E. Vogt, " 'Peace Among Men of God's good Pleasure' Lk. 2:14", in K. Stendahl, ed., The Scrolls and the New Testament, 1958, 114–7). J. C. O'Neill wishes to support the translation "Glory be to God on high, and in earth peace, good will towards men", but his case involves an emendation of the text which treats "peace" as an early gloss on eudokia ("Glory to God in the Highest, And on Earth?", in J. R. McKay and J. F. Miller, eds., Biblical Studies: Essays in Honour of William Barclay, 1976, 172–77).

(d) In the hortatory passage Phil. 2:13 f. Paul summons the congregation to work out their salvation in fear and trembling, because God is at work in them, "inspiring both the will and the deed, for his own chosen purpose [hyper tēs eudokias]." This is probably the best translation, for God has chosen the believers and continues to work in them, so that his elective purpose also reaches its goal. The passage brings together the sovereignty of God and the responsibility of man. In Eph. 1:5, 9, 11 eudokia is synonymous with thelēma or boulē, → will, and prothesis, design, plan, purpose (→ Foreknowledge). Believers have a place in God's eternal will and election which have salvation as their goal. God's free grace is the central point of the statements. The concise formulation in the prayer of 2 Thess. 1:11 plērōsē pasan eudokian agathōsynēs (lit. "fulfil all good will for goodness") probably also means God's elective purpose directed towards the conduct of Christians. Paul therefore prays at the same time that God's will may be done and reach its goal. But it is also possible to understand it as referring to the will of men: "may fulfil every good resolve" (RSV). H. Bietenhard

(a). W. Foerster, areskō etc., TDNT I 455 ff.; G. Schrenk, eudokeō etc., TDNT II 738–51; E. Vogt, " 'Peace Among Men of God's Good Pleasure' Lk. 2:14", in K. Stendahl, ed., The Scrolls and the New Testament, 1958, 114–17.
(b). C. H. Hunzinger, "Neues Licht auf Lk. 2, 14 anthrōpoi eudokias", ZNW 44, 1952–53, 85 ff.; J. Jeremias, "Anthrōpoi eudokias", ZNW 28, 1929, 13–20; H. Schürmann, Das Lukasevangelium, Theologischer Kommentar zum Neuen Testament, 3, 1, 1970, 113 ff.

Poor

πένης	πένης (penēs), poor; πενιχρός (penichros), poor.

CL Through its root penēs is linked with ponos, → burden, trouble. From Xen. onwards it refers to the man who cannot live from his property, but has to work with his hands. Hence the penēs is not like the → ptōchos, who is poor enough to be a beggar and needs help. He is only relatively poor; the opposite of penēs is plousios, wealthy (→ Possessions). The term includes the handworker and small peasant, who, subsequent to Solon's legislation, were the main supporters of the Athenian democracy.

For a long time security through property was considered to be the best guarantee of a virtuous life, while penia, poverty, was considered to be the root of moral offences, a view found as late as Plato (Laws, 11, 919b). Not later than the time of Socrates this concept was realized to be inadequate, for experience shows that it may in fact be penia that creates the will for culture (cf. Diogenes quoted by Stob. Ecl. 5, 783), and so may lead to virtue, which is the true ideal in life. By the art of self-sufficiency (autarkeia; cf. Epict., Dissertationes 4, 6, 3 ff.; → Suffice) a life in poverty can be rich and free (Plut., De Vitando Aere Alieno 3; 6; De Virtute et Vitio 4). No religious value was attributed to poverty.

OT 1. In the LXX penēs is used some 50 times, and its synonym penichros 3 times. It is used only 6 times for rāš (2 Sam. 12:1, 3, 4; Eccl. 4:14; 5:7; Ps. 82[81]:3), which is nearest to the basic meaning of the Gk., although rāš is found 21 times in all. Normally penēs is used for the economically and legally oppressed. It is used 29 times for 'eḇyôn: 15 times in the Pss. (e.g. 72:4, 13; 86:1; 109:31), and even more clearly in Amos 2:6; 4:1; 5:12; 8:4, 6; Ezek. 18: 12. It is used 12 times for 'ānî (e.g. Ps. 9:12, 18; 72:12; Deut. 24:14 f.), and 9 times for dal (e.g. 1 Sam. 2:8). Since these words are also rendered by → ptōchos, which is preferred for 'anî and dal and which is also used 11 times for 'eḇyôn, it is clear that the definite difference that existed in Gk. life between the one who needs alms (ptōchos) and the one who is forced into manual work or who has limited means (penēs) has been obscured. Even if this development may in part be due to the relative similarity of meaning in the Heb. equivalents, its deeper reason will have to be sought in the Israelite concept of property and social order. In the long run poverty could be created almost only by unrighteousness, i.e. the failure of the community and disobedience to God. penichros occurs at Exod. 22:24 ('ānî); Prov. 28:15; 29:7 (dal).

2. There follow two lines of semantic development. Hellenized Judaism clearly tends to follow the normal Gk. meaning of penēs: e.g. ptōchos is not to be found in Philo, who in contrast to the LXX even translates 'ānî in Lev. 19:10 and 23:22 by penēs instead of ptōchos (Virt. 90). By so doing he employs the less offensive, politer term for poor, and thus makes the Bible more suitable for Gk. ears, but in so doing deprives it of an important stress.

NT In contrast, the NT, following OT thought but not the LXX's choice of words, has clearly decided on → ptōchos, so as to show not merely a man's standing in society but especially his standing before God, for he has nothing to bring him. penēs occurs only in 2 Cor. 9:9 in a quotation from Ps. 112:9 ("He scatters abroad, he gives to the poor; his righteousness endures for ever"), even though the reference shows that the Heb. 'ebyôn must refer to those needing help. penichros is found only in Lk. 21:2, of the widow at the temple treasury, who was visibly poor. The par. in Mk. 12:42 uses ptōchos. L. Coenen

πτωχός

πτωχός (ptōchos), poor; πτωχεύω (ptōcheuō), be poor, beg; πτωχεία (ptōcheia), poverty.

CL 1. ptōchos (Homer onwards) belongs to the root ptē, crouched together (cf. ptēssō, be afraid; ptōssō, duck in fear; ptōx, timid). It signifies utter dependence on society. As an adj. it means begging, dependent on the help of strangers, poor as a beggar, poor. Commoner still is its use as a noun meaning beggar. It stands in contrast to plousios, rich, owning property. Secular Gk. has the metaphorical meanings of meagre, inadequate, scanty, unable, conceding something (first attested in Dionysius of Halicarnassus, flourished 30–10 B.C.). Its most important derivatives are: ptōcheuō, beg, live the life of a beggar, be destitute; ptōcheia, activity of a beggar, begging, destitution, poverty.

2. In early Gk. thought poverty was not considered to have religious value. It did not give a man any special standing before the gods, nor did it place him under their special protection. Charity, especially to those impoverished by the blows of fate, was considered a virtue when exercised by the propertied classes, because it was useful to society, but it was not regarded as a religious or ethical act. There was no public care for the poor. In later Gk. philosophy poverty was regarded by some as a favourable precondition for virtue. The highest goal of life was to live virtuously in all material conditions including poverty.

OT 1. In the LXX ptōchos (some 100 times) is used for the following five Heb. words. In the first four it is virtually synonymous with → penēs.

(a) 'ānî (37 times), oppressed, poor, humble, lowly (e.g. Lev. 19:10; 2 Sam. 22:28; Job 29:12; Pss. 10:9[9:30]; 12[11]:5; Isa. 3:14 f.). Koehler-Baumgartner connect it with 'ānâh, afflict, oppress, humble (719 ff.). Where economic dependence is implied, the terms under (b) and (c) may be linked with it. Where there is no specific mention of an oppressor, the word becomes generally synonymous with the socially poor, with those without land. That such poverty had been caused by disinheritance or unlawful injury and not by the person's own fault is shown by its being contrasted with violence, not riches. It is, therefore, understandable that Yahweh, the Judge of Israel, protects these poor (see below 2 and 3) and they place their sole trust and hope in this (→ Humility, art. praÿs OT).

(b) dal, low, weak, poor, thin (22 times), especially in Amos (2:7; 4:1; 5:11; 8:4, 6), Pss. (e.g. 72[71]:13; 82[81]:3; 113[112]:1) and Prov. (e.g. 19:4[1], 17; 28:3, 8, 15). dal means physically weak, and is then used of the position of the lowest social classes, of the peasants as poor, needy, unimportant.

(c) 'eḇyôn, in want, needy, poor (11 times). This is nearest to the conventional meaning of ptōchos and means one seeking alms, a beggar. It is then used generally for the very poor and homeless. The linked 'ānî w^e'eḇyôn, poor and needy, especially in the Pss., connotes the attitude of one praying to God (7 times, e.g. Ps. 35[34]:10; 86[85]:1; LXX ptōchos kai penēs). The one who prays belongs to God and so comes before him in entreaty.

(d) rāš, in want, poor (11 times). This is used purely in a social and economic sense, poor, needy, in want. It is sometimes translated by → penēs (cf. 2 Sam. 12:3). It is a favourite word in the wisdom literature; in Prov. it is used especially as a contrast to rich (e.g. 13:8; 14:20; cf. also 17:5; 19:7, 22; 22:2, 7; 28:6, 27).

(e) In the latest OT writings miskēn, a term still used by the Oriental beggars for themselves, is used in Eccl. 4:13, 9:15 f. for the dependent, the socially lower (cf. Exod. 1:11: lit. "the cities of base service"); it takes the place of 'ānî after it had received its weakened meaning of poor. Only in Sir. 30:14 is it translated by ptōchos. Its derivative miskēnuṯ (Deut. 8:9) is rendered by ptōcheia, poverty.

In the light of the Heb. terms it translates, ptōchos in the LXX has widened its meaning, especially in the social, economic and religious spheres.

2. Because Israel's land is Yahweh's land, there may be no continuing poverty among his people. Hence the Book of the Covenant (Exod. 20:22–23:19) lays down the following programme, which in principle was always valid in Israel, even if it was seldom carried out:

(a) The Israelite who as a result of economic need had to sell himself in payment of debt was to be freed in the sabbatical year (Exod. 21:2).

(b) In the sabbatical year, when the ground was allowed to lie fallow, its produce belonged to the poor (Exod. 23:10 f.).

(c) It was forbidden to exploit or oppress the poor (Exod. 22:22–27).

(d) The law may not be perverted against the poor (Exod. 23:6 ff.). Yahweh himself proclaimed himself the protector of the poor (Exod. 22:27b), and reminded Israel of how he freed from Egypt, thus ending his position of dependence there (Exod. 22:21; 23:9).

3. Under the monarchy the economy changed from one of barter to one using money, and many of the farmers became financially dependent on townsmen. This impoverishment of a wide stratum of the population was felt not merely as a major social problem but also as a religious one, for it involved a breach of the divine law. The eighth-century prophets especially attacked this social injustice in the name of Yahweh, and in particular the oppression of the farmers and the poor, threatening with the judgment of God the rich who were responsible (e.g. Amos 2:7; 4:1; 5:11; 8:4; Isa. 3:14 f.; 5:8 f.; 10:2; Mic. 2:2; 3:2 ff.).

Only in the setting of this historical situation can we understand the meaning in the Psalms of "poor", "needy". The poor man is the one who suffers injustice; he is poor because others have despised God's law. He therefore turns, helpless and humble, to God in prayer, not only for his own need, but also in the consciousness that ultimately it is a question of God's glory. Through the self-identification, generation after generation, of those who prayed with the poor in psalms of individual lamentation and thanksgiving (e.g. Pss. 25:16; 40:17(MT 40:18); 69:29(MT 69:30); 86:1; 109:22) there gradually developed the specific connotation of "poor" as meaning all those who turn to God in great need and seek his help. God is praised as the protector of the poor (e.g. Pss. 72:2, 4, 12 ff.; 132:15), who procures justice for them against their oppressors (Pss. 9; 10; 35; 74; 140).

Deuteronomy offers a plan of social reformation, based on legislation of the wilderness period. It has its own rules for the protection of the poor (e.g. Deut. 15:1–18; 24:14–22). However, the word ptōchos does not appear, for → "brother" is used as a technical term for one's impoverished fellow-citizen.

Ezekiel in exile saw the coming destruction of the rump-kingdom of Judah as Yahweh's punishment for their oppression of the poor and needy (Ezek. 22:29).

The misery of the exile led temporarily to the use of "poor" and "needy" as collective terms for the people. They are found in a number of hopeful eschatological promises about the future of the people (e.g. Isa. 29:19; 41:17; 49:13; 51:21 ff.; 54:11 ff.; 61:1–4).

The many reflections and varying pronouncements of the wisdom literature on the poor are much less religious in tone. They vary from explanations of poverty as the fault of those who suffer it (e.g. Prov. 6:6–11; 23:21), and warnings against it (Sir. 40:28), to the praise of the poor and a call to improve their lot (Sir. 10:30; Prov. 14:31).

4. All the main lines of OT thought occur again in Rabbinic Judaism, both concerning material poverty and its alleviation and its spiritualization and religious classification. The following points should be noted:

(a) The ritual practice of great voluntary acts of charity throughout Palestine and the Diaspora. The groups of the Pharisees, Essenes and the Hellenistic Jews of Jerusalem had their special forms of charitable work, e.g. feeding the poor, clothing the naked (cf. SB IV 536–558 on private charity in early Judaism).

(b) There was an excellent organization of care for the poor in the synagogue communities which went as far as founding hospices. This was the more remarkable as there is no trace of a programme of social equality in it. It was rooted in the ethical commandments of the OT and was made possible by the temple → tax, and after the destruction of Jerusalem by the weekly public alms (→ Serve, art. diakoneō OT 2; cf. Taanith 24a). In fact, fairly clear norms were laid down for the contributions expected from synagogue members; they can be traced back with certainty to the period before the destruction of the temple. The poor were expected to contribute (Shekalim 1:7; 2:5) to demonstrate their religious equality (SB II 46), though they were the first to profit from individual and synagogue care for the poor. Priests and Levites without estates, foreigners, widows and orphans could expect to receive the tithes for the poor to be paid at the end of every third year (cf. Deut. 14:29; 26:12). These continued to be collected and gained greater importance after the destruction of Jerusalem.

5. Considerable variations of opinion are to be found in the spiritual judgments on poverty.

(a) Especially the Psalms of Solomon among the pseudepigraphic writings reserve the term "poor" for those who have experienced divine acts of deliverance and are hence identical with the righteous (cf. Pss.Sol. 5:2, 11; 10:6; 15:1; 18:2). Heavy material burdens and martyrdom are generally included.

(b) The community of the "poor" in Qumran made renunciation of private property a rule of the order, and built up a well-organized community life in expectation of eschatological salvation. 1QpHab. 12:3, 6, 10; 4QpPs. 37; 2:10 show that they had chosen the term "poor" for themselves. The Hymns (1QM) frequently use the phrase "poor and needy". In their writings they attacked the priests who exploited the poor. (See further E. Bammel, TDNT VI 896–99; → Possessions, art. ploutos OT 3.)

(c) The dominant Rabbinic theology ultimately denied that poverty had any theological value. Occasionally it even saw the cause of poverty in lack of knowledge of the Torah, the one real poverty (cf. Nedarim 41a; and in contrast the first beatitude in Matt., see below NT 2 (b)). This led to a feeling of moral superiority over the poor. In striking contrast to this a form of popular eschatology clung to the belief "that the poor . . . are the primary objects of the divine mercy" (TDNT VI 902; cf. Exod.R. 31, 13 on 22:24). Such belief fostered the danger of idealizing poverty.

NT 1. ptōchos occurs 34 times in the NT, mostly in the Gospels (24 times; of these 10 times in Lk., 6 times in material peculiar to him); ptōcheia, poverty, 3 times; ptōcheuō, be poor, only in 2 Cor. 8:9.

1. The Gospels. (a) ptōchos occurs in its lit. sense in the Synoptic Gospels. Jesus told the rich man who wanted to inherit eternal life, "Sell what you have, and give to the poor" (Mk. 10:21; cf. Lk. 18:22). Matt. 19:21 qualifies the saying by inserting the condition, "If you will be perfect." In Mk. 12:41–44 par. Lk. 21:1–4 Jesus says that the apparently negligible gift of the poor woman, entitled to support, is far greater than those of the rich. Only in the events leading up to the Passion does Jesus in Mk. 14:7, Matt. 26:11, Jn. 12:8 say that almsgiving has to take second place, when it is a question of a last opportunity for an extravagant act of love to one destined to death (Matt. 26:11; Mk. 14:7; Jn. 12:8).

(b) Jesus speaks of the poor in Matt. 11:5 and in the first beatitude (Matt. 5:3; Lk. 6:20). The question of the original form is disputed, as is the question whether the saying was taken from Jewish tradition. There is much to be said for the view that the shorter Lucan form ("Blessed are you poor, for yours is the kingdom of God") is original, though not the use of the second person (cf. Matt. 5:3: "Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven"). Matt. gives an interpretative paraphrase which brings out the Heb. meaning.

Neither passage uses "poor" in the general social meaning. The enlarged form in Matt., "the poor in spirit [hoi ptōchoi tō pneumati]", brings out the OT and Jewish background of those who in affliction have confidence only in God (cf. Pss. 69[68]: 28 f., 32 f.; 37[36]:14; 40[39]:18; Isa. 61:1; Pss.Sol. 10:7; 1QM 14:7; 1QS 4:3; cf. D. Hill, The Gospel of Matthew, 1972, 110 f.; and Greek Words and Hebrew Meanings, 1967, 234, 251). In Lk. the beatitudes are essentially confined to poverty, the poor, those who weep, the hungry, the hated, and are followed by woes over the rich (Lk. 6:24 ff.). By using the 2nd person plur., Lk. indicates that the poverty of the beatitudes is that caused by → discipleship. For he who believes in the Son finds all the → promises of God for the poor and suffering, miserable and humble (e.g. Isa. 57:15; 61:1), for those who weep (Ps. 126:5 f.) and are hungry (Isa. 49:10; Ezek. 34:29) fulfilled in him. In the same way Jesus is proclaimed in Matt. 11:5 par. Lk. 7:22 (a quotation from Isa. 61:1) as the fulfiller of the longing of the OT for salvation. His acts find their culmination in the proclamation of the gospel to the poor. (→ Blessing, art. makarios.)

(c) Luke records this quotation from Isa. 61:1 at the beginning of Jesus' ministry as a programme (Lk. 4:18). It occurs in the words that Jesus read in the synagogue at Nazareth. In Lk. this dominant theme of poverty is linked with a sharp attack on the rich (Lk. 6:24 ff.; → Possessions). According to Lk., Jesus told the man who had invited him to a meal (Lk. 14:12 ff.) to invite the poor and others from whom no repayment could be expected, and promised him an eschatological reward for so doing. Similarly the poor are the first substitute guests at the great banquet (Lk. 14:21).

Lazarus (lit. "God helps") is the type of the poor whom God receives (Lk. 16:20, 22), and the anonymous rich man who failed in his duty to him is the type of those condemned by God (cf. Lk. 12:13–21; see further J. D. M. Derrett, "Dives and Lazarus and the Preceding Sayings", in Law in the New Testament, 1970, 78–99). When Zacchaeus gave the half of his goods to the poor after his conversion (Lk. 19:8) his gratitude showed itself in concern for the poor (cf. Derrett, "The Anointing at Bethany and the Story of Zacchaeus", op. cit., 266–85).

H.-H. Esser

(d) The Synoptic Gospels, in particular, depict Jesus' way of life as one of self-chosen poverty. This is highlighted by the reply that he gave to a would-be disciple: "Foxes have holes, and birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man has nowhere to lay his head" (Matt. 8:20 par. Lk. 9:58). The → disciples left all in order to follow him (Matt. 4:18–22 par. Mk. 1:16–20, Lk. 5:1–11; Jn. 1:35–51; cf. also Lk. 13:33). The sale of his → possessions and a life of discipleship in poverty were demanded of the rich young ruler as the precondition of eternal life (Matt. 19:16–22; Lk. 18:18–24). On the missions on which the disciples were sent they were to go without possessions or provisions (Matt. 10:1–16; Lk. 9:1–6; 10:1–12; → Bag, art. pēra). In this way of life there was in fact a double separation: from possessions and from family ties (Matt. 10:37 ff.; Lk. 14:25–33). The life-style which Jesus adopted for himself and called his disciples to adopt was one which exemplified the Sermon on the Mount, especially the Beatitudes. But the particular emphasis on poverty characterized by lack of possessions and cutting loose from family ties suggests that Jesus identified himself with the poor in the Beatitude. His whole way of life was thus a conscious identification with the poor and the OT concept of poverty. In itself this was an act of loving compassion. At the same time it was a life which deliberately chose to cast itself on the care of the Father. But in doing so, Jesus was also putting to the test the people of Israel. By being confronted by Jesus in this way the responsiveness of Israel faced its supreme test. (→ Possessions and the various sayings and parables of Jesus examined under the various key words.)

C. Brown

2. James strongly attacks the attitude of the rich both in public and in church services (2:2 f., 6 f.) and demands equal esteem for the poor. He bases his position on the facts that God "has chosen those who are poor in the world" (2:5), and that mercy towards men on earth will be the criterion in the final judgment (2:13; cf. Matt. 25:31–46).

3. In the letters to the churches of Smyrna in Rev. 2:9 and Laodicea in Rev. 3:17 (→ Cold, art. psychros NT) the contrast between poor and rich shows the difference between men's estimate and that of the glorified Lord (1:9 ff.). Rev. 13:16 describes how all social and economic classes, rich and poor alike, are captured by the hypnotic power of the beast from the abyss (→ Animal, art. thērion). H.-H. Esser

4. Paul made only occasional use of the concept, although he was deeply concerned for the poor.

(a) The poor are mentioned in the lit. sense in connection with the collection for the church in Jerusalem. "The poor of Jerusalem" was perhaps a name which they had acquired (cf. Rom. 15:26, where "of the saints" is added; cf. also Gal. 2:10). In Rom. 15:26 Paul speaks of the "some contribution" (RSV, lit. → "some fellowship", koinōnian tina) which the churches of Macedonia and Achaia were making. "They were pleased to do it, and indeed they are in debt to them, for if the Gentiles have come to share in their spiritual blessings, they ought also to be of service to them in material blessings" (Rom. 15:27). Paul himself was going to Jerusalem with it diakonōn tois hagiois (lit. "serving the saints"), prior to going to Spain (Rom. 15:25; cf. vv. 24, 28; 1:10 ff.; Acts 19:21), although he was aware of the personal risk because of Jewish antagonism in Judea (v. 31). In 1 Cor. 16:1–4 Paul gives various recommendations about the collection, suggesting (as he did to the churches of Galatia, v. 1), that they put something aside on the first day of the week (v. 2), and proposing on his arrival "to send those whom you accredit by letter to carry your gift to Jerusalem" (v. 3), and, if it seems advisible, to go himself as well (v. 4).

It would seem that the Corinthians did not follow these instructions, for Paul returns to the question in 2 Cor. 8 and 9, which some scholars hold to be separate letters which were subsequently incorporated into 2 Cor. Evidently a year had elapsed and the collection was not much further advanced (2 Cor. 8:10). Paul, therefore, sent Titus to complete the work (vv. 6, 15 f., 23; cf. 9:5) together with two men perhaps appointed by the Jerusalem church (vv. 18 f., 22 f.; cf. 9:5). Possibly the men referred to here were the same as those appointed by the council at Jerusalem to communicate its decisions (Acts 15:20). Paul writes "not as a command, but to prove by the earnestness of others that your love also is genuine" (v. 8). Moreover, he sets before them the example of Christ: "For you know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that though he was rich, yet for your sake he became poor, so that by his poverty you might become rich [hoti di' hymas eptōcheusen plousios ōn, hina hymeis tē ekeinou ptōcheia ploutēsēte]" (v. 9; on this verse see below (c)).

In 2 Cor. 9:1–4 Paul expresses the hope that his boasting about the Corinthians to the churches of Macedonia and Achaia will not prove vain in view of the possibility of a meagre response. He has sent on the brethren "to arrange in advance this gift you have promised, so that it may be ready not as an exaction but as a willing gift" (v. 5). He reminds them that "he who sows sparingly will also reap sparingly, and he who sows bountifully will also reap bountifully. Each one must do as he has made up his mind, not reluctantly or under compulsion, for God loves a cheerful giver" (vv. 6 f.; cf. Prov. 22:8 LXX). This is further reinforced by a quotation from Ps. 112:9 (v. 9). Paul sees the response to the needs of the poor as a free expression of obedience and gratitude: "Under the test of this service, you [v.l. they] will glorify God by your obedience in acknowledging the gospel of Christ, and by the generosity of your contribution for them and for all others; while they long for you and pray for you, because of the surpassing grace of God in you. Thanks be to God for his inexpressible gift!" (vv. 13 ff.).

Elsewhere, the poor are mentioned in Gal. 2:10, where Paul recalls his meeting with the "pillars" of the Jerusalem church, at which he was given the right hand of fellowship to go to the Gentiles, whilst they would go to the circumcision, i.e. the Jews, "only they would have us remember the poor, which very thing I was eager to do." The need of material relief at Jerusalem is evident from the story of the appointment of the seven to serve in the daily distribution (Acts 6:1 ff.). The situation was no doubt aggravated for the church by Jewish hostility (cf. Acts 4:1 ff.; 5:17 ff.; 6:12 ff.; 7:54 ff.; 9:1 f.; 12:1 ff.). Acts 11:27 ff. reports how the Christian prophet Agabus came from Jerusalem to Antioch and foretold the great famine which took place under the emperor Claudius. Several famines are known from other sources to have taken place about this time (Josephus, Ant. 3, 15, 3; 20, 2, 5; 20, 5, 2; Dio Cassius, 60, 11; Eusebius, Chron.Canon; Tacitus, Ann. 12, 43; Orosius, 7, 6, 17; cf. F. F. Bruce, The Acts of the Apostles, 1952², 239 f.). Acts 11:29 f. records the response of the church at Antioch: "And the disciples determined, every one according to his ability, to send relief to the brethren who lived in Judea; and they did so, sending it to the elders by the hand of Barnabas and Saul" (cf. 12:25).

For a reconstruction of the events and an interpretation of their significance see K. F. Nickle, The Collection: A Study in Paul's Strategy, SBT 48, 1966. Nickle holds that the prototype of Paul's collection was the famine relief sent from Antioch. Paul's collection began as an act of charity, instigated at the Jerusalem meeting described in Gal. But as the tensions increased between the Gentile mission led by Paul with its more liberal attitude to the law and those at Jerusalem who clung to Jewish practices, the collection took on a theological significance for Paul. It was a means of reconciliation which bore fruit in the decisions of the Jerusalem council. Although there were Jewish analogies in the temple → tax, the collection took on a christological and soteriological significance. It was not only an act of charity among fellow believers, motivated by the love of Christ; it was also an expression of the solidarity of the Christian fellowship, showing that God had also called the Gentiles to faith. It was, moreover, "an eschatological pilgrimage of the Gentile Christians to Jerusalem by which the Jews were to be confronted with the undeniable reality of the divine gift of saving grace to the Gentiles and thereby be themselves moved through jealousy to finally accept the gospel" (op. cit., 142). This latter point helps to explain the seriousness with which Paul regarded the collection, and lends credence to the account of the trip in Acts 19:21–21:16 which Paul insisted on completing despite the dangers (Acts 20:3, 23; 21:4, 10 ff.). Acts rightly depicts the visit to Jerusalem "as the culmination and embodiment of Paul's entire apostleship" (op. cit., 143; cf. Acts 20:24). As an act of charity and means of promoting unity between the two wings of the church, the collection produced tangible results. But it failed to provoke the unbelieving Jews to turn to Christ. Indeed, "the project not only supplied the coup de grâce to the faltering mission to the Jews, but also resulted in the frustration of Paul's plans for his future missionary activity and required him to reorient his apostleship to that field of limited labour available to him as a Roman prisoner" (op. cit., 155 f.). Although in the providence of God the collection was not instrumental in bringing about a widespread conversion of the Jews, it was nevertheless immensely fruitful in uniting the church and in formulating principles of Christian giving.

(b) The theme of poverty is further developed in relation to the apostles who among other things are described by Paul "as poor, yet making many rich" (2 Cor. 6:10). The paradoxical nature of the apostolic ministry follows the pattern set by Christ (see below (c)) who is himself the ground and pattern for all Christian life and giving.

(c) Paul uses the vb. only in 2 Cor. 8:9 where he applies it to Christ (see above (a)). eptōcheusen, "he became poor" is the ingressive aor. (Funk § 331). The passage implies the pre-existence of Christ, though it does not define the manner of Christ's becoming poor in the way that Phil. 2:6 ff. speaks of the self-emptying of Christ (→ Empty, art. kenos NT 3). For other descriptions of the incarnation cf. Rom. 15:3 (where Paul grounds Christian conduct on the pattern of Christ who "did not please himself"; cf. Ps. 69:9) and Gal. 4:4 f. (where Paul describes Christ as "born of woman, born under the law, to redeem those who were under the law, so that we might receive adoption as sons"). In each case the description of the manner of Christ's coming brings out the practical application that Paul wishes to make to his readers. Here Christ's becoming poor is the paradoxical ground of the true riches of the believer. It is also the ground and example for Christian giving. The richness of the Corinthians in terms of spiritual gifts is alluded to at the beginning of 1 Cor. (1:5). But Paul can also speak ironically of their being rich (1 Cor. 4:8) in view of their spiritual conceit.

(d) The cosmic spirits (stoicheia) worshipped by the heathen, including formerly the Galatian believers, are called "weak and beggarly [asthenē kai ptōcha]" (Gal. 4:9; cf. 4:3). The word translated "beggarly" here is in fact the same word which was used at Gal. 2:10 for the poor. In other words, the stoicheia have nothing at all to offer – but enslavement. But by listening to the Judaizers with their insistence upon the necessity of → circumcision for salvation and the observance of "months, and seasons, and years" (4:10), the Galatian Christians are themselves in danger of returning to their former enslavement, when through Christ and the Spirit they could live as sons and heirs of God himself (4:1–7). On the stoicheia (cf. Col. 2:8, 20) → Law, art. stoicheia. C. Brown

→ Gift, → Humility, → Possessions, → Slave

(a). H. von Campenhausen, "Early Christian Asceticism", in Tradition and Life in the Church 1968, 90–122; A. Cronbach, "The Social Ideas of the Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha", Hebrew Union College Annual 18, 1944, 119–56; J. D. M. Derrett, Law in the New Testament, 1970; A. Gelin, The Poor of Yahweh, 1964; F. Hauck, penēs etc., TDNT VI 37–40; F. Hauck and E. Bammel, ptōchos, etc., TDNT VI 885–915; M. Hengel, Property and Riches in the Early Church : Aspects of a Social History of Early Christianity, 1974; and Judaism and Hellenism: Studies in their Encounter in Palestine in the Early Hellenistic Period, I–II, 1974; J. Jeremias, Jerusalem in the Time of Jesus: An Investigation into Economic and Social Conditions during the New Testament Period, 1969, 109–119; M. Katz, "Protection of the Weak in the Talmud", Columbia University Oriental Studies, 24, 1925, 72–82; L. E. Keck, "The Poor among the Saints in the New Testament", ZNW 56, 1965, 100–29; and "The Poor and the Saints in Jewish Christianity and Qumran", ZNW 57, 1966, 54ff.; K. F. Nickle, The Collection: A Study in Paul's Strategy, SBT 48, 1966; M. Rostovtzeff, The Social and Economic History of the Hellenistic World, I–III, 1941; and The Social and Economic History of the Roman Empire, ed. P. M. Fraser, 1957²; M. Stenzel, "Poverty", EBT II 671 f.; R. de Vaux, Ancient Israel: Its Life and Institutions, 1961; H. W. Wolff, Anthropology of the Old Testament, 1974.

(b). W. W. Graf Baudissin, "Die alttestamentliche Religion und die Armen", Preussische Jahrbücher 149, 1912, 193–231; H. Birkeland, 'Ānî und 'Ānāw in den Psalmen, 1933; and Die Feinde des Individuums in der israelitischen Psalmentliteratur, 1933; H. Bolkestein, Wohltätigkeit und Armenpflege im vorchristlichen Altertum, 1939; K. Bornhäuser, Der Christ und seine Habe nach dem Neuen Testament, 1936; H. Bruppacher, Die Beurteilung der Armut im Alten Testament, 1924; A. Causse, Les "Pauvres" d'Israel, 1922; H.-J. Degenhardt, Lukas, Evangelist der Armen. Besitz und Besitzverzicht in der lukanischen Schriften, 1965; M. Dibelius, "Die soziale Motiv im Neuen Testament", in Botschaft und Geschichte, I, 1953, 178–203; M. von Dmitrewski, Die christliche freiwillige Armut vom Ursprung der Kirche bis 12. Jahrhundert, 1913; H. Donner, "Die soziale Botschaft der Propheten im Lichte der Gesellschaftsordnung in Israel", Oriens Antiquus 2, 1963, 229–45; J. Dupont, Les Béatitudes, 1954, 184–244; M. Fendler, "Zur Sozialkritik des Amos", EvTh 33, 1973, 32–53; P. Gauthier, Die Armen, Jesus und die Kirche, 1965; D. Georgi, Die Geschichte der Kollekte des Paulus für Jerusalem, ThF 38, 1965; H. Greeven, Die Hauptprobleme der Sozialethik in der neuren Stoa und im Urchristentum, 1935; F. Hauck, Die Stellung des Urchristentums zu Arbeit und Geld, 1921; P. Humbert, "Le Mot biblique ' 'ebyôn' ", Revue d'Historie et de Philosophie Religieuses 32, 1952, 1–6; R. Kittel, "Armengesetzgebung bei den Hebräern", RE 2, 60–63; R. Koch, "Die Wertung des Reichtums im Lukasevangelium", Biblica, 38, 1957, 151–69; H. Kreissig, Die sozialen Zusammenhänge des judäischen Krieges, Schriften zur Geschichte und Kultur der Antike 1, 1970; W. G. Kümmel, "Der Begriff des Eigentums im Neuen Testament", in Heilsgeschehen und Geschichte, 1965, 271–77; A. Kuschke, "Arm und Reich im Alten Testament, mit besonderer Berücksichtigung der nachexilischen Zeit", ZAW 57, 1939, 31–57; E. Kutsch, L. Hardick and F. Lau, "Armut", *RGG*³ I 622–28; J. Leipoldt, "Jesus und die Armen", Neue kirchliche Zeitschrift 28, 1917, 784–810; and Der soziale Gedanke der urchristlichen Kirche, 1952; I. Loeb, La Littérature des Pauvres dans la Bible, 1892; E. Lohmeyer Soziale Fragen im Urchristentum, 1921; N. Peters, Die soziale Fürsorge im Alten Testament, 1936; P. A. Munch, "Einige Bemerkungen zu "niyyîm und den r"šā'îm in den Psalmen", Le Monde Orientale 30, 1936, 13–26; W. Nowack, Die sozialen Probleme Israel und deren Bedeutung für die religiöse Entwicklung dieses Volkes, 1982; A. Rahlfs, 'ānî und 'ānāw in den Psalmen, 1892; SB I 818–26; II 643–47; IV 741, 503, 524 ff.; P. Régamez, La Pauvreté, 1941; M. Vansteenkiste, "L'ani et l'anaw dans l'Ancien Testament", Divus Thomas 59, 1956, 3–19.

Possessions, Treasure, Mammon, Wealth, Money

Possessions in some form or other are necessary to life. Gk. uses chrēma, ktēma and hyparxis as general words for property and possessions. In the NT at least peripoiēsis, that which is one's own, has to be distinguished from them, because it is used in non-material contexts. Accumulated wealth may be denoted by ploutos, riches, and thēsauros, treasure. Material wealth can also be personified as a demonic power, Mammon (mamōnas).

θησαυρός

θησαυρός (thēsauros), place where something is kept, treasure box, chest, storehouse, storeroom, treasure; θησαυρίζω (thēsaurizō), store up, gather, save up, reserve.

CL thēsauros is found from Hesiod onwards. Its etymology is uncertain, and it is probably a technical loan-word. It means: (a) a treasure chamber, a storage room, granary, strong-box; (b) treasure. Even at a very early period temples were built with treasure chambers, where gifts and taxes in kind and money could be stored. The practice appears to have spread from Egypt to Greece. Collecting boxes were also known (cf. 2 Ki. 12:10). thēsaurizō is used similarly in the sense of storing up treasure, or putting it in safe keeping.

Mandaean gnostic literature made use of the concepts of the treasure-house and the treasure of life and light from which the soul takes its rise, and to which it may return after it has experienced salvation (cf. W. Foerster, Gnosis: A Selection of Gnostic Texts, II, 1974, 190, 201 f., 210, 216, 223, 225, 233, 235, 239, 263, 287).

OT 1. The corresponding OT term is 'ôṣār. It occurs lit. in Amos 8:5. The "treasury of [the house of] Yahweh" is mentioned in Jos. 6:19, 24 in connection with the holy war and the ban (cf. 1 Ki. 7:5; 14:26); in 1 Ki. 14:26 and 15:18 "the treasures of the king's house" are also mentioned. Later, besides the common usage (Prov. 10:2), we find the concept of heavenly treasuries (Jer. 50:25 [27:25], RSV "armoury"; 15:16; Job 38:22, RSV "storehouses") in which are stored up God's weapons of wrath, and also wind, snow and hail (cf. Eth.Enoch 17:3; Philo, Rer. Div.Her. 76; Fug. 79; Leg.All. 3, 105). The → fear of Yahweh is Zion's treasure (Isa. 33:6). The thought, which sounds like a maxim from wisdom teaching, may be compared with Ps. 74:12; Prov. 1:4; 15:6; Eccl. 1:16; 2:21; Isa. 47:10. The verse "gives an assurance that God will not only annihilate the destroyer in the end but will also henceforth grant his people a blessed future sustained by their fear of God. The dramatic expectation of spoil is surpassed by that of a life in righteousness and the fear of Yahweh in the new Jerusalem. The intrinsic connection between the two can be seen from a study of 11:1 ff." (O. Kaiser, Isaiah 13–39, 1974, 344). In Isa. 45:3 "the treasures of darkness" (i.e. treasures that are hidden away) which God will give Cyrus will give him a true knowledge of Yahweh, the God of Israel. The mention of treasure may be an allusion to the fabulous wealth of Sardis which was captured by Cyrus in 546 B.C. (cf. R. N. Whybray, Isaiah 40–66, New Century Bible, 1975, 105 f.). This would then be a contrast between earthly treasure for which men labour and fight and the treasure which Yahweh alone gives. Men should search for the fear of the Lord and the → knowledge of God as they do for buried treasures (Prov. 2:4 f.).

2. In later Judaism good works, e.g. alms giving, are a treasure which is stored up as a reward in the world to come, while the interest is enjoyed in this world as well (cf. Tob. 4:8 ff.; 2 Esd. 6:5 ff.; 7:77; Tosefta Peah 4:18; SB I 430). "All that Israel lays up in the form of fulfilments of the Law and good works, it lays up for its Father in heaven" (Deut. R. 1 on Deut. 1:1; cf. F. Hauck, TDNT III 137; SB I 431). The rabbis sometimes spoke of the treasure from which the scribe draws and of the treasure house of eternal life, i.e. the place where the souls of the dead are stored up, or the "bundle" in which they are "bound" (cf. 1 Sam. 15:29; F. Hauck, ibid.; SB II 268; III 803).

NT The NT continues both the ancient meaning of thēsauros and its usage in OT and Rabbinic literature. It occurs twice in Paul (2 Cor. 4:7; Col. 2:3), once in Heb. 11:26 and 16 times in the Synoptic Gospels, mainly in the words of Jesus. The vb. thēsaurizō occurs 8 times (twice in Matt.; once in Lk.; 3 times in Paul; and once each in Jas. and 2 Pet.). The concept frequently involves the paradoxical transformation of earthly values. What is treasured by men is of no enduring worth in God's sight, and real treasure involves earthly poverty.

1. (a) In Matt. 2:11 the thēsaurous which the Magi opened in bringing their gifts to the infant Jesus were their treasure chests (→ Magic, art. mageia NT 2 (b); → Gold; → Incense). In Matt. 12:35 par. Lk. 6:45 the → heart is compared with a "good treasure" out of which a good man brings forth good. Here the picture is either that of a storehouse or a treasure chest. In either case the point is that → good can only come out of a good heart. As such, the words constitute a warning against the hypocrisy of appearing to speak good, whereas in fact one intends evil (→ Lie). In Matt. the illustration follows the warning against blasphemy against the → Spirit and precedes the sayings about the sign of → Jonah and the men of → Nineveh. In Lk. it is included in the sayings of the Sermon on the Plain.

(b) In Matt.'s account of the Sermon on the Mount Jesus says to his disciples: "Do not lay up [thēsaurizete] for yourselves treasures [thēsaurous] on earth, where moth and rust consume and where thieves break in and steal, but lay up [thēsaurizete] for yourselves treasures [thēsaurous] in heaven, where neither moth nor rust consumes and where thieves do not break in and steal. For where your treasure [thēsauros] is, there will your heart be also" (Matt. 6:19 ff.). Lk. gives the saying in a different context together with other sayings which in Matt. occur in the Sermon on the Mount which are prefaced by the general formula: "And he said to the disciples . . ." (Lk. 12:22). In Lk.'s version it reads: "Sell your possessions, and give alms; provide yourselves with purses that do not grow old, with treasure in the heavens that does not fail, where no thief approaches and no moth destroys. For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also" (Lk. 12:33 f.). "The parallelism and tautology of Mt. are Hebraic, and probably nearer to the original. He gives a genuine picture of Oriental wealth, garments etc. stored in barbaric abundance, too numerous for use" (A. H. McNeile, The Gospel according to St. Matthew, 1915, 83). On the alliteration and paronomasia of the Heb. poetic form here see M. Black, An Aramaic Approach to the Gospels and Acts, 1967³, 160. The word translated here as "rust" is brōsis which generally means eating (cf. 1 Cor. 8:4; 2 Cor. 9:10). It is used in cl. Gk. for the decay of teeth (Galen 6, 422; cf. Arndt, 147). In Matt. it is widely assumed to denote some form of corrosion or rust, although the latter is more commonly denoted by ios (→ Gall). It might also refer to an insect parallel to the moth (sēs); in Mal. 3:11 LXX it appears to refer to the grasshopper or locust. McNeile thinks that the term refers to the devouring by mice and other vermin of wealth stored in barns (op. cit., 84). The vb. aphanizō which the RSV here translates by "consume" means lit. to render invisible or unrecognizable. It occurs in Matt. 6:16 in the sense of "disfigure". But it can also mean to destroy and in the passive to perish. The vb. diorussō which describes the action of the thieves means to dig through, i.e. the sun-dried brick walls of the house. It is used again in the passive in Matt. 24:43 and Lk. 12:39.

"The idea of 'treasures in heaven' (i.e. what wins divine approval and reward in the coming Kingdom) is thoroughly Jewish; cf. M. Peah i. 1; Test.Levi 13.5; Ps.Sol. 9.9" (D. Hill, The Gospel of Matthew, New Century Bible, 1972, 142). The nature of this treasure is not more precisely defined, although the following sayings in Matt. warn against double-mindedness, trying to serve God and mammon (→ mamōnas), anxiety about food and clothing, culminating in the injunction:

"But seek first his kingdom and his righteousness, and all these things shall be yours as well" (Matt. 6:33). To this is added the warning against anxiety: "Therefore do not be anxious about tomorrow, for tomorrow will be anxious for itself. Let the day's own trouble be sufficient for the day" (Matt. 6:34; → Care). But perhaps the saying, at least in the case of Lk., may be related to the parable of the unjust steward and the succeeding sayings (Lk. 16:1–14) which also contain references to mammon. (On the interpretation of the parable → House, art. oikonomia, NT 1 (a).) The point of the parable and the sayings is to teach wise stewardship of worldly goods so that, when their use is past, there will nevertheless be an enduring benefit both for those who have benefited from such wise stewardship and for those who have exercised it. In particular, Lk. 16:9 states: "And I tell you, make friends for yourselves by means of unrighteous mammon, so that when it fails they may receive you into the eternal habitations." In this verse "they" may refer to those who have benefited from the wise and generous use of "mammon", or it may be a Hebraism referring to God without actually mentioning his name, or it may refer to God and his angels (cf. E. E. Ellis, The Gospel of Luke, New Century Bible, 1966, 201 f.). In any case, what is worth possessing is not material things which perish but personal acceptance by God and by those who have benefited from one's use of material things (cf. Lk. 16:9a). Lk. 12:33 with its injunction to sell one's possessions and give alms appears to be making a similar point. Matt. does not give the parable of the unjust steward or relate the saying about treasure to the injunction to sell one's possessions, but the saying is followed shortly by the warning that one cannot serve God and mammon (Matt. 6:24). Clearly the paradox involves a contrast between worldly possessions and spiritual good. But in view of its proximity to the Lord's Prayer (Matt. 6:9–13) and the saying about the kingdom in Matt. 6:33, Matt. understood the treasure primarily in terms of the → kingdom of heaven (cf. Matt. 13:44). On man's side this is understood in terms of doing the will of God; on God's side it is God's reign and gracious provision for his children. But here again the treasure is not some form of accumulated spiritual capital, it is the realization of a gracious personal relationship with the Father and with one's fellow men in the kingdom of God. For the kingdom of God is not concerned simply with one's private personal relationship with God but with man's relationship to God as it is embodied in his relationships with his fellow men.

Justin Martyr has a saying comparable with Matt. 6:21 and Lk. 12:34: "Where his treasure is, there also is the mind of man" (Apol. I, 15). "Each individual sets his heart on what he counts important, and this allegiance determines the direction and content of his life" (D. Hill, op. cit., 142). In the context of the Sermon on the Mount and in particular of Matt. 6, the treasure in Matt. is to be understood in terms of the kingdom of heaven, and how it affects the disciples' attitude to material possessions. Lk. 12 specifically contrasts the treasure with material possessions, but it too sets the saying in the context of the kingdom which is God's gift: "Fear not, little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom" (Lk. 12:32).

(c) The teaching about treasure is further exemplified by the story of the rich young ruler who was told by Jesus: "If you would be perfect, go, sell what you possess and give to the poor, and you will have treasure in heaven; and come, follow me" (Matt. 19:21 par. Mk. 10:21, Lk. 18:22). But this saying makes explicit a point which is implicit in the background of the earlier sayings. Not only is the treasure, as in Judaism, seen in the light of the coming end-time; it is also connected with following Jesus.

(d) In Matt. 13:44 the kingdom is compared with a treasure: "The kingdom of heaven is like treasure hidden in a field, which a man found and covered up; then in his joy he goes and sells all that he has and buys that field." J. Jeremias draws attention to the joy that the kingdom brings and the demands that it makes. "The effect of the joyful news is overpowering; it fills the heart with gladness; it makes life's whole aim the consummation of the divine community and produces the most whole-hearted self-sacrifice" (The Parables of Jesus, 1963², 201). For a detailed examination of the parable against the background of rabbinic concepts of ownership in such cases see J. D. M. Derrett, "The Treasure in the Field", in Law in the New Testament, 1970, 1–16. According to rabbinic teaching, if a workman lifted a treasure in the course of his work, the find would belong to the master. But in the parable the man does not actually lift it until he is the actual owner of the field. It may be pointed out that the man gets the treasure free, though the field costs all that he has. Moreover, he is prepared to go to any lengths permitted by the law to obtain it. Derrett compares the parable with that of the pearl of great price which immediately follows it (Matt. 13:45 f.). The man who found the treasure came upon it without seeking it, although his purchase of the field meant a complete reorientation of his life. The merchant, however, was one who devoted his life to the search for pearls. Derrett sees a parallel in the rabbinical saying: "One wins eternal life after a struggle of years, another finds it in one hour" (Abodah Zarah 17a; cf. also Philo, Deus Imm. 20, 91; op. cit., 15). But Derrett also sees in the parable a further twist. He sees the whole of Matt. 13:36–51 as "an elaborate little sermon based on Mal iii. 16–iv. 3" (ibid.; → peripoieomai). "Just as a man treasures a chance find or something he is looking for for years, so God will treasure his servants. If an ordinary man will take such pains over a find of bullion or a pearl, how much the more will God gloat, as it were, over those who have served him faithfully" (ibid.). There may well be the further idea that this treasure had to be purchased at a great price – in fact, all he had and held dear.

(e) The parable of the rich fool (Lk. 12:16–21) presents the converse of Jesus' positive teaching about treasure. It paints a picture of a man who did, in fact, store up earthly possessions. "But God said to him, 'Fool! This night your soul is required of you; and the things you have prepared, whose will they be?' So is he who lays up treasure for himself [ho thēsaurizōn heautō], and is not rich towards God" (Lk. 12:20 f.). Lk. presents the parable in conjunction with Jesus' refusal to intervene in a family feud over possessions. In response to a request to insist upon a brother dividing his inheritance Jesus replied: " 'Man, who made me a judge or divider over you?' And he said to them, 'Take heed, and beware of all covetousness; for a man's life does not consist in the abundance of his possessions [hyparchontōn]' " (Lk. 12:14 f.). Lk. then takes the opportunity to present Jesus' teaching on anxiety about food and clothing, and on treasure, as discussed above.

(f) The theme of treasure is a recurrent one in Matt. and Lk. Although numerically speaking the incidence of occurrences is not great (the noun 9 times in Matt. and 4 times in Lk.; the vb. twice in Matt. and once in Lk.; cf. the noun once in Mk.), the concept occurs at significant points in connection with man's fundamental relationship with God and his fellow men. thēsauros in the sense of treasure chest occurs in Matt. 13:52 at the conclusion of Matt.'s account of the parables of the sower, the wheat and the tares, the mustard seed, the leaven, the treasure, the pearl of great price and the fish net. In response to the disciples' affirmation that they have understood, Jesus said: "Therefore every scribe who has been trained for the kingdom of heaven is like a householder who brings out of his treasure what is new and what is old." The contents of the treasure chest is not simply the teaching as such but the teaching as the occasion for appropriating the kingdom. On this verse → Old, art. palai NT 2 (a); → Scribe, art. grammateus.

2. (a) Paul uses the vb. thēsaurizō in the sense of store up in his instructions to the Corinthians about the collection for the poor of Jerusalem (1 Cor. 16:2; → Poor, art. ptōchos NT 4 (a)). Similarly he uses it again in 2 Cor. 12:14 where he declares that "children ought not to lay up [thēsaurizein] for their parents, but parents for their children." In this context Paul is speaking of his forthcoming visit and his determination not to be a burden to them. For he regards himself as their father (cf. 1 Cor. 4:15), and hence he is under obligation to support them and not vice versa.

(b) In Rom. 2:5 the vb. is used figuratively in addressing the Jew who "by your hard and impenitent heart are storing up [thēsaurizeis] wrath for yourself on the day of wrath when God's righteous judgment will be revealed." There is an ironic contrast here, on the one hand, with "the riches [ploutou]" of God's kindness, forbearance and patience (v. 4) on which the Jew is in fact presuming, and, on the other hand, with the Jewish conception of treasure stored up in the world to come as a reward for good works (see above, OT 2). (→ Anger, art. orgē, NT 2.)

(c) By contrast the noun is twice used in the Pauline letters, each time with a christological connotation. In 2 Cor. 4:7 Paul compares the treasure of God's gift in Christ to the believer with the bodily existence of those who receive it: "But we have this treasure in earthen vessels, to show that the transcendent power belongs to God and not to us." The treasure has been previously defined in the preceding verse in a manner recalling the creation of light: "For it is the God who said, 'Let light shine out of darkness,' who has shone in our hearts to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Christ" (2 Cor. 4:6; cf. Gen. 1:3; Ps. 112:4; on this passage see C. K. Barrett, The Second Epistle to the Corinthians, BNTC, 1973, 134 ff.). The treasure is thus revealed, but at the same time there is a sense in which it is hidden. It is hidden by the vessel that contains it and the outward circumstances of the believer's life which presents a paradox with the inner reality.

Col. 2:3 also speaks of treasure christologically: "in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge." As in 2 Cor. 4, the treasure is linked with revelation and knowledge (cf. Col. 2:2). But the hiddenness refers to Christ who, though it might not appear so to earthly sight, is nevertheless "the image of the invisible God" in whom all things were created, and in whom "all the fullness of God was pleased to dwell" (Col. 1:15, 19). Moreover, he is now with God with whom the life of believers is also hidden (Col. 3:3). The image in Col. 2:3 "is that of a hidden treasure for which there are hints which entice the searcher to wager everything on finding it. Thus this sentence implies challenge to search out the only place where the treasures of wisdom and knowledge are to be found. Jewish apocalyptic often speaks of a hidden treasure in order to create interest in its invitations to right knowledge, since under the guise of the mystery lies the gift which God through revelation has allotted to the elect" (E. Lohse, Colossians and Philemon, Hermeneia, 1971, 82: cf. Eth.Enoch 46:3 "This is the Son of Man who has righteousness, with whom dwells righteousness, and who reveals all the treasures of that which is hidden"). Despite certain similarities, Lohse rejects the suggestion that the verse contains allusions to Isa. 45:3; Sir. 1:25; Prov. 2:3 f. (→ Hide, art. kryptō; → Secret, art. mystērion.)

3. The precise meaning of Heb. 11:26 is the subject of considerable discussion (cf. C. Spicq, L'Épître aux Hébreux, II, 1953³, 358 f.; F. F. Bruce, The Epistle to the Hebrews, NLC, 1964, 320 f.). It is commonly given a christological interpretation, as if Moses had a vision or experience of Christ comparable with that of Paul in Phil. 3:7 which caused him to prefer Christ to the treasures of Egypt. Thus RSV translates the verse: "He considered abuse suffered for the Christ greater wealth than the treasures of Egypt, for he looked to the reward [meizona plouton hēgēsamenos tōn Aigyptou thēsaurōn ton oneidismon tou Christou, apeblepen gar eis tēn misthapodosian]." However, F. F. Bruce questions whether there is a veiled reference here to the belief that Jesus, long before the incarnation, accompanied the Israelites through the wilderness. Certainly the OT narratives of → Moses and the exodus from → Egypt give no hint of such a belief. The NEB offers an alternative rendering which does perhaps more justice to the Gk. and the OT background: "He considered the stigma that rests on God's Anointed." For here tou Christou suggests a title which, in fact, means "the Anointed" (→ Jesus Christ, art. Christos). Moreover, the verse appears to take up the thought and phraseology of Ps. 89:50 f. (88:51 f.): "Remember, O Lord, the reproach [oneidismou] of thy servants . . . wherewith thy enemies have reproached [ōneidisan], O Lord, wherewith they have reproached thy Anointed by way of recompense [hou ōneidisan to antallagma tou christou sou]." Cf. also Ps. 69:9 (68:10) which Paul applies to Christ in Rom. 15:3: "The reproaches of those who reproached thee fell on me [hoi oneidismoi tōn oneidizontōn se epepesan ep' eme]"; and Ps. 105:15: "Touch not my anointed ones." In the first instance it is the people of God that is God's anointed. What Moses preferred to the treasures of Egypt was the lot of the people of God, as God's anointed, for he believed God's promises to them (cf. Heb. 11:27). Thus here → Israel is God's son, as God through Moses reminded Pharaoh when he demanded their release: "Israel is my son, my firstborn" (Exod. 4:22). And it was with the lot of Israel that Moses identified himself. This interpretation has the further advantage of being compatible with all the other instances of faith in Heb. 11 drawn from OT history. For none of these are given a specific christological interpretation. They are all related to the OT and Jewish background. The reproach, abuse, or stigma which was the lot of the people of Israel thus anticipates the reproach which is the lot of those who follow Christ. The same act of faith is required to prefer suffering in the light of the promises of God to material gain. As such the one is a type of the other. If we are to read tou Christou as a reference to Jesus as "the Christ", it is as a kind of shorthand in which the type and the antitype coalesce.

Spicq suggests that the thēsaurōn in Heb. 11:26 may refer to granaries (cf.

Catalogue of the Greek Papyri in the John Rylands Library, II, 1915, 231, 8, dated c. A.D. 40) or to stores of wine (cf. G. Vitelli and D. Comparetti, Papiri Fiorentini, 1906–15, I, 194, 6; P.Oxy. I, 101, 20; P.Teb. I, 6, 27; P. Mitteis and U. Wilcken, Grundzüge und Chrestomathie der Papyruskunde, I, 1912, 1, 376; A. Calderini, THĒSAUROI. Ricerche di Topografia e di Storia della Publica Amministrazione nell' Egitto Greco-Romano, 1924, IV, 3). Spicq further suggests that the use of the word in Heb. in this sense may provide a novel attestation of the Alexandrian background of the author of Heb., underlining the contrast between the abundance of agricultural products in Egypt and the chronic famines in Palestine. It would certainly lend point to the complaints of the Israelites about the lack of food and drink during the exodus wanderings (cf. Exod. 15:24; 16:2 f.; Num. 11:4 ff.).

4. Jas. 5:3 appears to take up the thought about treasure expressed in the teaching of Jesus: "Your gold and silver have rusted, and their rust will be evidence against you and will eat your flesh like fire. You have laid up treasure [ethēsaurisate] for the last days" (see above, 1; → Gall; → Gold). It spells out the judgment which awaits those who are preoccupied with earthly treasure. There is an irony here. For while the people concerned thought that they were storing up treasure, they were, in fact, storing up judgment (cf. Rom. 2:5).

5. 2 Pet. 3:5 takes further the idea of storing up judgment. Whereas Jesus and Paul speak of individuals storing up treasure or wrath in the age to come, 2 Pet. applies the idea to the whole world order: "But by the same word the heavens and earth that now exist have been stored up for fire [tethēsaurismenoi eisin pyri], being kept until the day of judgment and destruction of ungodly men." J. N. D. Kelly observes that, "The idea that the world will be finally annihilated by fire appears only in 2 Peter in the NT, and is indeed in its fully developed form not Biblical at all: in the OT passages sometimes cited to prove the contrary (e.g. Is. xxx. 30; lxvi. 15 f.; Nah. i. 6; Zeph. i. 18; iii. 8) fire is rather the instrument of God's wrath to destroy His enemies (e.g. Ps. xcvii. 4)" (The Epistles of Peter and of Jude, BNTC 1969, 360). There are, however, the biblical ideas of → judgment, the new → creation, regeneration (→ Birth, art. palingenesia), and the new → heaven and → earth. Kelly sees the idea of the annihilation of the world by fire taking shape in Jewish apocalyptic (e.g. Sib. 2:187–213; 3:83–92; 4:171–182; 5:155–161; Eth.Enoch 1:6–9; 52:6; 2 Esd. 13:10 f.). It was held at Qumran (1QH 3:29–36). It is found occasionally in early Christian literature (e.g. Eth.Apc.Pet. 5; Hermas, Vis. 4, 3, 3; Origen, Contra Cels. 4, 11–13). Kelly further observes that "There are obvious similarities, but equally marked differences (cf. esp. the alternate destruction and renewals of the world presupposed by the latter), between this teaching and the Stoic doctrine of ekpurōsis (e.g. Justin, I Apol. xx; Seneca, Quaest.nat. iii. 29; Diogenes Laertius, Vit.phil. vii. 134; Plutarch, Mor. 1067a), i.e. that the universe is periodically consumed by fire, and both were deeply influenced far back by Iranian conceptions and imagery" (op. cit., 361; cf. F. Lang, pyr etc., TDNT VI 928–52; → Fire).

J. Eichler, C. Brown

μαμωνᾶς

μαμωνᾶς (mamōnas), Mammon, wealth, property.

The Gk. word mamōnas is first found in the NT. It renders the emphatic state māmônā' of the Aram. māmôn. A number of etymologies have been suggested (cf. E. Nestle, "Mammon", Encyclopaedia Biblica, 2914 f.; F. Hauck, mamōnas, TDNT IV 388; SB I 434; A. M. Honeyman, "The Etymology of Mammon", Archivum Linguisticum 4, 1952, 60–65). Hauck prefers to link it with the vb. 'āman as "that in which one trusts", but Nestle suggests that it might also mean what is entrusted to man, or that which supports and nourishes men. The Syriac lexicographers favoured the latter view. In Lk. 16:11 there is an apparent play on words with this root: "If then you have not been faithful [pistoi] in the unrighteous mammon, who will entrust [pisteusei] to you the true [alēthinon] riches?" The three Gk. words pistoi, pisteusei and alēthinon all appear to translate words from the same root 'mn from which mammon appears to be formed. This root is also found in → Amen.

The word is found in the Mishnah (Aboth 2:12) and the Damascus document (cf. Arndt, 491). In the Babylonian Talmud it is found with the sense of profit or money (Berakoth 61b; cf. M. Black, An Aramaic Approach to the Gospels and Acts, 1967³, 139). Black also draws attention to its use in the Palestinian Pentateuch Targum to Gen. 34:23 (C) to render Heb. miqneh, cattle, which constituted the wealth of the Hebrew farmer, and to its frequent occurrence in the Palestinian Talmud (e.g. Nazir 5:4:54b:12; Sanhedrin 8:8:26c:20 f.). In rabbinic writing it means not merely money in the strict sense but a man's possessions, everything that has value equivalent to money, and even all that he possesses apart from his body and life. In itself the word may be neutral, but it acquired in negative contexts the connotation of possessions dishonestly gained and wealth dishonestly used, as in bribery.

The word occurs three times in the sayings appended to the parable of the unjust steward (Lk. 16:1–8). At the end of the parable "the master [ho kyrios]" (the master in the parable, or perhaps Jesus or God) commended the dishonest steward for his prudence, for the sons of this world are wiser towards their generation than the sons of light (Lk. 16:8). The parable is addressed to the disciples teaching them prudence in handling this world's goods (on the exegesis of the parable → House, art. oikonomia, NT 1 (a); cf. J. D. M. Derrett, "The Parable of the Unjust Steward", in Law in the New Testament, 1970, 48–77). In particular, they are to use the goods of this world in a way which is righteous and which will benefit others. For the steward's action in remitting various debts owed to his master achieved a double object. On the one hand, the master had been charging exorbitant interest which was forbidden by the law and the steward was actually putting his master right in the eyes of the law. On the other hand, he was doing himself a favour by ingratiating himself with his master's debtors. Lk. 16:9 adds: "And I tell you, make friends for yourselves by means of unrighteous mammon, so that when it fails they may receive you into the eternal habitations." The injunction is not to befriend mammon but to use mammon for the benefit of others. In this verse "they" may refer to those who have benefited from such use of mammon, or it may be a Hebraism referring to God without actually mentioning his name, or it may refer to God and his angels. The point is that mammon itself does not endure, but it may be used to achieve something which is enduring. Mammon itself is material, but its use has personal dimensions. The pun in Lk. 16:11 has already been noted. The verse contrasts the relatively minor value of material things with the true riches which exist on a higher and personal plain: "If then you have not been faithful in the unrighteous mammon, who will entrust to you the true riches?" Stewardship of material possessions is thus a probationary test for further stewardship (cf. the parables of the pounds [Lk. 19:11–27] and the talents [Matt. 25:14–30]). The following verse implies that mammon is not something which one actually possesses but is, in fact, "another's". The disciple has to prove his faithful and wise stewardship of this before he may be entrusted with what is his own. The disciple as a steward is not yet his own master (cf. Lk. 17:7–10). But neither should he be the servant of mammon. For mammon, now personified in v. 13, inevitably becomes the master if a man tries to make himself its master by acquiring it for its own sake. Men are confronted by the stark choice: "No servant can serve two masters; for either he will hate the one and love the other, or he will be devoted to the one and despise the other. You cannot serve God and mammon."

The only other passage in which mammon is mentioned is Matt. 6:24 which is verbally identical with Lk. 16:13 but which lacks the accompanying sayings. The saying about the two masters is found in Gos.Thom. 47 but without reference to mammon. Mammon is mentioned in 2 Clem. 6:1. C. Brown

περιποιέομαι

περιποιέομαι (peripoieomai), save or preserve for oneself, acquire, get something for oneself, get possession of; περιποίησις (peripoiēsis), gaining, obtaining, acquisition, a possession, property; περιούσιος (periousios), chosen, especial; τὰ ἴδια (ta idia), one's own, possessions, property.

CL peripoieomai, the mid. of the less frequent peripoieō, used from Hdt. onwards, means to cause to remain over and above, to save up, lay by, procure, keep, save for oneself. The cognate noun peripoiēsis means keeping safe, preservation, gaining possession of, acquisition, procuring. periousios means having more than enough, rich, wealthy.

OT The Heb. s^{e}gullâh, property, treasure, is used of David's treasure (1 Chr. 29:3), the treasure of kings (Eccl. 2:8), and Israel as God's special possession (Exod. 19:5; Deut. 7:6; Ps. 134:4; Mal. 3:17). It is rendered by peripoiēsis only at Mal. 3:17. periousios is used of God's chosen people at Exod. 19:5; Deut. 7:6; 14:2; 26:18; and Exod. 23:22 (a free translation). periousiasmos, private possession, is used in the LXX translation in Ps. 135(134):4. The idea behind periousios is not just that of Israel as God's property but that of his "rich possession" (H. Preisker, TDNT IV 57). On the idea of Israel as God's s^{e}gullâh see J. D. M. Derrett, Law in the New Testament, 1970, 15 f. Derrett sees Mal. 3:16–4:3 reflected in Matt. 13:36–51 (→ thēsauros, NT 1 (d)).

NT 1. In the NT peripoieomai (3 times) and peripoiēsis (5 times) are preferred to periousios which occurs only once. The idea of salvation stands in the background. The vb. occurs at Lk. 17:33 ("Whoever seeks to gain [peripoiēsasthai] his life will lose it, but whoever loses his life will preserve it"; → Soul, art. psychē); Acts 20:28 ("Take heed to yourselves and to all the flock, in which the Holy Spirit has made you guardians, to feed the church of the Lord which he obtained [peripoiēsato] with his own blood"); 1 Tim. 3:13 ("for those who serve well as deacons gain [peripoiountai] good standing for themselves and also great confidence in the faith which is in Christ Jesus"). The noun occurs in the following passages. In Eph. 1:14 the → Spirit is said to be "the guarantee of our inheritance until we acquire possession of it [eis apolytrōsin tēs peripoiēseōs]." In 1 Thess. 5:9 Paul assures his readers: "For God has not destined us for wrath, but to obtain salvation [eis peripoiēsin sōtērias] through our Lord Jesus Christ." In 2 Thess. 2:14 this is described in terms of → glory: "To this he called you through our gospel, so that you may obtain the glory [eis peripoiēsin doxēs] of our Lord Jesus Christ." Heb. 10:39 may reflect something of the thought of Lk. 17:33: "But we are not of those who shrink back and are destroyed, but of those who have faith and keep their souls [eis peripoiēsin psychēs]." Finally, 1 Pet. 2:9 takes up the thought of Exod. 19:5, cf. Deut. 14:2: "But you are a chosen race, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a people for his possession [ethnos hagion laos, eis peripoiēsin], that you may declare the wonderful deeds of him who called you out of darkness into his marvellous light."

2. periousios is found only in Tit. 2:14 in a verse which summarizes the work of Christ "who gave himself for us to redeem us from all iniquity and to purify for himself a people of his own [laon periousion] who are zealous for good deeds." The idea of God's treasured people again takes up the Heb. idea of the 'am s^{e}ḡullâh (cf. Exod. 19:5; Deut. 14:2), but, as in 1 Pet. 2:9, it is not → Israel which is so described but the → church. Whereas 1 Pet. focuses on the priestly rôle of the people in declaring God's wonderful deeds, Tit. 2:14 draws attention to the kind of deeds which the people of God should be zealous to perform. The verse comes, in fact, at the climax of a survey of how the gospel should affect different people in their different situations.

3. The adj. idios means own and is widely used in a variety of contexts in various senses (cf. Arndt, 370), e.g. according to his own capability (Matt. 25:15); each one will receive his own wages according to his own labour (1 Cor. 3:8); one's own (private) interpretation (2 Pet. 1:20); his (own) sheep (Jn. 10:3 f.); each in his own turn (1 Cor. 15:23); with our own hands (1 Cor. 4:12); and as an adv. idia meaning by oneself, privately (1 Cor. 12:11; Matt. 14:13, 23). idios occurs some 113 times in the NT.

The neut. plur. ta idia meaning one's home is attested in secular Gk. (e.g. Polyb., 2, 57, 5; 3, 99, 4; P.Oxy. 4; further examples in Arndt 370) and the LXX (Est. 5:10; 6:12; 1 Esd. 6:31 [= 2 Esd. 6:11]; 3 Macc. 6:27, 37; 7:8; cf. also Josephus, War, 1,666; 4, 528). In the NT it appears to mean home in Jn. 16:32 (on this verse see E. Fascher, "Johannes 16, 32", ZNW 39, 1940, 171–230); 19:27; Acts 5:18D; 14:18 v.l.; 21:6. The RSV takes it in this sense in its rendering of Jn. 1:11: "He came to his own home, and his own people received him not [eis ta idia ēlthen, kai hoi idioi auton ou parelabon]" (cf. E. J. Goodspeed, Problems of New Testament Translation, 1945, 87 f., 94 ff.; and F. Field, Notes on the Translation of the New Testament, 1899, 84). It may be noted in the RSV that "home" and "people" are interpretations which try to bring out the significance of the neut. plur. in the former case and the masc., plur. in the latter. R. Bultmann disputes this interpretation (The Gospel of John: A Commentary, 1971, 56). He claims that ta idia here must mean property or possession (as e.g. P.Oxy. 489, 4; 490, 3; 491; 3; 492, 4). The idioi are "his own", those who belong to him as their creator (cf. Od.Sol. 7:12; and Bultmann, op. cit., 44). He also sees here a background of gnostic dualism, according to which idion means that which shares in a common nature (cf. 8:44; 10:3 f.; 13:1; 15:19; Corp.Herm. 1, 31; Iren., Haer. 1, 21, 5; Hippol., Haer. 5, 6, 7 etc.; Act.Thom. 124, p. 233, 14; Od.Sol. 26:1). Bultmann rejects the suggestion that ta idia might mean the Jewish people or Israel as God's own people (cf. Exod. 19:5; Deut. 7:6; 14:2; 26:18; Ps. 135:4). For the context of the Prologue of Jn. is that of the kosmos, the world, and anthrōpoi, men. It is thus a claim that he possessed the whole universe from the beginning (cf. 1:1 ff.). Moreover, the normal expression for the 'am s^{e}gullâh is not idios but periousios. Bultmann sees parallels with → wisdom which possesses the earth and sea (Ecclus. 24:6; cf. Prov. 1:24–31; Bar. 3:12 f.; Eth.Enoch 42:1 f. where there is a parallel to ou parelabon). The distinction between the neut. plur. and the masc. plur. belongs to the Gk.; in Aram. both would have been dîlêh.

Lk. 18:28 also may be translated as homes or possessions: "And Peter said, 'Lo, we have left our homes [ta idia] and followed you' " (RSV). The par. in Matt. 19:27 and Mk. 10:28 have panta, all. To this Jesus gives the reply: "Truly, I say to you, there is no man who has left house or wife or brothers or parents or children, for the sake of the kingdom of God, who will not receive manifold more in this time, and in the age to come eternal life" (Lk. 18:29 f.; cf. the further details including persecutions in Mk. 10:30). The saying follows the story of the rich young ruler who declined to sell all that he had to give to the poor and follow Jesus.

4. The use of three different concepts in the NT for property, quite apart from concrete possessions, mirrors the riches of that which has been revealed through the redemptive act of Jesus. He came into that which had been his own from the beginning. He won his right to his people by his suffering and death, and this people has been requisitioned by him, that it may → serve him in complete surrender and bear witness to him until his return. E. Beyreuther

πλοῦτος

πλοῦτος (ploutos), wealth, riches; πλούσιος (plousios), rich, a rich man; πλουσίως (plousiōs), richly; πλουτέω (plouteō), be rich, become rich; πλουτίζω (ploutizō), make rich.

CL 1. The word-group associated with ploutos is related to polys, much, and means initially abundance of earthly possessions of every kind. Later its meaning divided in two directions. In the one it meant riches in a technical and material sense. In the other it was more general, and occurs with a qualifying word, generally in the gen., e.g. riches of wisdom, honour, mercy, etc. All the words in this group can bear this double meaning: plouteō, be or become rich; ploutizō, make rich; ploutos, possession of many goods, super-abundance of something, riches; and plousios, as an adj, wealthy, rich and as a noun a rich man.

2. In Homer external wealth and virtue are not separated (cf. Il. 1, 171; 16, 596; 24, 536, 546; Od. 24, 486). Rich is a comprehensive term for a fortunate life blessed by the gods. Plato and Aristotle in particular judge riches by their effect on society. If they do not serve the community (polis), they are to be rejected. In Aristotle wealth is always material and is something that can be used wrongly or rightly (Pol. 1, 9, p. 1256b–1258a, 8; 2, 9, p. 1269a, 34 f.). But Plato distinguishes material riches from true riches which consist of wisdom, virtue and culture (Rep. 7, 521a; 8, 547b; Phdr. 279c; cf. F. Hauck and W. Kasch, TDNT VI 322). The Cynics completely despised material possessions because they brought commitments and anxieties with them (cf. Stob., Ecl. 5, 782, 18; 5, 785, 15 ff.; 5, 766, 12; 5, 806, 17 ff.; see further TDNT VI 322). The Stoics considered that the chief danger of riches lay in their creation of a feeling of false security, but they also recognized their value because of the opportunities of developing the personality which they offered (Seneca, De Vita Beata 22, 1; cf. TDNT VI 323). Basically riches were not to be rejected, for (a) in Gk. culture riches did not have the sociologically divisive influence that they have had in other cultures, and (b) the idea never appeared that they could be given up for the benefit of the poor.

OT 1. Riches in the older parts of OT are seen as having positive value. They consisted mainly of flocks and herds, children and slaves (e.g. Gen. 13:2; 30:43) and were a gift of God. In the nomadic or semi-nomadic period riches presented no problem, for there were no blatant differences between rich and poor. At the conquest of Canaan Yahweh gave everyone his share. Since the land belonged to God, God extended his protection to the individual's property (cf. the laws in the Book of the Covenant, Exod. 20:22–23:19, which were later expanded in those of Deut.).

Under the monarchy there was the development of royal cities and courts. With the growth of commerce and trade a major social differentiation developed. There was a small upper class of the rich and influential, who, as may be seen from the prophets (Amos 2:6 ff.; 5:10 ff.; Isa. 5:8 ff.; Mic. 2:1 f.; Jer. 5:26 ff.; 34:8–11), destroyed the people of God by injustice and violence and so brought deserved judgment on the whole people.

In the wisdom literature, where our word-group is most frequent, we often find unaffected praise of riches (e.g. Prov. 10:4, 15). But there are references to their relative value (e.g. Ps. 49:16; Prov. 22:1), and their power to lead men astray (e.g. Ps. 49:6; 52:7). At the same time we find in Job and the Pss. the problem of vindicating the divine rule (especially Job 21; Pss. 37; 49; 73).

2. plousios normally translates the Heb. 'āšīr, wealthy, rich (Ruth 3:10; 2 Sam. 12:1 f., 4; Job 27:19; Pss. 45[44]:12; 49[48]:2; Prov. 10:15; 14:20; 18:11; 22:2, 7, 16; cf. 23:4; 28:6, 11; Eccl. 10:6, 20; Isa. 53:9; Jer. 9:22[23]). It translates a variety of other words in Gen. 13:2; Ps. 34[33]:10; Isa. 32:9, 13; 33:20; and is without Heb. equivalent in 1 Sam. 2:10; Ezra 3:19, 21; Est. 1:20; Ps. 10:8[9:29]; Prov. 12:22; Wis. 8:5; Sir. 8:2; 10:22, 30; 13:2 f., 18–23; 25:2; 26:4; 30:14; 31[34]:3, 8; 44:6; Jer. 24:1; Ad.Dan. 4; 1 Macc. 6:2. Similarly the corresponding vbs. normally translate formations from the root 'šr: plouteō (Exod. 30:15; Ps. 49[48]:16; Eccl. 5:11; Hos. 12:9[8]; Zech. 11:5; Jer. 5:27; Ezek. 27:33; Dan. 11:2; but not Gen. 30:43; Prov. 28:22; 31:28; Sir. 11:18, 21); and ploutizō (Gen. 14:23; 1 Sam. 2:7; 17:25; Job 15:29; Ps. 65[64]:9; Prov. 10:4, 22; 13:7; Ezek. 27:33; but there is no Heb. equivalent for Wis. 10:11; Sir. 11:21; 19:1; 2 Macc. 7:24). The noun ploutos mostly translates the Heb. 'ōšer, riches (Gen. 31:16; 1 Sam. 17:25; 1 Ki. 3:11, 13; 10:23; 1 Chr. 29:12, 28; 2 Chr. 1:11 f.; 9:22; 17:5; 18:1; 32:37; Est. 1:4; 5:11; Pss. 49[48]:6; 112[111]:3; Prov. 3:16; 8:18; 11:16, 28; 13:8; 22:1, 4; 30:8[24:31]; Eccl. 4:8; 5:12, 18; 6:2; 9:11; Jer. 6:22[23]; 17:11;

Dan. 11:2). Cognate Heb. words occur in Prov. 21:17 and Mic. 6:12. Some eight other Heb. words occur in other passages, the most common of these being ḥayil, capacity, power, wealth (Job 20:15, 18[?]; 21:7; 31:25; Pss. 49[48]:10; 52[51]:7; 62[61]:10; 73[75]:12; 76[75]:5; Prov. 13:22; 31:3[24:71]; 31:29; Isa. 60:5). The Book of Isa. prefers hāmôn, which can mean commotion, crowd as well as abundance, wealth (Isa. 16:14; 29:5, 7 f.; 32:14; 60:5; but with other words in 30:6; 61:6; and no Heb. equivalent in 24:8; 29:2; 32:18; 60:16). Other words occur in Deut. 33:19 (šepa', abundance); Est. 1:4; 5:11; Ps. 119(118):14; Prov. 13:7; 19:4(1); 24:4; 28:8; 29:3; Ezek. 26:12. There is no Heb. equivalent in 1 Sam. 2:10; Est. 10:10; Job 27:18; Ps. 37(36):3; Prov. 31:14; Wis. 5:8; 6:14; 7:8, 11, 13; 8:5, 18; Sir. 18:25; 21:4; 24:17; 28:10; 1 Macc. 4:23; 6:1.

3. At the end of the Inter-Testamental period these concepts are again to be found. The members of the Qumran community adopted → "the poor" as a title of honour. They practised community of possessions (cf. Josephus, War 2, 8, 3; 1QS 1:12; 5:2; 6:17, 19; 7:6). For discussion see M. Black, The Scrolls and Christian Origins, 1961, 32–39. Black describes the community as "organized as a kind of welfare state", adding that "It was also a hierocratic community: all its affairs, affecting the disposition of property no less than its purely 'spiritual' concerns, came within the jurisdiction of the priests" (op. cit., 37; cf. 1QS 5:2, 22). For Enoch the end will in any case bring with it a complete reversal of all earthly possession and fortune (Eth.Enoch 96:4; 100:6; 103:4 f.; cf. Syr.Bar. 29:6; 51:12–52; 2 Esd. 7). When the Qumran texts speak of God's → grace or → mercy they may also add in parallelism "multitude" (rōḇ) and "riches" (hāmôn) (cf. 1QM 4:32; 6:9; 7:27; 9:34; 10:24). Among the Pharisees only the righteousness derived from keeping the law had real value, but riches enabled one to do good works, carrying with them corresponding obligations (TDNT VI 325 f.; SB I 818, 822, 826 ff.; III 655 ff.; IV 490–500, 536–610). On the other hand, all circles where eschatological hopes were earthly or nationalistic had a high opinion of riches.

NT 1. The word-group does not appear in Jn., Acts, 1 and 2 Thess., Tit., Phlm., 1–3 Jn., Jude. ploutos is found in the Gospels only in Matt. 13:22 par. Mk. 4:19, Lk. 8:14, where it means, as in 1 Tim. 6:17, Jas. 5:2, Rev. 18:17, wealth in terms of earthly goods. The word is linked with God (Rom. 9:23), Christ (Eph. 3:8) and churches (2 Cor. 8:2). plousios, as adj. or noun, in sing. or plur., is used to describe persons rich in this world's goods (Matt. 19:23 f., par. Mk. 10:25, Lk. 18:25; Matt. 27:57; Mk. 12:41; Lk. 6:24; 12:16; 14:12; 16:1, 19, 21 f.; 18:23; 19:2; 21:1; 1 Tim. 6:17; Jas. 1:10 f.; 2:6; Rev. 3:17; 13:16). Followed by the dat., it expresses the riches of God (Eph. 2:4) or of the Christian (Jas. 2:5). In 2 Cor. 8:9 and Rev. 2:9 it means those rich in spiritual possessions. The vb. plouteō is used absolutely in Lk. 1:53; 1 Tim. 6:9; Rev. 18:15 in the reference to earthly possessions; and in 1 Cor. 4:8; 2 Cor. 8:9; Rev. 3:17 f. of spiritual possessions. Lk. 12:21 and 1 Tim. 6:17 refer to those works which have value with God. Rom. 10:12 indicates that God's riches are available for all. ploutizō means make rich, enrich. God makes the church rich in all things (1 Cor. 1:5); the Christian passes on those riches given by God so as to make others rich as well (2 Cor. 6:10; 9:11). The adv. plousiōs occurs only at Col. 3:16 ("let the word of Christ dwell in you richly"); 1 Tim. 6:17 (of "God who richly furnishes us with everything to enjoy;" contrasted with "the rich in this world"); Tit. 3:6 (of the Holy Spirit poured out richly); and 2 Pet. 1:11 (of the entrance to the kingdom richly provided). It thus occurs only in the epistles and always in a spiritual sense of God's rich grace.

2. Theological significance. (a) Matt. stresses throughout the dangers inherent in riches that may hinder the → kingdom of God, but it does not regard them as basically Satanic (cf. Matt. 27:57). In other words, Matt. exhibits no ascetic rejection of possessions and riches. If Jesus attacks mercilessly attachment to earthly possessions (Matt. 13:22; 19:23 f.), his denunciation applies to riches in exactly the same way as it does to every human self-contrived security and obsession which make it impossible for men to see the kingdom of God. The seed is choked by care and "the false glamour" (NEB) of riches (he apatē tou ploutou, Matt. 13:22; cf. Mk. 4:19; Lk. 8:14). → Care is a characteristic of this age (Matt. 6:25–32), and every kind of riches is deceitful when it so appeals to men that they are hindered from hearing the message of the kingdom of heaven. In contrast poverty in the Beatitudes means being open for the kingdom of God (→ Poor, art. ptōchos NT 1 (b)). We find the same in Matt. 19:23 f., where "hard" is explained by Jesus' answer in v. 26. The very reaction of the disciples in v. 25 shows that more is meant by "rich" than economic standing; they realized that they were being included among them. In other words riches are a characteristic of the man of this world. Hence we must not weaken the force of "the eye of a needle" (19:24; → Animal, Animals in the NT). In all this teaching Jesus entertains no possibility of man attaining the kingdom of God, i.e. life, as he stands. The new righteousness, which carries life within it, comes alone from the power and might of God. Man must receive it in repentance and faith. In other words, Jesus' view of riches cannot be separated from the crucial hour of decision which had come through him for the people of Israel.

(b) In Mark the judgment on riches is perhaps expressed somewhat more mildly. By speaking of "awakening desires" (cf. "delight", Mk. 4:19) the danger is seen in terms of a subjective threat to the individual psyche (E. Lohmeyer, Das Evangelium nach Markus, KEK 1/2, 1967[17], ad loc.). Riches encourage confidence in themselves and so become a great obstacle on the way to the kingdom of God (Mk. 10:23 ff.).

(c) Lk. mentions riches only in Lk. 8:14; otherwise he speaks of the rich and being rich. The rich landowner (12:16–20; → thēsauros, NT 1 (e)) is a type of rich men in general, if they have forgotten that God is the giver of what they have and therefore put their confidence in it, or who give themselves up to unrestrained enjoyment of it and so miss God's purpose for their life (16:19–31). The → Pharisees scoffed at Jesus' warning against mammon (Lk. 16:14; → mamōnas), because they were lovers of money (philargyroi; cf. 1 Tim. 6:10; 2 Tim. 3:2; → thēsauros, NT 1 (b)). The general verdict and the context of the passages in which Lk. deals with the rich suggest the possibility that the term is used for the enemies of Jesus, or that they are collectively identified by that name. Hence, there is a complete rejection of the rich. The kingdom of God brings with it the reversal of all earthly relationships (Lk. 1:53; 16:25; 6:24 ff.). Those who rejected Jesus and his message, because they were enslaved by the present age and its deceitful riches, and allowed their thoughts and imagination to be completely governed by what appeared to be the case at that moment, lost the future in their attempt to secure the present. Being delivered up to the deceptive power of possessions means destruction. Salvation comes to those who are liberated by the → gospel, and know that their riches lie in the future which is even now dawning. The reversal of all earthly values, which will become evident at the end of the age, will prove that only those riches that have been stored up with God have lasting value and bring salvation to man (16:9). Zacchaeus's behaviour (19:8) and the admonition of 14:12 ff. are models for this.

(d) The selfish rich are completely rejected in Jas. The judgment of the OT prophets is echoed and the rich are depicted as the unrighteous (2:6; 5:1–6) who can only expect calamity in the coming transformation of the world (5:1–6; 1:10 f.; cf. Isa. 40:6 ff.). In contrast it is the → poor, the rich in faith, that have been chosen (2:5).

(e) Paul is not interested in the material understanding of the term riches. He gives it a deeper and new meaning by applying it to God, Christ and the church. Fullness marks out God, the only truly rich One, e.g. in → glory (Rom. 9:23; Eph. 3:16) and → grace (Eph. 2:7; 1:7). The church shares in these riches (1 Cor. 1:5; Eph. 1:7, 18). To be rich is an eschatological gift unconnected with material possessions. Though the apostle is himself → poor, he makes many rich by his preaching (2 Cor. 6:10). Seeing that Christ could make us rich only by emptying himself (2 Cor. 8:9; cf. Phil. 2:5–11; → Empty, art. kenos, NT 3; → Poor, art. ptōchos, NT 4), the Christian's pathway through the world is one of self-emptying and helping the brethren (2 Cor. 8:2; 9:10 ff.). Israel's rejection of Christ means riches for the Gentiles, for the message of salvation is now directed to them (Rom. 11:12). (On the soteriological significance of the collection for the Jerusalem church → Poor, art. ptōchos, NT 4 (a).) The eschatological nature of these riches is missed, if they are used as the justification for self-praise (→ Boast) and for self-confidence within the church (1 Cor. 4:8).

(f) In 1 Tim. earthly riches are not rejected, but the rich are warned against putting their confidence in that which is transient, and are called on instead to become rich in good works by a right use of their possessions (1 Tim. 6:17 ff.). Heb. 11:26 has a Pauline flavour: transient abuse became riches for Moses as he looked to the future reward, and his sufferings for the people became a typical anticipation of the sufferings of Christ (→ thēsauros, NT 3). Rev. contains a double message: (1) The rich cannot stand before the wrath of the → Lamb (6:15 f.), and those who have been enriched by → Babylon fall together with it (18:3, 15, 17, 19). (2) The church in Smyrna, though, or just because, it is persecuted for the sake of the faith, is truly rich (2:9). Laodicea, on the other hand, is poor, because it thinks itself spiritually rich (→ Cold, Hot, Lukewarm). It is called on to become rich by turning to the Lord (3:17 f.). Riches are mentioned in 5:12 in the praise offered to the Lamb.

3. In the story of the rich young ruler (Matt. 19:16–22 par. Mk. 10:17–22, Lk 18:18–23) plousios and → chrēma, or ktēma, are used as synonymous concepts. chrēma, ktēma and hyparxis mean only money, or goods and chattels which can be turned into money.

There is a close connection between → mamōnas tēs adikias, unrighteous mammon (Lk. 16:9, 11), and hē apatē tou ploutou, the deceitfulness of (RSV "delight in") riches (Matt. 13:22; Mk. 4:19), but mamōnas suggests wealth and property which constitute a man's capital, and we must remain free of its enticements.

pleonekteō, pleonektēs and pleonexia all express a drive to gain at the expense of others. The use of plouteō and philargyria, avarice, love of money, in 1 Tim. 6:9 f. reminds us of the mention of pleonexia in the lists of vices (→ Avarice).

F. Selter

χρῆμα

χρῆμα (chrēma), property, wealth, means, money; κτῆμα (ktēma), property, possessions, especially in later usage landed property; ὕπαρξις (hyparxis), property; τὰ ὑπάρχοντα (ta hyparchonta), what belongs to someone, property, goods, possessions; βίος (bios), life, means of subsistence, property; οὐσία (ousia), substance, property.

CL chrēma, derived from chrē, it is necessary, stands for what is necessary, a thing, or event, then goods and chattels, riches. It is found from Homer onwards, mostly in the plur. When it is found in the sing. it normally means quantity of, also money. ktēma, derived from ktaomai, means that which has been gained. It is used (also Homer onwards) for possessions of every kind, but from the 4th cent. B.C. it is confined to landed property. From Aristotle onwards hyparxis is found with the meaning of existence and generally of property, riches.

OT In the LXX the words are used to render a wide range of Heb. terms. chrēma in Job 27:17 and 2 Chr. 1:11 f. is used to mean money (in the latter together with ploutos). In Dan. 11:24, 28 it is the rich booty taken in war, and in 11:13 baggage train of an army. ktēma in Job 20:29 has the general meaning of possessions, heritage (RSV), lot (NEB). In Prov. 8:18; 12:27 it is riches as a reward for → wisdom and hard work. ta hyparchonta is found in Prov. 6:31; Gen. 13:6; 31:18; 36:6 f.; 45:20; 47:18; Eccles. 5:19; 6:2, with the general meaning of what one has, riches, possessions. Both words interchange frequently with → ploutos or argyros, (silver, money; → Gold art. argyrion). In general no hesitation is shown in regarding the riches mentioned as good and a blessing from God (Prov. 8:21; Eccles. 5:19; 6:2; 2 Chr. 1:12). With hyparxis, however, as with → ploutos, there is found, especially in Prov., a critical outlook on wealth, or the dangers bound up with it (cf. Job). Possessions are not the highest good. They are trivial compared with honour (Prov. 6:35), but they deceive a man into seeking protection and security in them (Prov. 18:10 f.; cf. also 11:28; 28:6, 11; Sir. 11:18 f.; 27:1 ff.; 31:3, 5 f.).

NT With the exception of Mk. 10:23 and Lk. 18:24 (par. Matt. 19:23 has plousios), chrēma is found only in Acts 8:18, 20 and 24:26 and should be translated money. The sing. is found only in Acts 4:37. The sing. of ktēma is found only in Acts 5:1, where it is used interchangeably with chōrion (vv. 3, 8), and means a piece of land. ktēmata (plur.) are the estates (Mk. 10:22 and par. Matt. 19:22; Lk. 18:23 has plousios) which in Acts 2:45 are distinguished from other possessions ("property and possessions" NEB); cf. also Acts 5:1. In the NT the plur. part. hyparchonta is commoner that the noun hyparxis (used only in Acts 2:45 and Heb. 10:34, par. to hyparchonta). It is found in Matt. 19:21; 24:17; 25:14; 1 Cor. 13:3; Heb. 10:34 and in the Lucan writings (Lk. 8:3; 11:21; 12:15, 33, 44; 14:33; 16:1; 19:8; Acts 4:32). It means lit. the things that belong (to someone), and thus possessions in general.

Occasionally other terms which have their primary reference elsewhere are also used to denote possessions. Thus bios, which otherwise means life (e.g. Lk. 8:14; 1 Tim. 2:2; 2 Tim. 2:4) and even conduct (e.g. Wis. 4:9; 5:4; 4 Macc. 1:15; 7:7; 8:8), can also mean one's means of subsistence and thus property, one's worldly goods (Mk. 12:44 par. Lk. 21:4; Lk. 8:43; 15:12, 30; 1 Jn. 2:16; 3:17). These meanings are also borne out in secular Gk. ousia, substance, which is connected with the vb. to be, has the sense of property, wealth in its sole NT occurrence (Lk. 15:12 f.; cf. Tob. 14:13; 3 Macc. 3:28). Again this meaning is attested in secular Gk. Various circumlocutions are also found in the NT: hosa echeis, what you have (Mk. 10:21 par. Lk. 18:22; Mk. 12:44; Matt. 13:44, 46; 18:25); ta idia, one's own (Lk. 18:28; cf. also Jn. 1:11); idion einai, to be one's own, in the description of the communal sharing in the Jerusalem church ("Now the company of those who believed were of one heart and soul, and no one said that any of the things which he possessed was his own, but they had everything in common," Acts 4:32); to emon, mine, to son, yours, to hēmeteron, ours (Matt. 25:27; Lk. 15:31; Matt. 20:14; 25:25; Lk. 6:30; 16:12); ta par' autēs panta, all she had (which the woman with the issue of blood had vainly spent on physicians, Mk. 5:26); ek tou echein, out of what you have (2 Cor. 8:11; → Poor, art. ptōchos, NT 4 (a), (c)); echeis polla agatha keimena, you have many good things laid up (Lk. 12:19); tous mē echontas, those who do not have (anything) (1 Cor. 11:22).

2. A number of passages are of particular theological importance. Jesus demanded from the rich young ruler a complete renunciation of his possessions for the sake of the kingdom of God (→ ploutos). He was told: "sell what you possess [pōlēson sou ta hyparchonta]" (Matt. 19:21; "sell whatever you have [hosa echeis pōlēson]" Mk. 10:21; Lk. 18:22 adds "all [panta]") "and give to the → poor". His riches, however, prevented him from following Jesus' call, for he had ktēmata polla, many estates (Matt. 19:22; Mk. 10:22; Lk. 18:23 says that he was "very rich [plousios sphodra]"). The fetters of possessions are so strong (→ mamōnas) that a rich man can only with difficulty enter the kingdom of God. But when they are rightly used, goods and chattels can be employed for good works, as in the cases of the women who "provided for" Jesus and his disciples (Lk. 8:3), and Zacchaeus (Lk. 19:8; cf. also Lk. 12:33). Luke's extremely critical attitude towards wealth is shown by his being the only evangelist to give the parable of the rich land owner (12:16–21; → thēsauros, NT 1 (e)) and that on the rich man and Lazarus (16:19–31). Covetousness (12:15) seeks security in life from material possessions and so leads a man to destruction (pleonexia; → Avarice). The NT judges it to be one of the worst vices in a man freed by God. On the links between the rich man and Lazarus and the unjust steward see J. D. M. Derrett, "Dives and Lazarus and the Preceding Sayings" (op. cit., 78–99). "Failure to deal righteously with mammon leads to 'Hell' " (op. cit., 90), even though the man was merely passive in his wrongdoing, neglecting the poor.

Probably partially motivated by Jesus' extreme demand (Lk. 12:33), but above all by the expectation of the imminent parousia (→ Present), individual members of the primitive church in Jerusalem renounced their right to private property (Acts 4:32, hyparchonta; 2:45, ktēmata kai hyparxeis), sold it when there was need (Acts 2:45), and gave the money to the apostles to be distributed (Acts 4:36 f.; 5:1 f.). Ananias and Sapphira were judged not because they had kept back the proceeds of the property that they had sold, but because they had lied to the Holy Spirit in pretending to give all to the church (Acts 5:3). What the sin of Achan (Jos. 7) was in the OT, theirs was in the NT. On the distribution to the → poor (Acts 6:1–7) → Serve, art. diakoneō. Mary, the mother of John Mark, allowed her house to be used as a meeting place (Acts 12:12), but seems to have retained possession of it. Elsewhere other churches do not seem to have adopted the community of goods of the Jerusalem church. (See further M. Hengel, Property and Riches in the Early Church, 1974, 31–34.)

Simon Magus' idea that he could buy the wonder-working power of the Holy Spirit was completely mistaken (Acts 8:18, 29; → Magic, art. mageia, NT 1 (a)).

In 1 Cor. 13:3 Paul uses love as the only valid criterion for evaluating good actions for our fellow men involving possessions. If one's willingness to give away one's possessions to the poor is not an expression of love, the giver has no gain from the action.

In the course of an exhortation to perseverance Heb. 10:34 reminds its readers that "you joyfully accepted the plundering of your property [tēn harpagēn tōn hyparchontōn hymōn], since you knew that you yourselves had a better possession and an abiding one [kreittona hyparxin kai menousan]." This is perhaps a reference to the expulsion of Jews from Rome by the emperor Claudius in A.D. 49. Among them were Priscilla and Aquila (cf. Acts 18:2) and doubtless other Christian Jews who would have suffered eviction and looting (cf. F. F. Bruce, "Christianity under Claudius", BJRL 44, 1961–62, 309 ff.; and The Epistle to the Hebrews, NLC, 1964, 268 f.). The allusion to possessions is further illustrated in the following chapter by the example of those like → Abraham who "desire a better country, that is, a heavenly one" (Heb. 11:16) and → Moses who preferred reproach suffered for the sake of the Anointed to the treasures of Egypt (→ thēsauros, NT 3). It contrasts with the attitude of Esau who forfeited his birthright for immediate material well-being (Heb. 12:15 ff.; cf. Gen. 25:29–34; 27:30–40; Deut. 29:18 LXX).

F. Selter

Coins in the Bible and Theological Issues

OT Although the earlier narratives of the OT contain occasional references to the use of "money" in commercial transactions (as when Abraham purchased the cave of Machpelah for the burial of Sarah, Gen. 23), the invention of coined money was deferred until the 7th cent. B.C. It was evidently in Lydia (Asia Minor) that the first coins were struck, at first in electrum, then later in gold and silver (bearing on the obverse the forepart of a lion facing the forepart of a bull, apparently in combat with each other). Very soon thereafter the Greek island of Aegina began the first minting of silver coinage, somewhat ovoid in shape, and bearing on the obverse the figure of a sea-tortoise. During the 6th cent. the coinage of the Athenians (with the head of Athena in profile, looking to the right, on the obverse) became current in the coastal regions of the Near East, including Phoenicia and Palestine; it was also the first coinage to contain a reverse type (in this case an owl, facing, with a sprig of olive in the upper left, and the three Greek letters, alpha, theta, and long epsilon, on the right – an abbreviation for Athēnaiōn). Yet it was not until the reign of Darius I of the Persian Empire that any government in control of Judah began to issue coins which were current in the land of Israel. The Persian (Achaemenid) imperial coins displayed but one type throughout the course of the empire: a robed king, wearing a tiara, kneeling on his right knee facing to the right, holding a bow in his left hand and a lance or arrow in his right hand. The reverse was stamped with a shapeless punch and contained no device. The gold coins of this type were known as "darics" and weighed about 8.4 grams; they are referred to in Ezr. 2:69 and Neh. 7:70 as dark^{e}mônîm. In 1 Chron. 29:7 the related word '^{a}darkōnîm is used as a unit of weight for the various golden vessels offered in the time of King David for the service of God in the future temple to be built by Solomon. Since there were no minted coins whatever back in the 10th cent. B.C., it is evident that the Chronicler (perhaps Ezra himself) had calculated the weight of these vessels in terms of weight-standards familiar to his own contemporaries.

It was apparently during the late 5th century and the century following that local coinages sprang up within the Persian Empire, consisting especially of silver pieces, some of which were minted under the authority of local satraps like Mazaeus (and his predecessors, Datames and Pharnabazus) of Tarsus. These all portrayed Baal-Tars, enthroned, facing left, with sceptre in hand; the reverse types varied considerably, sometimes featuring a helmeted male head, or else a lion killing a bull, or even two standing figures flanking an altar of incense. Or else there were types minted by the rich commercial cities like Tyre and Sidon. Tyre featured the bearded, crowned figure of Baal riding the waves upon a winged hippocamp; the reverse displayed an Egyptian type of owl superimposed upon the shepherd's staff (ḥeḳa) and flail of the pharaonic insignia. Sidon showed a war-galley riding the waves, and on the reverse the Persian king riding in his chariot.

Interestingly enough there were even some issues that bore pagan types such as these and yet were inscribed with the name Yehud (Y-H-D), the Aramaic form of "Judah". Since the Torah strictly forbad the fashioning of human likenesses, or indeed of any cult animal associated with worship, it is inconceivable that such coins could have been minted with the sanction of the approval or sanction of the Jewish provincial government (except possibly by the Persian governor in charge of Jewish affairs). One type has a bearded head facing right, and on the reverse an Athenian type of owl and olive sprig, but with the "Phoenician" letters Y-H-D to the right. Another type (possibly minted in Gaza) shows a bearded Baal sitting on a two-wheeled chariot, holding a plump bird on his left hand, and facing a squat little dwarflike worshipper in the lower right corner. Across the top are the letters Y-H-D. From the preceding description of coin-types it is apparent that they fell into three general categories: (1) the symbol of the nation or city-state – often represented by some animal or bird – whether lion, bull, tortoise, owl or eagle; (2) a portrait of the patron god of the city or nation – whether Athena or Baal or the semi-divine Persian king; (3) some symbol of national power or wealth – such as the war-galley or chariot or sprig of olive. Almost always there was some clear reference to local religion or civic pride. Partly because of their lowly status as a relatively small, poor province of the Persian Empire, the post-Exilic Jews were in no position to mint coins of their own, even if they could have hit upon non-cultic types which would involve no violation of the Second Commandment.

The same was true during the ensuing period of Greek domination, after the conquest of the Near and Middle East by Alexander the Great in 330 B.C. There was undoubtedly extensive use of coined money in Palestine, but all of it was of a pagan type. The imperial coinage of Alexander himself featured the head of Heracles in his lion headdress, and on the reverse the enthroned figure of Zeus holding a sceptre in his left hand and an eagle of victory on his right. The gold coins featured Athena's head wearing the Corinthian war-helmet, and on the other side a standing figure of the winged Nike (goddess of victory). The coinages of King Lysimachus of Thrace and of Ptolemy of Egypt were the first to portray the head of Alexander himself, wearing either a ram's-horn headdress or else an elephant-type, complete with trunk and tusks, suggestive of godlike powers and prestige. But soon thereafter (probably in the 290's) Ptolemy I began to issue coins with his own portrait upon them, and before long the Seleucid emperors at Antioch began to do the same. Since the Greek custom had been to portray none but gods or demi-gods upon their coins, it is fair to conclude that the Hellenistic rulers achieved the honour of portraiture upon their national currency only because they themselves claimed divine status. (Interestingly enough, it was not until the Roman senate voted divine honours for Julius Caesar that a Roman ruler ever had his visage presented on the coinage of his time. But once the precedent had been set, it became the invariable practice, and even the members of the Second Triumvirate, such as Antony and Octavian, issued money with their own portraits upon it.)

Not until the 2nd century and the assertion of Jewish independence did the Jews ever mint coins of their own, and even then it was not until sixty years after Judas Maccabaeus had expelled the forces of Antiochus Epiphanes from Jerusalem. Perhaps around 110 B.C. John Hyrcanus produced a very modest bronze coinage, hardly the size of an American dime, and bearing the simple device of two cornucopiae bound together at the horn-tips and flanking a poppy head in the centre. The reverse of this lepton contained a Hebrew legend in epigraphic characters reading: "Jonathan the High Priest, and the community of the Jews". His successor, Jonathan (Alexander Jannaeus), followed this example, but he also minted another type featuring a half-opened flower and the inscription, "Jonathan the King"; the reverse contained a compound anchor and a Greek inscription: "King Alexander". Other types used were a war-galley or a seven-rayed star. The complete absence of pagan symbols was thus maintained throughout the period of the Hasmonean Dynasty.

NT Even after the Roman conquest the small bronze coinage was kept largely free of pagan religious symbolism by the Herods who reigned as vassal kings under Roman authority. Herod the Great continued to make use of the anchor and the double cornucopiae (although his inscriptions were always in Greek). But he also introduced the crested helmet, the tripod bearing a bowl, and an incense burner between two palm branches. His successor, Herod Archelaus (4 B.C.–A.D. 6), introduced the grape-cluster and the tall, double-crested helmet. Subsequent to his dismissal from power by the Roman government, the rule of Palestine was partially entrusted to Herod the Tetrarch (Galilee, Samaria and Peraea only) and partially to a Roman procurator, such as Coponius, Valerius Gratus, or Pontius Pilate. Symbols inoffensive to Jewish sensibilities were employed by these Roman governors (who minted their bronze lepta with wheat ears or barley, or else with palm branches or even palm trees or cornucopiae). But Pilate aroused considerable resentment when he ventured to employ such cultic implements as an augur's wand (resembling a shepherd's crook) or a simpulum – a type of ladle used in connection with Roman sacrifice. But after Pilate was recalled and sent into exile by Caligula, Herod Agrippa I was installed as king for seven years (A.D. 37–44) first over part and then over all of Israel. As a nominal Jew, Agrippa reverted to inoffensive types, such as triple ears of wheat, or a fringed umbrella (perhaps suggesting that the king was a protective shade to his people).

It will be noted that all of these bronze coins supplied only the small change required in simple commercial transactions. No issues in silver were ever minted by a Jewish government until the time of the First Revolt (A.D. 67–70). This meant that from Persian times and onward, the Jews were obliged to handle silver coins (and gold, too, for that matter) which were issued by the Persian, Greek or Roman government which was in control of the Near East. It is safe to say that such pagan coins were never accepted for use in worship at the Jerusalem temple. The only currency allowable consisted in Hasmonean or Herodian bronze lepta or dilepta, and offerings in silver or gold had to take the form of bullion or manufactured implements and vessels. Yet in daily life and in their business transactions, pagan coins were in constant and familiar use.

The most notable example of bronze coinage presented in the temple treasury was of course the contribution of two lepta (or "mites") placed in the offering box by the indigent widow whom Christ commended (Mk. 12:42 par. Lk. 21:2). Conceivably these consisted of the Pontius Pilate type described above, or else of the less offensive coinage of the earlier procurators. But very possibly they were of the John Hyrcanus II or Alexander Jannaeus types which are still very commonly discovered in Jewish burial sites throughout Israel even to this day. The lepton is also mentioned at Lk. 12:59, where the par. Matt. 5:26 has kodrantēn, the Roman quadrans.

The most celebrated discussion of the types or inscriptions of any coin referred to in Scripture occurred during Holy Week. Jesus was accosted by some crafty agents of the Sanhedrin who sought to entrap him in the matter of paying taxes to the Roman government. "Is it lawful to give a poll-tax to Caesar, or not?" They had him on the horns of a dilemma, for if he answered that it was perfectly all right to pay tribute to Rome, this would offend the religionists who opposed any support to a pagan power. If on the other hand he declared himself opposed to the payment of such taxes, he would incur the charge of fomenting rebellion and sedition, and he would immediately be turned over to the Roman authorities. In answer to their craftiness, Jesus simply asked them to produce a silver denarius from their own pockets. Holding it up before them he then pointed out that the portrait on the obverse was that of the Roman emperor (in all probability it was a mintage of Tiberius, who had been reigning since A.D. 14), and the inscription bore the name of Caesar. (Denarii of Tiberius read on the obverse: TI. CAESAR DIVI AVG. F. AVGVSTVS "Tiberius Caesar Augustus, son of the divine Augustus".) Quite obviously they had no compunctions about using the money which Caesar had minted for them, with all of the advantages of protection for law-abiding citizens and the safeguarding of their financial security. They had no scruples about accepting the Roman law and order and military defence against marauding invaders from the East.

Therefore, their pious question concerning the legitimacy of paying taxes to the government who guaranteed them safety and peace and order was nothing more than arrant hypocrisy. "Render therefore to Caesar that which is Caesar's" – that is, the money and support necessary for a strong, efficient government – "and to God the things that are God's" (not only their tithes and temple taxes, but also the worship of their hearts and the faithful obedience to his revealed will).

An interesting reference to the temple poll tax is found in the episode of Matt. 17:24–27. The tax-collectors approached Peter, as a representative disciple of Jesus and asked him whether his leader ever paid the standard contribution to the support of the temple, as required in Exod. 30:11–16. Since Jesus and his followers were constantly itinerating from one preach-point to another, it was difficult for tax agents to make contact with them. But now that they were back in Capernaum once more, it was time for the matter to be dealt with. After making the point that as the Son of God it was not really appropriate for him to pay a tax to his own Father, Jesus directed Peter nevertheless to secure the money for payment. He was to go down to the lake and cast in his fish-line, and pull up the first fish to strike his bait. In it he would find a "stater", in this case the same as a tetradrachma (Matt. 17:27) – although in classical times the stater was a mere two-drachma piece, or else in Corinth and its colonies the stater was a three-drachma coin. But already in Ptolemaic times the term statēr was applied to the four-drachma piece, and so quite generally in the Greco-Roman period, since the tax amounted to a didrachmon (two-drachma piece) per person, and the coin recovered in Peter's fish was large enough to pay for them both, it must have been a tetradrachma – quite possibly a Tyrian shekel. The silver coins of Tyre during the Greco-Roman period featured a wreathed head of Baal-Melqart on their obverse, and a leftward striding eagle on the reverse (with the inscription TYROU HIERAS KAI ASYLOU, "Tyre the holy city of refuge"). It was very likely this same coin which predominated in the payment of thirty "pieces of silver" (argyria) recorded in Matt. 26:15 as the price paid to Judas for his betrayal of Jesus at Gethsemane. Because of its high silver content and standardized weight, the Tyrian shekel was generally preferred in Palestine, despite the paganism of its symbols. The well-known hoard of silver coins found in 1954 at the Khirbet Qumran headquarters must have been secreted there around A.D. 1; it consists entirely of Tyrian shekels and half-shekels of this type.

In his parables Jesus told the story of the housewife who was greatly distressed to find that she had lost one of her collection of ten drachmas (Lk. 15:8 f.). She seized her broom and began to sweep up every particle on the floor until she finally came across the missing coin, much to her joy and satisfaction. The drachma was about equivalent to the Roman denarius in size and value, and it was roughly equivalent to an entire day's wages for a day-labourer (such as the vineyard workers of Matt. 20:2). To a woman in humble circumstances, even the loss of a single day's wage was a severe blow. (It is unnecessary to suppose that these coins were perforated and strung together in a sort of headpiece or necklace, as some writers have suggested. It was very unusual for the ancients to bore holes through the thick type of coin which was in vogue all during Classical and Greco-Roman times; it would result in the loss of too much silver, and greatly deface the appearance of the coin itself.)

It has already been mentioned that during the First Revolt (A.D. 67–70) the revolutionary Jewish government minted silver coins for the first time in history. The shekel or four-drachma piece bore a libation chalice on the obverse (with the inscription "Shekel of Israel"), and on the reverse a tripleheaded pomegranate (and the legend, "Jerusalem the holy"). But neither these nor the First Revolt bronze lepta (featuring the amphora and the vine-leaf) find any mention in the NT itself, for only the late Epistles of John and the book of Revelation postdate that tragic episode in Hebrew history. G. L. Archer, Jr.

→ Avarice, → Gift, → Gold, → Parable, → Poor, → Tax, → Tithe

(a). G. L. Archer, "Coins", ZPEB I 902–11 (with photographs and colour illustrations); B. J. Bamberger, "Money-Changer", IDB III 435 f.; F. Banks, Coins of Bible Days, 1955; H. von Campenhausen, "Early Christian Asceticism", in Tradition and Life in the Church: Essays and Lectures in Church History, 1968, 90–122; M. Black, The Scrolls and the New Testament, 1961, 32–39; C. E. B. Cranfield, "Riches and the Kingdom of God: St. Mark 10.17–31", SJT 4, 1951, 302–13; J. D. M. Derrett, "The Treasure in the Field", Law in the New Testament, 1970, 1–16; "The Parable of the Talents and Two Logia", ibid., 17–31; "The Parable of the Unmerciful Servant", ibid., 32–47; "The parable of the Unjust Steward", ibid., 48–77; "Dives and Lazarus and the Preceding Sayings", ibid., 78–99; "Peter's Penny", ibid., 247–65; "Render to Caesar . . .", ibid., 313–38; E. Haenchen, The Acts of the Apostles, 1971; H. Hamburger, "Money", IDB III 423–35 (with photograph and line illustrations); A. R. Hands, Charities and Social Aid in Greece and Rome, 1968; A. von Harnack, The Mission and Expansion of Christianity, (1908) 1961; F. Hauck, thēsauros etc., TDNT III 136 ff.; mamōnas, TDNT IV 388 ff.; F. Hauck and E. Bammel, ptōchos etc., TDNT VI 885–915; F. Hauck and W. Kasch, ploutos etc., TDNT VI 318–32; M. Hengel, Was Jesus a Revolutionist?, 1971; Judaism and Hellenism: Studies in their Encounter in Palestine in the Early Palestinian Period, I–II, 1974; and Property and Riches in the Early Church, 1974; A. M. Honeyman, "The Etymology of Mammon", Archivum Linguisticum 4, 1952, 60–65; J. Jeremias, The Parables of Jesus, 1963²; and Jerusalem in the Time of Jesus: An Investigation into Economic and Social Conditions during the New Testament Period, 1969; E. A. Judge, The Social Pattern of Christian Groups in the First Century, 1960; L. Kadman et al., The Dating and Meaning of Ancient Jewish Coins, 1958; R. Koch, "Riches", EBT II 775–80; K. Lake, "The Communism of Acts II and IV–VI", in F. J. Foakes Jackson and K. Lake, eds., The Beginnings of Christianity, V, 1932, 140–51; I. H. Marshall, Luke: Historian and Theologian, 1970, 141–44, 206–9; F. W. Madden, Coins of the Jews, 1881; H. Montefiore, "Jesus and the Temple Tax", NTS 11, 1964–65, 60–71; K. F. Nickle, The Collection: A Study in Paul's Strategy, SBT 48, 1966; H. Preisker, periousios, TDNT VI 57 f.; B. Reicke, chrēma etc., TDNT IX 480 ff.; A. Reifenberg, Ancient Jewish Coins, 1947²; and Israel's History in Coins from the Maccabees to the Roman Conquest, 1953; E. Rogers, A Handy Guide to Jewish Coins, 1914; P. Romanoff, Jewish Symbols on Ancient Jewish Coins, 1944; M. Rostovtzeff, The Social and Economic History of the Hellenistic World, I–III, 1941; and The Social and Economic History of the Roman Empire, ed., P. M. Fraser, 1957²; J. Z. Smith, "The Social Description of Early Christianity", in Religious Studies Review 1, 1975; E. Stauffer, Christ and the Caesars: Historical Sketches, 1955; E. Troeltsch, The Social Teaching of the Christian Churches, I–II (1931) 1960; R. de Vaux, Ancient Israel: Its Life and Institutions, 1961 (see especially "Finance and Public Works", 139–42; "Economic Life", 164–77; and "Weights and Measures", 195–209; and the corresponding bibliographies, 529–34); H. W. Wolff, Anthropology of the Old Testament, 1974, 128–33.

(b). J. Babelon, "Monnaie", Supplément au Dictionnaire de la Bible, V, 1957, 1346–75; L. Bergson, "Zum periphrastischen chrēma", Eranos 65, 1967, 79–117; K. Beyschlag, "Christentum und Veränderung in der alten Kirche", KuD 18, 1972, 26–55; K. Bornhäuser, Der Christ und seine Habe nach dem Neuen Testament, BFChTh 38, 3 1936; H. Braunert, Utopia. Antworten griechischen Denkens auf die Herausforderung durch soziale Verhältnisse, Veröffentlichungen der schles.holst. Universitätsgesellschaft, Neue Folge, 51, 1969; G. Breidenstein, Das Eigentum und seine Verteilung, 1968; N. Brockmeyer, Sozialgeschichte der Antike, Urban-Taschenbücher 153, 1972; H. Bückers, Die biblische Lehre vom Eigentum, 1947; P. Christophe, L'Usage Chrétien du Droit de Propriéte dans l'Écriture et la Tradition Patristique, 1963; H.-J. Degenhardt, Lukas, Evangelist der Armen. Besitz und Besitzverzicht in der lukanischen Schriften, 1965; H. Donner, "Die soziale Botschaft der Propheten im Lichte der Gesellschaftsordnung in Israel", Oriens Antiquus 2, 1963, 229–45; S. Ejger, Das Geld im Talmud, 1930; K. Farner, Christentum und Eigentum bis Thomas von Aquin, 1947 (reprinted in Theologie des Kommunismus, 1969, 9–90, but without the detailed notes); M. Fendler, "Zur Sozialkritik des Amos", EvTh 33, 1973, 32–53; A. Feuillet, "Les riches intendants du Christ", RSR 34, 1947, 30–54; J. Gagé, Les Classes Sociales dans l'Empire, 1964; B. Gatz, Weltalter, goldene Zeit und sinnverwarndte Vorstellungen, 1967; F. Geiger, Philon von Alexandria als sozialer Denker, Tübinger Beiträge zur Altertumswissenschaft 14, 1932; D. Georgi, Die Geschichte der Kollekte des Paulus für Jerusalem, ThF 38, 1965; H. Greeven, Die Hauptprobleme der Sozialethik in der neueren Stoa und im Urchristentum, 1935; W. Haller, "Das Eigentum im Glauben und Leben der nachapostolischen Kirche", ThStKr 64, 1891, 478–563; F. Hauck, Die Stellung der Urkirche zu Arbeit und Geld, BFChTh 2, 3, 1921; W.-D. Hauschild, "Christentum und Eigentum. Zum Problem eines altkirchlichen 'Sozialismus' ", ZEE 16, 1972, 34–49; J. Hemelrijk, Penia en Ploutos, Dissertation Utrecht, 1925; F. Horst, "Das Eigentum nach dem Alten Testament", Kirche im Volk 2, 1949, 87–102 (reprinted in Gottes Recht. Gesammelte Studien zum Recht im Alten Testament, ThB 12, 1961); and "Eigentum", RGG[3] II 363 ff.; J. Jervell, "Er kam in sein Eigentum", TheolStud 10, 1957, 14 ff.; E. Kamlah, "Eigentum", BHHW I 377 f.; R. Koch, "Die Wertung des Besitzes im Lukasevangelium", Biblica 38, 1951, 151–69; H.-J. Kraus, "Die Bedeutung des Eigentums im Deuteronomium", Kirche im Volk, 2, 1949, 103–11; G. Kretschmar, "Ein Beitrag zur Frage nach dem Ursprung der frühchristlichen Askese", ZTK 61, 1964, 27–67; H. Kreissig, Die sozialen Zussammenhänge des jüdischen Krieges, Schriften zur Geschichte und Kultur der Antike 1, 1970; W. G. Kümmel, "Der Begriff des Eigentums im Neuen Testament", in Heilsgeschehen und Geschichte, 1965, 271–77; A. Kuschke, "Arm und Reich im Alten Testament mit besonderer Berücksichtigung der nachexilischen Zeit", ZAW Neue Folge 16, 1939, 31–57; J. Leipoldt, Der soziale Gedanke in der alten Kirche, (1950) 1972; E. Lohmeyer, Soziale Fragen im Urchristentum, 1921; M. Lurje, Studien zur Geschichte der wirtschaftlichen und sozialen Verhältnisse im israelitisch-jüdischen Reich, BZAW 45, 1927; J. J. van Manen, Penia en Ploutos in de Periode na Alexander, Dissertation Utrecht, 1931; P. H. Menoud, "La Mort d'Ananias et de Saphire", Mélanges Goguel, 1950, 146–54; P. A. Munch. "Das Problem des Reichtums in den Psalmen 37, 49, 73", ZAW Neue Folge 14, 1937, 33–46; N. Peters, Die soziale Fürsorge im Alten Testament, 1935; R. von Pöhlmann, Geschichte der sozialen Frage und des Sozialismus in der antiken Welt, revised by F. Oertel, I–II, 1925[3]; H. Preisker, "Lukas 16, 1–17", TLZ 74, 1949, 86–92; G. Redard, "Recherches sur chrē, chrēsthai", Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études, Sciences Historiques et Philologiques 303, 1953, 82–91; H. Riesenfeld, "Vom Schatzsammeln und Sorgen – ein Thema urchristlicher Paränese. Zu Mt. vi 19–34", in Neotestamentica et Patristica. Eine Freundesgabe, Herrn Professor Dr. Oscar Cullmann zu seinem 60. Geburtstag überreicht, 1962, 47–58; E. Salin, Platon und die griechische Utopie, 1921; SB I 817–28; IV 536–610; A. Schalit, König Herodes, Studia Judaica 4, 1969; O. Schilling, Reichtum und Eigentum in der altchristlichen Literatur, 1908; and "Der Kollektivismus der Kirchenväter", ThQ 114, 1933, 481–92; C. Schneider, Geistesgeschichte des antiken Christentums, I, 1954; W. Schrage, Die konkreten Einzelgebote in der paulinischen Paränese. Ein Beitrag zur neutestamentlichen Ethik, 1962; and "Die Stellung zur Welt bei Paulus, Epiktet und in der Apokalyptik. Ein Beitrag zu I Kor. 7.29–31", ZTK 61, 1964, 125–54; G. Uhlhorn, Die christliche Liebestätigkeit in der alten Kirche, 1882; and Die christliche Liebestätigkeit, (1895[2]) 1959; H. E. Weber, "Das Eigentum nach dem Neuen Testament", Kirche im Volk 2, 1949, 112–16.

Pour

ἐκχέω

ἐκχέω (ekcheō) and ἐκχύννω (ekchynnō), pour out; σπένδω (spendō), pour out (a drink offering); πρόσχυσις (proschysis), pouring or sprinkling (of blood); αἱματεκχυσία (haimatekchysia), shedding of blood.

CL In cl. Gk. the uncompounded form cheō, pour, is still in use, but the compounds, especially ekcheō, pour out, gradually displace it. ekcheō is used in secular Greek of pouring liquids, sometimes with the idea of draining, pouring away. A Jewish inscription uses it of shedding the blood of an innocent martyr. It can also be used for scattering solid objects, and, metaphorically, for squandering money. ekchyn(n)ō is a Hel. Gk. form which exists alongside it.

OT In the LXX ekcheō normally represents Heb. šāpaḵ, an equally general word for pour, but used in purificatory rites (Num. 19:17; Exod. 30:18) and particularly frequently of the pouring or shedding of blood, either as a part of the sacrificial ritual, or, most frequently, as a synonym for murder (cf. Gen. 9:6; 37:22; Deut. 19:10; 1 Sam. 59:7; Ps. 13:3). It is also used in the OT, as in secular Gk., of pouring out offerings, usually of water, to Yahweh (e.g. Num. 28 f.; Jdg. 6:20; 1 Sam. 7:6; 2 Sam. 23:16), and to other gods (e.g. Isa. 57:6; Jer. 7:18; 19:13); the technical term for offering libations (of wine) is spendō (translating Heb. nāsaḵ).

Among non-literal uses, the most common is the expression to pour out anger, fury on someone, used of God's acts of → judgment (e.g. Ps. 79:6; Ezek. 7:8). Men also pour out their soul, or their complaint, before God (1 Sam. 1:15; Ps. 142:2). One special use is the promise that God will pour out his → Spirit on men (Joel 2:28–29 [MT 3:1–2]; Ezek. 39:29; Zech. 12:10; cf. Isa. 32:15, using a different word, 'ārâh, which normally means to be naked, bare, but here pour out.

NT 1. In the NT, ekcheō is used in the literal sense, without special theological significance, in Matt. 9:17 par. Lk. 5:37 (of wine being "spilled"); Jn. 2:15 (of money "scattered"); Acts 1:18 (of Judas's bowels being "poured out"; → Akeldama).

2. The use of "to shed blood" as a synonym for murder or martyrdom is taken over from the OT in Matt. 23:35 par. Lk. 11:50; Acts 22:20; Rom. 3:15; Rev. 16:6. The shedding or pouring of blood in the OT sacrificial ritual is referred to in Heb. by the cognate nouns proschysis (11:28; cf. Exod. 12:22) and haimatekchysia (9:22). The latter is found only in Christian writings, but cf. ekchysis haimatos, pouring out of blood (1 Ki. 18:28; Sir. 27:15).

3. These two OT senses of shedding blood, murder or martyrdom and sacrifice, come together in the crucial words of Jesus in the institution of the → Lord's Supper, "This is my blood of the covenant, which is poured out [ekchynnomenon] for many" (Mk. 14:24 par. Matt. 26:28; Lk. 22:20 reads "This cup which is poured out for you is the new covenant in my blood"). Jesus is both a martyr, an innocent victim of murder, and a sacrifice "for many". Several OT passages may be alluded to in these words, but two are particularly important. "This is my blood of the covenant" echoes Exod. 24:8, the sacrificial offering which instituted the old covenant of Sinai, now to be replaced (as Jer. 31:31–34 predicted) with a new → covenant, sealed by Jesus' sacrificial death. "For many" points to Isa. 53:11, 12, the "many" who were to be made righteous by the death of God's Servant bearing their sin; he is said in Isa. 53:12 to have "poured out" his soul to death, and while the verbs in both Heb. (he'ᵉrâh) and LXX (paredothē) are different from šāpaḵ and ekcheō, an allusion to this phrase is surely intended (→ Empty, art. kenos, NT 3). The pouring out of Jesus' blood, then, was the sacrifice which removed the sin of "many", and introduced them to a new covenant relationship with God. It is this pouring out that is symbolized in the cup at the Lord's Supper.

4. Paul takes up the pouring of libations as a metaphor for his approaching martyrdom, in his use of spendō in Phil. 2:17 and 2 Tim. 4:6. The libation is not, like the blood sacrifices, an atoning offering, but an expression of dedication to God.

5. The more metaphorical uses of pour in the OT are also echoed in the NT. The pouring out of God's fury provides the imagery of the seven bowls of the wrath of God poured out in Rev. 16, where ekcheō occurs 8 times in this sense. But more characteristically, God's love is "poured out" in the hearts of believers (Rom. 5:5), and this has been done by the bestowal of the Holy Spirit, who is several times said, following Joel 2:28–29, to have been "poured" upon those who receive Christ (Acts 2:17–18, 33; 10:45; Tit. 3:6). (Note also the use of being "filled" with the Spirit, → Fullness, NT 4.) The use of such an apparently impersonal term, in contrast with the very personal language used about the Spirit elsewhere in the NT, is accounted for by the influence of the OT usage mentioned above.

→ Blood, → Fullness, → Pentecost, → Spirit R. T. France

J. Behm, ekcheō, TDNT II, 467–469.

Prayer, Ask, Kneel, Beg, Worship, Knock

In the NT the most comprehensive term for "to pray" is proseuchomai. It denotes prayer in general, and may be used without further qualification. On the other hand, deomai and deēsis, like aiteō and aitēma, involve spoken supplication. Their content is usually indicated, as is the person to whom the request is made. These terms are also confined to definite acts of praying. Occasionally, in the case of aiteō and aitēma, the basic meaning of wanting something is still present, so that it has a rather more forceful and sometimes demanding tone, whereas erōtaō, when it means to request, is more intimate. Prayer to God may also be expressed by boaō boē and krazō, both vbs. meaning to cry, shout (→ Cry). They are generally used when prayer to God or to Jesus Christ arises from great human need or distress and is therefore a cry for help (e.g. in the case of sickness or fear). gonypeteō also expresses urgency in prayer or in making a request, whereas proskyneō tends to imply worship, adoration and obeisance. The prayer of praise and thanksgiving is expressed by aineō and eucharisteō (→ Thank). The vb. krouō, knock, is used metaphorically of seeking access to God.

αἰτέω

αἰτέω (aiteō), ask, ask for, demand; αἴτημα (aitēma), request, demand; ἀπαιτέω (apaiteō), demand back; ἐξαιτέομαι (exaiteomai), ask for, demand; παραιτέομαι (paraiteomai), ask for, request, excuse, refuse, decline.

CL The basic meaning of aiteō is to want something, to demand something as one's share. Hence in profane Gk. aiteō means both to ask and to demand. The mid. form is best translated by to ask for oneself, or occasionally by to desire for oneself. The noun aitēma, therefore, means the thing asked for, both in the sense of a request or desire, and of a demand (e.g. aitēma tyrannikon, the demand of a tyrant, Plutarch, Demetr. 3). apaiteō intensifies the basic idea of demanding (e.g.

to call to account, Plato, Rep. 10, 599b), usually in the sense of demanding back, such being the force of the prefix ap-. The derivative exaiteomai means to ask for oneself, while paraiteomai, because of the sense attaching to the prefix par-, means basically to ask to be released from an obligation, to present one's apologies.

OT The Heb. equivalent is šā'al, meaning to ask, require, wish, desire, request for oneself (Deut. 10:12; Jdg. 5:25; 1 Sam. 12:13; Job 31:30 and passim). Used with reference to God it approximates closely to the idea of prayer and is often associated with thanksgiving for answered prayer (e.g. 1 Sam. 1:20; Pss. 105[104]: 40; 21[20]:4). It also means to ask, inquire (Gen. 24:57, LXX erōtaō); in legal language to examine (Deut. 13:15, LXX ereunaō); to consult, seek counsel (Jdg. 18:5, LXX eperōtaō). šā'al is rendered by aiteō only when the desire is for something quite specific (Exod. 3:22; Jos. 14:12; Jdg. 5:25; 1 Sam. 12:17); e.g. Hannah asks for herself a son from Yahweh and Eli promises her "what you have asked from him" (1 Sam. 1:17). Similarly in the Pss., whenever this verb expresses a promise of answered prayer, this must always be seen against the background of a specific request (Pss. 2:8; 21[20]:4; 27[26]:4; 40[39]:6; 78[77]:18; 105[104]:40; cf. Isa. 7:11 f.; 58:2; Prov. 30:7 [24:30]).

NT 1. In the NT aiteō, aiteomai (occurring 70 times) generally means to request, ask (for oneself). It occurs with more or less the same degree of frequency in all four Gospels (Matt. 14 times; Mk. 9; Lk. 11; Jn. 11) and Acts (10 times) rarely in Paul (once each in 1 Cor. and Col., and twice in Eph.). It is found 5 times each in Jas. and Jude and once in 1 Pet. but not at all in the Pastorals, Heb. and Rev.

(a) On a human level the mid. form of the vb. (aiteomai etc.) is used almost always in addressing superiors (Matt. 14:7; 27:20; Lk. 23:23; Acts 9:2 and passim) and therefore has a somewhat official flavour. Generally speaking, the act. form of the verb (aiteō etc.) has no special nuances. Only in Matt. 5:42 is it clear from the context that aiteō has a trace of unpleasantness about it: to demand something unpleasant, or at least to ask in a way which the other person feels to be unpleasant (hence aiteō could virtually be translated here by "to approach" or "to accost"). D. Hill suggests that the two clauses in this verse are parallel and that aiteō here means to ask for a loan (cf. Exod. 22:25; The Gospel of Matthew, New Century Bible, 1972, 128). Jesus emphasizes that the disciple should respond even to requests such as this (cf. Matt. 7:7, 8). The ethical implications of this should be noted: I am to overcome my reluctance and open both heart and hand to the person making the request, for the request is nothing less than God calling me to open my heart to him and be obedient.

(b) In the religious sphere, i.e. in those passages when a request is made to God, no difference in meaning is discernible between the act. and mid. forms of the vb. In the nature of the case, such requests enter the realm of supplicatory prayer (cf. Matt. 21:22, to ask in prayer), though in the NT several other words are used, sometimes paired with aiteō, to express the idea of making supplication; e.g. → proseuchomai (Mk. 11:24; Col. 1:9), which usually remains unqualified and indicates prayer generally; or → gonypeteō, to bend the knee (cf. Eph. 3:13 f.), which particularly stresses the suppliant's humble posture before God. erōtaō, too, occurs in parallel with aiteō (1 Jn. 5:16), though as a rule it is used where there is a close relationship between the parties concerned, e.g. between the disciples and

Jesus, and between Jesus and God; when the disciples address requests to God, however, aiteō is generally used. erōtaō originally meant to ask a question (in a dialogue) and has retained its intimate conversational character. Another word for to ask in the NT is → deomai, generally used where the request springs from a concrete situation (hence frequently for intercession).

It is striking that aiteō is never used of Jesus' own requests and prayers, but always erōtaō or deomai (e.g. Jn. 14:16; 16:23–26; Lk. 22:32). This may be connected with the peculiarity of erōtaō mentioned above.

(c) It is significant that, wherever the NT speaks of requests made to God, it emphasizes that such requests are heard (cf. Matt. 6:8; 7:7–11; 18:19; 21:22; Jn. 14:13 f.; 15:7, 16; 16:23 f., 26; 1 Jn. 3:22; 5:14 f.; Jas. 1:5). It is as if the NT witnesses wished particularly to encourage men to pray, by assuring the suppliant that his requests are heard by God. The NT is aware that this certainty keeps all prayer alive; let such certainty become weakened or diminished through doubt, and prayer dies.

What basis does the NT give for this certainty? In Matt. 7:8 the fact that requests are heard is stated as a basic principle of the → kingdom of God: "Everyone who asks receives." This principle is here the foundation for the injunction and its accompanying promise; "Ask and it will be given to you." But the ultimate foundation is given in such passages as Matt. 6:8; Jn. 15:16; 16:23, 26 f.; Col. 1:9–12 and especially Matt. 7:9–11. God is the Father who loves his own more than an earthly father loves his son, and who therefore cannot permit their requests to be unavailing, but gives them what they need. Ultimately, therefore, the reason why a person who asks is certain of being heard, is the certainty, given by Jesus to his own, of God's fatherly goodness and love. Implicit in these passages is a further certainty which runs through the whole Bible and undergirds everything it says: the certainty that God is a living God who hears and sees, and who has a heart full of compassion.

As God deals with us, so should we deal with our neighbour and respond to his requests (Matt. 5:42). We are to give to him because we experience afresh every day the generosity and fatherly goodness of God.

(d) The NT repeatedly makes the point, however, that the prayer which God hears must be the right kind of prayer. This is alluded to in Matt. 7:7 f., where the vbs. to → seek and to knock (→ krouō) are used in parallel with to ask. Frequently in the Bible, seeking has God as its object; it denotes a God-orientated attitude on the part of man. This gives a clue as to what constitutes true prayer. It must be in keeping with the nature of him to whom it is addressed, in which case our requests will be well-pleasing to God and in accordance with his will (cf. 1 Jn. 5:14: to ask something "according to his will"). To ask from God means to ask from him something right and good (Matt. 7:11). Lk. interprets this specifically as asking for the Holy → Spirit (Lk. 11:13). In other places true prayer is described as asking in → faith (Matt. 21:22; Jas. 1:5 f.; note the affinity between Jas. and Matt.). In prayer we are never to forget whom we are addressing: the living God, the almighty One with whom nothing is impossible, and from whom therefore all things may be expected. To doubt God is to do him an injustice, for it belittles his deity, misjudges his character, and therefore receives nothing from him (Jas. 1:7). But true prayer is bound up with faith, i.e. with the certainty of being heard. The NT encourages such a degree of certainty that the suppliant can believe he has actually received his request at the very moment of asking (Mk. 11:24; 1 Jn. 5:15). The corresponding passages in the Johannine writings expand the idea of asking in faith: it is said to arise from "his words remaining in us" (Jn. 15:7), i.e. from our being in such close union with Jesus and his word that our asking is sure to be in accordance with his will. 1 Jn. 3:22 moves rather more into the sphere of ethics: "we receive from him whatever we ask, because we keep his commandments and do what pleases him", i.e. because our asking springs from a right attitude to God. This verse presents in brief summary the implications of being united with Christ in our prayers. Elsewhere Jn. describes true prayer as "asking in the name of Jesus" (Jn. 14:13 f.; 15:16; 16:24, 26; → Name). Since such prayer is heard, and since I can be certain of the fact, the result is → joy (Jn. 16:24). Matt. 18:19 may be relevant here: united prayer by several disciples indicates that all selfish desires have been renounced, for selfish prayer is false and receives nothing from God (Jas. 4:3; Mk. 10:35).

2. When the object of aiteō is a subordinate person, it easily assumes the meaning to require, demand (Lk. 1:63; Acts 16:29); similarly when a creditor demands back from a debtor goods given on loan or trust, or requires an account of them (predicated of God in Lk. 12:48). In 1 Pet. 3:15 "to require an account" (of the Christian's hope) means to demand proof of its truth and credibility, or simply to demand information.

This meaning throws light on the implications lying behind the Jews' demand for "signs" (1 Cor. 1:22; → Miracle, art. sēmeion). When man takes this attitude, he is in fact setting himself above God and calling him to account; he is demanding that God should justify himself in relation to what he had done in Christ.

3. (a) The word aitēma occurs in its non-religious sense in Lk. 23:24. In its religious sense, i.e. when addressed to God, it likewise means a request and especially any individual request viewed in relation to its content (e.g. Phil. 4:6; 1 Jn. 5:15).

(b) The compound vb. apaiteō often carries the intensified meaning to demand, but is used particularly in the sense of reclaiming either stolen goods (Lk. 6:30b, where the command "Give to every one who begs from you" is expanded and at the same time brought into sharper focus), or goods loaned out for a limited period (Lk. 12:20, where God requires back man's life, the vb. itself indicating where the true ownership lies; cf. aitēsousin in Lk. 12:48b: "and of him to whom men commit much they will demand the more").

exaiteomai occurs only in Lk. 22:31 in the sense of to demand that someone (in this case Peter) be handed over. This demand has been made by → Satan to Peter's master, namely to God himself, with the alleged purpose of testing the genuineness and steadfastness of Peter's faith, but with the ulterior motive of bringing about his downfall.

(c) In Mk. 15:6 paraiteomai means to ask for someone's release, while in Lk. 14:18 f. it means to ask for one's own release, in this case from the obligation of accepting an invitation, i.e. to present one's apologies. Should the obligation be considered intolerable, then the vb. can mean to refuse, decline (e.g. Acts 25:11, with reference to the Roman death penalty; Heb. 12:19, 25, with reference to God and his word); or to reject (e.g. 1 Tim. 4:7, "godless and silly myths"; 5:11, the enrolment of younger women in the church's list of widows); 2 Tim. 2:23; Tit.

3:10. In the last-mentioned passages, disciplinary measures are in view both in regard to doctrine and in regard to church government, as befitted the situation being experienced by the recipients of the Pastoral Epistles. Hence, these acts of refusal or rejection begin to acquire an official character, though whether Tit. 3:10 refers to excommunication or merely to the breaking off of → fellowship (as in 1 Tim. 6:5, cf. AV) must remain an open question. H. Schönweiss

γονυπετέω

γόνυ (gony), knee; γονυπετέω (gonypeteō), fall on one's knees, kneel down before.

CL In the Gk. world, which adopted this custom from the Orient, kneeling was practised by a slave before his master and by a suppliant before the gods, but the practice was usually expressed not by gonypeteō but by proskynēsis and hiketeia even though the basic idea is different (→ proskyneō, lit. to kiss, and thus to worship).

OT The oriental ceremony of kneeling appeared in Israel only when its kings adopted the style of the great oriental monarchs and demanded similar tokens of servility (1 Chr. 29:20). At the same time, however, there is evidence that the widespread oriental custom of kneeling before the gods was also adopted, so that in the OT falling prostrate is a sign of submission and homage, of humility and awe before Almighty God (Ps. 95:6). In addition, the OT characteristically looks forward to the practice being continued in the messianic age of salvation (Isa. 45:23).

NT 1. Apart from Heb. 12:12 (cf. Isa. 35:3), gony, knee, occurs in the NT only in association with verbs in phrases meaning to bend the knee, kneel before. In the NT the plur. ta gonata is combined with tithenai (Mk. 15:19; Lk. 5:8; 22:41; Acts 7:60; 9:40; 20:36; 21:5) or kamptein (Rom. 11:4 quoting 1 Ki. 19:18; 14:11 quoting Isa. 45:23; Eph. 3:14; Phil. 2:10) to give the phrase to bow the knees. It expresses:

(a) Awe before a superior or homage before a king, i.e. recognition of his might and sovereignty (as in Mk. 15:19, where the phrase occurs in parallel with → proskyneō, with no real difference in meaning); the adoration and veneration which is due to God alone and not to any idol (Rom. 11:4); the recognition of God as the supreme judge (Rom. 14:11) or the acknowledgment that Jesus, in his universal majesty and cosmic significance, is Lord of all (Phil. 2:10).

(b) The phrase is particularly meaningful in Lk. 5:8, where it expresses the humble attitude of a man who, having received of Christ's abundant grace, recognizes both his sinful and lost condition and the wholly unmerited nature of the gift. His falling down before Jesus is here a sign of repentance, that change of direction which marks the beginnings of faith. Similarly in Jn. 9:38 proskyneō is a sign of faith in Jesus.

(c) In other passages falling on one's knees is simply the gesture associated with prayer (cf. → proseuchomai, → deomai, → aiteō), emphasizing its earnestness and urgency (e.g. Lk. 22:41; Acts 7:60; 9:40).

2. The simple vb. gonypeteō is also used (e.g. Matt. 27:29), especially to intensify the urgency of a request or question (to ask on bended knee), e.g. Matt. 17:14; Mk. 1:40 (cf. the parallel use of → proskyneō in Matt. 8:2); 10:17.

H. Schönweiss

δέομαι

δέομαι (deomai), ask, request, beseech, beg; δέησις (deēsis), a request, entreaty; προσδέομαι (prosdeomai), need (in addition or further); ἱκετηρία (hiketēria), supplication; ἔντευξις (enteuxis), petition, prayer.

CL The basic meaning of deomai is to lack, be in need of (cf. prosdeomai), from which developed the meaning to request, beseech; similarly in the case of the noun deēsis.

OT 1. In the LXX deomai is used with the meaning to beseech, quite often representing the Heb. ḥānan (hith.), to beg for favour. Thus Esther besought the king (Est. 8:3), and Jacob likewise the angel (Hos. 12:4). Job, ostracized and in misery, had to beseech his own servant (Job 19:16). The suppliant pleads with God for mercy (1 Ki. 8:33–47; Ps. 30:8; 14:1). But deomai can also translate ḥālâh (piel), to appease, placate. The person praying attempts to placate God's anger by his entreaties (Exod. 32:11; 1 Ki. 13:6; Zech. 8:21; Jer. 26:19). The prayer can be accompanied by an offering (1 Sam. 13:12; → Sacrifice) or associated with renunciation of sin (Dan. 9:13). Sometimes deomai stands for the particle bî or nā' (Gen. 43:20; 44:18; Exod. 4:10; Num. 12:13) in the sense of "if it please you . . .", "by your leave . . .", used when addressing a superior.

2. The noun deēsis is used in the LXX to translate several Heb. words including t^{e}ḥinnâh, supplication (e.g. 1 Ki. 8:28, 30, 38, 45, 49, 52, 54; 9:3; Pss. 6:9; 55[54]:1); the related taḥ^{a}nûn (e.g. Pss. 28[27]:2, 6; 31[30]:22; 86[85]:6; 116[114]:1; 130 [129]:2; 140[139]:6; 143[142]:1); rinnâh, a cry of lamentation, a prayer of lament (e.g. Pss. 17[16]:1; 61[60]:1; 88[87]:2; 106[105]:44), and šaw'âh, a cry for help (e.g. in Ps. 34[33]:17; 39[38]:12; 40[39]:1; 145[144]:19). It is used only for supplication and calling upon God in prayer, often standing alongside proseuchē, prayer (e.g. in 1 Ki. 8:38, 45; Ps. 6:9; 17:1; 39:12; Jer. 11:14). It is thus largely synonymous with the latter (→ proseuchomai).

NT In the NT deomai occurs only with the meaning to ask request, beseech, beg.

1. It is used in a general sense as a courtesy formula, without any particular object or object clause (cf. the English phrase "I beg you"), followed by direct speech (Acts 8:24; 21:39) or by an infinitive (Acts 26:3).

2. In some passages deomai is used in its full sense of making earnest entreaty, even imploring. There is a warmth, an attractiveness, a winsomeness about it, as in 2 Cor. 5:20 (cf. Acts 2:40); 8:4; 10:2; Gal. 4:12.

3. In all other cases deomai has the religious sense of beseeching Jesus or God. The requests made are quite specific, arising out of real need and expecting definite help of an external or a spiritual nature. Help in a situation of external need is sought from Jesus in Lk. 5:12; 9:38. Passages such as Lk. 8:28; 9:38 indicate that with deomai the reason for the request is generally given (cf. also the following passages, but cf. Lk. 1:13). 1 Thess. 3:10 shows how even an apparently external request may be directed to a spiritual end, so that here the distinction between external and internal is no longer operative.

Prayer should be made to God for forgiveness (Acts 8:22); for labourers to bring in God's harvest (Matt. 9:38; → Seed, Harvest); and for ability to stand on the last day (Lk. 21:36). In the latter verse, as in many other passages including some already mentioned, to ask is used absolutely, i.e. without God specifically mentioned as direct object. In such cases, of course, the direct object has to be supplied.

4. If the request is made not in one's own interest but on behalf of someone else, then deomai means to intercede (e.g. Acts 8:24; Rom. 10:1; 2 Cor. 1:11). When, as frequently happens, the content of the intercession is not stated, the vb. indicates that brotherliness which constrains one Christian to plead with God on behalf of another (e.g. Phil. 1:4; Eph. 6:18). Thus intercession is often the visible and practical expression of that heartfelt affection and fellowship which exist among Christians (e.g. 2 Cor. 9:14; 2 Tim. 1:3), an idea implicit, probably, in other passages also. That Paul highly valued such intercession and expected great things from it, is seen from such passages as 2 Cor. 1:11; Phil. 1:19. Jas. 5:16 speaks in precisely the same vein. Its point is further sharpened by the phrase "the supplication of a righteous man" (i.e. of a believer, cf. v. 15, whose life bears out his faith) and the adj. qualifying deēsis, namely energoumenē, energetic, active, effective. This comes about when the supplication involves living, dynamic fellowship and genuine conversation with God – which in itself is a gift from God himself. This is exemplified by → Elijah (v. 17; cf. 1 Ki. 17:1; 18:1). Similarly 1 Pet. 3:12 (quoting Ps. 34:16) says that the prayer of the "righteous" is heard by God (on prayer being heard → aiteō).

5. Whenever the request is addressed to God, deomai quite naturally assumes the meaning of to pray, and can often be so translated (likewise the noun deēsis, prayer). This is frequently the case when no content is stated (e.g. Acts 10:2; Heb. 5:7, where the noun stands alongside hiketēria, entreaty, supplication, originally that of a person seeking protection). Hence, as in the OT, deēsis often occurs with proseuchē, in which case the latter has the more general meaning of the two (→ proseuchomai); e.g. Rom. 1:10; Eph. 6:18; Phil. 4:6, where both are used with the further addition of aitēma, an individual request or petition (→ aiteō); 1 Tim. 2:1, where the two are complemented by enteuxis, intercession, petition, appeal, prayer.

Prayer is the most important evidence of true Christian faith (1 Tim. 2:1). It is the very mark of a Christian (1 Tim. 5:5; cf. Acts 9:11). Even Jesus prayed (Heb. 5:7; cf. Lk. 22:44) and made intercession (Lk. 22:32).

prosdeomai occurs only in Acts 17:25 in the sense of to need, be in need of. In this word the original sense of deomai reappears, and Lk. uses it here to underscore the self-sufficiency and complete independence of God who is highly exalted above all that is merely human. H. Schönweiss

προσεύχομαι

προσεύχομαι (proseuchomai), to pray, entreat; εὔχομαι (euchomai), request, vow; εὐχή (euchē), prayer, oath, vow; προσευχή (proseuchē), prayer.

CL euchomai is a technical term for invoking a deity and so covers every aspect of such invocation: to request, entreat, vow, consecrate etc. (similarly the noun: request, entreaty, vow); in a word: to pray; prayer. Since the vb.'s basic meaning is "to make confident statements about oneself", it can also mean to boast, brag and assert.

In profane Gk. prayer is often accompanied by an offering, the object of which is to make the gods favourably disposed. Here prayer mostly takes the form of supplication. Though used originally, as early as Mycenean Gk., almost exclusively with reference to tangible benefits, at a later period (e.g. in the Tragic Poets), the words have in view spiritual and ethical values (e.g. Aesch., Cho. 140 f.; Eur., Medea 635 ff.) or denote prayer for preservation from spiritual or moral harm. Characteristically, the assurance of being heard is lacking, belief in an omnipresent divine principle excluding all possibility of an epiphany. In the piety associated with the Hellenistic mysteries the worshipper at prayer experiences the nearness of the deity, especially at those rare moments of climax when he is granted a sight of the god concerned. At such times all prayer is extinguished, and is replaced by silent rapture. Intercession, and supplication for earthly things, are totally absent from this kind of prayer.

OT 1. In the OT prayer is all-important because of that which both characterizes and constitutes the nation of Israel, his relation to his God. The whole history of Israel is therefore permeated and borne along by prayer. At all its important points man is found in converse with God. This is true even when no use is made of those specific Heb. terms for to pray, such as 'āṯar or pālal, both meaning to pray, request, and the noun t^{e}pillâh, prayer. Expressions like to speak, to call or to → cry are frequently used instead. To indicate intense emotional involvement, the Hebrew used vbs. such as to groan, to sigh or to weep (→ Lament). But however urgently he prayed, the OT suppliant never forgot that he was addressing the holy, almighty God (an utter impossibility apart from God's condescending kindness and grace). This is shown by the frequent use of the vb. hištaḥ^{a}wâh which really means to prostrate oneself (before superior) (→ proskyneō), and which may therefore indicate man's customary posture in prayer, though there is also evidence of prayer being offered from a standing position. The parallel expression, to fall down on one's knees, is also used occasionally. Such phrases are intended to indicate the → humility of mind which must always characterize a man as he prays. In addition the OT contains many expressions for the prayer of praise and thanksgiving, e.g. the familiar vb. hālal, to praise, glorify, extol (hal^{e}lû-yâh, praise the Lord; yâh = Yahweh; → Amen, art. hallēlouia), and a whole range of words intensifying the idea of praise: to shout with joy, to exult, to sing (often to instrumental accompaniment; → Thank).

In the LXX proseuchomai normally translates pālal in the hithpael form which is the standard Heb. vb. meaning to pray: Gen. 20:7, 17; 1 Sam. 1:10, 12, 26 f.; 2:1; 7:5; 8:6; 12:19, 23; 2 Sam. 7:27; 1 Ki. 8:28 ff., 33, 35, 42, 44, 48, 54; 13:6; 2 Ki. 4:33; 6:17 f.; 19:15, 20; 1 Chr. 17:25; 2 Chr. 6:19 ff., 24, 26, 32, 34, 38; 7:1, 14; 30:18; 32:20, 24; 33:13; Ezr. 10:1; Neh. 1:4, 6; 2:4; 4:9(3); Pss. 5:2; 32(31):6; 72(71):15; Jon. 2:2; 4:2; Isa. 16:12; 37:15, 21; 38:2; 44:17; 45:14, 20; Jer. 7:6; 11:14; 14:11; 29(36):12; 32(39):16; 37(44):3; 42(49):2, 4, 20; Dan. 9:4, 20. It translates pālal in the piel in 1 Sam. 2:25 and the noun t^epillâh, prayer, in Ps. 109 (108):4. It translates the vb. 'āṭar, entreat, in Exod. 10:17 and Jdg. 13:8; nāpal, fall, in the hithpael in 2 Esd. 10:1; the Aram. ṣ^ela', pray, in Dan. 6:11(10) and 2 Esd. 6:10. It is without Heb. equivalent in 1 Sam. 14:45; Tob. 3:1; 6:17; 8:4 f.; 12:12; Jud. 11:17; Est. 5:1; Wis. 13:17; Bar. 1:11, 13; Dan. 3:24 f. LXX; Dan.Th. 9:21; 1 Macc. 3:44; 4:30; 7:40; 11:71; 2 Macc. 1:6; 20:10; 12:44; 15:14; 3 Macc. 6:1; 4 Macc. 4:11.

The noun proseuchē normally translates the corresponding Heb. noun t^epillâh, prayer: 2 Sam. 7:27; 1 Ki. 8:28 f., 38, 45, 49, 54; 9:3; 2 Ki. 19:4; 20:5; 2 Chr. 6:19 f., 29, 39; 7:12, 15; 30:27; 33:18 f.; Neh. 1:6, 11; 11:17; Pss. 4:1; 6:9; 17(16):1; 35(34):13; 39(38):12; 42(41):8; 54(53):2; 55(54):1; 61(60):1; 64(63):1; 65(64):2; 66(65):19 f.; 69(68):13; 80(79):4; 84(83):8; 86(85):6; 88(87):2, 13; 102(101):1, 17; 109(108):7; 141(140):2, 5; 143(142):1; Prov. 28:9; Jon. 2:8; Hab. 3:1; Isa. 38:5; 56:7; Jer. 11:14; Lam. 3:8, 44; Dan. 9:3, 17, 21. In addition it occurs in the titles of various Pss. (17[16]; 86[85]; 90[89]; 102[101]; 142[141]). It translates qôl, voice, in Pss. 64(63):1; 130(129):2; t^eḥinnâh, supplication for favour, 1 Ki. 8:45; 2 Chr. 6:35; and Dan. 9:20; and taḥ^anûn, supplication (for favour) in Dan. 9:18. It is without Heb. equivalent in 1 Ki. 9:3; Tob. 3:16; 12:8, 12, 15; 13:1; Jud. 12:6; 13:3, 10; Pss. 61(60):5; 88(87):14; Wis. 18:21; Sir. 3:5; 34(31):26; 35(32):17; 39:5, 7; 51:1, 13; Hab. 3:16; Isa. 38:9; 60:7; 1 Macc. 3:46; 5:33; 7:37; 12:11; 2 Macc. 1:23 f.; 3 Macc. 6:16; 7:20.

2. Prayer in the OT is characterized by being directed to the one God, who is both the God of Israel and at the same time the Lord of the nations and of the whole earth, having revealed himself as such to his people (1 Ki. 8:22 ff.; 2 Ki. 19:15). Accordingly the Israelite always prays first as a member of his people, not as an individual (Pss. 35:18; 111:1), and he knows what to expect of God. He knows too that God hears his prayer, and answers it if it is in agreement with his will (Pss. 3:4; 18:6; 65:2; Jer. 29:12). He prays therefore with firm confidence in God (Ps. 17:6 f.); he experiences temptation and doubt, to be sure, but these are possible only against the background of such confidence. He knows too that in the eyes of a holy God there is no question of his prayers counting as a work of piety which God then has to honour with his blessing. (Contrast the prayer of → Elijah, the prophet of Yahweh, with that of the priests of Baal, for whom it is nothing more than a technique, aimed at prevailing on their god by means of a torrent of words, 1 Ki. 18:26, 29.) He also knows that God is a person. Therefore, he prays in a thoroughly personal and specific fashion, aware that he is actually speaking to God, not merely invoking some dumb deity (Gen. 28:22–33; 1 Sam. 1:10 f.; Ps. 77:1–11). Such speaking to God can become a veritable wrestling with God, especially in the case of intercession (Exod. 32:11–14; Num. 14:13–22; Deut. 9:26–29; Neh. 1:4–11). Typical are the weapons with which the suppliant fights: he appeals to God's → promises, reminds him of his deeds of salvation in the past, particularly of his election of Israel and their deliverance from Egypt; he appeals to God's honour and → glory and to his very nature, which is one of forbearance, → grace and → mercy (cf. the last mentioned passages).

In addition, the suppliant thanks God for the miracles he has wrought in the history of his people (Pss. 105; 106) and asks for further guidance and continued deliverance from all possible distresses. Prayer and thanksgiving can cover practically all the material and spiritual needs both of the individual and of the community, their whole life acquiring through prayer a lasting and intensive Godward orientation.

As an aid to prayer mention is sometimes made of → fasting (Neh. 1:4; Ezr. 8:23; Joel 1:14; 2:12, 15–17; Jer. 14:12), probably as an expression of that humble penitence before God which should lie at the root of all prayer.

3. Prayer is not restricted to any special place of worship but can take place anywhere (Gen. 24:26 f., 63), though of course it is specially fostered in the early sanctuaries and later in the → temple at Jerusalem.

4. The OT distinguishes between true and false prayer in the following manner. True prayer is of the → heart, i.e. it involves the whole person and means that a man comes before God with his whole being and in an attitude of humble submission (Jer. 29:12 ff.). False prayer, by contrast, is offered merely "with the lips", i.e. a man merely utters (or simply repeats) words and phrases with no self-surrender or offering of his "heart" and life to God, except perhaps as a pure formality, with no real intention of fulfilling the will of God as revealed, e.g. in his commandments (Isa. 1:15 f.; 29:13; Amos 5:23 f.).

In this same context, the OT also speaks of hindrances to prayer, which make an answer difficult or even impossible to obtain, e.g. disobedience (Isa. 1:15–17; 59:1 f.; Deut. 1:43–45), lovelessness towards one's fellowmen (Isa.58:3–10), injustice (Mic. 3:1–4). These characteristics of OT prayer are all exemplified with especial clarity in the Book of Psalms, a unique collection of prayers for use in public worship and by the individual.

5. Prayer also played a large part in the piety of Rabbinic Judaism. Of all devout exercises, fasting and praying were the most prominent, but although the texts of prayers found at Qumran indicate the great variety of prayers, both as regards forms and content (see especially the hymns, 1QH; → Song), which were still in use at the time of Christ, → Pharisaic orthodoxy had been extending its systematization, from the closing years of the first cent. B.C. onwards to include the piety of prayer. This applied not merely to the public prayers offered in the synagogue, which included the ancient Shema (šᵉma'; Deut. 6:4 ff.; → Hear, art. akouō, NT 3) and the Eighteen Benedictions (šᵉmōneh 'eśrēh; 18 petitions, referring particularly to the salvation of the individual and of the community) but also to private prayer, e.g. on the left arm and the forehead there were to be prayer straps, to which were attached small cylinders containing papyrus scrolls with Bible texts on them – an erroneously literal compliance with Exod. 13:9, 16; Deut. 6:8; 11:18; cf. Matt. 23:5; → Guard, art. phylassō, NT 4. The prayers handed down from individual rabbis prove to be remarkably uniform. The idea of achieving righteousness dominated the whole of their piety and left its imprint upon prayer.

H. Schönweiss

6. The major element in the daily rabbinic liturgy was the Shema which consisted of three OT passages (Deut. 6:4–9; 11:13–21; Num. 15:37–41). It was said both morning and evening with set benedictions (two preceding and one following in the morning; two preceding and two following in the evening; cf. Berakoth 1:4; text in R. A. Stewart, Rabbinic Theology, 1961, 178–83). In addition, the Tephillah or Eighteen Benedictions was said thrice daily. Much of this material was incorporated in the Hebrew Prayer Book and is still used in the Synagogue (Hebrew texts in D. W. Staerk, Altjüdische liturgische Gebete, 1910; cf. S. Singer, ed., Authorised Daily Prayer Book of the United Congregations of the British Empire, 1935 and numerous editions).

The Eighteen Benedictions have been preserved in the form which the Pharisees gave them after the fall of Jerusalem in A.D. 70 (cf. petition 14), but they are considerably older, and W. Förster holds that they give "a picture of the things that were precious to all Jews in Jesus' day" (Palestinian Judaism in New Testament Times, 1964, 156). The following translation is that given by R. A. Stewart, op. cit., 183–86, based on the text given by O. Holtzmann in G. Beer and O. Holtzmann, eds, Die Mischna, Text, Übersetzung und Erklärung, 1912, which he holds to be more accurate than that of Staerk.

O Lord, open thou my lips, and my mouth shall show forth thy praise (Ps. 51:17).

1. Blessed art thou, O Lord our God, the God of our fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, the great, mighty and revered God, the Most High God, owner of heaven and earth, our Shield and the Shield of our fathers, our confidence from generation to generation. Blessed art thou, O Lord, the Shield of Abraham.

2. Thou art mighty, bringing low the proud, strong, and the judge of the ruthless, living for evermore and raising the dead; making the wind to return and the dew to fall; nourishing the living and making alive the dead; bringing forth salvation for us in the blinking of an eyelid. Blessed art thou O Lord, who makest alive the dead.

3. Holy art thou, and revered is thy name. There is none other God beside thee. Blessed art thou, O Lord, the holy God.

4. Favour us, O our Father, with knowledge of thee, and with understanding and sagacity from thy Torah. Blessed art thou, O Lord, who favourest with knowledge.

5. Bring us back, O Lord, unto thee, and may we return. Renew our days as aforetime. Blessed art thou, who takest delight in repentance.

6. Pardon us, our Father, for we have sinned against thee. Wipe out and remove our transgressions from before thine eyes, for great are thy mercies. Blessed art thou, O Lord, who aboundest in forgiving.

7. Look on our afflictions and defend our cause, and redeem us for thy Name's sake. Blessed art thou, O Lord, the Redeemer of Israel.

8. Heal us, O Lord our God, from the affliction of our hearts and remove sorrow and sighing from us, and bring healing for our stripes. Blessed art thou, the healer of the sick of thy people Israel.

9. Bless this year to us for good, O Lord our God, in every kind of its increase, and bring speedily near the year of the fulfilment of our redemption. Grant the dew and the rain on the face of the earth, and make full the world from the storehouse of thy goodness. Grant blessing on the works of our hands. Blessed art thou, O Lord, who blessest the years.

10. Blow on a great trumpet for our liberty, and raise a standard for the gathering together of our exiles. Blessed art thou, O Lord, who gatherest together the banished ones of thy people Israel.

11. Restore our judges as at the first, and our counsellors as in the beginning, and mayest thou alone reign over us. Blessed art thou, O Lord, who lovest judgment.

12. For apostates let there be no hope, and the kingship of presumption mayest thou speedily destroy in our days. May Christians and heretics perish in a moment, may they be blotted out from the book of the living, and not be written down with the righteous. Blessed art thou, O Lord, that humblest the proud.

13. On righteous proselytes may thy compassions be moved, and grant us a good reward with them that do thy will. Blessed art thou, O Lord, a confidence for the righteous.

14. Have compassion, O Lord our God, in thine abounding compassion on Israel thy people, and on Jerusalem, and on Zion the tabernacle of thy glory, on thy Holy Place and on thy Temple, and on thy kingdom of the House of David. Blessed art thou, O Lord, the builder of Jerusalem. [Note: The wording offers clear presumption of a date prior to A.D. 70. The form used today is expressed a little differently.]

15. Hearken, O Lord our God, to the voice of our prayer, and have compassion on us, for thou art a gracious and compassionate God. Blessed art thou, O Lord, who hearest prayer.

16. Be pleased, O Lord our God, to dwell in Zion, and thy servants will serve thee in Jerusalem. Blessed art thou, O Lord, whom we will serve in fear.

17. We give thee thanks. Thou art the Lord our God and the God of our fathers. For all good things, for grace and compassion which thou has dealt out unto us, and unto our fathers before us – and if we say, Our foot has slipped, the Lord will sustain us – blessed be thou, O Lord, to thee be the praise.

18. Give thy peace to Israel thy people, and unto thy city and thy possession. Bless us, each and every one. Blessed be thou, O Lord, who makest peace.

The first three petitions give praise to Israel's God. The reference to the → resurrection in the second petition indicates Pharisaic influence. The prayers indicate a strong desire to know God and to do his will. There is repeated petition for redemption which, however, is conceived in terms of an alteration of the present world-situation in restoring the fortunes of Israel and the restoration of Jerusalem

(14th, 16th, 18th). But there is no mention of a new covenant, a new heart, a new heaven and earth or the last judgment. This suggests that the ideas which had been developed in Judaism through the Hasidic movement are lacking (cf. W. Förster, op. cit., 157). There is no prayer for the repentance of the apostates or mention of the Gentiles turning to the God of Israel. The twelfth petition which appears to have been inserted after A.D. 70 shows the deep-rooted hostility to Christians (or Nazarenes, as the text calls them). However, this reference was subsequently removed. Förster notes a similar tendency in the Psalms of Solomon, a Pharisaic work consisting of eighteen psalms dated in the post Maccabean period c. 70–40 B.C. (ibid.). Here the pious and the ungodly have both sinned. But the former has done so without intent; he cleaves to God, accepts his discipline and remains righteous; whereas the latter does not (see especially Pss.Sol. 9:6 f.; 12:6; 16:5–13; 17:21–42; cf. ibid., 157–61; H. Braun, "Vom Erbarmen Gottes über den Gerechten. Zur Theologie der Psalmen Salomos", ZNW 43, 1950–51, 1–50). The Eighteen Benedictions clearly regard God as the sole redeemer. He alone pardons and removes transgression in his mercy (6th petition, cf. 8th, 15th), but alongside of this there is the same emphasis on the righteous that appears in Pss.Sol. (12th, 13th) and the implication that the righteous who do God's will deserve to be rewarded (13th). On rabbinic instructions regarding the use of the Shema and the Eighteen Benedictions see the Mishnah and Talmud Tractates Berakoth.

C. Brown

NT In the NT proseuchomai occurs 85 times and proseuchē 37 times, both being particularly frequent in Acts but entirely absent from the Gospel of Jn. and the Johannine Epistles. The simple vb. euchomai is found only 6 times in the NT (Acts 26:29; 27:29; Rom. 9:3; 2 Cor. 13:7, 9; Jas. 5:16; 3 Jn. 2), euchē only 3 times (Acts 18:18; 21:23; Jas. 5:15).

1. The nature and scope of prayer. (a) In the NT prayer is in all respects as it had developed in the OT. It is modelled, however, upon the praying of Jesus, to which there are repeated references (cf. 2 below), and which in its turn draws upon OT prayers and ideas. NT prayer is addressed to God or to Jesus, now called → Lord (Kyrios), those passages containing the vb. → proskyneō, to worship, being particularly significant in this connection. But proseuchesthai can also relate to Jesus (e.g. Rev. 5:8; Acts 9:34 f.; similarly in Acts 9:11, where attention is being drawn to the entirely new factor in Paul's situation). In this way the early church bears witness to the fact that it regards Jesus Christ as its Lord and its living head, who, having conquered death, is alive for evermore (→ Resurrection). Consequently one can enter into living, personal contact with him, talking with him just as one did when he was on earth (cf. Acts 9:10–16; 2 Cor. 12:8 f.). It follows that genuine prayer is not monologue but dialogue, in which the person praying is often silent in order to listen to Jesus' word and command. As in the OT, therefore, prayer is something very personal and specific, a genuine conversation with God or Jesus Christ. And since the NT believer knows God as his Father, with even greater clarity than anything his OT counterpart could have enjoyed, his praying proceeds from a childlike trust, as expressed in the typical NT form of address "Father", which Jesus taught his disciples to use (Matt. 6:6–9; Lk. 11:2; Eph. 3:14 f.; also 'abbā', the Aramaic word for Father, Rom. 8:15; Gal. 4:6). It is precisely at this point that NT prayer contrasts most sharply with that of Rabbinic Judaism. (On the significance of these passages and the contrast with Judaism → Father, arts. abba and patēr.)

(b) The suppliant's assurance that his prayers are heard (→ aiteō) is even stronger in the NT than in the OT, being grounded in an experience of God's fatherly love in Jesus Christ. Jesus explicitly strengthens this assurance, which comes from faith, by promising that the prayer will be heard (e.g. Mk. 11:24: "Believe that you have already received it"). Experiences to the contrary, i.e. that God appears not to answer prayers, must not tempt us to doubt his fatherly love or the power of prayer (cf. Jesus in Gethsemane, Matt. 26:36–46 par. Mk. 14:32–42, Lk. 22:40–46, where Jesus' passion is the Father's will).

(c) True prayer has great power. It expresses that → faith whereby the sinner is justified (Lk. 18:10, 14). It is answered with the gift of the Holy Spirit (Lk. 11:13). It clarifies the way ahead (Mk. 1:35–39). It enables the suppliant to receive and put on the whole armour of God (cf. Eph. 6:18). Paul encouraged the believer to desire spiritual → gifts (1 Cor. 14:1). It is necessary to surround all activities with prayer, especially for the perseverance of the saints and for bold and faithful witness (Eph. 6:17–20). True prayer overcomes anxieties (Phil. 4:6). But at the same time it is a fight with the powers of evil and of darkness (Rom. 15:30; Col. 4:12; cf. Matt. 6:13).

On the other hand, the NT, like the OT, warns of hindrances which can make prayer ineffectual: licentiousness and lovelessness (1 Pet. 3:7; Jas. 4:3); unbelief and doubt (Jas. 1:5–7); and an unforgiving spirit (Matt. 5:23 f.; Mk. 11:25).

(d) NT prayer can be about anything, from the smallest matter to the greatest, from the affairs of today to those of eternity. The best example of this is the Lord's Prayer (Matt. 6:9 ff. and Lk. 11:2 ff.). Here the prayer for daily bread (→ Bread, art. epiousios), which includes all our other daily needs, is flanked on the one side by prayer for the coming of God's → kingdom and for his will to be done on earth, and on the other by prayer for the forgiveness of sin, for preservation in → temptation and for deliverance from all → evil (also from the evil one; → ponēros, NT 2 (b)). It is, however, not without significance that the prayers which refer to God, his will, his kingdom and his → name stand first (→ Holy, art. hagios). In Matt. 6 as in Lk. 11 the Lord's Prayer is embedded in longer discourses concerning true prayer (Matt. 6:5–15; Lk. 11:1–13); it must be marked by simplicity, concentration, discipline, patient confidence – and obedience. (On the Lord's Prayer see especially J. Jeremias, The Prayers of Jesus, SBT Second Series 6, 1967; J. Lowe, The Lord's Prayer, 1962; and E. Lohmeyer, The Lord's Prayer, 1965.)

(e) In addition to supplication, there are, as in the OT, the following types of prayer: intercession, the efficacy of which is emphasized especially by Paul and James (Rom. 15:30; 1 Thess. 5:25; 2 Thess. 3:1; Jas. 5:14–18) and which ought to embrace all men, even enemies (Matt. 5:44); the prayer of praise and thanksgiving (→ Thank, arts. aineō and eucharisteō) and adoration, which is addressed exclusively to God himself, quite apart from his gifts whether earthly or spiritual (cf. especially Rev. 4:8–11; 5:8–14; 7:9–17; 11:15–18; 15:2 ff.; 16:5 ff.; 19:1–8; 22:3, 9). The NT frequently insists that prayer should be constant (e.g. its use of ektenōs, eagerly, fervently, constantly Acts 12:5; 1 Pet. 1:22; → Patience, art. kartereō). This amounts to saying that the Christian ought always to live in the presence of his Lord and in converse with him, and constantly to be looking to him (Col. 4:2 and passim).

The posture in prayer was either kneeling (Acts 21:5; Eph. 3:14), in which case the forehead might touch the ground (Matt. 26:39), or standing (Mk. 11:15; Lk. 18:11, 13), sometimes with uplifted hands (1 Tim. 2:8).

Communal prayer seems to have been customary in the early church, both in public worship (1 Cor. 11:4 f.; 14:13–16:26) and in smaller gatherings (Matt. 18:19, where Jesus attaches a special promise to communal prayer; Acts 2:46 f.; 12:12), though private prayer is the fountain-head of prayer in general (Matt. 6:6; Jesus frequently prayed alone: Matt. 14:23; Mk. 1:35; Lk. 5:16; 6:12; 9:18).

H. Schönweiss

2. The form of the Lord's Prayer. Set prayers certainly existed, but even here there was no rigidity, as can be seen from the fact that the Lord's Prayer is handed down in two variant forms (Matt. 6:9–13; Lk. 11:2 ff.; on this see J. Jeremias, op. cit., 87–94).

The RSV text reads:

Matt. 6:9–13	Lk. 11:2 ff.
Our Father who art in heaven,	Father,
Hallowed be thy name.	hallowed be thy name.
Thy kingdom come,	Thy kingdom come.
Thy will be done,
On earth as it is in heaven.
Give us this day our daily bread;	Give us each day our daily bread;
And forgive us our debts,	and forgive us our sins, for we
As we also have forgiven our debtors;	ourselves forgive everyone who is indebted to us;
And lead us not into temptation,	and lead us not into temptation.
But deliver us from evil.

Certain manuscripts add to the text of Matt. various additions such as: "For thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory, forever. Amen" (RSV mg.). But these are all relatively late and not original. They do not appear in the early and important representatives of the Alexandrian, Western and pre-Caesarean types of text or the early commentaries on the Lord's Prayer by Tertullian, Origen and Cyprian. The ascription in its threefold form was probably composed to adapt the prayer for liturgical use in the early church (perhaps on the model of 1 Chr. 29:11 ff.) (cf. Metzger, 16 f.) The differences of punctuation in the above texts and the use of capitals reflect, of course, the translators' understanding, and not the original manuscripts. But certain differences are at once apparent. Lk. gives "Father" reflecting the Gk. pater and the Aram. 'abbā' which may be construed as "Dear Father", whereas Matt. gives the pious and reverent form of Palestinian invocation. Whereas Matt. and Lk. agree in giving the first two "thou-petitions", Matt. gives a third. In Matt. the third of the "we-petitions" has an antithesis ("But deliver us from evil").

Jeremias points out that the shorter form of Lk. is completely contained in the longer form of Matt. He, therefore, regards it as probable that the Matthaean form is an expanded one in view of the general tendency of liturgical texts to grow by expansion (op. cit., 89 f.). Moreover, no one would have dared to shorten a sacred text like the Lord's Prayer and leave out two petitions if they had formed part of the original tradition. Jeremias also points out that "in Matthew the stylistic structure is more consistently carried through" (op. cit., 90). This is reflected in the way the RSV sets out the text of Matt. in verses, whereas it gives the text of Lk. in continuous prose. In Matt. there is a parallelism in which three "thou-petitions" are followed by three "we-petitions". But in Matt. and Lk. there is the same basic order which puts God first and man second. This, in fact, reflects the order of the two great commandments and the Shema (cf. Matt. 22:34–40; Mk. 12:28–34; Lk. 10:25–28). A further point which Jeremias regards as favouring the originality of Lk.'s version is its reflection of the word abba, Father, which was characteristic of Jesus.

Jeremias concludes that Lk.'s form represents that of the Gentile church and Matt.'s that of the Jewish-Christian church, and that "The Gentile-Christian church has handed down the Lord's Prayer without change, whereas the Jewish-Christian church, which lived in a world of rich liturgical tradition and used a variety of prayer forms, has enriched the Lord's Prayer liturgically" (op. cit., 91). A similar form to Matt.'s with insignificant variations is given in the Didache 8:2. At the same time Jeremias observes that, "when one attempts to put back the Lord's Prayer into Aramaic, Jesus' mother tongue, the conclusion begins to emerge that, like the Psalter, it is couched in liturgical language" (op. cit., 93; cf. C. C. Torrey, "The Translations made from the Original Aramaic Gospels", in Studies in the History of Religions presented to Crawford Howell Toy, 1912, 309–17; and The Four Gospels, 1933, 292; E. Littmann, "Torreys Buch über die vier Evangelien", ZNW 34, 1935, 20–34; C. F. Burney, The Poetry of our Lord, 1925, 112 f.; G. Dalman, Die Worte Jesu, I, 1930², 283–365, appendix on "Das Vaterunser" which is not in ET; K. G. Kuhn, Achtzehngebet und Vaterunser und der Reim, WUNT 1, 1950, 32 f.). "We should note three features especially: parallelism, the two-beat rhythm, and the rhyme in lines two and four, which is scarcely accidental" (ibid.). This suggests, however, that it is not only Matt.'s version which had an original liturgical form, but that Lk.'s had one as well.

A position diametrically opposed to that of Jeremias is argued by M. D. Goulder in Midrash and Lection in Matthew, 1974, 296–301, which modifies his earlier article "The Composition of the Lord's Prayer", JTS New Series 14, 1963, 32–45. He instances cases of liturgical shortening from church history and claims that Lk. often shortens the Marcan teaching that he takes over and is regularly shorter than Matt. in Q-passages. Goulder claims that "what we have in Matthew is a prayer composed by the evangelist from the traditions of prayers of Jesus in Mark and the teaching on prayer in Mark, amplified from the Exodus context of the Sermon, and couched in Matthaean language. What we have in Luke is a version pruned of the rounded Matthaean periods and slightly obvious antitheses, and couched in Lucan language" (op. cit., 298).

Clearly Goulder is right in seeing parallels with Mk. There is an obvious reiteration of the petition for forgiveness. The only teaching on prayer in Mk. follows the saying about the mountain being cast into the sea: "Therefore I tell you, whatever you ask in prayer, believe that you receive it, and you will. And whenever you stand praying, forgive, if you have anything against anyone; so that your Father also who is in heaven may forgive you your trespasses" (Mk. 11:25 f.). The saying about the mountain occurs in Matt. 21:21 in connection, as it is in Mk., with the withering of the fig tree (→ Fruit, art. sykē). In both cases it illustrates what God can do in response to → faith, and is occasioned by what happened to the fig tree. But the saying about forgiveness is omitted by Matt., evidently because it was already contained in the Lord's Prayer.

Goulder suggests parallels with Jesus' prayer in Gethsemane inferring that Mk.'s account supplied the source materials for the address of God as abba, Father (Mk. 14:36; cf. Matt. 26:39; Lk. 22:42), a term which had passed into the Pauline churches and was used ecstatically in prayer (Gal. 4:6; Rom. 8:15). Matt. renders this as pater mou, my Father, and Lk. simply as pater, Father, which is the way that he normally records Jesus' address to God (cf. Lk. 15:12; 18:21; 23:34, 46). This, Goulder suggests, explains why God is addressed simply as "Father" in Lk.'s version of the Lord's Prayer (op. cit., 299). A further parallel with the Lord's Prayer is the Gethsemane prayer: "yet not what I will, but what thou wilt" (Mk. 14:36; cf. Matt. 26:39; Lk. 22:42). Moreover, Jesus not only prayed for himself, but he also told the disciples to pray that they enter not into → temptation (Mk. 14:38; cf. Matt. 26:41; Lk. 22:46).

In Matt.'s version the Lord's Prayer consists of two halves each consisting of three petitions: three for the honour of God and three for our needs. It is widely held that Matt. sees the prayer in the context of a new Sinai, since he records it in the Sermon on the Mount with Jesus as the new lawgiver. Each half of the Lord's Prayer opens with a petition recalling Exod. The first petition is a Christian restatement of the Third Commandment (Matt. 6:9 par. Lk. 11:2; cf. Exod. 20:7; Deut. 5:11). It states positively what the Third Commandment states negatively. But in so doing it not only precludes taking the name of God in vain; it also secures what is implied in the First and Second Commandments concerning other gods and graven images (Exod. 20:3–6; Deut. 5:7–10). The fourth petition also recalls the coming to Sinai in God's provision of the manna (Matt. 6:11; Lk. 11:3; cf. Exod. 16:15; Num. 11:4–9; Deut. 8:3; Ps. 78:24 f.). On the significance of "daily" → Bread, art. epiousios. It may well imply provision for one's immediate needs, as in the exodus wanderings, and also provision in the coming kingdom symbolized by the messianic banquet. But apart from the first and fourth petitions, it may well be that the remaining petitions are a restatement of the Ten Commandments and the exodus wilderness themes. The petitions for the coming of God's kingdom and for the doing of God's will extend and supersede what the Fourth Commandment says about the → sabbath (Exod. 20:8–11; Deut. 5:12–15) – which, in a sense, anticipates the kingdom as the reign of God – and the remaining Commandments specifically directed at personal relationships (honouring one's parents, killing, adultery, stealing, bearing false witness and coveting, Exod. 20:12–17; Deut. 5:16–21). Similarly the fifth and sixth petitions for forgiveness and avoidance of temptation have retrospective and prospective bearing on the whole range of the Ten Commandments. These are themes which are interwoven with the history of Israel in general and the wilderness wanderings in particular. Thus Deut. 8:2 f. declares: "And you shall remember all the way which the LORD your God has led you these forty years in the wilderness, that he might humble you, testing you to know what was in your heart, whether you would keep his commandments or not. And he humbled you and let you hunger and fed you with manna, which you did not know, nor did your fathers know; that he might make you know that man does not live by bread alone, but that man lives by everything that proceeds out of the mouth of the LORD" (cf. Matt. 4:4; Lk. 4:4). What the Lord's Prayer does is to apply the themes by which ancient Israel lived to the life of the new Israel. It is thus a fulfilment of the Ten Commandments and the exodus themes (cf. Matt. 5:17 f.). At the same time it transforms the themes from external commandments into petitions with which the one who prays personally identifies himself. And thus the law may be said to be written in his heart (cf. Jer. 31:33) as in the new covenant.

Goulder's thesis is that "Matthew has thus composed a prayer that may properly be called the Lord's Prayer, since the greater part of it is his own prayers, and teaching on prayer" (op. cit., 300). But if Matt. composed it, how did substantially the same prayer find its way into Lk.? Few scholars would subscribe to the view that Lk. was dependent on Matt., and in any case Goulder seems to invoke the Q-hypothesis of a source common to Matt. and Lk. at certain points. If the Lord's Prayer was in Q (and thus presumably ascribed to Jesus by a historically earlier source), it could not have been the free composition of Matt. (although this would not in itself preclude the possibility of its being the earlier composition of someone else). Clearly Goulder has shown that the argument about the length of the respective versions is in itself inconclusive. Jeremias admits that "we must be cautious with our conclusions. The possibility remains that Jesus himself spoke the 'Our Father' on different occasions in a slightly differing form, a shorter one and a longer one" (op. cit., 91). This point is, of course, supported by the fact that Matt. and Lk. present the prayer in quite different contexts (Matt. in the Sermon on the Mount; and Lk. as Jesus' response to the disciples' request to be taught to pray after they had seen him praying).

The most positive aspect of Goulder's treatment is the way in which he draws attention to the way in which phrases and similar thoughts in the Lord's Prayer are to be found elsewhere and to the way in which the Lord's Prayer takes up themes associated with Sinai and the wilderness wanderings. In the above discussion we have gone further than Goulder in suggesting that it is not only the first and fourth petitions which recall this, but that the entire prayer is a restatement of the Ten Commandments in the form of a prayer and that the affinities with the wilderness wanderings are by no means confined to the petition for daily bread. Goulder allows that the various elements of the prayer are to be found elsewhere in the words of Jesus. What this suggests is not that the prayer was the work of the creative imagination of Matt. (which entails the difficulties already noted), but that the Lord's Prayer is not to be thought of in isolation from the practice and teachings that Jesus lived and died by. Not only is it possible to conceive (as Jeremias allows) of two forms of the prayer given by Jesus on separate occasions. It is also possible to conceive of how different themes found in the prayer recur in different situations. Thus the petition regarding temptation was not only relevant to the disciples in Gethsemane; it was also the guiding principle in Jesus' own wilderness temptation where it coincides with the thought of the provision of bread, as in the wilderness wanderings. In the way in which the Lord's Prayer takes up the Ten Commandments and the life of the pilgrim people of God which Jesus also took up and taught, the prayer is integral to the life and teaching of Jesus.

C. Brown

3. Prayer in individual NT writers. (a) The frequent use of proseuchomai in the Lucan writings is striking. For Luke prayer is a basic expression of Christian faith and life, and Jesus is the very model of how to pray aright (Lk. 11:1). All the important points in the lives of Jesus, his apostles and the members of his church are marked by prayer to God; all important decisions are made with prayer (Lk. 3:21 f.; 6:12 f.; 9:18, 28 ff.; 22:44; 23:34; Acts 1:14, 24 f.; 6:6; 9:11; 10:9; 13:3). That prayer was experienced as genuine conversation with God is clear from the fact that those concerned often receive quite definite instructions from God (e.g. Acts 10:9 ff., 30 ff.; 13:2).

(b) In Jn. the euchomai word-group is entirely absent. In referring to Christ's prayers, Jn. uses the ordinary words for speaking and talking, qualifying them only with the statement that Jesus lifted up his eyes to heaven (Jn. 11:14; 17:1). Moreover, it is noticeable that Jesus almost always speaks to his heavenly Father in the immediate situation, i.e. in full view of others and without retiring expressly for prayer (this is especially clear in Jn. 12:27 f.). In this way Jn. indicates Jesus' continual fellowship with God; in his case praying did not require a special act, since his whole life was one of prayer. His unique relationship to God is emphasized by the fact that he never prays in company with his disciples.

(c) Paul attaches special importance to the fact that true prayer is wrought by the → Spirit (Rom. 8:15, 26; Gal. 4:6). In both passages apart from Rom. 8:26 where the vb. is proseuchomai, Paul uses krazō, to → cry, in order to express that freedom, joy and confidence in prayer which spring from our awareness of being God's sons. In other words, such prayer does not originate in any power possessed by man and can never be considered as a meritorious work. Like faith itself, from which it stems and with which in fact it is practically identical, it is a gift from above (cf. Eph. 6:18, praying in the Spirit). To Paul, prayer is ultimately the indwelling, energizing → Spirit speaking with God himself, who "is the Spirit" (2 Cor. 3:17; cf. Jn. 4:23 f.; Rom. 8:14). Thus prayer is not dependent for its efficacy on human eloquence or on any particular frame of mind. The apostle emphasizes rather that assurance of salvation is both evidenced and increased by Spirit-wrought prayer (Rom. 8:15, 16). A similar idea is expressed elsewhere, when he speaks of his thanksgiving being offered "through Christ" (Rom. 1:8; 7:25).

Paul also refers to a kind of Spirit-filled prayer which transcends the limitations of human speech and understanding: the so-called speaking in tongues or praying in the Spirit (1 Cor. 14:14–16). But he very definitely considers prayer which is intelligible to the hearers to have greater value than prayer offered in tongues (1 Cor. 14:19), because only when others can give assent is the → church edified as a body (→ House, art. → oikos). The fact that Jn. too regards Spirit-wrought prayer as the new departure in Christian praying, is shown by Jn. 4:23 f. (to worship "in spirit and in truth"; → proskyneō NT 4).

A detailed study of Paul's prayers has been made by G. P. Wiles in Paul's Intercessory Prayers: The Significance of the Intercessory Prayer Passages in the Letters of St Paul, Society for New Testament Studies Monograph Series 24, 1974.

Wiles notes the following prayer passages in the Pauline epistle: (i) Doxology (using doxazō, glorify) Rom. 1:21, 23; 4:20; 11:36; 15:6, 9; 16:25 ff.; 1 Cor. 6:20; 10:31; 2 Cor. 1:20; 4:15; 9:13; Gal. 1:5, 24; Eph. 3:20 f.; Phil. 1:11; 2:11; 4:20; (ii) Praise (using exomologeomai, confess; epainos, praise) Rom. 14:11; 15:9 ff.; Eph. 1:6, 12, 14; Phil. 1:11; 2:11); (iii) Blessing (eulogeomai, bless) Rom. 1:25; 9:5; 1 Cor. 14:16; 2 Cor. 1:3 ff.; 11:31; Eph. 1:3); (iv) Worship (proskyneō, worship) 1 Cor. 14:25; (v) Hymns, community singing, psalms, etc. (psalmos, hymn, psalm; psallō, sing; hymnos, hymn, song; ōdē, song) 1 Cor. 15, 26; Eph. 5:19; Col. 3:16; (vi) Thanksgiving (eucharistia, thankfulness, gratitude; eucharistos, thankful; eucharisteō, give thanks) Rom. 1:8 ff., 21; 6:17 f.; 7:25; 14:6; 1 Cor. 1:4 ff., 14; 10:30; 11:24; 14:6 f., 18; 15:57; 2 Cor. 2:14; 4:15; 8:16 f.; 9:11 f.; Eph. 1:15 ff.; 5:4, 20; Phil. 1:3 ff.; 4:6; Col. 1:3 ff.; 2:5, 7; 3:15 ff.; 4:2; 1 Thess. 1:2 ff.; 2:13 ff.; 3:9; 5:18; 2 Thess. 1:3 ff.; 2:13; Phlm. 4 ff.; (vii) Boasting in Christ or before God (kauchaomai, boast, and cognates) Rom. 5:2 f., 11; 15:17 ff.; 1 Cor. 1:29 ff.; 2 Cor. 1:12 ff.; 7:4; and frequently in chs. 10–12; Phil. 1:26; 2:16; 3:3; 1 Thess. 2:19; (viii) Petition for self (deomai, ask, request, beg; proseuchomai, pray) Rom. 1:10; 7:24; 9:3; 1 Cor. 14:13; 2 Cor. 12:8; 1 Thess. 3:10, though apart from 2 Cor. 12:8, these passages are problematical; (ix) Intercessory prayer for others, including blessings and curses (hyperentynchanō, intercede, Rom. 8:26) Rom. 1:7b; 9 f.; 8:15 f., 23, 26 f., 34; 9:1–3; 10:1; 11:2–5, 12:12c, 14; 15:5 f.; 13:30–33; 16:20a, 20b; 1 Cor. 1:3, 8; 2:9–16; 5:3 ff.; 11:10; 15:29; 16:22a, 23; 2 Cor. 1:2, 7, 11, 14; 13:7, 9b, 11b, 14; Gal. 1:3, 8 f.; 4:6; 6:16, 18; Eph. 1:2, 16–23; 3:14–19; 6:18 ff., 23 f.; Phil. 1:2, 4, 9 ff., 19 f.; 4:6 f., 9b, 23; Col. 1:2b, 3b, 9–14, 29; 2:1–3, 5; 4:2 ff., 12, 18b, 18c; 1 Thess. 1:1b, 2 f.; 3:10–13; 5:17 f., 23, 24b, 25, 28; 2 Thess. 1:2, 11 f.; 2:16 f.; 3:1–3, 5, 16, 18; Phlm. 3, 4, 6; (x) General prayer – type not specified (proseuchomai, pray; laleō tō theō, speak to God) 1 Cor. 11:4 f., 13; 14:14 f., 28; (epikaleō, call upon) Rom. 10:12 ff.; 1 Cor. 1:2; 2 Cor. 1:23.

Intercessory prayer is referred to in the following passages: Rom. 1:7b, 9 f.; 8:15 f., 23, 26 f., 34; 9:3; 10:1; 11:2–5; 12:12c, 14; 15:5 f., 13, 30 ff., 33; 16:20; 1 Cor. 1:3, 8 f.; 2:9–16; 5:3 ff.; 11:10; 15:29; 16:22 f.; 2 Cor. 1:2, 7, 11; 9:14; 13:7, 9, 11, 14; Gal. 1:3, 8 f.; 4:6; 6:16, 18; Phil. 1:2, 4, 9 ff., 19 f.; 4:6 f., 9, 19; 1 Thess. 1:1 ff.; 3:10–13; 5:17 f., 23; 5:24 f., 28; Phlm. 3, 4, 6, 22, 25; Eph. 1:2, 16–23; 3:14–19; 6:18 ff.; 6:23 f.; Col. 1:2 f., 9–14; 1:29–2:3; 2:5; 4:2 ff., 12, 18; 2 Thess. 1:2, 11 f.; 2:16 f.; 3:1–3, 5, 16, 18. In addition to this, Wiles draws attention to the liturgically oriented patterns of the endings of the Pauline epistles. (For full classified tables of the various kinds of prayer, see op. cit., 297–302.)

Whilst recognizing that no hard and fast line can be drawn between thanksgivings, intercessions and representative corporate supplications, Wiles nevertheless insists that intercessory prayer forms a significant feature of Paul's writings in which the one who prays "is concerned as mediator and intercessor before God, principally for the needs of others" (op. cit., 293). An important feature here is the wish-prayer which may be described as "the expression of a desire that God take action regarding the person(s) mentioned in the wish" (op. cit., 22). Thus in Rom. 15:13 Paul writes: "May the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing, so that by the power of the Holy Spirit you may abound in hope" (cf. also Rom. 15:5 f.; 1 Thess. 3:11 ff.; 5:23 f.; 2 Thess. 2:16 f.; 3:5, 16; 2 Tim. 16, 18; 2:25;

4:16; Heb. 13:20 f.; for a full list see op. cit., 299 f.; for discussion of their form, background and function, op. cit., 22–107). Also significant are the prayer reports, where at the beginning of most of his letters Paul assures his readers "not only of his continual thanksgivings for them, but also of his constant intercessions on their behalf, and he indicates briefly some of the contents of his prayers" (op. cit., 156). Thus in Phlm. 4 ff. he writes: "I thank my God always when I remember you in my prayers, . . . and I pray that the sharing of your faith may promote the knowledge of all the good that is ours in Christ" (cf. Rom. 1:9 f.; Phil. 1:4, 9 ff.; 1 Thess. 1:2 f.; 3:10; 2 Cor. 1:7; Eph. 1:16–23; Cor. 1:3, 9–14; 2 Thess. 1:1 ff.; for discussion, op. cit., 156–258). Such prayer reports may also occur in the body of letters (Rom. 9:3; 1 Cor. 5:3; 2 Cor. 9:14; 13:7, 9; Col. 1:29–2:3, 5; 4:12). As far as the wish-prayers and prayer reports are concerned each in its own way epitomizes "the dominant message of the letter", underlines its central concerns, and stands at a strategic location in the letter (op. cit., 293).

While immediate concerns shape the prayers, they are "grounded in and directed by the gospel of Christ" (op. cit., 294). At the same time they are infused by warm personal feeling and "unbounded expectation". Paul's eschatological perspectives add increased urgency. "In his prayers he was always conscious of living 'before God', already in the last days with parousia and judgment close ahead, dominated by the belief that his readers and he would stand shortly at the judgment seat of Christ" (ibid.). But the prayers also indicate Paul's concern for mutual intercession, reconciliation and unity throughout the church. "Prayer buttressed all his mission work – in advance of his visits, during them, and after he had departed. All his plans were conceived under the constant sense of the guidance and will of God" (op. cit., 296). Sometimes the prayers are characterized by a tension between confident thanksgiving and anxious supplication, but invariably they lead back to thanksgiving in view of mercies already given.

(d) Jas. 5:13 ff. merits special mention. On the one hand, it is laid down that a Christian's whole life, the good times as well as the bad, should be lived in an atmosphere of prayer, i.e. that the Christian should lay before God everything that happens to him, so that each new experience is suffused with prayer. On the other hand, in cases of sickness, prayer is to be accompanied by the laying on of hands, anointing and confession of sins. Here the laying on of → hands (implicit in the phrase "let them pray over him") and the → anointing with → oil, being outward actions, are considered to be tangible, readily intelligible expressions of prayer for the benefit of the sick individual, while confession of sins is made in order to remove any hindrances to prayer (→ Heal).

4. Lastly, in one passage only (Acts 16:13, 16) proseuchē means a place of prayer.

H. Schönweiss, C. Brown

προσκυνέω

προσκυνέω (proskyneō), worship, do obeisance to, prostrate oneself, do reverence to; προσκυνητής (proskynētēs), a worshipper.

CL The basic meaning of proskyneō, in the opinion of most scholars, is to kiss. The prefix indicates a connection with cultic practices going back beyond Gk.

history. On Egyptian reliefs worshippers are represented with outstretched hand throwing a kiss to (pros-) the deity. Among the Greeks the vb. is a technical term for the adoration of the gods, meaning to fall down, prostrate oneself, adore on one's knees. Probably it came to have this meaning because in order to kiss the earth (i.e. the earth deity) or the image of a god, one had to cast oneself on the ground. Later proskyneō was also used in connection with the deification of rulers and the Roman emperor cult. In addition to the external act of prostrating oneself in worship, proskyneō can denote the corresponding inward attitude of reverence and humility.

OT In the overwhelming majority of cases in the LXX proskyneō translates the Heb. šāḥâh in the hithpael, meaning to bow down, and is used both of bowing down before men and of worship: Gen. 18:2; 19:1; 22:5; 23:7, 12; 24:16, 48, 52; 27:29; 33:3, 6 f., 9 f.; 42:6; 43:28; 47:31; 48:12; 49:8; Exod. 4:31; 11:8; 12:27; 18:7; 20:5; 23:24; 24:1; 32:8; 33:10; 34:8, 14; Lev. 26:1; Num. 22:31; 25:2; Deut. 4:19; 5:9; 8:19; 11:16; 17:3; 26:10; 29:25(26); 30:17; Jos. 23:7, 16; Jdg. 2:12, 17, 19; 7:15; Ruth 2:10; 1 Sam. 1:3, 19; 2:36; 15:25, 30 f.; 20:41; 24:9; 25:23, 41; 28:14; 2 Sam. 1:2; 9:6, 8; 12:20; 14:4, 22, 33; 15:5, 32; 16:4; 18:21, 28; 24:20; 1 Ki. 1:16, 23, 31, 47, 53; 9:6, 9; 16:31; 22:54; 2 Ki. 2:15; 4:37; 5:18; 17:16, 35 f.; 18:22; 19:37; 21:3, 21; 1 Chr. 16:29; 21:21; 29:20; 2 Chr. 7:3, 19, 22; 20:18; 24:17; 25:14; 29:28 ff.; 32:12; 33:3; Ezr. 9:47; Neh. 8:6; 9:3, 6; Job 1:20; Pss. 5:7; 22(21):27, 29; 29(28):3; 45(44):12; 66(65):4; 72(71):11; 81(80):9; 86(85):9; 95(94):6; 96(95):9; 99(98):5, 9; 106(105):19; 132(131):7; 138(137):2; Mic. 5:13; Zeph. 1:5; 2:11; Zech. 14:16; Isa. 2:8, 20; 27:13; 37:38; 44:15, 17; 45:14; 46:6; 49:7, 23; 66:23; Jer. 1:16; 8:2; 13:10; 16:11; 22:9; 25:6; 26(33):2; Ezek. 8:16; 46:2 f., 9. In the Aram. portion of Dan. it translates s^{e}gîḏ, pay homage to (Dan. 2:46; 3:5 ff., 10 ff., 14, 18, 28[95]; cf. also Isa. 44:15, 17, 19). In Dan. 6:27(26) it translates zûā', tremble. It is used for kāra', kneel down, in Est. 3:2, 5 in conjunction with šāḥâh; for nāšaq, kiss, in 1 Ki. 19:18; and 'ābaḏ, serve, in Ps. 97(96):7. It occurs without Heb. equivalent in the apocryphal books and occasionally in canonical writings: Deut. 6:13; 10:20; 32:43; Jdg. 2:2; 6:19; 1 Ki. 2:13; Tob. 5:13; Jud. 5:8; 6:18; 8:18; 10:8, 23; 13:17; 14:7; 16:18; Est. 4:17; 8:13; Ep.Jer. 5 f.; Dan. 6:28(27); Bel 3, 23; 1 Macc. 4:55; 4 Macc. 5:12. The noun proskynēsis, worship, which is absent from the NT occurs only in the apocrypha (Sir. 50:21; 3 Macc. 3:7).

In the LXX proskyneō translates hištaḥ^{a}wâh and (almost exclusively in Dan.) s^{e}gîḏ, both with the basic meaning to bend down, stoop, bow. Although in profane Gk. proskyneō is generally used trans., it hardly ever takes an acc. in the LXX, being followed instead by a prepositional phrase as a translation of l^{e}: epi. . . , to the earth (e.g. Gen. 18:2); enantion. . . , before the people (e.g. Gen. 23:12 and passim); enōpion. . . , before God (Ps. 22:27); pros. . . , towards thy holy temple (Ps. 5:7); alternatively there may be a dat. construction (e.g. Gen. 24:26). This Hebraism marks off the adoration of Yahweh from heathen worship, in which the worshipper has no sense of having to keep his distance from the deity. The God of Israel is worshipped without → images and therefore is not within the grasp of the worshipper. proskyneō retains its physical sense of bending, however, except that this is understood as bowing to the will of the exalted One (cf. Exod. 12:27 f.).

As folding or crossing the hands and arms denotes the suppliant's mental concentration, and as the lifting up of outstretched hands expresses the fact that he is making a request, in the same way the physical act of bending indicates his readiness to bow to the will of the One whom he approaches in this manner. When proskyneō refers to men, it always indicates reverence shown to a person superior in position or power (cf. 2 Sam. 18:21). However, the fact that certain limits were always observed in this matter is shown by Est. 3:2, 5, where a Jew, on peril of his life, refuses to prostrate himself before a heathen prince.

NT 1. In the NT the verb occurs 59 times, of which 24 are in Rev., 11 in the Gospels of Jn. and 9 in Matt. ("the Gospel of the King"), and takes either acc. or dat. without any difference of meaning. The OT sense is taken up and further developed, except that now it denotes exclusively worship addressed (or which should be addressed) to God or to Jesus Christ (even in Matt. 18:26 the king is a symbolic figure for God). In Acts 10:25 f.; Rev. 19:10; 22:8 f. it is expressly stated that worship is to be offered to God alone, not to an apostle (even such a prominent apostle as Peter!), or even to an angelic being. Hence, whenever obeisance is made before Jesus, the thought is either explicit or implicit that he is king (Matt. 2:2), Lord (Matt. 8:12), the Son of God (Matt. 14:33), One who can act with divine omnipotence (e.g. Matt. 14:33; Mk. 5:6; 15:19). For that reason obeisance is often linked with a request for help in sore need. On the one hand, it intensifies the request, while, on the other hand, it is a sign of faith in the divine helper and redeemer, a faith certain of being heard (e.g. Matt. 8:2; 9:18; 15:25). In Jn. 9:38 obeisance is nothing less than the outward reflex action of faith: to believe means to adore Jesus, to recognize him as Lord, to render him homage as king. Thus obeisance is especially appropriate before the risen and exalted Lord (Matt. 28:9, 17; Lk. 24:52).

When Satan, reversing the true order of things, requires obeisance from Jesus (Matt. 4:9; Lk. 4:7), he proves himself by this very act to be God's great adversary, who would usurp that which is due to God alone (Matt. 4:10; Lk. 4:8) and so overthrow all the good purposes and ordinances of God.

2. In this context obeisance is a sign of man's fundamentally religious nature: his worship shows who his god is, whether it be the true God, or idols, demons, even Satan himself (cf. Rev. 9:20; 13:4, 8, 12). For man's relation to God is expressed principally in worship, and above all in prayer. The call to conversion can therefore be put in the form: "Worship God!" i.e. recognize him in all his power and glory as creator and judge, acknowledge his exclusive sovereign rights and claim upon you (Rev. 14:7).

3. Where proskyneō is used absolutely it means to share in public worship, to offer prayers (e.g. Jn. 12:20; Acts 8:27; 24:11), whence, in Rev., proskyneō comes to denote a particular kind of prayer, namely adoration. Its characteristic features find expression in the various hymns of adoration found throughout Rev. (4:8–11; 5:8–10, 12–14; 7:10–12; 11:15–18; 12:10 f.; 15:3 f.; 16:5–7; 19:1–7): it is addressed to God himself (or to Jesus Christ), is concerned with his being (i.e. not with his gifts as in thanksgiving) and with his works in a world-wide context (creation, Rev. 4:8–11; rule, 15:3 f.; 16:5–7; redemption, 5:8–10; consummation, 11:15–18). The hymns make use of ever-varied language and ideas, constantly finding new titles of dignity with which to praise God, and ascribing to him the most exalted merits and attributes (eternity, omnipotence, honour, wisdom, holiness, power etc.), in a faltering attempt to confess his name. Frequently this takes the form of royal acclamation: "Worthy art thou!" (Rev. 4:11; 5:9, 12), "Salvation!" (7:10), interspersed with ejaculatory prayers: ("Hallelujah!" "Amen!" 7:12; 19:1, 3, 4; → Amen). Through all these hymns there runs a gloriously universal strain, and in the face of adoration such as this, human petitions and thanksgivings merely fade away into silence (cf. Matt. 6:13b).

4. The noun proskynētēs, worshipper, occurs only in Jn. 4:23 in the context of Jesus' reply to the woman of Samaria: "You worship what you do not know; we worship what we know, for salvation is from the Jews. But the hour is coming and now is, when the true worshippers [hoi alēthinoi proskynētai] will worship the Father in spirit and truth [proskynēsousin tō Patri en pneumati kai alētheia], for such the Father seeks to worship him. God is spirit, and those who worship him must worship in spirit and truth [pneuma ho theos, kai tous proskynountas en pneumati kai alētheia dei proskynein"] (Jn. 4:22 ff.). Earlier the woman had declared that her ancestors had worshipped on "this mountain", i.e. Mt. Gerizim (v.20). The allusion is to the rôle Gerizim played in Samaritan worship. In the Samaritan Pentateuch Joshua is instructed to build a shrine there (Deut. 27:4). The → Samaritans made worship on Gerizim part of the Decalogue (cf. however 2 Chr. 6:6). (On Samaritan thought and practice see J. Macdonald, The Theology of the Samaritans, 1964.) Jesus had countered the woman's assertion of her Samaritan faith by declaring that "the hour is coming when neither on this mountain nor in Jerusalem will you worship the Father" (v. 21).

Jesus' words are widely taken to be a reference to man's spirit and the need to take up a right personal attitude in worship as the continuance of mere custom and ritual (cf. L. Morris, The Gospel according to John, NLC, 1971, 270 f.). Such a meaning might be supported by the Hellenistic spiritualizing of Philo (Quod Det. Pot. Ins. 21; Vit.Mos. 2, 108; Spec.Leg. 1, 271; Plant. 108). On the other hand, R. E. Brown urges that it is the → Spirit of God that is meant here, and that one can regard "spirit and truth" almost as a hendiadys equivalent to "Spirit of truth" (The Gospel according to John, Anchor Bible, I, 1966, 180). This would, moreover, fit better the train of thought. For in the context both "this mountain" and "Jerusalem" have come to stand for ways in which men have seen fit to worship God in ways which were not real worship acceptable to God. But in the coming age men will worship God in the true way which he himself has chosen and provided, i.e. in and through himself (cf. also the Johannine teaching on the Spirit, Jn. 1:32 f.; 3:5–8, 34; 6:63; 7:39; 11:33; 13:21; 14:17, 26; 15:26; 16:13; 20:22; and the paraclete, Jn. 14:16, 26; 15:26; 16:7; → Advocate, art. paraklētos). "In true worship there is an encounter with God for which God must make man capable by his grace" (R. Schnackenburg, The Gospel according to St. John, I, 1968, 437). Schnackenburg sees confirmation of this interpretation by similar usage at Qumran: "Then God will purify all the deeds of man by his truth and he will cleanse the frame of man. He will eradicate the perverse spirit from within his flesh, and cleanse him by holy spirit from all his wicked deeds. He will pour out on him the spirit of truth like purifying water . . ." (1QS 4:20 f.; cf. 3:6 ff.; 8:5 f.; 9:3–6; 1QH 7:6 f.; 12:11 f.; 13:18 f.; 14:25; 16:6 f., 11 f.; 17:26; cf. also R. Schnackenburg, "Die Anbetung in Geist und Wahrheit (Joh 4, 23) im Lichte von Qumran-Texten", BZ 3, 1959, 88–94; B. Gärtner, The Temple and the Community in Qumran and the New Testament, Society for New Testament Studies Monograph Series, 1, 1965, 44 ff., 119 f.). H. Schönweiss, C. Brown

ἐρωτάω

ἐρωτάω (erōtaō), ask, ask a question, request; ἐπερωτάω (eperōtaō), ask; ἐπερώτημα (eperōtēma), question, request, appeal.

CL erōtaō is found in cl. Gk. from Homer onwards in the sense of ask, ask a question (in Homer and the best codices of Hdt. as eirōtaō). eperōtaō occurs in secular Gk. from Hdt., meaning to consult a person or to put a question. Later Gk. used it technically for putting a formal question at a meeting or in the process of making a contract. It may even mean to accept the terms of a treaty. In religious contexts both vbs. can mean to put a question to an oracle or to a god (Hdt., 1, 53, 1 and often; Inscriptions of Magnesia on the Meander, ed. O. Kern, 1900, 17, 12 f., 26, 36; SIG III³ 1160, 1163, 1165). The noun eperōtēma can mean a question put to another person, to someone in authority for a formal, binding answer (SIG 856, 6, 2nd cent. A.D.). In the papyri (2nd cent. A.D.) the noun and the vb. are used of an agreement pledged in a contract (Moulton-Milligan, 231 f.).

OT In the LXX erōtaō is commonly used for šā'al, ask (e.g. Gen. 24:47, 57; Exod. 3:13; Ps. 35[34]:11; Isa. 41:28). eperōtaō is likewise used for the same vb. (e.g. Gen. 24:23; 26:27; Isa. 19:3). It is most frequent in the historical books (e.g. Jdg. 1:1; 18:5; 1 Sam. 9:9). It can be used of inquiry of God (e.g. Isa. 65:1, where some versions have zēteō, seek). Both vbs. are used by Josephus in this sense (Ant. 6, 123, 328; 9, 34; 12, 99; War 1, 540). eperōtēma occurs only in Dan. 4:14 (Theodotion, for šᵉ'ēlâh) and Sir. 33(36):3 without equivalent.

NT 1. erōtaō occurs 62 times (especially in Jn., 27 times; cf. Matt., 4 times; Mk. 3 times; Lk. 15 times; Paul, 4 times; Acts, 7 times; 1 and 2 Jn., once each). It commonly means to ask, inquire. Jesus' asking and counter-questions were part of his teaching method, designed to expose the person concerned to the implications of his own questions or make him reflect on his attitudes (e.g. Matt. 16:13; 19:17; 21:24; Mk. 8:5; Lk. 20:3). But it is also used of the theological questions put by the disciples (Mk. 4:10; Lk. 9:45; Acts 1:6). Jn. 16:23 implies that in the future salvation there will be no need to ask Jesus further questions. Asking implies imperfect knowledge which will be overcome by perfect fellowship with Jesus (cf. Jn. 16:30; cf. vv. 5, 19). Conversely Jesus does not need to ask questions, for he knows already what is in man (Jn. 2:25). Apart from Jn. 9:2 and the final discourses, the disciples are never said to ask Jesus. In Jn. asking is characteristic of the doubting, contentious questions of the Jews (Jn. 1:19, 21, 25; 4:31, 40, 47; 5:12; 8:7; 9:15, 19, 21, 23; 18:19, 21; 19:31, 38). But it may be compared with the question of the → Greeks (12:21) and those of Jesus (14:16; 17:9, 15, 20; of the intercession of Jesus, where Jesus asks things for his disciples of the Father). The vb. is used of the efficacy of intercession in 1 Jn. 5:16: "If any one sees his brother committing what is not a mortal sin, he will ask, and he [i.e. God] will give him life for those whose sin is not mortal. There is a sin which is mortal; I do not say that one is to pray for that" (RSV mg.). The use here of the vb. of the praying believer extends to him a sense of the vb. which in Jn. is only applied to Jesus. H. Greeven thinks that the use of erōtaō in the sense of to pray may be a Semitism (TDNT II 686 f.). In 2 Jn. 5 it describes the action of the author in begging his readers to follow love (cf. v. 6). In Acts 1:6 it means to ask (a question). Elsewhere it generally means to request: of the disciples to Jesus (Matt. 15:23; Lk. 4:38); of the Jews to Pilate (Jn. 19:31); and in the Lucan writings of invitations (Lk. 7:36; 11:37; Acts 10:48; 18:20). In Lk. 14:18 f. it has the polite, weakened sense of "I pray you".

2. eperōtaō is nearly as common (56 times), and is most frequent in the Gospels. However, it is most characteristic of Mk. and somewhat less so of Lk. (Mk., 25 times; Lk., 17 times; cf. Matt., 8 times; twice each in Jn., Acts and Paul). The basic sense is to ask, and here it is synonymous with erōtaō, as can be seen from synoptic parallels and MS variant readings. Instances of its use in the sense of ask are Matt. 16:1; Mk. 9:32; Lk. 2:46; 1 Cor. 14:35 (the latter in Paul's instructions about the rôle of → women in public worship, who are to remain silent and ask their husbands at home). However, particular nuances of meaning may be detected in certain passages.

(a) Seeking. The → Pharisees and → Sadducees, traditionally enemies, joined together as representatives of Judaism (D. Hill, The Gospel of Matthew, New Century Bible, 1972, 257) or of unbelief (J. C. Fenton, Saint Matthew, 1963, 260) in asking for a sign which might accredit Jesus with popular authority (Matt. 16:1). A similar sense is found at Rom. 10:20, where those who do not ask for God means those who did not seek him: "Then Isaiah is so bold as to say, 'I have been found by those who did not seek me; I have shown myself to those who did not ask for me.' " This adaptation of Isa. 65:1 stands in a catena of citations from the OT which also includes Deut. 32:21. It is followed by the ensuing verse in Isa.: "But of Israel he says, 'All day long I have held out my hands to a disobedient and contrary people' " (Rom. 10:21; cf. Isa. 65:2). In the first instance Isa. 65:1 applies to Yahweh's readiness to be found by disobedient Israel, even though Israel did not seek him. Paul adapts it to apply a fortiori to the Gentiles who in times past did not seek Yahweh but now have found him through faith in Christ, whereas Israel remains disobedient and estranged. To them Isa. 65:2 still applies.

(b) Probing. In debate the opponents of Jesus asked probing questions to which an answer had to be given, and Jesus put counter-questions (Matt. 22:46; Mk. 11:29; Lk. 6:9).

(c) Questioning an authority. Several passages imply that the questioner is approaching an authority higher than himself. On feast days and sabbaths the temple Sanhedrin informally received questions and stated their traditions (Sanhedrin 88b), and on such an occasion the youth Jesus put questions to the temple elders (Lk. 2:46). In a similar sense the disciples dared not question Jesus about a passion prediction (Mk. 9:32 par. Lk. 9:45), and the Corinthian wives were to put questions to their husbands at home, not in the assembly for worship (1 Cor. 14:35).

3. The noun eperōtēma is found in the NT only at 1 Pet. 3:21 in respect of → baptism: "Baptism, which corresponds to this [i.e. the saving of → Noah in the ark 'through water', v. 20], now saves you, not as a removal of dirt from the body but as an appeal [eperōtēma] to God for a clear conscience" (RSV). E. Best, following E. G. Selwyn and others, translates this as "pledge", i.e. a statement of faith given by the baptizand in answer to a formal question, like the stipulatio or answer given in a formal contract (E. Best, 1 Peter, New Century Bible, 1971, 148; G. C. Richards, "1 Peter iii 21", JTS 32, 1931, 77; E. G. Selwyn, The First Epistle of St. Peter, 1947², 205; Moulton-Milligan, 231 f.; cf. P. Cairo Preiss 1, 16, of the 2nd cent. A.D.). Best prefers to regard it as "a pledge made to God to maintain a clear conscience" (cf. W. J. Dalton, Christ's Proclamation to the Spirits, Analecta Biblica 23, 1965, 224–28), or "a pledge made to God proceeding from a clear conscience" (cf. v. 20). Selwyn also suggests that it could mean "an enquiry of a good conscience after God", i.e. the convert's seeking after God as contrasted with the pagan's address to his favourite oracle (op. cit., 206). But he does not think that this sense is specially applicable to baptism. H. Greeven suggests that, in view of the sense of the vb. meaning to request (cf. Matt. 16:1), the meaning here could be that baptism is a "prayer to God for a good conscience" (TDNT II 688). However, it might also mean the answer by God to a such a question (cf. SIG 856, 6), i.e. the granting of a clear → conscience towards God. For a similar idea, cf. Heb. 10:19–25. G. T. D. Angel

κρούω

κρούω (krouō), knock.

CL & OT krouō is used in secular Gk. from Sophocles onwards and in the LXX (e.g. Cant. 5:2) for striking something, especially knocking on a door.

NT This is the strict meaning in all 9 NT instances (Matt. 7:7 f. par. Lk. 11:9 f.; Lk. 12:36; 13:25; Acts 12:13, 16; Rev. 3:20). But apart from the passages in Acts, the context is in each case metaphorical. The saying "Knock and it shall be opened to you" (Matt. 7:7 par. Lk. 11:9) is probably a proverb since it is found in Judaism (Pesikta 176a with reference to studying the Mishnah, "If a man knocks, it will be opened to him"). But Jer. 29:13 (LXX 36:13) contains Yahweh's promise: "You will seek me and find me; when you seek me with your whole heart" (cf. the previous verses). According to D. Hill, the knocking does not mean seeking to enter the → kingdom (cf. 7:13 f.); the situation presupposed is that described in Lk. 11:5–8 of the friend at midnight (The Gospel of Matthew, 1972, 148). Here the lesson is drawn: "I tell you, though he will not get up and give him anything because he is his friend, yet because of his importunity he will rise and give him whatever he needs" (Lk. 11:8). Lk., however, refers this ultimately to the gift of the Holy → Spirit (Lk. 11:13). G. Bertram, however, relates it to salvation (TDNT III 955 f.). Knocking in Lk. 12:36 and Lk. 13:25 is a detail of the parables of the returning master and of the excluded postulants. It has a dramatic rather than a special theological meaning.

Rev. 3:20 pictures the Risen Lord standing at a door knocking, and inviting those inside to open and receive him. The Lord is addressing the spiritually lukewarm church at Laodicea (→ Cold, Hot, Lukewarm), and the anticipated offer of his return means victory and a place in the presence of his Father. This prediction of his confrontation with idle churchmen is both a disturbing warning that apathy will not go unheeded and a gracious encouragement that the Lord will not allow his people to remain ineffective, but will rather appeal insistently to establish the believer in victorious living. Although the picture has been interpreted as an initial confrontation with the Risen Lord, there is no doubt that an existing Christian community is being addressed. The background to the image could be the Lord's Supper (cf. G. B. Caird, The Revelation of St. John the Divine, BNTC, 1966, 58). However, G. R. Beasley-Murray comments: "The similarity of thought and language to that which is used in connection with the Lord's Supper (cf. Jn. 6:35 ff., 53 ff.) is due less to direct reminiscence of the Supper than to the event to which the Supper itself looks forward (Mk. 14:25; Lk. 22:28 ff.)" (The Book of Revelation, New Century Bible, 1974, 107). G. T. D. Angel

ἐντυγχάνω

ἐντυγχάνω (entynchanō), meet, turn to, approach, petition, pray, intercede; ὑπερεντυγχάνω (hyperentynchanō), plead, intercede.

CL & OT entynchanō occurs in cl. Gk. from Soph. and Hdt. onwards and is found in inscriptions, the papyri, the LXX, Philo and Josephus. It means to approach or appeal to someone (e.g. Polyb., 4, 30, 1; Dan. 6:13[12] LXX; Josephus, Ant. 16, 170; 12, 18). It is found in the papyri in the sense of appealing to someone against a third person (cf. Arndt, 269). In view of the fact that petitions may be addressed to God, it has also the sense of to pray (e.g. BGU 246, 12; Wis. 8:21; 16:28; Eth.Enoch 9:3). hyperentynchanō is first found in the NT. Apart from the reading in Dan., neither vb. occurs in the canonical books of the OT.

NT entynchanō is used of Paul's appeal to the emperor in Acts 25:24. In Rom. 11:2 it denotes → Elijah's pleading with God against Israel (cf. 1 Ki. 19:10). It is twice used of Christ's continuing intercession: "Who is to condemn? Is it Christ Jesus, who died, yes, who was raised from the dead, who is at the right hand of God, who indeed intercedes for us [hos kai entynchanei hyper hēmōn]?" (Rom. 8:33); "he is able for all time to save those who draw near to God through him, since he always lives to make intercession for them [pantote zōn eis to entynchanein hyper autōn]" (Heb. 7:25). In both cases the intercession is grounded in the death and resurrection of Christ. However, the two vbs. are also used of the Spirit's intercession: "Likewise the Spirit helps us in our weakness; for we do not know how to pray [lit. "what"; Gk. ti proseuxōmetha] as we ought, but the Spirit himself intercedes for us with sighs too deep for words [hyperentynchanei stenagmois alalētois]. And he who searches the hearts of men knows what is the mind of the Spirit, because [or "that" RSV mg.; Gk. hoti] the Spirit intercedes for the saints according to the will of God [kata theon entynchanei hyper hagiōn] (Rom. 8:26 f.)."

This verse is commonly taken to refer to Christian prayer generally. "We take Paul's meaning to be that all praying of Christian men, in so far as it is their praying, remains under the sign of this not-knowing, of real ignorance, weakness and poverty and that even in their prayers they live only by God's justification of sinners . . . The Spirit Himself helps our weakness by interceding for us" (C. E. B. Cranfield, The Epistle to the Romans, I, ICC, 1975, 422 f.). He dismisses the idea that the stenagmoi refers to glossolalia on the grounds that the latter is usually associated with praise rather than intercession. He also thinks it unlikely that such utterances could be interpreted as the Spirit's own stenagmoi. On the other hand, E. Käsemann has set out a persuasive case for seeing this whole passage in the context of ecstatic worship in the Christian community.

As a background to this passage Käsemann sees Paul's doctrine of the → Spirit as teaching designed to counter the excess of charismatic enthusiasm in the early church ("The Cry for Liberty in the Worship of the Church", in Perspectives on Paul, 1971, 122–37; see especially 123 f.). Paul developed a positive doctrine of the Spirit which he related to the church and to Christ. He was well aware of a possible clash between "in the Spirit" and "in Christ" and established three safeguards: "(1) He so interpreted the spirit as the power of the risen Christ that it had to be proved daily in the individual Christian's life as the power of the nova oboedientia. (2) Starting from the identity of the risen and the crucified Christ, he allowed the Spirit to be the power of standing fast in temptations and suffering. (3) Like the Jewish Christians, he understood the spirit as an 'earnest' and hence placed pneumatology as well as Christology and anthropology under the eschatological proviso" (op. cit., 124; cf. Rom. 8:1–11 and chs. 12–16). Thus Paul opposed the "realized eschatology" of the Hellenists, who were proud of their possession of the Spirit as the sign of present power, with the doctrine of the future redemption of which the Spirit is the present pledge: "We know that the whole creation has been groaning in travail together until now; and not only the creation, but we ourselves, who have the first fruits [aparchēn] of the Spirit, groan inwardly [en heautois stenazomen] as we wait for adoption as sons, the redemption of our bodies [hyiothesian apekdechomenoi, tēn apolytrōsin tou sōmatos hēmōn]" (Rom. 8:22 f.).

Käsemann claims that it is not simply that we do not know how to pray but what we should pray, as the Gk. indicates. "Only the spirit knows and comprehends God's will. It must therefore, like the Paraclete of the Fourth Gospel, support our weakness. It does this by offering vicarious intercession for the saints" (op. cit., 128; → Advocate; cf. also 1 Cor. 2:11 ff.). Since prayer is never wordless in Paul, Käsemann takes the groans or sighs referred to here as ecstatic acclamations and cries of prayer which accompanied the acclamatory cry of "Abba! Father!" (op. cit., 130; cf. Rom. 8:15; Gal. 4:6). He claims the thought of "praying in the spirit" is presupposed in the Qumran hymns and is elsewhere attested in the NT (1 Cor. 14:13 ff.; Eph. 6:18; Jude 20; Rev. 22:17), always in the sense of the Spirit putting into man's mouth what he should pray for. Whereas the Palestinian tradition did not permit reason to be dispensed with, there is recognition here of the tradition represented in Philo, according to which inspiration uses a man as an instrument (op. cit., 131; cf. 1 Cor. 14:7 f., 13 ff.). What in 1 Cor. 14:7–12, 22 (cf. 11:5, 13) is the gift of tongues, which had a place in public worship, is here described in terms of "sighs too deep for words". In other words, they are "glossolalic utterances" (ibid.), which are the joint possession of the whole congregation. The earthly occurrence is linked with a heavenly one, for intercession can only take place at the right → hand of God (Rom. 8:34). In reply to Cranfield it may be said that to speak of glossolalia here is a kind of shorthand covering ecstatic utterance generally, and that the purported content of glossolalia in one place must not be allowed to prejudge its purported content elsewhere. Moreover, Paul clearly uses the stenagmois alalētois of the Spirit as a counterpart to the stenagmois of men. Käsemann observes: "Since the spirit itself is acting here and the glossolalia in the prayer of believers is the medium through which it cries to God, the earthly phenomenon is the expression and reflection of a hidden heavenly one" (ibid., 133).

Paul does not develop this in a pietistic sense of raising us above our own strength in order to bring us near to God. The Spirit does not free us from earthly things, but as our proxy brings our needs to God in ways which we cannot express ourselves. The utterances are not "the tongues of angels", indicating full possession of the presence of God, as the Corinthians falsely supposed (1 Cor. 13:1), but a sign of the church's solidarity with the rest of the creation which likewise sighs or groans (cf. synstenazei, groan together, v. 20, with the vb. stenazomen, we groan, v. 23, and the noun stenagmois, with groans, v. 26). For the presence of the Spirit is only the first fruits (→ Sacrifice, art. aparchē) of the full reality of our adoption as sons, the redemption of the body (v. 23). The reference to our body, which in the Gk. is sing., could refer to the corporate body of the church (cf. Rom. 12:4 f.), or it may refer to the physical body in view of the previous reference to the creation's bondage to decay (v. 21). But perhaps the two ideas may coalesce here.

Käsemann detects a difference of attitude in Paul to glossolalia here and in 1 Cor. 14 and 2 Cor. 12:5–10. He suggests that in Corinth Paul tried to repress the phenomenon together with other ecstatic experiences and to make them a private matter as far as possible (op. cit., 134; cf. his essay, "Die Legitimität des Apostels", ZNW 41, 1942, 67 ff.), whereas here he allows congregational worship to be deeply influenced by these things. But to say this is to go beyond the actual evidence. What he does is to take account of the phenomenon as it occurs in the church and give it an interpretation which is positive, but which cuts across that of the charismatics at Corinth and possibly also that of the charismatics at Rome. Moreover, it may be said that, just as those who spoke in tongues at Corinth require an interpreter to make their utterances intelligible to men (1 Cor. 14:13, 26 ff.), so in Rom. those who sigh in prayer need the Spirit as an intercessor in order to make their utterances intelligible to God (Rom. 8:26 f.).

Käsemann endorses Schniewind's suggestion that "Prayer is described in Rom. 8.26 f. as it is formed from the dikaiosynē theou" (ibid.; cf. J. Schniewind, "Das Seufzen des Geistes, Röm. 8, 26, 27", Nachgelassene Reden und Aufsätze, 1952, 81 f.). It is set in the context of justification and the → righteousness of God (cf. 8:1). Just as in justification there is the paradox of the sinner justified by faith, so here there is the paradox of the sons of God being at one with the creation. The weaknesses are not just spiritual failings but descriptions of the human condition. Moreover, the glossolalia is not a sign that the church has arrived, as it were, and of its advanced spirituality; rather it is for Paul "nothing other than the cry of the tempted for liberty" (op. cit., 135). One may go beyond Käsemann and point out that Paul is not saying here that the sighing is an adequate form of worship. In fact, he says the contrary. It is inadequate, in that it shows that we do not know what to pray for as we ought, and that these utterances do not convey what is in the mind of God. But this is more than made up for by the intercession of the Spirit who intercedes for us with sighs too deep for words, lit. unspoken sighs (v. 26). This is acceptable to God, because God knows the mind of the Spirit and the Spirit intercedes according to the will of God (v. 27). Later on Paul defines spiritual or rational worship (logikēn latreian, Rom. 12:1) in terms of presenting the body "as a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable to God." He then goes on to explain what this means in terms of not being conformed to the world, of the renewal of the mind, proving the will of God, the exercise of gifts in the body of Christ and daily living in a world ruled by pagan authorities (chs. 12 and 13). These references indicate how the worship described in ch. 8 is to be complemented. It involves the dedication of the whole person to God in a way which is rational, embracing the whole mind, and practical, reaching out into the practicalities of daily living in the church and the world (→ Serve, art. latreuō). C. Brown

→ Advocate, → Baptism, → Blessing, → Church, → Confess, → Curse, → Fast, → Father, → Feast, → Lord's Supper, → Sacrifice, → Serve, → Song, → Temple, → Tent, → Thank

(a). A. A. Anderson, The Book of Psalms, I–II, New Century Bible, 1972; D. R. Ap-Thomas, "Notes on Some Themes Relating to Prayer", VT 6, 1956, 225–41; P. R Baelz, Prayer and Providence, 1968; G. J. Bahr, "The Use of the Lord's Prayer in the Primitive Church", JBL 84, 1965, 153–59; and "The Subscriptions in the Pauline Letters", JBL 87, 1968, 27–41; J. A. Bain, The Prayers of the Apostle Paul, no date (1937?); J. B. Bauer and H. Zimmermann, "Prayer", EBT II 679–86; G. Bertram, krouō, TDNT III 954–57; G. Bornkamm, "On the Understanding of Worship", in Early Christian Experience, 1969, 161–79; R. E. Brown, "The Pater Noster as an Eschatological Prayer", in New Testament Essays, 1965, 217–53; F. Büchsel, hiketēria, TDNT III 296 f.; F. H. Chase, The Lord's Prayer in the Early Church, 1891; F. D. Coggan, The Prayers of the New Testament, 1967; R. M. Cooper, "Leitourgos Christou Iēsou. Toward a Theology of Christian Prayer", Anglican Theological Review 47, 1965, 263–75; O. Cullmann, Early Christian Worship, SBT 10, 1953; G. Delling, Worship in the New Testament, 1962; C. W. Dugmore, The Influence of the Synagogue upon the Divine Office, 1944; G. Ebeling, The Lord's Prayer in Today's World, 1966; B. Van Elderen, "The Verb in the Epistolary Invocation", Calvin Theological Journal 2, 1967, 46 ff.; W. Förster, Palestinian Judaism in New Testament Times, 1964; G. Fohrer, History of Israelite Religion, 1973; A. R. George, Communion with God in the New Testament, 1953; M. D. Goulder, "The Composition of the Lord's Prayer", JTS New Series 14, 1963, 32–45; and Midrash and Lection in Matthew, 1974, 296–301; F. C. Grant, Ancient Judaism and the New Testament, 1960, 39–57; H. Greeven, deomai etc., TDNT II 40 ff.; erōtaō etc., TDNT II 685–89; and proskyneō etc., TDNT VI 758–66; F. Hahn, The Worship of the Early Church, 1973; O. Hallesby, Prayer, 1936; F. Heiler, Prayer: A Study in the History and Psychology of Religion, 1932; J. Heinemann, Prayer in the Period of the Tanna'im and the Amora'im: Its Nature and its Patterns, 1964; J. Hermann and H. Greeven, euchomai etc., TDNT II 775–808; W. Herrmann, The Communion of the Christian with God, (1895) 1972; J. Jeremias, The Prayers of Jesus, SBT Second Series 6, 1967; R. Jewett, "The Epistolary Thanksgiving and the Integrity of Philippians", NovT 12, 1970, 40–53; N. B. Johnson, Prayer in Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha, JBL Monograph Series 2, 1928; M. Kadushin, Worship and Ethics: A Study in Rabbinic Judaism, 1963; E. Käsemann, "The Cry for Liberty in the Worship of the Church", in Perspectives on Paul, 1971, 122–37; E. Lohmeyer, The Lord's Prayer, 1965; J. Lowe, The Lord's Prayer, 1962; W. Lüthi, The Lord's Prayer: An Exposition, 1962; B. Martin, Prayer in Judaism, 1968; ML 342–81; Moore, Judaism, II, 212–38; T. Y. Mullins, "Greeting as a New Testament Form", JBL 87, 1968, 418–26; and "Petition as a Literary Form", NovT 5, 1964, 46–54; P. T. O'Brien, "Prayer in Luke-Acts", TB 24, 1973, 111–27; W. O. E. Oesterley, The Jewish Background of the Christian Liturgy, 1925; W. O. E. Oesterley and G. H. Box, The Religion and Worship of the Synagogue: An Introduction to the Study of Judaism from the New Testament Period, 1907, D. Z. Phillips, The Concept of Prayer, 1965 (philosophical study); H. Ringgren, Israelite Religion, 1966; G. Schlier, gony etc., TDNT I 378 ff.; H. Schürmann, Praying with Christ, 1964; P.-O. Sjörgren, The Jesus Prayer, 1975; C. W. F. Smith, "Lord's Prayer", IOB III 154–58; G. Stählin, aiteō etc., TDNT I 191–95; R. A. Stewart, Rabbinic Theology: An Introductory Study, 1961; H. Thielicke, The Prayer that Spans the World: Sermons on the Lord's Prayer, 1965; J. G. S. S. Thomson, The Praying Christ: A Study of Jesus' Doctrine and Practice of Prayer, 1959; C. Westermann, The Praise of God in the Psalms, 1965; W. White, Jr., "Lord's Prayer", ZPEB III 972–78;

G. P. Wiles, Paul's Intercessory Prayers: The Significance of the Intercessory Prayer Passages in the Letters of St. Paul, Society for New Testament Studies Monograph Series 24, 1974.
(b). G. Beer and O. Holtzmann, eds., Die Mischna. Text, Übersetzung und Erklärung, 1912; W. Bieder, "Gebetswirklichkeit und Gebetsmöglichtkeit bei Paulus: Das Beten des Geistes und das Beten im Geist", ThZ 4, 1948, 22–40; K. Berger, "Zu den sogenannten Sätzen Heiligen Rechts", NTS 17, 1970–71, 10–40; T. Boman, "Der Gebetskampf Jesu", NTS 10, 1963–64, 261–73; H. van den Bussche, Le Notre Père, 1959; F. Cabrol, La Prière des Premiers Chrétiens, 1929; J. Carmignac, Recherches sur le "Notre Père", 1969; E. Delay, "A qui s'adresse la prière chrétienne?", Revue d'Histoire et de Philosophie Religieuses 37, 1949, 189–201; A. Deitzel, "Beten im Geist. Eine religionsgeschichtliche Parallele aus den Hodajot zum paulinischen Beten im Geist", ThZ 13, 1957, 12–32; F. J. Dölger, Sol Salutis: Gebet und Gesang im christlichen Altertum, 1925²; J. Döller, Das Gebet im Alten Testament in religionsgeschichtlicher Beleuchtung, 1914; G. Eichholz, Auslegung der Bergpredigt, BSt 37, 1963, especially 109 ff.; I. Elbogen, Der jüdische Gottesdienst in seiner geschichtlichen Entwicklung, 1931³; and Die messianische Idee in den alten jüdischen Gebeten, 1912; J.-A. Eschlimann, La Prière dans S. Paul, 1934; A. Grövig, "Die Anbetung Christi im Neuen Testament", Tidsskrift for Teologi og Kirke, 1, 1930, 26–44; E. Gaugler, "Der Geist und das Gebet der Schwachen Gemeinde", Internationale kirchliche Zeitschrift 51, 1961, 67–94; E. F. von der Goltz, Das Gebet in der ältesten Christenheit. Eine geschichtliche Untersuchung, 1902; J. Gnilka, "Jesus und das Gebet", BuL 6, 1965, 79–91; H. Greeven, Gebet und Eschatologie im Neuen Testament, 1931; A. Grieff, Das Gebet im Alten Testament, 1915; A. Hamman, La Prière, I, Le Nouveau Testament, 1959; G. Harder, Paulus und das Gebet, 1936; J. Hempel, Gebet und Frömmigkeit im Alten Testament, 1922; F. Hesse, Die Fürbitte im Alten Testament, Inaugural Dissertation, Erlangen, 1949; O. Holtzmann, "Die tägliche Gebetstunden im Judentum und Urchristentum", ZNW 12, 1911, 90–107; J. Horst, Proskynein, 1933; J. Jeremias, "Das Gebetsleben Jesu", ZNW 25, 1926, 123–40; A. Juncker, Das Gebet bei Paulus, 1905; R. Kerkhoff, Das Unablässige Gebet. Beiträge zur Lehre vom immerwährenden Beten im Neuen Testament, 1954; P. Ketter, "Vom Gebetsleben des Apostels Paulus", Theologisch-praktische Quartalschrift 91, 1938, 23–40; A. Lawek, Das Gebet zu Jesus, 1921; A. Köberle, Schule des Gebets, 1959; K. G. Kuhn, Achtzehngebet und Vaterunser und der Reim, WUNT 1, 1950; J. Marty, "La Prière dans le Nouveau Testament", Revue d'Histoire et de Philosophie Religieuses 10, 1930, 90–98; H. Miskotte, Der Weg des Gebets, 1964; K. Niederwimmer, "Das Gebet des Geistes, Röm. 8, 26 f.", ThZ 20, 1964, 252–65; J. M. Nielen, Gebet und Gottesdienst im Neuen Testament, 1937; E. Orphal, Das Paulusgebet. Psychologisch-exegetische Untersuchung des Paulus-Geisteslebens auf Grund seiner Selbstzeugnisse, 1933; W. Ott, Gebet und Heil. Die Bedeutung der Gebetsparänese in der lukanischen Theologie, Studien zum Alten und Neuen Testament 12, 1965; J. M. Robinson, "Die Hodajot-Formel in Gebet und Hymnus des Frühchristentums", in W. Eltester, ed., Apophoreta. Festschrift für Ernst Haenchen, 1964, 194–235; I. Rohr, Das Gebet im Neuen Testament, 1924; SB I 396–404; J. Scharbert, "Die Fürbitte im Alten Testament", ThG 50, 1960, 321 ff.; R. Schnackenburg, "Die Anbetung in Geist und Wahrheit (Joh. 4, 23) im Lichte von Qumran-Texten", BZ 3, 1959, 88–94; J. Schniewind, "Das Seufzen des Geistes, Röm. 8. 26, 27", in Nachgelassene Reden und Aufsätze, 1952, 81–103; H. Schönweiss, Beten? Ja, aber wie?, 1962; W. Staerk, Altjüdische liturgische Gebete, 1910; R. Storr, Die Frömmigkeit im Alten Testament, 1927, 175–91; A. Wendel, Das freie Laiengebet im vorexilischen Israel, 1932; R. Zorn, Die Fürbitte im Spätjudentum und im Neuen Testament, 1957; L. Zunz, Die gottesdienstlichen Vorträge der Juden historisch entwickelt, 1892².

Present, Day, Maranatha, Parousia

The subject-matter of this article is closely associated with ideas dealt with under → goal, → come and → time. Throughout this whole area there occurs the same tension, inherent in Christian eschatology, between that which is already present and that which is still future. This tension can be shown by careful investigation not to lie between the various words used but rather to extend right to the heart of practically each individual word. However, the three concepts treated below, "the Day", Maranatha and Parousia, are all generally considered to have a future reference and are therefore dealt with separately from the rest.

parousia, presence, coming, advent, a political and religious term in the Hellenistic world, refers in the NT mainly to the return of Jesus at the end of this age (→ Time, art. aiōn) and to this extent is closely related with the hēmera, day (cf. 2 Pet. 3:12). The latter term has OT associations and, apart from its purely technical use as a measure of time, likewise means the last day or the day of the return of Christ. The Aramaic ejaculation maranatha is an expression of certainty or confident hope; it can be translated either: "Our Lord has come", or: "Our Lord, come".

ἡμέρα

ἡμέρα (hēmera), day.

CL A day can either denote the period of 24 hours, in which case it includes the night (Xen., Anab. 4, 7, 28: they remained three days; cf. Mk. 6:21) or it may exclude the night (Xen., Anab. 2, 2, 13: but when it was day; cf. Matt. 4:2). But hēmera can also mean a much longer period of time (Soph., Aj. 623 f., the mother, who had been brought up in an earlier day); it can cover a lifetime (Soph., OC 1216 f., for many have left behind sundry days, i.e. their lifetime), or time generally (Soph., El. 266 f., what [fateful] days are mine, think you, when I see Aegisthus sitting upon the throne; cf. Eph. 6:13; 1 Pet. 3:10).

OT 1. Like years and months (e.g. 2 Ki. 17:1; Exod. 2:2), days serve as a division of time (Gen. 1:5–2:2; Jos. 6:3), the Heb. word being almost invariably yôm, which often occurs within a fixed phrase. The day can include the night, in which case it begins with the evening (Gen. 1:5), or be distinguished from the night (Isa. 10:10). The word may indicate a particular day (Gen. 4:14, today; Job 3:1, birthday) or (in the plur.) a period of time (Gen. 6:3, lifetime; Gen. 8:22, so long as the earth remains; Ps. 90[89]:4, a thousand years in thy sight are but as yesterday when it is past [→ Number art. chilias, OT 3]; Isa. 60:22, days of mourning; Jdg. 17:10, a year). Certain days have a special character: while six days of the week are days of work, the seventh day is the → Sabbath (Exod. 20:9 f.; Lk. 4:16). There are → feast days (Hos. 2:15; Neh. 8:9; Gal. 4:10). A day in the temple courts is better than a thousand elsewhere (Ps. 84[83]:10). Man has no power over the day of his death (Eccl. 8:8).

2. Those passages which speak of the day of Yahweh (yôm YHWH) are of particular theological importance. But the phrase has various meanings. Originally the day of Yahweh was a day of joy (this is assumed in Amos 5:18, 20; cf. Zech. 14:7). The prophets, however, re-interpreted this popular idea of a day of salvation and proclaimed it instead as a day of unrelieved judgment (cf. Amos 5:18, 20; Joel 1:15; 2:2). The event in view may be a political (Ezek. 34:12) or a cultic one (cf. S. Mowinckel's thesis of Yahweh's coronation day in The Psalms in Israel's Worship, I, 1962, 116; "Jahwes dag", Norsk Teologisk Tidsskrift 59, 1958, 1–56, 209–29) or it may be the great eschatological event (e.g. Amos 8:9; Isa. 2:11 f., 17), the latter often described in cosmological language (Zeph. 1:15; Joel 3:14). H. Gressmann suggested that the day of the Lord was a foreign importation (Der Ursprung der israelitisch-jüdischen Eschatologie, FRLANT 6, 1905). But G. von Rad and others see its origin within the traditions of Israel's holy war (Der heilige Krieg im alten Israel, 1949; "The Origin of the Concept of the Day of Yahweh", JSS 4, 1959, 97–108; Old Testament Theology, II, 1965, 119–25; cf. also K.-D. Schunk, "Strukturlinien der Vorstellung vom Tag Yahwes" VT 14, 1964, 319 ff.; H. W. Robinson, Inspiration and Revelation in the Old Testament, 1946, 135–47, who gives a critique of Mowinckel).

