2. It is used above all for the face of God: (a) As the aspect of God that concerns man. Where the LXX speaks of the face of God, it is often referring to some relationship of God to man, e.g. his gracious turning to him, or his disappointed turning from him. If God lifts up or causes his face to shine upon Israel, it receives peace (i.e. salvation) thereby (Num. 6:25 f.). When God hides or turns away his face, it implies the withdrawal of grace (cf. Ps. 13:2; 104:29). Actions and reactions of God which either bring the good fortune of fellowship with God (Ps. 25:25) or an abiding under God's wrath (Lev. 17:10) are expressed by such anthropomorphic pictures. The possibility of seeing God's face is mentioned as the most exceptional possibility (Gen. 32:30, Peniel, the face of God; cf. also Gen. 16:13; Exod. 24:9 ff.; Deut. 4:12; Jdg. 6:22 f.). It is always stressed how dangerous this experience is. If a sinful man sees the holy God, he must die (Exod. 33:20; cf. Isa. 6:5). → Blessing.

In Exod. 33 three different traditions – Yahweh sends an angel as guide; a link with Yahweh through the Tent; Yahweh's pānîm accompanies the people – are linked together by the basic thought of the leading of the people after the departure from Sinai. In the third strand of tradition pānîm (Exod. 33:14 f.) appears uniquely hypostatized as a manifestation of Yahweh to Israel. This has led to divergent attempts at interpretation. Some understand "my pānîm" as "I myself", i.e. an emphasis on the personal presence of Yahweh. Others maintain that this passage justifies us in claiming that the priest used a mask in the cultus. Others interpret it to mean that in the cultus at the sanctuaries the face of Yahweh was present, i.e. the aspect of him turned manward. No single, certain interpretation can be offered.

(b) When God's face is mentioned in connection with the temple, the language is cultic. Extra-Biblical usage may have had an influence here. Among the nations surrounding Israel the face of the deity was seen and worshipped in that of the temple image. Since there was no image used in Israel's worship, the phrase could be used only in a metaphorical sense, when it was said that the worshipper sought God's face in the temple (Ps. 24:6; 42:2 (MT 42:3); Zech. 8:21 f. (MT and LXX); Mal. 1:9 (MT)). The gracious presence of God is meant, his turning to men which the Israelite sought especially in the temple. So to seek the face of God in the OT means to come near to God in → prayer. Finally, quite apart from the cultus, it has the general meaning of seeking fellowship with God. The psalmist urges Israel to do this "continually" in Ps. 105:4.

The literal meaning of shewbread (Exod. 25:30) is "bread of face" ("bread of the Presence", RSV). Such loaves were known in the heathen cults, where they served as food for the deity (cf. Jer. 7:18). When Israel took over the custom, the → bread (art. artos) was put with frankincense on the special table as a gift, not as food, before the face of God. See further Exod. 35:13; 39:36; Num. 4:7; 1 Sam. 21:6; 1 Ki. 7:48; 1 Chron. 9:32; 23:29; 28:16; 2 Chron. 2:4; 4:19; 13:11; 29:18; Neh. 10:33; Matt. 12:4; Mk. 2:26; Lk. 6:4; Heb. 9:2; Josephus, Ant., 3, 6, 6; 3, 10, 7.

(c) In Rab. Judaism man's highest hope is to see the face of God or of the šᵉkînâh, either in the hour of death and in the world to come after the days of the Messiah or even according to some opinions during the days of the Messiah. In the reflection of the divine light the face of the righteous will shine like the sun (cf. Dan. 12:3), but the godless will receive their punishment before the face of God. Contrast, however, R. Johanan b. Zakkai's fear on his deathbed (SB I 208; ML 478).

NT NT follows the OT usage, and prosōpon is used as follows:

1. (a) Lit. of man's face (e.g. Matt. 6:16 f.; 2 Cor. 11:20). (b) In various metaphorical expressions, e.g. "to fall on one's face" as a sign of respect and subjection (Matt. 17:6; Lk. 5:12; 1 Cor. 14:25), or "he set his face to go to Jerusalem" (Lk. 9:51) which expresses Jesus' immovable decision to go to Jerusalem. For Luke this marks a new period in Jesus' life.

(c) Face can stand for the whole person (2 Cor. 1:11; Gk. "many faces"), especially in the sense of respect of persons (Mk. 12:14 par.).

(d) Combined with prepositions – mostly in literal reproductions of Sem. expressions – e.g. "before thy face" (Mk. 1:2), "in the presence of" (Lk. 2:31).

(e) Face is used to refer to the surface of the earth (Lk. 21:35; Acts 17:26), the appearance of the sky (Matt. 16:3), and of plants (Jas. 1:11).

2. It is further used of the face of God and of Christ. The NT continues Rab. thought when it speaks of seeing God in the heavenly world. The angels of the "little ones" (Matt. 18:10) see the face of God. This is a circumlocution for God's care for the humble. In the heavenly sanctuary Christ appears for us before the face of God (Heb. 9:24). Thereby the heavenly sanctuary replaces the earthly temple and cultus. The NT reflects Heb. modes of thought and speech, in that it does not describe the appearance of anyone and so not that of Jesus.

For the believer the glory of God (→ Glory, art. doxa) has appeared in the face of Christ (2 Cor. 4:6). This verse is linked with the story of the transfiguration (in Matt. 17:2 Jesus' face "shone like the sun"). But Paul writes of the glorified, not the earthly Lord. Hence prosōpon is not the outward appearance, nor does it stand only for the person. It recalls the "face" of God in the OT. Christ "is the likeness of God" (2 Cor. 4:4; Jn. 12:45; 14:9), God's turning to us and his final revelation. The reference of the whole context to Exod. 34 makes this certain. The glory on Moses' face, derived from his meeting with God, was transient (2 Cor. 3:13). Hence he covered his face with a veil. Paul expands the picture to cover the whole OT. The veil which hid Moses' transient glory covers the whole OT, where Israel is concerned, so that they cannot see the glory of the promise and fulfilment in Christ (2 Cor. 3:14 f.). Otherwise Moses would serve them as a (negative) witness to Christ. Only when there is faith in Christ is the veil removed (2 Cor. 3:16). Here "face" stands for man's innermost being (as "heart" in 4:6, and "mind" in 3:15; 4:4). In spite of that, all knowledge by faith is only an imperfect anticipation of the future knowledge, "face to face" (1 Cor. 13:12). The servants of God will not see his face till they are in the new Jerusalem (Rev. 22:4; cf. Matt. 5:8).

3. prosōpon is also used in the compound words prosōpolēmpsia, prosōpolēmptēs, prosōpolēmpteō which are all compounded with a form of the verb lambanō (lit. take). This translates the Heb. nāśā', lift up the face of the one who has bowed humbly in greeting, i.e. to acknowledge him. God does not allow himself to be influenced by appearances or respect of persons (Deut. 10:17, in LXX thaumazō, esteem). Equally the earthly judge must refrain from all partiality (Lev. 19:15; Deut. 1:17; 16:19; cf. in the NT Mk. 12:14; Jude 16; Gal. 2:6). prosōpolēmpsia which first occurs in the NT means partiality or bias (Rom. 2:11; Eph. 6:9; Col. 3:25; Jas. 2:1). In Jas. 2:9 prosōpolēmpteō means to show partiality. These passages warn against common preferences (e.g. of the rich), pretences (eyeservice, Col. 3:22), self-deceit (Col. 3:25), disdain (e.g. of slaves), special religious claims (e.g. by the Jews). They are always based on the fact that God is impartial (ou prosōpolēmptēs, Acts 10:34) and acts impartially (aprosōpolēmptōs, 1 Pet. 1:17), and shows to all one and the same grace. E. Tiedtke

(a). Arndt, 728 f.; E. Lohse, prosōpon, TDNT VI 768 ff.; Moulton–Milligan, 553; Commentaries on 2 Corinthians by J. Denney, 1894, and P. E. Hughes, 1962, on 3:7–18; 4:6.
(b). H. Preisker, "Angesicht," BHHW I 93 f.

Faith, Persuade, Belief, Unbelief

The words dealt with here are basically concerned with that personal relationship with a person or thing which is established by trust and trustworthiness (including their negation). If this relationship comes about through persuasion or conviction, the vb. peithomai is used. The perf. tense pepoitha expresses the firm conviction and confidence that has come about. The words of the pistis group are derived from the same verbal stem. They denoted originally the faithful relationship of partners in an agreement and the trustworthiness of their promises. In a broader sense they came to denote the credibility of statements, reports and accounts in general, both sacred and secular. In NT Gk. they gained a special importance and specific content through their application to the relationship with God in Christ: the trusting acceptance and recognition of what God has done and promised in him.

πείθομαι

πείθω (peithō), convince, persuade; πείθομαι (peithomai), obey, believe; πέποιθα (pepoitha), be convinced, trust; πεποίθησις (pepoithēsis), trust, confidence; πειθός (peithos), persuasive; πειθαρχέω (peitharcheō), obey; πεισμονή (peismonē), persuasion; ἀπειθέω (apeitheō), be disobedient; ἀπειθής (apeithēs), disobedient; ἀπείθεια (apeitheia), disobedience; πιθανολογία (pithanologia), persuasive speech, art of persuasion.

CL 1. The stem peith- (pith-, poith-) has the basic meaning of trust (cf. Lat. fido, fides). The same stem is also the basis of the formations with pist- (→ pisteuō). Trust can refer to a statement, so that it has the meaning to put faith in, to let oneself be convinced, or to a demand, so that it gets the meaning of obey, be persuaded. The original intrans. act. peithō (trust) became trans., to convince, persuade (already in the time of Homer), first through the pass. (be convinced, persuaded). The meaning to trust was taken over with both the above-mentioned branches from the mid. pass. peithomai. Only the 2nd perf. pepoitha retains in the act. the original intrans. meaning (strictly, to have taken hold of trust with the effect continuing into the present). It has the present meaning of trusting firmly, relying upon. The mid. pass. of the 1st perf. pepeismai (strictly, to have been convinced, or to have convinced oneself) likewise means to be convinced. The noun pepoithēsis (trust, confidence), derived from pepoitha is late Gk.

2. The adj. peithos (persuasive), derived from peithō is found nowhere in Gk. except 1 Cor. 2:4, where another reading has the noun peithō (art of persuading, see under 4) which is common in Gk. but does not occur elsewhere in the NT. From the same stem as peithō comes pithanos (convincing, trustworthy) and from it pithanologia (persuasive speech, art of persuasion) for persuading through appearances in contrast to apodeixis (proof, cf. Plato, Theaet., 162e; 1 Cor. 2:4). The earliest and in the NT sole occurrence of peismonē (persuasion, persuasiveness) is Gal. 5:8. The vb. peitharcheō (obey) is current from the time of Sophocles, and is derived from the adj. peitharchos (obeying a superior, the government, or an authority [archē]).

3. apeitheō (be disobedient) and apeitheia (disobedience) are derived from apeithēs (disobedient) also in classical Gk.

4. The active meaning convince, persuade, is especially characteristic of Gk. thought. It is significant that Peitho (art of persuading, see above 2) is regarded as a goddess. But peithō can also extend the meaning of persuade to include lead astray, corrupt. The mid. pass. meaning of trust, rely on, can also refer to God in secular Gk. From the meaning to allow onself to be convinced comes the variant to have faith (in another). From the meaning let oneself be persuaded comes the use in the sense of follow (another), be obedient, obey (Plato, Apol., 29d: "I will obey God rather than you"). On pepoitha cf. Aeschylus, Eum., 826, where Athene says to the chorus of the Eumenides: kagō pepoitha Zēni ("I too rely upon Zeus").

OT 1. In contrast to Gk., Heb. has no word for persuade, convince. In the few places, where tenses other than the perf. of peithō and peithomai occur in the LXX (chiefly in 2 and 4 Macc. and Tob.), there is no Heb. equivalent.

2. It is otherwise in the case of the perf. pepoitha which occurs about 80 times for the Heb. bāṭaḥ, trust, rely upon. This Heb. word and its derivatives are translated almost as often by pepoitha as by the vbs. elpizō and epelpizō and the noun elpis (→ hope). On the other hand, pepoitha is used to translate several other Heb. words (especially ḥāsâh, seek refuge, which in fact is translated twice as often by epelpizō. pepoitha serves to draw attention to the object and ground of Israel's hope, especially in Isa. 10:20, Jer., proverbial wisdom and (together with the more common elpizō) in the Pss. expressing trust (cf. Pss. 24[25]:2; 56[57]:1). This lies in God's → covenant fidelity, → election and → promise. It is to be distinguished from trust in men, idols and material goods (cf. Isa. 17:7 f.; 32:3; 36:6; Jer. 7:4; Ps. 117[118]:8). The noun pepoithēsis occurs in the LXX only once for the Heb. biṭṭāḥôn, trust (derived from bāṭaḥ), in 1 Ki. 18:19.

3. The noun pithanologia, persuasive speech, art of persuasion, which corresponds to peithō does not occur at all in the LXX. And the vb. peitharcheō, obey, does not occur apart from 1 Esd. 8:94; Sir. 30:38 (33:28) and Dan. 7:27. On the other hand, apeitheō, and in one instance apeithēs, are used to characterize the people who disobey God, especially in Deut. and Isa. It translates various Heb. vbs. including mārâh (Deut. 1:26; 9:23 f.; Isa. 3:8; cf. Philo, Spec.Leg., 5, 741d: "they punish him who is not only disobedient [ton apeithounta] to the law but also to God").

NT In the NT peithō, peithomai and pepoitha are quite common; they occur most frequently in Paul (22 times) and Acts (17 times). But they are absent from Mk., Jn., 1 and 2 Pet., Jude and Rev. as well as 1 Cor., Eph., Col., 1 Thess., 1 Tim. and Tit. Examination of the passages shows that Paul – like the LXX – used the active forms only rarely (twice), but the perf. forms of pepoitha quite frequently. Otherwise these occur only in quotations in Matt. and Heb. and twice in Lk. The noun pepoithēsis is found 6 times in Paul. peitharcheō occurs only in Acts (3 times) and Tit. 3:1.

The negative forms are relatively rare. Whereas the vb. apeitheō occurs 13 times (5 times in Rom., and 4 times in 1 Pet.), the noun and the adj. are each found only 6 times. Apart from Rom. 1:30, the adj. occurs only in the Pastoral Epistles, Lk. and Acts. apeitheia occurs twice each in Rom., Eph. and Heb.

1. The range of meaning of the vb. may be ascertained by looking at its tenses with regard to the beginning, end and duration of the action concerned.

(a) The act. form of peithō in the aor. (e.g. epeisan, Matt. 27:20; cf. Acts 12:20; 14:19; 19:26) always has the meaning of persuade, induce, and even to mislead or corrupt. But it has no special theological significance.

By contrast, the imperfect expresses the attempt to influence a person to adopt a particular attitude or action. It is characteristic that Acts uses the vb. to describe Paul's preaching to the Jews of the synagogue (→ Church, art. synagōgē) and the → Greeks (→ Conversion, art. prosēlytos). Here Paul was not trying to evince faith in the one God, but to persuade them of the newly given grace in Christ (Acts 13:43) through teaching (18:4; → Think, art. dialogizomai). The same applies to the pres. part. Acts 19:8 describes how Paul argued for three months in the synagogue attempting to convince the Jews of the kingdom of God (cf. 28:31, where his activity is also described as "teaching about the Lord Jesus Christ").

(b) The pres. ind. denotes not only the duration of the action but the fact that it is taking place at the present time. Here the context determines the meaning. In 3 passages the meaning is disputed (Acts 26:28; 2 Cor. 5:11; and Gal. 1:10). E. Haenchen translates Acts 26:28: "Soon you will convince me to play the Christian" (The Acts of the Apostles, 1971, 689). The Gk. text reads en oligō me peitheis Christianon poiēsai, lit. "In a little you persuade me to make a Christian." Here the vb. poiēsai is a technical theatrical term, used of playing a part. These words of the Jewish King Agrippa are not to be taken ironically. They show how he came within a hair's breadth of conversion. He was a Jew, and this suggests that peitheis is used here in the sense of 1 (a) above. On the other hand, the expression chosen here indicates just how far he was from taking the step. Some manuscripts have genesthai (become) instead of poiēsai, but these are inferior. The better manuscripts do not speak directly of the possibility of Agrippa becoming a Christian. F. F. Bruce translates the passage: "In short, you are trying to persuade me to act the Christian" (The Acts of the Apostles, 1952², 449). Agrippa sees himself in a dilemma. If he says that he rejects the prophets (v. 27), his reputation for orthodoxy is gone. But if he agrees with Paul's reasoning, he realizes that he is being manoeuvred into a position of public agreement with Paul. For other interpretations, see R. Bultmann, TDNT VI 2, n. 4, and Arndt, 645.

2 Cor. 5:11 and Gal. 1:10 are the only instances in Paul of the act. use. They probably do not refer directly to persuasion to accept the gospel. Paul had to defend himself against the claims of spurious authorities, who were working against him. In 2 Cor. 5:11 he says: "Therefore, knowing the fear of the Lord, we persuade men." In Gal. 1:10 he asks: "Am I now trying to persuade [RSV "seeking the favour of"] men or God?" In these passages he is stressing the fact that he strives to convince men by argument, not because it was necessary for his personal authority, but for the sake of the gospel that he proclaimed.

(c) The fut. act. comes very close to the aor. in meaning to persuade. It also means to reassure. Perhaps there is the thought of corruption in the background of Matt. 28:14 (cf. RSV, Arndt. "satisfy"). In 1 Jn. 3:19 ("By this we shall know that we are of the truth, and reassure [peisomen] our hearts before him" RSV) it is a question of true self-knowledge. The point is a double one. On the one hand, it is a question of being in the truth or not, and this is shown by whether love is shown in action. On the other hand, it is a question of whether God will condemn us. These two points are not simply parallel. Someone who is merely of the truth could still condemn himself before God, although this does not inevitably follow (cf. v. 21). If his heart drives him to it, he may still reassure it before God. For God knows better than ourselves not only about our guilt, but also that which he has newly created in us.

2. The mid. and pass. deponent peithomai corresponds to the act. voice and stresses the result and outcome of the influence. This applies to the aor., imp., and fut. which occur only in the Lucan writings in the NT.

(a) The aor. occurs 3 times. Acts 17:4 shows the success of Paul's teaching in the synagogue (cf. v. 2; see above 1 (a)). Acts 5:39 (RSV v. 40 "So they took his advice [epeisthēsan de autō]") refers to the council of Jewish leaders being persuaded by Gamaliel. It is characteristic of Acts that it uses the same form of the vb. in both passages, as also in Acts 23:21 where warning is given (though without theological significance) against being influenced by false advice. The dat. following the vb. refers to the person who is exerting influence. The following are possible meanings: to be persuaded by someone, to follow someone, to yield to (cf. Acts 23:21 RSV), to listen to someone in the sense of hearken and obey.

(b) Similarly, the imp. means to heed, to pay attention to someone's words, attitudes or actions, so that one is influenced by them. According to Acts 27:11, the centurion "paid more attention [mallon epeitheto]" (RSV) to the captain and owner of the ship than to Paul. Again, with reference to the behaviour of the Roman Jews, Acts 28:24 expresses a contrast: "And some were convinced [epeithonto] by what he said, while others disbelieved [ēpistoun]" (RSV). peithomai here has the meaning of believe (Paul's words). Thus the vb. can also come to denote following a leader, as in the case of Theudas and Judas the Galilean (Acts 5:36 f.).

(c) In the only passage in the fut., Lk. 16:31, where it follows the conjunction ean (if) denoting a hypothetical or possible fut. act, the vb. means to be convinced. "If they do not hear Moses and the prophets, neither will they be convinced if some one should rise from the dead." In Acts Paul seeks to convince the Jews by arguments which any Jew must accept. Lk. 16:31 expresses the corollary. Where agreement to such argument is refused, a man will not be convinced even though someone should rise from the dead.

(d) The pres. has no particular theological significance in Acts 21:14 and 26:26, where it means to be persuaded, and Heb. 13:18 ("we are sure" RSV). In other places it means to obey or follow (Gal. 5:7; Heb. 13:17; Jas. 3:3). In Rom. 2:8 disobedience (→ apeitheō below) to the truth is seen as being grounded in subjection to unrighteousness. This is abolished by faith. But where there is a renewed regard for the law, disobedience to the truth necessarily follows (cf. Gal. 5:7; → peismonē below).

(e) The perf. always denotes a situation in which the act of examining and weighing up has been concluded, and where a firm conviction has already been reached (cf. Lk. 20:6; Rom. 8:38; 14:14; 15:14; 2 Tim. 1:5, 12; Heb. 6:9). This can refer to convictions concerning facts or people (e.g. that John was a prophet, Lk. 20:6), as well as to the all-embracing, unshakeable certainty that has been attained in faith (Rom. 8:38).

3. The 2nd perf. pepoitha with the prep. epi always means to depend on, trust in, put one's confidence in. It indicates a conviction as the basis for further thought and action. Thus it can refer to one's trust in one's own righteousness (Lk. 18:9; negatively in 2 Cor. 1:9; cf. the addition in the variant reading in Mk. 10:24; and Lk. 11:22). But it can also refer to the trust in a good sense which can be placed in someone. Thus Paul expressed confidence in the church (2 Cor. 2:3; 2 Thess. 3:4, "in the Lord"; cf. Gal. 5:10; Phil. 2:24). However, in both the former passages the vb. can be understood in relation to the following hoti, so that, as in other passages, pepoitha hoti can be translated to be confident that. epi, like eis in Gal. 5:10, means "in view of." Thus the confidence would refer not so much to the persons as to the circumstances brought about by God in which Paul trusts "in the Lord", such as God's faithfulness in completing the work that he has begun. The trust is ultimately in the Lord himself. At the same time this expresses a hope in the future, a fact indicated by the use of pepoitha in the LXX and also Phil. 1:25 and 2.24. Here Paul expresses his conviction that he will survive for the sake of the work, and will come again to Philippi. pepoitha is followed by the prep. en (in) only in Phil. 3:3 f., where it is set in contrast to glorying in (en) Christ Jesus. Here, as with the construction with epi, the meaning is to have confidence in. Paul disclaims all confidence in the flesh; rather, he glories in Christ.

Confidence is also expressed by forms of pepoitha followed by the infin. "If anyone is confident that he is Christ's [ei tis pepoithen heautō Christou einai], let him remind himself that as he is Christ's, so are we" (2 Cor. 10:7; cf. Rom. 2:19). When followed by the dat., the vb. means simply to trust, believe in (Phil. 1:14, but see RSV; Phlm. 21). The entrusting of oneself to God that is characteristic of the Pss. finds direct expression only in OT quotations that are applied to Jesus. Matt. 27:43 and Heb. 2:13 (cf. Isa. 8:17) suggest that the personal attitude and hope of the OT prayer is fulfilled in him. Trust in God now coincides with faith in Jesus Christ. This also applies to 2 Cor. 1:9, where trust in God who raises the dead comes from faith in the risen Christ.

4. The noun pepoithēsis, confidence (Phil. 3:4), has the same meaning as the vb. in vv. 3 f. It is likewise connected with en sarki, "in the → flesh", and refers to the self-confidence that grows out of observance of the law. On the other hand, 2 Cor. 3:4 refers to the confidence that grows out of the apostolic commission (cf. vv. 5 f.). The latter leads Paul to describe the Corinthian church as his letter of commendation written by the Spirit of God on hearts of flesh (v. 3). Confidence in men (2 Cor. 8:22, where the preposition eis is used for "in"; cf. Gal. 5:10) is set in the context of confidence in God (pros ton theon, 2 Cor. 3:4). The confidence expressed in 2 Cor. 1:15 is to be understood in the light of the → hope spoken of in vv. 13 f. The confidence of 2 Cor. 10:2 is grounded in Paul's commission as an → apostle (see above 2 Cor. 3:4), which enabled him to risk coming into violent conflict with certain people. In Eph. 3:12 this boldness is further defined by the words "and confidence of access [kai prosagōgēn en pepoithēsei]" in which the kai (and) is epexegetic.

5. On the adj. peithos (persuasive) and the noun peithō (persuasiveness) it may be said that the meaning of 1 Cor. 2:4 remains the same, whether it is read as en peithois sophias logois ("in persuasive words of wisdom") or en peithoi sophias ("with the persuasiveness of wisdom", cf. Arndt, 644; to which some manuscripts add logois or logōn, i.e. through words). On the textual difficulties see C. K. Barrett, The First Epistle to the Corinthians, 1968, 62, 65, who thinks that Paul himself was largely responsible for the problem by coining the word peithos meaning persuasive from the vb. peithō (persuade). In either case it is clear that the Corinthians did not come to faith through human → wisdom and its ways of persuading. The latter are described in Col. 2:4 as pithanologia ("beguiling speech" RSV; "persuasive speech", "art of persuasion", "plausible [but false] arguments", Arndt, 663), by which people are deceived.

6. The noun peismonē in Gal. 5:8 ("persuasion" RSV) may be understood actively in relation to peithō. But there may be here a play on words with peithesthai in the preceding verse which means to obey: "Who hindered you from obeying the truth? This persuasion is not from him who called you." The result of this persuasion which did not come from God would thus be that the Galatians would no longer allow themselves to be persuaded by the truth. The play on words is not reflected by the Eng. tr. R. Bultmann prefers to translate v. 8 by "This following, or obedience, does not come . . ." (TDNT VI 9) which would thus preserve the play on words. But on this see H. Schlier, Der Brief an die Galater, 1962[12], 236; E. D. Burton, Galatians, ICC 1920, 282 f. The text is uncertain. Some manuscripts read: "Who has hindered you? Obey no one in not obeying the truth" (cf. R. Bultmann, TDNT VI 4, n. 11; cf. Funk § 488 1 (b)).

7. The vb. peitharcheō (obey) is used for obedience both to God (Acts 5:29; cf. above CL 2 on peithomai; 5:32) and to men (Acts 27:21 = peithomai, v. 11). In Tit. 3:1 it is identified with being submissive to rulers and authorities.

8. (a) apeithēs (disobedient) occurs in Acts 26:19 in the form of a double negative designed to stress Paul's obedience: "Wherefore, O King Agrippa, I was not disobedient to the heavenly vision." In Rom. 1:30 and 2 Tim. 3:2 it occurs in the catalogues of vices in connection with disobedience to parents.

(b) In all other passages, where apeithēs, the noun apeitheia (disobedience) and the vb. apeitheō (be disobedient) occur, the context suggests disobedience to God, mostly in contrast with faith. This is the sense of the LXX (cf. Lk. 1:17 which speaks of Elijah being sent to turn "the disobedient to the wisdom of the just"; cf. Mal. 4:5). It is exemplified by Jn. 3:36; Acts 14:2; 19:9 (of disbelieving Jews; see above NT 1 (b) on peithō and peithomai); Rom. 15:31; Eph. 2:2; 5:6 (with the contrast between the "sons of disobedience" [non-Christians] and "sons of the light", v. 8); and Tit. 1:16. 1 Pet. presents a distinctive usage in the way it qualifies disobedience as disobedience to the → word or to the → gospel (1 Pet. 2:8; cf. v. 7 v.l.; 3:1; 4:17; on Rom. 2:8 see above 2). It also speaks of the defective obedience of men before the flood despite the patience of God (1 Pet. 3:20).

Heb. 3:18 and 4:6 hold up to Christians (cf. v. 11) the behaviour of the generation in the wilderness as a warning example. The man will come to grief who looks back, or stops his ears to God's instructions for the present time, and is not ready to receive the future from the hands of God in utter trust. Because of her faith Rahab the harlot was unlike the latter, and she did not meet with the destruction which came upon the disobedient inhabitants of Jericho (Heb. 11:31). The Gentile Christians were themselves once likewise disobedient (Rom. 11:30; cf. Tit. 3:3). But now through the apeitheia of Israel in which God's covenant people did not as a whole wish to enter the new covenant in Jesus Christ (cf. Rom. 10:21), they have received mercy. Israel's disobedience is now intensified through their opposition to the mercy that has come upon the Gentiles (11:31). But in turn they may through all this now receive mercy. (This third now has been changed to "later" or omitted altogether in some manuscripts.)

The climax of the argument of Rom. 9–11 shows that this lack of trust, obedience, faith, and acceptance of God's will is the normal situation of man (Rom. 11:32). Only God himself can save man by having mercy on him and granting him faith.

O. Becker

πίστις

πίστις (pistis), faith; πιστεύω (pisteuō), believe; πιστός (pistos), pass. trustworthy, faithful, act. trusting, believing;

πιστόω (pistoō), rely, convince; ἀπιστία (apistia), unbelief; ἀπιστέω (apisteō), disbelieve; ἄπιστος (apistos), unbelievable, faithless, unbelieving.

CL 1. (a) In classical Gk. literature pistis means the trust that a man may place in men or the gods (Hesiod, Works, 372; Soph., OT, 1445), credibility (Soph., OC, 611), credit in business (Dem., 36, 57), guarantee (Aesch., Frag. 394), proof (Democ., 125), or something entrusted (IG 14, 2012 A 23). Similarly, pisteuō means to trust something or someone (Hdt., 1, 24; Aesch., Pers., 800 ff.). It can refer to and confirm legendary tales (Hdt., 4, 96) and mythical ideas (Plato, Grg., 524a). In the construction pisteuō tini ti it means to entrust something or someone to someone (Xen., Mem., 4, 4, 17). With reference to people, pisteuō means to obey (Soph., OT, 625). The pass. means to enjoy trust (Xen., Anab., 7, 6, 33). The adj. pistos means trusting (Theognis, 283), trustworthy (Hom., Il., 2, 124). to piston means dependability or the faithfulness of those bound through an agreement (Aesch., Ag., 651; Xen., Anab., 2, 4, 7). The vb. pistoō has the meaning of binding someone or oneself to be faithful (Soph., OC, 650). In the pass. it means to be sure, to trust (Hom., Od., 21, 217 f.). The pistis word-group has a special colouring, where it refers to believing doxa (opinion). In such a case dependability is limited (cf. Plato, Phd., 107b).

apistia means mistrust (Theognis, 831), unreliability (Soph., OC, 611), and incredibility (Hdt., 1, 193). apisteō means to be mistrustful to disbelieve (Hom., Od., 13, 339), and particularly to be disobedient (Soph., Ant., 219, 381 f.). apistos means distrustful (Hom., Od., 14, 150), undependable (Thuc., 1, 120, 4).

(b) Originally the word-group denoted conduct that honoured an agreement or bond. It had a social orientation, and its use indicated misconduct by implication. In order to obtain a pause in battle, it was necesssary to make agreements pledging fidelity (Hom., Il., 2, 124: horkia pista). Disappointed confidence led to the accusation: "There is nothing trustworthy in women" (Hom., Od., 11, 456). The critical situation revealed fidelity. Hence, experience of faithfulness and unfaithfulness belongs to the idea of faith from the beginning.

(c) The idea had religious overtones at a very early date. The gods vouch for the validity of an alliance or treaty (Hom., Il., 2, 115 ff.; note the importance of the oath). The words can also be applied directly to the divinity in cases of the trustworthiness of an oracle. The pistis word-group plays an important part in questions of the power of the gods to save in face of threatening danger (Aesch., Sept., 211 f.), the unfathomable sovereignty of God ("He who hears the word of God and does not obey is out of his mind," Eur., Iph. Taur., 14, 75 f.), and the power of God to direct a man's fate against his will (Soph., OT, 1445). In such case unquestioned obedience to the will of God is required of men.

(d) Faith is given unique expression in the enthusiastic piety of Empedocles of Agrigentum (5th cent. B.C.). He appeared as an immortal god, pointing the way of salvation (Frag. 112), demanding faith in the sense of assent to divine revelations, in his teaching on cosmology and metempsychosis (Frag. 114 ff.). Faith and recognition of the authoritatively proclaimed revelation were the same (Frag. 4, 5).

To the end of the classical era belong the inscriptions of the temple of Asclepius in Epidaurus which received their present form between 350 and 300 B.C. Here too faith is called for, in particular in the miraculous power of God (cf. R. Herzog, Die Wunderheilungen von Epidauros, 1931).

2. (a) In the Hel. period during the struggle with scepticism and atheism pistis acquired the sense of conviction as to the existence and activity of the gods. It took over the place of the older nomizō (deem, hold, believe that; cf. Plut., De superstitione, 11; Pericles, 32; Amatorius, 13). The didactic element now emerged as the general and basic meaning. pistis as faith in God stood for theoretical conviction. But stress was laid on the belief that life was constituted in accordance with this conviction. To that extent pistis could assume the practical features of the older eusebeia (piety; cf. Plut., De sera numinis vindicta, 3; De Pythiae Oraculis, 18). The tension between the visible and invisible, the physical and spiritual world likewise left behind it clear traces in discussion. The result was a materialized concept of faith which in the philosophically articulate doctrinal system of Neo-Platonism called for a definite, intellectualistic conviction, conditioned by tradition (Plotinus, Enneads, 1, 3, 3; 5, 8, 11; Porphyry, Ad Marcellam, 21 ff.).

(b) The Stoic understanding of pistis is particularly important. Here the philosopher expressed his recognition of the divine ordering of the world, the centre of which was himself as an autonomous moral person (Epict., 2, 14, 11–13). pistis reveals the essence of man (Epict., 2, 4, 1). Man's fidelity to his moral destiny leads to fidelity towards others (Epict., 2, 4, 1–3; 2, 22).

(c) In the mystery religions faith denotes abandonment to the deity by following his instruction and teaching, and by putting oneself under his protection (Apul., Met., 11, 25–28; P. Oxy., 11, 1380, 152). In the Corpus Hermeticum of syncretistic, Platonic revelations of the 2nd and 3rd centuries A.D., faith is a higher form of → knowledge. It thus belongs to the realm of nous (→ Reason, Mind). In a mystical way man is led out of the realm of the Logos, until his spirit comes to rest in the knowledge of faith. He thus participates in the divine (Corp. Herm., 9, 10; Ascl., 29). Besides Judaism and Christianity, the mystery religions stand out in their demand of faith in their divinities, and the revelations and teaching delivered by them (e.g. the cult of Isis and Osiris). In this way salvation (which in the mystery religions was equated with divinization) was promised to the believer. To the background of Judaism and Christianity probably belong the "divine sons" (→ Child, art. hyios) who appeared with express claim to revelation and who thus presented an alternative to Christianity. All had the same demand to hand: "Believe, if you would be saved, or begone" (Origen, Contra Cels, 6, 11).

3. In secular Gk., therefore, this group of terms represents a broad spectrum of ideas. It is used to express relations between man and man, and also to express relationship with the divine. The particular meaning is determined by the prevailing philosophical and religious influences. Originally it had to do with binding and obligations. But Stoicism made out of it a theoretically based law of life which brought the individual man into harmony with the cosmos. There was also a dangerous development in which pistis was demanded in response to a claim to revelation which was not subject to any control.

OT 1. The Concept of Faith. (a) In Heb. the root 'āman in the niph. means to be true, reliable, faithful. It can be applied to men (e.g. Moses, Num. 12:7; servants, 1 Sam. 22:14; a witness, Isa. 8:2; a messenger, Prov. 25:13; prophets, 1 Sam 3:20).

But it can also be applied to God himself who keeps his covenant and gives grace to those who love him (Deut. 7:9). Particular stress is laid on the word of God (or men) preserving its dependability and being confirmed by subsequent action (1 Ki. 8:26; 1 Chron. 17:23 ff.; in the case of men, Gen. 42:20). In many passages the niph. acquires the meaning of to be entrusted with (Num. 12:7; 1 Sam. 3:20; Hos. 12:1). In an ancient strand of tradition which goes back to an original promise (2 Sam. 7:8 ff.), the Davidic dynasty is called "an established house." This state of being confirmed does not rest upon the qualities of the members of the dynasty or upon human measures, but upon the action of God which is initiated by his promise (2 Sam. 7:16; 1 Sam. 25:28). The niph. of 'āman thus gives expression to an unalterable fact that future generations could – and must – reckon with, despite every change of fortune in history.

A related idea is expressed by the root bāṭaḥ (LXX pepoithenai; elpizō → hope) with the meaning to trust, rely upon. The negative evaluation of such action is dominant: men trust in false security (Hab. 2:18), or set their hope on something false (Hos. 10:13). But it was also early on applied to Yahweh, the true ground of security (Jer. 39:18; 2 Ki. 18:30).

(b) Later the root bāṭaḥ was assimilated in meaning to the root 'āman. Basic for the OT idea of faith are the statements of Exod. 4:1–9, 27–31. The question is how will Moses assert his authority as the one sent by God before the people. In reply to Moses' objection that they will doubt his commission, God promises three miracles through which he confirms his authority, whereupon the people believe in Moses' mission and the coming redemption. Faith is here related to a mission which is expressly confirmed by divine authentication. Faith in the word is inseparable from the attitude assumed to the envoy.

(c) The absolute use in Isaiah is pointed. In the confrontation with Ahaz in view of the political threat, Isaiah dares to say: "If you will not believe, surely you shall not be established" (Isa. 7:9). The survival of the people lay alone in firm trust in the eternal God. Political action was called for which corresponded to this trust. Isa. 28:16 contains the saying about Zion's foundation: "Behold, I am laying in Zion for a foundation a stone, a tested stone, a precious cornerstone, of a sure foundation: 'He who believes will not be in haste' " (RSV). In the coming catastrophe only the believer will be sure of divine protection. The prophet himself is an example of believing trust: "I will wait for the Lord, who is hiding his face from the house of Jacob, and I will hope in him" (8:17). The tense hope in Yahweh (here linked with other vbs.) is directed to the future. Moses was a leader to a salvation the way of which was the way of faith. The prophets stood in the midst of national catastrophe as spokesmen for the God who had placed them in an almost hopeless situation. The faith which is set before the people is the way of deliverance from catastrophe to a future beyond the disaster.

(d) Besides the above passages from Isa., Gen. 15:6 is important for the connection between the OT and the NT (cf. Rom. 4:3, 9, 22 f.; Gal. 3:6; Jas. 2:23). The passage speaks of Abraham's faith as his readiness to lay hold of the rich promises of God. He made the word of God his security and base. The "reckoning" of faith constituted a declaratory act, which was formerly customary with the priests. God treats this trust of Abraham as the behaviour appropriate to the covenant relationship. In fellowship with God there lies a claim which man fulfills when he trusts.

The statement in Gen. 15:6 does not describe Abraham's entire relationship with God. But in view of a particular situation God's gracious, overarching judgment was pronounced over him. G. von Rad holds that the text originated at a time in which the question of faith was already known (Genesis, 1961, 179 f.; Old Testament Theology, I, 1962, 170 f., 379 f.).

(e) For Jewish and Christian tradition, the prophetic context of Hab. 2:3 f. is important. The vision granted by God is expressly confirmed. It is preserved for the end, and will not fail to appear. The "arrogant man" is expressly condemned by God's word; but life is promised to the "righteous" in view of his faithfulness. It is understood that the "arrogant man" stands on the side of the hostile world power and the "righteous" on that of the people of Judah. But textual criticism of the process of tradition has shown that already very early the divine sentence was applied to the devout individual (see further K. Elliger, Studien zum Habakuk-Kommentar vom Toten Meer, 1953). "Faithfulness" and "faith" stand here close together in the Heb. term 'ᵉmûnâh. The idea is that of unwavering hold of the word of God against all contrary appearances. The sense is changed by the promise in the LXX translation: "the righteous will live by my faithfulness [ek pisteōs mou]."

(f) In a later stratum of the OT which expressly rivets the confession of the devout man to the Torah, the trustworthiness of the commandments is firmly underlined (Ps. 117:7; 119:66). The godly man is instructed by the commandments in the will of God; he knows that he receives wisdom and knowledge from them. In the temptations of life he can – as the servant of God (→ Son of God, art. pais theou) who directs his life in accordance with God's word – rely upon the trustworthiness of the → commandments. Post-exilic Torah-piety cannot be called legalistic without qualification. Torah (→ Law) and dāḇār (→ Word) were at the time living entities which were received by the godly in obedience and trust, and praised with thanksgiving and testimony. Stress on insight and knowledge of God points to an understanding of salvation in the wisdom tradition which in turn assigns a somewhat different role to faith (H.-J. Kraus). To sum up, it may be said that he'ᵉmîn and 'ᵉmûnâh describe a living act of trust in the OT, and also the dimension of human existence in a historical situation. The group of words does not step outside the realm of the personal. Special stress is laid on the future goal. The past was the starting-point but not the goal of trust. The whole emphasis falls on overcoming the opposition of the ungodly and the realization of the divine purpose. Above all, it is clear in the prophets that faith must pass through extreme need and judgment, before it attains its goal in the salvation that lies in the future. In the first instance, faith in the OT is concerned with the fate of → Israel, although time and again the conduct of the individual can be decisive (cf. Gen. 15:6). The LXX translates the Heb. root 'āman uniformly by pisteuō and attempts to include in it the wealth of the OT group terms.

2. The Influence of the Terms in later Judaism. (a) In later Jud. the main emphasis fell on the behaviour of the individual. Sotah 48b preserves an aphorism of R. Eliezer b. Hyrcanus: "If anyone has bread in his basket and says, what shall I eat tomorrow? he belongs to those who are small in trust." He knows that faith is frugal (Prov. 30:8), and must overcome anxiety about having more than enough. "Small in faith" has become a deprecatory word-picture which represents failure. According to Taanith 8a, R. Ami taught: "Rain comes only on account of the people of faithfulness" (referring to Ps. 85:12). The term "men of faithfulness" ('anšê 'ᵉmānâh) in rab. literature is the mark of particular, definable, exemplary conduct. Complaint is made of its absence (Sotah 12b). Both the language and the way of thinking are different from the older strata of the OT. Faith is taught and inculcated in the manner of the wisdom writings. Because of its identity with faithfulness, faith remains the most important feature of → righteousness. The celebrated "Song of Faith" in Mek. Exod. 14:31 begins with the words: "Great is faith." It is concerned with the interpretation of Exod. 14:31: faith in God and his servant Moses. The man who believes in the shepherd of Israel believes in God himself who spoke and called the world into being. There follows praise of faith and its reward in the style of the wisdom literature. The "reward" is understood as the holy → Spirit who praises the saving acts of God in hymn and confession (Exod. 14:31; 15:1). Compared with the underlying OT text, the fact of the faith of the people stands in the foreground. There is a hope in the future, but the whole is lacking in enthusiasm.

(b) In the Qumran tradition the basic passage Hab. 2:4 was interpreted of "all doers of the law," and thus of the members of the community. God will save them from the house of judgment on account of their suffering and their faithfulness to the teacher of righteousness (1QpHab 8:1–3). The doing of the law is here the supreme and decisive idea. Faithfulness to the teacher, on the other hand, means holding to the knowledge revealed to him.

(c) The idea of faith played a particular role in later apocalyptic literature, because expectation of the future made a radical demand of faith. The doing of the law and the setting forth of the apocalyptic expectation began to be distinguished (2 Esd. 9:7; Syr. Bar. 57:2). Yet the close connection continued (Syr. Bar. 54:5, 21). The revelation of eschatological truth was at the same time the requital of obedience and disobedience. "For assuredly he who believes will receive reward" (Syr. Bar. 54:16). In these apocalyptic circles the concept of faith was used to help draw a dividing line between the true community and their opponents. In so doing, the ecstatic element receded behind the wisdom teaching tradition.

(d) In Hel. Judaism, faith as the confession of the OT revelation stood in opposition to the surrounding pagan world. It served to distinguish the difference with paganism and the gulf between them. At the same time, it raised the question of the roots of human knowledge in the area of common culture, life-style and wisdom. The contrast between the "godless" and the "righteous" and their differing views of life is typical of wisdom literature (Wis. 2:1 ff.; 3:1 ff.). Faith in wisdom belongs to the teaching about righteousness and wisdom (1:2; 3:9). It is expressed in fixed formulae: hoi pepoithotes, those who trust (→ peithomai); hoi pistoi, the faithful; hoi eklektoi, the elect (→ Elect, art. eklegomai). Faith stands in a fixed tradition; knowing and proving one's worth constitute the authentic testimony. 4 Macc. 15:24; 16:22; and 17:2 also contain a given element as a foundation (hē pros theon pistis, the faith in God). Faith enters the realm of philosophical interpretation and becomes an outlook and a virtue.

In Philo too faith in God can be trust, and the presupposition of all human existence and conduct. In his relation to God the wise man is the "believer"; for his part God bestows trust through his promises (Abr., 268 ff.; 272 ff.). As formerly in Judaism at large, faith is regarded as the source and sum of every other attitude.

As in 4 Macc., faith for Philo can also be taught and learnt. One can learn to distinguish between what changes and what does not (Leg. All., 2, 89). Josephus sets beside each other statements about the right view of God (orthē doxa) and trust in God (hē peri tou theou pistis), thus giving expression to the Hel. didactic and the OT traditions (Ap., 2, 169, 256). In the description of the messianic tempter, use of the pistis-group of words is naturally lacking.

(e) Samaritan religion stressed the meaning of faith more strongly than Judaism, as is shown by the role of Haggadah, teaching and confession. [On the Samaritans see further J. Macdonald, The Theology of the Samaritans, 1964.]

NT pistis in the NT and the call made to man in the name of God involve a renunciation of existing cult piety and rab. teaching. It was also the special mark of primitive Christian missionary preaching in the Hel. world (R. Bultmann, TDNT VI 203 ff., 208 f.). Nevertheless, there are several stages in the early Christian tradition which may not be overlooked. The preaching of John the Baptist set repentance at the centre with a resolute one-sidedness. The earliest preaching of the kingdom of God was also subordinate to the demand of repentance (Matt. 3:2; 4:17). It is impossible to demonstrate a demand for faith in the passages concerning John (cf. A. Schlatter, Der Evangelist Matthäus, 1963[6] 52–85; see also bibliography). And yet his overthrow of all contrived security (Matt. 3:9) is reminiscent of the tension between 'āman and false bāṭaḥ. Moreover, the mission of the Baptist raises the question of its legitimacy and thus also of faith (expressly in Matt. 21:25, 32). Nevertheless, despite all the implied elements of faith, neither Qumran, nor John the Baptist, nor yet the ancient zealot movements made any explicit demand of faith. Only in the post-Easter situation of the primitive Christian mission was the programme developed: "Repent and believe the gospel" (Mk. 1:15). The gospel became a fixed tradition of teaching which laid legitimate claim to be received by every hearer. The call to repent in the Baptist's preaching (Mk. 1:4) was taken up into the faith-preaching of the Hel. Christian tradition. It is this development that is to be examined in the following survey.

The NT use of the pistis/pisteuō word-group involves in the first instance the further development of the OT and Jewish tradition and the questions peculiar to it. The frequent use of pisteuō eis, believe in (e.g. Gal. 2:16; Jn. 1:12; 3:18), in the vocabulary of mission, is a striking departure from ordinary Gk. and the LXX. hoti-sentences (believe that . . .) which relate faith to a particular event in the history of Jesus (1 Thess. 4:14; Rom. 10:9), or to a christological statement (Jn. 20:31), are significant for the linguistic usage of the Hel. church. They involve the incorporation of a specific, historical content into the christological confession. "Repentance from dead works" and "faith in God" were important elements in the teaching of the primitive Christian catechism (Heb. 6:1). More important is the pointed use of pistis in the context of Pauline theology to denote the reception of Christian → proclamation and the saving faith which was called forth by the gospel (Rom. 1:8; 1 Thess. 1:8). For Paul pistis is indissolubly bound with proclamation. Early Christian missionary preaching thus brought faith into sharp focus.

1. Jesus and the Synoptic Tradition. The miracle stories often contain reference to the faith of the sick person or those around him (Mk. 2:5; 5:34, 36; 10:52; Matt. 8:10). What is meant is trust in the mission of Jesus and his power to deliver from trouble. These saving acts are performed in the service of his commission and are intended to confirm an existing faith. The question of faith is clearly bound up with these miracle stories. Jesus did not only seek to deliver people from physical need, but to make men witnesses of his saving work. It is not a matter of making a condition upon which he will act. Rather, he is concerned with the goal beyond the physical process. His intention was not to be a mere "healer", but to be a helper in God's name. He was therefore more concerned to ask for faith than to demand it. Man's trust presents the possibility for God to do his work. It is thus only a start and a first step to what was to be declared later by the Hel. church.

Mk. 6:5 f. contains an account of the opposition in Nazareth, Jesus' home town. Refusal to believe was so strong that he could perform no "mighty works". He confined himself to helping a number of sick individuals. If his saving work was bound up with faith, refusal to believe likewise brought conflict with him. The evangelists did not intend to convey the impression that it was absolutely impossible for Jesus to do "mighty works" here because of the unbelief of the Nazarenes. The accounts of Jesus' teaching contain several sayings which appear to go beyond the specific situation in which they occur (Mk. 9:23; 11:22 ff.; Lk. 17:5 f.; Matt. 17:20). The distinctive feature of these sayings about faith consists in the fact that they present the believer with unlimited possibilities, and that Jesus expressly summons his disciples to this boundless faith. Despite all the external similarities with rab. parallels, these sayings of Jesus stand isolated in the tradition. Their emphatic, confessional tone is at once apparent. Jesus himself lived by faith. He submitted to its possibilities, and encouraged men to follow his example (cf. J. Schniewind, Das Evangelium nach Markus, (1931) 1968, 120). The pictures of faith moving mountains (Mk. 11:23) and uprooting the fig tree (Lk. 17:6) confirm the word of power that is able to transform the created order. The instructions to the disciples in Mk. 11:24 f. show the connection in the teaching between the promise that rests upon the word of power and supplication. The supplication is the prerequisite of the word of power.

Faith in God means for Jesus being open to the possibilities that God presents (cf. Mk. 11:22: echete pistin theou, have faith in God). It also involves a reckoning with God which is not simply content with the thing given and the events that have come about. Expressions like echein pistin theou (to have faith in God, Mk. 11:22) and prostithenai pistin (increase faith, Lk. 17:5) show how Jesus' teaching on faith was subsequently understood. There was a special kind of faith in God or Jesus-faith. The antithesis between small and great (Lk. 17:6; Matt. 17:20) presents a contrast between the human attitude and the greatness of the promise. What takes place in man is small compared with the greatness that comes from God. However, Jesus spoke of a boundless faith as if of something new. He did not build on something that was already there, but upon something new. Yet his teaching was quite distinct from wild enthusiasm, because it was not divorced from constant wrestling with God and speaking with him. It stood within the circle of trust (Heb. biṭṭāḥôn) and knowledge (da'aṯ). Jesus turned to the individual, because his people as a whole were summoned to the decision of faith (Lk. 19:42). Statements about faith in the synoptic tradition are always qualified. One might see here later influences (cf. the imperative metanoeite, repent, in the light of the reception of the message of salvation). But it must not be forgotten that every summons and statement of Jesus contained the elements of faith, trust, knowledge, decision, obedience and self-direction. The preaching of Jesus cannot be understood apart from the many-sided aspects of faith (Heb. 'ᵉmûnâh) and trust (Heb. biṭṭāḥôn). The faith of Jesus was directed towards reality. It was deeply involved in the act of living, and was on a completely different plane from hypothetical abstractions.

2. Paul and the Pauline Tradition. Paul's teaching presupposes a continuity with the teaching of the Palestinian Jewish and the Hel. church. His calling by the risen Lord led him to grapple with the particular questions raised by the churches. He addressed his readers as "believers" (hoi pisteuontes, Rom. 1:16; 3:22; 4:11; 1 Cor. 1:21). Their turning to God is described as "believing" (pisteuein, 1 Cor. 15:2, 11). "Faith" means receiving the message of salvation and conduct based on the gospel (hē pistis, Rom. 1:8; 1 Cor. 2:5; 15:14, 17). It is explicitly a saving faith, based on the → cross of Jesus and his → resurrection (1 Cor. 15:3–4:11). The unique event is the divinely appointed norm which determines every theological statement and every aspect of Christian conduct. This is shown by the debate with the Jews and Judaism. Both started from the validity of the old → covenant and the → law. Both misunderstood the point of eschatological existence. It is also shown by the conflict with Hel. enthusiasm and gnosticism which misconstrued the future and eschatology. The → righteousness received by faith (ek pisteōs, dia pisteōs, eis pistin, of faith, through faith, in faith) is a gift of → grace. It contradicts all human boasting and undermines any attempt to base man's relationship with God on doing the law (Gal. 3:10 ff., 23 ff.; Rom. 3:27–31). The new → covenant supersedes the old both in its historical form and its effect on men (Gal. 3:23 ff.; 4:21–31; 2 Cor. 3:6). Faith recognizes the eschatological saving event which was anticipated in the call of → Abraham (Rom. 4:9 ff.; Gal. 3:17 ff.); it finds its goal in the Gentile mission (Rom. 4:17 ff.; Gal. 3:26–29). In the debate with Hel. enthusiasm and gnosticism which were based on a speculative understanding of baptism and the gift of the Spirit, Paul stressed historical facts and also his eschatological goal (2 Cor. 5:7). Since faith contains the element of being sustained (Heb. 'āman), as well as trust (Heb. bāṭaḥ), it merges into hope (Rom. 8:24; 1 Cor. 13:13).

Of special importance is the way Paul's teaching links together the triad of faith, hope and love (1 Thess. 3:5, 8; 1 Cor. 13:13; Col. 1:4 f.). It is not a matter of calling upon men to adopt Hel. virtues. Faith, hope and love are different aspects of the Christian life, derived from the kerygma, which form the basis of the life of the church. It is questionable whether non-Christian lists may be traced behind the Pauline triad (cf. however the fourfold list in Porphyry, Ad Marcellam, 24). If the gnostics were inclined to have "lists", the unspeculative character of the Pauline triad is all the more striking. The transforming eschatological prospective reveals the difference: faith and → hope come to fulfilment; → love alone determines the new aeon (1 Cor. 13:13; → Time, art. aiōn). The Pauline triad must not be regarded as charismatic gifts, for they are quite distinct from the latter. They are the practical application of the gospel itself and are obligatory for all members of the church without exception. Charismatic gifts have a structure different from the Pauline exposition of the triad (→ Grace, art. charis). On the other hand, Paul's endeavour to set out the fullness of gifts in his doctrine of the Spirit led him to include faith as a gift along with the others (1 Cor. 12:9). Justifying faith is not meant here. Nor perhaps is it the "all faith" that can remove mountains (1 Cor. 13:2). What is clear is that it is distinct from "the utterance of wisdom" and "the utterance of knowledge" which are mentioned previously (1 Cor. 12:8).

There is a tension between the invisible that cannot be seen (ta mē blepomena) and the visible. This points to the fact that we do not have the future at our disposal. There is a contrast between what is accessible to men and what is accessible to God alone (2 Cor. 4:18; 5:7). The invisible is not the Platonic immaterial world, but the goal of Christian existence perceived in faith and trust. The → cross of Christ is always the focal point of attack against legalism (Gal. 2:21) and speculative wisdom (1 Cor. 1:17). The resurrection opens the way to the gift of a new existence through baptism (Rom. 6:4; 2 Cor. 5:17).

Gal. 5:6 suggests a fixed formula: "For in Christ Jesus neither circumcision nor uncircumcision is of any avail, but faith working through love" (cf. 6:15; 1 Cor. 7:19). Through → baptism a new law has come into operation which transcends all previous differences. The will of God which was expressed in the demands of the law finds its eschatological fulfilment in love. This solution which Paul stresses heavily places faith in the context of eschatological transformation. It thus corresponds directly with Paul's doctrine of the → Spirit. His teaching on faith and the gift of the Spirit are brought together in baptism.

Another important aspect of Paul's teaching is his understanding of the life of faith, characterized by the tension between indicative and imperative (cf. R. Bultmann, Theology of the New Testament, I, 1952, 332 f.). The justified believer who has been baptized finds himself in a struggle between the → Spirit and the → flesh (Rom. 8:4 ff.; Gal. 5:16 ff.). He is called upon not to evade the tasks of the Spirit. Without obedience to the tasks of the Spirit, faith does not gain the power required in the conflict (1 Cor. 2:4).

The notion of being "weak" in faith (Rom. 14:1) introduces a particular discussion. It is bound up with making critical judgments. Paul does not evade this. For there is such a thing as growth in faith (2 Cor. 10:15), steadfastness in faith (1 Cor. 15:58), and self-critical examination as to whether one's own attitude springs from faith (cf. the important statement in Rom. 14:23). All these exhortations starkly show how faith is not only exposed to critical judgment, but submits itself repeatedly to it. The fact that the gospel finds its ultimate expression and foundation in the cross of Christ means that faith must constantly measure itself by this norm. Faith is dynamic movement which involves adjustment and self-adjustment. In this respect also the situation corresponds to the doctrine of the Spirit.

Eph. 4:3 calls for the maintenance of "the unity of the Spirit". The exhortation moves in a direction which was subsequently to prove momentous. Despite diversity of groups and differences of opinion, post-apostolic tradition endeavoured to maintain a general outlook. Eph. 4:5 speaks of "one faith" (mia pistis) together with "one Lord" and "one baptism", as if this triad reflected the baptismal act. The common outlook conferred by baptism is a process directed towards a goal (Eph. 4:13). It is guided by Christ himself.

3. The Johannine Tradition. Here, as in the Heb., the vb. comes to the forefront. The noun is found only occasionally in the epistles (1 Jn. 5:4) and Rev. (2:13, 19; 13:10; 14:12). The adj. pistos (the opposite of which is apistos) can be applied to Jesus, his witnesses and the church (Rev. 1:5; 2:10; 31; 1 Jn. 1:9; 20:27). The link with Semitic thought is clear especially in Rev. Faith, and the act of believing, assume the character of fidelity. Rev. also contains didactic lists of qualities and actions in which "works" (erga) predominate (2:2, 19), pistis here comes close to being the motive of faithfulness (2:19). It is basic for the Johannine tradition that the attitude of faith should be modelled on and formed by the testimony recognized by the church. This testimony is also important for the Gospel, where testimony is based on historical witness.

The thought-forms are different from elsewhere in the NT. Faith arises out of testimony, authenticated by God, in which signs also play a part. It is addressed to all men (Jn. 1:7). The claim to be true and truthful (→ Truth) underlines the fact that it is authenticated by God. Hence, the man who is of the truth hears this call of God (Jn. 18:37). Faith and knowledge (Jn. 6:69), knowledge and faith (Jn. 17:8; 1 Jn. 4:6), are not two processes distinct from each other, but instructive co-ordinates which speak of the reception of the testimony from different standpoints. Faith alone which receives the testimony possesses knowledge; he who knows the truth is pointed to faith. The co-ordination of knowledge and faith is anti-gnostic and anti-speculative. The hearer should understand that both are involved in salvation: acceptance of the testimony as well as personal response and reformation that conforms to the testimony. The distinction in Jn. 4:42 is important.

Faith and life are intimately connected. He who believes in the Son has the promise that he will not perish but have eternal life (Jn. 3:16 ff.; 11:25). The → promise points to a → fulfilment that lies already in the present. The enmity of the world towards God is not a metaphysical one; it is a reaction to the one sent by God (Jn. 3:20; 7:7; 15:18, 23). Even the disciples are drawn into it. The believer is able to endure this conflict with the world through no longer being subject to its motive power and by seeking the will of God (1 Jn. 2:15 ff.). The tension between the believer and the → world is not therefore seen in a speculative manner. The blessing pronounced on those who believe, even though they have not seen, belongs to the complex of questions raised by the Easter tradition. This is not intended as a criticism of the apostolic Easter tradition preserved in the synoptic gospels. Rather, it gives to later generations the same access to the joy of Easter. R. Bultmann takes the opposite view (The Gospel of John, 1971, 696).

The original saving event belongs in the past. A new set of problems arises with each new generation to whom are addressed the two sayings: "who have not seen and yet believe" (Jn. 20:29) and "without having seen him you love him" (1 Pet. 1:8). The double application to Jesus in 1 Pet. 1:8 ("without having seen him you love him; though you do not now see him you believe in him with an unutterable and exalted joy") suggests contact with the Johannine tradition. In general, however, the series of exhortations, in which faith and love are presented together in various Hel. contexts, come later (cf. 1 Tim. 2:15; 4:12; 6:11; 2 Tim. 2:22). But here too we do not have the simple appropriation of Hel. virtues. Rather, they represent further instruction for new situations in life which developed out of baptismal teaching.

4. The Understanding of Faith in the Rest of the NT. The linguistic usage of Acts frequently points back to formulae and expressions drawn from the terminology of mission. People come to faith in God (16:34), or in the Lord (5:14; 18:8).

Exhortations to faith are directly connected with the promise of eschatological salvation (16:31). There is also a new trust in Christian circles in "what is written" (24:14; 26:27). There thus grew up a way of looking at salvation history analogous to Jewish Hel. piety (cf. the continuity expressed in 2 Tim. 1:5).

Heb. represents an independent tradition of teaching. It makes extensive use of OT motifs, and draws upon the history of the patriarchs in connection with words of the pistis-group. In its exhortation, Heb. takes up the promise of faith and the warning against unbelief (Heb. 10:37 f. = Hab. 2:3 f.). Above all, Heb. 11:1 presents an instructive definition which combines OT and Hel. motifs: "Now faith is the assurance of things hoped for, the conviction of things not seen" (RSV). This is not a comprehensive summary of all the elements in faith, but of those which were fundamental for a church under persecution: assurance of what is hoped for and conviction of being led by what cannot be seen. The future and what is hidden from view are here closely connected. This definition introduces the survey of patriarchal history in ch. 11 and the picture of the NT church in 12:1–11. Jesus Christ appears as the "pioneer and perfecter of our faith" (Heb. 12:2). He has been made perfect by God and can now bring the struggle for perfection to its conclusion. As those given the promise, the people of God are charged with acting upon faith. The next world is the goal promised by the word of God. The tension between the here and now and the beyond which characterized Hel. tradition thus finds new expression.

The essence of Paul's thought reappears in the Pastoral Epistles. But it is restated in a context that is opposed to wild enthusiasm and gnostic false teaching. 1 Tim. 1:5 puts forward the thesis: "the aim of our charge is love that issues from a pure heart and a good conscience and sincere faith" (RSV). A tendency opposed to enthusiasm may be detected here. The command to love is reformulated so as to include faith. Soundness in faith (Tit. 1:13; 2:2) sets a new standard that distinguishes the Christian life from all false teaching. The overtones of philosophy and wisdom strengthen the self-awareness of a church that is consolidating itself.

As in the paraenetic tradition elsewhere, Jas. is conscious of the need to prove faith (1:3; cf. 1 Pet. 1:7). He demands renunciation of all conduct that conflicts with living faith and confession (1:6 ff.). For him, faith and obedient conduct are indissolubly linked. Faith understood merely as trust and confession is not able to save. Only through obedience (→ Hear, art. hypakoē) and conduct which fulfills the commandments of God does faith come to completion (Jas. 2:22). The opponent that Jas. has in mind does not attack faith but exempts himself from obedience.

([Ed.] Some scholars hold that James's teaching stands in conflict with that of Paul, especially on the question of → justification. It would seem that Jas. is replying to those who have taken Paul's doctrine of justification by faith out of context, assuming that Paul's repudiation of works as the ground of justification relieved them of the need for good works and a changed life. Thus they may have taken Rom. 4:3 and Gal. 3:6 (= Gen. 15:6) and ignored Rom. 6:1 ff.; 12:1 ff.; Gal. 5:15–26. It is striking that Jas. also quotes Gen. 15:6 in Jas. 2:23. He also illustrates his argument by referring to the example of → Abraham. But whereas Paul appeals to Abraham's belief in the promise of God which was the occasion of the verdict of justification in Gen. 15, Jas. appeals to the story in Gen. 22 which shows Abraham's willingness to sacrifice Isaac. Jas. 2:22 draws the conclusion: "You see that faith was active along with his works, and faith was completed by works." It may be said that for both Paul and James "justify" means to declare righteous. In the case of Paul, it is God who declares the believer righteous. In the case of Jas., it is a man's works which declare him righteous by showing that he is a man of faith. For the thesis which Jas. wishes to argue is that "faith by itself, if it has no works, is dead" (2:17).)

5. The Act, Structure and Content of Faith. Christianity is a unique faith-event. The act of faith, together with the thought-forms and structures bound up with it and the relevant relations and norms (the gospel, the kerygma, the word of God), have a special significance in Christianity. It is striking that in the early church there were other thought-forms which were originally autonomous (e.g. which started from the Spirit or from knowledge) and which continued to exist in tension with the faith-event. Christianity came to be seen as a faith-event, because this gave the most powerful expression to its understanding of the historical situation and its outlook in view of the claims of the gospel. It is only in relation to the gospel and the claims of the word of God that faith can declare what it has to say. The Christian knows that he has received grace and is summoned to follow a particular path towards a goal. The saving act of God goes before him. The basis of faith is God's revelation of himself. Faith remains subordinate to knowledge; but knowledge belongs to the substance of faith. O. Michel

→ Law, → Works

(a). J. B. Bauer and H. Zimmermann, "Faith," EBT I 237–43; G. Bornkamm, "Faith and Reason in Paul," Early Christian Experience, 1969, 29–46; R. Bring, "Paul and the Old Testament. A Study of Election, Faith, and Law, in Paul, with Special Reference to Rom. 9:30–10:30," StTh 25, 1971, 21–60; M. Buber, Two Types of Faith, 1961; R. Bultmann, Theology of the New Testament, I, 1952, 314–29; II, 1955, 70–92; and peithō, TDNT VI 1–11; J. Burchill, "On Faith in Paul," The Bible Today 53, 1971, 296–304; C. E. B. Cranfield, "Metron pisteōs in Rom. xii. 3," NTS 8, 1961–2, 345–51; and A Commentary on Romans 12–13, SJT Occasional Papers 12, 1965; C. H. Dodd, Gospel and Law, 1951; and The Interpretation of the Fourth Gospel, 1953, 179–86; G. Ebeling, The Nature of Faith, 1961; and Word and Faith, 1963; D. Evans, "Faith and Belief", Religious Studies 10, 1974, 1–20; G. Foley, Christ and Faith: Their Relationship in Contemporary Theology, 1971; V. P. Furnish, Theology and Ethics in Paul, 1968, 181–94; E. Fuchs, "Jesus and Faith," Studies of the Historical Jesus, 1964, 48–64; W. H. P. Hatch, The Pauline Idea of Faith in its Relation to Jewish and Hellenistic Religion, 1917; and The Idea of Faith in Christian Literature from the Death of St. Paul to the Close of the Second Century, 1926; P. Helm, The Varieties of Belief, 1973; J. Hick, Faith and Knowledge, 1966²; J. Hick, ed., Faith and the Philosophers, 1964; W. F. Howard, Christianity according to St. John, 1943, 151–73; H. Ljungman, Pistis: A Study of its Presuppositions and its Meaning in Pauline Use, 1964; P. S. Minear, The Obedience of Faith, 1971; J. Munck, Paul and the Salvation of Mankind, 1959, 196–209; E. D. O'Connor, Faith in the Synoptic Gospels: A Problem in the Correlation of Scripture and Theology, 1961; J. Painter, "Eschatological Faith in the Gospel of John," in R. Banks, ed., Reconciliation and Hope, (Leon Morris Festschrift) 1974, 36–52; J. J. O'Rourke, "Pistis in Romans," CBQ 35, 1973, 188–94; P. Stachin, "The Concept of Faith in the Johannine Writings," Logos 22, 1971, 115–30; T. F. Torrance, "One Aspect of the Biblical Conception of Faith," ExpT 68, 1956–7, 111–14; A. Weiser and R. Bultmann, pistis etc., TDNT VI 174–228.

(b). H. Binder, Der Glaube bei Paulus, 1968; M. E. Boismard, "La foi selon S. Paul," Lumière et Vie 22, 1955, 65–89; A. M. Denis, "Foi et Exégèse: Réflexions sur les Fondements Théologiques," NTS 20, 1973–74, 45–54; C. Dietzfelbinger, Paulus und das Alte Testament, ThEH 95, 1961; G. Eichholz, Glaube und Werk bei Paulus und Jakobus, ThEH 88, 1961; E. Grässer, Der Glaube im Hebräerbrief, 1965; R. Gyllenberg, Pistis, I–II, 1922; H.-W. Heidland, Die Anschauung des Glaubens zur Gerechtigkeit, BWANT 4. Folge 18, 1936; J. Huby, "La connaissance de foi dans S. Jean," RSR 21, 1931, 385–421; W. G. Kümmel, "Der Glaube im Neuen Testament, seine katholische und reformatorische Deutung," Heilsgeschehen und Geschichte, 1965, 67 ff.; W. Künneth, Glaube an Jesus? Die Begegnung der Christologie mit der modernen Existenz, 1962; O. Kuss, "Der Glaube nach den paulinischen Hauptbriefen," Theologie und Glaube 46, 1956, 1–26; C. Maurer, "Glaubensbindung und Gewissensfreiheit im Neuen Testament," ThZ 17, 1961, 107 ff.; O. Michel, "Grundfragen der Pastoralbriefe auf dem Grunde der Apostel und Propheten," Festschrift T. Wurm, 1948, 83 ff.; W. Mundle, Der Glaubensbegriff des Paulus, 1932; U. Neuenschwander, Glaube. Eine Besinnung über Wesen und Begriff des Glaubens, 1957; F. Neugebauer, "In Christus." Eine Untersuchung zum paulinischen Glaubensverständnis, 1961; F. Nötscher, Zur theologischen Terminologie der Qumrantexte, 1956; E. Pfeiffer, "Glaube im Alten Testament. Eine grammatische lexikalische Nachprüfung gegenwärtigen Theorien," ZAW 71, 1959, 151 ff.; C. H. Ratschow et. al., "Glaube", *RGG*³ II 1586 ff.; A. Schlatter, Der Glaube im Neuen Testament, (1905) 1963; T. Soiron, Glaube, Hoffnung, Liebe, 1934; P. Stuhlmacher, "Glauben und Verstehen bei Paulus," EvTh 26, 1966, 337 ff.; C. Thomassen, Der Glaube nach Paulus dargestellt an den Hauptbriefen des Apostels, 1970; P. Valloton, Le Christ et la foi: Étude de théologie biblique, 1960; H. Waldenfels, Glauben hat Zukunft. Orientierungspunkte, 1970; E. Walter, Glaube, Hoffnung und Liebe im Neuen Testament, 1940; H. Wildberger, 'mn, THAT I 177–209; E. Wissmann, Das Verhältnis von PISTIS und Christusfrömmigkeit bei Paulus, FRLANT 23, 1926.

Fall, Fall Away

ἀφίστημι

ἀφίστημι (aphistēmi), trans. cause to revolt, mislead; intrans. go away, withdraw, depart, fall away; ἀποστασία (apostasia), rebellion, abandonment, state of apostasy, defection; ἀποστάσιον (apostasion), bill of divorce.

CL aphistēmi (Homer), derived from histēmi, means trans. to put away, remove: (a) in a spatial sense; (b) from a condition or relationship; (c) from association with a person. It also means to turn someone (either privately or politically) against a person, to cause to revolt (Herodotus). Intrans. it means to remove oneself, go away; to stand aloof, withdraw from, cease, give up; recoil, separate oneself; to fall away. From it are derived the nouns apostasis, revolt (first found in cl. Gk., from the time of Thuc., 1, 122); apostatēs, deserter, political rebel (e.g. "against the king", "against the country"; a later term found in Polybius); apostasia, a late form of the classical apostasis, meaning, state of rebellion or apostasy (e.g. "from Nero"; "from the Romans"); and apostasion, a legal term for handing over at purchase, conveyance, and used of a bill of divorce (Deut. 24:1, 3; Matt. 5:31; 19:7; Mk. 10:4; → Divorce).

OT 1. In the LXX words of this group are found more than 250 times, rendering about 40 different Heb. words, but most frequently hēsîr (hiph. of sûr), to remove (about 65 times). It is of especial interest theologically when used to translate forms of mā'al, to act unfaithfully, contrary to duty, or against the law (2 Chr. 26:18; 28:19, 22; 29:6; 30:7; 33:19); pāša', to rebel, transgress (2 Chr. 21:8, 10; Jer. 33:8; Ezek. 20:38); māraḏ, to rebel, revolt (Gen. 14:4; Num. 14:9; Jos. 22:16 ff.; 2 Chr. 13:6; Ezr. 4:12, 15, 19; Neh. 2:19; 6:6; 9:26; Ezek. 17:15; Dan. 9:5, 9); → Sin, art. paraptōma.

The meaning of aphistēmi and its Heb. equivalents is like that in classical Gk.: removal in a spatial sense (Gen. 12:8), separation of persons (1 Sam. 18:13; Ps. 6:8), withdrawal from a relationship (Num. 8:25) or from a state (Prov. 23:18; Isa. 59:9); political revolt (Gen. 14:4; 2 Chr. 21:8, 10; Ezek. 17:15). This is the most frequent meaning of the word and underlies most of the substantival forms.

A meaning not found in cl. Gk. is the use in religious contexts: God departs from men (Jdg. 16:20; 2 Ki. 17:18; 23:27; Ps. 10:1; Ezek. 23:18) and withdraws his gifts (Num. 14:9, protection; Jdg. 16:17, 19, strength; 2 Sam. 7:15, steadfast love; Isa. 59:11, 14, salvation and righteousness). The underlying cause is man's own wilful departure from God (Deut. 32:15; Jer. 2:19; 3:14; 17:5, 13; Sir. 10:12), and scorn of God's gifts (Num. 14:31, the land; Neh. 9:26, the law). This rebellion expresses itself in the cultic worship of other gods (Deut. 7:4; 13:10, 13; Jos. 22; Jdg. 2:19; 2 Chr. 29:6; 1 Macc. 2:19), and in ethical behaviour constituting disobedience towards God (Isa. 30:1; Ezek. 33:8; Dan. 9:9–11; Sir. 48:15; 2 Macc. 5:8). It is against this background that we should understand the exhortations to keep aloof from sin (Exod. 23:7; Ps. 119:29; Isa. 52:11; Tob. 4:21; Sir. 7:2; 23:12; 35:3).

2. At Qumran the act of turning away from the community and its rules is fundamentally condemned as apostasy. The literature of the sect sets down a two-year period of repentance for the apostate member who is willing to return (1QS 7:18 ff.); but anyone who has belonged to the community for more than 10 years is completely excluded if he becomes guilty of apostasy (1QS 7:22 ff.).

NT 1. In the NT this group of words is found only in Luke (aphistēmi 10 times and twice in v.l.; apostasia Acts 21:21), Paul (aphistēmi 3 times, and 1 Tim. 6:5 v.l.; apostasia 2 Thess. 2:3), and Heb. 3:12. Apart from Acts 5:37, only the intrans. sense is found. On apostasion → Divorce.

2. aphistēmi occurs in the spatial sense in Lk. 2:37 ("she did not leave the temple"). More often it refers to the separation of people: holding back from carrying out a punishment (Acts 5:38; 22:29); the withdrawal of Mark from helping Paul in his work (Acts 15:38); the departure of the Christians from the Jewish synagogue (Acts 19:9); the disappearance of supernatural beings from human presence (Lk. 1:38 v.l.; 4:13; 24:51 v.l.; Acts 12:10; 2 Cor. 12:8). In Lk. 13:26, 27 (citation of Ps. 6:8) believers are warned against unfruitful discipleship. By having set before them in this parable the possibility of being too late, they are called away from their speculative enquiry (v. 23) to face a genuine decision that affects them in their total existence. The man who fails to recognize and grasp the present hour of grace may one day find himself separated for ever from the Lord: apostēte ap' emou, depart from me (v. 27).

In 2 Tim. 2:19 aphistēmi refers to moral behaviour: "Let everyone who names the name of the Lord depart from iniquity." Acts 5:37 mentions political defection.

3. Of theological importance is falling away in the religious sense. In Acts 21:21 (cf. 2 Macc. 5:8; Jas. 2:11 v.l.) Paul is accused of leading the Diaspora Jews astray by teaching them to disregard the OT law. The absolute use of apostasia in 2 Thess. 2:3 is a common expression in Jewish apocalyptic, with its prophecy of a period of apostasy shortly before the appearance of the Messiah (Eth. En. 5:4; 93:9). Paul locates this event in an anti-Christian period directly preceding the return of Christ. 1 Tim. 4:1 describes "falling away from the faith" in the last days in terms of falling into false, heretical beliefs. Lk. 8:13 probably refers to apostasy as a result of eschatological temptation. Here are people who have come to believe, who have received the gospel "with joy". But under the pressure of persecution and tribulation arising because of the faith, they break off the relationship with God into which they have entered. According to Heb. 3:12 (cf. Heb. 6:6 → piptō below; → Sin, art. paraptōma), apostasy consists in an unbelieving and self-willed movement away from God (in contrast to Heb. 3:14), which must be prevented at all costs.

aphistēmi thus connotes in the passages just mentioned the serious situation of becoming separated from the living God after a previous turning towards him, by falling away from the faith. It is a movement of unbelief and sin, which can also be expressed by other words (cf. the par. to Lk. 8:13 in Matt. 13:21; Mk. 4:17; → Offence, art. skandalon). Expressions equivalent in meaning to the warning in 1 Tim. 4:1 include nauageō, suffer shipwreck, 1:19; astocheō miss the mark, 1:6; 6:21, 2 Tim. 2:18; cf. also aperchomai, go away, Jn. 6:66; apostrephō, turn away; arneomai, deny; metatithēmi, change, alter; mē menein, do not abide, Jn. 15:6; → art. piptō; → Lead Astray, art. planaō; and the pictures of defection in Matt. 24:9–12, and Rev. 13. As can be seen from a consideration of the Heb. words in the LXX corresponding to aphistēmi, it emphasizes strongly, like parapiptō (Heb. 6:6), the part played by the human → will in the loss of → faith. W. Bauder

πίπτω πίπτω (piptō), fall; ἐκπίπτω (ekpiptō), fall off or from, lose one's way; καταπίπτω (katapiptō), fall down; παραπίπτω (parapiptō), fall beside, fall away; περιπίπτω (peripiptō), fall into, among; πτῶμα (ptōma), that which has fallen, corpse; πτῶσις (ptōsis), falling, fall.

CL piptō (root pet, to fall, fly, reduplicated; cf. Lat. peto, fall upon, attach, beg) has the basic meaning to fall, drop from a height or from an upright position; of men, to fall in battle, but also, to fall into life, i.e. to be born (Homer, Il., 19, 110). It is also used of falling intentionally, to throw oneself down. In a fig. sense piptō means to fly into a rage, to fall into misfortune, shame, etc., to fall by the wayside (but not implying guilt in the sense of a moral lapse); also to fall utterly, be ruined.

The noun ptōsis, act of falling, and ptōma, that which has fallen, signify fall, collapse, and fig. misfortune, disaster, destruction. ptōma, like piptō, has the special meaning of that which has fallen of a living being, i.e. a corpse, especially of one killed violently.

ekpiptō means to fall out of something, to go out of something, e.g. to lose the way, to give up hope; in the pass. sense, to be driven out, excluded, or to lose something. As a technical naval term it means to be driven off course, to drift, to be cast ashore, because of inability to follow the course on which one has set out.

peripiptō, to fall around, fall in. It is also used of events which befall one. parapiptō means lit. fall beside, befall, go astray, err.

OT The LXX mostly uses piptō to translate forms of nāpal, which is almost exactly equivalent in meaning. The group of words exhibits here the same broad range of meaning as it does outside the Bible. piptō has a fig. meaning for the most part in the OT Wisdom Literature: to have a mishap through no fault of one's own (Ps. 37:4; Prov. 24:16; Eccl. 4:10); to go to ruin, be destroyed (e.g. Job 18:12, ptōma; Prov. 24:17; Sir. 5:13, ptōsis). The mode of expression remains concrete even in metaphorical use: "the ungodly fall into unrighteousness" (Prov. 11:5; cf. Isa. 8:14; Jer. 8:4; Mic. 7:8). The NT sense of to lose one's salvation has no parallel in the OT. The most that one can say is that it is foreshadowed in Prov. 11:28; Sir. 1:30; 2:7. The meaning to → sin, is found only where parapiptō is used (Ezek. 14:13; 15:8; 18:24; 20:27 = Heb. mā'al; Wis. 6:9; 12:2).

NT 1. In the NT the words of this group are found most often in the literal sense: of the collapse of buildings (Heb. 11:30 = Jos. 6:5, 20; Lk. 13:4; cf. Isa. 30:25); of things falling flat or falling down (Matt. 15:27; 13:4–8 par.; Jn. 12:24), especially the falling off of dead flowers as an image of the shortness of life and speedy change (1 Pet. 1:24 and Jas. 1:11 = Isa. 40:7; cf. Job 14:2; 15:33), the falling of → animals (Matt. 10:29; cf. Amos 3:5; Matt. 12:11; cf. Exod. 21:33), and the unintentional falling of → men (Matt. 15:14; cf. Isa. 24:18; Jer. 48:44; Acts 20:9; Mk. 9:20; Matt. 17:15).

2. Even abstract things like fear and darkness can be said to fall on someone. The word here conveys the idea of suddenness and inescapability. Generally it is a heavenly vision or some other manifestation of God which brings this about (Lk. 1:12; Acts 13:11; 19:17; Rev. 11:11, cf. Gen. 15:12; Exod. 15:16; Job 13:11; Ps. 55:5). In the same way it is said that God's Spirit "falls" upon people, i.e. the Spirit of God comes with irresistible power, as a divine intervention which silences all opposition and doubt (Acts 10:44; 11:15; cf. 8:16; 1 Sam. 18:10, Ezek. 11:5).

3. The words appear in idiomatic sayings found also outside the Bible. When a person's love is aroused, he has the urge to "fall on someone's neck" (Lk. 15:20; Acts 20:37; cf. Gen. 45:14; 46:29). The "falling" of the lot indicates a decision having nothing to do with human choice, a divine verdict (Acts 1:26; cf. Ps. 16:6; Jon. 1:7). "Not a hair shall fall from your head" means "No evil will befall you" (Acts 27:34; cf. 1 Sam. 14:45; 2 Sam. 14:11). "To fall into the hands of" means to be given up to (Heb. 10:31; cf. Jdg. 11:18; 2 Sam. 24:14; Sir. 2:18; 8:1). The phrase "to fall into a snare" (in the OT Prov. 12:13; Sir. 9:3; Tob. 14:10) is derived from the language of hunting: snares are set and hidden, and an animal gets caught. It is the same with the devil's snare (1 Tim. 3:7; 6:9; cf. Jas. 1:2). "To fall into condemnation" (1 Tim. 3:6; Jas. 5:12) means to give grounds for accusation later resulting in a verdict of guilty.

4. Like the OT (Jos. 21:45; 23:14; 1 Sam. 3:19; 2 Ki. 10:10), the NT says that God's word does not "fall to the ground", but retains its validity and efficacy (Lk. 16:17, of the law; Rom. 9:6, of God's promises; cf. 1 Pet. 1:24). Love will not "fail" either (1 Cor. 13:8), since faith, hope and love form the three unchanging gifts of God's grace which, in contrast to all the others, alone have permanence (v. 13).

5. "To fall on one's face" (usually intentionally) before someone (in the OT, for instance, Gen. 17:3, 17; 44:14; Ruth 2:10; 2 Sam. 1:2; Ps. 95:6; Ezek. 11:13) is an expression of deferential greeting (Jn. 11:32). Thus slaves indicate in this way their subjection to their master (Matt. 18:26). It emphasizes a request (Matt. 18:29; Mk. 5:22; 7:25; Lk. 5:12), or thanksgiving (Lk. 17:16). It is the humblest posture for prayer (Matt. 26:39), and the attitude of self-abasing reverence (before a king, Matt. 2:11; a supernatural being, 4:9; Acts 10:25; Rev. 19:10; 22:8; God and Christ, 1 Cor. 14:25; Rev. 4:10). It can be the effect of a revelation of God (Matt. 17:6; Lk. 5:8; Acts 9:4; 16:29; cf. Mk. 5:33; Jn. 18:6; Rev. 1:17; in the OT, 1 Ki. 18:39; Ezek. 1:28; Dan. 8:17; 10:9). → Prayer, arts. gonypeteō and proskyneō.

6. piptō can also mean to fall down dead, to be killed (Lk. 21:24; Acts 5:5, 10; 28:6; 1 Cor. 10:8; Heb. 3:17; Rev. 17:10). ptōma, corpse (in the OT, Jdg. 14:8; Ps. 110:6; Ezek. 6:5), is used of human corpses (Matt. 14:12; Mk. 15:45; Rev. 11:8 f.) and perhaps also animal carcasses in Matt. 24:28. It marks the place where the vultures gather (→ Bird). The connection with v. 27 is perhaps to be found in the sense that just as certainly as the carcass does not remain hidden from the vultures, so at the end everyone will see the coming Messiah. ([Ed.] But in the context of judgment on Israel and Jerusalem a human body may be meant.)

7. The words are used in a number of ways in the portrayal of apocalyptic horrors of the end-time. Everything that is makeshift will collapse in a flood-like catastrophe (Matt. 7:25, 27). Great parts of cities (Rev. 11:13), indeed whole cities (16:19), will become heaps of ruins. The great world-power, hostile to God, will be overthrown (Rev. 14:8; 18:2; cf. Isa. 21:9; Jer. 51:8). In their terror at the desolation of the last days, men will cry out in their longing to die for a great earthquake which will make mountains with their rock faces fall upon them (Lk. 23:30; Rev. 6:16; cf. Hos. 10:8; Ezek. 38:20). In a cosmic upheaval the stars will fall from heaven like meteorites (Matt. 24:29; Mk. 13:25; Rev. 6:13; cf. Isa. 34:4). The stars can also stand for political powers. In Isa. 14:12 the expression is used of the fall of a powerful ruler. The fall of great stars from heaven makes the water on which life depends unusable, and unleashes the powers of darkness (Rev. 8:10; 9:1). The picture of Satan's fall from heaven in Lk. 10:18 is intended to show that the end has come for the devil's dominion. The mighty ruler who up till now has terrorized the world has lost his power and his position as accuser before God in a fall as rapid as a flash of lightning.

8. The fig. sense peculiar to the NT, to lose salvation, and so, to go to eternal destruction, is found in the Gospels, Paul, Heb. and Rev.

(a) It lies in the background of images like that in Matt. 7:25, 27 of total human downfall; of the blind leaders of the blind in Matt. 15:14; Lk. 6:39; and in those passages where Christ is spoken of as the "stone". In Lk. 2:34 he is the → rock on which many will meet their doom. Lk. 20:18 describes the annihilating effect of this stone on everyone who rejects the claim and the person of Jesus. Either they will fall over the stone (i.e. stumbling against it leads to destruction, v. 18a; cf. Isa. 8:15), or the stone will fall upon them (i.e. Christ will crush and shatter his enemies, v. 18b; cf. Dan. 2:34, 44).

(b) Paul uses the metaphor of standing and falling (cf. Prov. 24:16; Jer. 8:4; Amos 5:2; 8:14) in Rom. 14:4. He alludes to the ancient law whereby a slave is subject to his master's jurisdiction which alone decides whether his performance of a task is satisfactory, or whether he must be condemned because of bad work. In the same way the Christian is responsible to no one but his Lord, who alone decides whether he has done well or failed. The same idea is present in 1 Cor. 10:12, with its warning to guard against false security. As long as the eschatological tribulation with its Satanic power has not run its full course, the possibility of falling must not be forgotten (piptō here echoes v.8).

(c) "To fall from grace" is an expression arising from the concept of grace as the new sphere of life given to the Christian, to which the believer has "obtained access" (cf. Rom. 5:2 RSV). Those who depart from it deny God's unconditional mercy, the redeeming work of Christ (Gal. 5:4). What Christians must do is to abide in this state of grace, and not fall prey to any false teaching (2 Pet. 3:17). In Rom. 11:11, 22 piptō is again used of falling into destruction. The fall of Israel – despite God's gracious desire not to give up his people – demonstrates the severity of God's judgment. In Heb. 4:11 falling is the result of disobedience, and means apostasy (cf. 3:17 for piptō in the sense of dying under divine judgment). According to 10:31, the apostate faces a terrible future. Cf. also art. aphistēmi.

(d) Rev. 2:5 reminds a church of the love in which it stood at first. But it has moved quickly downwards, and fallen a long way. A return is nonetheless still possible, for the corruption has not yet gone too far. Apart from Rev. 2:5 and probably Rom. 11, the thought behind all these passages where piptō is used is of the incurring of guilt and the consequent loss of salvation, rather than of a mere failure from which recovery can be made. It is a catastrophic fall, which means eternal ruin. If it were not so, all the warnings against falling would lose their threatening urgency. To fall into sin and guilt, as an expression of a total attitude, is to plunge into irrevocable misfortune. W. Bauder

→ Guard, Keep, → Hard, → Sin

Arndt, 126, 664 f.; I. H. Marshall, Kept by the Power of God: A Study of Perseverence and Falling Away, 1969; H. Schlier, aphistēmi, TDNT I 512 ff.; W. Michaelis, piptō, TDNT V 161 ff.; E. D. Starbuck, "Backsliding", ERE II 319 ff.; V. Taylor, Forgiveness and Reconciliation, 1961; H. Windisch, Taufe und Sünde im ältesten Christentum bis auf Origenes, 1908.

Fast

νηστεύω

νηστεύω (nēsteuō), to fast; νηστεία (nēsteia), fasting, fast; νῆστις (nēstis), not eating, fasting.

CL nēstis (probably derived from nē-, particle of negation, and edō, eat, i.e. not eating) means, having an empty stomach. From it are derived nēsteuō, fast, and nēsteia, fasting. The vb. and noun can also have the more general meaning, not to eat, abstain from food, or, to be without food, starve. These words are, however, more frequently used in the sense of a religious ritual.

To fast is to abstain for a limited period from any kind of food. (Total and permanent abstinence from particular, "forbidden" foods is a quite separate matter.) What is the real motive for fasting? In the pagan religions of the ancient world, it was clearly fear of demons and the idea that fasting was an effective means of preparing oneself for an encounter with the deity, since it created the right kind of openness to divine influence. For this reason it belonged in the mystery religions to the ritual of initiation for novices. In magic and with the oracles fasting was also often regarded as a preparation necessary to success. The custom of fasting following a death was widespread. While the soul of the dead person is still near, there is danger of demonic infection in eating and drinking. Fasting was also required, for instance, in certain fertility rites. Thus at Athens hē Nēsteia is the name given to the fast-day in the women's fertility festival in the month of sowing (October). Abstinence, here including particularly sexual abstinence, makes a person readier to receive the divine powers of fertility.

In practice, fasting in the setting of religious rites and as a defence against trouble was common in the whole of the ancient world, but not fasting for ethical motives (asceticism).

OT 1. In the LXX the Gk. words represent the Heb. ṣûm, fast. Along with this the MT has 'innâh nepeš, afflict oneself (lit., humble one's soul), referring to a purification rite in which fasting played a part (Lev. 16:29, 31; 23:27, 32; Num. 29:7; Isa. 58:3; Ps. 35:13). Frequently too we read simply of "eating no bread and drinking no water" (e.g. Exod. 34:28).

The forms and purposes of fasting are many. Fasting is practised in Israel as a preparation for converse with God (Exod. 34:28; Deut. 9:9; Dan. 9:3):

(a) It was practised by the individual, when oppressed by great cares (2 Sam. 12:16–23; 1 Ki. 21:27; Ps. 35:13; 69:10).

(b) It was practised by the nation in imminent danger of war and destruction (Jdg. 20:26; 2 Chr. 20:3; Est. 4:16; Jon. 3:4–10; Jud. 4:9, 13); during a plague of locusts (Joel 1 and 2); to bring success to the return of the exiles (Ezr. 8:21–23); as an expiatory rite (Neh. 9:1); and finally in connection with mourning the dead (2 Sam. 1:12).

Fasting and prayer go constantly together (Jer. 14:11–12; Neh. 1:4; Ezr. 8:21, 23). Fasting usually lasts from morning to evening (Jdg. 20:26; 1 Sam. 14:24; 2 Sam. 1:12), although Est. 4:16 tells of a 3-day fast. In the description in Ps. 109:24 the torments of fasting during the period of accusation are at the same time a reflection of the inward torments suffered by the suppliant.

The Israelite law ordained fasting only on the day of atonement (Lev. 6:29–30; 23:27–32; Num. 29:7). After the destruction of Jerusalem (587 B.C.) four fast-days were laid down as days of remembrance (Zech. 7:3–5; 8:19).

2. In the course of time the deeper meaning of fasting, as an expression of man's humbling of himself before God, was lost for Israel. Increasingly it came to be regarded as a pious achievement. The struggle of the prophets against this depersonalization and emptying of the concept (cf. Isa. 58:3-7; Jer. 14:12) was without success. By the time of Jesus those who were earnest about their religion, especially the Pharisees, were required to keep two fast-days each week (cf. SB II 242 ff.). The disciples of John had a similar rule (cf. Mk. 2:18).

NT In the NT nēsteuō occurs 20 times, all in the Synoptic Gospels (Matt. 8 times, Mk. 6 times, Lk. 4 times) and Acts (twice). nēsteia occurs 5 times (3 times in Lk. and Acts, twice in Paul), and nēstis twice (Matt. and Mk.). The words of this group thus do not occur at all in John or (with the two exceptions noted above) in the epistles.

1. The entirely new view brought by the NT to the question of fasting is most clearly expressed in the words of Jesus, "How can the wedding guests fast while the bridegroom is with them?" (Mk. 2:19 par.). The irruption of the kingdom of God, the presence of the Messiah, the good news of salvation not dependent on good works – all this means joy which is something excluded by fasting in the Jewish sense (see above OT 2). In the light of the Messiah-centred preaching of Jesus, such fasting is a thing of the past, belonging to a bygone era. In the Gospels the answer to the question about fasting is linked to the parables of the new patch on the old garment and the new wine in the old bottles (Mk. 2:21 f. par.). We must take this as an indication that fasting has been superseded by Jesus. In fact, there is no evidence from the 1st century that Christians voluntarily imposed fasting on themselves (cf. J. Behm, TDNT IV 933). The epistles of the NT make no reference to it, and even in those passages which concentrate on the ascetic tendencies of some (Rom. 14 and Col. 2), fasting remains unmentioned.

2. There are however a number of passages which raise questions about the consistency of this picture:

(a) According to Matt. 4:2, Jesus himself fasted for 40 days and 40 nights before beginning his public ministry. (It might be argued, on the other hand, that this was something which happened "on the threshold" of the coming of salvation.)

(b) In Matt. 6:16–18 Jesus does not condemn fasting as such, but ostentatious fasting. Fasting is not to be practised before the eyes of men, but before God who lives in secret and "sees into the secret place". (Here it could be pointed out that this word is addressed not to the community of his disciples, but to the Jews.)

(c) According to the words of Jesus in Matt. 17:21, there are certain conditions of demonic enslavement from which a man can only be released "through prayer and fasting". (Here it may be observed that this verse is lacking in good MSS and that in the par. Mk. 9:29 prayer alone is mentioned.)

(d) In Acts 13:3 and 14:23 we read that in the Christian church prayer was backed up by fasting (cf. Did. 1:3: "fast for those who persecute you").

We may thus conclude that the idea that fasting has a value in its own right was abandoned, but that the primitive Christian church in Palestine still retained the practice of fasting in order to demonstrate that their prayers were in earnest (cf. Acts 13:3; 14:23). In the Hel. churches, as evidenced by the total absence of the terms in the epistles, particularly in those of Paul (for the two instances in 2 Cor. 6:5 and 11:27 are both autobiographical) and in Heb., the practice of fasting does not seem to have existed at all. F. S. Rothenberg

→ Bread, → Hunger

(a). I. Abrahams, Studies in Pharisaism and the Gospels, I, 121–28; R. Arbesmann, "Fasting and Prophecy in Pagan and Christian Antiquity," Traditio 7, 1949–51, 1–72; J. Behm, nēstis, TDNT IV 924–35; D. E. Briggs, Biblical Teaching on Fasting, 1953; H. von Campenhausen, "Early Christian Asceticism", Tradition and Life in the Church, 1968, 90–122; J. Gamberoni, "Fasting," EBT I 257–60; H. H. Guthrie, "Fast, Fasting," IDB II 241–44; J. A. Montgomery, "Ascetic Strains in Early Judaism," JBL 51, 1932, 183–213; Moore, Judaism, II, 55 ff., 257 ff.
(b). H. J. Ebeling, "Die Fastenfrage (Mk. 2, 18–22)," ThStKr 3, 1937–38, 387 ff.; M. S. Freiberger, Die Fasten im alten Israel, 1929; K. Fruhstorfer, "Fastenvorschriften und Fastenlehren der Heiligen Schrift des Alten Bundes," Theologisch-praktische Quartalschrift 69, 1916, 59–72; P. Gerlitz, Das Fasten im religionsgeschichtlichen Vergleich, (Dissertation Erlangen) 1954; A. Guillaumont, "Nēsteuein ton kosmon (P Oxy I, verso, 1:5–6)," Bulletin de l'Institut Français d'Archéologie Orientale, Cairo, 61, 1962, 15–23; K. E. Koch, Fasten und Beten, 1963; P. Rohleder, "Die Übung des Fastens", Quatember 19, 1954–55; SB IV 77–114; K. T. Schaeffer, " '. . . und dann werden sie fasten an jenem Tage' (Mk. 2, 20)", Synoptische Studien: Festschrift A. Wikenhauser, 1953, 124–47; F. Schmidt-Clausing, "Fasten," RGG[3] II 882 ff.; J. Schümmer, Die altchristliche Fastenpraxis, 1933; R. Taut, "Askese tut Not!" in F. S. Rothenberg, ed., Christsein Heute, I, 1958, 65 ff.; H.-D. Wendland, "Evangelium und Askese", Quatember 19, 1954–55, 65 ff.

Father

In the patriarchal societies of antiquity, the father figure is endowed with two particular characteristics. On the one hand, the father rules as head of the household and the person to whom most respect is due, having absolute authority over his family. On the other hand, he has the responsibility of guarding, supporting and helping the other members. Both these characteristics are also present when a deity is described or addressed as father. Whereas the word abba, which is borrowed from the Aramaic, occurs only in the NT and there only in the context of addressing God in prayer as "Father", patēr covers the full range of meaning of the Eng. father. It can be used both as a description and as a form of address, either in a secular or a religious sense. The religious use of the image of a father "is one of the basic phenomena of religious history" (G. Schrenk, TDNT V 951). Biblical theology is concerned with the particular figure to which this phenomenon points in the OT and NT.

ἀββά	ἀββά (abba), father.

CL & OT abba, father, is an Aram. word, occurring in the NT only in 3 places: Mk. 14:36; Rom. 8:15; Gal. 4:6. In each case it is used in calling on God in prayer. In the other Gk. literature of early Christianity it is found only in quotations of these passages.

1. In Aram. 'abbā' is originally, like the feminine equivalent 'immā', a word derived from baby-language. When a child is weaned, "it learns to say 'abbā' (daddy) and 'immā' (mummy)" (Ber. 40a; Sanh. 70b; cf. Tg. Isa. 8:4). Even in the pre-Christian era the word underwent a considerable extension of meaning. It came to replace not only the older form of address common to biblical Heb. and Aram., 'āḇî, my father, but also the Aram. descriptive terms for "the father" and "my father", i.e. the noun in the emphatic and the form with the 1st person sing. suffix. The effect of this widening of meaning was that the word 'abbā' as a form of address to one's father was no longer restricted to children, but also used by adult sons and daughters. The childish character of the word ("daddy") thus receded, and 'abbā' acquired the warm, familiar ring which we may feel in such an expression as "dear father".

2. Nowhere in the entire wealth of devotional literature produced by ancient Judaism do we find 'abbā' being used as a way of addressing God. The pious Jew knew too much of the great gap between God and man (Eccl. 5:1) to be free to address God with the familiar word used in everyday family life. In the literature of Rab. Judaism we find only one example of 'abbā' used in reference to God. It occurs in a story recorded in the Babylonian Talmud (Taanith 23b): "When the world had need of rain, our teachers used to send the schoolchildren to Rabbi Ḥanan ha Neḥba [end of the 1st cent. B.C.], and they would seize the hem of his cloak and call out to him: 'Dear father ('abbā'), dear father ('abbā'), give us rain'. He said before God: 'Sovereign of the world, do it for the sake of these who cannot distinguish between an 'abbā' who can give rain and an 'abbā' who can give no rain' " (cf. SB I 375, 520). It would certainly be reading too much into this text to conclude from it that in ancient Judaism God was described, still less addressed, as 'abbā'.

Rabbi Chanin is here simply taking up the children's cry of 'abbā' in order to appeal to God's fatherly mercy; he himself on the other hand uses the respectful invocation "Sovereign of the world."

NT 1. It is clear from the Gospel tradition and moreover indirectly confirmed in Rom. 8:15 and Gal. 4:6 (see below, 2), that Jesus addressed God in his prayers as "My Father". In so doing, he made use of the warm, familiar term 'abbā' used in the everyday life of the family. The only exception is the cry of dereliction from the cross (Mk. 15:34 par.) which appears to be a quotation from Ps. 22:1 (→ God, art. theos, NT 6 (d)).

(a) The invocation 'abbā' is expressly attested in the Markan text of the prayer in Gethsemane (Mk. 14:36). But in the other prayers of Jesus recorded by the evangelists (→ patēr NT 2(a)) it is again the Aram. 'abbā' that underlies, either directly or indirectly, the various Gk. versions of his invocation of the Father. In the Gk. account of the prayers of Jesus the words used to address the Father vary between the voc. pater, the use of the nominative with the art., ho patēr, in a vocative sense (unusual in Gk. usage, but found as a Hebraism, cf. Funk § 147), and the voc. form with the 1st person sing., pater mou. These variations are to be explained by the fact that we have here to do with variant translations (cf. J. Jeremias, The Prayers of Jesus, 1967, 56). These result from the fact already mentioned, that in Palestinian Aram. of the 1st cent. A.D. 'abbā' was used not only as a form of address (vocative), but also for the nom. with the art., and for the form with the 1st person sing. pronominal suffix.

(b) The use, unthinkable for the pious Jew, of the childish and familiar term 'abbā' in prayer is an expression of the unique relationship of Jesus to God. It expresses not only his attitude of trust and obedience towards the Father (Mk. 14:36 par.), but also his incomparable authority (Matt. 11:25 ff. par.).

2. The early church took over the use of 'abbā' in prayer. This is shown by the two passages Rom. 8:15 and Gal. 4:6, where Paul may have been thinking of the Lord's Prayer. In the oldest version of this prayer (Lk. 11:2 ff.), the invocation reads pater, (dear) Father, and indicates 'abbā' as the Aram. original. This means that when Jesus gave his disciples the Lord's Prayer, he gave them authority to follow him in addressing God as 'abbā,' and so gave them a share in his status as Son (→ Son, art. hyios tou theou). Accordingly, Paul sees in the invocation "Abba", dear Father, clear evidence of our adoption through Christ as sons, and of the eschatological possession of the Spirit (Rom. 8:14 ff.; Gal. 4:4–7). The fact that the church, like Jesus, may say "Abba" is a fulfilment of God's promise: "I will be a father to you, and you shall be my sons and daughters" (2 Cor. 6:18; a free citation of 2 Sam. 7:14; cf. also Jub. 1:24 f.). O. Hofius πατήρ πατήρ (patēr), father; πατριά (patria), family, clan; πατρίς (patris), fatherland, homeland, home city, one's own part of the country; ἀπάτωρ (apatōr), fatherless.

CL 1. patēr, father, like mētēr, mother, a word of Indo-European origin, is used in classical Gk. of a lit. father (Homer, Od., 1, 94), of the patriarch of a family (Josephus, Ant., 14, 255), or in the plur. of forefathers and ancestors generally (Homer, Il., 6, 209). In a fig. sense the word is used as a title of honour for, or as a respectful means of addressing, a venerable old man (Homer, Il., 24, 362), and also to indicate spiritual or intellectual fatherhood. Thus a philosopher may be called the "father" of his followers (Epictetus, Dissertationes, 3, 22, 81 f.), and in the mystery religions the one who conducts the ceremony of initiation can be described as "father" of the newly initiated (Apuleius, Metamorphoses, 11, 25, 7).

Derived from patēr are the words patria, lineage, clan (indicating descent from the same father and ancestral patriarch; in the NT only at Lk. 2:4; Acts 3:25; Eph. 3:15); patris, fatherland (in the NT e.g. Jn. 4:44; Heb. 11:14), or home city (e.g. Matt. 13:54; Lk. 4:23); and apatōr, fatherless (in NT only at Heb. 7:3). The latter term is used in classical Gk. of orphans, foundlings, children born out of wedlock, outcasts and outlaws (examples in TDNT V 1019 ff.; for similar usage in Jewish literature, see ibid. and SB II 693 f.). Where gods are described as "fatherless", the term is intended to indicate their miraculous origin (see TDNT ibid.). In the Hel. period apatōr is found also – often in combination with amētōr, motherless – as an attribute of God. It describes God's divinity and eternity (in Orphism, the mystery religions, and gnosticism). This is the sense of the term in Apoc. Abr. 17:9, where we find the invocation "Fatherless, motherless, unbegotten One." We may compare with this an Egyptian hymn to the god Ptah, which contains the words: "Thou hast no father, who has begotten thee. . .; thou hast no mother who has borne thee."

2. (a) The use of the name father for God in the religions of the ancient orient and classical Greece and Rome is always based upon mythical ideas of an original act of begetting and the natural, physical descent of all men from God. Thus the god El of Ugarit is called "father of mankind", the Babylonian moon-god Sin is "father and begetter of gods and men", and in Greece Zeus (from Homer onwards) is called "father of men and gods". In Egypt the Pharaoh is regarded in a special way as the son of God in a physical sense. The name of father expresses above all God's absolute authority, demanding obedience, but at the same time his merciful love, goodness and care. The appropriate attitude of man for his part is a double one: on the one hand, "recognition of his own powerlessness and total dependence on the deity", and on the other, "the attitude of childlike trust and love towards the deity" (G. Mensching, RGG[3] VI 1233).

(b) The idea of the fatherhood of God is given a philosophical interpretation in Plato and the Stoics. Plato, in his cosmological elaboration of the father idea, emphasizes the creator relationship of God, the "universal father", to the entire cosmos (Tim., 28c, 41a, and often). According to Stoic teaching, God's authority as father pervades the universe: he is "creator, father, and sustainer" of men, who are his children, related to him (Epictetus, Dissertationes, 1, 9, 7; cf. Cleanthes' famous hymn to Zeus).

(c) In the ancient mystery cults the regeneration and deification of the initiate is seen as an act of begetting by the deity; hence the latter is invoked in prayer as "Father" (examples in TDNT V 953 f.).

(d) The gnostics too describe the supreme God as the father, or first father (see especially the Gospel of Truth from Nag Hammadi; cf. K. Grobel, The Gospel of Truth, 1960, 32 ff. and passim). Here, however, the personal relationship between God and man disappears altogether. The sparks of light emanating from God, which have become locked in the human body, are to the first Father like drops of water to the sea.

OT The OT uses the word father (Heb. 'āḇ = LXX patēr) almost exclusively (c. 1180 times) in a secular and only very occasionally (15 times) in a religious sense. As in the case of the OT, so in the literature of ancient Palestinian Judaism, we may note a marked reserve in the use of the word in a religious sense. Not until the literature of Diaspora Judaism do we find more frequent use of the name "Father" in reference to God.

1. Secular usage. (a) Physical fatherhood is the gift and command of the Creator (Gen. 1:28). As bearer of the divine blessing (cf. Gen. 27), the father is head of the family, his → house (cf. Jos. 24:15b), and an authority which must be respected under all circumstances (Exod. 20:12; 21:15, 17; Prov. 23:22). Not only is it his task to feed, protect, and educate his family, but, more important still, he is the family priest (Exod. 12:3 ff.) and teacher (Exod. 12:26 f.; 13:14 ff.; Deut. 6:7, 20 ff.; 32:7, 46; Isa. 38:19; for references in Rab. literature, see SB III 615). He is responsible for seeing that family life is in accordance with the covenant, and that the children receive religious instruction. Even servants may address a master as "my father" (2 Ki. 5:13).

(b) Earlier generations of Israel are called "the fathers" (Ps. 22:4; 106:7), as are outstanding men of God of previous ages (Sir. 44:1 ff.), and particularly the patriarchs Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, the bearers and mediators of the covenant promises of God (Jos. 24:3; 1 Chr. 29:18; Rab. references in SB I 918 f.).

(c) Father is used as a title of honour for a priest (Jdg. 17:10; 18:19), and for a prophet (2 Ki. 6:21; 13:14). In 2 Ki. 2:12, on the lips of the prophet's disciple, it also expresses spiritual relationship. In Rab. Judaism, where the title of father was frequently used of respected scribes (SB I 918 f.), the metaphor of father and child is occasionally applied to the relationship between a teacher of the Torah and his pupil (SB III 340 f.).

2. Religious usage. (a) God as Father in the Old Testament. Apart from comparisons with an earthly father (Ps. 103:13; Prov. 3:12; cf. Deut. 1:31; 8:5), the word father is used of God only 15 times in the OT, 13 times as an epithet and twice directly in prayer.

The description of God as Father refers in the OT only to his relationship with the people of Israel (Deut. 32:6; Isa. 63:16 twice; 64:8; Jer. 31:9; Mal. 1:6; 2:10) or to the king of Israel (2 Sam. 7:14 par. 1 Chr. 17:13; 22:10; 28:6; Ps. 89:26; cf. 2:7). It never refers to any other individual (on Ps. 68:5 see below), or to mankind in general. The basic difference between this and the views of the fatherhood of God held by Israel's neighbours is that in the OT God's fatherhood is not understood in a biological or mythological sense, but in a soteriological one. To be a child of God is not a natural state or quality; rather it grounded in the miracle of divine → election and → redemption (cf. also Exod. 4:22; Deut. 14:1 f.; Hos. 11:1 ff.). Even where, in connection with God's fatherhood, the language of creating (→ Creation) and begetting (→ Birth) is used, the reference is to the historical, elective action of God towards a people, or king, who existed already in the biological sense. When God, the One who elects and redeems, is described as Father, expression is given both to his merciful, forgiving → love (Jer. 31:9, 20; cf. Hos. 11:8), and to his claim to respect and obedience (Deut. 32:5 f.; Jer. 3:4 f., 19; Mal. 1:6). Because the Israelites share in being children of God, they have a special obligation to be loyal to one another (Mal. 2:10). If the individual sees God as his Father, it is because of his status as a member of the people and because he has experienced the work of God in a way corresponding to his redemption of Israel (Ps. 68:5 in the context of verses 4–10).

The vocative "my father" is found only at Jer. 3:4, 19, and here significantly not on the lips of an individual, but as a prayer of the chosen people.

(b) God as Father in Palestinian Judaism. As in the OT, so in Palestinian Judaism of the pre-Christian period the description of God as Father is rare. In the Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha, as far as writings of Palestinian origin are concerned, it is found only very occasionally (Tob. 13:4; Sir. 51:10; Jub. 1:24 f., 28; 19:29), while the Qumran texts provide but a single example (1QH 9:35 f.). In Rab. Judaism of the 1st cent. A.D. the use of the name of Father became more widespread, but it was still far less frequent than other descriptions of God. God is known as "Father in heaven" (examples in J. Jeremias, The Prayers of Jesus, 1967, 16 ff.). The addition of "in heaven" indicates the distance between God and man. The new element as compared with OT usage is that in Palestinian Judaism the individual worshipper too speaks of God as his "Father in heaven" (J. Jeremias, op. cit., 21). The texts emphasize, however, that the indispensable condition for this personal relationship of child to father is obedience to God's commandments (cf. Sir. 4:10).

As an invocation of God, we find in the 1st cent. A.D. the expression "our Father, our King". But this is only in liturgical prayers of the whole congregation, not in the normal spoken Aramaic, but in the Heb. language of worship (cf. the "Ahaba rabba" prayer and the New Year litany "Abinu malkenu" in W. Staerk, Altjüdische liturgische Gebete, 1930², 6, 27 ff.; cf. J. Jeremias, op. cit., 24 f.). It is to be observed that this expression draws attention to the fatherhood of God and to his majesty at the same time. The invocation "our Father in heaven", which is occasionally to be found in later Jewish prayers, is likewise attested in the 1st cent. A.D. by Matt. 6:9. On the other hand, we have yet to find an example of an individual addressing God as "my Father". Sir. 23:1, 4 appears in the Gk. text as "Lord, my Father", but the Heb. original has, as it does in 51:1, "God of my father" (cf. Exod. 15:2).

(c) God as Father in Diaspora Judaism. The Greek-speaking Jews of the Diaspora were more frequent and less reserved than the Jews of Palestine in their use of the term father as a description of God (3 Macc. 5:7; Wis. 2:16 ff.; Tob. 13:4). Philo (Op. Mund., 89; Spec. Leg., 1, 96; 2, 6 and often) and Josephus (especially Ant., 7, 380) reveal clearly the influence of the Gk. concept of the universal father.

In the Diaspora the invocatory use of "Father" occurs, under Gk. influence, even in the prayers of individuals (3 Macc. 6:3, 8; Wis. 14:3; Apocryphon of Ezek. Frag. 3 = 1 Clem. 8:3).

NT The range of meaning of patēr, father, in the NT corresponds to that of 'āḇ and patēr in the OT. In contrast to the OT, which uses the name of Father only very occasionally for God, the number of examples of patēr in the religious sense in the NT (245 times) far exceeds the number of those in a secular sense (157 times).

1. The secular use of patēr. (a) According to the synoptic tradition, Jesus specifically emphasized the binding validity of the commandment to honour one's parents (Mk. 7:9–13 par.; 10:19 par; cf. Exod. 20:12). Even more important, however, than the tie to father and mother is the obligation that Jesus makes to follow him (Matt. 10:37; Lk. 14:26; cf. Mk. 10:29 f. par.). The family rules laid down in Eph. and Col. again underline the commandment of obedience towards father and mother, but they also point to the human and spiritual responsibility of the father towards his children (Eph. 6:1–4; Col. 3:20 f.).

(b) The close connection between Israel and the church, which receives extended treatment in Rom. 9–11, is the basis of Paul's words in 1 Cor. 10:1, when he speaks of God's people of the Old Testament as "our fathers" even though he is addressing Gentile Christians (cf. also Rom. 9:10; Heb. 1:1; 1 Clem. 4:8; 31:2; 60:4).

(c) The idea of spiritual fatherhood appears in 1 Cor. 4:14 ff. and also indirectly where spiritual sonship is mentioned (Phlm. 10; 1 Tim. 1:2, 18; 2 Tim. 1:2; 2:1; Tit. 1:4; 1 Pet. 5:13). The apostle is regarded as "father" of those Christians who owe their faith to his preaching. Matt. 23:9 forbids the use of the name of father as a title of honour.

(d) Among the derivatives of patēr, apatōr (without father, Heb. 7:3), deserves special mention. The author of Hebrews describes → Melchizedek as "without father or mother or genealogy, (having) neither beginning of days nor end of life." The writer arrives at this remarkable conclusion with the help of the Rab. principle, "What is not mentioned in the Torah does not exist." In the silence of the OT (Gen. 14:18 ff.) about the descent, parentage, birth and death of Melchizedek he finds a cryptic reference to the miraculous, heavenly origin of the priest-king and to his eternal priesthood. As a heavenly being (cf. 11Q Melchizedek), Melchizedek is superior to the Levitical priests, for whom priestly descent is an absolute precondition for service (Neh. 7:63 f.; Lev. 21:13 ff.; cf. F. Schröger, Der Verfasser des Hebräerbriefes als Schriftausleger, 1968, 140 ff.). Hence he is for the writer of Heb. a type and prophetic prefiguring of the pre-existent Son of God and eternal High Priest Christ, who is similarly not descended from the tribe of Levi (Heb. 7:13 f.).

2. God as Father. The concordance alone tells us that in the concept of the fatherhood of God we see one of the central ideas of primitive Christian theology. This is confirmed when we consider the meaning of the terms (cf. art. abba; also → Child, art. hyios).

(a) Jesus' use of the name Father for God. Jesus' use of the name Father as a description of God is attested 3 times in Mk., 4 times in the sayings-source used by Matt. and Lk., 4 times in Lk.'s special material, 31 times in the remaining parts of Matt., and 100 times in Jn. This analysis suggests to some scholars that Jesus himself did not often describe God as Father, and that in the period of the early church there was an increasing tendency to put the name on his lips. Two things are of significance about Jesus' own usage. He evidently never called God the Father of Israel. He spoke of God as his Father ("my Father") and as the Father of the disciples ("your Father"). But he never joined with them together in a common "our Father" (the Lord's Prayer is a prayer for the disciples to use!).

When Jesus called God his Father, this is based upon a unique revelation of God given him from above and on his incomparable status as Son (Matt. 11:25–27 par. Lk. 10:21 f.). On the question of authenticity and for a detailed exposition of these passages, see J. Jeremias, op. cit., 45–52; cf. New Testament Theology, I, 1971, 59 ff.). In the mission of Jesus, in whose word and works the coming → Kingdom of God is dawning, God reveals himself as Father. God's fatherhood, revealed in the Son, is therefore an eschatological reality (cf. E. Lohmeyer, The Lord's Prayer, 1965, 42 ff.).

The expression "your Father" is found only in the words of Jesus to his disciples. This means that Jesus did not teach the idea that God is the Father of all men. Rather, he linked the fatherhood of God to men's relationship to himself. God shows himself to be the Father of the disciples in his mercy (Lk. 6:36), goodness (Matt. 5:45), forgiving love (Mk. 11:25) and care (Matt. 6:8; 6:32 par. Lk. 12:30). He gives them the gifts of the age of salvation (Matt. 7:11) and is preparing for them full salvation at the close of the age (Lk. 12:32). The disciple's experience of the fatherly love of God places him under a special obligation in the way he conducts himself with his fellow men, as is expressly stated in e.g. Matt. 5:44 ff. and Lk. 6:36.

According to the accounts in all the Gospels (with the exception of the cry of dereliction in Mk. 15:34, par. Matt. 27:46, where the words "My God" were present in Ps. 22:1 which is being quoted), Jesus always addressed God in his prayers with the words "(my) Father" (Mk. 14:36 par. Matt. 26:39, 42 and Lk. 22:42; Matt. 11:25 f. par. Lk. 10:21; Lk. 23:34, 46; Jn. 11:41; 12:27 f.; 17:1, 5, 11, 21, 24 f.). "This constancy of the tradition shows how firmly the address 'Father' was rooted in the tradition of Jesus, quite apart from the question of the authenticity of the individual prayers themselves" (J. Jeremias, The Prayers of Jesus, 55). When we consider that the personal invocation "(my) father" was something totally new in Palestine (cf. above OT, 2 (b)), it must have seemed nothing short of outrageous that Jesus should make use of the completely unceremonious Aram. word 'abbā' (→ art. abba).

(b) The use of name of Father for God by the NT witnesses. The NT witnesses, especially Paul (including Eph. and Col.) and John (Jn. and 1 & 2 Jn.), are unanimous in making the fatherhood of God rest upon a basis of christology and soteriology.

In the Pauline letters the description of God as Father occurs 40 times, normally in liturgical formulae (blessings: Rom. 1:7; 1 Cor. 1:3; 2 Cor. 1:2; doxologies: Rom. 15:6; 2 Cor. 1:3; Eph. 1:3; creeds: 1 Cor. 8:6; Eph. 4:6; prayers: Eph. 5:20; Col. 1:12). When Paul uses, in addition to "God the Father" and "God our Father", the phrase "the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ", as he frequently does (e.g. Rom. 15:6; 2 Cor. 1:3; 11:31), he is emphasizing that God has revealed himself as Father in Jesus Christ and can hence be recognized as such only in him. The fatherhood of God is not a fact of nature, but an eschatological miracle (cf. Rom. 8:14–17; Gal. 4:1 ff.).

John who uses the word Father almost as a synonym for God stresses Jesus' unique relationship to the Father (Jn. 6:57; 10:30; 14:10 f.). As the Son who has been accorded a complete knowledge of God (3:35; 10:15a; 16:15a), Jesus reveals the Father (1:18; 8:26–29; 12:49 f.; 14:7, 9). He thus imparts to his own the status of children of God, a status which can only be attained through him (14:6; 17:25 f.) and can only be received as a gift of divine love (1 Jn. 3:1 f.).

There are only 3 occasions in the NT where a concept of God's fatherhood appears which is without a christological anchor. In Eph. 3:14 f. God in his capacity as creator of the world is called "the Father . . . (of) every family (patria) in heaven and on earth." In Heb. 12:9 in his capacity as the creator of men's souls he is called "Father of spirits." In Jas. 1:17 as creator of the stars, he is called "Father of lights" (cf. Apc. Mos. 36:3). It is possible that in these passages we see a trace of the Gk. concept of the universal fatherhood of God.

The invocatory use of the term Father for God by the Christian church is attested in Matt. 6:9 par. Lk. 11:2; Rom. 8:15; and Gal. 4:6 (→ abba NT, 2). 1 Pet. 1:17 may be an allusion to the invocation of God as Father in the Lord's Prayer (cf. the Coptic Sahidic translation: "If you address him as 'Our Father' who . . ."). With the privilege of calling God "Father" in prayer goes the obligation to live a holy life. O. Hofius

→ Adam, → Child, → God, → Man, → Son, → Woman

(a). P. A. H. de Boer, Fatherhood and Motherhood in Israelite and Judean Piety, 1974; G. Dalman, The Words of Jesus, 1902, 184–94; F. Hahn, The Titles of Jesus in Christology, 1969, 307–17; J. Jeremias, The Central Message of the New Testament, 1965, 9 ff.; The Prayers of Jesus, 1967; New Testament Theology, I, 1971, 36 f., 61 ff.; G. Kittel, abba, TDNT I 5 f.; G. W. H. Lampe, " 'Our Father' in the Fathers", in P. Brooks, ed., Christian Spirituality: Essays in Honour of Gordon Rupp, 1975, 9–31; E. Lohmeyer, The Lord's Prayer, 1965; J. Lowe, The Lord's Prayer, 1962; W. Lüthi, The Lord's Prayer, 1961; T. W. Manson, The Teaching of Jesus, (1931) 1959[3], 89 ff.; H. G. May, "The God of my Father: A Study of Patriarchal Religion," JBL 60, 1941, 155 ff.; H. W. Montefiore, "God as Father in the Synoptic Gospels," NTS 3, 1956–57, 31 ff.; Moore, Judaism, II 201 ff.; G. Quell and G. Schrenk, patēr etc. TDNT V 945–1022; H. Ringgren, 'āḇ, TDOT I 1 ff.; A. Stöger, "Father," EBT I 260–65; T. M. Taylor, " 'Abba, Father' and Baptism", SJT II, 1958, 62–71.

(b). W. Bousset and H. Gressmann, Die Religion des Judentums im späthellenistischen Zeitalter, 1926[3], 377 ff.; J. Carmignac, Recherches sur le "Notre Père", 1969, 55 ff.; W. Grundmann, "Matt. xi, 27 und die Johanneischen 'Der Vater-Der Sohn'-Stellen'," NTS 12, 1965–66, 42–49; R. Gyllenberg, "Gott der Vater im Alten Testament und in der Predigt Jesu," Studia Orientalia, 1, 1926, 3–140; P. Gutiérrez, La paternité spirituelle selon S. Paul, EB 1968; E. Haenchen, "Der Vater der mich gesandt hat," Gott und Mensch, 1965, 68 ff.; E. Hübner, "Credo in Deum Patrem?" EvTh 23, 1963, 646 ff.; E. Jenni, 'āḇ, THAT I 1–17; J. Jeremias, Abba. Studien zur neutestamentlichen Theologie und Zeitgeschichte, 1966; J. Jeremias and W. Jannasch, "Vaterunser," RGG[3] VI 1235 ff.; G. Kittel, Die Religionsgeschichte und das Urchristentum, 1932, 92 ff.; K. G. Kuhn, Achtzehngebet und Vaterunser und der Reim, WUNT 1, 1950; W. Marchel, Abba, Père! La prière du Christ et des chrétiens. Étude exégétique sur les origines et la signification de l'invocation à la divinité comme père, avant et dans le Nouveau Testament, Analecta Biblica 19, 1963; G. Mensching, H.-J. Kraus, and J. Jeremias, "Vatername Gottes," RGG[3] VI 1232 ff.; O. Michel, Der Brief an die Hebräer, KEK 13, 1966[12], 261 ff. (on apatōr); K. H. Rengstorf, Mann und Frau im Urchristentum, 1954, 32 ff.; SB I 392 ff.; W. Schmauch and K. Kulp, "Vaterunser," EKL III 1610 ff.; W. Schmauch, "Vatername Gottes," EKL III 1608 ff.; F. Schröger, Der Verfasser des Hebräerbriefs als Schriftausleger, 1968, 136 ff. (on apatōr); H. Schürmann, Das Gebet des Herrn, 1957, 17–26; W. Staerk, Altjüdische Gebete, (1910) 1930[2]; H. W. Wolff, Was sagt die Bibel von Vater und Mutter? (1959) 1966[3]; T. Zahn, Der Brief des Paulus an die Römer, (1910) 1925[3], 393 ff. (See also Addenda, p.822.)

Fear, Awe

φόβος

φόβος (phobos), terror, fear, alarm, fright, reverence, respect, awe; φοβέομαι (phobeomai), to be afraid, fear, have reverence, respect for; φοβερός (phoberos), fearful, terrible, frightful.

CL phobos means panic, fright, fear, awe, reverence. Like the vb. phobeō, to be frightened, it is already found in Mycenean Gk. (Linear B). Sometimes these words denote fear of the gods, holy awe. But in general, the attitude of reverence before the deity is denoted by sebomai (fear, feel awe, reverence, worship) and the related words eusebeia (which can denote reverence towards the gods and one's parents) and its opposite asebeia (ungodliness, impiety). (On the latter terms → Godliness, art. sebomai; → W. Foerster, art. sebomai, TDNT VII 168–96.)

OT 1. In addition to the above meanings, phobos in the LXX can also mean someone or something that is to be feared. Here the Heb. vb. is pāḥaḏ (tremble). It may even be applied to God as one who is to be feared (Gen. 31:42, 53; Isa. 8:13). The Gk. vb. phobeomai is used in the LXX and the NT only in the middle (apart from Wis. 17:9). It is used intransitively with the preposition apo in the sense of "to be afraid of" (Lev. 26:2; Deut. 1:29). It is used transitively with a personal or impersonal object meaning "to fear" (Num. 14:9, a foreign people; Prov. 13:13, a command; Lev. 19:3, parents; Prov. 24:21, the king). The adj. phoberos (fearful, terrible, frightful) was used in secular Gk. from the 5th cent. B.C. It was applied especially to God in his works (e.g. Ps. 66:5 [LXX 65:3]). The rare noun phobētron (also phobēthron) meaning horror, terror, is found in Isa. 19:17 LXX, Justin, Apol., 2, 8, 7, and once in the NT in Lk. 21:11 where it means terrible sight, event or horror (Arndt, 871, "there will be dreadful portents and signs").

2. There is a characteristic difference between Israel's relationship with God and the religious attitude of the Greeks. The Israelite can stand before God in fear and love. God is great, mighty and terrible (Deut. 10:17 f.; cf. 1 Chron. 16:25). Nevertheless, he is gracious to man (Deut. 6:5, 13). Thus we can understand the frequent address to man which passes right on into the NT: "Fear not" (Gen. 15:1; Jdg. 6:23; Isa. 44:2 and often). God's grace and favour do not abolish the solemnity of the address. It demands man's total obedience (Amos 5:6 f.; Hos. 6:6). For love is not mere feeling. It has to be proved in action, just as God's love is proved (Isa. 41:13 and often). Nevertheless, the motive of fear predominates. The fear of God is the first essential motive in the laws of the Pentateuch (Lev. 19:14, 32; Deut. 13:11; 17:13 etc.). It is the decisive religious factor in OT piety, especially in the Pss., Prov. and Sirach (cf. Ps. 103:11, 13, 17; Prov. 1:7; 23:17; Sir. 1:11 ff. and often). On the other hand, the man who trusts in God does not need to fear enemies, adversity or danger (Pss. 27 and 46, and often).

Compared with the frequency of phobeomai and its cognates, the LXX uses sebomai and eulabeomai comparatively rarely, although their meanings are similar. This presents a contrast with secular Gk.

NT 1. The use of these words in the NT follows that outlined in CL and OT. Objects of fear are: the appearance of angels (Lk. 1:12; 2:9; Matt. 28:4); the catastrophes at the end-time (Lk. 21:26); death (Heb. 2:15); rulers (Rom. 13:3); and the Jews (Jn. 7:13; 20:19). Fear in the sense of anxiety is denoted by the expression phobos kai tromos, fear and trembling, which occurs already in the LXX (Exod. 15:16 and often; cf. 1 Cor. 2:3; 2 Cor. 7:15; Phil. 2:12; cf. also Mk. 5:33). Similarly, phobos and deilia (timidity, despondency) are combined in Sir. 4:17. The noun deilia occurs in 2 Tim. 1:7, and the vb. deiliaō (to be afraid, despondent) in Jn. 14:27 (cf. Deut. 1:21; 3 Macc. 6:19 and often).

phobos and its cognates are used in the sense of fear, awe and reverence before God (e.g. Acts 9:31; 2 Cor. 7:1; Col. 3:22; cf. Eph. 5:21 where the object is Christ). Reverence should be shown to masters (Eph. 6:5; 1 Pet. 2:18), husbands (1 Pet. 3:2), and those outside the church (1 Pet. 3:16). phobeomai (fear) may be followed by apo (Matt. 10:28; Lk. 12:4 and often). But it may also be used transitively with a person or a thing as its object (Matt. 14:5, the people; Heb. 11:23, the king's edict). In such cases the object of fear is some power behind the immediate object. The vb. is used in the weakened sense of "to be afraid that" in Acts 23:10 and Gal. 4:11.

The term phoboumenos ton theon, a God-fearing man (Acts 10:2, 22; 13:16, 26), is a designation for a non-Jew who has connections with the synagogue (→ Conversion, art. prosēlytos). The adj. phoberos (fearful, terrible, frightful) occurs in Heb. 10:27, 31; 12:21.

2. Fear and reverence of God, and also of Christ (Eph. 2:21), provide both the motive and manner of Christian conduct (Lk. 18:2, 4; Acts 9:31; 1 Pet. 2:17; Rev. 11:18). Jesus himself impressed upon the disciples the absolute necessity to fear God who can destroy both body and soul in → hell (geenna) (Matt. 10:28; Lk. 12:5). "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God" (Heb. 10:31; cf. v. 27). Jesus' warning, like the teaching of the apostles (2 Cor. 5:11; 1 Pet. 1:17) points unambiguously to the prospect of judgment. Paul could exhort the Philippians to "work out your own salvation with fear and trembling" (Phil. 2:12). But this is only one side of the motivation. For he immediately adds: "for God is at work in you, both to will and to work for his good pleasure" (2:13).

3. This fear that overtakes men when they encounter God or his messengers may be seen in the accounts of the → miracles of Jesus and the → apostles and also in the appearances of Christ and the → angels. But here, as in the OT, we repeatedly find the command, "Fear not!" It occurs in the accounts of Jairus's daughter (Mk. 5:36; Lk. 8:50), Peter's draught of fishes (Lk. 5:10), the appearance of the angels to Zechariah and Mary (Lk. 1:13, 30), Paul's visions (Acts 18:9; 27:24), John's vision on Patmos (Rev. 1:17), and the prophecy fulfilled on the first Palm Sunday (Jn. 12:15; cf. Isa. 41:10, 13; Zech. 9:9 f.). It occurs in the plur. in the nativity story (Lk. 2:10), Jesus' walking on the water (Matt. 14:27; Mk. 6:50), the transfiguration (Matt. 17:7) and the angel's and Jesus' words at the empty tomb (Matt. 28:5, 10).

4. The exhortation not to fear is also found frequently with regard both to men and the world. The disciples need not fear those who only kill the body (Matt. 10:26, 28; Lk. 12:4 f.). The little flock need not fear want (Lk. 12:32). Christians need not fear their opponents (Phil. 1:28) or suffering (1 Pet. 3:14; Rev. 2:10). For fear of men is taken away from them by security in God (Matt. 10:30 f.; Heb. 11:23, 27; 13:6).

5. The NT letters clearly present the real ground for overcoming fear. Christ has appeared to "deliver all those who through fear of death were subject to lifelong bondage" (Heb. 2:15). Those who are led by the Spirit of God have received the Spirit of sonship which enables them to cry "Abba! Father!" (Rom. 8:15; cf. Gal. 4:6). "God did not give us a spirit of timidity but a spirit of power and love and self-control" (2 Tim. 1:7). "There is no fear in love, but perfect love casts out fear. For fear has to do with punishment, and he who fears is not perfected in love"

(1 Jn. 4:18). It is not fear of punishment but this love which provides the motive and power to keep his → commandments (1 Jn. 5:3).

6. The Christian is constantly confronted by the task of overcoming the motive of fear by that of love. Over and above the motive of fear, faith which is active in love appears at the nerve-centre of Christian conduct in the NT (Gal. 5:6). The NT presents a tension between fear and love. In a paradoxical way they exist together. We are not, therefore, justified in ascribing fear of God and judgment entirely to the influence of the Jewish synagogue and dismissing it as a remnant of Jewish thought. W. Mundle

(a). H. Balz and G. Wanke, phobeō etc., TDNT IX 189 ff.; W. Beilner, "Fear," EBT I 265–69; R. Bultmann, Theology of the New Testament, I, 1952; II, 1955 (see index); W. Eichrodt, Theology of the Old Testament, II, 1967, 268–77 and see index; W. Foerster, sebomai, TDNT VII 168–96; R. Otto, The Idea of the Holy, 1931; S. J. deVries, "Note concerning the Fear of God in the Qumran Scrolls," Revue de Qumran 5, 1965, 233 ff.
(b). J. Becker, Gottesfurcht im Alten Testament, Analecta Biblica 25, 1965; H. Cremer and J. Kögel, Biblisch-theologisches Wörterbuch der neutestamentlichen Gräzität, 1923[11], 1115 ff.; L. Koehler, "Die Offenbarungsformel 'Fürchte dich nicht' im Alten Testament," SThZ 36, 1918, 33 ff.; W. Lütgert, "Die Furcht Gottes," Theologische Studien für M. Kähler, 1905, 163 ff.; S. Plath, "Furcht Gottes." Der Begriff "Furcht" im Alten Testament, 1963; K. Romaniuk, "La crainte de Dieu à Qumran et dans le Nouveau Testament," Revue de Qumran 4, 1963, 3–10; A. Strobel, "Furcht, wem Furcht gebührt. Zum profangriechischen Hintergrund von Röm. 13, 7," ZNW 55, 1964, 58 ff.

Feast, Passover

Festivals and feasts belong together and denote the passage of time, marking the high points and breaks in the rhythm of life in the ancient world. Nearly always they are religious in origin. The comprehensive Gk. term heortē contains both this religious element and the idea of a pause from normal work. The festivals which were important for the biblical writers and the world around them are dealt with in the first and more general article. Because of its particular significance in the passion narrative, the pascha, the Passover, is dealt with separately in the second article.

ἑορτή

ἑορτή (heortē), festival, feast; ἑορτάζω (heortazō), celebrate a festival.

CL 1. heortē has the basic meaning of performance, fulfilment (for the benefit of a deity). In its usual meaning of festival it is attested since Homer (Od., 20, 258 f.).

2. Among the Greeks a great many events were elevated by means of festivals out of the common run of daily life: the change of the seasons and the high points of the year's work from seed-time to harvest (fertility festivals); family events and the relationship between the individual and the community (family and tribal festivals). In later times especially, these festivities were practically always associated with certain deities and named after them. In addition to many festivals of local significance, there was an increasing number which were general throughout Greece. The list of these "legally sanctified portions of time" (Plato, Definitiones, 415a) produced a well-filled calendar of feasts which covered the whole year (in Roman times about a third of the total number of days in the year!) and every area of human life. It was not until later that important political events were also given festivals (memorial feasts), e.g. the battle of Marathon and the victory of Salamis. In these festivals the whole family, or clan, or all members of the tribe or nation would take part, depending on the nature of the festival. But later the number was limited (in the secret rites, or mysteries) to the community of believers and initiates.

Spanning the whole realm of nature, every kind of occupation, and every special situation in life, numerous gods were honoured with a festival. Processes that were natural in origin were not only continued, but exaggerated to excess by celebrations involving immoderate indulgence in wine-drinking and love (especially in connection with the cult of Dionysus; cf. also the practice of hieros gamos, sacred marriage, → Marriage). Preparation for such feasts included fasting, washings and changes of clothing. The festival itself was celebrated with prayer and song, music and dancing, processions, sacrifice, sport, games and competitions. Markets and fairs were also part of the festival, and hostilities were usually interrupted. Gods appeared and entertained or were entertained by their worshippers. They gave counsel and help, allowed men to join in their mourning and rejoicing, to suffer, die and rise again with them. They gave victory to the spirit over the flesh, and bestowed eternal life in the world of the dead. But for all the individualization and spiritualization which these ceremonies underwent, they were in the end all variations of a fertility religion, which, under the symbols of an ear of corn and the phallus, sought by magical means to further the processes of conception, growth and life in plants, animals and human beings.

OT 1. The ancient farming and city culture of Canaan possessed a wealth of religious cults honouring the gods El, Dagon, Baal, the goddesses Asherah, Astarte-Anath and others, and later Egyptian and Babylonian deities also. These cults were full of fertility rites, which attributed to sexual processes a religious potency (sacred prostitution of men as paederasts and of women as q^{e}ḏēšôṯ). The constant temptation of Israel arising from the fascination of these cults is witnessed in particular by the books of Kings. But on the whole Israel, unlike Greece, which in this respect inherited the traditions of the Orient (see above CL), withstood the temptation.

The immigrant shepherd tribes of Israel had to take over a considerable amount from the religion of Canaan in order to be able to live in the land to which that culture belonged. But in order to be able to live before God as the chosen people, they also rejected a great deal (see e.g. the prohibition of religious prostitution, Deut. 23:18 f.; the law forbidding priests to have anything to do with the dead, and the requirements of abstinence from alcoholic drink and women during their service). All sexual activities were separated from the ritual, and reckoned as part of the created order. God himself was also regarded as transcending sexual differences. What was taken over from Israel's neighbours was, moreover, radically altered.

2. Some scholars think that Israel's forebears brought two festivals with them from the steppe-land into the land where they settled. These were the šabbāṯ (→ Sabbath), a day on which important decisions and work were avoided, and the Passover (→ art. pascha) which had the purpose of protecting the herds from harmful demons. In the land of Canaan Israel found and took over at once the calendar of agricultural festivals which belonged to that land, and divided up the cycle of the farmer's year: maṣṣôṯ, at the beginning of the wheat harvest, the Feast of Weeks at the end of it, and the Feast of Tabernacles at the end of the wine harvest. With the combination of the Passover and the maṣṣôṯ, the Passover too became a feast of pilgrimage (Deut. 16:1 ff.) without increasing the total of three (Exod. 23:14–17; 34:18, 22 f.).

Ancient festal customs remained. There is a detailed calendar in Lev. 23, Deut. 16:1–16, and the appropriate sacrifices are listed in Num. 28:9–29:39. But the recipient now was quite clearly the God of Israel. Sabbaths and feasts of pilgrimage were "to the Lord" (cf. Exod. 16:23, 25). Israel associated the ancient festivals which were based on the cycle of nature with the events of her great history. Thus the pesaḥ-maṣṣôṯ was early associated with the salvation from Egypt, the Feast of Weeks with the making of the covenant and the giving of the commandments on Sinai, and the Feast of Tabernacles with the journey through the wilderness (Exod. 12:12, 17; 19:1; Lev. 23:43). To preserve this historical link, which underlined the ethical content of the festivals, and to prevent Israel from relapsing into mere ritual and heathenism in its feasts, was the task of the prophets who struggled and remonstrated with the people on God's behalf because of their love and the ties of kindred. By threatening (Amos 8:10; Mal. 2:3) and scolding (Amos 5:21; Isa. 1:13 f.), they aimed to make room for God's commandments and their fulfilment along with and indeed within the sacrificial rites. Voluntary abandonment of sacrificial worship was never demanded. But whenever it became impossible for the people to carry on the sacrifices which God had ordained, the → sabbath became the most important festival for Israel, representing both a witness to outsiders and a sign of the covenant (Exod. 31:12–18).

3. The Heb. equivalents for the term heortē in the LXX are ḥagˉ (about 52 times), with the basic meaning derived from ḥgg, to dance (the cycle of dances – the cycle of the year), and môʿēḏ (about 29 times), from the root yʿd with its primary meaning of appoint, designate. ḥag is a general term for festival, and is used for the three festivals of pilgrimage and especially the Feast of Tabernacles. It denotes perhaps also procession, or festal dance. môʿēḏ means appointed time, festal assembly (also festal sacrifice and location).

There were also individual and family celebrations (→ circumcision, → marriage and burial), national ones (accession and victory celebrations), local festivals, and occasions like a festival of sheep-shearing. In addition to sabbath days, importance was attached to celebrating the new moon, when a day of rest was kept and special sacrifices were offered. Two further important religious festivals were held in the autumn (which are attributed by some scholars to the Holiness Code): the New Year on the 1st and the Day of Atonement on the 10th of the month Tishri (Num. 29:1–11; Lev. 23:32–32). There may also have been at the New Year a festival of renewing the covenant (cf. Jos. 24; Exod. 19–24), and even, according to Mowinckel, the enthronement of God. After the exile there arose in the Eastern diaspora the "feast of lots (Purim)", associated with the book of Esther. The Apocrypha tell of the desecration of the feasts and the temple (1 Macc. 1:39, 45; 2 Macc. 6:6 f.), the reconsecration of the temple and the establishment of the feast, Hanukkah, the feast of dedication, to commemorate this event (1 Macc. 4:36–41; 2 Macc. 10:1–8). Tobit (1:6), Judith (8:6; 10:2) and Jesus ben Sirach (33:8; 43:7; 47:10) also tell of the observance of festivals in obedience to God's commandment.

4. In looking for the roots of the Christian attitude to feasts within Jud. we must first consider Philo. He mentions over ten festivals by name (Spec.Leg., 1, 169–89; 2, 41), of which the sabbath is of prime importance as the birthday of the world and to which nature itself points (Op.Mund., 89; Praem, 153). Only God himself can celebrate the festivals properly (Cher., 90:85 f.), but he allows the righteous to take part in his celebrations, so that the whole life of the faithful is one continuous feast (Spec.Leg. 2, 42–55).

Even Gentiles are impressed by the holiness and seriousness with which, in keeping with Jewish customs, the worshippers can bridle their lusts as with perfect virtue they approach God's sanctuary for prayers and sacrifice (Congr., 161 ff.; Vit.Mos., 2, 20–24; cf. Josephus, Ap., 2, 282). Josephus too records a calendar of feasts (Ant., 3, 237–254) in which he mentions not only those known to Philo, but others like the festival of wood-carrying (War, 2, 425), the Festival of Lights in memory of the re-establishment of the temple worship under Judas Maccabaeus (Ant., 12, 323–325), and the celebrations to mark the completion of the Herodian temple (Ant., 15, 421).

5. Philo and Josephus give us an idealized picture of the festivals which were celebrated by the Jews in their time. In fact, Jewish groups have always celebrated the same festivals, but each in their own way and often too at their own particular time. There were even independent festivals, which were of importance only to a particular group, or were directed against other groups. Examples are the days observed by Pharisees of the Shammaite and Zealot schools to celebrate the victory of Pharisaic theology and jurisdiction over that of the Sadducees, and the political victories over the Seleucids and the Romans. Among the Essenes of Qumran there were the Feast of Weeks and the Feast of Renewal of the Covenant, an oil festival, and quarterly intercalary days which served as harvest festival, summer festival, sowing festival and green grass festival. These festivals belonging to isolated groups also differed in content, particularly in regard to the particular group's attitude to the temple or the Messiah figures. The Essenes were so critical of the temple worship that they took no part in the animal sacrifices.

A special cause of differences was provided by the dates of the festivals, since there was no general agreement on the calendar, and the dates observed, for instance, by the Pharisees and the Essenes, differed from one another, as did nominally even the sabbath dates (Jub. 6:32–38; 4QHos. 2:15; Men. 65a–66a). The Pharisees reckoned their calendar according to the lunar cycle, and brought it where necessary (later by calculated rules) into line with the solar year by adding an extra month. The Essenes, on the other hand, reckoned by the sun. Since the law of time illustrates the harmony of heaven and earth, the commandment demands that the days and hours appointed by God should be observed, and that all activity should be ordered by them (1QS 9:13 f.; 10:1–8; 1QHab 7:13 f.; 1QH 12:4–11). Hence at Qumran importance is attached to the exact study of the instructions and of the stars, and to the special revelation concerning the proper times for festivals (CD 6:18 f.; 1QS 1:9; 3:10). The Qumran calendar may be reconstructed from Jub. 6:23–32 and Eth.Enoch 72:7–32; four seasons of equal length ($3 \times 30 + 1$ day $= 91$ days $= 13$ weeks) make up a year of 364 days $= 52$ weeks (cf. also the liturgy of the heavenly sabbath sacrifice, found at Herod's fortress Masada). This meant that every feast was always celebrated on the same day of the week, and that none of the main festivals could fall on a sabbath. A fragment of a calendar found in Cave 4 (called "Mishmarot"), which lays down the periods of duty for the divisions of priests, shows on which days of the week the chief feasts fall (Passover on a Tuesday, offering of sheaves and Feast of Weeks on a Sunday, New Year on a Wednesday, Day of Atonement on a Friday, and the Feast of Tabernacles on a Wednesday).

NT Early Christians found themselves in a tension between the various Jewish communities. Thus in the question of the festival calendar too, they had to face disagreements with other groups. And since their members were drawn from the different "parties", this happened even within their own ranks.

1. In the early Christian church the propriety of celebrating the festivals together with the whole of the Jewish people was never questioned, so that it needed no special mention. Only occasionally is it stated that Jesus or Paul went to the synagogues on the sabbath, in order to pray, read or to teach (cf. Mk. 1:21; Lk. 4:16; Acts 16:13), or that the disciples and the churches took part in the pilgrim festivals. It is thus not surprising that the Jewish festival liturgy finds its way into the literature of the NT. The readings and actions used at the New Year and at the Day of Atonement form, for example, the basis for the liturgical interpretation (homiletic midrash) of Hebrews. A warning like that of 1 Cor. 5:1–8 had as its original setting a celebration during the pesaḥ-maṣṣôṯ week (similarly Gal. 5:9). The confessional formula about the one God through whom are all things (1 Cor. 8:4–6) reminds us of the first pericope of the cycle of Bible readings. Pagans who had to give up their form of festival celebrations in order to become Christians, could be taken along to the widely known Jewish festivals, whose historical background was in agreement with the spiritual and moral values which pervaded them.

2. What in the Synoptic Gospels is tacitly assumed rather than explicitly stated, becomes in the Fourth Gospel a main theme: Jesus is not merely a Jew among Jews; he represents rather the true Israel. Therefore, he demonstrates in his life, suffering and death the proper festal celebration. Through him the meaning of the traditional festivals returns with a new, final significance and is offered afresh to the Jews in this renewed form. The Jesus of the Fourth Gospel speaks in the style of the Pesikta (midrashim, sermon-like expositions of bible texts which were read at festivals and important sabbaths, probably in a three-year cycle). Woven into, as it were, the fabric of the recurring festivals of Israel, he presents himself with his discourses as their secret, and yet revealed, centre and climax. In each case the discourse centres on the "I am" words. The significance of this for the structure of John is even shown statistically by the fact that 15 of the total of 25 occurrences of the word heortē in the NT are found in this gospel. The prologue of the gospel is related to the liturgy of the Nisan cycle of festivals. With 1st Nisan in the spring, the Jewish festal year began (Rosh ha-Shanah 1:1), and this date was widely regarded as the anniversary of the creation of the world (ibid. 10b–11a; 12). Hence in some Jewish circles the reading of Gen. 1, the first of the series of pericopae, was appointed for Nisan, and Jn. 1:1–18 may well be a homiletic midrash arising from such a reading. The exegesis of the passage underlines the connection between the beginning and the new creation, while the rhythmic form of this → archē hymn indicates liturgical associations (similarly Col. 1:15–18).

The temporal statements of Jn. 1:29 ff. enable us to recognize a period of about two weeks, i.e. from 1st Nisan to the Passover festival on 15th Nisan (Jn. 2:13). From 2:13 (23), the cycles of feasts spread through the whole gospel. Probably three years are intended, provided that in 5:1 we read "a" feast, which will then no doubt refer to the Feast of Tabernacles. The second cycle accordingly begins at 6:4, and goes on through the Feast of Tabernacles to the Dedication of the Temple. After initial refusal Jesus goes, when the kairos (→ Time) has come, once more to the Feast of Tabernacles (ch. 7), in order to reveal after the fashion of a pēšer at Qumran the hidden meaning of the festal customs (the water procession, the great illuminations, Sukkah 5:2 ff.) by his own exposition of them (see Jn. 7:37; 9:7, 5). In the same year Jesus' presence in the temple for the Feast of Dedication is recorded (Jn. 10:22–29; cf. 1 Macc. 4:36–59). The third cycle begins in 11:55. The Passover of the trial and death, which is the only one mentioned by the synoptics, receives in John's record the most extensive treatment.

In all three Passover feasts which he mentions John makes use of a few of the chief characteristics of this festival, which after the destruction of the temple was the easiest one to preserve, since it was a festival of the family and of the laity. The vivid re-enactment of the historical events made redemption a concrete reality in memory, experience and hope, and reached its climax in the messianic hope with which this time was filled. At Passover time multitudes of people thronged together, seeking, and here and there finding, bringers of salvation, messiahs. Many appeared in and around Jerusalem, on the Mount of Olives, or by the Jordan (Josephus, Ant., 20, 169 ff., 97 ff.). Occupation forces, moved from Caesarea to Jerusalem especially for the feast (Josephus, Ant., 20, 106 f.), watched over their movements and prevented them from carrying out their intentions by scattering the communities and killing their leaders. But messianic pretenders also arose far from the temple in Samaria, Galilee, and in the wilderness. Wherever they arose, they inspired the hope that with the dawning of the end-time the early days of Israel would return, e.g. the wilderness period with the miraculous feeding of Israel with bread from heaven.

The Passover at the beginning of John's Gospel, with its record of the cleansing of the temple (2:12–22), already sounds the note of messianic hope. In the second Passover (Jn. 6) the bread motif is emphasized: the bread of slavery becomes the bread of freedom. The chapter is a pēšer, an actualizing exposition, on the words bread and flesh. The Christian sacrament of a meal (→ Lord's Supper) is a substitute for the passover sacrifice in a form which had a long history in Judaism and after A.D. 70 became universal practice. In the account of the third Passover (Jn. 12 ff.) the messianic motif is again stressed at the start, and in contrast to his attitude at the feast of the previous year Jesus now accepts the acclamation of the people (12:12–15; cf. 6:15). His ceremonial entry occurs on the very day on which the passover lambs were selected to be slaughtered the day before the evening of the festival. Thus the whole Johannine account of the trial points with unmistakable symbolism to the fact that Jesus is in truth the Lamb of God who will be sacrificed for Israel. He dies on the day and at the hour when Israel kills the lambs, and (in contrast to those crucified with him, but like the passover Lamb, according to the regulation of Exod. 12:46) no bone of his body is broken (Jn. 19:14, 32–36; cf. also 1:29–36; Rev. 5:6, 9, 12; 12:11; 1 Cor. 5:7; 1 Pet. 1:19). This lamb symbolism in Jn. 12 and 19 forms a setting for the passion discourses, in which themes from the Song of Solomon, which was read in the services of Passover week, appear in midrash form (exhortations to unity in love, Jn. 13:31 ff.; 14:15 ff.; 15:9 ff.; question of the way, seeking and finding, 16:5).

In the Johannine account of the Passover of the trial, traces may be discerned of a Passover celebration according to the Essene rites, behind the elements of the Pharisaic tradition. The indication of time in Jn. 12:1 indicates that the framework with which the gospel closes is concentrated, as it were, within a festival week. (The synoptics also show signs of such a reckoning.) The end of the world corresponds to the creation (seven-day cycles of this kind originated and were handed down in priestly circles, cf. Gen. 1; Exod. 24:16). The first day (12:1 ff.) in Bethany is Sunday; the second (12:12 ff.) is Monday with the acclamation of Jesus as Messiah. The next indication of time is indefinite (13:1): "before the feast of the Passover". This introduces the foot-washing and the Last Supper, and because of the many events still to follow occurs as early as possible. The Tuesday would be the exact date for the Passover meal among the Essenes, their 14th Nisan. The discourse on bread in Jn. 6 also takes place shortly before the (Pharisaic) Passover feast. According to this account, Jesus and his party celebrated their feast on the Tuesday evening. Chief importance is attached to the change of clothes and the washing, while the eating of the lamb, which was the most important part of the Pharisees' celebration of the Passover, is given as little attention in John's account as it is in that of the synoptics. All the NT accounts are alike in making it resemble what we know of the Essene feast, which was eschatological in emphasis and probably involved no sacrificial lamb (see the description of their daily meal in Josephus, War, 2, 129–131; 1QS 6:4 f.; the eschatological feast, 1QSa 2:17–22; also Gos. Heb. according to Epiphanius, Haer., 30, 22, 4, where Jesus says in answer to his disciples after the Passover meal, "Do you think I desire to eat meat with you at this Passover?"). Towards the morning, i.e. early on Wednesday, the betrayal and arrest take place (18:1 ff.; on Tuesday and Wednesday, Syrian Didascalia 21). This would leave sufficient time on this and the following day to carry out what is recorded in 18:13, 24, 28 without a breach of the law. (For instance it is forbidden, according to Mishnah Sanhedrin 4:1, to hold a trial by night or during a festival, or to pass a death sentence at the first hearing.) The impression conveyed by the accounts as they now stand is due to the fact that they are interested in other themes besides strict chronology.

The Pauline tradition does not necessarily contradict this chronology, for the "night when he was betrayed" (1 Cor. 11:23) does not have to be identical with the night before he died. Later church tradition associated (on the ground of Did., 8:1) the Christian practice of fasting on Wednesdays with the arrest of Jesus on this day, and the Friday fast with the crucifixion. The fifth day is again fixed (Jn. 19:14): a Friday, according to Jn. the day of preparation for the Passover, i.e. the 14th Nisan of the Pharisaic calendar (so too Sanhedrin 43a; according to the synoptic tradition the first day of the feast). The sixth day, a sabbath, is only hinted at. For non-Christian Jews it was always a day of pleasure, but here it is a day of quiet mourning on account of Jesus' burial. In contrast to this is the "first day of the week" (20:1 ff.), the day of Jesus' resurrection and thus the symbol of the dawn of a new world. ([Ed.] In 1 Cor. 5:8 Paul sees the Christian life in terms of the Passover:

"Let us, therefore, celebrate the festival [heortazōmen], not with the old leaven, the leaven of malice and evil, but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth" [RSV].)

This taking up of the Jewish festivals, which in John's Gospel appears in a thoroughly conservative and biblical form, had the effect of causing the Christian festivals to retain the biblical and historical emphasis, and thus averted the danger of a pagan, erotic form of celebration.

3. In spite of the fact that the Christian festivals were thus rooted in Jewish tradition, differences and conflicts soon appeared. Paul's polemics are particularly severe against feast days which imply recognition of astral and other natural powers instead of the one God which were celebrated in the old spirit (Gal. 4:8–11; Col. 2:8–17; Rom. 14:5 ff.). Moreover, for Paul the significance of all feasts, whether Jewish or pagan, has been superseded by Christ. He does not reject all celebrations as such, but he requires celebration of the right kind.

A similar situation is found in the → sabbath controversy of the Gospels. Jesus took part in the debates of the schools on the question of keeping the sabbath rightly. The catalogue of weekday work which was forbidden had not yet been finalized. The learned scribes were concerned on the one hand to preserve the law, but on the other to preserve humanity. Jesus was criticized by those who held stricter views, and in answer justified his actions in the manner of his times on biblical grounds (cf. Matt. 12:1–12 par.). If in the Fourth Gospel the debate seems to be more intense than in the Synoptics, this intensification of the conflict is not to be seen as the cause of the division between Christians and (what was now) orthodox Judaism, but rather as its immediate result.

4. Along with the general adoption of the Jewish festivals by the early Christian communities with differences of detail, special Christian festivals also began to develop. But in the NT we find only the beginnings of these. In addition to the sabbath services, the Christians had their special gatherings on the first day of the week in memory of the redemption brought about by the resurrection of the Lord (1 Cor. 16:2; Acts 20:7). Towards the end of the 1st cent. it came to be called the "Lord's day" (Rev. 1:10). However, the fact that the two days followed one another soon led to a conscious contrasting of the two (Ign., Mag. 9:1; Barn. 15:9; Did. 14:1). In the following centuries, when the days of the week came generally to be given the names of the ancient pagan planet-gods, the name "Lord's day" was changed to "Sunday", which earned for the Christians the accusation that they were sun-worshippers.

It was not until the end of the 2nd cent. that Passover became the Christian Easter, and 100 years later still that the Feast of Weeks became the Christian Whitsuntide. But Jesus who gives new meaning to these feasts points the church back to their Jewish origin. In the course of the 4th cent. Ascension was introduced between them as a purely Christian festival. The last of the great Christian festivals to appear is Christmas around A.D. 335 in Rome. Of the many dates suggested, 25th December prevailed. The purpose was that it should be celebrated in opposition to the sun-cult, but with it were adopted solstice celebration customs from various nations. It is worthy of note, however, that the date is not far removed from that of the Jewish Hanukkah festival. Both were in part known as a Festival of Light.

Christians in every age have celebrated festivals, for the celebration of festivals draws attention to historical realities. It has its basis in an appreciation of time and the refusal simply to accept continuous repetition without a break. Like the commandments, the festivals of Israel were also at first accepted without question by Jewish Christians. In the end they had to be forcibly excluded as heretics, since for them Jesus Christ had become increasingly the real meaning of the ancient feasts, and it was through him that they regarded themselves as permanently linked to all Israel.

Gentile Christian churches also celebrated their festivals in accordance with the Jewish calendar, although in a certain contra-distinction to them. The determination to break free from the fortunes of the Jewish community led them, however, to adopt new pagan elements as well. In the lively controversy which resulted we can see the permanent link between the old community and the new. R. Mayer πάσχα πάσχᾰ (pascha), Passover.

OT pascha is the Gk. transliteration of the Aram. pasḥā' which corresponds to the Heb. pesaḥ. The meaning is not completely clear. Exod. 12:13, 23, 27 indicate a connection with the Heb. pāsaḥ 'al, leap over, spare, but some scholars think that this is a popular explanation. The Gk. pronunciation of the Aram. pasḥā' has in origin nothing to do with paschein, suffer, although a kinship between them was postulated in the patristic age.

1. In OT and Jewish literature the word is used in various senses. It can mean (a) the Passover festival (Exod. 12:11; Num. 9:2) which took place between 14th and 15th Nisan (Ezek. 45:21, conjectured reading; Lev. 23:5); (b) the animal killed at this feast (Exod. 12:5, 21; Deut. 16:2); and in Judaism (c) the seven-day festival of pesaḥ-maṣṣôṯ, made into a single festival at the time of the exile at the latest (Lev. 23:6–8; cf. heortē OT 2).

2. The Passover festival goes back to an ancient nomadic custom, which may have been connected with the annual change of pasture in the spring, and may have had the purpose of protecting the flocks from demons. In the OT tradition, however, it is associated solely with the events of the exodus from Egypt (Exod. 12:21–23), and is dedicated to be a memorial of this in the history of God's salvation of Israel (Deut. 16:1; Exod. 12:11–14). The way in which it was observed underwent various changes in the course of time, the most radical of which was in connection with the religious reforms of Josiah (621 B.C.). These meant that the celebration of the festival, which had originally been undertaken by the individual clans each in its own locality, was now confined to Jerusalem and linked with the temple worship (Deut. 16:1–8; 2 Ki. 23:21–23). Consequently the feast took on the character of a pilgrim festival like that of Pentecost and the Feast of Tabernacles (→ heortē OT).

3. (a) In the NT times it was the chief festival of the year, for which thousands of pilgrims from the whole Jewish world streamed to Jerusalem (cf. Lk. 2:41; Jn. 11:55). The actual feast, the Passover meal, used to take place in the houses, and, because of the great number of those taking part (more than 100,000; cf. J. Jeremias, The Eucharistic Words of Jesus, 1966², 42), partly on the roofs and in the courtyards. It was held in small groups of at least 10 persons, and began in the evening at or after sunset (15th Nisan). The killing of the lambs in the inner forecourt of the temple, which was carried out by representatives of the individual groups (the only duty of the priests was the sprinkling of the blood of the lambs on the altar of burnt offering), and the preparation of the Passover meal took place on the previous afternoon (14th Nisan). The meal itself was eaten reclining. (i) To begin with, the head of the household spoke a word of dedication over a first cup of wine, from which he and after him all the members of the household drank. Then a preliminary dish was eaten (various herbs with a sauce of fruit purée). After this the main meal (passover lamb, unleavened bread, bitter herbs and purée, together with wine) was brought in, and a second cup of wine poured out. Neither of these was yet touched, however, for the next event was (ii) the Passover liturgy. The most important part of this was the Passover haggaḏâh, in which the head of the family related the story of the exodus from Egypt according to Deut. 26:5–11, and explained the meaning of the special items in the meal (the lamb, the unleavened bread, and the bitter herbs). Then followed the communal singing of Ps. 113 or 113 and 114 (the first part of the Passover Hallēl). Not until then was (iii) the main meal eaten, the head of the family introducing this with a prayer over the unleavened bread and ending it with a prayer over a third cup of wine. The end of the feast (iv), which was not allowed to continue beyond midnight, was formed by the singing of Pss. 114–117 or 115–118 (the second part of the Passover Hallēl), and the blessing pronounced by the head of the family over a fourth cup of wine.

(b) This feast served in ancient Judaism as a reminder of the redemption of the people from the slavery of the Egyptians and the joy over the freedom thus attained. This is its meaning in the OT also. But in addition to this it was an occasion for looking forward to the coming redemption to be brought by the Messiah. Passover time, particularly during the Roman occupation of Palestine, was always a time of increased Messianic expectation (Lk. 13:1–3; Mk. 15:7 par.; Jn. 6:15; cf. A. Strobel, ZNW 49, 1958, 187 ff.).

NT In the NT pascha has the same range of meanings as in contemporary Jud. Its chief use is for the Feast of the Passover including the Feast of Unleavened Bread (maṣṣôṯ; Matt. 26:2; Lk. 2:41; 22:1; Acts 12:4; Jn. 2:13, 23; 6:4; 11:55; 12:1; 13:1; 18:39; 19:14). But it can also refer to the Passover proper (Mk. 14:1; Matt. 26:18; Heb. 11:28) or the Passover lamb (Mk. 14:12; 14, 16; Matt. 26:17, 19; Lk. 22:7, 8, 11, 13, 15; Jn. 18:28; 1 Cor. 5:7). The expressions "to prepare the Passover" and "to eat the Passover" could also refer to the entire main part of the feast.

1. (a) The only reference made in the NT to the Passover of the exodus from Egypt is at Heb. 11:28. It is interpreted as evidence of the faith of Moses, in that he believed God's promise to spare the people on the ground of the Passover blood, and showed his faith by keeping the Passover.

(b) The Passover background plays a special part in the passion narrative. All four Gospels record that the Last Supper of Jesus, his arrest, trial and condemnation took place at Passover time (Mk. 14; Matt. 26, 27; Lk. 22, 23; Jn. 18, 19). According to the synoptic gospels, Jesus' Last Supper was itself a Passover meal (Mk. 14:12–26 par.), and he was arrested, tried and condemned on the Passover night and crucified the next day. According to John, on the other hand, all these events happened 24 hours earlier (cf. Jn. 18:28; 19:14), so that the death of Jesus took place at the time when the Passover lambs were killed, on the afternoon of the 14th Nisan. Many regard this as a later alteration of the date, probably occasioned by the comparison found elsewhere in the NT (1 Cor. 5:7; 1 Pet. 1:19; Jn. 19:36; cf. Rev. 5:6, 9, 12; 12:11) of Jesus with the Passover lamb. ([Ed.] However, the chronological schemes of the Gospels and the contemporary systems of reckoning are subjects of intense discussion, see bibliography.) The objections which have been raised, particularly against the identification of Jesus' Last Supper with a Passover meal, do not carry much weight. Not only the setting (Mk. 14:12 par.; Lk. 22:14), but also the words of explanation, in which Jesus compares himself to the Passover lamb (Mk. 14:22–24 par.; Lk. 22-19 f.), surely point us to this context (the interpretation of the elements of the feast by the head of the family; cf. J. Jeremias, The Eucharistic Words of Jesus, 1966², 41–84).

2. In the early church the Passover continued to be celebrated (Jn. 2:13; 6:4; 11:55 imply this; cf. Acts 20:6). As in Judaism, the feast took place on the evening following 14th Nisan and in expectation of eschatological redemption. This cannot be ascertained directly from the NT, but it may be deduced, in particular, from the records we have of the Passover festival of the Quartodecimans (cf. B. Lohse, see bibliography), a Christian community in Asia Minor and Syria which retained in this respect the customs of the earliest church. As we can see from 1 Cor. 5:7–8 (which may be an early Christian Passover haggaḏâh) and 1 Pet. 1:13–19, the primitive church regarded itself as the people of God redeemed in the eschatological Passover. The baptized are exhorted, like those involved in the first Passover, to live holy lives in readiness to depart (1 Pet. 1:13, 17), as those redeemed "with the precious blood of Christ, like that of a lamb without blemish or spot" (1 Pet. 1:19, cf. 1 Cor. 5:7 "Christ our Passover"). The church receives the call to keep the feast (heortazōmen) and cleanse itself from the old leaven, "that you may be a new lump" (1 Cor. 5:7 f.). The eschatological Passover feast has begun with Good Friday, and its fulfilment in the return of Christ is awaited at any time in the Passover night.

3. This form and interpretation of the Passover festival disappeared early in the history of the church. During the 2nd cent. the celebration of Easter on a Sunday became general, with its emphasis on remembering the sacrificial death of Jesus, the true Passover lamb. This process gives clear expression both to the break between Judaism and Christianity and to the decline of eschatological expectation within the early Christian church. B. Schaller

→ Lord's Supper, → Pentecost, → Resurrection, → Sabbath

(a). J.-J. von Allmen, Worship: Its Theology and Practice, 1965; J. Bowman, The Gospel of Mark: The New Christian Jewish Passover Haggadah, 1965; H. Cazelles and J. Michl, "Passover", EBT II 642–47; R. E. Clements, God and Temple, 1965; O. Cullmann, Early Christian Worship, 1953; G. Delling, Worship in the New Testament, 1962; G. Fohrer, History of Israelite Religion, 1973; A. S. Herbert, Worship in Ancient Israel, 1959; A. J. B. Higgins, The Lord's Supper in the New Testament, (1952) 1960; A. Jaubert, The Date of the Last Supper, 1965; J. Jeremias, The Eucharistic Words of Jesus, 1966²; and pascha, TDNT V 896–904; H.-J. Kraus, Worship in Israel, 1966; C. F. D. Moule, Worship in the New Testament, 1961; A. R. Johnson, Sacral Kingship in Ancient Israel, 1955; H. H. Rowley, Worship in Ancient Israel: Its Forms and Meaning, 1967; W. Rordorf, Sunday, 1968; E. Ruckstuhl, Chronology of the Last Days of Jesus, 1965; J. C. Rylaarsdam, "Feasts and Fasts," IDB II 260–64; and "Passover and Feast of Unleavened Bread," IDB III 663–68; H. Schauss, The Jewish Festivals, 1938; J. B. Segal, The Hebrew Passover from the Earliest

Times to A.D. 70, London Oriental Series 12, 1963 (extensive bibliography); M. H. Shepherd, The Paschal Liturgy and the Apocalypse, 1960; N. H. Snaith, The Jewish New Year Festival: Its Origin and Development, 1947; R. de Vaux, Ancient Israel: Its Life and Institutions, 1961, 484–518 (literature on individual feasts, 552); A. Guilding, The Fourth Gospel and Jewish Worship, 1960; L. Morris, The New Testament and the Jewish Lectionaries, 1964 (reply to Guilding); J. D. M. Derrett, "The Parable of the Great Supper," Law in the New Testament, 1970, 126–55; G. Ogg, "The Chronology of the Last Supper," Historicity and Chronology in the New Testament, SPCK Theological Collections 6, 1965, 75–96.

(b). On heortē: E. Auerbach, "Die Feste im alten Israel," VT 8, 1958, 1–18; L. Deubner, Attische Feste, reprint 1956; I. Elbogen, Der jüdische Gottesdienst, 1924²; A. Jaubert, "Jésus et le calendrier de Qumrân", NTS 7, 1960–61, 1–30; H.-J. Kraus, "Gottesdienst im alten und neuen Bund," EvTh 4–5, 1965, 171 ff.; H. Lietzmann, Der christliche Kalender, 1935; G. Loeschke, Jüdisches und Heidnisches im christlichen Kult, 1910; R. Mayer, Der Babylonische Talmud, 1965² (selections, see on feasts); S. Mowinckel, Das Betronungsfest Jahwes und der Ursprung der Eschatologie, 1921; M. P. Nilsson, Griechische Feste von religiöser Bedeutung, mit Ausschluss der attischen, reprint 1957; B. Reicke, Diakonie, Festfreude und Zelos in Verbindung mit der christlichen Agapenfeier, 1951; L. Rost, Weidewechsel und altisraelitischer Festkalender, 1951; P. Volz, Das Neujahrfest Jahwes, 1912.

On pascha: J. Carmignac, "Comment Jésus et ses contemporains pouvaient-ils célébrer là Pâque à une date non officielle?" Revue de Qumran 5, 1964, 59 ff.; R. Le Déaut, La Nuit Pascale, 1963; P. Grelot and J. Pierron, La Nuit et les Fêtes de Paques, 1956; N. Flüglister, Die Heilsbedeutung des Pascha, Studien zum Alten und Neuen Testament 8, 1963; H.-J. Kraus, "Zur Geschichte des Passah-Massotfestes im Alten Testament", EvTh 18, 1958, 47–67; E. Kutsch, "Erwägungen zur Geschichte der Passahfeier und des Massotfestes," ZTK 55, 1958, 1–35; B. Lohse, Das Passahfest der Quartadezimaner, BFChTh 54, 1953; J. Pedersen, Passahfest und Passahlegende, 1933; J. Schildenberger, "Der Gedächtnischarakter des alt- und neutestamentlichen Paschas," in B. Neunheuser, ed., Opfer Christi und Opfer der Kirche, 1960, 75–97.

Fellowship, Have, Share, Participate

The following article deals with words which have to do with having, sharing and participation and fellowship. The two key words that are examined together with their associated ideas are echō (have), and koinōnia (communion, fellowship).

ἔχω

ἔχω (echō), have; μετέχω (metechō), share, participate in; μετοχή (metochē), sharing, participation; μέτοχος (metochos), partaking, sharing, participating, a partner, companion.

CL echō means to have or hold in wide range of senses: possess, keep, have, hold; aor. acquire, take into possession; intrans. keep, hold oneself. Thus the connection between the subject and object of echō can denote a similar wide range of personal, material and metaphorical meanings. Sometimes the subject and object can exchange places. In Gk. one may say "he has a sickness" or "a sickness has him." Moreover, the word can denote entry into any one of these conditions: to attain to, get hold of, come by.

This great breadth of meaning evidently made it possible for Aristotle to take echō into his teaching about categories. In view of its content it is clearly regarded as a genuine category (Cat., 15). Elsewhere, however, he felt free to omit it with keisthai (posture, attitude, Cat., 2) altogether or to group it with another category (cf. F. Ueberweg, History of Philosophy, I, 188, 154). In his later Metaphysics it is again counted among the 30 categories discussed there. It means to have or to hold in the following senses: (1) to treat a thing according to its own nature or impulse (e.g. a fever has a man; people have clothes); (2) to be present in (e.g. "the body has a disease" means that a disease is present in the body); (3) to contain or hold (e.g. the vessel holds the liquid); (4) hindering a thing from acting according to its natural impulse (e.g. a pillar holds that which it supports).

metechō means to share or participate. Its object is always in the gen. The noun metochē means sharing, participation, and the adj. metochos likewise means sharing.

Two aspects of these words are theologically significant. There is the rational and material sense of having (as in Aristotle), and there is the enthusiastic sense of having, as being possessed, or mystical sharing. The latter sense found expression in Homer, Plato, Plotinus and other writers who spoke of the daimonion echein (having a demon or a demon having one) which acted in people and which a man could have. Later the idea broadened out into the pantheistic and mystical having of the divine One in Plotinus. In later philosophy the nous (mind) became the world-soul which no longer had personal characteristics. It was no longer said that man had nous or logos (reason). Instead he was said to participate (metechō) in them. Plato used metochē (participation) to express the relationship of particular things to the Idea or → Form. The lower and relative participates in the higher and absolute. Out of this there arose in the course of philosophical development a cosmic hierarchy of all existents which leads in an unbroken line of participation to a higher world (on Plotinus see TDNT II 830). The theological aspect of this idea of cosmic participation found classical expression in Origen's Platonic restatement of the doctrine of creation (cf. J. N. D. Kelly, Early Christian Doctrines, 1968⁴, 128 ff.).

OT Heb. has no special word for echō. What is expressed by echō in Gk. is expressed in Heb. by the dat., a pronoun, a preposition or a circumlocution, such as saying that someone or something is in the hand or hands of someone ('al yaḏ or biyḏê etc.). echō is found 12 times in the LXX for these expressions. In all, it is used to translate over 50 different Heb. expressions. echō occurs more than 500 times in the LXX. But a large number of these instances come in passages which have no Heb. original.

It is the same with the compounds metechō, metochē, and metochos as with → koinōneō etc. The words appear only in the later writings of the OT. metechō is used to translate expressions which in Heb. use only prepositions. metochē and metochos mostly translate words connected with the root ḥāḇar (tie, unite).

The words are used in these passages in basically the same sense as in earlier Gk. literature. Their theological significance is not, however, to be derived from the Gk. but from Heb. usage against its OT background.

At the heart of the OT message stands the confession that God has chosen his people. It is his possession. The reverse is also true. He is his people's God (Pss. 33:12; 144:15; cf. Hos. 2:21–25; → Covenant). Therefore, there shall be no other gods beside him (Exod. 20:2 f.). Because Yahweh is the God of his people, he is strength, rock, fortress and saviour of the individual (e.g. Pss. 18:3; 27:1). God is the → inheritance of the Levites (Deut. 10:9; Ezek. 44:28; and often). Hence, Israel's confession: "Our God is a God of salvation" (Ps. 68:20; cf. 73:25). Esther prayed: "I have no helper beside you" (Est. 4:17t LXX). For similar expressions in Maccabean and post-Christian literature see TDNT II 817, 822 f.

The word echō does not in fact appear in any of these OT passages apart from the late reference in Est. On the other hand, the relationship described there which God guarantees to his people through the → covenant provides the basis for what the NT describes in its theological use of the idea of having. Paul, for example, clearly refers to this when he wrote that Israel had the → law and boasted of it (Rom. 2:20, 23). Israel had a zeal for God (Rom. 10:2) and much more. Israel had "the sonship, the glory, the covenants, the giving of the law, the worship, and the promises . . . the patriarchs, and of their race, according to the flesh . . . the Christ" (Rom. 9:4 f.). But Israel did not have the fulfilment of all this in Christ. The NT is the first to testify to this.

NT The distribution of echō in the NT varies considerably in different writings. But it has the same broad range of meaning as in secular Gk. and the LXX. The following aspects are theologically significant.

1. echō is used as an expression for possession and relationship. The phrase daimonion echein (to have a demon) which occurs in secular Gk. also occurs in the Synoptics (Matt. 11:18; Lk. 5:33). But the demon is only mentioned in the context of Jesus' lordship over it. For that reason the reproach that he had Beelzebul (→ Satan), i.e. that he was possessed by him, is absurd and blasphemous (Mk. 3:22, 30; cf. Jn. 7:20; 8:48; 10:20 f.). It may be compared with the expression akatharton pneuma echein, to have an unclean spirit (Mk. 7:25; Lk. 4:33; and often; cf. 13: 11).

The NT has also such statements as to have children, sons, brothers, a wife etc. echō is used absolutely for sexual intercourse (Matt. 14:4). The prayer of Esther mentioned above corresponds to the words of the lame man at the pool of Bethesda: "I have no man to put me into the pool" (Jn. 5:7). Similarly Paul: "I have no one like him" (Phil. 2:20; cf. 1:7).

Having is used in a theologically significant way in those passages in which relationship with God is involved. The Jews claimed to have God as their father (Jn. 8:41). "Masters, treat your slaves justly and fairly, knowing that you also have a Master in heaven" (Col. 4:1). This relationship between God and man is further defined by Christ. Believers have him as their advocate with the Father (1 Jn. 2:1) and as high priest (Heb. 4:14; 8:1; 10:21). He who despises him already has a judge (Jn. 12:48).

2. As in the OT, this having fellowship with God is characterized, not by man's striving, but by God's promises and gift. This was also the ground of salvation in the OT. To have salvation is to have it through Jesus Christ. "He who hears my word and believes him who sent me has eternal life" (Jn. 5:24). This thought is stressed by Heb., Paul and especially Jn.

Jn. does this in his own special way. "He who has the Son has life; he who has not the Son has not life" (1 Jn. 5:12). "Anyone who goes ahead and does not abide in the doctrine of Christ does not have God; he who abides in the doctrine of Christ has both the Father and the Son" (2 Jn. 9). A man can know of God, talk about him, and even claim to have him, like the false teachers, and still not have him. Here echō is the expression for genuine fellowship with God and true faith in its fullest and deepest sense. To "have fellowship" with one another and with Christ (1 Jn. 1:6 f.) is to "know" him (1 Jn. 2:3) and to "abide" in him (v. 6). These polemically intended words all refer to the same thing which is most tersely expressed by echō. The same applies to those passages which speak of having eternal → life (Jn. 3:15 f., 36), → peace (16:33), and the → light (8:12; 12:35 f.).

John's opponents see this fellowship with God as a mystical mastering of God. For John it is possible only through the Son of God who has become flesh. It comes though the witness of the Holy Spirit whom Christians have (1 Jn. 2:20, 27; 5:10). Those who do not have the witness of the Father and his word living in them do not know God and have no life (Jn. 5:38 ff.). But those who stand in a personal relationship to the historical Jesus through the Spirit have the Father and life (1 Jn. 1:1–3; 4:13 ff.). To this also belong → confession (1 Jn. 4:2, 15; 2 Jn. 7), abiding in the doctrine of Christ (2 Jn. 9), and keeping his word and commandments (1 Jn. 2:3 ff.).

In this way John takes up the prophetic, eschatological message of John the Baptist which saw the promised time of salvation break in with Christ. This is a theme which links Jn. with the Synoptics and Paul. Behind it is the thought of late Jewish apocalyptic that the present is void of salvation. For salvation is revealed only to a few gifted visionaries; it is to be expected in its fullness only in the future. However, Jn. and the other NT writers reject this idea. For here and now in the present believers have peace with God (Rom. 5:1), redemption through his blood (Eph. 4:7; Col. 1:14), and access to God's gracious purpose in salvation (Eph. 3:12). Now is the day of salvation (2 Cor. 6:2). Life as full salvation in Christ (Jn. 3:16, 36) is entered into now.

3. This is strongly emphasized by Paul in a different way. To participate in salvation is to be in Jesus Christ through his → Spirit. It is a spiritual having. "Anyone who does not have the Spirit of Christ does not belong to him" (Rom. 8:9). The Spirit of Christ, his nous (mind, 1 Cor. 2:16), gives Paul the authority to summon the church to obedience and imitation of Christ (→ Might, art. exousia). To have the Spirit means to be led by the Spirit (Rom. 8:14). The believer is no longer his own (1 Cor. 6:19; cf. 3:16). He is Christ's → slave (Rom. 1:1; 1 Cor. 7:22). This also means that to have the Spirit and to be bound to this Lord is to have this treasure in earthen vessels (2 Cor. 4:7) and to bear continually in our bodies the dying of Jesus (2 Cor. 4:10 ff.). Although the Spirit is the pledge and first fruits (→ Gift, art. arrabōn; Rom. 8:23; 2 Cor. 1:22; 5:5), the believer remains on this side of the barrier of death which Christ has already broken through. But as the pledge of future resurrection glory he gives us the certainty (Rom. 8:11) that one day our earthly house will be destroyed (2 Cor. 5:1) and we shall participate in this glory. To have in this age is to have in hope (Rom. 5:2; Phil. 3:8 ff.; cf. TDNT II 824).

Here lies the point of contrast between Paul and the gnostics. The enthusiasts in Corinth claimed that they had already the resurrection glory (1 Cor. 4:8, 10; 15:12). Paul opposed this with the gospel of the cross (1 Cor. 1:17, 23). In opposition to the self-seeking grandeur of "knowledge" which destroys, Paul stressed love which builds up (8:1). Love is also opposed to libertinism (10:23 f.; 13:2). For the sake of the gospel Paul had to bear much suffering and strife. It even meant bearing the dying of Christ in his own body (2 Cor. 4:10). But in this suffering he also received great strengthening and → comfort (2 Cor. 1:5).

4. This having is to be understood neither as a permanent possession nor as absolution from obedience. This is underlined by the use of metechō in Paul and Heb. To share in dikaiosynē (righteousness, justification) puts the whole of a man's life under obligation, and excludes anomia (lawlessness, 2 Cor. 6:14). To be in Christ leaves no room for sin. Participation in the Lord's Supper rules out participation in pagan sacrifices and vice versa (1 Cor. 10:17, 21). metechō is used virtually as a synonym for → koinōneō. In Heb. the concern is above all with sharing in the sufferings and → patience of Christ. The metochoi Christou (those who "share in Christ", Heb. 3:14; cf. 6:4) are thus called to patient endurance in persecution and holding fast to the true faith, so that they may not lose their share in future glory. To be metochoi paideias (participants in chastisement, 12:8) is in fact a sign of being a true → child, for the Lord disciplines those whom he loves (12:6; cf. Prov. 3:12).

5. Just as all spiritual having comes under the lordship of the present and coming Lord, so is also the possession of all material goods. "What do you have that you did not receive?" (1 Cor. 4:7). For all earthly goods God has to be asked in the right attitude (Jas. 4:2). Their use has to be seen in the light of eschatology. Paul is one who has nothing and yet possesses all things (2 Cor. 6:10). Therefore, he urged the Corinthians to have as if they did not have (1 Cor. 7:29 ff.). It is not only for the Corinthians to have as if they did not have (1 Cor. 7:29 ff.). It is not simply that for the sake of future glory they are to break loose from all possessions. They are need (Eph. 4:28). Everything that the NT has to say about having and participating is a testimony to the act of God in Jesus Christ with a view to future glory. But participation is now already a fact through the Holy Spirit who establishes us in sonship, obedience, love and hope. J. Eichler

κοινωνία

κοινός (koinos), common, communal; κοινόω (koinoō), make common or impure, defile, profane; κοινωνέω (koinōneō), share, have a share in, participate in; κοινωνία (koinōnia), association, communion, fellowship, participation; κοινωνικός (koinōnikos), giving, sharing, liberal; κοινωνός (koinōnos), companion, partner, sharer; συνκοινωνός (synkoinōnos), participant, partner; συνκοινωνέω (synkoinōneō), participate in with someone, be connected with, share.

CL 1. koinos is found from Mycenean Gk. onwards. When applied to things, it means common, mutual, public. Hence, to koinon means the community, common property, in the plur. public affairs, the state. When applied to people, koinos means related, a partner, impartial. The corresponding vb. koinoō means to have a share in, unite, communicate, and also to profane. koinōneō means to possess together, have a share, join oneself to; koinōnia communion, participation, intercourse. As an adj., koinōnos means common; as a noun, companion, partner.

In the Gk. and Hel. world koinōnia was a term which meant the evident, unbroken fellowship between the gods and men. Even Philo spoke of "the sublime fellowship [of Moses] with the father and creator of the universe" (Vit. Mos., 1, 158). But the word was not used in the LXX to denote the relationship between God and man.

koinōnia also denoted the close union and brotherly bond between men. It was taken up by the philosophers to denote the ideal to be sought. The life-tie which united the Pythagoreans was called hē tou biou koinōnia (lit. the fellowship of life). koinōnia has thus virtually the sense of brotherhood, and is a standing expression for the way social life is constituted. The Stoic doctrine of the state opposed the ethical atomism which was breaking up Hel. society. It went back ultimately to the zōon koinōnikon (Aristot., Eth. Eud., 7, 10, which denoted belonging to a society; cf. TDNT II 809). The philosopher was regarded as the educator of the nations and his teaching was to provide the basis for political life. A remarkable example of this development is the inscription on the tomb of Antiochus Philopappus of Commagene, a highly important piece of evidence for Hellenism in the first century B.C. The word koinos occurs seven times. The term is not only a witness of a religious syncretism which depicted gods from four different cultures reigning together. It also testifies to an ever increasing cosmopolitanism.

2. Plato's Republic and Laws sketched the ideal of a communistic utopia. His attempt with Dionysius in Syracuse to translate his vision into reality suffered shipwreck. So too did the social revolution of Aristonicus at Pergamum (133–132 B.C.). Impulse to revolutionary ideas came from the fervently religious poetry of Hesiod (c. 700 B.C.). To the people groaning under the oppression of the aristocracy his Works and Days proclaimed the myth of a golden age, in which dreams of happiness, equality, justice and brotherliness were transposed into a shining primeval period. The doctrine of common property had a primeval aspect. Early Athens was seen as a model. Plato took up the same theme. "Neither had any of them anything of their own, but they regarded all that they had as common property; nor did they claim to receive of the other citizens anything more than their necessary food" (Critias, 110). But whereas this looked back to a golden age, the sharing in the early church at Jerusalem is to be understood in the light of its eschatological experience. The Stoics declared that friends must share and possessions are the common property of friends. But they too based their demands on an ideal picture of a golden age, which was now lost for ever in its original pure form. The NT, on the other hand, does not look backwards but forwards. The new age must break into the present, lost world.

OT 1. In the primeval history of Gen. the rupture of fellowship with God was followed by the loss of unity among men. But God's activity in forgiving, saving and preserving did not cease. Instead, it found new ways (Gen. 8:21 f.; 12:3). Abraham and after him the people of Israel stood in a saving relationship to Yahweh, the goal of which was to bridge the gulf between God and man.

God dealt with Israel as a community and fulfilled his promises to it. He gave Israel the land as an inheritance which in the last analysis belonged to himself (Lev. 25:23). The tribes, families and especially the individuals were only tenants of the portions allocated to them. They had therefore no right to dispose of them. The judicial murder of Naboth (1 Ki. 21) should be judged in this light. Its background is the clash between the ancient Israelite right to land described above and the Canaanite royal right which Ahab wished to exercise.

From here a line can be drawn to the attitude of the prophets in general. Just as Elijah denounced the breach of the ancient right, the prophets were opposed to all land speculation (cf. Isa. 5:8), and stood up for the interests of the community.

This obvious solidarity of God, the nation and the land continued into the NT period. Israel could not envisage faith in God without entering the community and receiving the covenant sign. (On the significance of qāhāl for Israel → Church; and on the → covenant sign → Circumcision.)

2. The theological motif of broken fellowship with God (as in primeval history), the problem of preserving the community in the order which is according to God's will (cf. Isa. 5:8), and the role of the community in the ultimate, universal picture of salvation (cf. Gen. 12:3; Isa. 49:6), play a large part in the OT. It is therefore all the more striking that the koinōnia word group occurs almost exclusively in the later writings (Eccl., Prov., Wis., 1–4 Macc.), usually to translate words connected with the Heb. root ḥāḇar (unite, join together). It is doubtful whether the absence of this term in the earlier OT writings is due to dislike of abstractions. In the OT stress was laid on the covenant and the individual's membership of the people. These were communal ideas. But in contrast to the quasi-egalitarian idea of koinōnia, these ideas stressed the unilateral role of Yahweh as the founder and guarantor of the community and its members. Where koinōnia etc. occur in the LXX, they are used in a general sense: "It is better to live in a corner of a housetop than in a house shared with a contentious woman" (Prov. 21:9; 25:24); "he who is joined with all the living has hope" (Eccl. 9:4); "who goes in company with evildoers" (Job 34:8). 1 Macc. 1:47 has koinos in the sense of profane, ceremonially defiled. This was the sense it often had later (cf. Acts 21:28; Rev. 21:27).

3. According to Josephus (War, 2, 119–161) and Philo (Omn.Prob.Lib., 12 f.), the communal life of the Essenes was based on the idea of the equality of all the members. This is emphatically supported by the evidence of the Dead Sea Scrolls for the Qumran community. Each member was required to renounce his possessions (1 QS 1:11 f.; cf. 3:2; 6:19 f.; cf. H. Ringgren, The Faith of Qumran, 1963, 142 f., 210, 236; Millar Burrows, More Light on the Dead Sea Scrolls, 1958, 81, 116, 383). He had to hand over his entire possessions to the estate of the community. The principal motive for this was not as in ancient Greece the ideal of brotherly communal possession, but the idea that possession of money was tainted with sin. Money was the possession of ungodliness, stained with uncleanness. It was for this reason that the Essene parted with his private property.

According to Philo (Vit.Cont., 25), there was a band of Jewish men and women that lived in a communal life of monastic seclusion, possessing no private property, which was devoted to the study of scripture. The word monastērion (monastery) occurs here for the first time. The Christian communities of the 4th cent. A.D. continued the tradition of ascetic, monastic life, sharing common property.

In the tractate Pesahim 7, 3a, 13a ḥ^{a}ḇûrâh (fellowship) means the Passover fellowship: "One day the Holy[God] . . . will prepare a feast for the devout." At the heavenly table David will distribute the chalice with wine. This eschatological meal recalls Lk. 22:19 and Did. 9:2.

NT koinōnia is absent from the synoptics and Jn. But it occurs 13 times in Paul and is a typical Pauline term. The same is true of the vb. koinōneō. The use of koinos and koinōnia in Acts 2 and in general in Lk.'s picture of the primitive church requires special attention. Elsewhere, koinos (Matt. 15:11, 18; Mk. 7:15; Acts 10:14) and the vb. koinoō (Mk. 7:18; Acts 10:15; 21:28) mean respectively unclean and to defile. koinōnos (Lk. 5:10; 2 Cor. 8:23; Phlm. 17) means partner, companion, sharer. In most cases, however, it is to be translated as an adj., sharing, participating in, or by a verbal phrase. koinōnikos occurs only in 1 Tim. 6:18, where it means liberal. synkoinōnos (participant, partner) and synkoinōneō (participate in with someone, be connected with, share) occur only in Paul and Rev. 1:9; 18:4.

1. Acts 4:32 ff. gives a picture of the communal sharing of goods which was practised for a time in the early church. This "religious communism of love" (Troeltsch) in the primitive church was the expression of an enthusiastic love. But it presupposed the continuance of private earning and the voluntary character of sacrifice and giving to the needy. There is no hint of either communal production or communal consumption. It was not organized, and is not to be seen in economic categories. It rose out of the untramelled freedom from care that Jesus preached and from his lofty scorn of goods (Matt. 6:25–34). It is to be seen as the continuance of the common life that Jesus led with his disciples (Lk. 8:1–3; Jn. 12:4 ff.; 13:29). The idea of equality is completely lacking. The extraordinary action of Barnabas (Acts 4:36) and that of Ananias and Sapphira (Acts 5:1–11) were singled out for mention. But this does not mean that the community of possessions was general. This would not have been possible for the great majority of church members. Mention of the house of Mary (Acts 12:12) indicates that private ownership continued. Lk.'s general account of the Jerusalem church reflects the attitude of love which was intensified by an acute expectation of the end.

The koinōnia in Acts 2:42 can be taken in an absolute sense as an essential part of the life of worship: "And they devoted themselves to the apostles' teaching and fellowship, to the breaking of bread and the prayers" (Acts 2:42). There were thus four main aspects of this way of life (cf. B. Reicke, Glauben und Leben der Urgemeinde, 1957, 56). In this case, koinōnia could be translated "communion" or "liturgical fellowship in worship." But koinōnia expresses something new and independent. It denotes the unanimity and unity brought about by the Spirit. The individual was completely upheld by the community. The Hellenist Luke clearly had in mind the Pythagoreans and the Essenes. The educated reader would have got the impression that here the Greek ideal of society had been realized.

The early church doubtless had financial cares. The fishermen and peasants that had migrated from Galilee would find earning a living difficult in the capital city. Moreover, the economic state of Palestine deteriorated through famine and continued unrest. The impoverishment of the early church was not a consequence of the sharing of possessions. The collections that Paul brought to Jerusalem were a tangible expression of fellowship in the churches. The collection has a religious overtone in 2 Cor. 9:13: "by the generosity of the fellowship (koinōnias, RSV "contribution") for them and for all others." For it arises out of the one gospel that unites Jew and Gentile, and belongs to the same spiritual and material giving and taking of which Paul speaks in Rom. 15:26. There was real need in Jerusalem. The poor among the saints at Jerusalem were in the majority. The stream of "spiritual gifts" which flowed from Jerusalem was answered by a counter-stream of "earthly gifts."

The example of the early church remained isolated. Copying its example was neither demanded nor acted upon. The integrity of private property was regarded as a matter of course in all the churches. Christianity brought a new outlook, not a new order of society. At the Evangelical Social Conference in 1895 Friedrich Naumann said: "It is not possible to come to a system of economics from the standpoint of religion." On the other hand, Ernst Troeltsch pointed out that there is an independent revolutionary element in Christianity but no will to instigate revolution (The Social Teaching of the Christian Churches, I, 1931, 39–69).

2. In Paul koinōnia and the associated words have a central significance. Close analysis of the term shows that Paul never used koinōnia in a secular sense but always in a religious one (H. Seesemann, Der Begriff koinōnia im Neuen Testament, 1933, 99). It is never equated with societas, companionship or community. It is not a parallel to ekklēsia and has nothing to do with the local congregation. Nor does it correspond with the Jewish ḥ^{a}ḇûrâh (fellowship, union). It is not, as in the Stoa, a group of individuals united by a common idea. Hence koinōnia is to be sharply distinguished from both Gk. ideas and Judaism.

(a) The idea of an earthly society grounded in human nature is foreign to Paul. For him koinōnia refers strictly to the relation of faith to Christ: "the fellowship of his Son" (1 Cor. 1:9), "the fellowship of the Holy Spirit" (2 Cor. 13:13), "fellowship in the gospel" (Phil. 1:5), "fellowship of faith" (Phlm. 6). In each case the object is in the gen. The "right hand of fellowship" (Gal. 2:9) given to Paul and Barnabas by James, Peter and John was not just a handshake over a deal but mutual recognition of being in Christ. Similarly, koinōnia in 1 Cor. 10:16 means "participation" in the body and blood of Christ and thus union with the exalted Christ. This fellowship with Christ comes about through the creative intervention of God. It happens through the transformation of man to the very roots of his being. It is birth into a new existence, and can be expressed by the contrast of life and death. This new existence is not a divinization in the sense of mysticism and the mystery religions, but incorporation in Jesus' death, burial, resurrection and glory. It is not the elimination or fusion of personality but a new relationship based on the forgiveness of sins. Paul expressed this in paradoxes, new expressions that he coined and mixed metaphors which he used to present koinōnia and guard against mystical misunderstanding. These include: syzēn, to live with (Rom. 6:8; 2 Cor. 7:3); sympaschein, to suffer with (Rom. 8:17); systaurousthai, to be crucified with (Rom. 6:6); synegeiresthai, to be raised with (Col. 2:12; 3:1; Eph. 2:6); syzoōpoiein, to make alive with (Col. 2:13; Eph. 2:5); syndoxazein, to glorify with (Rom. 8:17); synklēronomein, to inherit with (Rom. 8:17); symbasileuein, reign with (2 Tim. 2:12). The suffering of the apostle which is a part of the total suffering of Christ (Phil. 3:10; Col. 1:24) gives him the prospect of glory (cf. Phil. 3:10 with with Rom. 8:17; 1 Thess. 4:17).

(b) Apart from in Matt. 23:30, where the Pharisees reject the charge that they had a share in the blood of the prophets, and those passages where it means fellow worker or companion, koinōnos belongs to this area of Pauline usage. To eat meat that has been sacrificed to idols means to be a sharer in pagan sacrifice and fellowship with demons which excludes one from fellowship in the Lord's Supper and fellowship with Christ (1 Cor. 10:18). 2 Cor. 1:7 and 1 Pet. 5:1 refer to the sharing by the apostle and the church in the suffering and glory of the risen Lord. Anyone who suffers oppression and persecution through following Christ may rest assured that he will like his Lord attain life through temptation and death. In the same connection, Heb. 10:33 speaks of being partners with those who are ill-treated and exhorts its readers to patience. According to 2 Pet. 1:4, believers are made "partakers of the divine nature", "through the knowledge of him who called us to his own → glory" (v. 3) and patient endurance. Thus he has already a share in the divine nature which is superior to all mundane existence. The same applies to passages where synkoinōneō and synkoinōnos occur. Participation in evil is rejected (Eph. 5:11; Rev. 18:4). But one can participate in suffering (Phil. 4:14) and the gospel and its hope (1 Cor. 9:23; Phil. 1:7). According to Rom. 11:17, the Gentiles who are like branches grafted in to the olive tree of Israel now share in its election and promises.

3. koinōnia in 1 Jn. 1:3, 6, 7 does not refer to a mystical fusion with Christ and God, but to fellowship in faith. Its basis is in the apostolic preaching of the historical Jesus, walking in the light, and the blood of Jesus which cleanses from all sin. It thus excludes the sectarian pride which denies the incarnation and misrepresents the character of sin. J. Schattenmann

→ Avarice, → Body, → Church, → Deny, → Disciple, → Love, → Possessions

(a). M. Burrows, More Light on the Dead Sea Scrolls, 1958; J. Y. Campbell, Three New Testament Studies, 1965; O. Cullmann, The State in the New Testament, 1957; W. R. Farmer, Maccabees, Zealots and Josephus, 1956; A. R. George, Communion with God in the New Testament, 1953; D. R. Griffiths, The New Testament and the Roman State, 1970; H. Hanse, echō, TDNT II 816–32; F. Hauck, koinos, TDNT III 789–809; W. Lillie, Studies in New Testament Ethics, 1961; K. F. Nickle, The Collection: A Study in Paul's Strategy, 1966; A. Richardson, The Political Christ, 1973; R. Schnackenburg, The Moral Teaching of the New Testament, 1965; E. Troeltsch, The Social Teaching of the Christian Churches, I-II, 1931. (See also Addenda, p. 822.)
(b). F. Hauck, Die Stellung des Urchristentums zu Arbeit und Geld, 1921; J. L. Leuba, Institution und Ereignis, 1952; F. Meffert, Der "Kommunismus" Jesu und der Kirchenväter, 1922; R. von Pöhlmann, Geschichte der sozialen Frage und des Sozialismus in der antiken Welt, 1925; B. Reicke, Glauben und Leben in der Urgemeinde, 1957; H. Seesemann, Der Begriff koinōnia im Neuen Testament, 1933.

Fight, Prize, Triumph, Victory

Struggle for superiority can be a contest or fight, agōn (not only a sporting contest), or an armed conflict or battle, polemos, with the thought of eliminating one's opponent. polemos is a large-scale combat carried on by whole groups, as opposed to machē, a personal fight or quarrel. It appears in the NT not only in its usual neutral sense, but also especially in the synoptic apocalypses and in Rev. as the work of demonic powers. The noun and vb. (only Jas. and Rev.) are therefore scarcely used for the behaviour of Christians. On the other hand, agōn which generally does not have the connotation of → enmity, is frequently used to describe the Christian life as is also brabeion, the victor's prize in sport. Victory, nikē, is the aim of every fight. thriambeuō has special significance as an expression of the triumph of God.

ἀγών

ἀγών (agōn), fight; ἀγωνίζομαι (agōnizomai), fight; ἀνταγωνίζομαι (antagōnizomai), fight against; ἐπαγωνίζομαι (epagōnizomai), fight for; καταγωνίζομαι (katagōnizomai), conquer, defeat;

συναγωνίζομαι (synagōnizomai), fight along with, help; ἀγωνία (agōnia), agony, anxiety.

CL 1. agōn, from agō, drive, lead (both Hom. on; same root as Lat. ago), means: (a) gathering, (b) gathering place, e.g. of the gods on Olympus or of ships in a harbour; and (c) the fight itself, even the sporting contest (agōnes gymnikoi, hippikoi, mousikoi), for the → brabeion, the prize. It also means fight in war, politics or law (a contest between parties, a case).

The vb. agōnizomai (attested from Hdt. onwards) has the same shades of meaning even when compounded with ant-, ep-, kat-, syn-, as the noun. Similarly agōnia (Pindar onwards) which occurs only in higher style ranges in meaning from effort to anxiety.

The word group athlēsis, athleō, synathleō, attested in the case of the vb. from Hom., is used for sporting contests (cf. 2 Tim. 2:5: athlein nomimōs, compete fairly). It may, however, be used metaphorically of any effort. On the other hand, the word group machomai, machē etc. (from Hom.), originally meant hand to hand combat, first of all in war, but then also in sport. It has also in addition the neutral sense of to quarrel, wrangle, contend.

2. In the Cynic and Stoic diatribes in particular the whole outlook and terminology of the stadium is used for exercise in virtue and for life's moral struggle, in complete contrast to OT Judaism to which this range of concepts is completely alien. It is so alien that in his Heb. version of the NT F. Delitzsch is forced to translate 1 Cor. 9:25, "Every athlete exercises self-control in all things", by "Everyone who devotes himself to wrestling is a Nazirite in all things."

OT 1. In the LXX agōn occurs only in the Apocrypha (particularly in 2 and 4 Macc., altogether 15 times) and never stands for a Heb. word. The same is true of the vb. agōnizomai, and the compounds are altogether absent. Although in 2 Macc. 4:18 the noun denotes the Tyrian games and in Wis. 4:2 moral striving, it otherwise stands predominantly for military conflict. Heb. denotes this by milḥāmâh which the Gk. renders, however, almost always by polemos (more than 250 times). On the other hand, for a legal battle (Heb. rîḇ) the LXX employs a variety of equivalents, ranging from dikē to machē. It is not until the late Hel. Jewish period that ideas and expressions appear whose origins lie in Hel. sporting terminology. The word for Jacob's wrestling (Gen. 32:24 f.) is palaiō (Heb. 'āḇaq).

2. For Philo, as in the diatribes, the struggle of life is the place in which the hero of virtue can accomplish ascetic achievements in order to overcome lusts and wickedness. Similarly, Macc. speaks of the struggle for → virtue (aretēs; 4 Macc. 12:14) and Sir. 4:28 of the struggle for → truth. The suffering of the martyrs which frequently (cf. 2 Macc. 4:11) took place in the hippodrome (circus) is also described in Macc. in the imagery of the stadium. Expressions like agōn theios, divine struggle, or hieroprepēs, holy struggle (4 Macc. 17:11; 11:20), indicate that, just as the games were held in honour of a deity, the sufferings and deadly combats of the martyrs were considered to be to the glory of God. These ideas had a powerful influence on primitive Christianity, especially in Heb. and Rev.

3. The patient Job in the Test. Job takes something of a middle position between these two meanings: he does not fight against lust (epithymia → Desire) nor against a tyrant, but against → Satan. "Like a boxer who bears hardship and distress he waits for the prize with patience and endurance (hypomonē kai makrothymia)" (Test. Job 4). In his wrestling with and for God the way is prepared for the NT's wrestling in prayer.

4. The Gk. idea of conflict is foreign to the Qumran community too. Where fighting is mentioned here, especially in 1QM (e.g. 6:1–6; 16:3 ff.; 10 ff.), it refers to the holy war which the elect of God, the sons of light, enter upon against the wicked, the sons of darkness. Their aim is to inflict a military defeat upon them and thus by their victory usher in the kingdom of God – a concept which is expressly rejected in the NT.

NT 1. (a) In the gospels athleō, to contend, does not occur at all and agōnizomai only twice: Jn. 18:36, of the servants who would fight for Jesus with weapons, and Lk. 13:24, "Strive to enter [the kingdom] by the narrow door." The remaining words occur predominantly in the Pauline writings, above all those connected with agōn (athleō only twice in 2 Tim.). The technical terms from the stadium are used by Paul, who hailed from a Hel. city.

The compounds of agōnizomai are only used occasionally, but without any change of meaning (Heb. 11:33; 12:4; Jude 3; Rom. 15:30). On the other hand, agōnia (Lk. 22:44 hapax legomenon) which could mean effort, excitement, alarm, anxiety, as early as Aristotle, stands for fear in Philo and Josephus, as in the Apocrypha. ([Ed.] RSV has "agony", and Arndt gives "agony", "anxiety".) Thus Lk. 22:44, the Gethsemane passage (cf. Heb. 5:7), should not be translated "as he fought with death" but, with Schlatter and Karrer, "being afraid". The translation, struggle with death, which has conditioned the meaning of the loan-word agony, imports an element not in the original. Stauffer interprets Jesus' agōnia in Lk. 22:44 as due not to "fear of death, but concern for victory in face of the approaching battle on which the fate of the world depends" (TDNT I 140).

(b) Of the four NT passages which contain forms of athleō (2 Tim. 2:5; synathleō Phil. 1:27; 4:3; athlēsis Heb. 10:32), three are connected with → suffering. In the Heb. passage the accompanying theatrizomenoi indicates the crowd of spectators who are present at the abuse and torture, just as in 4 Macc. 17:14 ff. In early Christendom the image of the athlētēs, contestant, found such favour that the word was taken over into the vocabularies of the Latin and Coptic churches. The seventh of the books in Codex II of the 12 codices discovered at Nag Hammadi, which is still unpublished, bears the title, "The Book of Thomas the Athlete" (see A. K. Helmbold, The Nag Hammadi Gnostic Texts and the Bible, 1967, 77 f., for a summary; cf. also E. M. Yamauchi in R. N. Longenecker and M. C. Tenney, eds., New Dimensions in New Testament Study, 1974, 56 f.), and in the Acts of Thomas (39) Christ is called "our athlete."

(c) Throughout the NT in contrast to secular Gk. and late Hel. Jewish usage, the word group machē is never used in a neutral sense. Nor is it ever used positively of the struggle demanded of the Christian (contrast strateuomai, engage in war service, 2 Cor. 10:3; 2 Tim. 2:4; used pejoratively in Jas. 4:1; 1 Pet. 2:11). Every machesthai is rejected (cf. 2 Tim. 2:24) as an expression of readiness to quarrel and wrangling contentiousness. Not only a bishop (1 Tim. 3:3) but every Christian (Tit. 3:2) is to be amachos, peaceable. theomachos, contending against God, rare in Hellenism and in the LXX, was perhaps chosen by Lk. in Acts 5:39 (the only passage) as he recalled the Bacchae of Eur., which depicts fatal opposition to the triumphal procession of the god Dionysus.

2. The transforming power of the → faith of a Christian shows itself also in his language, which reverses in a positive sense realities like the → cross and slavery which seem completely negative to the natural man. doulos Christou, → slave of Christ, becomes a title of honour! It also draws into its range of imagery things essentially foreign to the Christian, like military conflict (cf. Eph. 6:10 ff.: "spiritual armour" and "contending against principalities and powers"). Apart from Paul it is in the later writings, the Pastoral Epistles (not necessarily non-Pauline), Heb. and Lk., in which the image of the fight found a place. Three groups of ideas can be distinguished:

(a) agōn emphasizes the conscious application of one's powers for the achievement of a goal. Lk. 13:24 indicates this by its version of our Lord's words, agōnizesthe eiselthein. agōn and the related vbs. are connected grammatically with eis and hina. The apostle's work is not merely the fulfilment of an obligation but an agōn, which is linked with toil (kopos, → Burden) and hardship (ponos, Col. 1:29; 1 Tim. 4:10). What matters is the highest, imperishable and only rewarding goal, the → brabeion (cf. from the point of view of content, without the imagery of contest, the parables of the pearl and the treasure in the field, Matt. 13:44 ff.). Therefore, not only supreme effort but also supreme renunciation are demanded. 1 Cor. 9:24–27 (pas ho agōnizomenos panta enkrateuetai, everyone who competes exercises self-control) does not mean a kind of asceticism, which keeps the body in submission out of contempt. Rather, the hypōpiazō mou to sōma kai doulagōgō, I pommel my body and subdue it (v. 27), is the expression of the contestant's manly discipline (→ Beat). He has his body under control and directs it towards a goal in accordance with his own will. For this, moderation (2 Tim. 4:5) and exercise (1 Tim. 4:7) are necessary. This is the race, the good fight, which, according to the Pastoral Epistles, Paul has completed (2 Tim. 4:7) and which he also recommends to Timothy (1 Tim. 6:12).

(b) The object of this agōn, however, is the spreading of the → gospel. It is not primarily a question of striving for the perfection of the individual (although, of course, that is not a matter of indifference, → Holy), a private salvation, but of the salvation of the elect of God, "that we may present every man mature in Christ" (Col. 1:28). So we are always dealing with an agōn hyper, a struggle for, on behalf of, others (Col. 2:1 f.; 4:12; Rom. 15:30). It takes place above all in → prayer. "In prayer there is achieved unity between the will of God and that of man, between human struggling and action and effective divine operation" (E. Stauffer, TDNT I 139). In prayer a man can intercede for someone else and make this cause and his suffering his own (Rom. 15:30; Col. 4:3; 1 Thess. 5:25; 2 Thess. 3:1; Heb. 13:18).

The proclamation of the divine message leads to conflict with opponents (Heb. 12:3 f.; 2 Cor. 7:5). But in the last analysis the adversaries are not men (haima kai sarx, blood and flesh) but "the supernatural principalities and powers, the dark rulers of this world, the spiritual hosts of wickedness" (Eph. 6:12).

(c) This struggle through suffering which reaches its climax in martyrdom is particularly expressed in the prep. syn. The compounds synagōnizomai and synathleō (Rom. 15:30; Phil. 1:27; 4:3) do not just convey the bearing of the same conflict as the apostle (Phil. 1:30), but a suffering with Christ while looking up to him (Heb. 12:1–4), to "share his sufferings" (Phil. 3:10), being "poured out as a libation upon the sacrificial offering (Christ)" (Phil. 2:17; cf. Tim. 4:6), completing "what is lacking in Christ's afflictions for the sake of his body, that is, the church" (Col. 1:24; cf. esp. A. Schweitzer, The Mysticism of Paul the Apostle, 1931, ch. 7, "Suffering as a Mode of Manifestation of the Dying with Christ"). Therefore, the agōn with all its sufferings brings joy to the Christian, the joy of the team which is indebted to its captain for the victory. A. Ringwald

βραβεῖον

βραβεῖον (brabeion), prize; βραβεύω (brabeuō), award prizes, judge, rule; καταβραβεύω (katabrabeuō), decide against, condemn.

CL The noun brabeion, victor's prize, is to such an extent a technical term from sport that it is rare even in secular Gk. brabeuō denotes the function of the umpire, but was also frequently used metaphorically and then meant to lead, determine, rule.

brabeion embraces as an additional concept – synonymous with athlon, which does not occur in the NT but is frequent in secular Gk. – the prizes of the agōn thematikos (fixed money prizes; oil, barley, shields as gifts of the deity; money and accompanying rights throughout the home cities) and also the prizes of the agōn stephanēphoros (wreath made, according to the sanctuary, of olive, laurel, ivy, pine or flowers, and also of silver or gold; palm branches, phoinikes, as in Rev. 7:9 and myrtle, tainia to be worn on the head or arm and honours from the herald; → agōn; → nikaō). Not only the victor but also any ruler who was present was crowned. Originally the wreath was a sign of exaltation by the deity (Pauly-Wissowa, ad loc.). Just as brabeus, umpire, can have the meaning of prince, brabeion is also used with the sense of sceptre. In addition, athlon denotes the prize that is awarded, as seen from the viewpoint of the giver, whereas brabeion is used almost without exception for the prize received. Hence, the NT's use of the latter term may not have been accidental.

OT Heb. ăltogether lacks the idea of the prize. Delitzsch's Heb. NT translates brabeion in both NT passages by śᵉkar ha-niṣṣāḥôn, recompense or reward of victory. Despite its use of the imagery of the fight, the LXX does not make use of brabeion which does not occur until the Hel. Jewish period, in Gr. Bar. and Philo. Tertullian took it over into Lat. as a loan word, brabium (it appears in the form bravium in the Vulg. and some pre-Vulg. versions of the NT). brabeuō appears in the LXX only in Wis. 10:12 where Wisdom was the umpire at Jacob's struggle with the angel (Gen. 32:24 ff.).

NT To be accurate, brabeuō (only in Col. 3:15) should be translated: "let the peace of Christ decide as umpire in your hearts." It is striking that Paul also uses in Col. the word katabrabeuō, withhold the victor's prize (Col. 2:18). It stands as an alternative to the krinein (judge) of Col. 2:16.

In the two exclusively Pauline passages in which brabeion occurs extraordinary emphasis is placed upon the determination with which the contest is to be pursued. ouk adēlōs, not hesitantly, in 1 Cor. 9:24 ff. which qualifies trechein, run, is followed by "that you may obtain it." In Phil. 3:10-14 it is underlined by the vbs. katantaō, arrive at, katalambanō, grasp, epekteinomai, stretch out for, diōkō, pursue, press after. The brabeion is the victor's prize which the Christian obtains only with effort and perhaps the sacrifice of his life (Phil. 2:16–17 in the context of the imagery of a race; cf. agōn as the martyr's struggle), and through koinōnia, sharing in the → suffering of Christ (cf. Phil. 3:10). This has nothing to do with ethical perfection. Christians have entered the race (1 Cor. 9:24), teleioi (Phil. 3:15), having been made Christ's own (v. 12), "not having a righteousness of their own but the righteousness from God that depends on faith" (v. 9). Phil. 3:14 means participation in the resurrection of the dead, not, of course, in the general resurrection of the good and evil, but, "as always in Paul's letters, the resurrection which is revealed to all the children of God to whom has been granted the life-giving Spirit of the glorified Christ, a blessed experience of being with him (1 Thess. 4:17), and reigning with him (cf. brabeion as sceptre) in his kingdom" (Rom. 5:17; 1 Cor. 6:2 f.) (Klöpper; → Resurrection). Perhaps we should think of the so-called first resurrection at Christ's return on the clouds before his thousand year reign (1 Thess. 4:14–17; Rev. 20:6; 1 Cor. 15:23; similarly perhaps also 1 Cor. 9:24). In any case the brabeion, the victor's prize, does not by any means go to all who were once called Christians. A. Ringwald θριαμβεύω | θριαμβεύω (thriambeuō), lead to a triumphal procession.

CL & OT The vb. thriambeuō is derived from the noun thriambos. thriambos means the hymn which was sung at the ceremonial processions in honour of the god Dionysus, and so originates in the cult of Dionysus. At a later period this resulted in Dionysus receiving the name thriambos. The noun passed by way of Etruscan into Lat. as triumphus, with the sense of triumph. thriambeuō first attested in Polybius (2nd cent. B.C.), is the Gk. neologism based on Lat. triumphare and means (a) intrans: to celebrate a triumph, (b) trans: to lead someone in a triumphal procession. All the meanings of thriambeuō go back to the content of the Lat. vb. triumphare, right up to Anastasius Sinaita (5th cent. A.D.): the public display of a criminal to shame.

In the Hel. environment of the NT thriambeuō meant the triumphal procession of a ruler which his defeated enemies had to follow. "He led both kings and governors in triumph" (Plutarch, Romulus 33, 4). The prisoners provided a spectacle laid on by the victor. Censers were also carried in the triumphal processions and spread a festive perfume.

This word group does not occur at all in the LXX.

NT thriambeuō only appears twice in the NT: Col. 2:15 and 2 Cor. 2:14, on both occasions in the trans. sense, to lead in a triumphal procession.

1. Col. 2:15 presents God as the triumphant victor: Jesus' journey to the cross is God's triumphal procession. Through Jesus' death and resurrection the authorities (→ Might) and powers opposed to God have been disarmed and defeated. God as the imperator mundi (world ruler; cf. G. Delling, TDNT III 160) leads them in his triumphal procession like prisoners put on show.

2. 2 Cor. 2:14 reads: "But thanks be to God, who in Christ always leads us in triumph and through us spreads the fragrance of the knowledge of him everywhere." Here Paul himself is led in triumph as one whom God has defeated, who as the → slave (doulos) of Jesus Christ is at all times and in all places a part of God's triumphal procession. The apostle understands his missionary task as the work of a slave who puts the power of the divine victor on show and by his proclamation spreads the perfume of the knowledge of God, to some for → life, to others for → death (cf. the context 2 Cor. 2:14-17). K. Dahn, H-G. Link

νικάω

νικάω (nikaō), be victorious; νῖκος (nikos), victory; νίκη (nikē), victory.

CL From Hom. on nikaō is frequently used in Gk. literature and means to be victorious, both in military and legal combat. The vb. expresses visible superiority in the natural rivalry which takes place among men. But it is also applied to the realm of the gods. It can also be translated surpass, overcome, be stronger. It presupposes achievement in physical or spiritual combat. The corresponding noun is nikē, victory, or the power that confers victory. Nikē is also the name of a Gk. goddess who is often represented in art as a symbol of personal superiority. The gods assist men in their conflicts and give the victory to the side of their choice. In the mystery religions man binds himself cultically to the superior deities who are worshipped as victorious powers.

to nïkos, first attested in the LXX, is synonymous with nikē. hypernikaō, attested from Hippocrates on but rarely used, strengthens the basic meaning of the simple vb.

OT In the LXX nikaō and nikē do not occur particularly frequently. The vb. appears about 25 times, and the sub. about 10 times. Of these only a few instances occur in the late books of the Heb. OT (Prov.; Chr.), whereas by far the majority are to be found in Macc. and render the Heb. nāṣaḥ, to defeat, have control of, or nēṣaḥ, splendour, endurance.

The OT is familiar enough with the phenomenon of human rivalry (cf. the conflict between Hagar and Sarah, Gen. 16; Joseph and his brothers, Gen. 37), but nikaō is used in the LXX almost exclusively to denote victory over hostile powers. The real victor is God, who has power over his own enemies and those of his people and of the righteous (1 Chr. 29:11; cf. Ps. 51:6). The people's victory does not primarily depend upon the strength of their soldiers but upon whether God has delivered the enemy into the hands of the Israelite armies (Jdg. 7; 1 Macc. 3:19). For this reason the rallying cry for the "Holy War" in Maccabaean times was "Victory with God!" (2 Macc. 13:15). Finally, the faith of Israel waits and prays for the time when God will defeat all the enemies of the people. In the wisdom literature the word victory acquired a spiritualized metaphorical meaning. The wise man does not allow himself to be conquered by the beauty of an adulteress (Prov. 6:25), but rather reason overcomes instinct (4 Macc. 3:17; 6:33).

NT NT usage of the word group almost always presupposes the conflict between God or Christ and opposing demonic powers. nikaō occurs most frequently in

Rev. and in the Johannine letters. nikē occurs only in 1 Jn. 5:4; hypernikaō only in Rom. 8:37. The terms occur seldom in Paul, but nevertheless, when they do, have particular theological significance.

1. In the synoptic tradition the word group appears only in Matt. 12:20 in a quotation from the first Servant Song (Isa. 42:1–4: "he brings justice to victory") and in Lk. 11:22. Here the stronger man overcomes the armed strong man (the synoptic parallels Matt. 12:29 and Mk. 3:27 have "binds"), disarms and despoils him. The metaphor explains Jesus' superiority over the demonic powers. "If it is by the finger of God that I cast out demons, then the kingdom of God has come upon you" (Lk. 11:20). The earthly Jesus demonstrates by his actions that he is the hidden victor over the forces opposed to God, whilst it is not until the resurrection that he achieves the final victory over sin, death and the devil.

2. Rom. 8 and 1 Cor. 15 are the chapters in which Paul speaks most forcibly about overcoming the world and death through the redemptive work of Jesus Christ. Jesus' death on the cross and his resurrection are the reason that no power in the world can finally have the victory. "Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy victory?" (1 Cor. 15:54 f.). As children of God, believers are included in this victory. Their victory is not an achievement or reward, but is "given" them (1 Cor. 15:57). They are thereby placed in a position in which they themselves can overcome evil (Rom. 12:21). Now they are oppressed by trouble, anxiety, danger, persecution and hunger. But these forces have lost their controlling power. The believer's struggle against the rule of these demonic forces is conducted under the promise of victory and thus takes on the character of overcoming: "No, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him who loved us" (Rom. 8:37).

3. John sums up the forces opposed to God in the term kosmos (→ world). Jesus' coming, suffering and return to the Father signify victory over the world. This victory is expressed in the perfect tense (Jn. 16:33). The evil one, the ruler of this world, has had his power restricted by Jesus Christ, in that Jesus, as the stronger man, has freed his people from the dominion of the evil one. The battle has thus been decided, even if it is not yet over. By faith Christians participate in this victory and are thus placed in a position to overcome the world for themselves. Faith is the victory over the world (1 Jn. 5:4 f.; 2:13 f.; 4:4 f.).

4. The seven letters of Rev. (chs. 2 and 3) are directed to troubled Christian churches in Asia Minor suffering under persecution. Each letter concludes with a call to overcome, introduced by the formula ho nikōn or tō nikōnti (2:7, 11 etc.). The conflict and the trials of this present life in the world and in the church are not final. The church's anticipated victory has its foundations laid in the victory already won by Jesus. The promise of an inheritance is to those who overcome (cf. Rev. 21:7). The end, however, will be preceded by the apocalyptic conflict between God and the demonic powers. This is the theme of Rev. The world powers often gain victories in this conflict (Rev. 6:2; 11:7; 13:7) but their victories are fleeting ones. In the end it is the ultimate victory of the Lamb that will remain. Christians have followed him and have poured out their blood in martyrdom (Rev. 11:7:12). In the middle of the picture of the plagues and the wrath of God John sees the victors standing, singing a hymn of praise (Rev. 15:2 ff.). Thus the victory which the Lamb has won and which he has promised to his people is already secure, despite all confrontations with the demonic powers, for the Lamb is the King of all kings and the Lord of all lords (Rev. 17:14). This is the origin of the Christian symbol of the Lamb with the banner of victory. W. Günther

→ Caesar, → Crown, → Discipline, → Soldier, → War, → Weapon

(a). O. Bauernfeind, nikaō, TDNT IV 942–45; and polemos, TDNT VI 502–15; G. Delling, thriambeuō, TDNT III 159 f.; H. Gross, "War," EBT III 958–61; G. H. C. Macgregor, The New Testament Basis of Pacifism, 1953²; J. Pedersen, Israel: Its Life and Culture, III–IV, 1926, 1–32; V. C. Pfitzner, Paul and the Agon Motif: Traditional Athletic Imagery in the Pauline Literature, 1967; G. von Rad, Old Testament Theology, I, 1962; II 1965 (see index); and "Deuteronomy and the Holy War," Studies in Deuteronomy, 1953, 45–59; L. E. Toombs, "War, ideas of," IDB IV 797–801; E. Stauffer, agōn, TDNT I 134–40; and brabeuō, TDNT I 637 ff.; R. de Vaux, "Military Institutions," Ancient Israel, 1961, 213–67 (bibliography 535 ff.); J. W. Wevers, "War, methods of," IDB IV 801–5; L. Williamson, "Led in Triumph: Paul's Use of thriambeuō", Interpretation 22, 1968, 317–3; Y. Yadin, The Art of Warfare in Biblical Lands, 1963.
(b). H. Fredriksson, Jahwe als Krieger, 1945; G. von Rad, Der Heilige Krieg im Alten Israel, 1958³; F. Schwally, Semitische Kriegsaltertümer, I, Der heilige Krieg im alten Israel, 1901.

Fire

The importance which has been attached to fire from the earliest days of human civilization is reflected in the common root which may be traced behind the words used for it from Iceland (fyrr) far into the Orient (Hittite pahhur, Armenian hur). As well as the Gk. word pyr we must discuss here the group of words connected with kauma, heat. While pyr refers primarily to the power contained in fire, or to the fire-place (whether in the temple or at home), with the significance attaching thereto, kauma indicates rather the process of burning, scorching, and the effect which this has on the senses (light, heat, etc.). Both groups of words are used in the NT in connection with the activity of God.

καῦμα

καῦμα (kauma), heat, burning; καυματίζω (kaumatizō), burn, scorch.

CL kauma (Homer) means burning, heat, especially sunburn or heat of the sun; and in a transferred sense, fever heat, ardour of love, frostbite. kaumatizō, not attested before the NT but later in Plutarch and Arrian, means dry up by heat; and by extension in the mid. form to suffer from fever.

OT 1. In the LXX kauma serves most frequently as a translation of ḥōreḇ or ḥōm (each 4 times) in its original sense of the heat of the sun, burning sun (cf. Gen. 31:40; Sir. 43:3; Jer. 43(36):30 LXX), but also in the transferred sense of fever heat (Job 30:30). Its use is, however, illuminating as can be seen from the context in each case.

2. (a) Even in Jer. 43(36):30 (LXX) the context should be noted. The fact that the body of Jehoiakim is to be exposed to the heat of the sun and the frost of night is a sign of divine judgment upon him because of his guilt. The same idea is conveyed by the complaint of Job, "My bones burn with heat" (30:30). He sees in this a sign that God has become a cruel enemy (30:21).

(b) The word is also used as a parable for affliction and trouble. Thus in Jer. 17:8 the man who trusts in the Lord "is like a tree planted by water, that sends out its roots by the stream, and does not fear when heat comes, for its leaves remain green." Similarly in Sir. 14:27 the man who meditates on wisdom "will be sheltered by her from the heat." Looking forward to the coming reign of peace, Isaiah prophesies: "Glory will be spread over all as a covering and a canopy, a shade from the heat by day, a refuge and a shelter from rain and tempest" (Isa. 4:5 f. NEB).

NT 1. In the NT the noun and the vb. occur only 6 times; 4 times in Rev., twice in the Gospels. The OT usage outlined in OT 2 above is taken up and continued.

2. (a) Rev. 16:8, 9 speaks of divine judgment and wrath. The fourth bowl of wrath is poured on the sun, "and it was allowed to scorch (kaumatisai) men with fire; men were scorched (ekaumatisthēsan) by the fierce heat (kauma)."

(b) Matt. 13:6 and Mk. 4:6 tell of the seed which fell on rocky ground and was scorched by the sun. The parable here refers to those who take offence at God's word, when tribulation and persecution arise. In Rev. 7:16 it is said of the members of the church, who have come through great affliction and martyrdom and have been raised to the heavenly glory: "They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; the sun shall not strike them, nor any scorching heat." S. Solle

πῦρ

πῦρ (pyr), fire; πυρόω (pyroō), to set on fire, burn; πύρωσις (pyrōsis), burning, being burnt; πύρινος (pyrinos), fiery, of fire; πυρράζω (pyrrazō), be red; πυρρός (pyrros), flame-coloured, red; πυρά (pyra), pile of combustible or burning material; πυρετός (pyretos), fever; πυρέσσω (pyressō), suffer with a fever.

CL pyr (related etymologically to the Eng. word fire) is attested from Mycenaean Gk. onwards.

1. The history of religion and culture shows fire as something to which great importance has been attached in human life both in a positive and in a negative sense, as a life-giving and as a life-destroying force. On the one hand, it is regarded as a force coming to man from nature, giving him life, but unpredictable and to be held in awe. On the other hand, it is viewed as a human accomplishment, kindled and kept alive by the genius of man (cf., for example, the double birth of fire in the Indian Agni cult). It is "used" by man at the centre of his home (the hearth, which is therefore, like sacrificial fire, regarded by many people as something holy; cf. for instance Hestia, Vesta). It is seen as a protection against evil influences (e.g. the burning of corpses in India; the fire baptism of the Mandaeans, cf. Matt. 3:11; the fire on the altar at Delphi, cf. Plutarch, Aristides, 35). It is also used as a weapon in fighting and war.

As far as the environment of the OT and Jud. is concerned, the fire cult of the Persian religion is of particular importance. Fire and a serpent represent the contraries truth and falsehood in the Mazda teaching of Zoroastrianism. In the conflict between the good and evil basic principles, man should place himself on the side of the good to which fire belongs. The body of Mazda is always represented as fiery, as a blazing, uncreated flame. Since fire is revered in this way as the element of purity, it must not be allowed to become contaminated, for instance, by contact with dead bodies. Hence, the burning of corpses is regarded as a terrible sin. In the final judgment fire will be the means employed for the last test. Good and evil are to be separated in a stream of fiery metal, and in the end everything, including hell itself, will be purified by fire. Fire is the protector of the good, divine order of life.

2. In the Greek world fire is used in both secular and religious spheres. Metaphorically it can describe the most diverse human experiences, such as intensity of passion, wickedness, or the heat of battle. At the same time situations of anarchy can be illustrated by the image of fire.

In Gk. religion fire is used as a means of ritual cleansing (e.g. purificatory offering after childbirth or after a death, and the various feasts of purification). Although corpses were burned in funeral rites, it was believed that the soul could not be affected by the fire or cut off from its future existence. Among the gods, Hephaestus and Hestia have a special connection with fire. Prometheus and Hermes are said to have brought fire to men. On the holy, national hearth in the Prytaneion there burned a fire which never went out (F. Lang, TDNT VI 931). From it colonists took a flame for the hearth of the daughter-city that they were going out to found. Fire, regarded as one of the various tokens of the gods, accompanies the appearance of a deity. There are fire and rivers of fire in the underworld. Occasionally we find the idea that the soul is purified by fire. Fire plays an important part in the mystery religions, both for purposes of purification and in the representation of the divine (cf. A. Dietrich, Eine Mithrasliturgie, 1923³, 8:17 ff.; TDNT VI 932) and of the new nature of the initiated. Generally speaking, the Greeks attached a positive value to fire.

In Gk. philosophy fire is one of the four (or five) elements. According to Heraclitus of Ephesus, fire is the basic element of all things: the world is a movement of fire, which is undergoing a constant process of change and is identical with the deity (or logos). "As the original fire is endowed with reason and is the cause of all world government ([Diels-Kranz] Frag. 64 [I, 165, 1 ff.]), so the soul of man consists of fire" (TDNT VI 930). In this pantheistic system, God, the fiery universe, universal reason and the human spirit are all regarded as one. Heraclitus holds that a great world era comes to its end when everything is burned up and so returns to the primal fire; then the world is produced anew out of the primal fire. These ideas were later taken up again by the Stoics who likewise see fire as the active world principle, the world soul which guides everything according to purpose, holding all things together and controlling them by law and reason. The world originates by a transformation of the primal fire, and then by a process of general combustion (pyrōsis from Theophrastus onwards; hence the Stoic concept of the ekpyrōsis, an end of the world brought about by fire) it returns to the original state, whereupon the world cycle begins again. The human soul is part of the Godhead, and therefore fiery in nature, and it too returns to primal fire when the world disappears in flames.

OT 1. In the OT pyr is used in over 350 places to translate the Heb. 'ēš (altogether 490 times in the LXX). Fire is used for several purposes in the home (Exod. 12:8; Isa. 44:15; Jer. 7:18; 2 Chr. 35:13), and also in craftwork, especially metal work (Isa. 44:12 ff.; Jer. 6:29; Sir. 38:28). In war it is a means of destruction (cf. Deut. 13:16; Jdg. 20:48; Amos 1:4). No fire may be kindled on the sabbath (Exod. 35:3). Among natural phenomena, lightning is the "fire of God" (cf. 1:16; 2 Ki. 1:12). In a metaphorical sense, fire stands for various human activities: slander and quarrelling (Prov. 26:20 f.), anger (Sir. 28:10 f.), the shedding of blood (Sir. 11:32; 22:24), the passion of love and debauchery (Sir. 9:8; 23:16), adultery (Job 31:12; Prov. 6:27 ff.).

Fire also serves in the OT as a means of purification (cf. Lev. 13:52; Num. 31:32; Isa. 6:6). The only corpses which are burned, however, are those of criminals (Gen. 38:24; Lev. 20:14; 21:9; Jos. 7:15). This is done in order that they may have no place in the grave of their fathers.

In worship the sacrificial fire is used for burning gifts upon the altar, and incense in the censer (Lev. 1:7 ff.; 3:5; 6:9 ff.; 16:12 f.). No sacrifice may be offered by fire that does not come from the altar (Lev. 10:1; Num. 3:4). Heathen customs are forbidden: the burning of children for Molech (Lev. 20:2; Deut. 12:31; 18:10), i.e. "making one's son or daughter pass through the fire" (2 Ki. 17:17; 21:6). But this was practised under Ahaz and Manasseh under foreign influence (2 Ki. 16:3; 21:6; Jer. 7:31). We remain, however, completely in the dark as to the purpose and nature of this custom, and the extent to which it was practised.

Since Yahweh is present among his people as the Judge, who brings deliverance as well as punishment, the fire which accompanies him becomes the expression of two different aspects of his activity. First, it is the mark of divine judgment (Gen. 19:24; Exod. 9:24; Lev. 10:2; Num. 11:1; 16:35; 2 Ki. 1:10; Amos 1:4, 7). But secondly, it is also a sign of Yahweh's grace, in that he displays by means of fire his acceptance of a sacrifice (Gen. 15:17; Lev. 9:23 f.; Jdg. 6:21; 1 Ki. 18:38; 1 Chr. 21:26; 2 Chr. 7:1). Moreover, fire is also a sign of divine guidance (cf. the pillars of cloud and of fire, Exod. 13:22; Num. 14:14). Yahweh speaks out of the fire (Deut. 4:12, 15, 33). Especially elect persons can be taken to him with fiery manifestations (2 Ki. 2:11).

Yahweh himself is a devouring fire (Deut. 4:24; 9:3; Isa. 33:14). This is not to say that he is a personification of an element (cf. CL above), but that he watches over obedience to his will with fiery zeal. His word can also be described as a devouring fire (Jer. 23:29).

From the concept of the theophany which has its root in the covenant cultus and in the idea of judgment, it may be seen that when Yahweh appears, he is accompanied by fire (Gen. 15:17; Exod. 3:2 f.; 19:18; Jdg. 6:21; 13:20; Num. 14:14; Isa. 4:5; Ezek. 1:27). This does not mean, however, that he is thought of as the god of fire or the god of the volcano. For Israel drew a distinction between Yahweh himself and the phenomena which accompany his appearance. Fire is one of Yahweh's "servants", an instrument in his hand (1 Ki. 19:11 f.; Ps. 50:3; 104:4). Fire is a symbol of Yahweh's holiness as judge of the world, and also of his divine power and glory (Exod. 24:17; Isa. 6:1–4; Ezek. 1:27 f.). According to Dan. 7:10, a stream of fire issues from beneath the throne of Yahweh, a concept which plays an important part in Jewish and Christian cosmology and apocalyptic.

In the post-exilic period it was expected that Yahweh would appear to bring history to its consummation, and fire is the token announcing the day of Yahweh (Joel 2:30). The enemies of Yahweh will be destroyed by fire and the sword (Isa. 66:15 f.; Ezek. 38:22; 39:6; Mal 4:1). According to Isa. 66:24, the effects will be far-reaching: those condemned in the judgment will be continuously tormented by fire.

2. In Jewish apocalyptic fire becomes the mark of the heavenly world. The house in which Yahweh lives in heaven consists of and is surrounded by fire (Eth. Enoch 14:9–22 and often). Fire is the means of punishment in hell (Eth. Enoch 91:9; 100:9; 2 Esd. 7:38; Syr.Bar. 44:15 and often). The final judgment is a judgment by fire (Eth.Enoch 102:1; Syr.Bar. 37:1; 48:39; 2 Esd. 13:10 f.; Jub. 9:15; 3:10). The community of Qumran also expected the ungodly to be judged by fire in the final judgment (1QS 2:8; 4:13; 1QH 17:13). Under Stoic and Persian influence the doctrine of the world conflagration also found its way into Judaism (Sib. 2:186 ff., 238 ff. and often). This is also found in the Qumran texts in the "little apocalypse" (1QH 3:25 ff.).

Rab. speculation concerned itself with the origin of fire, and several states of fire are distinguished. It is said that the Torah originated from fire: letters of black fire were written on white fire. This lies behind the frequent reports of fiery manifestations when Rabbis study the Torah. The fiery place of punishment for the ungodly is called Gehenna (→ Hell). To this is added in the 2nd cent. A.D., as a result of Persian influence, the doctrine of an intervening purgatory.

NT In the NT pyr occurs 71 times. It is part of everyday life: Mk. 9:22; Lk. 22:55; Acts 28:5; Heb. 11:34 (torture); Rev. 17:16; 18:8 (in war). It appears in a fig. sense in Jas. 3:5 f. (the tongue as a devouring fire) and Lk. 12:49 (the fire of discord). Similarly the vb. pyroō, burn, be inflamed, is used of the heat of emotions: in 1 Cor. 7:9 (of sexual desire); in 2 Cor. 11:29 (of indignation over another's hurt). Several derivative words also occur in the NT: pyressō, suffer with a fever (Matt. 8:14; Mk. 1:30); pyretos, fever (Lk. 4:38; Acts 28:8); pyra, pile of combustible material (Acts 28:2f.; Lk. 22:55 v.l.); pyrrazō, be fiery red in colour (Matt. 16:2 f.); pyrros, fiery red in colour (Rev. 6:4), also a proper name (Pyrrhus in Eng. versions) in Acts 20:4; pyrōsis, the process of burning (Rev. 18:9, 18), and fig. as a fiery test or ordeal (1 Pet. 4:12; cf. Prov. 27:21; Did. 16:5).

Fire has particular theological significance:

1. As a sign of heavenly, divine glory. The exalted Christ has eyes like flames of fire (Rev. 1:15; cf. Ezek. 1:27; Rev. 2:18; 19:12). The angel in Rev. 10:1 has legs like pillars of fire. Before God's throne there burn seven torches of fire (Rev. 4:5; 15:2). The Holy Spirit, being of heavenly origin, appears in tongues as of fire (Acts 2:3, cf. Jn. 3:8), and fire accompanies the appearance of God (Acts 7:30, referring to Exod. 3:2; Heb. 12:18 ff., especially v. 29; cf. Exod. 19:12 ff.).

2. In metaphorical expressions. In the proverbial sayings in 1 Pet. 1:7 (cf. Prov. 17:3), just as gold is tested in fire, so faith is tested by suffering in this world. Sufferings are a pyrōsis, burning, which comes upon Christians in order to test or prove them, and is a sign of the end-time (1 Pet. 4:12; cf. v. 7). The image reappears in a way similar to that in 1 Pet. 1:7, at Rev. 3:18: gold refined by fire (pepyrōmenon) represents true Christian faith which will stand the test. In the passage about the spiritual armour of the Christian (Eph. 6:16), the shield of faith serves to ward off all the fiery (pepyrōmena) darts of the wicked one. Clearly a dualistic thinking (cf. the addition of tou ponērou, → Evil) is in the background here, with the idea that the faithful, as children of light, are engaged in battle with the forces of darkness. (Cf. the parallels to this in the Qumran literature: "They have surrounded me with all their weapons of war; arrows destroy, without any to heal, and the spear-point is in a fire which devours trees", 1QH 2:25 f.)

3. (a) As a picture of divine judgment in Matt. 3:10; 7:19; Lk. 3:9; Jn. 15:6. Here images from the farmer's life are used to illustrate the eschatological judgment of God. Rev. 9:17 f. depicts horses coming out to execute judgment, with smoke and sulphur issuing from their mouths. This marks them out as a scourge, bringing destruction with them. Similarly the rider's breastplates, "the colour of fire" (pyrinos), point to the dawning of the judgment. Even in this age God can use fire as a means of judgment. The sons of Zebedee want Jesus to give them permission to call down fire on the inhospitable Samaritan village (Lk. 9:45; cf. 2 Ki. 1:10, 12). The final powers to array themselves against God, Gog and Magog, will be destroyed by divine fire (Rev. 20:9). Lk. 17:29 recalls Gen. 19:24; and Rev. 8:7 recalls Exod. 9:24. (Is the reference to a volcano or to a star?) The two witnesses in Rev. 11 are able to destroy their enemies with fire (cf. v. 5): God's power of judgment is at their disposal (cf. 2 Sam. 22:9). As a sign of the deceiving powers of Satan, the false prophet calls down fire from heaven (Rev. 13:13). An angel is given power over fire (Rev. 14:18). The riders of Rev. 6:1–8 remind us of the horses in Zech. 1:8; 6:2 ff. The rider of the red (pyrros) horse brings war and bloodshed. In Rev. 12:3 the red colour signifies that the dragon, i.e. → Satan, is bellicose and murderous. (→ Black, White, Red.)

(b) In Lk. 12:49 f. the mission of Jesus is presented as a fulfilment of the Baptist's prophecy – but now in the sense that he who baptizes in spirit and fire must himself suffer. His way of bringing the judgment is to take it upon himself, and so the eschatological judgment is taken up in the present, historical sufferings of Jesus. In Mk. 9:49 salt and fire are linked together in a riddle. Salt has power to purify, preserve and give flavour, and fire is an image of the divine judgment. He who would find fellowship with God must give up the old man to judgment, by denying himself. If a man will not do that, he is liable to the eschatological judgment of wrath. 1 Cor. 3:13 depicts the traditional notion of an eschatological judgment by fire, in which every man's work will be tested (see above NT 2). Bad workmanship will be burned up, but the builder himself will narrowly escape, like a stick pulled out of a burning wood-pile. In 2 Thess. 1:8 the Parousia is described in OT terminology (cf. Exod. 3:2; Isa. 66:15). In Rom. 12:20 Paul cites Prov. 25:12 f., making the metaphor refer to the final divine judgment. Only in one passage in the NT, 2 Pet. 3:7, 10, 12, does the ancient doctrine of the world conflagration appear, combined with a recollection of the flood catastrophe recorded in the OT.

(c) Fire appears in Matt. 13:42; 18:8 f.; 25:41 par. and Mk. 9:43, 45, 47 as the opposite of the "Kingdom of God" (→ Kingdom, art. basileia) and → life (art. zōē). The "hell of fire" (→ Hell) in Mk. 9:48 recalls Isa. 66:24. Contemporary Jewish ideas of the present punishment by fire of the people of Sodom and Gomorrah are suggested by Jude 7. Fire and brimstone indicate eternal damnation in hell at the end of time (Rev. 14:10; 19:20; 20:10, 14; 21:8). H. Bietenhard

→ Anger, → Hell, → Holy, → Punishment

(a). J. B. Bauer, "Fire," EBT I 269 f.; O. C. de C. Ellis, A History of Fire and Flame, 1932; J. G. Frazer, Myths of the Origin of Fire, 1930; E. M. Good, "Fire," IDB II 268 f.; F. Lang, pyr etc. TDNT VI 928–52 (bibliography 928); P. D. Miller, "Fire in the Mythology of Canaan and Israel," CBQ 17, 1965, 256–61; M. P. Nilsson, "Fire Festivals in Ancient Greece," Journal of Historical Studies, 43, 1923, 144–48; A. D. Nock, "Cremation and Burial in the Roman Empire," HTR 25, 1932, 321–59.

(b). C. M. Edsman, "Le baptême de feu," Acta Seminarii Neotestamentici Upsaliensis 9, 1940; "Ignis divinus. Le feu comme moyen de rajeunissement et d'immortalité: contes, légendes, mythes et rites," Skrifter utgivna av Vetenskaps-Sozieteten i Lund, 34, 1949; and "Feuer," RGG[3]

II 927 f.; S. Eitrem, "Die vier Elemente in der Mysterienweihe," Sym. Osl. 4, 1926, 39–59; 5, 1927, 39–59; F. Lang, Das Feuer im Sprachgebrauch der Bibel, dargestellt auf dem Hintergrund der Feuervorstellungen in der Umwelt, (dissertation Tübingen) 1950; R. Mayer, "Die biblische Vorstellung vom Weltbrand," Bonner Orientalische Studien, Neue Folge, 4, 1956, 79–136; J. Michl, "Gerichtsfeuer und Purgatorium, zu 1. Kor. 3, 12–15," Stud.Paul., 1963, 395–401; E. Pax, EPIPHANEIA, Münchener Theologische Studien, I 10, 1955; K. Reinhardt, "Heraklits Lehre vom Feuer," Hermes 77, 1942, 1–27; F. Stolz, 'ēš, THAT I 242–46.

Firm, Foundation, Certainty, Confirm

The life of individual people or of the community is often described in the NT under the metaphor of a building (→ House). The durability and toughness of a building depends on the quality of its foundations, and the same is true of human life. themelios connotes this basis, usually not immediately obvious to the observer, which upholds, supports and affects the whole edifice. Another word used in the same sense is hedraiōma, although this is derived from a different range of concepts. hedraios originally refers to the state of standing steady on the ground; then, to the human sitting position. The bebaios group, on the other hand, is concerned with that which is based, or still to be fixed or anchored to a foundation, assumed to be unshakeable. Hence bebaios becomes a predominantly legal term, used to refer to a position or guarantee which is subject to no risk of alteration (see also → Seal).

βέβαιος

βέβαιος (bebaios), sure; βεβαιόω (bebaioō), confirm; βεβαίωσις (bebaiōsis), confirmation.

CL bebaios, from bainō, means fit to tread on (having a firm foundation). In classical Gk. from the 5th cent. B.C. it acquires the meaning of firm, durable, unshakeable, sure, reliable, certain; and in the legal sphere, valid, legal. bebaioō similarly means make firm, strengthen, confirm; and also, guarantee. bebaiōsis means establishing, confirmation, or (in legal language) guarantee (legally valid confirmation of a legal act).

OT In the OT (LXX) this group of words occurs only rarely, e.g. in Ps. 119:28 in the sense, to strengthen. Where it occurs, it has generally the same meaning as in classical Gk.

NT In the NT the words under consideration occur in all 19 times (8 times in Heb. alone). They connote first validity, i.e. the confirming evidence of the divine word (Mk. 16:20; Heb. 2:2 f.), of the gospel (Phil. 1:7), etc. Here the NT has adopted the technical sense that the words had already acquired in the legal sphere (see above CL). Secondly, they are used in the original sense to denote that a thing is firm, reliable, because it has a firm foundation. Thus the hope and confidence of man is firmly secured as by an anchor, when the object of trust is the word of God, which he has legally confirmed with an oath (Heb. 6:16, 19).

1. (a) The → promises of God, the → word of God, and the → gospel will be fulfilled with absolute certainty, because they have been legally confirmed by God, and so form the foundations of the faith. Thus God's promise stands secure. Because of its legal validation it is a reliable and absolutely sure foundation, on which the believer may depend. The promise has been given "from grace" by God to faith, not on the basis of the law (Rom. 4:16). It thus depends for its validity and efficacy on God alone, not on man. It is this that makes it sure. Hence it applies to the man who lives totally "from grace", i.e. the believer. It is he who possesses, through the promise, God's future, and not the person who founds his standing before God on the law and his obedience to it. If the validity of God's promises were dependent on that, we should never be able to have assurance about them.

Another reason for the "confirmation" (legal validation) of God's promises to the fathers is given in Rom. 15:8: Jesus Christ has himself given them this legal validation. His whole life was one of "service" to the Jews and to the Gentiles, in order to make God's promises sure for them. He showed them how all the promises of God were fulfilled in him, and thus proved to be true. Thereby he made evident "God's truthfulness" and faithfulness, which form the ultimate and most profound basis for confidence and certainty about the foundations of faith. Heb. 6:16 ff. states that in order to confirm and vouch for his promises, and thus for the impregnable nature of his will, God has even gone so far as to swear an oath. If even in human relations an oath serves to confirm a promise (eis bebaiōsin is a recognized Gk. legal term for a guarantee), and excludes any contradiction or any further objection, how much more so when God vouches for his word with an oath! This terminology is also confirmed by its use in Heb. 9:17. God's promise (v. 15) is compared with a will which comes into force when the person who issued it dies. This throws a special light upon the death of Jesus.

(b) Rather than God's promise, it is often the logos, the word (of God), which is described by these terms as trustworthy. Heb. 2:2 states that, if the message declared by angels (i.e. the OT law) was sure, impregnable and valid, so that "every transgression or disobedience received a just retribution," how much more is the word of the Lord who is so much "superior to angels" (Heb. 1:4). For God himself has borne witness to that word, and has confirmed it by "signs and wonders and various miracles" (Heb. 2:4). "Behind the bebaios logos stands the covenant of God (diathēkē), which guarantees that the word will be carried out. It is not the fact that the message is delivered by angels, but that the word is undergirded by the covenant of God on Sinai, that gives it its impregnability and legal validity" (O. Michel, Der Brief an die Hebräer, 63; → Covenant). In Mk. 16:20 (not in the best MSS [Ed.]), the validity of the word (of the disciples) is confirmed (bebaiountos) by "signs following". These signs are an indication that the living Lord himself is speaking and working through his witnesses, and that their witness is therefore true and reliable. If God's truthfulness and faithfulness are the primary basis for the validity of God's word and therefore for the whole of the Christian's assurance concerning his faith, then these signs are for the Christian a not unimportant subsequent confirmation of his confidence with regard to God's promises. According to 2 Pet. 1:19, we have "the prophetic word made more sure", because it has been confirmed by divine actions and manifestations from the heavenly world, namely at the transfiguration of Jesus. These experiences (like the Easter experiences) strengthened the disciples' confidence in the absolute reliability and validity of the word of God.

(c) This use of the term leads also to the sense of witnessing and witness (to the gospel), as in 1 Cor. 1:6; Phil. 1:7; and Heb. 2:3. Here there is also the idea that God's word is so sure and reliable that it must be believed when it is preached. Thus the idea drawn from the legal sphere, that God's word is here and now made valid by the witness which is borne to it, is often present (cf. H. Schlier, art. bebaios, TDNT I 603; see above CL). At the same time man's responsibility towards it is emphasized.

2. (a) It is on this basis of the legal foundation and validity of God's word and promise (see above NT 1 (a)) that the believer's assurance about his salvation is to be understood. Often the two meanings are directly related to one another (cf. Heb. 6:16 and 6:19; 1 Cor. 1:6 and 1:8; 2 Pet. 1:10 and 1:19). The certainty of the believer's hope is inextricably rooted in the legal validity of God's word. This is worked out very impressively in Heb. 6:19. Since God's promise is unchangeable and his oath (v. 16) valid (God does not lie!), the believer's hope is firm and assured like a ship which is firmly anchored. The writer of Heb. uses here the formula asphalē kai bebaian, an expression common in the Gk. world also. asphalēs, safe, can here scarcely be distinguished in meaning from bebaios (cf. O. Michel, ad loc., 157). Since the church on earth is always subject to temptation and is therefore in danger of losing its unique confidence (parrhēsia, → Openness), it is necessary for the church to show itself unshaken in its trust in God and its expectation of the future, i.e. in its assurance of salvation and that it should be ready to withstand every attack (Heb. 3:6, 14). This is indeed the very condition we must fulfil, in order to belong to "Jesus' house" and be his children and "partners" (v. 14 NEB).

(b) Because of this, the whole position of the Christian gains an element of assurance and certainty. It is God himself who establishes, makes firm, the believer in Christ (2 Cor. 1:21; similarly 1 Cor. 1:8), and seals him with the Holy Spirit. Such a person is "established in the faith" or "through faith" (Col. 2:7). 1 Pet. 5:9 has in the same sense stereoi tē pistei, "firm" or "solid" "in the faith", "rooted" (rhizoomai, parallel term to bebaios) in Christ and "built" on him. He has a "heart established through grace." He is secure just because he looks away from all efforts of his own and stands entirely upon what lies outside himself! In a very similar sense we find stērizō in 2 Thess. 2:17, and 1 Pet. 5:10, where it is used alongside themelioō. H. Schönweiss

θεμέλιος

θεμέλιος (themelios), foundation; θεμελιόω (themelioō), lay the foundation, pass. be founded; ἑδραῖος (hedraios), firm, steadfast; ἑδραίωμα (hedraiōma), foundation.

CL themelios was probably intended originally as an adj., which went with lithos, stone; but this cannot be verified from literature. It is used in the masc. and neut., without any difference in meaning. The word is attested from Homer onwards (there in the form themeilia, or themethla), and it is linguistically connected with the vb. tithēmi, place, stand, lay down. Hence it means that which lies beneath, foundation (stone), base, both in the lit. sense (e.g. foundations of a house, city, or building) and in a transf. sense (e.g. in legal correspondence to describe the right of possession to a building, or in philosophical thought, where the term means the basis of a system). Similarly the vb. themelioō means to lay the foundation (attested from Xen. onwards).

A similar meaning is conveyed by the adj. hedraios (derived from hedra, seat, chair, abode, place), which originally was used by men in the sense of sitting, sedentary, and then more generally for firm, unshakeable, stable. Thus hedraios is used in much the same way as themelios in questions about absolute certainty and the ultimate basis of all existence (especially by Plotinus). The reference is always to something secure and permanent in itself. The substantival form hedraiōma, foundation, is not found in classical Gk.

OT 1. There are various Heb. equivalents to themelios, mostly from the root yāsaḏ, to lay a foundation; but in the pre-exilic prophets frequently 'armôn, citadel, palace; cf. Amos' prophecies against the nations. When the OT speaks of a basis and foundation it is never in the Greek, philosophical sense of ultimate, self-sufficient existence. The OT speaks of the foundations of houses (1 Ki. 7:9 f. [LXX 7:45 f.]; Jer. 51:26) and cities (Amos 1:4 ff. especially 2:5), and also of the mountains (Deut. 32:22; Ps. 18:7), the earth (Isa. 24:18; Mic. 6:2; Prov. 8:29) and the heavens (2 Sam. 22:8). Even in the last examples, foundations are here certainly to be understood in a lit. sense, in keeping with the ancient conception of the universe. The important point is that these foundations are not secure in themselves, but are laid by God (Prov. 8:29; Isa. 14:32; cf. Job 9:6) and are capable of being destroyed again (Deut. 32:22; Lam. 4:11; Ps. 18:7). The stability of this world is not an immanent possession of her own, but results from an act of foundation which is wrapped in mystery and so remains a gift from God. Hence the foundations of all things can tremble at the theophany in Ps. 18 (vv. 7, 15), which calls in question at the same time the permanence and stability of the earth's foundations.

Of particular importance for the theological meaning of the term foundation is Isa. 28:16 (cf. 54:11). Here Yahweh himself will lay the foundation and cornerstone for Israel in Zion. The image of a new building is certainly not intended to point to a future great new city, but to the establishment in the city of God of a people of God which lives by faith. Zion is to become a centre of pilgrimage for the nations (cf. Isa. 2:2 f.; Mic. 4:1 f.). Not until much later (cf. Eph. 2:20; 1 Pet. 2:4 ff.) is the foundation stone (Isa. 28:16) seen to refer to the Messiah (Christ).

2. In late Jewish literature the use made of the concept in the Qumran texts is striking. Here the Heb. words sôḏ and y^{e}sôḏ are used interchangeably in the sense of foundation. The community is often regarded as the eschatological temple or the eschatological city of God. In such contexts mention is often made of its foundations, Isa. 28:16 being interpreted as referring to the community (1QS 8:5 ff.; 9:3 and often).

NT The NT use of themelios extends throughout the NT (in all it occurs 16 times), and does not differ from cl. Gk. usage in its meaning. The vb. is used 6 times. hedraios, on the other hand, is used only 3 times by Paul (1 Cor. 7:37; 15:58; Col. 1:23), and hedraiōma occurs only in 1 Tim. 3:15 (in the same sense as themelios). Luke uses themelios only in the lit. sense of the foundations of a building (6:48 f.; 14:29; Acts 16:26). In Heb. 11:10 and Rev. 21:14, 19 it refers to the foundations of the future city of God. Paul, on the other hand, uses the noun and vb. only in a fig. sense.

In discussing the theological significance of these terms, we may ignore all the passages which use them in the lit. and concrete sense, so that apart from Heb. 6:1 and 1 Pet. 5:10 our discussion is confined to the Pauline passages.

1. The image of a → house and house-building (oikos, oikodomē) is occasionally used in the NT as a picture of how a man governs and orders his life, as he founds and builds it (Matt. 7:24 f.). If he has the words of Jesus as the foundation, he is securely based. This also applies particularly to the Christian community, the church. It is a "spiritual house" (1 Pet. 2:5; Eph. 2:20–22; 1 Tim. 3:15) which Jesus himself plans to build (cf. Matt. 16:18) by his Spirit and his word. Just as the foundation is of decisive importance in building a house, so it is with the church. This foundation is Jesus Christ (1 Cor. 3:11). "Everything that has to be regarded as the reality and truth of justification and faith and their mutual relationship begins in Him and derives from Him" (K. Barth, CD IV 1, 637). On this foundation Paul has set the church (v. 10), and on this foundation the further building must proceed (vv. 12 ff.). But whatever is built, Christ must remain the basis (cf. v. 15). Insofar as this foundation only comes to men through the proclamation of the apostles and prophets, they can themselves be described as themelios, "Christ Jesus himself being the cornerstone" (Eph. 2:20). In the same way in Matt. 16:18 Peter is called the rock on which the church will be built. The church thus lives from that which God has done in Jesus and caused to be proclaimed by the apostles. She is no longer the church, if she allows other things beside to be regarded as fundamental such as blood or race (→ Rock, Stone).

2. Where the church rests on such a foundation, she can herself conversely be described as the foundation of the truth (1 Tim. 3:15; hedraiōma). For it is she who protects and preserves the truth in her confession (v. 16) in the fight against enemies within and without. Similarly in 2 Tim. 2:19 the foundation is formed not only by God's act in Christ, but arising out of this, the fact that the church puts away from herself all unrighteousness (cf. v. 20 f.).

3. As is evident from the simile of building a house, Paul makes a fundamental distinction between two separate tasks of the preacher. The first is to lay the foundation (missionary proclamation, evangelism); the second is to build up the church (1 Cor. 3:10). He believes himself above all called only to the first of these tasks (Rom. 15:20; cf. 2 Cor. 10:16), and is not prepared merely to build further where someone else has already laid the foundation.

4. In addition to these ecclesiological uses, themelios can also be applied, like hedraios, to the individual Christian. The steadfastness to which he is called (1 Cor. 15:58) depends entirely upon his relationship to his Lord which is grounded in faith (Col. 1:23) and love (Eph. 3:17). There may, however, be an allusion here too to the church, for in both contexts it is mentioned, as the body of Christ or by the expression "in Christ" (Col. 1:18; Eph. 3:21).

5. A completely different use is found in Heb. 6:1, where themelios means the basic doctrines of the Christian faith. The distinction made here is between the groundwork, which every Christian has to know, and further insights which come to those who are prepared to study the scriptures in greater depth. themelios is thus used here rather to distinguish between the relative importance of various items of Christian teaching, than to refer as in Paul to the relationship of a person to Christ.

J. Blunck

(a). H. Schlier, bebaios, TDNT I 600–3; K. L. Schmidt, themelios, TDNT III 63 f.; E. Stauffer, hedraios, TDNT II 362 ff.
(b). K. Heim, Glaubensgewissheit, 1923; H. J. Rothert, Gewissheit und Vergewisserung als theologisches Problem, 1963; K. T. Schäfer, "Über Eph. 2, 20," Neutestamentliche Aufsätze, Festschrift J. Schmid, 1963, 218 ff.

ἀσφάλεια

ἀσφάλεια (asphaleia), firmness, certainty, security; ἀσφαλής (asphalēs), firm, sure, safe, secure; ἀσφαλίζω (asphalizō), guard; ἀσφαλῶς (asphalōs), securely.

CL asphaleia occurs in cl. Gk. with the following meanings: security against stumbling (Thuc., History, 3, 22), assurance from danger (Aeschylus onwards), caution (in post-Christian writings), assurance, certainty (Thuc. History, 2, 11), the certainty or convincing nature of an argument (Xenophon, Memorabilia, 4, 6, 15), and as a security, bond or pledge as a technical law term (Arrianus, Epicteti Dissertationes, 2, 13, 7; BGU 1149, 24; P. Teb. 293, 19; The Amherst Papyri, 78:16).

The adj. asphalēs occurs from Homer onwards in the sense of immovable, steadfast, unshaken, unfailing both lit. and in the case of friends etc., and safe both lit. and fig. The vb. asphalizō is used in the sense of secure, safeguard and, in 1st cent. B.C. literature, arrest.

OT asphaleia occurs 19 times in the LXX as a translation of 6 different nouns. In Lev. 26:5 and Deut. 12:10 it is used of the security (Heb. beṭaḥ) which the Lord promises his people (cf. Prov. 8:14; 11:15; 28:17 where the Heb. equivalents are all different). In Ps. 103(104):5 it is used of the foundations of the earth. It is found in Isa. 8:15; 18:4; and 34:15. But most instances occur in 2 Macc. (3:22; 4:21; 9:21; 15:1, 11 where it means security, cf. also Jos., War 3, 398).

asphalēs occurs in Prov. 3:18 (v.l.); 8:28; 15:7 but in each case there are differences between the Heb. and the Gk. and the Eng. tr. does not give a lit. rendering of the Gk. It is also found in Tob. 5:15 (v.l.); Wis. 4:3; 7:23; 14:3. The adv. asphalōs translates Heb. beṭaḥ in Gen. 35:25 (they "came upon the city unawares" RSV). It has the meaning of surely, certainly or safely in Wis. 18:6; Bar. 5:7; 1 Macc. 6:40; 3 Macc. 7:6; Aristeas 46.

The vb. asphalizō translates ḥāzaq in Neh. 3:15 (RSV "repaired the Fountain Gate"). It is used in Isa. 41:10 (Heb. tāmaḵ) which RSV translates "I will uphold you with my victorious right hand." In Wis. it means keep safely (4:17), guard (10:12) and make fast (13:15). It has the meaning of guard in P. Teb. 283, 19 (1st cent. B.C.; cf. Catalogue of the Greek Papyri in the John Rylands Library, Manchester, 68, 19).

NT asphaleia is used in a physical sense in Acts 5:23 ("we found the prison locked in all security"). It is used fig. of the "certainty" or "truth" (RSV) of the things in which Theophilus has been instructed (Lk. 1:4). It denotes security in 1 Thess. 5:3 where Paul is warning against a false sense of security. asphalēs means "safe" in Phil. 3:1, i.e. a safe course. The adv. asphalōs means securely in the sense of being securely guarded in Mk. 14:44 and Acts 16:23. It is used fig. in the sense of "certainly", "assuredly" (RSV) in Acts 2:36. asphalizō means to guard or make secure (of the tomb of Jesus) in Matt. 27:64 ff.; to guard in Acts 16:30D; and to fasten in Acts 16:24. C. Brown Arndt, 118; Hatch-Redpath, 174; A. J. B. Higgins, "The Preface to Luke and the Kerygma in Acts" in W. W. Gasque and R. P. Martin, eds., Apostolic History and the Gospel, 1970, 78–91; Liddell-Scott, 266; J. H. Ropes, "St Luke's Preface: asphaleia and parakolouthein", JTS 25, 1924, 67–71; K. L. Schmidt, asphaleia, TDNT I 506; F. Vogel, Neue kirchliche Zeitschrift, 44, 1933, 203 ff.

κυρόω

κυρόω (kyroō), confirm, ratify, make valid; προκυρόω (prokyroō), establish, confirm beforehand.

CL & OT kyroō, from kyros, meaning authority or validity, expresses the thought of ratifying and making firm in all sorts of contexts. prokyroō, a regularly-formed compound meaning confirm beforehand, only appears twice in secular Gk., though kyroō is common from Herodotus and Aeschylus on. In the canonical LXX kyroō appears twice, both times in the passive voice of confirming possession (Gen. 23:20; Lev. 25:30). In the papyri it appears several times as the legal word for the confirming of transactions and appointments.

NT In Gal. 3:15, 17 both kyroō and prokyroō appear in connection with the ratifying, i.e. the actual formal making, of a will. In 2 Cor. 2:8 Paul uses kyroō in his plea to the Corinthians to "confirm" or perhaps "reaffirm, re-establish" their love towards the errant brother. J. I. Packer

First, Firstborn

The word "first" denotes priority within an order. This implies the consequent dependence or secondary status of other persons or things. The existence of such secondary persons or things is demanded by the distinction between prōtos (first) and heis (→ one) or monos (only), since these words exclude any comparable entity. In the NT the term prōtotokos, firstborn, which is derived from prōtos, has been given particular importance by its use as a title of Christ.

πρῶτος

πρῶτος (prōtos), first; πρωτεύω (prōteuō), be first; πρότερον (proteron), beforehand; πρωτοκαθεδρία (prōtokathedria), seat of honour; πρωτοκλισία (prōtoklisia), place of honour, best seat; πρωτοκαθεδρίτης (prōtokathedritēs), one who occupies a seat of honour, church leader.

CL 1. prōtos is the superlative of pro, before, and the ordinal number corresponding to heis, one. Hence in late Koiné Gk. it is used for proteron (earlier) also. It is used first as an adj. or noun meaning first; then in the neut., prōton, as an adv. meaning first, at first (so also the proper adv. prōtōs, Arist., but lacking in biblical Gk.). prōtos is attested from Homer in (a) a spatial, (b) a temporal sense. It further connotes (c) order or succession, and (d) rank and worth. In cl. Gk. these basic meanings give rise to 25 different senses or nuances.

2. In Gk. philosophy ta prōta means the elements (Empedocles, 38, 1); in logic, the primary, unprovable propositions; prōtos syllogismos is an original, normal, typical conclusion (Aristot., Rhet., α 2, 1357ª 17). In Aristot. prōtē philosophia means that which is of the highest order (i.e. metaphysics); or alternatively, the philosophy of the ancients (i.e. the Pre-Socratics). In mathematics the prime numbers are called prōtoi arithmoi. As a title of rank and honour, the Ptolemaic court used the phrase tōn prōtōn philōn, one of the first friends (P. Teb 31, 15; cf. W. Michaelis, TDNT VI 865; Liddell–Scott, 1939).

3. Hel. religions. Among the followers of Orpheus Zeus is known as "first and last, head and centre" (prōtos kai eschatos, kephalē kai messa). Here the phrase prōtos kai eschatos denotes the majesty of the Ruler of All (Ps. Aristot., Mund. 401a 28; cf. 401b 5; → basileus, king; → archōn, ruler).

OT 1. In the LXX prōtos (c. 240 times) usually represents, as does archē (→ beginning), the Heb. rō'š (including ri'šôn and similar related words, 125 times). It is also frequently used for ḥaḏ, 'eḥāḏ (17 times), first, one; and qeḏem (9 times), forward. Generally speaking, the meanings correspond to those in classical Gk., though they are confined to the four basic senses mentioned above. Even when an order or succession is not directly specified, it is there in the background.

(a) In the spatial sense: in front, towards the East (the first in rank of the directions, "towards the sunrise", Num. 2:3 for qeḏem); the furthest town (Jos. 15:21); in the front, above (1 Sam. 9:22); nearest, next (Est. 1:14).

(b) In the temporal sense (the most frequent use): first (Deut. 13:9, here the basic implication of a succession is easiest to discern); first (kindness) (Ruth 3:10); in earlier times, in those days (2 Sam. 16:23); first of all (Tob. 5:10 Symmachus); as a noun in neuter plur., beginning (Job 8:7); former things, in contrast to later (Eccl. 1:11).

(c) As an ordinal number to denote order or succession: first (Gen. 32:17; Exod. 12:18; 1 Sam. 14:14; 1 Chr. 24:7; Dan. 7:4; 2 Macc. 7:7).

(d) To denote rank and worth: (i) of persons, the first, chief priest, the high priest (1 Ki. 2:35); the king's counsellors (1 Chr. 18:17); prōtos philos, closest friend (1 Chr. 27:33); the first singer, leader of the choir (2 Esd. 22:46 = Neh. 12:46); prōteuō similarly means to be the first, most noble (Est. 5:11); (ii) of things: the most valuable (1 Sam. 15:21), most precious (Amos 6:6); (iii) God is the first (prōtos): this is the special characteristic of the preaching and theology of Isa. (cf. 41:4; 44:6; 48:12). He is prōtos as the Creator; he is also the last. The whole creation, both man and world, is directed towards his acts. It is true that the temporal sense is present here as well, since the Creator is the Eternal One before (and after) all creation. But in the first instance prōtos here expresses the position of God as the Lord of the world.

2. Hel. Jud. and Rab. Jud. In interpreting Gen. 2:7, Philo distinguished two kinds of men. The "first" is from heaven and spiritual; the "second" is → Adam, the forefather of the human race (H. Lietzmann, HNT 9, 85; cf. on Rab. ideas, SB III 478). Paul reverses the order: "the first Adam became a living soul, the last Adam a life-giving spirit" (1 Cor. 15:45; cf. C. K. Barrett, From First Adam to Last, 1962, 1–21). Occasionally God is called prōtos kai monos, the first and only one. Both terms express the uniqueness of God (→ One, art. monos; cf. TDNT VI 865). In Rab. writings "first" occurs as a title for the Messiah, interpreting Isa. 41:27 (SB I 65). Moreover, besides Adam the Torah is described as "the first" or "first-born" (→ prōtotokos; cf. E. Lohmeyer Der Kolosserbrief, 1930[8] on 1:15).

NT 1. In the NT prōtos occurs altogether 152 times (92 as adj. or noun, 60 as adv.), being relatively frequent and evenly distributed in the Synoptic Gospels (Matt. 23 times; Mk. 17 times; Lk. 20 times) and Acts (16 times), Rev. (18 times) and Heb. (10 times). In Paul the word is important chiefly in Rom. (7 times) and Cor. (8 times). In Jn. it occurs only 13 times. Otherwise is found only here and there. It is used in much the same way as it is in the LXX.

(a) In a spatial sense (Acts 12:10; Heb. 9:2, 6, 8).

(b) In a temporal sense: first, first of all, to begin with, previously (Matt. 5:24 followed by kai tote, and then; Lk. 9:59, 61); for proteron, beforehand (Matt. 12:29; Jn. 1:15); in the pair of opposites ta prōta - ta eschata, beginning – end (Lk. 11:26). An element of evaluation is contained in the contrast, typical for Heb., between hē prōtē and hē kainē diathēkē, the first and the → new → covenant (Heb. 8:7, 13; cf. 8:8 and 8:6, kreittōn diathēkē, better covenant). The first, earlier, → old covenant has been superseded by the new and is no longer valid (in 2 Cor. 5:17 and 2 Pet. 2:5 archaios is used; in 2 Cor. 3:14, palaios).

(c) In a succession or order, prōtos means the first in a series, followed possibly by deuteros, tritos, second, third, or else by heteros, heteros, the other, the third (Matt. 22:25; Lk. 14:18); sometimes in contrast to the last (Matt. 20:8 ff.); or when there are two, ho prōtos – ho allos, the one – the other (Jn. 19:32). It is used adverbially as the first, first (Jn. 20:4); and without any idea of continuing the series (Lk. 2:2); the first, best (fish) (Matt. 17:27).

(d) As a designation of rank and office, prōtos stands alongside megistanes and chiliarchoi as a title (Mk. 6:21). It draws attention to the value of a special garment (Lk. 15:22). In the prōtoi and eschatoi of Matt. 19:30 there is an element of evaluation: the prōtoi are those who have been accepted, the last those who are rejected. Used adverbially in this sense, it denotes priority perhaps to the exclusion of others (Mk. 7:27); in the first place (Rom. 1:16; 29:9, 10); so too probably in 1 Tim. 1:16, where Paul as the first is "the typical representative of mercy" (H. Conzelmann, HNT 13, 25). Possibly Rev. 2:4 comes under this heading as well: the most important kind of love, namely love of the brethren (cf. E. Lohse, NTD 11, 22). Rank and office are also implied by prōtoklisia, the seat of honour at a feast (next to the host) (Mk. 12:39 par.; Lk. 14:7, 8), and prōtokathedria, the chief seat in the synagogue or its equivalent (Matt. 23:6). On the basis of this the leader of a church came later to be called prōtokathedritēs, lit. one who occupies the first seat (Hermas, Vis., 3, 9, 7) and prohēgoumenos, president (cf. Arndt, 712, 732; → Bishop). prōteuō also denotes privilege: to take the first place, be pre-eminent (Col. 1:18; on this verse → art. prōtotokos, and E. Käsemann, "A Primitive Christian Baptismal Liturgy", Essays on NT Themes, 1964, 157 f.).

2. The frequent occurrence of prōtos/prōton in the NT as an expression of order or sequence (69 times) demonstrates the significance of → order in God's revelation, however important the free, unpredictable Spirit may be. This is partly accounted for by the influence of the OT and Jud. and the importance they attached to a devout, believing, well-ordered life (Lk. 11:38; Jn. 7:51 referring to the orderly process of justice; cf. SB III 469 f.). Jesus insisted on priorities in his new, Messianic order: before bringing your sacrifice, first be reconciled to your brother (Matt. 5:24); seek first the kingdom of God (Matt. 6:33); first take the beam out of your own eye, then set about removing the splinter from your neighbour's (Matt. 7:5; cf. Lk. 14:28, 31). For the opposite see Lk. 9:59, 61 (cf. TDNT VI 869). God has even ordered the course of the world up to its end in the final judgment (Mk. 9:11 par.; Lk. 17:25; 2 Thess. 2:3; f. Lk. 21:9; 1 Thess. 4:16; 1 Pet. 4:17; TDNT VI 869).

The church drew inferences from the divine ordering of events which it applied to the ordering of worship (1 Cor. 14:30; cf. vv. 33 and 40), and the ordering of offices in the church (1 Cor. 12:28). Paul insisted that the freedom of the Spirit is not anarchy (→ Love, art. agapē). On the other hand, the order of the church of Jesus Christ must not be made into a hierarchy. To be the first is not, and never becomes, an institution. It always remains a function: he who would be first in the church, let him become your slave and so follow the example of Jesus. He is the only servant (diakonos) in the full sense, and hence the only one who is "first" (Matt. 20:27 f.). God made Jesus the Lord of this order by making him the prōtos kai eschatos (a title of God, Isa. 44:6; 48:12; cf. Rev. 1:17; 2:8; 22:13; cf. Acts 26:23). As the First and the Last, he is also the unique One (→ One, art. monos). His mission is unique and unrepeatable (→ One, art. hapax). Hence Jesus alone has the authority to make the last first and the first last (Matt. 20:16). Thus he confirms Israel's abiding pre-eminence (Mk. 7:27; cf. Rom. 1:16; 2:9 f.; 11:2; but see also Matt. 8:11 and Lk. 13:28–30). And yet for the moment he gives the Gentiles preference over his own people (to be understood literally in the temporal sense, cf. Rom. 11:25 ff.), in order to make them jealous and move them to return to him.

K. H. Bartels

πρωτότοκος πρωτότοκος (prōtotokos), firstborn.

CL & OT prōtotokos is a late derivative from prōtos (first) and the aorist root tek- (born). The active form prōtotokos means, bearing one's firstborn; the pass. form prōtotokos, firstborn, is first found in the LXX, about 130 times, almost always for Heb. bᵉḵôr, firstborn. The tekein, i.e. bearing element in the word, sometimes takes a secondary place or disappears in the transferred sense, since bāḵar is related neither to riʾšôn, first, nor is it used as a vb. meaning to give birth (see below 2; TDNT VI 871 ff.).

1. In the LXX prōtotokos is used (a) in its lit. sense both of man and of beast, often as a noun in the neuter sing. with the accompanying phrase "which opens the womb" (dianoigon tēn mētran) (e.g. Exod. 13:2). The following expressions are confined to humans: prōtotokos hyios, firstborn son (cf. Gen. 25:25 (Esau); Exod. 4:22 (Israel)), and prōtotokos as a noun joined to the proper name (cf. Num. 3:2). The idea held generally in the ancient orient that firstborn inherits his father's strength (cf. Gen. 49:3) gives him a special position in law (cf. Deut. 21:15 ff.). For this reason it is normal for him to receive his father's special love (cf. TDNT VI 874). (b) In a transferred sense, prōtotokos is used to express a special relationship with the father, especially with God. Here the two roots from which it is derived, prōtos, first of several, and tekein, denoting physical descent, birth, no longer play any part in the meaning. See, for example, Exod. 4:22. In Ps. 89:27 ff. the thought is of "adoption", i.e. the bestowal of special legal rights and honours. It is to be noted that while prōtotokos is used in the OT as a title of honour for the chosen, those who have received grace, it is not found in an eschatological or soteriological sense.

2. In Rab. Judaism the Torah is described in a comment on Prov. 8:22, 23 as the first created thing, the firstborn of the way of Yahweh, and the earliest of his works. The same description is applied to the sanctuary with reference to Jer. 17:12. In both cases the term is used in a figurative sense to express the special love of God for the Torah and the sanctuary (SB III 256; → prōtos).

NT prōtotokos appears 8 times in the NT.

1. In the lit. sense, e.g. Lk. 2:7. "This is the only instance in the NT where, through the paronomastic use of tiktein, prōtotokos refers unequivocally to the process of birth, and this in the natural sense" (W. Michaelis, TDNT VI 876). "Firstborn" possibly conveys the implication that Jesus was the first of several children (cf. Mk. 6:3). Or it may emphasize, in view of the mention in Lk. 1:27, 34 of her virginity, that Mary had borne no previous children. In any case, however, prōtotokos does not preclude further children of Mary (cf. ibid.; → monogenēs).

2. In the fig. sense, as a title of honour for Jesus, prōtotokos is comprehensible only as translation of LXX Gk., with bāḵar in the background (see above OT 2). This must not be forgotten when we encounter shades of meaning for prōtotokos in the NT which go beyond its use in the LXX.

(a) As a title for the mediator of creation, it is used in Col. 1:15, as is demonstrated by parallel sayings in v. 16, "in him all things were created . . . all things were created through him and for him," and v. 17, "He is before all things, and in him all things hold together." Both supporters and opponents of the suggestion that prōtotokos in Col. 1 echoes Hel., mythical ideas agree that the statement is a confession of the supreme rank of the pre-existent Christ as the mediator in the creation of all things (cf. E. Käsemann, op. cit., 154 ff.; W. Michaelis, TDNT VI 879 f.).

(b) It is used in a eschatological sense in Heb. 1:6 to qualify hyios, son (v. 5), as a title given to Jesus at his ascension, i.e. the heavenly enthronement of the risen Lord (E. Käsemann, Das wandernde Gottesvolk, 1957, 58 f.). According to Ps. 2:7 cited in Heb. 1:5, it follows that, "The exaltation of Christ represents the teleiōsis of Jesus and thus the first attestation given by God, to be followed by others when the redeemed are made perfect" (Käsemann, ibid., 73). Michaelis interprets the passage otherwise, seeing v. 6a as a reference to the incarnation of the pre-existent Christ, although he also considers the possibility of a reference to the enthronement of the exalted Christ at the parousia (TDNT VI 880). Since the exalted Christ is one step ahead of his followers (in chapter 2 likewise called hyioi, sons) on the way to consummation, he is already prōtotokos, "Lord and archēgos of the redeemed community" (Käsemann, ibid.). Rom. 8:29 refers to the "eschatological transfiguration", when those who have been foreknown and chosen out are made like him (by the resurrection of the dead). As the prōtotokos, he will "be like them but above them in rank and dignity, since He remains their Lord" (TDNT VI 877). Col. 1:18 and Rev. 1:5 connect the title prōtotokos with the resurrection: Jesus is the first to be raised by God (→ prōtos, Acts 26:23), with the purpose "of being first in all things" (cf. Acts 3:15; 5:31; Heb. 2:10: the pioneer (founder) of life or salvation).

As a title of honour for Jesus, prōtotokos expresses more clearly than almost any other the unity of God's saving will and acts: "the firstborn of all creation", "the firstborn from the dead" (Col. 1:15; 18), "the firstborn among many brethren" (Rom. 8:29; cf. Heb. 12:23). Creator and Redeemer are one and the same, the all-powerful God in Jesus Christ "the first and the last", "the beginning and the end", who binds his own to himself from all eternity, and is their surety for salvation, if they abide in him. This goes beyond the limits of what can be logically asserted: the man Jesus of Nazareth (Lk. 2:1–2) is the mediator of creation; he who was executed on the cross as a criminal is the first to experience resurrection, and the one who leads us into life. This would have been reason enough for the NT witnesses to look back to the language of myth, in order to overstep the limitations of the OT and orthodox Judaism, and to express the inexpressible in the form of a confession (cf. the hymn-like style of Col. 1; so Käsemann, 149 ff.; E. Norden, Agnostos Theos, 1923, 241, 253). For in Jesus God has in fact made the impossible true. In the man Christ Jesus, the prōtotokos, God has brought his divine power and glory to its climax (Col. 1:19 f.), and has given a share in this to the church.

3. The plur. prōtotokoi is used with reference to the church. Should Heb. 12:23 ("the assembly of the firstborn who are enrolled in heaven") be taken literally? This would mean that Christians are here set directly alongside Christ, in an unparalleled and almost dangerous manner. Doubtless the author sees the Son and the sons (chs. 1 and 2), the hagiazōn, sanctifier, and the hagiazomenoi, those being sanctified, as very closely related. They are ex henos pantes, "all of one origin" (2:11). Käsemann refers here to gnostic myth (syngeneia teaching; Das wandernde Gottesvolk, 92 f.), but is careful to emphasize that the naturalism which characterizes gnostic myth has been abandoned. "The union of Christ and his followers, like the whole process of redemption, cannot be understood here except in terms of God's purpose of salvation" (ibid., 94). This is why Heb. 2:10 stresses eprepen autō, it was fitting for him to "make the pioneer [archēgos] of their salvation perfect through suffering". The prōtotokoi, as "brothers" of Christ, are enrolled in heaven. They do not possess the rank of firstborn as an inalienable right (as in the gnostic myth), but expect it like heirs, on the ground that Christ is the prōtotokos and as such their → archēgos, pioneer (→ Beginning; cf. arrabōn, first instalment, 2 Cor. 1:22, → Gift; cf. Rom. 8:17; aparchē, first-fruits, Rom. 8:23; → Sacrifice). K. H. Bartels

→ Adam, → Abraham, → Election, → Fruit, → Image, → Jesus Christ, → Lord, → Son of God, → Sacrifice

(a). A. T. Hanson, "Christ the First Fruits, Christ the Tree," Studies in Paul's Technique and Theology, 1974, 104–25; E. Käsemann, "A Primitive Christian Baptismal Liturgy," Essays on New Testament Themes, 1964, 149–68; V. H. Kooy, "First-born," IDB II 270 ff.; W. Kornfeld, "First-fruits (firstborn)," EBT I 271 ff.; I. Mendelsohn, "On the Preferential Status of the Eldest Son," BASOR 156, 1959, 38 ff.; W. Michaelis, prōtos, TDNT VI 865–82; J. Morgenstern, "First Fruits", IDB II 270; R. de Vaux, Ancient Israel, 1961 (see index).

(b). M. Albertz, "Die 'Erstlinge' der Botschaft des Neuen Testaments," EvTh 12, 1952–53, 151 ff.; E. Brunner, "Der Ersterschaffene als Gottes Ebenbild," EvTh 11, 1951–52, 298 ff.; J. Henninger,

"Menschenopfer bei den Arabern," Anthropos 53, 1958, 721 f., 776 f.; E. Käsemann, Das wandernde Gottesvolk, 1959[3]; W. Kornfeld, "Der Moloch," Wiener Zeitschrift für die Kunde des Morgenlandes 51, 1952, 287–313; W. Michaelis, "Die biblische Vorstellung von Christus als dem Erstgeborenen," ZSTh 23, 1954, 137 ff.; E. Norden, Agnostos Theos, (1923) 1960; C. H. Ratschow and A. Wendel, "Erstlinge," RGG[3] II 608 ff.

Fish

ἰχθύς

ἰχθύς (ichthys), fish; ἰχθύδιον (ichthydion) diminutive of foregoing, little fish; ὀψάριον (opsarion), fish for eating (with bread); κῆτος (kētos), sea-monster.

CL In cl. Gk. ichthys (with a variety of compounds, e.g. ichthyophagos, "fish-eating") was in general use. It appears as a metaphor for a "foolish man" in Plut., Moralia, 975 B.

Classically, kētos is specifically a sea-monster, of the whale kind (Aristotle), a cetacaean. Adj. kēteios is used in the general sense "monstrous". kētos is also the constellation, and the supposition that sea-monsters inhabited the deep gave rise to kētos in the sense "gulf". Possibly derived from keiō, to lie outstretched.

OT In the LXX, ichthys describes all created life living in the water (e.g. 1 Ki. 4:29 (33); Job 12:8), whether fresh (Exod. 7:18; Ezek. 29:4) or salt (Hos. 4:3) water. Fish are involved in the subservience of creation to the Creator (Ezek. 38:20) and by the Creator's will are under human domination (Gen. 1:26; 9:2; Ps. 8:9[8]). Their commercial value is implied in Neh. 13:13 and by the provision of a "fish-gate" (Neh. 3:3). With the rest of creation, fish fall under divine judgments on man (Exod. 7:18; Ps. 104[105]:29), illustrate divine providential interventions (Isa. 50:2) and figure in the ideal future (Ezek. 47:9). The angler's art aptly denotes man's inhuman treatment of man (Hab. 1:14). Religiously, it is forbidden to make fish-like representations of the divine nature (Dt. 4:18), a prohibition much to the point in the light of Assyrian representations of Ea in fish-form and the fish-costume of exorcist priests (cf. Tob. 6:1 ff.). In all these references LXX OT translates Heb. dāḡ, dāḡâh, or dᵉḡaṯ-hayyām, i.e. the general OT designation of sea-creatures.

kētos is used by the LXX to translate tannînîm gᵉḏôlîm (Gen. 1:21), liwyāṯān (Job 3:8) and rahaḇ (Job 9:13). In the last two it has clear mythological overtones. Otherwise it is only used of the sea-monster (dāḡ gāḏôl, and haddāḡâh) in Jon. 2:1 [1:17], 11[10].

NT The NT use of ichthys reflects much of the OT background. The whole Galilee narrative of the Gospels implies commerce in fish, but neither here nor throughout the OT is there any stress on different species of fish, nor are any particular varieties named, even though Galilee abounded in many sorts. The vocabulary of the LXX is increased by the occasional use of opsarion for fish prepared for or designed as food (Jn. 6:11; 21:9). The word does not necessarily mean "small" fish, as Jn. 21:9 ff. indicates. 1 Cor. 15:39 offers the sole NT observation on zoology, but its interest is clearly theological, the subservience of all creation to the Creator's will and design and it is this truth which receives vivid illustration in the nature miracles of Jesus, the two feedings of the multitudes (Matt. 14:17; 15:36, with parallels), the tribute money (Matt. 17:27) and the miraculous catches of fish (Lk. 5:6; Jn. 21:6). The single thread of truth linking these narratives is that by the mere exercise of his will Jesus subdues creation to his plan throughout in works of mercy for the well-being of people, and thus is manifested as the incarnate Creator.

kētos makes its only appearance in Matt. 12:40 with reference to the "great fish" (dāḡ gāḏôl) of Jonah. Both the LXX and NT have clearly made the correct choice of word here in the light of total usage, a sea-monster of undefined nature but undoubted size. J. A. Motyer

→ Animal, → Bird, → Jonah

G. S. Cansdale, Animals of Bible Lands, 1970; J. D. M. Derrett, "Peter's Penny," Law in the New Testament, 1970, 247–65; W. S. McCullough, "Fish," IDB II 272 f.; J. A. Thompson, "Fish, Fishing," NBD 424 f.; C. U. Wolf, "Fishing," IDB II 273 f.

Flesh

σάρξ

σάρξ (sarx), flesh; σάρκινος (sarkinos) consisting of flesh, fleshly; σαρκικός (sarkikos), after the manner of the flesh, belonging to the domain of the flesh, fleshly; κρέας (kreas), flesh, meat.

CL sarx, in Homer nearly always in the plur. (the only exception is in Od., 19, 450), means the flesh of a man as distinct from his bones, sinews etc. From Hesiod onwards it means also the flesh of an animal, and in a wider development (also used now in the sing.) the flesh of fishes and small animals, as well as of fruits. The → body (sōma) consists of bones, blood, sinews, flesh and skin (Plato, Phaedr., 98 c.d); or of hair, flesh, bones (Symp., 207d). Occasionally sarx denotes the whole physical body which can be old (sarki palaia, Aesch., Ag., 72) or young. A typical expression is hai sarkes kenai phrenōn (Eur., El., 387), by which men are meant who are without understanding and so mere flesh.

Transitoriness is a particularly characteristic mark of sarx. When vital energy (psychē → soul) and desire (thymos) pass away, flesh and bones disappear (Od., 11, 219–222). Unlike men and animals, the gods have no sarx, but are nous (mind), epistēmē (insight), logos (→ word, reason) (Epict., Diss., 118, 2). Accordingly, man's imperishable nature is increasingly contrasted with his perishable flesh. The onkos sarkōn (body of flesh), which is buried, is not our own real being (Plato, Leg., 959c; cf. "the strange garment of the flesh", Emp., Frag., 126). Epicurus, however, gave a new turn to this idea. Disappearance is only a dispersion of atoms; but this does not leave behind it any remainder. Accordingly, the start and root of all good is well-being, the hēdonē (→ desire) of the belly (Frag. 409). When flesh cries out, "Do not hunger, do not freeze, do not thirst", the soul heeds this reminder (Frag. 200). Since the dianoia (understanding) knows the end and limit of the sarx, Epicurus certainly does not invite men to a life of luxury, but on the contrary to one that is utterly controlled and temperate. For not only present but also future hēdonē is essential to good fortune (Frag. 68).

These ideas were much debased and popularized in a form that was depicted as favour of evil desire, especially by their opponents of the Platonic school. According to them, the cravings and lusts of the body defile the → soul which has a share in the divine. Epicurus was obliged to defend himself against the imputation of approving appetite, bodily desire, fornication, and intemperance (Frag. 414). The anti-Epicurean polemic was widely spread in Hellenism and it penetrated deeply into Judaism.

OT The Hebrew equivalents of sarx (LXX) are bāśār and šᵉ'ēr; bāśār is by far the more frequent (266 times against 17 times). kreas also renders bāśār some 50 times, denoting mostly flesh as an item of food. sarx has a wider meaning. It can even denote humanity (Isa. 40:5 f.).

1. (a) bāśār denotes flesh as the food of men (1 Sam. 2:13, 15; the flesh of quails, Num. 11:33; of swine, Deut. 14:8; of cows, Gen. 41:2). Flesh and wine are food for good times (Dan. 10:3). → Animal, → Bird.

(b) Likewise, bāśār also denotes human flesh. God took one of the ribs of the man and closed up its place with flesh (Gen. 2:21). Daniel and his friends remained, in spite of a reduced diet, bᵉrî'ē bāśār, "fatter in flesh", and therefore in good bodily condition (Dan. 1:15).

Ezek. 37:6, 8 mentions together sinews, flesh, skin and → spirit (rûaḥ), and Job 10:11 skin, flesh, bones, sinews. In a specific sense the penis is called the naked flesh (Exod. 28:42), the flesh of the foreskin (Gen. 17:11 ff.; Lev. 12:3), and also simply flesh (Lev. 15:2 f. [LXX sōma]; Ezek. 16:26; 23:20; 44:7, 9).

(c) bāśār can also denote the human body in its entirety, specifying the part for the whole. "Ahab . . . rent his clothes, put sack-cloth upon his flesh and fasted" (1 Ki. 21:27). When in deep sleep a word from Yahweh is heard, the hair of the flesh stands up (Job 4:15). The flesh is, however, not merely the body but the whole, man as a person. "O God, thou art my God, I seek thee, my soul thirsts for thee my flesh longs for thee" (Ps. 63:2; cf. 54:3). Here the flesh denotes man's own self. ([Ed.] Job 19:25 f. declares: "For I know that my Redeemer lives, and at last he will stand upon the earth; and after my skin has thus been destroyed, then without (mg. from) my flesh (Heb. mibbᵉśārî) I shall see God." The natural reading of the grammar would suggest that "from" would be the more likely translation, but many commentators are reluctant to ascribe to Job belief in resurrection or life after death. See further H. H. Rowley, Job, 1970, 172 ff. Whilst recognizing the textual and grammatical difficulties of the verse and the fact that many commentators see in it a hope for vindication in this life, Rowley is inclined to see here a hope for vindication after death in view of the fact that in the preceding verses Job sees no hope of vindication in the present life.)

(d) The self does not stand alone, however. A relative is "my bone and my flesh" (Gen. 29:14). Accordingly, Gen. 2:23 means: woman is for man, as it were, the place in the world where he is at home. Her intimate relationship creates his home. A brother is "our flesh" (Gen. 37:27). Still more comprehensively all flesh means all mankind. "If he should take back his spirit . . . all flesh would perish together and man would return to dust" (Job 34:15; cf. Ps. 56:6, 12). Similarly, "all flesh" means "everyone" "All flesh shall come to worship, says Yahweh" (Isa. 66:23). Finally the phrase can include humanity and the animal world as in Gen. 6:17 ff.; 9:11 f.

(e) From the meanings that have been adduced it is already clear that, although the obvious starting point is the same for the OT and Gk. literature, the anthropological consequences differ. In the OT flesh denotes man as a whole; man is flesh in his essence. According to the Gk. conception, on the other hand, man has flesh but is not flesh. This holds good also for Epicurus, who understood the needs of the flesh as the actual reality which must by all means be satisfied. For dianoia (discernment) is necessary, so that future good fortune be not sacrificed to present super-abundance. The raptures of the soul, just as its griefs, are greater than those of the flesh (Frag. 445; Diog. Laert., 10, 137).

The same distinction shows itself in the understanding of transitoriness. In the OT the flesh denotes man in his transitoriness as one who suffers sickness, death, fright etc. It is not his desire as such, which is rather expressed by other terms, such as heart (Gen. 8:21). Thus Isaiah says: "All flesh is grass, and all its beauty is like the flower of the field. The grass withers, the flower fades" (Isa. 40:6, 8). Sennacherib's Assyrian horde is called "an arm of flesh", which is puny compared with God (2 Chr. 32:8). God "remembered that they (Israel) were but flesh – a wind that does not return." Therefore he forgave their iniquity (Ps. 78:39). On the other hand, Jer. 17:5 declares: "Cursed is the man who trusts in man and makes flesh his arm, whose heart turns away from Yahweh."

2. šᵉʾēr (Accad. šîru flesh, body; Phoen. šʾr flesh) seems to be the more ancient word and means: flesh to eat (Exod. 2:10; Ps. 78:20, 27); human flesh (Mic. 3:2 f.; Jer. 51:34 f.); a blood relation (Lev. 18:6; 20:19; 25:49; Num. 27:11; in LXX oikeios or oikeia, related person, kin). For the sake of its meaning Ps. 73:26 may be mentioned: "My flesh and my heart may fail [i.e. if I pass away; cf. Prov. 5:11], but God is the rock of my heart and my portion for ever."

3. Judaism in its various forms closely connected man's carnality with his sin, but without interpreting the flesh as the actual cause of sin. It referred to OT statements which describe dependence on the flesh not merely as folly but also as sin (Isa. 31:3). "All flesh" is mankind, and to strive after evil is inherent in man (Gen. 8:21). There must then be a relation between the flesh and dependence on the flesh.

(a) The Qumran teaching that man "is in iniquity from the womb" (1QH 4:30) fully accords with the OT (Ps. 51:5). But in 1QS 11:12 the elect one speaks otherwise about himself: "If I stagger because of the sin of flesh my justification shall be by the righteousness of God which endures for ever." This probably means that man, in so far as he is merely flesh, belongs to the community of wickedness. For a little earlier (11:9) it is said, "I belong to wicked mankind, to the company of ungodly flesh." And in 1QH 15:16 f.: "Thou alone didst create the just . . . thou wilt raise up his glory from among flesh; but the wicked thou didst create for the time of thy wrath." The righteous man thus receives his life (righteousness) from God; it is no longer derived from the flesh. The counterpart to flesh is not, however, → spirit. For side by side with the spirit of holiness there is also found the spirit of wickedness and of the flesh (1QS 4:20 f.; 1QH 13:13 f.). It is always God or his justifying righteousness that stands over against the flesh.

(b) Rab. usage shows two characteristic departures from the OT. Man in his transitoriness is now called "flesh and blood" (instanced for the first time in Sir. 14:18). Even more important is the frequent replacement of the OT bāśār by gûp (originally perhaps "cavity", Arab. ǧauf, cf. on this TDNT VII, 116). Behind this there doubtless stands a new anthropological conception of the body as a vessel which at any time can be possessed by a different spirit. In this way the body is not devalued, since in the final judgment God will fetch the soul and place it in the body and judge the two together (Sanh. 91a). But the body no longer denotes man as a whole. "All creatures which are made from heaven derive their soul and body from heaven, and all creatures which are made from the earth derive their soul and body from the earth. Man is the sole exception: his soul is derived from heaven, his body from the earth. If then man obeys the law and does the will of the heavenly Father, then he is as the higher creatures . . . but if he does not fulfil the law and do the will of the heavenly Father, then he is as the lower creatures" (Siphre Deut. 305, 233, 2). A Hel. oriental influence is to be found here. But beside it, the OT usage may still be found (cf. SB I 581).

(c) Hel. Judaism showed its peculiarity in two characteristic alterations made in the LXX as compared with the MT. In Ezek. 10:22 it does not speak of the flesh of the cherubim, and in Num. 16:22; 27:16 it translates the Heb. phrase "God of the spirits (rûḥôṯ) of all flesh" by theos tōn pneumatōn kai pasēs sarkos, "Lord of the spirits and of all flesh". Here, as in Rab. Judaism, there is a considerable separation of heaven and earth. But for the rest, the appraisal of flesh is quite different. According to Eth. En. 17:6, Hades is the place whither no flesh goes. According to Paralipomena Jeremiae 6:6, the sarx will have incorruptibility. In the Apocalypse of Elias 35:7 f.; 42:12 f. it is said that the physical flesh is discarded but that a spiritual flesh (sarkes pneumatos) is put on, whilst according to Life of Adam 43:4 and 2 Esd. 7:78, 100, the soul in death detaches itself from the body.

Statements inclining in the direction of cosmological dualism are found in Philo. For him God is a being without flesh or body. Accordingly, he can be perceived only by a soul that is without flesh or body (Deus Imm. 52–56). For the soul the body (the flesh) is a burden, servitude, a coffin and an urn. Freedom from the flesh through asceticism is thus important, for otherwise the soul is hampered in its upward flight. Guilt begins with the soul's steadfast continuance in the flesh (cf. Leg. All. 3, 152). Philo is correspondingly aware that the soul has aloga pathē, passions that war with reason, and beget evil when it is overcome by the flesh (Deus Imm. 52). For the body with its passions incites men to commit sin. On the other hand, it remains conceivable that the onkos sarkinos, fleshly body, may be taken into service as sandals under the feet (Sacr. 63).

NT Just as in Hel. Judaism, the different authors of the NT vary in their appraisal of the flesh. The division can be shown statistically. 91 of the 147 instances of sarx are found in the Pauline writings, above all in Rom. and Gal. The adjectives sarkikos (7 times) and sarkinos (6 times) also occur only in Rom. and 1 and 2 Cor., apart from one exception each in Heb. and 1 Pet. In the non-Pauline writings the occurrences are few in comparison. In Jn. the noun is found only 13 times (in Rev. and 1 Pet. 7 times, elsewhere only sporadically). kreas occurs in the NT only twice in Paul in the sense of flesh as an item of food.

1. Paul uses sarx so frequently that only the most essential passages for its understanding can be discussed.

(a) As mere flesh (of men, → animals, → birds, → fishes), sarx occurs only in 1 Cor. 15:39. Occasionally it denotes the human body (as in 2 Cor. 12:7, a thorn in the flesh probably means sickness (cf. Arndt, 763 f.); Gal. 4:13, infirmity of the flesh, probably again sickness; Gal. 4:14, my flesh means Paul's sick body). But it also denotes man generally. According to 2 Cor. 7:5, "our flesh" (= we) had no rest because there were fightings without and fears within (about the stability of the church). In marriage the flesh suffers troubles (1 Cor. 7:28), because now it is the last time and persecutions threaten (1 Cor. 7:29 ff.). When Paul says that before he began to preach the gospel he did not confer with flesh and blood (Gal. 1:16), he means he did not confer with men. If flesh and blood will not inherit the kingdom of God (1 Cor. 15:50), it means that, according to OT anthropology (Prov. 5:11), in death the whole man must disappear and a new sōma come into existence (→ Body).

(b) sarx also denotes relationships which have a merely temporary significance. Thus according to the flesh, Jesus is a son of David (Rom. 1:3), but only from the resurrection onwards is his divine sonship manifest according to the spirit of holiness (Rom. 1:4). "Israel after the flesh" (1 Cor. 10:18) is the whole people descended from the patriarch (Rom. 4:1; cf. 11:14). From him Paul's brethren are descended, his kinsmen according to the flesh (Rom. 9:3; cf. "near of kin", šᵉʾēr bᵉśārô, flesh relation, Lev. 18:6). From him comes the Messiah (Rom. 9:5, 8). sarx means common humanity in Phlm. 16, when Paul says that the slave Onesimus is Philemon's brother "both in the flesh and in the Lord". But Paul uses "all flesh" for "mankind" only in the fundamental expression of his theology, "All flesh cannot [i.e. no flesh can] boast before God" (Rom. 3:20; cf. Gal. 2:16; 1 Cor. 1:29).

(c) sarx is used not only to indicate physical kinship; it can be used also generally in reference to what is human. Thus "the wise after the flesh" are the wise according to human standards (1 Cor. 1:16; cf. 2:6, "wisdom of this age"). The weapons which Paul uses in his campaign are no longer of human invention, but are made effectual by God (2 Cor. 10:4). In contrast to him stand those who wish to make themselves agreeable to the church by human means (Gal. 6:12), so that in human ways they might be able to glory in the → circumcision of a Christian → church (v. 13). But the circumcised, like the uncircumcised, stand under the condemnation that they fall short of the glory of God. Paul might have every reason to glory in descent, in circumcision, in zeal for the law. But that would be to have confidence in a human reckoning (the flesh) which does not count with God (Phil. 3:3 f.). For with God only the → righteousness of Christ, received by faith, is of any consequence (vv. 8–11).

(d) This leads to the use of the phrase kata sarka, according to the flesh. Even though Paul lived as a man "in the flesh", he did not carry on his fight in the light of human considerations ("after the flesh" 2 Cor. 10:2 f.; cf. 1:17). This principle applies even to seemingly "religious" matters. To glory in visions is as foolish as to glory in circumcision (2 Cor. 11:18), and even Jesus Christ himself must be seen with new eyes rather than simply in accordance with old pre-Christian expectations and values: "even though we once regarded Christ from a human point of view (kata sarka) we regard him thus no longer" (2 Cor. 5:16, RSV). Similarly, the Christian is no longer in the grip of the self-centred, self-justifying standards of secular man. He → walks "not according to the flesh (kata sarka) but according to the Spirit (kata pneuma)" (Rom. 8:4). Thus the new life in the Spirit is paralleled by a renunciation in principle of human efforts at self-justification.

(e) The flesh, i.e. man's existence apart from God, has therefore a drive that is opposed to God. It not only occasions sin but also becomes entangled in it.

Accordingly, Paul can draw up a catalogue of vices which he characterizes as "works of the flesh" or "desires of the flesh" (Gal. 5:16, 19; cf. Rom. 13:14). Above all, in Gal. 5:17 he is able to say, "The desires of the flesh are against the Spirit and the desires of the Spirit are against the flesh, for these are opposed to each other to prevent you from doing what you would." This is not the flesh of the anti-Epicurean polemic, but man himself, in so far as he gives himself up to his own aims in opposition to God's. Hence, the → law also is weak through the flesh, because it can be used by it as a means of self-assertion against God (Rom. 8:3). Therefore, God sent his Son in the likeness of a human being determined by sin that in this most Godlike of all men he might bring sin (self-justification before God on the basis of human achievements) into judgment, so that after his death only God's achievement might remain. The believer is thus already dead in respect to the ambitions and drives that mould life apart from God. In this sense he is no longer in the flesh (Rom. 8:8 f.). Moreover, he now lives according to God's life; "for I know that nothing good dwells within me, that is in my flesh" (Rom. 7:18). For man, indeed, desires to achieve what is good, i.e. the true life. But actually he achieves the evil which he does not desire, namely death, because he does not allow God to care for him, but desires to care for himself. "So then, I of myself, serve the law of God with my mind (noï), but with my flesh (in actuality) I serve the law of sin" (Rom. 7:25b). Though Paul adopts here a typically Gk. manner of speaking, his understanding of man is completely different. Even the nous, the rational power of mental comprehension, is unable to find out what is good, since the true meaning of life remains hidden from it by sin.

(f) On the one hand, Paul can say that the believer no longer lives in the flesh (Rom. 7:5; 8:8 f.; Gal. 5:24). But on the other hand, as a believer, Paul still lives in the flesh (2 Cor. 10:3; Gal. 2:20; Phil. 1:22–24). The contradiction is resolved in Phil. 1:22–24. To be in the flesh is for him something that has been so vanquished, that for him it is all one whether he lives or dies. Life is to exist in and for Christ, and no longer by one's own abilities. Even death, as departure and being with Christ, is much better. But for the sake of the future of the kingdom of God it is more important for him to remain in the flesh.

In the combination sōma tēs sarkos Col. seems to show considerable Hel. influence. sarx is here the material of which the body (sōma) is composed (1:22; 2:11). In the Qumran texts the corresponding Heb. phrase gᵉwiyyaṭ bᵉśārô means "physical body" (1Qp Hab. 9:2). Hence, "the uncircumcision of the flesh" in 2:13 means the time before the putting off in baptism of the body of the flesh (2:11). sarx is not corporality but the understanding of oneself as flesh. Its meaning is shown in 2:18. "The mind of the flesh" or "sensuous mind" (RSV), Gk. nous tēs sarkos, is preoccupied with angelic powers to whom as sarx man seems to be in subjection. But the believer holds fast to the head (2:18), in whom the whole fullness of deity dwells bodily (2:9). Thus, living in the flesh, he is not in subjection to these powers, but in his flesh he already shares in the life of Christ (1:24).

Eph. pursues a related thought. In its desires the flesh is open to the powers and influences of this world, which themselves are not flesh and blood (2:2 f.; 6:12). In 2:11 f. sarx appears as what is temporary. The wall of partition that existed between circumcision in the flesh and uncircumcision in the flesh Jesus broke down by his death in the flesh, abolishing the law of commandments and ordinances.

([Ed.] Flesh in the passage in 1 Tim. 3:16 which appears to be an early credal formulary means human life: "Great indeed, we confess, is the mystery of our religion: He was manifested in the flesh, vindicated in the Spirit, seen by angels, preached among the nations, believed on in the world, taken up in glory.")

2. (a) The non-Pauline uses of sarx are, as might be expected, quite different. From the OT heritage comes Matt. 16:17, where flesh and blood, i.e. men, are contrasted with God. The same holds good for Acts 2:31 (cf. Ps. 16:10). Christ was not left in Hades and his flesh did not see corruption, for here "flesh", being parallel to Christ, stands for the whole man. In Lk. 24:39 the Risen One makes it known that he is not a spirit because he has flesh and bones (the expression "to have flesh and bones" appears to be Hellenistic). The saying in Mk. 14:38 that "the spirit is willing but the flesh is weak" is not an OT quotation, and is thought by some to be Pauline or to come from Hel. Wisdom literature. But V. Taylor sees it anticipated by Num. 27:16; Isa. 31:3 (The Gospel according to St. Mark, 1952, 555). On the other hand, Jude 7 refers to the unnatural lust of the men of Sodom and Gomorrah (Gen. 19) which anticipates contemporary perversions. In 2 Pet. 2:10 there is the more Heb. thought, that one should not in any way hanker after the flesh, because such hankering brings defilement.

In the same way 1 Pet. 2:11 speaks of the fleshly (sarkikos) desires which wage war against the soul. Christ has suffered in his flesh. Only the man who suffers in the flesh in the same spirit as Christ is free from sin (4:1–3) and escapes the depravities of the flesh (4:4 f.). On the other hand, Christ was indeed put to death in the flesh, but he was made alive in the spirit (3:18). Accordingly, one interpretation of 1 Pet. 4:6 declares that the gospel was preached to the dead so that like all men in the flesh, they might receive their sentence. In their case, since they were already dead, this has already come about. But, behind this there is the intention that they might live according to the will of God in the spirit. Hence baptism also serves not for the cleansing of the flesh, but for that of the spirit in a good conscience (3:21). ([Ed.] Alternative interpretations of 1 Pet. 4:6 suggest that it refers to the proclamation of the gospel by the preincarnate Christ to men in OT times which might also be related to 1 Pet. 3:20 (cf. 1 Cor. 10:4), or that it refers simply to those in the present age who have received the gospel and since died. The verse would then mean that, although they share the common destiny of sinful mankind in death, nevertheless they live now in the spirit. On Christ's "descent into hell" see E. G. Selwyn, The First Epistle of St. Peter, 1947², 313-62; J. N. D. Kelly, Early Christian Creeds, 1972², 378-88; and A Commentary on the Epistles of Peter and Jude; W. J. Dalton, Christ's Proclamation to the Spirits, 1965).

Heb. makes use of flesh as the human nature which Christ assumed. Christ for a while was made lower than the angels and so shared in flesh and blood (2:14). These were "the days of his flesh" (5:7). Through his flesh he made for us a way into the heavenly sanctuary; for the sphere of flesh is the curtain which separates us from it, and by death Jesus passed through it (10:20). He cleanses the conscience, and not just the flesh as do the offerings of rams and bulls (9:13 f.). The dikaiōmata sarkos (regulations for the flesh, 9:10) are therefore statutes for the purification of the flesh.

sarkinos (Heb. 7:16) refers to the physical descent of the Levitical priesthood as contrasted with the priesthood of Melchizedek and Christ.

sarx mia (Matt. 19:5b) has a special significance as the translation of the Hebrew bāśār 'eḥāḏ (one flesh) of Gen. 2:24. The union of man and woman (→ Marriage) creates a new relationship. "One flesh" does not in the first instance mean sexual intercourse, though it includes it. It signifies the coming into being of a unitary existence, a complete partnership of man and woman which cannot be broken up without damage to the partners in it. That does not mean that every marriage is automatically such a complete partnership. Rather, this complete partnership is the promise of marriage which should be claimed. It is the meaning of marriage granted by God (19:6). This phrase serves to show the positive character of marriage for mankind rather than deny the possibility of divorce by state law.

(b) In many respects, John appears to stand near to the OT. He speaks of "all flesh" in the OT sense (17:2; but cf. also Matt. 24:22). The declaration that men should not judge Jesus according to the flesh (8:15), "by appearances" (7:24) is in accord with Matt. 16:17. One should judge him not by his human circumstances but by his mission. For that which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the spirit is spirit (3:6). That which is born of the flesh comes from itself or from the world, but that which is born of the Spirit is a completely new humanity in so far as it comes from God (1:13). It is not surprising, therefore, that the flesh profits nothing. It is the spirit indeed that gives life (6:36). Men cannot comprehend Jesus on a merely human level. But they may do so by seeing him return to where he was before (6:62), and receiving his words which are "spirit and life".

But alongside all this, there is another fact for Jn.: the Word, which was theos and was in the beginning with God, became flesh (1:14). The world closes its mind to the → Word. The latter is not merely a communication of divine truth as in gnosticism. The entry of the Word as flesh among all flesh reveals how estranged it is from the Word and so from the true life, which it does not have. Jn. 6:51–58 should be understood against this background. If the believer eats the flesh of the Revealer, he confesses not merely that only the coming of the Word in the flesh can redeem him (so TDNT VII 139 f.). He also confesses that there is nothing in the flesh (i.e. the world) to help. In receiving the incarnate Word he is in the world as one who is not of the world.

In the Johannine Epistles the confession that Jesus is come in the flesh separates belief from unbelief (1 Jn. 4:2; 2 Jn. 7). John's opponents no longer wished to associate the Revealer with the flesh that they had rejected. Moreover, it asserts the historicity of the incarnation. A typically Hel. note is struck when in 1 Jn. 2:16 the desire of the flesh is spoken of as parallel with the desire of the eyes. H. Seebass

Since the meaning of sarx varies radically from context to context, several distinct points must be made about the hermeneutics of the term.

1. In some contexts, especially in the OT, sarx calls attention to man's creatureliness and frailty; to the fact that he is fragile, fallible, and vulnerable. Thus "all flesh is grass, and its glory is like the flower of the grass. The grass withers, the flower fades" (Isa. 40:6–8; cf. 1 Pet. 1:24). However promising and flourishing it appears at first sight, it holds out no certain promise of being able to withstand pressures which are brought against it. Like the grass before the winds, man is vulnerable to forces which threaten him, whether these are physical, psychological, or spiritual in form. Physically, a relatively small change in the atmosphere or in the cells of the brain deprives him of that optimum margin of conditions which are necessary for his life. Psychologically, man is at the mercy of pressures which can arise from loneliness, loss of self-respect, fantasies of his own making, or the need to adjust to the verdicts of the crowd or to a "normal" environment. Spiritually, he may have to wrestle with forces which are more than mere "flesh and blood" (Eph. 6:12; cf. 2 Cor. 10:3).

The biblical writers draw at least four distinct lessons from this basic datum of man's weakness and frailty. (a) They give a warning against any false hope and consequent disillusionment brought about by putting undue confidence and trust in man as a fallible and frail creature (Jer. 17:5; cf. Phil. 3:3 f. discussed below). Further, as against a false type of "enthusiasm," Paul warns us that even Christians remain fallible, since believers still live "in the flesh" (Gal. 2:20; 2 Cor. 10:3, on which see especially R. Jewett, Paul's Anthropological Terms, 1971, 129; Phil. 1:23; cf. 1 Cor. 3:1–3). (The apparent contradictions of Rom. 7:5 and 8:9 arise only because these uses of flesh belong under 4(a) below; see also above NT 1 (f).) (b) The Bible also calls attention to man's creatureliness before God, and distance from him in his otherness and transcendence (Gen. 6:3; Job 10:4; Dan. 2:11; 1QpHab. 4:29). As "flesh and blood", man has no natural right to the kingdom of God (1 Cor. 15:50), and stands in need of the Holy Spirit (Jn. 3:6; 6:63). (c) In at least one passage man's very weakness is a ground of God's loving compassion and restraining patience: "he restrained his anger . . . he remembered that they were but flesh" (Ps. 78:38, 39). (d) In times of oppression or persecution, the believer is encouraged not to fear an enemy who is mere flesh: "with him is an arm of flesh, but with us is the Lord our God" (2 Chr. 32:8); "in God I trust without fear; what can flesh do to me?" (Ps. 56:4; cf. Isa. 31:3).

2. In other contexts sarx is used quite simply to denote the physical part of man, and does not offer an evaluation of man as a whole. "Infirmity of the flesh" (Gal. 4:13) is physical illness; and flesh in 1 Cor. 15:39 means the physical substance appropriate to a given physical environment. The NT asserts the importance of the physical as over against ideas which later developed into gnosticism. (a) Especially in Johannine thought this relates to the incarnation: "the word became flesh" (Jn. 1:14; cf. 6:51–56); the test of whether a spirit is of God hinges on the confession "that Jesus Christ has come in the flesh" (1 Jn. 4:2, cf. 2 Jn. 7). God's spoken word was not merely an inner or psychological reality. Word and deed became one and mutually interpreting, and God entered upon the stage of history in the costliness of an act which involved physical consequences. Thus other NT writings besides John stress that Christ suffered "in the flesh" (1 Pet. 4:1), or that God was "manifested in the flesh" (1 Tim. 3:16; cf. Lk. 24:39; Rom. 8:3; Eph. 2:15; Heb. 5:7).

(b) Similarly the physical nature of sarx has positive significance in terms of the bodily obedience of the Christian. Paul is far from endorsing the verdict of Seneca, his contemporary, that the flesh is "useless" (Epistulae Morales 92:10, cf. 65:22). The life of Jesus is to be manifested "in our mortal flesh" (2 Cor. 4:11). Here Paul's use of flesh overlaps with that of sōma, body (2 Cor. 4:10). The believer still lives "in" the flesh (en sarki) although not "according to" the flesh (2 Cor. 10:3). To remain in the flesh is necessary (Phil. 1:24) and of positive value (Col. 1:24). For the fact that man has physical existence as part of the physical world brings home to him his responsibility for his thoughts and actions in terms of visible and tangible consequences. Physical flesh is the raw material which reveals good or bad thoughts and attitudes for what they are, so that belief involves commitment to action and can never be a merely inner or private affair which has no consequences for the individual. What a man chooses to do with his one life becomes indelibly clear, and has permanent repercussions both on himself and on others with whom he interacts.

3. To assess a truth or a phenomenon "in accordance with the flesh" (kata sarka or kata tēn sarka) is to reach a verdict on the basis of purely human, external, or natural considerations. [See above, NT 1 (b)–(d).] It is an assessment which leaves spiritual dimensions out of account. Thus Paul admits that very few of the Corinthian congregation are wise in the "ordinary" sense of the term (1 Cor. 1:26). Jesus warns the Pharisees that they are almost certain to misunderstand him, because they judge his testimony in purely human terms alone (Jn. 8:15). It is parallel to judging "by appearances" only (kat' opsin, Jn. 7:24). Paul insists that it is both wrong and misleading to judge either the person of Jesus Christ or even a fellow Christian in purely human terms (2 Cor. 5:16), for this viewpoint leaves out of account the fact that a Christian is God's new creation (5:17). Yet judgment "according to the flesh" is not always wrong or irrelevant. Whatever their spiritual relationship, slaves have those who are their masters on an ordinary human level (Col. 3:22).

It is important to note that Paul is not contrasting some "gnostic" means of insight as over against rational thought. For "mind" (nous) and rational argument have a prominent and often positive place in his epistles. The point is, rather, that to understand truths relating to God and his dealings with men, man who is flesh needs the Holy Spirit and a frame of reference instructed by Scripture (1 Cor. 2:10–16; 15:3). The same phenomenon can be seen from different viewpoints, and the viewpoint "according to the flesh" is limited so radically that in many cases it can lead to misunderstanding and error. Nevertheless, what is seen from such a viewpoint is not necessarily dismissed as irrelevant in every single case. Its relevance depends on what is under consideration. This explains why the tone of 1 Cor. 1:26 and Col. 3:22 is so different from that of Jn. 8:15 and 2 Cor. 5:16.

4. A quite different use of sarx appears in the major theological passages in Paul such as Rom. 8:5–8, which concludes, "those who are in the flesh cannot please God". In this passage the mental outlook of the flesh (to phronēma tēs sarkos) is hostile to God. "Flesh" here evaluates man as a sinner before God. The outlook of the flesh is the outlook orientated towards the self, that which pursues its own ends in self-sufficient independence of God.

(a) It is most striking, as R. Bultmann and R. Jewett have rightly pointed out, that Paul explicitly speaks of the "fleshly" outlook in connection with the law and circumcision. The fleshly mind in Gal. above all implies "shifting one's boasting from the cross of Christ (Gal. 6:14) to the circumcised flesh (6:13)" (R. Jewett, op. cit., 95). It represents the desire to secure one's righteousness independently of God's grace in Christ by means of the law. Thus in Jewett's words, "sarx for Paul is not rooted in sensuality but rather in religious rebellion in the form of self-righteousness" (p. 114). As Bultmann expresses it, flesh represents "trust in oneself as being able to procure life . . . through one's own strength and accomplishment" (Theology of the NT, I 1952, 239) Thus Paul's crucial question, "Having begun with the Spirit, are you now ending with the flesh?" (Gal. 3:3) clearly refers to reliance on obedience to the law rather than on God's grace in Christ. This is precisely the issue also in Phil. 3:3–7, where Paul explains his language about "confidence in the flesh" with reference not just to physical descent but also to "righteousness under the law" (3:6). To be found in Christ, rather than trusting in the flesh, is "not having a righteousness of my own based on law" (3:9). Similarly, Rom. 8:5–9, 12, 13 is closely parallel to the main point in Gal. 3 and 4. The mental outlook of the flesh is both hostile to God and also incapable of genuine obedience to the law (Rom. 8:7). For the very desire to use the law as a means of justification before God makes obedience for its own sake impossible. That is why to live in accordance with the flesh is incompatible with living according to the Holy Spirit (8:4, 5, 9). Fleshly man puts himself at the centre, trusting in his own ability to secure life even, if need be, by cultivating "religion". Man under the Spirit casts himself on God as his father (8:15; cf. Gal. 4:6), abandoning all self-reliance, in complete dependence on God.

(b) At the same time, sarx admittedly also characterizes man as a sinner in his rejection of the law [see above NT 1 (e)]. The "works" of the flesh include immorality, licentiousness, idolatry, enmity, strife, and anger (Gal. 5:19–21). The criterion which establishes that the Corinthian Christians are still "fleshly" is the continued presence of jealousy and strife within their community (1 Cor. 3:3, 4). In contrast to the use of sarx discussed under heading 1, the point about "flesh" in Gal. 5:19–21 is not that it weakens man's will to do the good, but that it lures him to substitute his own good for God's. Jewett believes that the meaning here is almost the same as in (a) above, namely that both legalism and lawlessness are "fleshly" in so far as they both hold out a false promise of life on the basis of man's own efforts. Thus jealousy, for example, is a by-product of seeking life in popularity; ill-temper arises from frustration in seeking life in comfort and quiet. But it may well be that Jewett sees a closer connection than is actually there. sarx functions as a polymorphous concept, the actual content of which varies from case to case. Sometimes it may be used simply as a general value-judgment of disapproval, just as the term "spiritual", to which "fleshly" stands in opposition, may also function as a term of approval, the content of which needs to be defined in a given case (cf. A. C. Thiselton in SJT 26, 1973, 204–28). The nearest that we can go towards finding a "general" meaning for this particular category is to say that fleshly life is life lived in pursuit of one's own ends, in independence of God or of the law of God, in contrast to living in accordance with the direction of the Holy Spirit. This can take as many different concrete forms as being "selfish" or "self-centred".

(c) In at least two passages Paul outlines the close relationship between flesh and death: "if you live according to the flesh you will die" (Rom. 8:13); "he who sows to the flesh will from the flesh reap corruption (phthoran)" (Gal. 6:8). Here death is the inevitable fruit that grows out of a fleshly way of living. At this point, if not at others, the existentialist interpretation of the NT becomes relevant and convincing. If man is simply what he makes of himself (man as sarx), he lives in a world of vanishing possibilities. Each decision that he makes about his own life limits the future possibilities which are still left open to him; he is moulded and restricted by the fruits of his own decisions. By contrast, the Spirit in the NT enables a man to go beyond what his own past has made him, giving him new desires, new capacities, new horizons. If "life" is understood in the dynamic sense which it often has in the Biblical writings, to live according to the flesh is to travel into the cul-de-sac which ends in death; to live according to the Spirit is to enter life. A. C. Thiselton

→ Body, → Heart, → Soul, → Marriage, → Spirit

(a). W. Barclay, Flesh and Spirit, 1962; R. Batey, "The mia sarx Union of Christ and the Church," NTS 13, 1966–7, 270–81; R. Bultmann, Theology of the New Testament, I, 1952, 232–46; E. De Witt Burton, Spirit, Soul and Flesh, 1918: W. D. Davies, "Paul and the Dead Sea Scrolls: Flesh and Spirit," in K. Stendahl, ed., The Scrolls and the New Testament, 1957, 157–82; J. Jeremias, "Flesh and Blood Cannot Inherit the Kingdom of God," NTS 2, 1955–56, 151–59; R. Jewett, Paul's Anthropological Terms, 1971; W. G. Kümmel, Man in the New Testament, 1963; W. Mork, The Biblical Meaning of Man, 1967, 19–32, 146–50; R. E. Murphy, "Bsr in the Qumran Literature and Sarx in the Epistle to the Romans," Sacra Pagina 2, 1959, 60–76; J. A. T. Robinson, The Body, 1952, 11–33; J. P. Sampley, 'And the Two Shall Become One Flesh': A Study of the Traditions in Ephesians 5:21–33, 1971; E. Schweizer, sarx, sarkikos, sarkinos, TDNT VII 98–151; C. Ryder Smith, The Biblical Doctrine of Man, 1951, 153–65; W. D. Stacey, The Pauline View of Man, 1956, 92 f., 154–80; A. C. Thiselton, "The Meaning of Sarx in 1 Cor. 5:5: A Fresh Approach in the Light of Logical and Semantic Factors," SJT 26, 1973, 204–28.

(b). E. Brandenburger, Fleisch und Geist. Paulus und die dualistische Weisheit, 1968; J. Fichtner and E. Schweizer, "Fleisch und Geist", *RGG*³ II 974 ff.; W. Gutbrod, Die paulinische Anthropologie, 1934; H. W. Huppenbauer, "Fleisch in den Texten von Qumran," ThZ 13, 1957, 298 ff.; E. Käsemann, Leib und Leib Christi, 1933, 100–118; N. Krautwik, "Der Leib im Kampf des 'pneuma' wider die 'sarx'," Theologie und Glaube 39, 1949; K. G. Kuhn, "peirasmos, hamartia, sarx im NT und die damit zusammenhängenden Vorstellungen," ZTK 49, 1952, 200 ff.; O. Kuss, Der Römerbrief, 1959, 506 ff.; N. P. Bratsiotis, Anthrōpologia tēs Palaias Diathēkēs, 1967; A. Sand, Der Begriff "Fleisch" in den paulinischen Hauptbriefen, 1967; W. Schauf, Sarx: Der Begriff "Fleisch" beim Apostel Paulus unter besonderer Berücksichtigung seiner Erlösungslehre, NTAbh 11, 1924; W. Schmidt, "Anthropologische Begriffe im Alten Testament," EvTh 24, 1964, 374 ff.; E. Schweizer, "Die hellenistische Komponente im neutestamentlichen sarx-Begriff," ZNW 48, 1957, 237 ff.

Flow

ῥέω

ῥέω (rheō), flow, stream; ῥύσις (rhysis), a flowing river, stream; παραρρέω (pararrheō), flow past, drift away, let slip.

CL Although words for "flow" commonly derive from words for "run", rheō is a notable exception: it reflects the Indo-European root sreu with the specific meaning "flow" (cf. Sanskrit sru). Frequently this root survives in its numerous non-verbal derivatives, the most important of which is rhysis.

Occurring widely from the time of Homer, the word group commonly refers to the flow of a stream or river; but it can be applied to the run-off from melted snow (Herodotus), the "running" of milk and honey, equivalent to prosperity (Theocritus), or, with respect to blood, a haemorrhage (Hippocrates, Dioscorides). Homer, Hesiod, and Aeschylus apply it to a stream of glib words; Homer to darts. A city or an area may stream with men (Herodotus, Euripides, Aristophanes) or gold (Herodotus). Solid objects liquefy and "melt away" (Sophocles) – even stone (Aristotle). Hence it is not surprising that the word group takes on the meaning of "fall", "drop off" – of hair (Homer, Hesiod, Theocritus), or ripe fruit (Polybius). An individual may be "given to" something, "inclined" to it (Isocrates, Plato): it is easy to imagine how such an idiom would develop.

OT The LXX reflects an equally wide variety of usage. The word group most often stands for Heb. zûḇ (flow, gush), especially as applied to the promised land which flows with milk and honey (Exod. 3:8; 13:5; Lev. 20:24; Num. 14:8; Deut. 6:3; 26:9; Jos. 5:6; Jer. 11:5; Bar. 1:20; etc.) or to some discharge or haemorrhage (notably in Lev. 15). Further, water flowed from the smitten rock (Ps. 77:20; 104:41; cf. Isa. 48:21, LXX with future tense). The Heb. word group next most likely to be represented by rheō is nāzal (and synonym rā'aṗ; trickle, drip), usually in connection with the descent of precipitation at the divine command (Job 36:28; 38:30; Ps. 147:18; Prov. 3:20; cf. Job 38·25), but also with the falling of tears (Jer. 9:18) and wafting by the wind of perfume (Cant. 4:16). Joel twice uses rheō to translate the diversely-used Heb. verb hālaḵ with reference to the flow of water and milk from Judea's hills when the Spirit of the Lord is poured out and blessings abound (3:18 bis). A more ominous use of the verb is made by Zechariah, who pictures flesh decaying and eyes "melting out" of their sockets, fitting retribution for those who war against Jerusalem (14:12; Heb. māqaq, fester, rot). Simile is invoked to liken the disappearance of the hope of ungrateful people to the "running away" of water and the melting of hoar frost. (Wis. 16:29). Men are warned not to trust in wealth even if it should "flow in" (Ps. 62:10; Heb. nûḇ, bear fruit).

Both Philo and Josephus utilize the word group with similar diversity, the latter applying it on one occasion to the stream of memory which "runs down" through the ages, recalling the noble sacrifice of Jeconiah (War 6, 105).

NT The verb rheō occurs but once in the NT: "from his innermost being shall flow rivers of living water" (Jn. 7:38). Some commentators run 7:37b and 7:38a into one sentence: "If any man is thirsty, let him come to me, and let the one who believes drink." In that case "his" innermost being refers to Christ, who alone provides "living" water (cf. Jn. 4:10). It is more likely correct to see a sentence division at the end of 7:37, making the believer the one from whose being the water (= Spirit) flows. The believer is thus viewed as a channel for the outflowing of the Spirit to others (cp. 15:26 f.).

The 3 NT occurrences of rhysis are all in connection with "flow of blood" = haemorrhage (Mk. 5:25 = Lk. 8:43 f.), endured by one woman for twelve years.

([F. F. Bruce] The compound pararrheō, lit. "flow past", is used figuratively in Heb. 2:1 with reference to "what we have heard" (i.e. the gospel), "lest we drift away from it" (RSV; cf. RV, NEB). AV, "lest . . . we should let them slip", follows another sense of the vb., e.g. of letting a ring slip off one's finger [Plut., Amatorius 754a].) D. A. Carson Arndt, 627, 742; W. K. Hobart, The Medical Language of St. Luke, 1882, 15 f.; Liddell-Scott, 1322 f., 1568; Moulton-Milligan, 489, 563.

Foreign, Alien, Dispersion, Stranger

Under this heading are grouped together various terms and ideas which have deep roots in the ancient world and particular significance in the OT and NT. The key terms discussed below are: allotrios (strange, alien, hostile), diaspora (dispersion), xenos (strange, an alien), parepidēmos (stranger, exile, sojourner), and paroikos (stranger, alien).

ἀλλότριος

ἀλλότριος (allotrios), adj., belonging to another, strange, alien, hostile; noun, a stranger; ἀλλοτριόω (allotrioō), estrange, alienate; ἀλλογενής (allogenēs), foreign; ἀλλόφυλος (allophylos), alien to the race, hence from a Jewish standpoint a Gentile, heathen.

CL allotrios (derived from allos, another, cf. Lat. alius) means another, strange, foreign, what belongs to another, alien to the people or the land, and hence unsuitable and even hostile. apallotrioō means to alienate, estrange, exclude. allogenēs is compounded from allos (another) and genos (race), and means foreign, strange. allophylos is compounded from allos and phylē (tribe), and means alien to the race, alien to the people, strange.

OT In the LXX, allotrios occurs frequently as a translation of Heb. nokrî, foreign, alien (Gen. 31:15; Deut. 14:21; 15:3; and often). It also occasionally translates zār, strange, foreign (Lev. 10:1; Deut. 32:16). But usually the LXX translates zār by allogenēs (Exod. 29:33; Num. 16:40; Lev. 22:10; Joel 3:17; and often). The sojourner is in Heb. gēr or gûr (LXX prosēlytos, Exod. 22:20; Lev. 17:12–15; → Conversion) or tôšāḇ (LXX → paroikos, e.g. Gen. 23:4). The sojourner is still a foreigner (Exod. 12:43 ff.), but he has certain rights and duties in the community.

NT 1. allotrios occurs parabolically in Matt. 17:25 in the discussion of the propriety of paying the half-shekel temple tax (cf. Exod. 30:11–16; 38:26). Jesus asked whether kings took tribute "from their sons or from others [apo tōn allotriōn]." Peter replied that it was from others, to which Jesus replied, "Then the sons are free." However, he counselled payment of the tax to avoid giving offence. The incident implies that the disciples are "sons of God", and that the Jews are in fact "others". In Lk. 16:12 allotrion (another's) stands parallel to the "unrighteous mammon" (v. 11). Money and possessions belong to another. The implication is that they do not belong to the disciple who is nevertheless a steward. "If then you have not been faithful in the unrighteous mammon, who will entrust to you the true riches? And if you have not been faithful in that which is another's, who will give you that which is your own?" (→ Possessions, art. mamōnas). In Jn. 10:5 the stranger and strangers are not known by the sheep who belong to the shepherd whose voice they know and follow. The implication is that Jewish (and other would-be) teachers are strangers disowned by the true flock of God, whereas Jesus is the true shepherd known and followed by the true people of God.

In Acts 7:6 (referring to Gen. 15:13) the gē allotria ("a land belonging to others" RSV) is the foreign land (Egypt), whereas Palestine is the homeland of Israel. But for → Abraham even the promised land was a foreign country (Heb. 11:9), because it was not his true, heavenly home. Therefore, he dwelt in tents, and by it testified that he was a stranger in this world.

The Christian is the slave of Christ. Therefore, he has not to judge others (Rom. 14:4). Paul refused to boast of the work or methods of others (2 Cor. 10:15 f.), because he would not adorn himself with borrowed plumage. He would not even preach in a place where others had already been at work, refusing to build on a foundation laid by someone else (Rom. 15:20). Timothy was warned not to be hasty in laying hands on a man and entrusting him with a ministry. Otherwise, he might participate in another man's sins and be called to account for it (1 Tim. 5:22). The Jewish high priest entered the Holy Place with en haimati allotriō, "with another's blood" (Heb. 9:25). Unlike Jesus on the cross, he did not bring his own blood as a sacrifice. In Heb. 11:34 the word occurs in the expression "put foreign armies to flight."

2. apallotrioō occurs only in Eph. 2:12; 4:18; and Col. 1:21, in each case as the passive participle meaning "alienated", "estranged". Before their conversion, the readers were not citizens of Israel, the chosen people of God. They stood – like the heathen now – outside God's covenant and promises, and were thus subject to wrath. They did not know God, and lived in sin. Since they have now become Christians, they are not to return to their sinful state.

3. allogenēs occurs only in Lk. 17:18. The grateful Samaritan who returned to give thanks after being healed of his leprosy is called one of another race, a foreigner, for he was not a Jew. allophylos occurs only at Acts 10:28. The Jew is forbidden to have fellowship with an allophylos, "one of another nation" (RSV). For the heathen was ceremonially unclean, and he would make the Jew likewise unclean. Only in Christ were these barriers of the → law abolished. H. Bietenhard διασπορά — διασπορά (diaspora), dispersion.

CL diaspora (derived from diaspeirō, disperse) means dispersion. The word was first used in the LXX, and occurs almost entirely in Jewish and Christian, literature. In cl. Gk. it is found in Plutarch, Non posse suaviter vivi secundum Epicurum, 27.

OT 1. diaspora occurs 12 times in the LXX. In 3 instances it translates Heb. niddaḥ, what is scattered, dispersed, outcast (Deut. 30:4; Neh. 1:9; Ps. 147:2). In the other cases it stands as a rather free translation of zaʿᵃwâh, trembling, terror (Deut. 28:25; Jer. 34:17 [41:17 LXX]); hašḥîṯ, destruction (Jer. 13:14); mizreh, pitch-fork (Jer. 15:7); nᵉṣûrê, the preserved (Isa. 49:6). It also appears without any Heb. equivalent in Ps. 139 [LXX 138] as a title; Dan. 12:2; 2 Macc. 1:27; Jud. 5:19.

The Gk. word has 3 different meanings: (1) the event or state of the dispersion of the Jews among the heathen nations (Deut. 28:25; Jer. 34:17–41:17 LXX); (2) the community of those so dispersed among the Gentiles (Isa. 49:6; Ps. 147:2; 2 Macc. 1:27; Pss. Sol. 8:28); (3) the place or country where the scattered Jews now live (Jud. 5:19; Test. Ass. 7:2).

2. Although diaspora virtually became a technical term for the scattering of the Jews, it is remarkable that it is never used to translate the corresponding Heb. terms gōlâh and gālûṯ which denote the leading away into captivity, the exile, and the exiles. To translate these words the LXX has aichmalōsia, captivity (21 times); apoikia, exile (19 times); apoikesia, captivity (7 times); metoikesia, captivity (7 times); apoikismos, settlement of a colony (twice); and paroikia, sojourning in a foreign land (once). The LXX appears to prefer the hard, negative ideas, suggesting captivity in a foreign country, doubtless out of loyalty to the Heb. original. diaspora which made its way into Hel. Jud. is more neutral.

This historical change of usage reflects a historical evolution. After wars of conquest foreign rulers deported masses of Jews, in order to break their military strength. The first large Jewish diaspora was in Babylonia, where Nebuchadnezzar had deported a section of the vanquished (2 Ki. 24:14 ff.; 24:11–21) and where the majority of Jews remained even after the edict of Cyrus allowing them to return. Following the great prophets, the deportation and exile were seen as God's punishment (Jer. 17:1–4; Ezek. 12:15). But this outlook gradually dissipated, and out of the exile there grew up minority communities of the Jews of the dispersion who lived there of their own volition. Through the preaching of the exilic and post-exilic prophets a positive attitude to the new situation emerged (cf. Isa. 60; Hag. 2:6 ff.; Zech. 8:20 ff.). Through the dispersion of Israel God intends to bring all nations home to himself. This new approach was powerfully developed in Isa. 40–66. It provided the motivation for the almost worldwide missionary activity of late Judaism.

NT In the NT diaspora occurs only 3 times (as does the vb.). It is always in the traditional sense. Jn. 7:35 speaks of the diaspora tōn Hellēnōn, i.e. the dispersion among the Greeks. Acts 8:1, 4 and 11:19 refer to the scattering of the church. Jas. 1:1 and 1 Pet. 1:1 are theologically more significant. If these letters were written to Gentile Christian churches, the word diaspora has here a special theological significance. The apostles see in the fact of the "dispersion" a parallel to the Jewish dispersion. The true homeland of the disciples of Christ is not the place where they happen to live. It is in heaven (cf. Phil. 3:20). It is the Jerusalem that is above (cf. Gal. 4:26). On earth they are always strangers, living as → paroikoi, sojourners. They are like God's seed that is sown far and wide. Its fruit will only be apparent at the great ingathering (cf. Matt. 24:31). F. S. Rothenberg

ξένος

ξένος (xenos), adj., strange, foreign; noun, stranger, alien; φιλοξενία (philoxenia), hospitality; φιλόξενος (philoxenos), hospitable; ξενοδοχέω (xenodocheō), show hospitality.

CL xenos occurs from Mycenean Gk. and Homer onwards. Its root is connected with Lat. hostis, stranger, enemy, and Ger. Gast, Eng. guest. The following points stand out in the history of religion and culture.

1. In primitive society the stranger is basically an enemy, because he is unknown and therefore sinister. Mutual fear and resistance are characteristic of the attitude of the foreigner and the people round him. Foreigners were often outlawed and put to death, or driven away cowed by magical practices. The stranger never had rights. At a later stage a pattern of relationship with strangers emerged which originally developed out of fear. The stranger was seen as a messenger of the gods. Out of fear of the gods the stranger was given a helping hand and hospitality. The stranger thus came under the protection of religion and the law.

2. Among the Greeks the stranger or foreigner was originally one who did not belong to one's own community, whether it was large or small. In Homer the stranger and the beggar come from Zeus (Od., 6, 207 f.). Hence one must treat them with respect. For the Greeks it was a sign of barbarity, when strangers were treated as if they had no rights and people did with them what they pleased. Above all, Athens showed an open attitude to the stranger (cf. Soph., OC, 560–68, 631–41). But in religion the use of objects from foreign parts was universally avoided, and strangers were excluded from participation in the cult. Sparta was particularly hostile to strangers as a consequence of the puritanical reforms instituted in the period following 600 B.C. and the regulations about strangers that were bound up with it. Otherwise strangers stood under the protection of Zeus hikesios, Zeus the protector of suppliants, and also the Dioscuri. Anyone who injured a stranger was subject to the wrath of the Erinyes. The converse was also true. Those who honour the gods also honour strangers. Hence temple and altar assume the role of an asylum for the stranger who desires refuge there or seeks the protection of the priests. The first hospices for strangers sprang up in the vicinity of holy places in the fourth century. Worshippers came from far and wide, and needed to be housed and fed.

3. Through close contact with non-Gk. cities and nations from the time of the Persian wars change set in. The foreigner was simply someone who did not belong to one's own cultic community or polis. This did not prevent agreements from being made with strangers. But now, as before, banishment remained a punishment. The situation in religion was ambivalent. On the one hand, people were opposed to all "new" and "strange" gods, since they did not belong to the nation and they endangered morals. On the other hand, the doors were opened wide to innumerable foreign cults.

4. In Rome up to the imperial period the stranger was in theory without rights. Here too he was excluded from the cult. Only if he had a patronus, did he have any chance of lodging and the protection of the law. The expulsion of a troublesome alien was always a possibility. From 241 B.C. there was a praetor peregrinus, an official in charge of legal disputes between citizens and strangers.

5. Since Homeric times there was a system of regular hospitality. The custom persisted into late antiquity. The motive of both the Greeks and the Romans was not only fear of the gods but also love of man. In ancient catalogues of vices injustice to foreigners is ranked immediately after godlessness and want of reverence to parents (→ Godliness, art. sebomai). The ethics of popular philosophy exhorted everyone to show friendship to the stranger. The resident alien had obligations towards the state, such as payment of tax on aliens and military service.

6. Gk. philosophy from the 4th cent. onwards developed the thought of being a stranger. The soul was seen as a stranger in the world, since its true home lay beyond the material sphere. Being a stranger became an anthropological category. The thought was prepared for by the idea of banishment in tragedy. The → body of man, like the → world, is only a temporary lodging for the → soul.

OT 1. xenos occurs in the LXX 21 times, mostly as a translation of Heb. nokrî. Other words for stranger are → allotrios, → allogenēs, and → paroikos.

(a) In the OT, hospitality was also a self-explanatory practice and duty (Gen. 18:1 ff.; 19:1 ff.; 2 Sam. 12:4; Job 31:32). Jael's action was a serious breach of the right of a guest (Jdg. 4:17 ff.) which could only be justified by the extremity of the people of God in their struggle for survival. Among the godless the stranger was entirely at their mercy (Gen. 19:9; Jdg. 19:22). Israel's law forbad the affliction of strangers, because the nation itself was a stranger in Egypt (Exod. 22:21; 23:9; Deut. 24:14). The stranger enjoyed the sabbath rest like the Israelite (Exod. 20:10). Yahweh loves and protects him (Deut. 10:18). At the consecration of the temple Solomon interceded for strangers that would come to honour Yahweh, that he should hear them (1 Ki. 8:41 ff.).

(b) The people of Israel were themselves visitors and strangers in the land of Canaan (Lev. 25:23). The land did not belong to them. It was Yahweh's property and could not be sold. But since the Israelite was God's stranger (paroikos), he too enjoyed his protection (Ps. 39:13; 61:5; 119:19; 1 Chron. 29:15). Because Israel is God's people, it is ultimately a stranger in the world (Est. 3:13; but cf. already Num. 23:9). This goes back to the recognition that Yahweh himself is not an immanent power in the world. As its Creator and Lord, he stands over it. It also goes back to the realization that he has chosen his people as his own possession. Hence the acts of Yahweh can be "strange" and "alien" (Isa. 28:21).

(c) It was a misfortune whenever foreigners conquered the land that God had given Israel as a dwelling place (Lam. 5:2). It was seen as the punishment of Yahweh when the Israelites were led away into foreign countries out of the land that God had given them (Jer. 5:19; Deut. 29:28; and often).

(d) The protection afforded to the person of a stranger in Israel was not extended to strange religions. Foreign cults were condemned and punished as idolatry in Israel (1 Ki. 11:4 f.; Jer. 5:19; Jos. 24:23; Deut. 4:25 ff.; and often).

(e) Yahweh is God over all the nations (Amos 9:7). Hence the exilic and post-exilic prophets could speak of the coming proclamation of the glory of God among the heathen (Isa. 42:6 ff.; 66:19) and promise the turning of the heathen to Yahweh (Isa. 14:1; 45:14 ff.; 56:1–8; Zech. 14:16; Ezek. 47:22 f.). The godless heathen were threatened with annihilation (Jer. 46:51; Ezek. 25–32). In practice after the exile there was a strict segregation from the heathen (Neh. 13:1–10). Mixed marriages were prohibited and dissolved (Ezra 9 f.; Neh. 13:23 ff.).

2. Rab. Jud. held hospitality in high esteem. The man who practised it was promised a rich reward in the age to come. On the other hand, the duty of hospitality was restricted to fellow Jews. Some Gk. practices penetrated into Judaism through the Hel. diaspora: regular hospitality (Tob. 5:6; Josephus, War, 3, 436 and often), and the establishment of inns (Lk. 10:34). The Essenes kept hospices in every city for strangers. xenos, its derivatives, and other terms became loanwords in Heb. and Aram.

3. For part of the Hel. period there was considerable danger of Israel being swamped by foreign practices even in the sphere of religion (1 Macc. 1:11–15). The Maccabean reaction and revolt were directed against this. Those who were loyal to the law restricted trade with the heathen. They refused fellowship and marriage with them. They were afraid of entering Gentile houses for fear of defilement. On the other hand, the rabbis zealously took up missionary work, sometimes with considerable success in making proselytes (cf. Matt. 23:15 and the term "God-fearer" which crops up in Acts; → Conversion, art. prosēlytos). Philo and Josephus strove to refute the charge of hostility to strangers which was levelled against Jews. Above all, Hel. Jud. engaged with zeal in propaganda and apologetics. From A.D. 135 conversion to Judaism was prohibited by the Romans. (See further G. Stählin, TDNT V 13.)

4. It is of great significance for subsequent ages that the LXX never (apart from Job 31:32) translated the Heb. gēr (stranger) by the corresponding Gk. word xenos, but almost always by prosēlytos (proselyte, convert). (paroikos is also found 11 times for gēr, but only 3 times in the legislation of the Pentateuch.) This may be an indication of a change that had already taken place. But it also led to the OT regulations and commandments concerning strangers being applied only to full proselytes in rab. Jud. (cf. SB I 353 ff.).

NT xenos occurs in the NT 14 times, including 5 in Matt., and twice each in Eph. 2, Acts 17, and Heb.

1. Four of the five places in Matt come in Matt. 25:31–46. Care of the xenos is care of Jesus Christ himself; refusal to provide hospitality to the stranger is to exclude Jesus himself. According to Matt. 27:7, the high priests bought with the "blood money" flung down by Judas the potter's field for the burial of strangers, i.e. non-Jews.

2. The gospel records show Jesus as the frequent recipient of hospitality in his public ministry (Mk. 1:29 ff.; 2:15 ff.; Lk. 7:36 ff.; 10:38 ff.; and often). Hospitality figures in the parables of Jesus (Lk. 10:34 f.; 11:5 ff.; and often). God's summons to his kingdom is depicted as a banquet (Lk. 13:29; 14:16 ff.; → Lord's Supper). Jesus sent out his disciples to proclaim the kingdom, expecting that they would enjoy hospitality in the towns and villages (Matt. 10:11 ff.; Lk. 10:5 ff.). Similarly in Judaism hospitality was urged especially towards the rabbis.

3. In the missionary work of the early church missionaries enjoyed hospitality (Acts 10:6; 16:15; and often). In Rom. 16:23 Gaius appears as a xenos, i.e. as Paul's host. In 3 Jn. 5 another Gaius is praised for what he has done for brethren from abroad.

4. On occasion, the idea of God as alien or strange occurs without the word xenos actually being used (Jn. 8:19; cf. Acts 17:23). Christ is "not of this world", and so is alien in this sense (cf. Jn. 8:14; 25 ff.; 9:29 f.).

5. Before their call to faith in Christ, the Gentile Christians were xenoi (strangers) and → paroikoi (aliens). As heathen, they had no part in Israel's call to be the people of God, and were excluded from the promises. But now in Christ they are fellow citizens with the saints, i.e. Jewish Christians, and members of the household of God (Eph. 2:19; cf. the whole argument of Eph. 2:11 ff.). As Christians thus become citizens in God's sight, they have their citizenship in heaven (Phil. 3:20; cf. Gal. 4:26; Eph. 2:6; Heb. 11:15 f.; 12:22 f.; 13:14). The patriarchs already provide the pattern for this. They did not receive the promises, but saw them from afar, thereby showing that they lived as xenoi (strangers) and parepidēmoi (exiles) on the earth (Heb. 11:13). Christians are thus put under a new divine law of life which shields them from the vices of the heathen who regard them as strange (xenizontai, 1 Pet. 4:4).

6. The Athenians supposed that Paul wanted to preach foreign deities (Acts 17:18). They themselves and the resident aliens were eager for what was new (Acts 17:21). But Paul preached "strange things" (xenizonta tina) to their ears (17:20). On the other hand, the church is warned in advance against being led astray by "strange teachings" (Heb. 13:9). The sufferings which befall the church are not something "strange", but belong to the Christian's lot (1 Pet. 4:12).

7. philoxenia (hospitality) is expected from the whole church (1 Pet. 4:9). It is recommended as a virtue to Christians (Rom. 12:13; Heb. 13:2). It is even connected with a promise. Because some practised hospitality (xenisantes), they entertained angels unawares (cf. Gen. 18:3; 19:2 f.). In the ancient world many a door was opened to a messenger of the new covenant and the host was thus blessed. Cornelius received Peter, and Publius took in Paul and his companions (Acts 10:23; 28:7). Paul requested Philemon to have a guest room (xenia) ready for him (Phlm. 22). The Pastoral Epistles indicate the importance set by hospitality in the young church. It is not only the → bishop who should be hospitable (philoxenos, 1 Tim. 3:2; Tit. 1:8). Even the widow was reminded to show hospitality to strangers (1 Tim. 5:10). H. Bietenhard παρεπίδημος (parepidēmos), adj., staying for a while in a strange place; noun, a stranger, resident alien, exile, sojourner.

παρεπίδημος

CL & OT parepidēmos is derived from dēmos (people) and is found only twice in the LXX (Gen. 23:4; Ps. 38[39]:12). It means someone who lives for a short while in a foreign place as a stranger or alien.

NT It occurs in the NT 3 times. In 1 Pet. 1:1 and 2:11 believers are called parepidēmoi ("exiles", RSV). The word stands in parallel to paroikoi ("aliens", RSV), pointing back to Gen. 23:4 and Ps. 39:13. Because their true home is in heaven (cf. Phil. 3:20), God's election has drawn them out of all their natural ties and relations. They now live on earth as exiles. This call and vocation gives rise to the warning to abstain from the lusts of the flesh (1 Pet. 2:11). They are to live according to the decrees and laws of their true homeland. Heb. 11:13 depicts → Abraham and the patriarchs as patterns for the Christian. Abraham looked towards the future city (11:10). Hence he and the fathers lived as strangers and exiles on the earth. H. Bietenhard πάροικος (paroikos), stranger, alien; παροικέω (paroikeō), inhabit as a stranger, live beside; παροικία (paroikia), the stay or sojourn of someone who is not a citizen in a strange place.

πάροικος

CL paroikos is a compound of para (by) and oikos (house). It was originally an adj., but was later used as a noun meaning neighbouring, the neighbour, the non-citizen, one who lives among resident citizens without having citizen rights yet enjoying the protection of the community. The vb. paroikeo means to live beside, to inhabit as a stranger. The noun paroikia means sojourning. It became a loan-word in ecclesiastical Lat. parochia, denoting the charge of a bishop and later of a priest, as in Eng. parish.

OT 1. In the LXX paroikos occurs over 30 times, especially to translate gēr and tôšāḇ, both words meaning a sojourner or stranger. paroikeō occurs over 60 times, especially as the equivalent of gûr, to sojourn. paroikia is found 16 times. paroikoi and various forms of the vb. paroikeō are used to designate non-Israelites who live in Israel (2 Sam. 4:3; Isa. 16:4). The Israelites had definite obligations to the resident alien. An adequate living should be made possible for him (Lev.

25:35 ff.). He is allowed to share the food of the sabbath year (Lev. 25:6). He had the right of asylum (Num. 35:15). Like widows and orphans, he stood under the protection of the law (Exod. 22:21). But he too had obligations. He was required to keep the sabbath (Exod. 20:10). He was not allowed to eat of the Passover lamb (Exod. 12:45) or the sacrificial gift (Lev. 22:10). Ezek. 47:22 f. promises the equality of Israelites and resident aliens. Above all, repeated stress was laid on the fact that the patriarchs were sojourners (Gen. 12:10; 17:8; 19:9; 20:1; 23:4; 35:27; 47:4; Exod. 6:4). Moses was a sojourner in Midian (Exod. 2:22) and the whole nation of Israel in Egypt. The attitude towards sojourners was motivated by this fact (cf. Exod. 22:21; 23:9; and often). In one sense the Israelites were always sojourners, even when they lived in the promised land (1 Chron. 29:15; Pss. 39:13; 119:19, 54; 120:5; 3 Macc. 7:19; and often). The earth and soil of Palestine, as indeed the whole earth (cf. Ps. 24:1), belongs to Yahweh. The Israelites are only sojourners on it. For this reason the land cannot be sold (Lev. 25:23). On the other hand, the devout sojourner may dwell in the tent of Yahweh (Pss. 15:1; 61:5) and so experience fellowship with God.

2. For Philo, the godly man is a paroikos, for he lives far off from his heavenly home. Philo combined the ancient world's denial of the world with OT ideas. (On Philo and Judaism see K. L. and M. A. Schmidt, TDNT V 848 ff.) The rabbis required sojourners, resident in the land of Israel, to keep the so-called Noahic commandments as a condition of living together (cf. SB III 737; Moore, Judaism I 274 f., 453, 462; R. Meyer, TDNT V 850). But this may only have been a matter of theory. → Noah.

NT The words are found only in Acts, 1 Pet., Lk., Heb. and Eph.: paroikos, 4 times; paroikia, twice; paroikeō, twice. Each passage contains a quotation or reference to the history of Israel (cf. Acts 17:6 with Gen. 15:13; cf. Acts 7:29 with Exod. 2:15). In Acts 13:16 ff. Paul recalls Israel's paroikia in Egypt (cf. Exod. 6:16). Heb. 11:9 f. stresses that Abraham lived as a sojourner in the promised land as in a foreign country, since by faith he was a citizen of the heavenly city. The same thought occurs in the use of → xenos and → parepidēmos in Heb. 11:13 (cf. Ps. 39:13). In Jesus Christ the Gentile believers are no longer xenoi and paroikoi, but fellow citizens with the saints and members of the household of God. For the promises made to Israel and the call to the kingdom of God are also valid for them (Eph. 2:19). From this point of view, Christians are also in a new sense paroikoi and parepidēmoi here on earth. Hence the warning to abstain from fleshly lusts (1 Pet. 2:11). They are to live in their time of sojourning in the fear of God (1 Pet. 1:17). paroikeō means "dwell" only in Lk. 24:18. Perhaps even here the thought is that the stranger is a member of the Jewish dispersion living at Jerusalem, or that he is a pilgrim attending the feast who is only spending a few days in the city.

H. Bietenhard

→ Brother, Neighbour, → Church, → Circumcision, → Conversion, → Covenant, → Greek

(a). F. Büchsel, allos, TDNT I 264–67; A. von Harnack, The Mission and Expansion of Christianity, (1908) 1961; M. Hengel, Judaism and Hellenism, I–II, 1974; Moore, Judaism I–III (see index); J. A. Sanders, "Dispersion," IDB II 854 ff.; K. L. Schmidt, diaspora, TDNT II 98–104; K. L. Schmidt, M. A. Schmidt and R. Meyer, paroikos, TDNT V 841–53; G. Stählin, xenos, TDNT V 1–36.

(b). H. Braun, "Die Diaspora und ihre Verheissung im Neuen Testament," Die evangelische Diaspora 35, 1965, 97 ff.; R. Gyllenberg and B. Reicke, "Fremder," BHHW I 498 f.; K. L. Schmidt, Die Polis in Kirche und Welt, 1940; A. van Selms, E. L. Rapp and F. Lau, "Diaspora," *RGG*³ II 174ff. J. de Vries and F. Horst, "Fremde," *RGG*³ II 1124 ff.

Foreknowledge, Providence, Predestination

This group of articles brings together words which denote human or divine foreknowledge, predestination and predetermination of future events. Their common characteristic is the prefix pro-, before, in both spatial and temporal significance. The temporal component is strongest in the vb. proginōskō, know beforehand, and in the noun prognōsis, foreknowledge. On the other hand, the vb. protithēmi, set before, plan, propose and the noun prothesis, setting forth, plan, purpose have spatial overtones. But when they denote a previously determined resolution they have assimilated a temporal sense. Approximating somewhat to these is the vb. prohorizō, predestine, which likewise expresses definite planning and care. pronoeō, consider beforehand, plan carefully, and the noun pronoia, foresight, forethought, care, are by contrast with the surrounding Gk. Hellenistic world attested in the NT only very rarely.

προγινώσκω

προγινώσκω (proginōskō), know beforehand, know in advance; πρόγνωσις (prognōsis), foreknowledge.

CL The composite proginōskō, formed from the prefix, pro-, before, and the vb. ginōskō, perceive, be acquainted with, understand, know, is attested from Euripides onwards (Hippolytus, 1072) and means to know or perceive in advance, to see the future (→ Knowledge, art. ginōskō). The corresponding noun prognōsis (attested as a medical technical term since Hippocrates) denotes the foreknowledge which makes it possible to predict the future. The early Gks. understood this as non-verbal foreknowledge of a dream-like kind which can however be apprehended and communicated by those who were clever enough. It belongs to the realm of destiny. It is often both hidden from men and open to them. It is capricious like the gods themselves. Both gods and men are subject to it. Its power controls the rise and fall of gods and nations. Hel. thinkers, especially the Stoics, transformed the concept and understood it in a pantheistic way as an expression of the purposefully creative order of the divine world-force which includes both nature and men. Fate itself is subjected to this order, and can be a factor in the order itself. Divinity, destiny, order and necessity become identical. Everything is arranged rationally and harmoniously, or at least in the direction of a development towards a harmonious consummation.

OT The vb. proginōskō, foreknow, is found in the LXX only 3 times, always without any Heb. equivalent. Two of these occurrences concern sophia (→ Wisdom), conceived in personal terms: Wisdom knows in advance those who desire her (Wis. 6:13); Wisdom has foreknowledge of signs and wonders (Wis. 8:8). The other reference concerns the foreknowledge which the Israelites in Egypt were given of the destruction of the Egyptian first-born (Wis. 18:6). The noun prognōsis, foreknowledge, is found only twice in the LXX (Jud. 9:6 of God's foreknowledge decreeing the fall of the Egyptians; Jud. 11:19 of prophetic foreknowledge).

NT 1. In the NT the vb. proginōskō, foreknow, know beforehand or in advance, choose beforehand, is found 5 times. Two occurrences are in Paul (Rom. 8:29; 11:2). Acts 26:5 speaks of a human "having known long since" (similarly 1 Pet. 1:20; 2 Pet. 3:17). The noun prognōsis, foreknowledge, is attested in the NT only in Acts 2:23 and 1 Pet. 1:2.

2. In Paul the vb. proginōskō, foreknow, choose beforehand, demonstrates the character of God's activity among men. It assumes the aspect of a personal relationship with a group of people which originates in God himself. Rom. 8:29 declares that those whom God "foreknew he also predestined to be conformed to the image of his Son" (RSV). In Rom. 11:2 the vb. expresses God's election and love of Israel which opposes the idea of a final rejection of Israel.

3. 1 Pet. 1:20 says that Christ was "foreknown" or "destined (proegnōsmenou) before the foundation of the world" (RSV). The noun prognōsis denotes in 1 Pet. 1:2 the foreknowledge of God, which is said to be for the Christians in the Diaspora the ground of their → election. Membership of the community in a completely differently orientated and partly hostile environment is accordingly grounded in the relationship which God takes up with men as their → Father.

2 Pet. 3:17 speaks of the foreknowledge or advance knowledge of believers. They are aware that the parousia is coming despite the delay. The point at issue here is the misunderstandings and disagreements over statements of Paul (cf. 3:15 f.). They are, therefore, urged to watchfulness to counteract the danger of apostasy (→ Fall). Human proginōskein thus gains here a theological stress in paraenesis.

4. In Acts 2:23 prognōsis, foreknowledge (much as in 1 Pet. 1:20) characterizes the events surrounding Jesus of Nazareth before and up to his execution. Jesus was "delivered up according to the definite plan and foreknowledge of God [tē hōrismenē boulē kai prognōsei tou theou ekdoton]" (RSV).

5. Thus in the few relevant passages both the vb. and the noun speak chiefly of God's action towards Christ or towards men, and witness to his activity as planned and directed. Any interpretation in terms of an impersonal constraint (such as destiny, fate or doom), or of an autonomy which removes itself from the normal course of world events, would contradict the NT use of these words.

P. Jacobs, H. Krienke

προνοέω

προνοέω (pronoeō), perceive beforehand, foresee, provide, think of beforehand, take care for, take thought for; πρόνοια (pronoia), forethought, provident care.

CL 1. The vb. pronoeō (from pro and noeō, observe, notice; → Reason, art. nous) means initially to observe in advance, notice beforehand, foresee (e.g. Hom. Il. 18, 526, of a deception). But in most cases it has the meaning of to care, to see to it that, make provision for, attend to (e.g. Xen. Cyr. 8, 1, 1, caring for children). With the noun pronoia, attested since Aeschylus (Ag. 648), much as with the vb., the temporal meaning of foresight or foreknowledge is rare. The predominant meaning is foresight in the sense of forethought, intention, care, providence.

2. From Hdt. (3, 108, 2) onwards the noun serves to designate divine providence and a generation later in Xen. (e.g. Mem., 1 4, 6) and Plato (e.g. Tim. 44c, cf. 30b) it is a philosophical technical term. In Stoic philosophy, in particular a few generations later again (e.g. Zeno, Frag. 174, 176, in J. von Arnim, Stoicorum veterum Fragmenta, 1921, I, 44) it became an important concept for describing the emanation of the purposeful operations of a world-force possessing divine status and working for the benefit of mankind as well as the perfection of nature. pronoia, providence, thus gained a religious significance and became an expression of religious piety. In fact, among the Stoics, it was raised to the level of an indisputable dogma. Chance is ruled out, because everything runs its course according to an implanted divine law of development which is itself divine.

The characteristics of this understanding of providence are twofold. First, providence is implanted as a law, as the divinity of nature, humanity and history. The imperative is understood as an indicative. Secondly, everything evolves automatically in line with this providential power; everything repugnant is excluded. The legacy of this conception of providence was, after its rediscovery in the Renaissance, taken over in the development of the history of ideas from rationalism right up to speculative idealism and romanticism. It was also partly expressed in Christian and biblical terms, with the result that the diversity of categories in Gk. and biblical ideas was overlooked.

OT 1. In the LXX the vb. pronoeō, see in advance, care for, and also see, is attested only 10 times: once for the Heb. bîn, note, understand (Dan. 11:37); twice for Heb. šûr, look, catch sight of (Num. 23:9 and Job 24:15); all the other refs. are found in the apocryphal literature (Wis. 6:7; 13:16; 1 Esd. 2:28; 2 Macc. 14:9; 3 Macc. 3:24; 4 Macc. 7:18). Only in Wis. 6:7 is the vb. used of God: "He provides for all (small and great) alike."

2. The noun pronoia, care, foresight, is found only 9 times, almost exclusively in the Apocrypha. 2 Macc. 4:6 speaks of the hoped-for human assistance of King Seleucus IV. All the other passages speak either of God's care: God's care steers the ship (Wis. 14:3); by God's provision the jaws of the lions remain shut (Dan. 6:19 LXX; cf. 3 Macc. 5:30; 4 Macc. 9:24); of the eternal (Wis. 17:2), omniscient (4 Macc. 13:19), or divine providence (4 Macc. 17:22). Of theological importance is the thought in the final reference, that the divine providence redeems the nation through the blood of the martyrs (the seven brothers), as a way of propitiation (→ Reconciliation, art. hilaskomai).

3. The term for providence has, therefore, no corresponding equivalent in the Heb. of the OT. Similarly, the idea of providence did not take on any distinctive didactic stamp in the OT. Rather, the idea itself and its didactic expression stem from Gk.-Hellenistic thought. It was there and in Hel.-determined Latin that it gained conceptuality in the notion of providentia.

4. The acceptance of the Hel. idea of providence into Jewish thought becomes particularly evident in Philo and Josephus. The attestations for pronoeō, care for, and pronoia, care, foresight, are numerous. God's providence and provision become clear in the ruin of a persecutor of the Jews (Josephus, War, 7, 453) and in the example of Abraham (Josephus, Ant., 11, 169). God cares for the world (Philo, Op. Mund., 171), for the creation as a whole and in particular (Philo, Spec.Leg., 3, 189). Like the early Stoic Chrysippus, Philo wrote a book peri pronoias (Concerning Providence).

NT In the NT the vb. pronoeō, take thought for, be intent on, care for, aim, is found only in Rom. 12:17 and 2 Cor. 8:21. Significantly, both instances refer to human endeavour in goodness, honesty and sincerity (probably with ref. to the LXX wording of Prov. 3:4). The noun pronoia (Rom. 13:14) also means concern, solicitude, provision. In this case it refers to the body (→ Flesh). In Acts 24:3 the advocate Tertullus praises the provisions of Felix. Vb. and noun are not used of God's caring activity. The fact that the word pronoia, in the sense of a divine wisdom of the world, does not appear in the NT despite its representation of one of the central and basic concepts of the surrounding world is not accidental. It is a sign that the NT speaks an equally eloquent language by avoiding some Hel. concepts, as it does by accepting and re-coining others (e.g. agapē, → Love).

P. Jacobs, H. Krienke

προοράω

προοράω (prohoraō), see previously, see in advance, foresee (the future), know already, take care that.

CL The vb. prohoraō (from pro, in front, before, and horaō, → see, notice) is attested in the spatial sense of seeing in front of one since Homer (Od., 5, 393), and in the sense of foreseeing or knowing the future in advance, first in Pindar (Nem. 1, 27).

OT 1. In the LXX prohoraō, and all the forms of proidein, are found only in Ps. 138 (139):3 ("thou seest all my ways (before)") of God's forward-reaching sight and knowledge, in Ps. 15(16):8 of a man keeping the Lord before his eyes, in Gen. 37:18 of Joseph's being seen from a distance by his brothers, and in 1 Esd. 5:63 of those who had seen the former house of God.

2. Philo used the word largely in the temporal sense of foreseeing dangers (Praem., 72) and in combination with → pronoia, the providence of God (Deus.Imm., 29), by which God in contrast to men foresees what is coming. In Josephus we find in addition the meaning to make provision for (e.g. Ant., 16, 378).

NT In the NT prohoraō, see before, is attested 4 times. In Gal. 3:8 Paul says, with ref. to Gen. 12:3, that the → Scripture (here personalized) foresaw "that God would justify the Gentiles by faith." The three other passages are in Acts and mean to have in front of one's eyes (2:25, quoting Ps. 16:8), to have seen already before (21:29), and – similarly to the Pauline ref. – to foresee or foreknow (2:31, with ref. to Ps. 16:10: David spoke with foresight or foreknowledge of the resurrection). The vb. is thus not used in the NT — any more than pronoeō and pronoia — to describe the activity of God. P. Jacobs, H. Krienke

προορίζω

προορίζω (prohorizō), decide upon beforehand, predestine.

CL & OT The compound prohorizō (formed from pro, in front, before and horizō, to ordain, → determine) is only used from the 4th cent. B.C. onwards (Demosth., 31, 4), and means to preordain. It is not found in the LXX.

NT The NT uses prohorizō, preordain, 6 times to speak exclusively of God's decrees.

1. Paul uses the vb. in Rom. 8:29 together with → proginōskō, foreknow, and → prothesis, plan, decision, in order to ground the → call of God in his prior decree. In v. 30 the vb. is taken up again, in order to specify the end to which these dealings of God with men are directed, namely to justify those who are called and to give them a share in his → glory (art. doxa NT). 1 Cor. 2:7 speaks of the → Wisdom (art. sophia) of God which he himself "predestined" (JB), "ordained" (AV), "decreed" (RSV), "for our glory" (JB). God's predestination is thus described as an activity of his with men directed towards their fellowship with him. (See further C. E. B. Cranfield, "Romans 8:28", SJT 19, 1966, 204–15; A. R. C. Leaney, "Conformed to the Image of His Son", NTS 10, 1963–64, 470–9; K. Grayston, "The Doctrine of Election in Rom. 8:28–30", StudEv, II, 1964, 574–83; M. Black, Romans, 1973, 124 f.; → Elect.)

2. Essentially on the same lines is the statement in Eph. 1:5, which describes sonship shared in Christ as grounded in the predetermining love of God. In Eph. 1:11 the vb. is again used with → prothesis, plan, decree, in order to characterize the inheritance which Christians themselves are and which Christ has made possible. This all derives from the will of God who accomplishes all things according to the counsel of his will.

3. In Acts 4:27 f. expression is given to the conviction that Herod, Pontius Pilate, the nations and peoples are only able to do to Jesus that which God has previously established or determined. prohorizō is thus here intended to underline that even men's sinful actions are drawn into the realization of the divine plan of salvation. P. Jacobs, H. Krienke

προτίθημι

προτίθημι (protithēmi), mid. display publicly, plan, propose, intend; act. set before as a duty; πρόθεσις (prothesis), setting forth, presentation, display, exhibition, plan, purpose, resolve, will. On tithēmi → Determine, Appoint, Present, art. tithēmi.

CL The vb. protithēmi (a compound of pro, in front, before, and tithēmi, set, place, lay, insert, make into) is attested early on. It possesses a basic local meaning, to set before (Hes., Theog., 537, set food before), but also means to resolve (e.g. Plato, Phaedr., 259e), propose, determine, put forward openly.

The noun prothesis can denote the public lying in state of the dead (Plato, Leg., 12, 947b), public announcements (Aristot., Pol., 6, 8, p. 1322a 9), and later an intention (Polyb., 5, 35, 2). See further C. Maurer, tithēmi, TDNT VIII 164 f.

OT In the LXX the vb. protithēmi is used 5 times in the sense of laying before or laying on (e.g. Exod. 40:4 of the showbread). Altogether it is used 19 times; of which 11 render a total of 6 Heb. equivalents, 6 are in the apocryphal writings, and 2 have no correspondence in the MT. In Ps. 54(53):3 and 86(85):14 it renders Heb. śîm (set, place, lay) in the sense of keeping God before one's eyes. It thus describes a conscious turning to God or a refusal to do so (cf. also Ps. 101[100]:3 and 3 Macc. 2:27). The noun prothesis (used 17 times of which 7 are in 1, 2 and 3 Macc.) is 13 times a technical term for the showbread (e.g. Exod. 39:36), and is thus to be translated ordering, presentation. Meaning intention, purpose, plan, it is found only in 2 Macc. 3:8; 3 Macc. 1:22; 2:26; 5:12, 29. These words, then, do not have any particular theological emphasis in the OT.

NT 1. In the NT the vb. protithēmi is found 3 times. It means to resolve in Rom. 1:13 (cf. Paul's intention to visit Rome), and to put forward in Rom. 3:25 (God put Christ forward as a propitiation; → Reconciliation, art. hilaskomai, NT 4), and to set forth in Eph. 1:9 (God has set forth his purpose in Christ).

The noun prothesis, display, exhibition, plan, intention, (previously made) decision, is attested 12 times, 4 of which refer to the showbread. Human objectives are mentioned in Acts 11:23; 27:13 and 2 Tim. 3:10 (RSV "aim in life").

2. By contrast with the non-theological use of the word in the LXX, Paul uses the noun twice in order to describe the primal decision of God (TDNT VIII 166). In Rom. 8:28 God's prothesis, resolve, decision, or purpose, is stated to be the foundation of the → call of the Christians. The → hope and certainty of a Christian are based on and upheld by God's previous activity, and not by any human capacity for decision-making. Paul uses the word similarly in Rom. 9:11 (cf. Gen. 25:23). The election of Jacob is already laid down in God's resolve even before the birth of the twins. Here too the word prothesis serves to characterize God's activity among men as free and grounded in his → will alone. It is thus independent of human prerogatives. The accomplishment of the promise is always God's free act both in Israel and the church.

3. Similarly, in Eph. 1:11 the existence of the church is described as the result of a decision made by God. This decision of God is both in time and in all aspects a preceding resolve. Here as in Rom. 8:28 ff. there is an accumulation of words which emphasize the priority of the → will of God. In Eph. 3:8 ff. it is the realization of God's saving plan in Christ (→ House, art. oikonomia NT 2) which is under discussion. The word prothesis, plan, in v. 11 serves to characterize God's activity in Christ as the fulfilment of an eternal purpose. It is one in which men do not have a say, either in time or in its intentions. 2 Tim. 1:9 is concerned with the redeeming (→ Redemption, art. sōzō) and calling activity of God among men. Its assumptions do not lie in the area of prior human achievement but of God's own decision.

→ Determine, → Elect, → Fullness, → Promise P. Jacobs, H. Krienke

(a). K. Barth, CD III 3, 3–57; J. Behm, pronoeō, TDNT IV 1009–17; G. C. Berkouwer, The Providence of God, 1952; R. Bultmann, Primitive Christianity in its Historical Setting, 1956 (see index); W. Eichrodt, Theology of the Old Testament, II, 1967, 167–85; J. Jeremias, Jesus' Promise to the Nations, 1955; C. Maurer, protithēmi, TDNT VIII 164–68; R. Pesch, "Providence," EBT II 722–25; K. L. Schmidt, prohorizō, TDNT V 456; M. Wiles, ed., Providence, SPCK Theological Collections 12, 1969.

(b). W. Eichrodt, "Vorsehungsglaube und Theodizee im Alten Testament," Procksch Festschrift, 1934, 45 ff.; F. Nötscher, Gotteswege und Menschenwege in der Bibel und in Qumran, Bonner Biblische Beiträge 15, 1958; W. Wiesner, "Vorsehung," EKL III 1705 ff.

Forgiveness

ἀφίημι

ἀφίημι (aphiēmi), let go, cancel, remit, leave, forgive; ἄφεσις (aphesis), release, pardon, cancellation, forgiveness; πάρεσις (paresis), letting pass, passing over.

CL aphiēmi (derived from apo, from, and hiēmi, to put in motion, send), attested since Homer, means the voluntary release of a person or thing over which one has legal or actual control. In addition to the vb., the noun aphesis, discharge, setting free, is used from Plato onwards. In its fig. use aphiēmi overlaps in meaning with pariēmi (Homer), lit. to let drop, let by; fig., to let pass, allow (the noun paresis, since Hippocrates).

1. aphiēmi is used in classical Gk. both in a lit. and in a fig. sense:

(a) With a personal object, to send forth, send away (of a woman, to divorce; of a meeting, to dissolve, end), to let go, to leave, dispatch; with an impersonal object, to loose (e.g. a ship into the sea), to discharge (e.g. arrows), to give up.

(b) In the fig. sense the vb. means to let alone, permit, let pass, neglect, give up (taking trouble, etc.); in Josephus, Ant., 1, 12, 3, to lose one's life, die. The legal use is important: to release from a legal bond (office, guilt, etc. and also, a woman from marriage, e.g. Hdt., 5, 39), to acquit (e.g. cancellation of criminal proceedings, Plato, Laws, 9, 86, 9d), to exempt (from guilt, obligation, punishment, etc.; e.g. Hdt., 6, 30). Similarly the noun aphesis (e.g. Demosthenes, 24, 45) means release, pardon, or remission, etc. All these meanings apply from Homer onwards only to human relationships; they are not found in a religious sense.

2. The same fig. meaning is found frequently with pariēmi, to let by, relax (e.g. of slackening a sail, Plato, Laws, 11, 931d); but also to let go unpunished, to allow, in the sense of personal leniency or indulgence (e.g. Hdt., 7, 169, 2), and the cognate noun paresis, letting pass.

OT The LXX uses aphiēmi in such classical Gk. senses as to let go (Jdg. 3:1), leave, give up (Jdg. 9:9, 11, 13), leave behind (2 Sam. 15:16; 20:3), allow (2 Sam. 16:10 f.), leave over (Ps. 17:14), release in the year of release (Deut. 15:2). It is used relatively seldom in the sense to forgive. Where it is, it usually renders the Heb. nāśā', to release from guilt or punishment (Gen. 18:26; Ps. 25:18; 32:1, 5; 85:2; Isa. 33:24), or sālaḥ, to forgive, pardon (Lev. 4:20 ff.; 5:6 ff.; Num. 14:19; 15:25 f.; Isa. 55:7). Sometimes it stands for kippēr, to cover, make atonement (Isa. 22:14). The one who forgives is God (but cf. Gen. 50:17). Through the act of forgiveness, the relationship between God and man which has been disturbed or destroyed by sin is reconstituted.

Of the 50 or so instances of aphesis in the LXX, 22 are found in Lev. 25 and 27 (for Heb. yôḇēl, year of jubilee) and 5 in Deut. 15:1–9 (for Heb. šāmaṭ, release from debts in the year of jubilee). In general, it is more often used of the release of captives and slaves (Isa. 61:1; Jer. 34:8, 15, 17; Ezek. 46:17). Only once does aphesis appear in the sense of forgiveness (Lev. 16:26), and there it is without Heb. equivalent, used as an interpretation of Azazel. [F. F. Bruce suggests that in Lev. 16:26 LXX aphesis has the simple sense of "sending away" – an attempt at a lit. translation of ʿᵃz'āzēl, as though from the root 'āzal; cf. Lat. caper emissarius.]

The occurrence of aphiēmi and aphesis thus indicates that they are not the words chiefly used in the LXX to convey the concept of forgiveness. Israel experienced God's grace in forgiveness largely in the context of the cultus (cf. OT, 1), so that all kinds of terms from the language of the cultus come to be used to express the idea (washing, cleansing, covering, etc.).

1. Forgiveness in the OT. It is probable that Israel was aware before the exile that God can forgive sin (cf. Isa. 6). The part played by the forgiveness of sins in the faith and worship of that period depends on the date ascribed to the Pentateuch. A remarkable exception is to be found in a number of pre-exilic Psalms (cf. Pss. 25:11; 65:3; 78:38; 79:9) which show a degree of reflection on the consciousness of sin and forgiveness of sins unparalleled in the early writings of the OT. The guilt here does not, however, arise from individual acts of moral transgression, but from "the opposition of the two wills, the divine and the human" (G. van der Leeuw, Religion in Essence and Manifestation, 1938). Sin is here opposition to God, grounded in the inmost part of man's nature. It can only be brought to an end by a new, gracious gift of God (cf. Ps. 65:5 ff.). In "Sühne and Vergebung um die Wende von der exilischen zur nachexilischen Zeit" (EvTh 26, 1966, 217 ff.) to which the following points are indebted, K. Koch has argued that those passages which speak of God's compassion in response to prophetic intercession (Amos 7; Exod. 32:12, 14; Jer. 26:19; cf. Mic. 7:18) mean that God passes the sinner by ('ābar). He is forbearing and avoids entering "the circles of the man laden with guilt." "Where such pardon is extended, punishment is also lightened, but never in the pre-exilic period cancelled" (K. Koch, op. cit., 221). The final punishment of Israel by Yahweh, in the prophetic forecasts of doom, is only comprehensible against a background of a fatal and disastrous act which renders God's forgiveness, in the sense of a removal of guilt, impossible. God can no longer pass by the sin of the people (→ Reconciliation, especially art. hilaskomai).

Earlier prophetic writings also speak of the forgiveness of sins, but it is Koch's opinion that the recognition that God forgives sin has been introduced at a later date by editorial additions (cf. Ezek. 36:29, 33; Isa. 4:3 f.; Mic. 7:19). The question whether sin was forgiven through cultic sacrifice prior to the exile depends on the view taken of the date of the sacrificial ordinances in the Pentateuch. According to Koch, it was in the exilic and post-exilic periods that Israel discovered "God's readiness to forgive: forgiveness is seen to be brought about by cultic acts and priestly pronouncements, and deliverance from sin is experienced" (op. cit., 227; cf. G. von Rad, Old Testament Theology, I, 1962, 262 ff.). On the other hand, the passages in the law which deal with sacrifice and forgiveness quoted above locate the institution of these ordinances in the time of → Moses and the exodus. The Israelite did not think of → sin (hamartia) in the abstract, but as a localized sphere arising out of transgression. It could not simply be forgotten. The only way that it could be forgiven was by expiatory ritual by which God broke through the continued outworking of the act and, as in Lev. 16:20 ff., pass it on to the animal and so remove the guilt (Lev. 16:20, 22; 17:11). This puts certain prophetic allusions (cf. Isa. 1:16, 18; 6:7) and passages in the Psalms (Pss. 25:11; 65:3; 79:9) into a new light. The essential point is that God alone is the one who frees and forgives in all acts of atonement.

However, it is not every sin that can be atoned for, and so forgiven, by rites of atonement (e.g. offences against the law of circumcision, Gen. 17:14; and against the laws of the Sabbath and the Passover, Exod. 12:15; Num. 9:13).

Isa. 40–55 goes beyond these ideas, particularly those of the priestly literature. The prophet recognizes that atonement by means of the blood of animals (→ Blood, art. haima) is not enough. Moreover, he sees that in the situation of the exile expiatory ritual simply disappears. In the coming servant of God he heralds the one on whom the sin of Israel and of the other nations will be laid, and through whom God will bring about an all-embracing atonement and forgiveness of sin (Isa. 53; cf. 55:6–13).

To sum up, it may be said that from the exile onwards Israel sees her history as upheld by the forgiving activity of God. This is also evident in the significance which is attached to the second → temple. It is the place where the Day of Atonement is celebrated, the festival whose rites bring forgiveness of sins to every Israelite (cf. Sir. 50; 1 Bar. 1:10 ff.).

2. Judaism. aphiēmi and aphesis are found as terms for forgiveness in Josephus (Ant., 6, 92) and Philo (Vit.Mos., 2, 147; Spec.Leg., 1, 190). However, a tension appears between this and the forgiving goodness of God which in the OT is associated with his righteousness (cf. Ps. 143:11). This is especially apparent in Josephus. The idea of man's working together with God, on the one hand, and God's dikē (the central concept of his theology), on the other, cause him to turn forgiveness into leniency on God's part. Where there is confession of sin and a change of mind, God is ready to be reconciled (War, 5, 415) and hence to remit punishment (Ant., 9, 214; 11, 114). But this kind of forgiveness does not mean that evil is overcome and sin removed.

Rab. Judaism developed a thoroughgoing system of casuistry, in which God's forgiveness is catalogued. A distinction is made between (a) forgiveness of sins in this world by virtue of repentance and propitiatory sacrifices, e.g. on the great Day of Atonement (cf. T. Yoma 5:6 ff.; cf. SB I 636); (b) forgiveness of sins in the world to come by means of expiation in the fire of Gehenna, or by means of divine grace (cf. SB I 637); and (c) forgiveness of sins, or preservation from sins, in the Messianic age. In connection with the latter it is said of the Messiah that he will gain forgiveness for Israel on the grounds of his intercession and sufferings (Tg. Isa. 53:4 ff.), but there is nowhere a reference to the Messiah forgiving men's sins by virtue of his own authority. God alone has the right to forgive sins. As in the OT, however, there are unforgivable sins (e.g. blasphemy against the → name of God).

3. Qumran. There are a number of passages, especially in the Community Rule (1QS), the Damascus Rule (CD) and the Scroll of Hymns (1QH) which speak of God's forgiveness (1QS 3:6–12; 11:3; CD 2:3 f.; 3:18; 1QH 4:37; 7:18; 30, 35 and often). In addition to a strong consciousness of election and mission, every single member of the community had a very marked sense of sin and worthlessness (cf. 1QH 1:5–39). This awareness of the worthlessness and creatureliness of man and at the same time of election by God was emphasized by a strong insistence on sin and forgiveness and with it a confession of utter dependence upon God's grace (1QH 10:21; 11:9; and often). Forgiveness at Qumran is not tied to bloody rites of propitiation; forgiveness is obtained by the man who sees the error of his way and turns from it in humility and a right spirit (cf. 1QH 14:24; 1QS 3:7 ff.: "His sin is atoned for"). He who does not repent sincerely, but clings to Belial (Satan), excludes himself from forgiveness and thus from the new covenant (1QS 2:8, 26).

NT 1. aphiēmi is attested 142 times in the NT. Of these examples 47 are found in Matt., 34 each in Mk. and the Lucan writings, and 14 in Jn. This leaves only 13 examples in the whole of the rest of the NT. Oddly enough aphiēmi occurs only 45 times in the sense to forgive (17 times in Matt.; 8 times in Mk.; 14 times in Lk. – Acts; twice in John; and only once in Paul!). It is used occasionally in a secular sense (Matt. 18:27, 32), but usually in the religious sense of forgiveness (absolutely in Matt. 12:32 par., etc.), or forgiveness of sins (aphienai hamartias, Mk. 2:5, 7, par.; Lk. 7:47 ff., etc.), debts (opheilēmata, Matt. 6:12), trespasses (paraptōmata, Mk. 11:25 f.; Matt. 6:14 f., etc.). In most cases, however, the NT uses aphiēmi in the original senses of to let (Mk. 1:34; 5:19, 37 par.; Acts 14:17, etc.); to dismiss, divorce, release (Matt. 13:36; 1 Cor. 7:11–13, etc.); to leave (Mk. 1:20; 10:28 par., etc.); to leave behind (Mk. 1:18 par., etc.); and to abandon (Mk. 7:8; Rom. 1:27, etc.).

The use of aphesis is in contrast to this. Of 17 examples in the NT, 15 have the sense of forgiveness (cf. Mk. 1:4 par.; Matt. 26:28; Lk. 1:77; Acts 2:38; Heb. 9:22), and two, release from captivity (Lk. 4:18). It is notable that of these 17 examples, 5 are found in Luke and Acts, 2 in Heb. and 2 in Mk., whereas aphesis is totally lacking in Paul, apart from Eph. 1:7 and Col. 1:14. This suggests that it was not used in the early period.

paresis, passing over, letting go unpunished, occurs only at Rom. 3:25. There are, in addition, further circumlocutions for forgiveness (some of them echoing OT ritual language), such as kalyptō, to cover (→ Hide), airō, to take away, cancel (Jn. 1:29, etc.), apolouomai, to get oneself washed (→ Baptism, art. louō).

In Paul the idea is expressed in more precise theological terms: dikaioō, to justify (→ Righteousness, art. dikaiosynē), and katallassō, to reconcile (→ Reconciliation).

2. (a) Just as the fact that man is a sinner has destroyed his relationship with God (→ Sin, art. hamartia; → Man, art. anthrōpos NT), so forgiveness takes the central place in Christian proclamation as the means whereby this relationship is restored. It stands as the action of God in the face of the sinful behaviour of man, and is based on Christ (Col. 1:14; Eph. 1:7), whose power to forgive sins is made known in preaching (Lk. 24:47; Acts 10:42 f.; 13:38), → baptism (cf. Acts 2:38; Mk. 1:4 f. par.; Rom. 6:1 ff.), and the → Lord's Supper (Matt. 26:28; cf. Jn. 6:53 ff.). The OT proclamation of forgiveness is here taken up and preached afresh as the fulfilment in Christ of what was promised of old (Jer. 31:34; 33:8) in the eschatological present (cf. Lk. 1:77; 4:18 ff.). The Synoptic Gospels and Acts often use parallel to the vb. (see above, 1) the fixed formula aphesis hamartiōn, forgiveness of sins (cf. Mk. 1:4 f. par., Matt. 26:28, Acts 5:31). The terms preferred by the other NT writers like → redemption (apolytrōsis), → reconciliation (katallagē), justification (dikaiōsis or the vb. dikaioō; → righteousness, art. dikaiosynē NT, 1), concentrate more upon the work of Christ (but cf. also Col. 1:14 and similarly Eph. 1:7).

(b) According to Mk. 10:45 par., the preaching of Jesus reached its climax in the forgiveness brought by him (Lk. 4:18–21; 15:11 ff.; Matt. 18:21 ff.). It appears as the activity appropriate to him (Mk. 2:7, 10 par.; Lk. 7:49). In Mk. 2:1–12 par. (the healing of the paralytic) we see forgiveness taking, despite all the objections, the place it is to occupy in the activity of Jesus as the one proper essential work he has come to do. Jesus' attitude to notorious sinners underlines his preaching by action (Lk. 7:36–50; 19:1–10).

(c) Forgiveness includes making of no account the sin which has been committed (Mk. 2:5 par.; cf. Jn. 8:11), and the acceptance of the sinner (Lk. 15:20 ff.; cf. also Col. 1:13 f.: deliverance from the dominion of the powers and transference to the kingdom of Christ), to whom a new life is given and with it the promise of eternal life (Lk. 23:43; Matt. 5:43–48; Jn. 14:19b). Early Christian preaching shows that this acceptance is at the same time an acceptance into the church. It therefore includes a share in the forgiveness which is continually pronounced there, because it is continually needed (Matt. 18:18; cf. 16:19; Jn. 20:23; cf. also 10:42 f.; 13:38). Forgiveness is closely associated with the death of Jesus on the cross (in addition to general references like Mk. 10:45 par. and Jn. 3:16; cf. Heb. 9:22 and Rom. 8:32). As the "Lamb of God", he takes away the sin of the world (Jn. 1:29; cf. 1 Pet. 2:21–24). In the → Lord's Supper reference is made to the reconciling effect of the death of Jesus in the words "blood of the covenant . . . poured out . . . for the forgiveness of sins" (Matt. 26:28). In 1 Cor. 15:17 it is linked to the → resurrection of Jesus (cf. Rom. 4:25; 14:9; 2 Cor. 5:15b; Lk. 24:46 f.; cf. also Acts 5:31).

(d) Repentance (metanoia, → Conversion) and confession of sins (Mk. 1:15; Acts 2:38; 5:31; 1 Jn. 1:9; Heb. 6:1, 6; Jas. 5:16) are not "works" offered up to God. Rather, they are the acceptance, brought about by God himself, of his verdict upon the "old man", and an openness to his word of deliverance (cf. Acts 19:18). Nor can the readiness of a man to forgive, with which the divine declaration of forgiveness is closely linked (Matt. 6:12 par.; 14 f.; cf. 5:23 f.; Mk. 11:25; Lk. 6:37), be regarded as a meritorious precondition. It belongs to the new life which has been given. Where this has been received, it is the natural, daily sign of the forgiven sinner's gratitude. This is demonstrated negatively by the example of the wicked servant (Matt. 18:32–35). The passages cited from the Sermon on the Mount are also directed at those who have already received God's forgiveness, in whom gratitude is to be expected as a consequence, showing itself in the following or imitation of Christ and his forgiveness (cf. Col. 3:13; Eph. 4:32). Man's forgiveness of his debtor (Matt. 6:12 par.) and even of his enemy (Matt. 5:38–48; Rom. 12:19 ff.) comes about as the consequence of God's forgiveness in Christ.

(e) In Paul the terms aphiēmi and aphesis virtually disappear. (Rom. 4:7 in an OT quotation from Ps. 32:1 has aphiēmi in the sense of forgive; and Rom. 3:25 paresis in a similar sense.) This is because the proclamation of forgiveness appears in Paul's writings as a thought-out and systematized doctrine. The fact that forgiveness is not merely a remission of past guilt, but includes total deliverance from the power of sin and restoration to fellowship with God, is expressed by Paul in his doctrine of justification (→ righteousness; cf. Rom. 3:21 ff.; 4:22, 25; Gal. 3:6–9) and of → reconciliation (of the sinner, Rom. 5:10 f.; 2 Cor. 5:18; of the world, Rom. 11:15; 2 Cor. 5:19) with God. This has taken place in Christ (Rom. 5:10 f.) as God's own free act (2 Cor. 5:18 f.) and is the centre of the gospel. Forgiveness takes place because God gives himself completely in the sacrifice of his Son (2 Cor. 5:21; Rom. 8:32), and so gives man a share in his own righteousness (Rom. 3:21–28). Thus "in Christ" man becomes a pardoned sinner (Rom. 8:1) and a "new creature" (2 Cor. 5:17). This teaching represents a summary and theological consolidation of the early Christian preaching of forgiveness.

(f) The task of proclaiming the forgiveness which has been brought about by Christ is given to the → church. This task is carried out in preaching, in the personal declaration of forgiveness to individuals, and also in the proclamatore rites of baptism and the eucharist. It is not a case of mere reference to and repetition of something past. Each time it is a fresh act of proclamation, coming from Christ himself to the concrete situation of the present. Its validity is grounded in the authority given by Christ to the church (Matt. 18:18; cf. 16:19; Jn. 20:23; cf. also 1 Jn. 5:16; Jas. 5:15 f.), and always remains conditional on obedience to him.

This comes about through renewed realization of forgiveness in the real situations of everyday life, with their call to decision, and not in some timeless application. This is shown by the commission to retain along with the commission to forgive (krateō, as opposed to aphiēmi, Jn. 20:23; cf. Matt. 18:18; 16:19; → Bind). Without this, forgiveness would be in danger of being trivialized. In this connection see 1 Cor. 5:1–5; Matt. 12:30 ff. par.; Acts 5:1–11; 1 Jn. 5:16 f.; Heb. 6:4; 10:26 f. These passages deal with the live issue of apostasy and renewed repentance, a question later taken up again by the Shepherd of Hermas. H. Vorländer

→ Baptism, → Blood, → Conversion, → Cross, → Grace (for charizomai, graciously forgive), → Judgment, → Reconciliation, → Redemption, → Sacrifice, → Sin, → Slave, Servant, → Son

(a). R. Bultmann, aphiēmi, TDNT, I 509–12; J. D. M. Derrett, "The Anointing at Bethany and the Story of Zacchaeus," Law in the New Testament, 1970, 266–85; W. Eichrodt, Theology of the Old Testament, II, 1967, 380–95; O. E. Evans, "The Unforgivable Sin," ExpT. 68, 1956–57, 240–44; F. C. Fensham, "The Legal Background of Mt. 6, 12," NovT. 4, 1960, 1 f.; J. M. Ford, "The Forgiveness Clause in the Matthaean Form of the Our Father," ZNW 59, 1968, 127 ff.; E. M. B. Green, The Meaning of Salvation, 1965; J. Jeremias, The Prayers of Jesus, 1967; E. Lohmeyer, The Lord's Prayer, 1965, 160–90; J. Lowe, The Lord's Prayer, 1962, 37–42; W. Lüthi, The Lord's Prayer, 1962, 46–52; H. McKeating, "Divine Forgiveness in the Psalms", SJT 18, 1965, 69–83; I. H. Marshall, Kept by the Power of God: A Study of Perseverance and Falling Away, 1969; R. P. Martin, "Reconciliation and Forgiveness in Colossians," in R. Banks, ed., Reconciliation and Hope (Leon Morris Festschrift), 1974, 104–24; E. B. Redlich, The Forgiveness of Sins, 1937; K. Stendahl, "Prayer and Forgiveness," Svensk Exegetisk Årsbok 22–23, 1957–58, 75 ff.; V. Taylor, Forgiveness and Reconciliation, 1941; W. Telfer, The Forgiveness of Sins. 1959 H. Thyen, BAPTISMA METANOIAS EIS APHESIN AMARTIŌN, in J. M. Robinson, ed., The Future of Our Religious Past, Essays in Honour of Rudolf Bultmann, 1971, 131–68; J. G. S. S, Thompson, The Praying Christ, 1959.

(b). H. Dee "Vergebung der Sünden," EvTh 26, 1966, 652 ff.; H. Gollwitzer, "Zu H. Dee 'Vergebung der Sünden,'" EvTh 26, 1966, 652 ff.; W. Koch, H. Bienert, P. Jacobs, "Vergeltung und Vergebung," EKL III 1636 ff.; K. Koch, "Sühne und Sündevergebung um die Wende von der exilischen zur nachexilischen Zeit," EvTh 26, 1966, 217 ff.; H. Thyen, Studien zur Sündenvergebung im Neuen Testament und seine alttestamentlichen und jüdischen Voraussetzungen, FRLANT 96, 1969; T. C. Vriezen et al., "Sündenvergebung," *RGG*³ VI 507 ff.

Form, Substance

The distinction is commonly drawn between outward form and essential substance. Whilst this distinction is also found in Gk., the Gk. idea of form does not imply that every kind of form is a mere outward appearance. The following article examines three words which may be translated as form: eidos, morphē and schēma. It also examines hypostasis which, among other things, may be translated as substance, essential nature, essence and actual being, as well as assurance, confidence.

εἶδος

εἶδος (eidos), form, outward appearance, sight.

CL The noun eidos is connected with the vb. eidō*, see (cf. Lat. video). It occurs from Homer onwards and denotes appearance, visible form, stressing the link between the visible appearance and reality. Hdt. could speak of praising the eidos of a woman (1, 8), meaning not only her outward beauty but her true character. The word is used in Plato for the Forms or Ideas which are the existing realities behind our world (Phaedo, 75, 102; Rep., 6, 508–11; cf. 7, 514 ff.). The modern distinction between the external and the internal, the visible and the invisible, the husk and the kernel, and between outward form and essential content is inappropriate and foreign to this aspect of Gk. thought. Although Aristotle distinguished between eidos, → morphē and hylē (matter), he was not thinking of two different materials. The eidos was the expression of the essence in visible form.

OT The LXX uses eidos to translate mar'eh (sight, appearance, vision) and tō'ar (form). Here too the outward appearance of the whole being is meant (cf. Gen. 29:17; Isa. 53:2 f.), and not merely the outer shell behind which something quite different might be supposed. God conversed en eidei with Moses (Num. 12:8). This means that Moses saw the glory of the Lord.

NT 1. eidos occurs only 5 times in the NT (twice in Paul and Lk., and once in Jn.).

1 Thess. 5:22 goes back to Job 1:1, 8: "Abstain from every form of evil." G. Kittel thinks that eidos here means a "mint" and that the verse may reflect a saying of Jesus concerning money changers preserved in the early church (TDNT II 375). But Arndt (220) prefers to translate it as "kind".

2. 2 Cor. 5:7 declares that "We walk by faith and not dia eidous [by sight, RSV]." The interpretation is difficult, because eidos does not normally mean "sight" but the visible form. There is also the question of the subject of the verse. In the first half it is the 1st person plur. "we". If "we" is also to be understood as the subject of "not by sight", the verse might then imply a contrast of the present time as the sphere of faith with the coming future time in which we shall have a visible form.

On the other hand, v. 7b may be taken to refer to the visible form of the Lord. We now walk by faith (dia pisteōs), but the Lord does not walk in visible form. Against this view is the fact that it requires a sudden, implicit change of subject.

There is, however, a third possibility that Paul simply means that we now live by faith and not by sight.

3. In his account of the baptism of Jesus, Lk. says that the Holy Spirit descended upon Jesus in bodily form (sōmatikō eidei) like a dove (Lk. 3:22; cf. Mk. 1:10; Matt. 3:16). The account intends to stress the reality of what happened. Similarly, Lk. also uses eidos in his account of the transfiguration. "And as he was praying, the appearance of his countenance (to eidos tou prosōpou autou) was altered" (Lk. 9:29; cf. Matt. 17:2; Mk. 9:2). But no special tendency in Lk.'s writing can be deduced from this.

4. Jn. 5:37 contains the statement: "His voice you have never heard, his form (eidos) you have never seen." This is contrasted with the first half of the verse: "And the Father who sent me has himself born witness to me" (cf. also v. 38). It was part of the OT witness that God cannot be seen in visible form (cf. Deut. 4:12). But this is never intended as a reproach. Similarly, Jn. 5:37 cannot be interpreted in this way. It means rather that they have not given heed to God (cf. v. 38). ([Ed.] However, there may be the further implication that Jesus has in fact heard the voice of the Father and seen his "form" and thus has an authority and relationship with the Father which no other man has ever had [cf. the whole argument in Jn. 5:17–47].)

G. Braumann

μορφή

μορφή (morphē), form, outward appearance, shape; σύμμορφος (symmorphos), having the same shape, similar in form or appearance; συμμορφίζομαι (symmorphizomai), be conformed to, take on the same form as; συμμορφόομαι (symmorphoomai), take on the same form; μεταμορφόομαι (metamorphoomai), be transformed; μόρφωσις (morphōsis), embodiment, formulation, outward form, appearance; μορφόω (morphoō), form, shape.

CL 1. (a) morphē is instanced from Homer onwards and means form in the sense of outward appearance. Aeschylus speaks of seeing neither voice nor form of man (PV, 21 f.). It can also mean the embodiment of the form, the person in so far as it comes into view. "The spirit of misfortune . . . has robbed me in sending to me dust and a vain shade instead of your most loved form" (Soph., El., 1156 ff.). Gk. philosophy was concerned with the question of matter and form. Plato presents Socrates as saying that an exact description of the nature of the soul will enable us to see "whether she be single and the same, or, like the morphē of the body, multiform. That is what we should call showing the nature of the soul" (Phdr., 271; cf. 103, 104). Aristotle worked out a more precise set of concepts. He distinguished matter (hylē) from form (morphē, → also eidos). Matter has within itself a great number of possibilities for becoming a form and thus becoming manifest as a form. See further Aristot., Met., 990b, 9; 1029a, 29; 1057b, 7; Phys., 187a, 18; Cat., 2b, 7.

These concepts do not imply that form and matter are separable like husk and kernel. Rather they represent different principles and ways of looking at the same object. The outward appearance cannot be detached from the essence of the thing. The essence of the thing is indicated by its outward form.

(b) Similarly, morphōsis means embodiment, receiving form; symmorphos having the same form; symmorphizomai and symmorphoomai to take on the same form; and metamorphoomai to be transformed (cf. Arndt, 513, 530, 786).

(c) Of special interest is the use of the word in the literature of gnosticism and the Hel. mystery religions. In the first instance, these texts are not to be compared with the accounts of the appearance of the gods in various forms (e.g. Jupiter in mortal form, specie mortali, Ovid, Metamorphoses, 8, 262). For it is not so much the question of the transformation of the deity into human form (though cf. Phil. 2:6), but that of men into divine form. It is not merely the external appearance that is changed. Rather, the change of the morphē involves a change of essential character. According to Pistis Sophia, c. 66, one of the emanations changed itself into the form of a great serpent, whilst another changed itself into the form of a basilisk. The meaning of external appearance can even recede behind that of essential character. There is a place where there is neither man nor woman nor even forms, but a perpetual, ineffable light (Pistis Sophia, c. 143). "All the very mournful forms he [Uriel] will lead to judgment" (Sibylline Oracles, 2, 230). The external appearance is undoubtedly meant not as an antithesis to the essential character, but as the expression of it.

Thus the Hel. mystery religions contain a great number of stories about transformations. The initiate is transformed by dedication and rites into divine substances and so is deified. "I passed into an immortal body, and now I am not what I was before but am born again in nous [mind]" (Corp. Herm., 13, 3). The whole man is affected and not just a part or something in him.

OT 1. morphē occurs only rarely in the Gk. translations of the OT. Altogether it appears 9 times for various Heb. or Aram. words: t^{e}mûnâh (Job 4:16), taḇnîṯ (Isa. 44:13), ṣ^{e}lēm (Dan. 3:19). (See further J. Behm, TDNT II 749; E. Lohmeyer, Der Brief an die Philipper, KEK 9, 1930^{8}, 91 f.)

The OT spoke of God in anthropological terms. But inevitably men have to speak of God in this way (cf. K. Barth, CD, II, 1, 222 f., 264, 286, 369 f.). According to Gen. 18:1 ff., God appeared to Abraham in the form of three men. However, the LXX never used morphē to speak of the form of God.

2. Jewish apocalyptic expected in the future a transformation of the present world. But the transformation did not take place in the present. It was something that lay in the future. According to Syr. Bar. 51:1, when the appointed day has passed, the appearance of sinners is transformed. Those who have acted righteously then appear glorified.

NT morphē and its cognates occur only rarely in the NT. morphē itself in fact occurs only twice. It is remarkable that, apart from Matt. 17:2, Mk. 9:2 and 16:12, the words are confined to the Pauline writings.

1. It is a matter of debate whether Phil. 2:6–11 forms a single unit and whether Paul incorporated into Phil. an already existing hymn. (For a review of this discussion see R. P. Martin, Carmen Christi: Philippians ii. 5–11 in Recent Interpretation and in the Setting of Early Christian Worship, 1967, 15–95.) Nevertheless, it can hardly be questioned that these verses do constitute a hymn about Christ in which the expressions morphē theou (form of God) and morphē doulou (form of a servant, → Slave) occur. Christ is said to have been en morphē theou (in the form of God, v. 6). The en does not mean that the essential nature of Christ was different from the form (cf. Lohmeyer), as it were an outer shell or a part played by an actor. Rather it means that the essential nature of Christ is defined as divine nature which, by analogy with the Hel. mystery religions is thought of as existing "in" divine substance and power (cf. E. Käsemann, Exegetische Versuche und Besinnungen, I, 1960, 51 ff.). Christ is said not only to have been surrounded by divine glory and to have had the same form as God (cf. O. Cullmann, The Christology of the New Testament, 1959, 177). "Outside his human nature Christ has no other manner of existing apart from being divine" (L. Cerfaux, Christ in the Theology of St. Paul, 1959, 387). Whether this is to be understood in a gnostic sense is doubtful (cf. O. Michel, "Zur Exegese von Phil. 2, 5–11" in Theologie als Glaubenswagnis, Festschrift Karl Heim, 1954). It is said of this divine mode of existence that Christ existed in it in the past (hyparchōn, being, v. 6). It refers to his pre-existence prior to the incarnation. en morphē theou characterizes, therefore, his existence before his earthly life, but not his existence in that earthly life. For he emptied himself (heauton ekenōsen, v. 7) taking the "form of a servant" (morphēn doulou). This form replaces the "form of God". It is not to be thought of like clothing put over the previous form or as an addition to the pre-existing form. Christ's mode of being was essentially changed. ([Ed.] For other interpretations of this passage → Empty, art. kenos, NT 3.)

Christ's mode of existence in his earthly life is described as that of a servant. This has been interpreted in various ways. Lohmeyer and Jeremias see it as a title of honour corresponding to the Servant of the Lord in Isa. 53 (→ Son of God, art. pais theou; → Empty, art. kenos). E. Schweizer sees it as a picture of righteous suffering (Lordship and Discipleship, 1960). In the opinion of the present writer, G. Bornkamm is right when he says that Christ entered upon a mode of existence which is under bondage and serfdom to the rule of cosmic powers and the elements of the world ("On the Understanding of the Christ-hymn (Philippians 2:6–11)", Early Christian Experience, 1969, 112–22).

According to G. Friedrich, the Christ-hymn does not contain "great speculations and profound reflections" from which dogmatic formulations can be proved (Die Kleineren Briefe des Apostels Paulus: Der Brief an die Philipper, NTD 8, 1962[9], 109). Käsemann sees it simply as the narrative of a continuous succession of events from the pre-existent divine mode of being which Christ gave up to an earthly existence of which the essential character was douleia (servitude).

2. Phil. 3:21 is to be understood in a similar way: "who will change [metaschēmatisei] our lowly body to be like [symmorphon] his glorious body, by the power which enables him even to subject all things to himself." The terms used here recall Phil. 2:6 ff. (cf. G. Strecker, "Redaktion und Tradition im Christushymnus Phil. 2, 6–11", ZNW 55, 1964, 63 ff.; E. Güttgemanns, Der leidende Apostel und sein Herr, 1966). Possibly it also contains a pre-Pauline tradition. The thought is not that of clothing in the sense of covering the essential character (→ Clothe), but that of the essential transformation of the lowly → body into a completely different one which is a glorified body. symmorphos does not mean becoming like, similar or equal. Rather it signifies an existence in Christ whose own mode of sōma permeates us without dissolving our own persons (cf. E. Güttgemanns, op. cit.; J. Jervell, Imago Dei, 1960). Christ and ourselves are not sharply separated individuals according to the modern understanding of personality. We have our existence in the realm of the power of Christ (→ schēma).

Rom. 8:29 declares that, "those whom he foreknew he also predestined to be conformed to the image [symmorphous tēs eikonos] of his Son, in order that he might be the firstborn among many brethren." The passage presupposes that Christ is the → image of God. In Christ God is really present. Again symmorphos means that we shall not only be similar to or like Christ but that we shall come into the same realm of power as he. We shall be identified with the same substance as he, and enter into the same essential nature as Christ. One might even speak in the same vein as the Hel. mystery religions and speak of a "divinization" or "Christening" (the objection of J. Behm, TDNT IV 758, is not fully convincing). Nevertheless, within this relationship Christ retains separate identity ("the firstborn among many brethren", cf. also 2 Cor. 3:18).

Phil. 3:10 relates symmorphizomai to the death of Christ: "that I may know him and the power of his resurrection, and may share his sufferings, becoming like him in his death [symmorphizomenos tō thanatō autou]." Again the thought is not that of a way of becoming like in the sense that the apostle might through martyrdom become like Jesus on the cross. Rather the apostle in his suffering sees the death of Christ becoming a reality in his own death. The death of Christ acquires a morphē in the death of the apostle. The death of Jesus is not simply a historical datum of the past for Paul. It is a present event. Nevertheless, here too Paul and Christ remain two separate personalities. (→ Like.)

3. In Gal. 4:19 Paul speaks of being "in travail until Christ be formed [morphōthē] in you." The thought is not that of having correct teaching in contrast to the erroneous teaching of the Galatians (cf. R. Herrmann, "Über den Sinn des morphousthai Christon en hymin in Gal. 4, 19," TLZ 80, 1955, 713 ff.). It is rather that of coming into the world as a child comes into the world through conception and → birth. Christ himself is to be formed in them in the reality of his being.

Rom. 12:2 declares: "Do not be conformed to this world [mē syschēmatizesthe tō aiōni toutō] but be transformed by the renewal of your mind [alla metamorphousthe tē anakainōsei tou noos], that you may prove what is the will of God, what is good and acceptable and perfect." This is no mere change of mind or adoption of a new moral outlook. It is a complete transformation and change, a thorough renewal of the whole man. "What is meant is not a theoretical relearning, but the renewal of the will" (R. Bultmann, Theology of the New Testament, I, 1952, 211; → Reason, art. nous).

4. Rom. 2:20 refers to the Jew as "a corrector of the foolish, a teacher of children, having in the law the embodiment of knowledge and truth [tēn morphōsin tēs gnōseōs kai tēs alētheias]." Perhaps this is a reference to a Jewish work of propaganda which contained the word morphōsis in its title (cf. O. Michel, Der Brief an die Römer, KEK 12, 1963, 88). Knowledge and truth are contained in the law and are really present in it.

5. If the above passages may be understood primarily against the religious background of gnosticism and the mystery cults, other explanations are more probable in the case of the remaining passages. 2 Tim. 3:5 speaks of those "holding the form of piety [morphōsin eusebeias] but denying its power." Here the meaning is more of "appearance." The heretics are not really pious; they are only apparently devout.

6. In the longer ending of Mk. Jesus is said to appear "in another form [en hetera morphē]" (Mk. 16:12). The question is not raised whether the risen Christ could be recognized as the one he was before his death.

7. The transfiguration narrative (Mk. 9:2 ff.) follows on from Peter's confession of Christ (Mk. 8:27 ff.). It is presented as a divine confirmation of the preceding human confession. Both man and God confess Jesus. The word for "transfigured" in Mk. 9:2 is metemorphōthē (cf. Matt. 17:2). Lk. expresses it differently and says that "the appearance of his face became different [egeneto . . . to eidos tou prosōpou autou heteron], and his raiment became dazzling white" (Lk. 9:29). Mk. mentions his snow-white clothing, and Matt. his countenance and clothes. G. Braumann σχῆμα σχῆμα (schēma), outward appearance, form, shape; μετασχηματίζω (metaschēmatizō), change the form of, transform, change; συσχηματίζω (syschēmatizō), mould, form after; pass. be formed like, be conformed to.

CL schēma means: (1) form, shape, figure; (2) appearance, as opposed to reality; (3) bearing, air, mien; (4) fashion, manner; (5) character. Gk. thought did not sharply distinguish between the external and the internal. schēma denotes the form that is seen. It could thus denote the role played by an actor which includes its essential character (Plato, Leg., 11, 918e). But the outward form can also be deceptive, and appearance become a sham. schēma can thus mean mere appearance as opposed to reality. It can also mean a dancing figure (Plato, Ion, 536c), bodily attitude or bearing (Eur., Medea, 1039), clothing (Xen., Cyr., 5, 1, 5), and occasionally semblance (Theophrastus, Historia Plantarum, 3, 12, 7).

In studying the Gk. word, one has to beware of the modern outlook which would relate schēma merely to external things, implying that the essential character was something different. To the Gk. mind, the observer saw not only the outer shell but the whole form with it.

syschēmatizō means not only to conform to the external form, but (from Aristotle onwards) to assume the form of something, to identify oneself essentially with someone else. In the NT it occurs only in the pass.

metaschēmatizō indicates the process by which an object or a person is thoroughly transformed and changed.

OT Is. 3:17 is the only passage in the LXX where schēma has a Heb. equivalent. It refers to the proud bearing of women. 4 Macc. 9:22 uses metaschēmatizō to describe the transformation of martyrs at death to immortality. On the other hand, in 1 Sam. 28:8 it means disguise. Saul made himself unrecognizable. The words occur with various shades of meaning in Philo and Josephus (cf. J. Schneider, TDNT VII 955 f.).

NT schēma occurs only twice in the NT, both instances being in Paul. syschēmatizō likewise occurs only twice (once in Paul and once in 1 Pet.). metaschēmatizō occurs only in Paul (5 times in the Corinthian correspondence and Phil. 3).

1. On Phil. 2 → above on morphē NT 1, and → Empty, art. kenos NT 3. Phil. 2:7 declares that: he "emptied himself, taking the form of a servant [morphēn doulou labōn], being born in the likeness [schēmati] of men." This does not refer to the moral character of this earthly life (Lohmeyer), or to the appearance of Jesus (Dibelius), or to the fact of his humanity, but to the way in which Jesus' humanity appeared (Käsemann), as anyone could see. This is the force of heuretheis ("being found").

2. (a) 1 Cor. 7:31 shows how real the schēma was for Paul when he declared: "The form of this world is passing away."

(b) Phil. 3:21 depicts the eschatological transformation which comes over Christians. metaschēmatizō does not refer to a gnostic identification of the believer with Christ (cf. Güttgemanns), but real participation in the glorified body of Christ (→ morphē, NT 2).

(c) Rom. 12:2 (→ morphē, NT 3) is not concerned merely with making various concessions to this age, or coming down to the same level. It warns against being absorbed by it, surrendering oneself to it, and falling prey to it. To do so is to yield oneself to its power (cf. 1 Pet. 1:14).

(d) In 1 Cor. 4:6 Paul says: "I have applied [meteschēmatisa] all this to myself and to Apollos for your benefit" (RSV). J. Schneider takes the vb. here as expressing "something in another than the expected or customary form" (TDNT VII 958). Arndt, however, paraphrases: "I have given this teaching of mine the form of an exposition concerning Apollos and myself" (515).

3. In 2 Cor. 11:13 ff. the thought is not that pseudo-apostles had transformed themselves into apostles, but that they had appeared as apostles and were regarded by some as such. At this time people did not sharply define what constituted an apostle. Paul's opponents called themselves apostles and earnestly presented themselves as such. In the eyes of many, these opponents really were apostles. It was Paul who first called them false apostles. Various forms of metaschēmatizō occur 3 times in vv. 13–15. In each case RSV translates it as "disguise." However, the meaning may rather be that Paul ironically describes them as transforming themselves into apostles. The pseudo-apostles really did assume the form of an apostle. They identified themselves with them. They were apostles – but false apostles.

The same applies to Satan. He not only disguises himself as an angel of light and plays at being such. He really identifies himself with an angel of light, and assumes the character. The fact that it is only an appearance is disclosed in v. 15. But this is not due so much to the vb. metaschēmatizō as to the insertion of the word hōs (as). The servants of Satan present themselves "as" servants of righteousness. metaschēmatizō has the same meaning in these passages as it has elsewhere in Paul.

G. Braumann

ὑπόστασις

ὑπόστασις (hypostasis), (1) substantial nature, substance, essence, actual being; (2) confidence, conviction, steadfastness.

CL 1. The noun is the substantival form of the vb. hyphistēmi (to place under), reflexive hyphistamai (to stand under). It has a wide range of meanings in both secular Gk. and the LXX.

(a) It is used concretely for what stands under, the basis of something (Sextus Empiricus, Adversus Mathematicos, 8, 161, 183; 10, 335); the bottom under water on which one can get a foothold (Aristotle, Hist. An., 551b, 29); the economic basis, the value of property or land (so frequently in the papyri, cf. F. Preisigke, Wörterbuch der griechischen Papyruskunden, II, col. 672); treasure, substantia bonorum operum (4 Esd. 8:36); life's starting point, the sidereal hour of birth, a military outpost (Nah. 2:7 LXX; 1 Sam. 13:23), garrison (Hdt. 8, 91), seat (for enedra; Socrates, Historia Ecclesiastica, 3, 7), substance (Pss. 88:48; 138:15 LXX); material substance (Chrysippus, SVF II, 503; Arius Didymus, SVF II, 163 f., 8 f.); essence (Ps. Sol. 17:24); stock, perhaps even source.

(b) As a human attitude hypostasis means putting oneself between, holding one's ground, enduring (Polyb. 4, 50, 10); anhypostata, what one cannot withstand (Polyb. 4, 8, 10), e.g. the endurance of torment (Josephus, Ant., 18, 24); a bold venture, enterprise (together with hormē [impulse, assault], Aelianus, Frag, 56; Diodorus 16, 33, 1) venturing, pledging oneself (Hdt., 9, 34, 2; Eur., Iph. Aul., 360); entering upon a risky undertaking (Diodorus 1, 3, 7; 16, 32, 3; Hdt., 3, 127, 2); constancy (Aristotle, Metaph., 382b, 14). It is also related to hope, confidence (Ez. 19:5 LXX; Ruth 1:12; Polyb., 6, 55, 2; together with tolma [boldness, recklessness], resistance, Thuc., 1, 144, 5; 7, 66, 2) and strength to resist (Polyb., 6, 55, 2).

(c) In the physical realm hypostasis denotes what sets itself below, dregs (Aristotle, Part. An., 671b, 20; Metaph., 358a, 8; Menander in Socrates, Historia Ecclesiastica, 3, 7); residue, sediment (Hippocrates, Aphorismi, 4, 69); the sediment in the process of smelting (Polyb., 34, 9, 10 f.; Strabo, 3, 10).

(d) In philosophy hyphistamai can mean to be obvious, to show up against, to come into view. It denotes the transition from the latent to the manifest actualization (cf. Wis. 16:21), realization, being a substance, matter, or an object (Plut., De Communibus Notitiis, 50, 1085e). It then denotes the immanent Logos (→ word) in matter giving it form. Here the hypostasis is to be distinguished from the hypokeimenon, the basic primary matter which has not yet been formed. Thus God, as the world-logos, is the hypostasis of the world. In Neo-Pythagorean thought → number fulfilled this function (Sextus Empiricus, ad Math., 7, 93). hypostasis can thus mean the realization of an intention (Diodorus, 1, 3, 2; Josephus, Ap., 1, 1), the entering into a relationship of matter and quality, without which there can be nothing empirical and no real being. It can also thus mean the actualization of a body (Arius Didymus, Fr.Phys., 2, in H. Diels, Doxographi Graeci, 1879, 448, 12.)

2. In view of the above the following basic elements in the word emerge: (a) that which is permanently constituted; (b) the enduring relationship of the particular thing to reality; (c) virtually the same as essence (ousia), realization (cf. Aristotle, Top., 2, 4p, 161, 30), especially among the Stoics. hypostasis is substantial, concrete being between the merely actual but contingent and the realities that are merely mental.

epinoia (thought) and emphasis (appearance) do have hyparxis (existence), but not hypostasis (reality) (SVF III, 26; Diog. Laert., 7, 135; SVF III, 267, 3; Seneca, Letter 58; cf. Boethius, SVF, II, 332). This distinction evidently originated with Posidonius (c. 135–51 B.C.), cf. also the Oneirocriticus of Artemidorus (3, 14) in the 2nd cent. A.D.

Reality and appearance were thus opposed (Diog. Laert., 9, 91; Posidonius in Aetius 3, 5 [Diels, op. cit., 371, 27]; Aristotle, Mund., 4, 395a, 30). Time was thought of as noēma (thought, concept) and metron (measure) but not as hypostasis (Antiphon 10, 9; Aetius 1, 22, 6; cf. Diels, op. cit., 3, 18b, 22). Here too belongs Philo who said that the augē (light) of fire had no reality or hypostasis of itself (Aet.Mund., 88; cf. 92). In the Middle Platonists (c. 50 B.C.–A.D. 250) hypostasis means the manifestation of the world spirit or world soul. According to Albinus (10, 2p; 167, 17 ff.), there is a hypostasis which belongs to being. For the Peripatetics hypostasis meant that which gives stability to the concrete, individual thing. It was thus not far removed from substantia.

OT The LXX shows how in the Hel. period a complex word like hypostasis had become a fashionable term comparable with the word "existence" today. The 20 instances represent 15 different Heb. equivalents, which in itself is something rare. In the 1st and 2nd centuries B.C. hypostasis was already a current philosophical term. This may explain its use for so many Heb. words which differ considerably in meaning.

1. In a more general sense it is used as follows: for mā'ᵃmāḏ, ground under water on which one can stand (Ps. 68:3 [69:2]); yᵉqûm, living being (Deut. 11:6); ḥeleḏ, duration of life (Pss. 38:6 [39:5]; 88:48 [89:47]); miḥyâh, food, sustenance (Jdg. 6:4); kᵉnā'âh, load, pack (Jer. 10:17); maṣṣāḇ, outpost (1 Sam. 14:4); maṣṣēḇâh, pillar (Ezek. 26:11); ruqqamtî, lit. I was (when an embryo) woven (Ps.138[139]:15); t^e_kûnâh, arrangement (Ezek. 43:11).

2. It is used in a more philosophical sense for sôḏ, council, group of intimates (Jer. 23:22); maśśā', burden (Deut. 1:12); tôḥeleṯ, expectation, hope (Ps. 38[39]: 8); and tiqwâh, hope (Ezek. 19:5). These last two Heb. equivalents give the term hypostasis a new meaning within the compass of scripture. The elements of hope and confidence are important for understanding NT usage.

NT hypostasis occurs in the NT only 5 times. The reason for this may well be that, up to the author of Heb., the NT writers were not interested in philosophical trains of thought.

1. 2 Cor. 9:4 says "lest if some Macedonians come with me and find that you are not ready, we be humiliated – to say nothing of you – for being so confident [en tē hypostasei tautē, lit. in this hypostasis]" (RSV). This interpretation follows that of A. Plummer, The Second Epistle of St Paul to the Corinthians, ICC 1915, 255; cf. P. Bachmann, Der 2. Brief an die Korinther, 1922⁴, ad loc. H. Lietzmann takes it to mean confidence (An die Korinther I,II. HNT 9 1949⁴, 137). Both Lietzmann and Plummer appeal to Ruth 1:12; Ps. 38[39]:8; Ezek. 19:5; Heb. 3:14; 11:1. This meaning is, however, rare. RSV translates en tautē tē hypostasei tēs kauchēseōs (2 Cor. 11:17) as "in this boastful confidence." But it may be asked whether the meaning in both passages should not be "enterprise" or "venture".

2. Compared with Paul, the use of hypostasis in Heb. is more theologically significant.

(a) The term is important in christology in Heb. 1:3: "He reflects the glory of God and bears the very stamp of his nature [charaktēr tēs hypostaseōs autou], upholding the universe by the word of his power" (RSV). H. W. Montefiore translates this as "the exact representation of God's being" (A Commentary on the Epistle to the Hebrews, 1964, 35). J. Héring comments: "He is not merely like the Father, He is of the same essence, although subordinate to the Father" (The Epistle to the Hebrews, 1970, 5). F. F. Bruce comments: "Just as the glory is really in the effulgence, so the substance (Gk. hypostasis) of God is really in Christ, who is its impress, its exact representation and embodiment. What God essentially is, is made manifest in Christ. To see Christ is to see what the Father is like" (Commentary on the Epistle to the Hebrews, NLC 1964, 6). He holds that hypostasis here means "substance" or "real essence" in contrast to what merely appears to be.

(b) RSV translates Heb. 3:14: "For we share in Christ, if only we hold our first confidence [tēn archēn tēs hypostaseōs] to the end." Some manuscripts have tēn archēn tēs hypostaseōs autou. This suggests that the copyists of these manuscripts understood the word in the same sense as in Heb. 1:3 and that the thought they intended was to hold to Christ's essential being. The phrase might thus be translated "the basis, his substance." One manuscript, perhaps referring to v. 6 and 1 Tim. 5:12 replaces hypostaseōs by pisteōs (faith). But the thought of the passage is that of confidence (cf. 1 above; F. F. Bruce, op. cit., 67). The thought is similar to that of patience (6:12) and perseverence (12:1).

(c) From the instances cited so far, it may be seen how different are the uses of hypostasis in Heb. The meaning in Heb. 1:3 and 3:14 is not necessarily determinative for Heb. 11:1: "Now faith is the hypostasis of things hoped for, the conviction [elenchos] of things not seen." The following alternative translations may be considered:

(i) Confidence, expectation, confident trust in what is hoped for. The gen. would thus be understood as an objective gen. This interpretation is adopted by B. Weiss, Der Brief an die Hebräer, KEK 1897; E. Riggenbach, Der Brief an die Hebräer, 1913; J. Moffatt, The Epistle to the Hebrews, ICC 1924; and H. Windisch, Der Hebräerbrief, HNT 1931. In favour of this interpretation is Heb. 10:38, where faith and shrinking back are contrasted ("but my righteous one shall live by faith, and if he shrinks back, my soul has no pleasure in him").

(ii) Pledge, security, guarantee, assurance. C. Spicq takes it as the "guarantee of what is hoped for" (L'Épître aux Hébreux, II, 1953, 337). Montefiore sees it as "certainty concerning what is hoped for" (op. cit., 185). ARV translates it: "Now faith is assurance of things hoped for, a conviction of things not seen" (cf. F. F. Bruce, op. cit., 277). "Faith is confident assurance of the things we hope for" (Arndt, 854). RSV has "assurance."

(iii) Realization, actualization (cf. H. Dörrie, "HYPOSTASIS: Wort- und Bedeutungsgeschichte", Nachrichten der Akademie der Wissenschaften in Göttingen, philologisch-historische Klasse, 1955, No. 3; cf. Vulg. sperandarum substantia rerum, so also various fathers). Héring takes it as "essence" or "substance" as in 1:3 "In hyperbolic language, which highlights the Christian's absolute certainty that the divine promises will be fulfilled, the writer declares that faith already grasps the substance of what is promised" (op. cit., 98 f.). Riggenbach rejects the idea of a literal realization, however, on the grounds that, "The thought that faith gives a present existence to things hoped for in the future . . . brings faith very close to illusion" (ad loc.).

In support of (i) above, H. Windisch refers to the context, especially the preceding verse, and sees hypostasis as a confident reliance in contrast to the idea of shrinking back (hypostolē). There, however, the contrast is between pistis (→ faith) and hypostolē. Heb. 11 proceeds to pile up a series of examples. Faith does not only grasp an event, an act of God like the creation (11:3); it also shows itself in events. The more pleasing sacrifice and walk of Abel, the construction of the ark, the saving of Noah, Abraham's obedience in going forth and life as a sojourner, the sacrifice of Isaac, the blessing of the patriarchs, Moses' severance with the Egyptians, the saving of the firstborn of Israel by the Passover blood, the crossing of the Red Sea, the conquest of Jericho, and the rescue of Rahab – these were all events, saving acts, the history of the people of God, something new and unique on earth. Admittedly, the goal of all the hope still lay ahead. What is reported is not the komizesthai, the obtaining, the actual fulfilment of the promises. The people in the account are guarantees of their ultimate realization for the people of God. For this reason those addressed are exhorted not to neglect meeting together (10:25), and to remain with the people of God, in whom faith brings about a new reality and through whom God's deeds are wrought.

It is to be noted in 11:1 that elenchos ou blepomenōn ("a proving of [or conviction about] unseen things," Arndt, 248) stands in parallel. This could not be said of mere confidence. The question may be asked, whether hypostasis is not to be interpreted in the light of elenchos.

Since Heb. 11 follows the pattern of early Jewish enumeration of examples (cf. Wis. 10; Sir. 44–50; 4 Macc. 16:16–23), it must be asked, whether its concept of faith does not come near to that of Judaism. In Judaism a distinction was drawn between ṣ^edḳûṯ tôrâh and ṣ^edḳûṯ 'ᵉmûnāh (the righteousness of the law and the righteousness of faith). Both were, therefore, known. Paul gladly made use of the terminology. However, he understood righteousness by the law to be formal, external behaviour, corresponding to the demands of the law. Righteousness by faith likewise corresponded to the divine requirement, but it was characterized and made possible by faith.

It may be noted that throughout Heb. 11 faith is qualified by the instrumental dat. ("by faith . . ."). This faith is seen as the relationship to the commands and promises of God which made possible the acts and behaviour of the person concerned. It is that by which what is hoped for becomes a reality piece by piece in the contemporary world. According to Dörrie, faith brings about things which are not yet there or which are para physin (against nature). "Faith bestows on that which we hope for the full certainty of future realization. Faith bestows on what we do not see the full certainty of proof." The word elpizomenōn in the expression "things hoped for" is not an objective gen., as if the thing hoped for became real. Rather it is a subjective gen. The thing hoped for works through faith and produces action and attitudes. Thus Abraham hoped for a future city and therefore chose the life of a sojourner.

G. Harder

→ Empty (for exegesis of Phil. 2), → Image

(a). J. Behm, morphē, TDNT IV 742–59; G. Bornkamm, "On the Understanding of the Christ-hymn (Philippians 2.6–11)," Early Christian Experience, 1969, 112–22; O. Cullmann, The Christology of the New Testament, 1963²; G. Kittel, eidos, TDNT II 373 ff.; D. M. MacKinnon, "Substance in christology – a cross-bench view," in S. W. Sykes and J. P. Clayton, eds., Christ, Faith and History, 1972, 279–300; I. H. Marshall, "The Christ-Hymn in Philippians 2:5–11," TB 19, 1968, 104–27; R. P. Martin, Carmen Christi: Philippians ii. 5–11 in Recent Interpretation and in the Setting of Early Christian Worship, 1967; and Philippians, 1959; C. F. D. Moule, "Further Reflections on Philippians 2:5–11," in W. W. Gasque and R. P. Martin, eds., Apostolic History and the Gospel (F. F. Bruce Festschrift), 1970, 264–77; J. Schneider, schēma, TDNT VII 954–58; D. H. Wallace, "A Note on morphē," ThZ 22, 1966, 19 ff.; R. I. Witt, "Hypostasis", Amicitiae Corolla (Festschrift R. Harris), 1933, 319 ff.; commentaries on 2 Corinthians by A. Plummer (ICC), 1915; and P. E. Hughes (NLC), 1962; commentaries on Hebrews by J. Moffatt (ICC), 1924; B. F. Westcott, 1892²; H. W. Montefiore (BNTC) 1964; F. F. Bruce (NLC), 1965; J. Héring, 1970.

(b). C. Arpe, "Substantiae," Philologus, 1940, 65 ff.; P. Bachmann, Der 2. Brief an die Korinther, 1922⁴; H. Cremer and J. Kögel, Biblisch-theologisches Wörterbuch der neutestamentlichen Gräzität, 1923¹¹ (s.v. hypostasis); M. Dibelius, An die Philipper, HNT 11, 1937³; R. Deichgräber, Gotteshymnus und Christushymnus in der frühen Christenheit, 1967; H. Dörrie, Hypostasis. Wort- und Bedeutungsgeschichte, Nachdrücke der Akademie der Wissenschaften, Göttingen, 1955, 35 ff.; and "Zu Hebr. 11, 1," ZNW 46, 1955, 196 ff.; E. Grässer, Der Glaube im Hebräerbrief, 1965; E. Güttgemanns, Der leidende Apostel und sein Herr, 1966; J. Hempel, Gott und Mensch im Alten Testament, 1936; J. Jervell, Imago Dei, 1960; E. Käsemann, "Kritische Analyse von Phil. 2, 5–11," ZTK 47, 1950, 313 ff. (= Exegetische Versuche und Besinnungen, I, 1960, 51 ff.); E. Lohmeyer, Der Brief an die Philipper, KEK 9, 1930⁸; W. F. Otto, Die Götter Griechenlands, 1929; R. Reitzenstein, Die hellenistischen Mysterienreligionen, 1927²; E. Riggenbach, Der Brief an die Hebräer, 1922³; A. Schlatter, Der Glaube im Neuen Testament, 1927⁴, 614 ff.; and Paulus, der Bote Jesu, 1938⁴; C. Spicq, L'Épître aux Hebreux, II, 1953; G. Strecker, "Redaktion und Tradition im Christushymnus Phil. 2, 6–11," ZNW 55, 1964, 63 ff.; H. F. Weber, Eschatologie und Mystik im Neuen Testament, 1930; B. Weiss, Der Brief an die Hebräer, KEK 13, 1897⁶; H. Windisch, Der Hebräerbrief, HNT 14, 1931².

Freedom

ἐλευθερία

ἐλευθερία (eleutheria), freedom, liberty; ἐλεύθερος (eleutheros), free, independent, not bound; ἐλευθερόω (eleutheroō), to free, set free; ἀπελεύθερος (apeleutheros), freedman.

CL The noun eleutheria is derived from the adj. eleutheros. O. Schrader derives it from the Indo-Germanic leudh-*, belonging to the people, and thus not subject. It is connected with Lat. liber (free), and Schrader links it with Old High German liut, Modern German Leute, people (Reallexikon der indogermanischen Altertumskunde, II 1929², 454 f.; but cf. Liddell–Scott, 532). In so far as a man belongs to the people, he is a free citizen as contrasted with a slave or foreigner. eleutheria thus means freedom, independence, in the sense of being independent of others, being able to dispose. This way of speaking arose originally in contrast to the bondage of → slaves. Similarly, the adj. eleutheros means free, not bound, of free birth. It also indicates someone who is his own master. Later the noun and the adj. could occasionally be used to denote the mental attitude which makes use of freedom. It could be used (as it mostly was) in the good sense of noble, being in control of oneself, magnanimous, generous. But it could also be used in the less frequent and bad sense of being reckless, or unrestrained. The adj. apeleutheros follows the original sense and denotes a freedman, one who is not free by birth. This was basic to the Gk. idea. The corresponding vb. eleutheroō means to free, to set free, but not exclusively in relation to slaves. It could also refer to freeing someone from any bond which prevented them from acting freely.

1. In secular Gk. eleutheros has primarily a political sense. The eleutheros is the full citizen who belongs to the polis, the city state, in contrast to the slave who did not enjoy full rights as a citizen. Freedom consists in his right to participate fully in public debates over civic matters. It is the right of free speech, parrhēsia → openness, boldness, frankness. He can decide about his own affairs within the polis. On numerous occasions, Aristotle spoke of the Gk. polis as the community of the free. He considered freedom to be the essential good of the polis. But in order to preserve this freedom, the → law (nomos) is required as the principle of order. Freedom and law are thus not contradictory opposites. They belong together and qualify each other. The constant danger is rejection of the law in the name of a misconceived freedom which is purely arbitrary, because it is willing to grant itself more freedom than it is willing to grant to others. This idea of freedom was naturally applied to relations between states which gave rise to the idea of sovereignty. (See further H. Schlier, TDNT II 487–92.)

2. In Stoic philosophy this political idea of freedom was transformed through the collapse of the polis and the corresponding idea of society. Freedom was understood in a philosophical and religious sense. For the Stoic, man in the last analysis was not in control of external things, like the body, money, honour, and political freedom. eleutheria therefore means rather withdrawal from the apparent reality of this world. It signifies an asceticism not found in the NT. It is a deliberate surrender to the law and rule of the cosmos, or the deity that rules the cosmos. This means that man must free himself from whatever binds him too closely to the world: his passions (such as anger, anxiety and pity) and the fear of death. Freedom means that a man must be so adjusted and detached that he lives in complete harmony with the cosmos or the gods (Epict., Dissertationes, 4, 1, 89 f.). He thus masters himself completely and transcends the cosmos in his inner self. This freedom must be perpetually renewed through constant struggle and unending effort. (See further H. Schlier, TDNT II 493–96.)

3. The mystery religions had their own answer to the question of freedom. Through the cultic rites, the initiate was freed from this hopeless world and obtained a part in the destiny of the deity (→ Knowledge, art. ginōskō; G. Wagner, Pauline Baptism and the Pagan Mysteries, 1967).

OT 1. In the LXX, eleutheria and its cognates are used only in the context of → slavery (Exod. 21:2, 5, 27; Lev. 19:20; Deut. 15:12 f.; and often), prisoners of war (Deut. 21:14), and once with reference to exemption from obligations (1 Sam. 17:25). It is striking that it is not found in connection either with the liberation of Israel from Egypt or the return of Israel from exile. The political use of eleutheria is apparently foreign to the LXX. Saul's proclamation of rewards to the victor over Goliath included making "his father's house free in Israel" (1 Sam. 17:25). The ḥōrîm were "nobles" (RSV) and are called eleutheroi, free (1 Ki. 21:8, 11; cf. Neh. 13:17; Jer. 36[29]:2). These references indicate that under the monarchy the Israelites were not free subjects, but were the king's slaves (1 Sam. 8:10–18). Only a few privileged men stood out as free. Everything here belongs to the general context of slavery.

The question of slavery in Israel is to be understood in the context of Yahweh's lordship over his people. Through the ordinances that he has given to his people, Yahweh protects the helpless and weak, including the slaves. Deut. 15:13 ff. relates Yahweh's intervention on behalf of slaves to the liberation of Egypt from Israel. An enslaved Israelite could never become a person's property in Israel. After six years he was to be set free without payment (Ex. 21:2 ff.). According to Deut. 15:12 ff., the owner was even under obligation to make material provision for him as he went. Jer. 34:8 ff. (see especially v. 11) indicates that there were those in Israel who wanted to follow the pattern in the surrounding nations of keeping slaves for life. Because of these social injustices, Jeremiah derisively proclaimed to Israel "liberty to the sword, to pestilence, and to famine" (34:17; cf. Amos 2:6–16; 8:1 ff. etc.).

2. However, the conclusion should not be drawn from the narrow range of meaning of these words that the problem of freedom did not exist for Israel. Rather, Israel's freedom, and that of its individual members, was not considered as a subject separate from the redeeming and saving acts of God. Freedom for Israel meant being set free by Yahweh, as e.g. from bondage in Egypt (Exod. 20:2; Deut. 7:8). Thus it was identical with → redemption. It was not given by nature, but was always experienced as the gracious gift of God.

The fact that Israel, even as a political entity, existed on the basis of this act of liberation has several consequences.

(a) The gift of freedom remained bound to the giver. Desertion of Yahweh had the necessary consequence of loss of freedom. This is shown by the era of the judges which was an age of falling away from Yahweh, slavery, repentance and liberation (Jdg. 2:1 ff.). The history of the northern and southern kingdoms was similar. The Assyrian conquest was the consequence of the godlessness of the northern kingdom (2 Ki. 17:7–23), just as the Babylonian captivity was the consequence of the godlessness of the southern kingdom (2 Ki. 21:10–15; 22:19 f.; 23:25 ff.). The end of Israel's political freedom found intensely moving expression in the Lamentations of Jeremiah.

(b) The acts of God are fundamental to communal human life. "According to the Decalogue, freedom belongs, like life (Exod. 20:13), marriage (20:14), honour (20:16) and possessions (20:17), to the basic rights of man which Yahweh gives to, and maintains for, his covenant-people; for Exod. 20:15 originally forbad kidnapping" (E. Fahlbusch following A. Alt in EKL I, 1374). This high regard for freedom was extended to the stranger (Exod. 22:20–23:9; Lev. 19:33 f.) and to the slave (see above 1). The escaped slave was even to be afforded protection from his former master (Deut. 23:15 f.).

(c) The struggle to preserve this freedom, wrought by Yahweh and bound to him, played a repeated and significant role in the message of the prophets who developed it in their own particular ways (Isa. 1:23; 10:1–4; Jer. 7:5 f.; Amos 2:6 f.; 4:1 ff.; 5:7, 11 ff.; Mic. 3:1–3; 7:3; cf. G. von Rad, Old Testament Theology, II, 80 ff.). Enslavement by the nobility of whole strata of society which were originally free is a breach of divine law. The promise is given to those that are bound that the Messiah will come "to proclaim liberty to the captives and the opening of the prison to those that are bound" (Isa. 61:1).

3. In later Judaism and at the time of Jesus freedom was understood predominantly in an external, political sense (cf. the typical misunderstanding in Jn. 8:33). Freedom movements with a religious basis were repeatedly formed with the intention of implementing the promised freedom by force against the pagan secular authorities. The best known of these were the Maccabaeans in the second century B.C. who wanted to ensure religious freedom by political freedom, and the Zealots at the time of Jesus (cf. Acts 5:37; 21:38).

NT 1. (a) In the NT eleutheria occurs 11 times (7 in Paul and twice each in Jas. and the letters of Pet.), eleutheros 23 times (16 in Paul, twice in Jn., 3 times in Rev. and once each in Matt. and 1 Pet.), eleutheroō 7 times (5 in Paul and 2 in Jn.), and apeleutheros only at 1 Cor. 7:22. The words are thus found chiefly in Paul (especially in Rom. 6–8; 1 Cor. 7–10; and Gal. 2–5) and Jn. 8:32–36. They are entirely absent from the synoptic vocabulary, apart from Matt. 17:26.

(b) NT usage exhibits some interesting nuances. eleutheria is never used in the secular sense of political freedom. From this it may be inferred that the recovery of Israel's political freedom no longer played any part in the thinking of the NT writers. Jesus was no political messiah. The NT also dissociates itself from the idea of freedom as power to do with oneself and one's life whatever one wants. eleutheria is to be seen in the light of "the glorious liberty of the children of God" (Rom. 8:21). It is present "where the Spirit of the Lord is" (2 Cor. 3:17). The term means "the freedom which we have in Christ Jesus" (Gal. 2:4), the freedom for which "Christ has set us free" (Gal. 5:1). When Jas. 1:25 and 2:12 speak of "the law of freedom", eleutheria means the new way of life in which man lives in accordance with the will of God. Even the vb. eleutheroō is used in the NT exclusively for the act which occurs or has occurred through Jesus: "The truth will make you free" (Jn. 8:32), "having been set free from sin" (Rom. 6:18, cf. 22).

On the other hand, eleutheros has mostly the secular sense of being free in contrast to being a slave (Gal. 3:28; Eph. 6:8; Col. 3:11; Rev. 6:15), or being independent with regard to a law (Rom. 7:3). Gal. 4:22 f. is thus used with a double meaning and leads in Gal. 4:26, 31; 5:1 to the specifically NT idea of being free in Christ. The characteristic of this free man is not the contrast with the slave but the fact that, as a free man, he is at the same time the slave of Christ (1 Pet. 2:16; 1 Cor. 9:19; cf. Paul's self-designation in Rom. 1:1; Phil. 1:1). The apeleutheros kyriou (freedman of the Lord) is at the same time the doulos Christou (slave of Christ) (1 Cor. 7:22).

2. (a) What does freedom mean? In contrast to the secular Gk. mind, the NT sees man as basically unfree (Rom. 6:20; 2 Pet. 2:19; Jn. 8:39). It denies him all possibility of being able to free himself and order his life, as if he were not in bondage. Man's perennial efforts to take himself in hand, however he attempts it, lead to the greatest bondage in which man misses what he was meant to be (Matt. 16:25; Jn. 12:15). Man's true freedom does not consist of the unfettered power to direct his life, either in a political or in a Stoic sense. It lies in life with God, lived as it was originally intended by God for man (Rom. 6:22; Gal. 5:1, 13; 1 Pet. 2:16). He only gains this as he denies himself (Matt. 16:24). Paradoxically, the free man does not belong to himself (1 Cor. 16:19; 9:19; 1 Pet. 2:16). He belongs to him who has set him free (Rom. 6:18, 22; Gal. 5:1), "who for their sake died and was raised" (2 Cor. 5:15). The NT idea of freedom thus follows on from the OT. The gift of freedom is bound to the giver. "For all things are yours . . . and you are Christ's and Christ is God's" (1 Cor. 3:21, 23). This subjection is at the same time an alliance. Its realm even extends to the supernatural powers and rulers which are robbed of their absolute authority, because they have been conquered by Christ and can no longer separate man from Christ (Rom. 8:38; Gal. 4:3, 9; 1 Cor. 15:24). The impenetrable horizon becomes transparent in the light of this freedom.

(b) What is man freed from? Man is bound in that he is subject to the powers of this age (→ Time, art. aiōn; cf. Eph. 6:12; Matt. 17:18; Lk. 13:16; 1 Pet. 5:8). The NT idea of freedom goes far beyond that of the OT in that it sees freedom as liberation from the manifold powers which suppress true humanity: sin (Rom. 6:18–22; 8:2 ff.; Jn. 8:31–36); → Satan (Matt. 12:22; Lk. 13:16; Eph. 6:12); the → law (Rom. 7:3–6; 8:3; Gal. 2:4; 4:21–31; 5:1–13); and → death (Rom. 6:20–23; 8:21). It is a liberation from the → "old man" (Rom. 6:6; Eph. 4:22; Col. 3:9).

Sin in the NT is not a single act which with time may pass and disappear. It has a permanent and irrevocable bondage as its consequence for the man who once lends himself to it (2 Pet. 2:19). He is no longer free to serve God; he is compelled to sin. Man is meant to be free from this compulsion. But there is no magical insurance against sin. The believer is called to a constant struggle with sin (Rom. 6:12, 19; 1 Cor. 6:18 f.; Eph. 6:10 ff.; and often). He is even exposed to the tempter (2 Cor. 2:11; 1 Thess. 3:5) and remains sinful. Side by side with the indicative statement that "we have died to sin" (Rom. 6:2) there is the imperative to give no room to sin (6:12) and to live in Christ to God (6:11). These statements are not in contradiction. The imperative follows on from the indicative.

As liberation from the compulsion to sin, eleutheria (Rom. 6:14, 18) opens up the hitherto impossible possibility of serving God (cf. Jas. 1:25; 2:12). What previously separated God and man, and thus stood in the way of true humanity, is removed.

The OT law declared to man God's irrevocable intention of leading him to life in fellowship with God (Rom. 7:10; 10:5). But in fact it had the opposite effect, because it prompted man more than ever to sin (Rom. 7:7–13) and revealed his profound godlessness (Rom. 5:20; Gal. 3:19). Hence, there is no one just who can stand before God's law (Rom. 3:19 ff., 23). What was to serve as man's way of salvation became a curse to him (Gal. 3:10; Rom. 7:10). Christ has freed man from this curse (Gal. 3:13). However, the fact that man may be free from the law does not mean that the law is completely set aside (Rom. 3:31; 6:15; Matt. 5:17). It remains for the believer the expression of God's holy will (Rom. 7:12, 14; Matt. 5:18 f.), which is now to find its fulfilment in love (Jn. 13:34 f.; Gal. 5:13 f.). But it is no longer the impossible way to life. As a way of salvation, the law had its end in Christ (Rom. 10:4). Man who lives in servitude under the law (Gal. 4:3) can through Christ (v. 5) live as a son and heir (v. 7). Therefore, anyone who tries to resurrect the law as a way of salvation by trying to fulfil its demands stands under a curse (Gal. 1:8 f.; 2:18 f.; 3:1–5; 5:11 ff.).

Death is the harvest which man reaps from his life under sin and the law (Rom. 6:21, 23; 7:10 f., 23 f.; 1 Cor. 15:56). Death has a double meaning in that it denotes death in time and in eternity (Rom. 8:6). Just as Rom. 6 presents freedom from sin, and Rom. 7 freedom from the law, Rom. 8 follows the sequence by presenting freedom from death (cf. 1 Cor. 15:26). The thought here, as in the case of these other powers, is not their utter abolition, but liberation from the inevitability of their compulsion and claim. Christians must also die. But for them the sting of death is removed (1 Cor. 15:55), because they know of the resurrection of Christ as the pledge of their own resurrection. Freedom from death means that man is promised and assured of a future which lies in Christ beyond himself and his own death. The certainty that nothing more can stand between him and God (Rom. 8:38 f.) and that death in all its finality is overcome can liberate man from the fear of death. It is no longer the utter annihilation of his existence.

(c) The means of freedom. The liberation of man does not lie within the realm of his own capacities. It does not come about by man's reflection on himself, an act of the will, or by any deed of this sort or that. For this reason there is in the NT no summons to contend for freedom. It is already given in what Christ has done for us (Gal. 5:1). Only the Son can open up the possibility of existence in eleutheria (Jn. 8:36). It is realized by him in the event of the cross (Gal. 3:13). But for man it only becomes a present reality, when he opens his life to the call of the gospel (2 Cor. 5:20 f.). This comes about when proclamation leads to faith and to an abiding bond to Christ and his word (Jn. 8:31 f.; Rom. 10:14 ff.). The Christian message of Christ's liberating act on the cross summons man from the only possible way of life open to him kata sarka, after the flesh, i.e. according to human standards and thinking. It calls him to live now kata pneuma, according to the → Spirit (Rom. 8:12 f.; Gal. 6:8). True freedom exists only where the Holy Spirit works in a man, becoming the principle of his life, and where man does not block his working (2 Cor. 3:17; Rom. 8:1 ff.; Gal. 5:18).

(d) The goal of freedom. This freedom can be misused as "a pretext for evil" (1 Pet. 2:16). This occurs where freedom is misunderstood in the Gk. sense of man being the master of all his decisions. This leads to libertinism or antinomianism instead of serving one's neighbour (Gal. 5:13 f.). The man who is truly free shows his freedom in being free for the service of God (1 Thess. 1:9), → righteousness (Rom. 6:18 ff.), and his fellow man (1 Cor. 9:19; Jas. 1:25). "For the love of Christ controls us" (1 Cor. 5:14). The man who is free is a doulos Christou, a slave of Christ (1 Cor. 7:22; Rom. 1:1; Phil. 1:1). As Luther put it, "A Christian is a perfectly free lord of all, subject to none. A Christian is a perfectly dutiful servant of all, subject to all" (The Freedom of a Christian [1520], cf. J. Dillenberger, ed., Martin Luther: Selections from his Writings, 1961, 53). This service can take many forms (Gal. 5:22; 1 Cor. 9:19 ff.). The ultimate decisive factor is that it should be done in love (1 Cor. 13). The deeper a man penetrates into the "law of liberty", the more free he becomes for such action (Jas. 1:25; 2:12).

(e) The political demand for freedom. Strangely enough to modern man, political freedom plays a quite subordinate role in the NT. Jesus unambiguously swept aside all misunderstanding here. He and his kingdom do not live by this external freedom. Otherwise, it would not have been so readily abandoned (Jn. 19:36). Even in those places where Jesus stressed his earthly authority (Matt. 28:18), no conclusions were drawn about claims for political freedom. He disappointed all the late Jewish expectation of a political messiah. His teaching had a quite different aim. The kind of freedom he preached was that which comes through returning to the Father – not freedom with regard to men (Matt. 4:17; Lk. 24:47; Jn. 8:34 ff. and often).

For the Christian, freedom is no longer a highest good (Heb. 13:14) which, if need be, is justified by resort to war and force. He knows of a freedom in Christ in which he can live even while the world and mankind remain unchanged, although it is often hidden among sufferings (Jn. 8:31, 38; Rom. 8:18–23).

At the same time, the fact cannot be ignored that within the church, as with the prophets, there was a move towards freedom in the sense of equal rights for all. The old distinctions which reflected the environment of the ancient world between the free man and the slave (cf. Phlm.), and the behaviour of men and women (1 Cor. 14:34 following on from OT law), still remained. Yet in the last analysis such distinctions are invalid (Gal. 3:28; 1 Cor. 12:13; Col. 3:11). The freedom granted by God was given to operate above all in the communal life of the people of God. For the Christian → church is the community of free men (Gal. 4:21–31).

J. Blunck

→ Courage, → Election, → Openness

(a). K. Barth, CD III, 4 (dealing with "The command of God the Creator" in relation to various aspects of freedom); S. G. F. Brandon, Jesus and the Zealots, 1967; R. Bultmann, Theology of the New Testament, I, 1952, 330–52; and "The Significance of the Idea of Freedom for Western Civilization," Essays, 1955, 305–25; H. von Campenhausen, Ecclesiastical Authority and Spiritual Power in the Church of the First Three Centuries, 1969; Concilium 6, 10, 1974 (whole volume devoted to "Liberation and Faith"); O. Cullmann, The State in the New Testament, 1957; C. H. Dodd, The Gospel and the Law of Christ, 1947; W. Eichrodt, Theology of the Old Testament, II. 1967 (see index); R. Guardini, Freedom, Grace and Destiny, 1961; M. Hengel, Was Jesus a Revolutionist?, 1971; Victory over Violence, 1973; and Judaism and Hellenism, I–II, 1974; C. Johansson, Concepts of Freedom in the Old Testament, 1965; E. Käsemann, Jesus Means Freedom, 1969; and "The Cry for Liberty in the Worship of the Church," Perspectives on Paul, 1971, 122–37; J. Kosnetter, "Freedom," EBT I 280–86; H. Küng, The Church and Freedom, 1965; Martin Luther, The Freedom of a Christian (1520) in Luther's Works, 31, 1957, 327–77 (also in other editions); J. Moltmann, Theology and Joy, 1973; J. C. Murray, The Problem of Religious Freedom, 1965; G. von Rad, Old Testament Theology, II, 1965 (see index); K. Rahner, "Freedom in the Church," Theological Investigations, II, 1963, 89–107; and Free Speech in the Church, 1959; A. Richardson, The Political Christ, 1973; H. Schlier, eleutheria, TDNT II 487–502; Schürer I (see index); H. Thielicke, Theological Ethics, I, 1968; II, 1969 (see indexes).

(b). K. Barth, Das Geschenk der Freiheit, 1953; O. Betz, Gefährliche Freiheit, 1961; G. Bornkamm, "Christliche Freiheit," Paulus Studien, BEvTh 16, 1952, 133 ff.; W. Brandt, Freiheit im Neuen Testament, 1932; H. von Campenhausen and G. Bornkamm, Bindung und Freiheit in der Ordnung der Kirche, 1959; E. Dinkler, "Zum Problem der Ethik bei Paulus (1. Kor. 6, 1–11)," ZTK 49, 1952, 167 ff.; R. Egenter, Von der Freiheit der Kinder Gottes, 1949; E. Fahlbusch, "Freiheit," EKL I 1371 ff.; E. Fuchs, Die Freiheit des Glaubens, Röm. 5–8 ausgelegt, BEvTh 14, 1949; and "Freiheit," RGG^{3} II 1101 ff.; H. Gollwitzer, Forderungen der Freiheit; Aufsätze und Reden zur politischen Ethik, 1964^2; E. Grässer, "Freiheit und apostolisches Wirken bei Paulus," EvTh 15, 1955, 333 ff.; M. Hengel, Die Zeloten, 1961; W. Joest, Das Problem des Tertius Usus Legis und die neutestamentliche Paränese, 1951; H. Jonas, Augustin und das paulinische Freiheitsproblem, 1930; E. Käsemann, Exegetische Versuche und Besinnungen, I, 1964^3, 263 ff.; S. Lyonnet, Liberté chrétienne et loi nouvelle selon S. Paul, 1954; C. Maurer, "Glaubensbindung und Gewissensfreiheit im Neuen Testament," ThZ 17, 1961, 107–17; O. Michel, "Der antike und der christliche Freiheitsbegriff," Universitas 1, 1946, 1–17; J. Michl, Freiheit und Bindung: Eine zeitgemässe Frage im Lichte des Neuen Testaments, 1950; M. Müller, "Freiheit," ZNW 25, 1926, 177 ff.; K. Niederwimmer, Der Begriff der Freiheit im Neuen Testament, 1966; F. Nötscher, "Schicksal und Freiheit," Biblica 40, 1959, 446–62; and "Schicksalsglaube in Qumran und Umwelt," BZ 3, 1959, 205–34; H. Ridderbos, "Vrijheid en wet volgens Paulus' brief aan de Galaten," Arcana Revelata (F. W. Grosheide Festschrift), 1951, 89–103; K. H. Schelkle, "Erwählung und Freiheit im Römerbrief nach der Auslegung der Väter," ThQ 131, 1951, 17–31 and 189–207; K. Stalder, Das Werk des Geistes in der Heiligung bei Paulus, 1961; C. Spicq, Charité et liberté dans le Nouveau Testament, 1961; and Théologie morale du Nouveau Testament, II, 1965, 623–64; R. Zorn, Das Problem der Freiheit, 1952.

Fruit, Fig, Thorn, Thistle

καρπός

καρπός (karpos), fruit; καρποφορέω (karpophoreō), bear fruit; ἄκαρπος (akarpos), unfruitful, fruitless.

CL In secular Gk. karpos (cf. Lat. carpo, pluck) is used especially of the fruit of the ground (Homer), but also often of the offspring of animals (Xenophon). It is also found in an extended sense for the result of an undertaking, whether good or ill: the outcome, consequence (Philo, Marcus Aurelius).

OT In the LXX karpos stands chiefly for the Heb. p^{e}rî which in the OT is used for the fruit of plants (e.g. Deut. 1:25; Mal. 3:11), but also for the fruit of the body, posterity (e.g. Gen. 30:2; Deut. 7:13; Mic. 6:7; Ps. 21:11). Finally it is used metaphorically for the fruit of an action (e.g. Hos. 10:13; Jer. 6:19; 17:10).

This last use was taken over especially in late Judaism. The righteous man brings forth good fruit; the unrighteous brings forth bad fruit. Commercial language utilized p^{e}rî and karpos in the sense of interest (as the fruit of a transaction), as also did theology with its growing emphasis on belief in the beyond. Thus in discussing sin, a distinction was drawn between the original stock or capital (so-called original sin; Heb. qeren) and interest (individual sins). Punishment of the former was reserved for the beyond; the latter was punished here and now, partly through giving birth to ever new sins to plague mankind.

NT 1. Primary Meaning. (a) karpos occurs in the NT 66 times, mostly in Matt. and hardly at all in the Pastoral and Catholic Epistles except Jas. It has its primary, simple meaning as the fruit of plants (Matt. 21:19 par.; 13:8 par.; Lk. 12:17) or the produce of the earth (Jas. 5:7, 18; cf. Lk. 20:10). Passages like Jas. 5 make it clear that man can prepare for and encourage the growth of fruit by his labours, but he can expect and receive it only as a gift. The → seed and harvest are bestowed upon him. To what extent the growth of fruit is removed from human will-power is also shown by the fact it ripens at its appointed time (→ kairos) (Matt. 21:34). Its form is not optional, but is determined from the first by the seed (cf. 1 Cor. 15:35 ff.), so that one may reason back from the fruit to the plant (Matt. 12:33 par.; cf. 7:16, 20). This applies not only to the species but to quality. Matt. especially contrasts good fruit (karpous kalous) with bad fruit (karpous ponērous) (Matt. 3:10; 7:17–19) or rotten fruit (karpon sapron) (Matt. 12:33; cf. Lk. 6:43). The point is to show that fruit which does not come up to expectation is useless and that which bears it (the tree, Matt. 7:19; Lk. 3:9; 13:6 ff.) is designated as unusable.

(b) karpos in the sense of fruit of the body, offspring, is found only in the Lucan writings (Lk. 1:42; Acts 2:30).

2. Extended Meaning. The passages under 1 (a) are not concerned with the picture of the processes of nature but with man before God. This applies even more to the remaining passages in which the idea of fruit is applied to man's life. These are often connected with the verbs poiein (do) and pherein (bear, bring forth). The verbal compound karpophorein (bear fruit) occurs 8 times in the Synoptics and Paul.

(a) When, according to the Synoptics, John the Baptist demanded good deeds from men as fruit of repentance (Matt. 3:8 par.), the use of the term fruit expressly indicates that it is not a question of deliberate, self-determined action on man's part. Rather it is that "fruit-bearing" which follows from his turning to God and the power of the Spirit working in him. When Jesus taught that true disciples are recognized as such precisely by their fruits (Matt. 7:16 ff.) which they bear in true discipleship, the meaning is that their faith shows itself alive in their love. In receiving divine love, they will love; in receiving forgiveness, they will forgive. In short, the sanctification which has come to them and is going on in them is expressed by their giving God the honour. At the same time they put at the disposal of others the benefit of the divine working in them through what they do and say. The graphic pronouncement, that every tree without fruit will be condemned in the judgment of God (Matt. 3:10; 7:19; Lk. 13:6), also raises the question of the outworking of faith in the man who has received the word. Those who check the growth of fruit or even hold back others from enjoying it have their deserts set before them.

(b) In Jn. the expression karpon pherein (bear fruit) is used especially in Jn. 15:2 ff., where Jesus' disciples' close fellowship with the Lord is seen as the secret of the power to bear fruit. His death is the soil out of which rich fruit grows (Jn. 12:24); his death on the cross brings about redemption for men. As the vine (i.e. here the tree of life), he sends through his branches that life-giving power which is the prerequisite and means of faith. Man can indeed accomplish moral and technical achievements by his natural gifts. But the "fruit of the gospel" (Luther) – that which God expects from man – can grow only from the soil of obedience, which essentially consists in recognition of the bond between creator and creature, established by the death of Christ. He no longer needs to consider his own achievements. Freed from the anxiety of failure, he is capable of the highest endeavour ("more fruit", Jn. 15:2, 5 8). Because the source of his capacity to bear fruit lies outside himself, the yield is certain. It counts and abides for eternal life (Jn. 4:36; 15:16).

(c) Paul recognizes the good deed as the fruit of faith, righteousness (karpos dikaiosynēs, Phil. 1:11; so too Heb. 12:11; Jas. 3:18) and light (tou phōtos, Eph. 5:9), produced by God himself, Jesus Christ or the Holy Spirit. Paul sharply distinguishes it from man's own striving to attain salvation (Gal. 5:22; Col. 1:10). The term ergon (→ work) which comes from the world of techniques and craftsmanship, signifying what man produces by his own efforts, is used comparatively seldom in a positive sense. On the other hand, karpos which comes from the realm of natural growth signifies that which grows as a matter of course, drawing on the life-giving power of the tree or soil (cf. automatē, of itself, Mk. 4:28). But this growth (→ Grow) as a sign of → life does not lie at man's disposal. In using this term, Paul wishes to stress that in those who have been received into the body of Christ, in whom the Spirit of Christ is active and who have a share in the gifts of this living fellowship, the outworking – the fruit – appears naturally, because it is not something manufactured. While believers in Christ thus bring their fruit to God and live for him, the power of sinful desires can only bear fruit for death (Rom. 7:4 f.).

(d) Where fruit is lacking, the NT uses – apart from its metaphorical use in Jude 12 – the adj. akarpos, unfruitful, fruitless, barren, unproductive (e.g. Mk. 4:19 par.; Tit. 3:14; 2 Pet. 1:8). akarpos is used to describe the works of darkness (Eph. 5:11) and also the state of the mind when prayer is made in tongues (1 Cor. 14:14).

(e) While karpos is widely used to express the outworking of faith in the witness and conduct of the individual and the church (→ Walk), Paul uses it in a further sense for the results of his own missionary work (Rom. 1:13; Phil. 1:22). It can even be understood in the sense that the apostles and, in particular, missionaries who are building up the churches by their labours "live by their fruits". They have a claim on maintenance by the churches (1 Cor. 9:7; 2 Tim. 2:6). In these passages – as in Matt. 21:41 ff.; Lk. 20:10 – fruit is seen as wages (cf. also Jn. 4:36).

(f) karpos occurs twice in Rev. 22:2. The picture of the tree of life, bearing fruit each month, represents the fullness of God's pervading presence in the new world, where shame and sin are overcome and all hindrances to the activity of the divine Spirit are removed. R. Hensel

συκῆ

συκῆ (sykē), fig, Ficus Carica, both the tree and the fruit.

CL The forms sykea and sykē are both found, and can refer to the resin of the pine or fir, as well as to the fig tree.

OT sykē is widely used in the LXX for the Heb. t^{e}'ēnâh for the tree, its fruit and its leaves (Gen. 3:7; Num. 13:24), especially as characteristic of the fruitfulness of the promised land (Deut. 8:8). sykē has wide parabolic (cf. Jdg. 9:10) and figurative extensions. It is figurative of ease and prosperity (cf. 1 Ki. 4:25) especially in the messianic age (Mic. 4:4; Zech. 3:10); it affords comparisons for that which is intrinsically desirable (Hos. 9:10), for renewal (Joel 2:22), that which fades (Isa. 34:4), and is easy to capture (Nah. 3:12). It is also a description of disappointed hopes (Hab. 3.17). Its destruction, like that of other trees and crops, is a picture of judgment (Hos. 2:12; Isa. 34:4; Jer. 5:17; 8:13; Joel 1:2–12). In Hos. 9:10 and Jer. 24 (cf. 29:17) it symbolizes the nation which otherwise is generally pictured as a vine. Mic. 7:1–6 depicts the corrupt state of the nation which is full of bitterness, mutual hostility and bloodshed, in terms of the absence of the fig when sought: "Woe is me! For I have become as when the summer fruit has been gathered, as when the vintage has been gleaned: there is no cluster to eat, no first-ripe fig which my soul desires" (v. 1). In Rab. circles the passage was sometimes applied to times of national crisis (Sotah 9:9, 15).

NT The reference to Jesus seeing Nathanael under the fig tree (Jn. 1:48, 50) is presumably literal (for speculations about its significance see C. F. D. Moule, JTS New Series, 5, 1954, 210 f.; R. E. Brown, The Gospel according to John, I, 1966, 83). The remaining references in the NT all have figurative and symbolic aspects.

Particular problems attend the interpretation of the cursing of the fig tree (Matt. 21:18–22; Mk. 11:12 ff.). As it stands, it is not only the sole miracle of destruction in the ministry of Jesus, but it also contains statements which at first sight place it beyond the bounds of credibility. T. W. Manson's view, classing it as "ill-tempered" and "incredible" ("The Cleansing of the Temple", BJRL 33, 1951, 271–82) and C. E. B. Cranfield's acceptance of the early notion that in an acted parable Jesus "used the fig tree to set forth the judgment which was about to fall on Jerusalem" (The Gospel according to St. Mark, 1959, 356) set the limits of interpretation. Undoubtedly Cranfield is right, but it is hardly enough for him to outflank the strong-point in Manson's position by saying that for Jesus to seek figs, where he knew there could be none, supplies the element of the incongruous which calls attention to the presence of a parable. Examination of the crucial sentence, "For it was not the season of figs", goes far to relieve the problem. First, "season" (kairos → Time) is to be understood as in Mk. 12:2 of the time of ingathering. Jesus is thus reported to have come by the tree when, by its show of leaves it ought to be in fruit, and, inasmuch as the harvest had not been gathered, the fruit should be showing on the tree. Secondly, the explanatory clause "for the time" (ho gar kairos, Mk. 11:13) should not be attached to the foregoing words, "he found nothing but leaves" (this is the root of Manson's incredulity), but to the words before that again, "if haply he might find anything." An explanatory clause of exactly this structure occurs in Mk. 12:12, where egnōsen gar ("for he knew") belongs to the preceding clause but one. R. H. Hiers sees a parallel with Lk. 19:40; cf. Matt. 21:15 f.: "If stones should now cry out to greet the Messiah, surely a fig tree might bear fruit out of season! For in the messianic age, should not all fruit be continually in season?" (" 'Not the Season for Figs' ", JBL 87, 1968, 400). He points out that the incident follows Jesus' entry into Jerusalem on the first Palm Sunday which he sees as the inauguration of the messianic age. A. de Q. Robin draws attention to the OT precedents for the association of the destruction of fig trees with judgment and the symbolic representation of Israel under the figure of figs ("The Cursing of the Fig Tree in Mark xi. A Hypothesis", NTS 8, 1961–62, 276–81). But in particular he sees Mic. 7:1–6 as "an appropriate summing-up of the attitude of the Jewish hierarchy to Jesus and to the impending treachery of Judas as the crisis of the Passion became imminent" (op. cit., 280). The spiritual state of the nation and its leaders was uppermost in Jesus' mind at this period (cf. Mk. 11:1; Lk. 19:41 ff.). It may be added that Jesus' allusion to the language of Mic. 7:6 in Matt. 10:21, 35 f.; Mk. 13:12; and Lk. 12:53 indicates that he saw the times in terms of the passage. The cursing of the fig tree is, therefore, not an isolated, incidental event, but an integral part of the symbolic acts of Jesus' final visit to Jerusalem, beginning with the entry on the ass (→ Animal) on the first Palm Sunday. It symbolizes judgment on the nation for its barren state, and is of a piece with the cleansing of the → temple which occurred at the same time.

Lk. does not record the cursing of the fig tree but contains a parable which presents a counterpart and which is placed some time before the time of the cursing. In Lk. 13:6 the fig tree symbolizes Israel which, despite tending, has so far failed to produce fruit. The master in the parable has sought fruit for the past three years (the period of Jesus' ministry?). But the vine-dresser asks for it to be spared one more year to give it a final chance to bear fruit. If not, he will cut it down. The context of Lk. 13:1–8 refers to disasters which have befallen people, with regard to which Jesus warns his hearers: "Unless you repent you will all likewise perish" (v. 5). The time of sparing corresponds to the time in which Israel is spared the final calamity of judgment, so giving it a final chance to bear fruit.

In Matt. 24:32 f., Mk. 13:28 and Lk. 21:29 the growth of the fig tree is seen as a sign of the approaching summer, the climax of which will be the time when the figs are ripe for gathering. This is the time when the Son of man will gather the elect (Mk. 13:27; cf. Matt. 24:31; Lk. 21:28), and come to take account (Mk. 13:34–37; cf. Matt. 24:36 ff.; Lk. 21:34 f.). If the references to the fig tree in the ministry of Jesus are connected, then the fig tree in Matt. 24:32 f., Mk. 13:28 and Lk. 21:29 is also a picture of Israel as it moves inevitably to the time when fruit will be sought and none found, reminiscent of the fig tree that was cursed.

Expectation of fruit also underlies Jas. 3:12, where the picture is one of expected natural (and thence, moral) consistency. In Rev. 6:13, as in the LXX, the picture suggests that which falls easily in judgment. J. A. Motyer

ἄκανθα

ἄκανθα (akantha), thorn; ἀκάνθινος (akanthinos), thorny, of thorn.

CL In general classical use for a thorn tree or bush, also for any prickle, whether of plant, animal (e.g. porcupine) or fish. Likewise, the adj. means thorny, made of thorn-wood, and is even used of "thorny questions".

OT The LXX uses the word with literal reference in Exod. 22:6; Cant. 2:2; Jdg. 8:7, 16. But the symbolic is never far away. Literal and symbolic combine in Gen. 3:18 where the growth of thorns symbolizes the new perversity of nature consequent upon the sin of man. The main figurative uses are for affliction (Ps. 31[32]:4, LXX only; Ezek. 28:24), that which is hazardous, full of difficulty (Prov. 15:19), painful or out of place (Prov. 26:9). "Thorns for grapes" typifies disappointed and blighted hopes (e.g. Isa. 5:2, 4, LXX only) and looks back to

Gen. 3:18 as its origin. Thorns are the wild growth when cultivation ceases (Isa. 5:6), not only physically but spiritually and religiously (e.g. Isa. 34:13; Hos. 10:8).

NT Literal blends with symbolic in the "crown of thorns" (Matt. 27:29) or "thorny crown" (Mk. 15:17; Jn. 19:5): Jesus is not only in intense suffering but bearing the fruit of the curse of Gen. 3:18. Thorns are the enemy of growth (Matt. 13:7) and spiritually are specified as the anxious care typical of this world, the deceptive allure of riches and all manner of desires (Matt. 13:22; Lk. 8:14). Spiritually, thorns evidence failure to respond to the word of God and reveal an unregenerate heart (Heb. 6:8). For botanical discussion see H. L. and A. N. Moldenke, Plants of the Bible, 1952. J. A. Motyer τρίβολος	τρίβολος (tribolos), thistle.

CL The root idea is "three-pointed", and tribolos is first a weapon with three spikes, then a spiked water plant, the water-caltrop, then a similar land plant, or a burr. It was metaphorically transferred to "sharp" tastes like vinegar, and sharp instrument, like threshing machines.

OT It appears in LXX in Gen. 3:18 with → akanthai; in 2 Sam. 12:31 "iron triboloi" are "harrows". In Prov. 22:5 triboloi makes the way of the wicked hazardous. On Hos. 10:8 cf. on akantha.

NT Occurring twice only in the NT, once (Matt. 7:16) it illustrates consistency in nature, applied figuratively to the moral life, and once in Heb. 6:8 as illustrative evidence of an unchanged heart, cf. on akantha. J. A. Motyer σκόλοψ	σκόλοψ (skolops), thorn.

CL The word skolops which is translated in 2 Cor. 12:7 as Paul's thorn in the flesh only occurs here in the NT and is not very common in secular Gk. It means something pointed, and is probably connected with skallo, hack. Originally it meant a pointed stake, used in defence (Homer, Od., 7, 45; Il., 8, 343) or upon which the head of any enemy could be stuck (Homer, Il., 18, 176 f.). It was used in a similar sense to stauros, → cross. But it is also found in the sense of a thorn or splinter in Aesop's Fables (279, 11), and this sense is well attested.

OT The meaning stake is not found in the LXX. skolops is found in Num. 33:55 ("But if you do not drive out the inhabitants of the land from before you, then those of them whom you let shall be as pricks in your eyes and thorns in your sides, and they shall trouble you in the land where you dwell") and Ezek. 28:24 ("As for the house of Israel there shall be no more a brier to prick [skolops pikrias] or a thorn to hurt [akantha odynēs] them among all their neighbours who have treated them with contempt. Then they will know that I am the Lord God"). See also Hos. 2:8 and Sir. 43:19.

NT In 2 Cor. 12 Paul refers to his own "visions and revelations" (v. 1) in evident reply to those at Corinth who vaunted their own spiritual experiences and decried Paul's foolishness and weakness (11:16 ff.). Whereas his opponents made much of power, Paul refrains from → boasting, "so that no one may think more of me than he sees in me or hears from me" (12:6). He then refers to his own experience. "And to keep me from being too elated by the abundance of revelations, a thorn was given me in the flesh, a messenger of Satan, to harass me, to keep me from being too elated" (12:7). Various theories have been put forward as to what this thorn was. For discussions and literature see Arndt 763 f.; G. Delling, skolops, TDNT V 411 ff.; P. E. Hughes, Paul's Second Epistle to the Corinthians, NLC 1962, 442–58; C. K. Barrett, The Second Epistle to the Corinthians, BNTC 1973, 314 ff. It has been suggested that it was a temptation to hate or covet. Some scholars take → flesh in the widest sense as the sphere of physical existence, and thus Paul need not refer to a physical ailment. He may refer to opponents or Satan behind his opponents. Physical ailments are not implied in the OT uses of the word. However, the context suggests weakness or hardship (12:9 f.; cf. 11:23–30). Epilepsy and some form of eye trouble are possible explanations, if the expression refers to a bodily ailment. In support of the latter some commentators refer to Gal. 4:13–15, where Paul refers to a "bodily ailment" and where he reminds the Galatians that formerly "you would have plucked out your eyes and given them to me." The theory of eye trouble may be supported by the reference to the "large letters" written with his own hand (Gal. 6:11). The reference to bearing in his body "the marks of Jesus" (Gal. 6:17) may refer to some physical illness or to afflictions suffered in the course of preaching the gospel. Luke the physician's attendance on Paul may have been due to his ailments. The fact that Paul was able to travel so much and endure great hardship does not by itself prove that he was in robust health; the whole context of 2 Cor. 11–12 is a celebration of triumph over disability and hardship.

The exact nature of the thorn in the flesh remains obscure. It is perhaps significant that Paul deliberately uses this apparently trivial expression in contrast with the → cross of Christ. Elsewhere he speaks of being crucified with Christ (Gal. 2:20). Here, however, the affliction which may have been severe is seen to be ultimately trivial. The case illustrates the the role of intercessory prayer. Paul did not regard it as wrong to pray for himself for alleviation. But in answer to his prayer the Lord said to him, "My grace is sufficient for you, for my power is made perfect in weakness" (v. 9). Paul does not see the Christian life as one which is spared all weakness and hardship. In response he declares: "I will all the more gladly boast of my weaknesses, that the power of Christ may rest upon me. For the sake of Christ, then, I am content with weaknesses, insults, hardships, persecutions, and calamities; for when I am weak, then I am strong" (vv. 9 f.). C. Brown

(a). R. Bultmann, The Gospel of John, 1971, 532 ff.; A. T. Hanson, "Christ the First Fruits, Christ the Tree," Studies in Paul's Technique and Theology, 1974, 104–25; F. Hauck, karpos, TDNT III 614 ff.; R. H. Hiers, " 'Not the Season for Figs'," JBL 87, 1968, 394–400; H. N. and A. L. Moldenke, Plants of the Bible, 1952; T. Y. Mullins, "Paul's Thorn in the Flesh," JBL 76, 1957, 299–303; G. F. Post, Flora of Syria, Palestine and Sinai, 2nd ed. I, 1932, II, 1933; A. de Q. Robin, "The Cursing of the Fig Tree in Mark xi, A Hypothesis," NTS 8, 1961–62, 276–81; N. S. Smith, "The Thorn that Stayed: An Exposition of II Corinthians 12:7–9," Interpretation 13, 1959, 409–16; J. C. Trever, "Fig Tree, Fig," "Fruit (Products)," "Thistle, Thorn," IDB II 267, 320, IV 630 f.;

W. Walker, All the Plants of the Bible, 1957; M. Zohary, "Flora," IDB II 284–302; C. W. F. Smith, "No Time for Figs," JBL 79, 1960, 315–27; J. N. Birdsall, "The Withering of the Fig Tree," ExpT 73, 1961–2, 191.
(b). G. Dalman, Arbeit und Sitte in Palästina, I–II, 1928; I. Loew, Die Flora der Juden, I, 1928; II–III, 1924; IV, 1934.

Fullness, Abound, Multitude, Fulfil, Make Room

The words grouped together under this heading cover a wide variety of ideas. They are connected by the thought, suggested by their etymologies, of occupying, filling and even overflowing a given space. However, in some instances context and usage supersede etymology. perisseuō (be more than enough, be present in abundance, abound) and its cognates suggest being present in a way that the given space is unable to contain. plēthos means a quantity, a number or multitude, hence a crowd, assembly, population, and the whole body of a church. The cognate vb. plēthynō means to increase, multiply, grow. plēroō (like the less common pimplēmi) means to fill, fulfil. The noun plērōma means that which fills, fullness, fulfilling, and is also used as an eschatological technical term for the fullness of time and the fulfilment of the will of God. chōreō means to make room, go, have room for, hold, contain. The corresponding noun chōros means a place. Also treated in this article are gemō (to load, be full) and chortazō which is used of filling with food.

περισσεύω

περισσεύω (perisseuō), be more than enough, be left over, be present in abundance, be abundant, abound, excel; περισσός (perissos), exceeding the usual number or size, extraordinary, abundant, profuse, superfluous, unnecessary; περισσότερος (perissoteros), greater, more; περισσοτέρως (perissoterōs), adv. more; περισσῶς (perissōs), exceedingly, beyond measure, very; ὑπερ[εκ]περισσῶς (hyper[ek]perissōs), beyond all measure; περισσεία (perisseia), surplus, abundance; περίσσευμα (perisseuma), abundance, fullness.

CL perisseuō is used intrans. from the time of Hesiod in the sense of to be over and above, go beyond, outflank, be more than enough, remain over, abound. The adj. perissos means beyond the regular number or size, out of the common, extraordinary, strange, more than sufficient, superfluous, excessive, extravagant. The adv. perissōs means extraordinarily, exceedingly. Formations with hyper- are late Gk. and rare. hyperekperissōs and hyperekperissou, beyond all measure, belong to NT Gk.

OT perisseuō and its cognates are not common in the LXX. Normally they translate the vb. yāṯar, remain over; cf. the noun yeṯer, remainder, excess.

1. (a) perisseia occurs only in Eccles., usually in the sense of gain, advantage. "What does a man gain by all the toil at which he toils under the sun?" (Eccles. 1:3). The wise man like the fool (2:14b; 6:8), man like the beast (3:19), must go hence and be forgotten. God is a free Lord who bestows earthly goods (6:2). Therefore, man should enjoy them in gratitude and not haggle with God over the place that has been allotted to him (6:9 f.). Such wisdom which recognizes the freedom of the creator is real gain (7:12, 19; cf. 2:13 f.; 12:13).

(b) perisseuō means to have precedence (1 Macc. 3:30), posterity (1 Sam. 2:33, 36), but elsewhere to have abundance (Sir. 11:12). According to Sir. 19:24, the man who is too sure of his wisdom stands in greater danger of transgressing the law.

(c) perissos denotes what is over, the remainder (Exod. 10:5; 2 Sam. 25:11), what is superfluous and useless (Prov. 2:15). But it also denotes what is extraordinary and outstanding (Dan. 5:12, 14), advantage (Prov. 14:23).

2. Late Judaism expected in the end-time an abundance and blessed profusion of all desirable goods: numerous offspring, possessions, superabundant crops (Eth. En. 10:17 ff.; Syr. Bar. 29:5–8; cf. SB IV 886 f.), as well as joy (Eth. En. 51:5 f.), righteousness and wisdom (Eth. En. 48:1), and spirit (or breath) from God (Sib. 4:46, 189).

NT In the NT the words of this group occur relatively frequently: perisseuō 39 times; perissos and its comparative and adverbial forms 37 times; perisseuma 5 times; perisseia 4 times; and the forms with the prefix hyper- 6 times. All the words occur predominantly in the Pauline writings, and next to them the Gospels. In all the words there is the element of excess and fullness that overflows the set bounds. In this process of overflowing, the existing standards and rules are transcended, and what was comparable becomes incomparable.

1. (a) In the Gospels perisseuō and its cognates are found with the primary meaning to have abundance, to have many goods. Mk. 12:44 tells of the widow who gave all that she possessed, whereas others gave of their abundance. Lk. 12:15 warns of misplaced trust in the abundance of possessions. The proverbial utterance in Matt. 12:34 declares: "For out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaks." The more Jesus commanded men not to tell of his healing work, the more (mallon perissoteron) they proclaimed it (Mk. 7:36). The secret of his person exerted pressure on men to proclaim it openly in view of his mighty acts. The crowd was astonished beyond measure (hyperperissōs, Mk. 7:37) and likewise the disciples were utterly astounded (lian ek perissou en heautois existanto, Mk. 6:51).

(b) As the one who prepared the way for Jesus, John was more than a prophet (Matt. 11:9). But the victorious breaking in of the kingdom with Jesus showed that he still stood at the threshold. With a unique authority Jesus called the weary to him to refresh themselves (Matt. 11:28). This is brought out in the accounts of the feeding of the four thousand (Matt. 15:32–39; Mk. 8:1–10) and the five thousand (Matt. 14:13–21; Mk. 6:30–44; Lk. 9:10–17; Jn. 6:1–13). All the accounts mention the quantities of bread that were left over (12 baskets full of what remained [perisseumata], Mk. 8:8; cf. to perisseuon tōn klasmatōn, the broken pieces left over, Matt. 15:37; cf. Jn. 6:13). Jesus is seen as performing more through his Father's enabling than Moses in the desert. He gives more than food for the day (cf. Exod. 16:18). Those who belong to him have life and have it abundantly (perisson, Jn. 10:10). The prodigal son reflected that his father's servants had bread enough and to spare (Lk. 15:17). All this shows that the father has abundant grace which he holds out to the lost.

(c) Corresponding to the offer of abundant grace is the requirement that the disciples' righteousness must exceed greatly (perisseusē . . . pleion) that of the scribes and Pharisees (Matt. 5:20; cf. 5:47). The perfection of the disciples is to correspond to that of the Father (Matt. 5:48). This radical demand raises the anxious question as to who then can be saved (Matt. 19:25; Mk. 10:26; Lk. 18:26). The NT precludes all self-security, riches in their widest sense (Matt. 19:24), and Pharisaic casuistry (Matt. 5:37; 15:4 f.). Faith should rely on the fact that with God all things are possible (Matt. 19:26), and therefore God can make obedience possible to faith.

The two great commandments to love God and to love one's neighbour as oneself are the basis of the teaching of the law and the prophets. There are no commandments greater (perissoteron) than these (Mk. 12:33). By contrast, those who devour widows' houses and for a pretence make long prayers will receive the greater (perissoteron) condemnation (Lk. 20:47; Mk. 10:40). Those who know so much of God's electing love as Pharisaic Judaism and can still reject it in Christ will receive greater condemnation. "Every one to whom much is given, of him will much be required; and of him to whom men commit much they will demand the more [perissoteron]" (Lk. 12:48; cf. Matt. 13:12). The parables show how this applies to man's relationship with God.

2. (a) Paul uses perisseuō and its cognates in Rom., when he speaks of the justifying → grace of God. No one and nothing is beyond its reach. God is rich to all who call upon him (Rom. 10:12). "Law came in, to increase the trespass; but where sin increased, grace abounded all the more [hypereperisseusen]" (Rom. 5:20 RSV). The splendour of the law now seems to have no splendour because of splendour which surpasses it, inasmuch as the dispensation of condemnation is surpassed by the dispensation of righteousness (2 Cor. 3:9 f.). As sin gained dominance in Adam, so grace abounded (eperisseusen) in Christ (Rom. 5:15; cf. 10:4). Because the abundance (perisseia) of grace cannot be exhausted, there can be no place for reliance on fulfilling the law (Rom. 3:20). The advantage (perisson) of the Jew (Rom. 3:1) consists in the fact that the Jews were entrusted with the oracles of God. But their denial cannot hinder the victorious course of grace. Rather, it brings about the fact that whatever man does it abounds to God's glory (Rom. 3:7). Moreover, it means that God's grace has now come to the Gentiles (Rom. 11:11).

Jew and Gentile alike are utterly dependent upon grace. "God has consigned all men to disobedience, that he may have mercy upon all" (Rom. 11:32). In view of this, Paul prays: "May the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing, so that by the power of the Holy Spirit you may abound in hope [eis to perisseuein hymas en tē elpidi]" (Rom. 15:13). Eph. 3:20 declares that "by the power at work in us [God] is able to do far more abundantly [hyperekperissou] than all that we ask or think." Eph. 1:7 ff. defines the riches of his grace which he lavished (eperisseusen) upon us as "redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of our trespasses" which he has revealed to us as part of his plan to unite all things in himself. Knowing Christ and being rooted and built up in him, believers should live in him, "abounding in thanksgiving [perisseuontes en eucharistia]" (Col. 2:7).

(b) Just as the Apostle Paul was exceedingly (perissōs) zealous in the persecution of the church (Acts 26:11) and the traditions of the law (Gal. 1:14), he pursued with the same zeal the saving work of Christ in the building up and sanctification of the churches (cf. 1 Cor. 15:58; Phil. 1:9, 26; 1 Thess. 3:12; 4:1, 10; in each case the vb. perisseuein appears). In 1 Thess. 3:10 Paul says that he prayed earnestly (hyperekperissou) day and night that he might be with the Thessalonian church to supply what was lacking in their faith (cf. 2:17). He urged the Corinthians to use their gifts for building up the church, so that they might abound (1 Cor. 14:12). With regard to meat offered to idols, Paul urged the "strong" not to make use of their freedom, because it brought no advantage. "Food will not commend us to God. We are no worse off if we do not eat, and no better off [perisseuomen] if we do" (1 Cor. 8:8 RSV).

The apostle knows how to be abased (tapeinousthai) and how to abound (perisseuein), according to whether the former is commanded or the latter given (Phil. 4:12; cf. 4:18). He has striven more and suffered more (perissoterōs) (1 Cor. 15:20; 2 Cor. 11:23; 12:15). He had more cause for boasting than his opponents (2 Cor. 1:12; 10:8). But his way is to be satisfied with the power that proves itself in weakness (2 Cor. 12:9). Hence, imprisonment and suffering arouse in him more courage to bear witness (Phil. 1:14; cf. Lk. 12:4).

(c) perisseuō is featured in a particular way in connection with the collection for Jerusalem in 2 Cor. Paul is concerned with more than the money that is brought in. It is a test of love for the churches which shows whether it corresponds to Christ's self-sacrifice (2 Cor. 8:8 f.). For this reason, he praises the churches of Macedonia, "for in a severe test of affliction, their abundance of joy [hē perisseia tēs charas autōn] and their extreme poverty have overflowed [eperisseusen] in a wealth of liberality on their part" (8:2 RSV). The apostle expresses his conviction that: "God is able to provide you with every blessing in abundance [perisseusai], so that you may always have enough of everything and may provide in abundance [perisseuēte] for every good work" (9:8). (Perhaps a play on words is intended by introductory remark: "Now it is superfluous [perisson] for me to write to you about the offering for the saints".) The collection represented a key link between the Jerusalem church and the Gentile churches. "For the rendering of this service not only supplies the wants of the saints but also overflows [perisseuousa] in many thanksgivings to God" (9:12). It is thus for Paul a recognition of God's gracious work among the Gentiles.

3. Heb. warns the church, threatened by persecution, to keep its eyes on its goal and to pay closer (perissoterōs) attention to the teaching it has been given (Heb. 2:1). When God desired to "point out even more clearly [perissoteron]" (6:17; cf. Arndt, 657) to the heirs of promise his unchangeable character, he interposed with an oath. The character of Christ's priesthood becomes "even more [perissoteron] evident" (7:15 RSV; cf. Arndt, 657) in view of the testimony of Ps. 110:4 to being a priest for ever after the order of → Melchizedek.

The expression perisseia kakias (Jas. 1:21) is translated fig. by RSV as "rank growth of wickedness." Arndt takes it to mean "all the evil prevailing [around you]" (Arndt, 656). The thought is not that of perisseia in the sense of a surplus or abundance of evil not committed as yet, but evil in the way that it abounds so freely if it is not firmly dealt with. It is this that James urges his readers to put away and receive with meekness the implanted word that is able to save their souls.

T. Brandt

πλῆθος

πλῆθος (plēthos), number, multitude, crowd, throng, assembly, people, populace, population, sometimes used for the community or assembly of the church; πληθύνω (plēthynō), increase, multiply, grow.

CL The noun plēthos is attested from Hom. onwards. It is connected with the root plē-, meaning fullness, and means a crowd or multitude, in contrast to a small number or an individual. It can also denote what is too big to count. The vb. plēthynō (in which the ending -ynō means make) means to make full, to fill; intrans. to be full.

The noun is used: (a) as a general term denoting a great number of things, and, in connection with time, duration; (b) with persons, a multitude, crowd; as a military term, a mass of troops; from a sociological and derogatory standpoint, the mass which lacks culture and moral understanding; in a democracy, the total number of voters or the majority that turns the scales in political decisions; people, population; the assembly (e.g. of the citizens of Athens); in religious communities, the body of members, the whole group, the congregation. The plur. can be used to give emphasis (crowds, flocks). Otherwise, an adj. can be added to give emphasis. plēthos can also be used as an adj., many (the comparative, more, the great majority; and the superlative, most). The meaning of the vb. corresponds to that of the noun: trans., increase, enlarge, multiply; in the pass. and intrans., to increase in number, grow, fill, be full.

OT In the LXX plēthos is found nearly 300 times, and plēthynō about 200 times.

Most often it translates forms of the root rāḇâh, be or become much, many, great; cf. the noun rōḇ, multitude, abundance, greatness. The various forms are used to describe the abundant fullness of God's giving: in the blessing of creation (Gen. 1:22, 28); in the promise to the patriarchs and the people of God of great posterity (Gen. 17:2, 4; 22:17; Exod. 1:7, 20; 32:13); in the bestowal of rich blessings (Deut. 28:11) and salvation (Pss. 5:7[8]; 31:19[20]; 51:1[3]; of the king of salvation Ps. 72:7[71:7]; in a greeting, LXX Dan. 3:31; 6:26). God's fullness of → glory (doxa; Exod. 15:7) and majesty (megalōsynē, Ps. 150:2) is to be praised. Man, on the other hand, has no cause to trust en plēthei ischyos, in the abundance of his strength (Ps. 32:[33]:16), nor the people in the multitude of their warriors (Hos. 10:13) or of their sacrifices (Isa. 1:11; cf. G. Delling, TDNT VI 276). Man stands before God in his greatness and majesty with an abundance of guilt (Gen. 6:5; Amos 4:4; Sir. 5:6; 23:3, 16).

The noun rōḇ, which corresponds to the Gk. plēthos, is also frequent in the Qumran writings. It is used to denote the assembly of the community's members (1QS 5:2, 9; 6:19). It is also often used to strengthen a term used in connection with salvation: e.g. fullness of grace, fullness of mercy, fullness of salvation.

NT plēthos occurs 31 times in the NT, of which 24 instances (and one v.l.) are in the Lukan writings. plēthynō occurs 11 times, including 5 instances in Acts.

The words can serve to describe the fullness of God's giving. This is illustrated by passages citing the OT which refer to the growth of the people of God in fulfilment of the divine promises (Acts 7:17 = Exod. 1:7; Heb. 6:14 = Gen. 22:17; Heb. 11:12 = Gen. 15:5; → People, art. laos; → Grow, art. auxanō). plēthynō also occurs in the formula of greeting offering the prayer that grace and peace (1 Pet. 1:2; 2 Pet. 1:2), and mercy, peace and love (Jude 2), may be multiplied to the readers.

Jas. 5:20 and 1 Pet. 4:8 (= Prov. 10:12) declare that the love that brings back a sinner from the error of his ways and the mutual love that is practised in the community cover a multitude of sins. The expression plēthos hamartiōn (cf. the MT of Prov. 10:12: "love covers all offences") is not so much concerned with the number of sins committed, as if they were counted up in some divine book-keeping, but with the effect of love which shows itself to be all the greater in undoing sin. 2 Cor. 9:10 (cf. Isa. 55:10; Hos. 10:12) promises that God will see to it that no gift of love will make a person poor, but will multiply rich blessings.

Luke frequently uses the words to describe the great impact made by Jesus and the gospel exciting the populace (Lk. 8:37; Acts 14:4; 21:36) and causing a number to follow him (Lk. 6:17 par. Mk. 3:7; Lk. 23:27; Acts 5:14, 16; 14:1; 17:4). Peter's apostolic missionary work and the harvest of the gospel among the Gentiles is anticipated by the great draught of fishes (Lk. 5:6; Jn. 21:6). The vb. especially is used to indicate the increase of the church through the spreading of the Word of God (Acts 6:17: 9:31; 12:24; reminiscent of the OT account of the creation and of the increase of the people of God as a sign of blessing).

Lk. also makes a literary use of plēthos to focus attention on a small group of people alongside the anonymous multitude: the priest and the multitude (Lk. 1:10); the angel of the Lord and the heavenly host (2:13); the disciples and the people (6:17); the Twelve and the great body of the church (Acts 6:2, 5). It means company or assembly in Acts 4:32; 14:4; 23:7, and underlines the corporate character of the action of the group concerned in Lk. 19:37; 23:1; Acts 4:32; 25:24.

In Lk. plēthos can also mean a religious assembly: participants in worship (Lk. 1:10; Acts 19:9); the company of believers (Acts 4:32); the great body of the church (Acts 6:2, 5; 15:12, 30; 21:22 v.l.).

Matt. 24:12 speaks of the end-time: "And because wickedness is multiplied, most men's love will grow cold." The disciples are not to lose their zeal under the pressure of events, especially when anti-Christian forces gain control even in the church and the widespread rejection of God's law makes life unbearable.

W. Bauder

πληρόω πληρόω (plēroō), fill, complete, fulfil, accomplish, carry out; πλήρης (plērēs), full, filled, complete; πλήρωμα (plērōma), that which has been completed, fullness; ἀναπληρόω (anaplēroō), fill up; πληροφορέω (plērophoreō), bring in full measure, fulfil, accomplish, persuade, assure, satisfy fully; πληροφορία (plērophoria), fullness, full assurance; πίμπλημι (pimplēmi), fill, complete, fulfil; ἐμπίμπλημι (empimplēmi), fill full, fill up, satisfy.

CL 1. plērēs and its derivatives are to be found in Gk. literature from Aesch. onwards, and pimplēmi from Homer. plērophoreō, on the other hand, is a late formation and is found once in Ctesias, otherwise in the 2nd cent. B.C. The majority of meanings of all these words are derived from the common root plē-, full, fullness. plēroō, as well as empimplēmi, means lit. to fill a vessel, so that the result can be described by plērēs or plērōma. It can be applied, for instance, to the manning of a ship. It is used in an extended sense of fulfilling a wish, hearing a prayer, stilling wrath and anger, satisfying a desire, meeting obligation and carrying out work. It has the further sense of bringing to full measure, delivering a reward or tribute, filling a gap, enlarging (also as an alternative anaplēroō). It is used in a temporal sense in the pass. of expiring, coming to an end, e.g. a full (plērēs) year, a full number (plērōma) of years.

2. Just as a person can be full of pain, joy, love, and virtue, he can also be said to be filled with God (plērēs theou; Pollux, Onomasticon, 1, 15), i.e. possessed and inspired by God (ibid., 1, 16). The Pythian priestess was said to be filled by the spirit of God when she uttered an oracle (Origen, Contra Cels., 7, 3). This mantic filling by God is to be distinguished from the thought that God permeates the universe and fills it (so Zeus Sarapis in Aelius Aristides, Orationes, 45, 21). This need not be taken in a pantheistic sense, as can be shown from Philo's use of such expressions (Leg. All., 3, 4; cf. 1, 44; Sacr., 67; Vit. Mos., 2, 238; Conf. Ling., 134 ff.). Despite Stoic influences, his idea of the God who fills the universe is that of a transcendent God (as in Platonic) dualism who fills the universe by his presence and working (as in the OT).

OT 1. plēroō and pimplēmi are almost equally common in the LXX. Together with derivatives, they translate chiefly the Heb. mālē', and less frequently śāḇa', tāmam, and šālēm. There is the same range of meaning as in CL above: the lit. sense (2 Ki. 4:4; Gen. 21:19; 42:25; Ps. 96:11 and 98:7 in the expression "the sea and all that fills it"); of the divine ordinance to fill the earth (Gen. 1:28; 9:1; cf. the earth and what fills it, Ps. 24:1). In an extended sense, plēroō and its derivatives are used of hearing prayers (Ps. 20:6), finishing work (1 Ki. 7:51), paying tribute (2 Macc. 8:10, ekplēroō), confirming the words of someone else (1 Ki. 1:14), bringing a punishment to full measure (Wis. 19:4, prosanaplēroō).

2. plēroō is used frequently (pimplēmi less so) in connection with expressions of time: to make a time full, mainly in the pass. in the sense of expiring, coming to an end. The idea implies a definite amount of → time that must inevitably come to an end, because nature (e.g. Gen. 25:24), a vow (Num. 6:5), the law (Lev. 8:33) or God's word (cf. the 70 years in Jer. 25:12; 2 Chron. 36:21) decree or determine it. Tob. 14:5[7] is interesting in this connection. Tobias has said that Israel would be devastated for a time (mechri chronou), but God would bring back the exiles (Tob. 14:4[6]). The house of God would also be rebuilt, but not with the former appearance. Yet this inferiority would be merely temporal. It will last until "the time of the aeons" ["the time of the times", Codex Sinaiticus] are fulfilled. Behind all this lies the idea that God has fixed a limit for the times of man (cf. Dan. 12:13 LXX). In the same way the OT speaks about the filling up of sins. Here again there is the idea of a measure to be filled up, though not in so many words. Thus, Gen. 15:16 speaks of the iniquity of the Amorites being not yet complete. The attainment of the full measure of their sins means the end of the dominion of the four godless kingdoms (Dan. 8:23). The perspective of 2 Macc. 6:12–16 is very instructive. The misery of the people of Israel is but God's temporary chastisement which has come about as a warning (v. 12). For God desires to spare sinners from ultimate punishment (v. 13). They know that: "In the case of other nations, the sovereign Lord in his forbearance refrains from punishing them till they have filled up their sins to the full, but in our case he has determined otherwise, that his vengeance may not fall on us in after-days when our sins have reached their height" (v. 14).

3. There is a specific OT use of the term, when the word of God spoken by the prophets is said to be fulfilled (cf. 1 Esd. 1:57 [anaplērōsis]; 1 Ki. 2:27; 2 Chron. 36:21 f. [plēroō]). It is Yahweh himself who executes that which has been prophesied in his name (1 Ki. 8:15, 24).

4. There are numerous references to being filled (empimplēmi) by the Spirit of God. It is the distinguishing mark of the prophets (Sir. 48:12), and can be transmitted by the laying on of hands (Deut. 34:9). Skilled craftsmen are also said to be filled by a spirit, viz. that of knowledge and craftsmanship (Exod. 28:3; 31:3). Being filled by the Spirit is also given to those who seek the Lord and study the → law (Sir. 39:8), so that they instruct others (vv. 9 f.). He who keeps a bridle on his tongue is filled by the Spirit (Prov. 15:4 LXX).

The statement of Wis. 1:7 that "the Spirit of the Lord fills the world" is not to be understood in a pantheistic sense any more than in Philo. It is a confession that God hears and knows everything, and that he punishes sin (see the context). Similarly, the rhetorical question of Jer. 23:24, "Do I not fill heaven and earth?" means that God sees all things. The statement that God's → glory (Heb. kāḇôḏ; Gk. doxa) fills the earth (cf. Ps. 72:19; Isa. 6:3; Num. 14:21) means that God will reveal himself in full measure. Originally this glory was confined to the → tabernacle (Exod. 40:34 f.), the first (1 Ki. 8:10 f.; 2 Chron. 5:14; 7:1) and second (Hag. 2:9) temples, and was perceived by only a few. But in the end-time, "the earth will be filled [plēsthēsetai] with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea" (Hab. 2:14).

5. The Qumran writings mainly use the Heb. mālē' to denote the completion of a period of time (cf. 1QS 7:20, 22) and also in the pregnant eschatological sense, that all existence and events are fulfilled according to a firm plan that is already fixed by God (1QS 3:16; cf. 1QM 17:9). In the time of salvation expected at the end God will fill his land with the rich bounty of blessing and all the wealth of the nations will be brought together at Jerusalem (1QM 12:12 ff.; cf. 14:4).

NT The NT usage of these terms has much in common with what has been said under CL and OT. pimplēmi and the compound empimplēmi, neither of which is very common, remain close to the lit. meaning. Both are used chiefly by Luke.: the former to denote endowment by the Spirit which is pictured in a rather physical and visual manner, the latter to denote satisfying and filling again conceived in a somewhat physical way (Lk. 1:53; 6:25). plēroō is more significant, not only because it is more frequent (86 times), but also because it is virtually a technical term used in connection with the fulfilment of scripture and also a designation of the fulfilment of → time in an eschatological sense. It has thus a special theological significance. plērēs is used lit. in the Synoptic Gospels. It is also applied to people in the Lucan and Johannine writings. A man can be full of the Holy → Spirit, full of → faith, or full of good → works (cf. Acts 6:3, 5; 9:36). plērophoreō and plērophoria (in all 10 times) come close in meaning to the vb. → perisseuō, though they are translated in various ways. In 2 Tim. 4:5, 17 the vb. means to carry out the ministry of preaching. The noun plērophoria can mean lit. fullness and also full assurance, conviction. It is difficult to determine whether plērōma focuses on the process of filling or the fact of being filled. The term occurs especially in Paul. There are only a few references to the word in its original sense (plēroō, Jn. 12:3; Acts 2:2; pimplēmi, Lk. 5:7; cf. the compound symplēroō, Lk. 8:23). Attention will therefore be confined to the more theological uses of these terms.

1. Fulfilment of OT Scripture. (a) The NT church was conscious of its living continuity with the OT. It found its strength in the OT, not only in the use it made of the OT in authenticating its apologetic and mission vis-à-vis Judaism. Right from the beginning going back to Jesus himself, the church felt the need to base its life on the OT. The OT was appealed to with a sometimes surprising self-confidence in a manner characterized by the key concept of fulfilment. The usual term here was the vb. plēroō, but anaplēroō and pimplēmi both occur once in this connection.

(b) The fulfilment is often introduced by the conjunctions hopōs and hina, so that . . . (especially in Matt. and Jn.). This is particularly true of those fulfilment-quotations which have their origin in the church's understanding of its faith (e.g. Jas. 2:23), or episodes in the life of Jesus which were seen as the fulfilment of the divine plan of salvation revealed in the OT. In this sense writers speak of the fulfilment of the → scriptures (graphai, Mk. 14:49), and of all that is written (Lk. 21:22). The thought is perhaps that of the whole OT (Lk. 24:44: Moses, the prophets, Psalms), but in particular of the prophetic writings (Matt. 26:56). Most often a particular passage is in mind which is introduced by the expressions "what was spoken" (to rhēthen, 10 times in Matt., e.g. Matt. 4:14), "the word" (ho logos, Jn. 12:38; 15:25), "the scripture" (i.e. the scripture passage, hē graphē, Mk. 15:28; Jn. 13:18; 17:12; 19:24, 28, 36; Acts 1:16; Jas. 2:23; cf. Lk. 4:21). The source of the quotation is often the prophets. Hence, writers may speak of the fulfilment of prophecy (Matt. 13:14, hē prophēteia), and of the words of the prophets (Acts 13:27).

Sometimes the prophets are named whose words are cited as scripture (Isaiah in Matt. 3:3; 4:14; 8:17; 12:17; 13:14, 35 v.l.; 15:7; Mk. 1:2; 7:6; Lk. 3:4; 4:17; Jn. 1:23; 12:38 f., 41; Acts 8:28, 30; 28:25; Rom. 9:27, 29; 10:16, 20; 15:12; Jeremiah in Matt. 2:17; cf. 16:14; 27:9; 2 Chron. 36:21). Sometimes the reference is simply to "the prophet" (Matt. 1:22; 2:5, 15; 21:4). Matt. expressly characterizes their activity as a subordinate one by his use of the preposition dia, through ("through the prophet," 10 times). Behind the scripture and the particular passage stands the true author for Matt., God himself (note the use of hypo, by, in the expression "what the Lord had spoken by the prophet", Matt. 1:22; 2:15). It is God himself who has declared it beforehand (Acts 3:18).

(c) Just as God is the originator, he is also the fulfiller of the word spoken by him. This finds expression in the frequent circumlocution using the semitic pass. to be fulfilled. Acts 13:33 and 3:18 make it clear it is God who brings about fulfilment. However, this does not preclude human participation. By their failure to understand the utterances of the prophets the inhabitants of Jerusalem fulfilled scripture (Acts 13:27).

The NT also speaks of the fulfilment of the words of an angel (Lk. 1:20) and of Jesus (Jn. 18:9, 32). In evaluating scripture proof, it is to be noted that the process starts from the eschatologically understood present and reaches back to the OT scripture, and not the reverse (cf. the frequent kathōs gegraptai, as it is written, e.g. Mk. 1:2; Lk. 2:23 and often). Generally it is the wording of the LXX and not the Heb. text that is referred to. Certain passages are understood as mysteriously presaging the present advent of the final events (→ Secret; → Revelation, art. apokalypsis). Faith discovers in the OT the promise of the salvation that is now coming to pass. In the endeavour to discover the greatest number of mysteries (cf. Jn. 5:39: "You search the scriptures"), a form of scripture proof emerged which can be seen in Matt. But even here there is a striking freedom in dealing with the wording of the OT, as compared with Judaism. Jesus' attitude to the wording was already discriminating (cf. Matt. 5:17; Mk. 10:2 ff.). Paul also distinguished between the → Spirit and the letter (2 Cor. 3:7 ff.). Sometimes he expounded the OT in an allegorical manner (1 Cor. 9:9; cf. Deut. 25:4). This may be compared with the interpretation given to the parables (cf. Mk. 4:13–20). Heb. takes the form of a homily in which a connected string of OT passages is expounded step by step.

([Ed.] It is sometimes suggested that the apologetic interest of the NT writers has caused them to wrest OT passages out of their original context in order to give them a christological interpretation. Thus the quotation of Hos. 11:1 ("Out of Egypt have I called my son") by Matt. 2:15 appears in context to have nothing to do with the infant Jesus returning from Egypt. Rather, it refers to the original exodus of the people of Israel. Similarly the Emmanuel prophecy of Isa. 7:14 quoted by Matt. 1:23 appears to lose its point for Isaiah's time, if the fulfilment was not to occur until the birth of Jesus. The slaughter of the innocents at Bethlehem by Herod does not seem to have been the original point of Jer. 31:15, quoted by Matt. 2:18. If these and other OT quotations are regarded as direct predictions of events which did not happen until Jesus, then the NT writers cannot be exonerated of taking texts out of context for apologetic purposes, displaying ignorance of or indifference to the original meaning of the text. But as R. Schippers has pointed out above (NT 1 (c)), these NT passages are understood from the standpoint of an eschatological present. The OT passages are not treated as mere predictions but as anticipations. From the standpoint of the Jew living at the time of the original prophetic utterance, the utterance was about something significant in the history of the Jewish people. It was something that had happened or was happening in history. Matt.'s idea of fulfilment says, in effect, that the event that the Jews thought was significant turns out to be only an anticipation of an event of a similar kind but ultimately more significant in God's purposes for the salvation of mankind. It is in this sense that the latter fulfills the former.)

2. The fulfilment of → time. (a) In a general sense, the fulfilment of time refers to coming to an end, expiring. It is always pass. in the NT. The following vbs. are used: pimplēmi (Lk. 1:23, 57; 2:6, 21 f. in the birth narratives); teleō (Lk. 2:43); and plēroō (Acts 7:23, 30; 9:23; 24:27; cf. 19:21). Days (5 times) and years (3 times), and a point in time (Lk. 1:57) are all said to have been fulfilled, or to have come. Perhaps plērophoreō in Lk. 1:1 has also a temporal aspect ("the things that have been accomplished among us" RSV).

(b) The idea of fulfilment in Lk. 21:24 is more significant. The execution of judgment on Jerusalem will go on "until the times of the Gentiles are fulfilled" (cf. Tob. 14 under OT 2, above). There is more emphasis here than under (a) on the thought that God determines the times and seasons. In these passive constructions God is the implied subject. Time (→ art. aiōn) has a function in the plan of salvation. Lk. 9:51 and Acts 2:1 use the composite symplēroō in the pass. The former speaks of the days of his assumption being fulfilled (en tō symplērousthai tas hēmeras tēs analēmpseōs). The latter speaks of the day of Pentecost being fulfilled (en tō symplērousthai tēn hēmeran tēs Pentēkostēs), when correspondingly the Spirit was given.

(c) According to Mk. 1:15, Jesus' first public preaching began with the words, "The time is fulfilled [peplērōtai ho kairos]." The time appointed by God and awaited by Israel has come. This may be compared with Jesus' declaration in the synagogue at Nazareth after reading from Isa. 61:1 f. (Lk. 4:18 f.): "Today this scripture has been fulfilled in your hearing" (Lk. 4:21). By contrast, Jesus declares in Jn. 7:8, "My time is not yet fulfilled [ho emos kairos oupō peplērōtai]." Although the time of God's intervention in Christ has already come, the events of Jesus' earthly life are still fully in the hands of God. No man, not even Jesus himself, can control them (cf. Jn. 2:4; 7:30; 8:20). The time is only revealed to Jesus later (Jn. 12:33; 13:1; 17:1).

(d) In this connection, Paul makes use of the noun plērōma: "But when the time had fully come [hote ēlthen to plērōma tou chronou], God sent forth his Son, born of woman, born under the law, to redeem those who were under the law, so that we might receive adoption as sons" (Gal. 4:4 f.). This does not mean only that a particular time has expired, or that an appointed time has come. Rather, it means that in the divine economy of salvation human time has reached its full measure. In Eph. 1:10 Paul links the oikonomia (administration, → House; RSV "plan") with the plērōma (fullness) of times (kairōn). He wishes to stress that the Christ-event does not lie in the realm of human factors and possibilities but in the counsel of God (v. 9).

3. The fulfilment of God's will. (a) Discussion of fulfilment of the → Law in the NT is always concerned with the basic thought that "love is the fulfilling of the law [plērōma oun nomou hē agapē]" (Rom. 13:10). "For he who loves his neighbour has fulfilled [peplērōken] the law" (Rom. 13:8). In Gal. 5:14 Paul says that, "The whole law is fulfilled in one word, 'You shall love your neighbour as yourself' " (quoting Lev. 19:18; cf. Matt. 22:39; Jn. 13:34). Concretely, this can mean: "Bear one another's burdens, and so fulfill [anaplērōsete] the law of Christ" (Gal. 6:2).

(b) In the Sermon on the Mount Jesus said that he had not come to abolish the law and the prophets (i.e. the scriptures in which God has made his will known) but to fulfil them (Matt. 5:17). However one attempts to resolve the tension between vv. 18 ff. and 21 ff., it is clear that fulfilment is not to be understood in a formal way. Here too the basic motive is love. Jesus has shown this love from the first in fulfilling "all righteousness" (Matt. 3:15).

(c) The righteous demand of the law still remains, but the sting of death is removed. Through the righteous act (dikaiōma) of Christ righteousness has come to us (Rom. 5:18). The sending of God's Son and the condemnation of sin in the flesh (Rom. 8:3) effect what the law could not do, "in order that the just requirement of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not according to the flesh but according to the Spirit" (Rom. 8:4).

4. Being filled with the Spirit. In this connection pimplēmi and plēroō are used only in the pass. God is always thought of as the giver. The adj. plērēs also occurs. The thought is specifically Lucan. Paul develops his doctrine of the → Spirit in a quite different way.

(a) In Lk. 1:15 John the Baptist is said to be "filled [plēsthēsetai] with the Holy Spirit" from his mother's womb. Likewise, his parents Elizabeth (v. 41) and Zechariah (v. 67) are full of the Holy Spirit in their prophesying.

(b) Lk. 4:1 records that Jesus returned from his baptism "full of the Holy Spirit." From the parallel passage in Mk. 1:12 it is apparent that the older tradition contained another view which was more dynamic and related to the OT. The Spirit drives (ekballei) Jesus into the desert as a personal power (cf. the temporary endowment by the Spirit of the charismatic leaders in the Book of Judges, e.g. Jdg. 6:34; 11:29; 14:19). Lk., on the other hand, presents the idea of a special act of bestowing the Spirit in baptism which endows the recipient with an enduring, miraculous power.

(c) What until Pentecost, the decisive date for the universal church, was the privilege of only a few individuals, is from that day forward the most important characteristic of the Jewish and subsequently (cf. Acts 10) the Gentile church. According to Acts 2:4, all were "filled with the Holy Spirit." This was manifest in the gift of tongues. The connection between being filled (pimplanai) and speaking also comes out in Acts 4:8 and 4:31 (cf. 13:9). It signifies that the filling is not an end in itself, but the condition for speaking with boldness in the missionary situation (cf. especially Acts 4:31). Although being filled with the Spirit appears to be a mark of the Christian in general, it is specially stressed in the case of certain individuals, such as Stephen (Acts 6:5, 10; 7:55), Paul (9:17) and Barnabas (11:24).

(d) Acts 6 shows that various gifts were apparently bestowed together with the gift of the Spirit: wisdom (vv. 3, 10), faith (v. 5), grace and power (v. 8). "Full of grace [plērēs charitos]" is a specifically Lucan expression (8 times in the Gospel; 17 times in Acts). → Grace, art. charis. On Acts 13:52 → Joy, art. chairō.

Without the Spirit one can be filled with bad qualities: wrath (Acts 19:28; Lk. 4:28), fury (Lk. 6:11), jealousy (Acts 5:17; 13:45), vices which are normally connected with pimplēmi. Peter, filled with the Spirit, unmasked their originator as Satan (Acts 5:3; 13:9). There is evidently no neutral position for a man between Christ and → Satan (Lk. 11:23 ff.).

(e) Paul saw men as standing between these two alternatives. A man either brings forth "the → fruit of the Spirit" or he does "the works of the → flesh" (Gal. 5:19, 22). This is also made clear by Phil. 1:11, where Paul exhorts the Philippians to sanctification by being "filled with the fruits of righteousness which come through Jesus Christ." Here, however, Paul's quite different doctrine of the Spirit comes into the open. To be filled with the power of the Spirit means to "live by the Spirit [zōmen pneumati]" (Gal. 5:25), or to be "in Christ", to "have the mind of Christ [noun Christou echein]" (1 Cor. 2:16), and thus to have the fullness of the gifts of grace flow through one as a member of the → body of Christ.

5. The fullness of Christ. A few passages in the NT speak of being filled by Christ. The noun plērōma is used in this connection. It is not easy to attribute a single, unambiguous meaning to it. In Rom. 11:12 it means "full inclusion" (RSV) and in Rom. 11:25 "full number" (RSV). It means "fullness" in Rom. 15:29 and fulfilling in the act. sense in Rom. 13:10.

(a) Jn. 1:16 says that the incarnate → Word possesses a fullness, which has already been referred to in v. 14, where the Logos is described as being "full of grace and truth." This fullness is not a gnostic mystery of the heavenly world, but (like the → glory [doxa] in v. 14) revelation. Men can see it and have a part in this glory.

(b) According to Col. 2:9, "the whole fullness of deity dwells bodily [katoikei pan to plērōma tēs theotētos sōmatikōs]" in Christ. This fullness which is described in Col. 1:15–18 is entirely related to Christ's cross (v. 20), death (v. 22), and resurrection (v. 18). For this reason believers also have this fullness in him (2:10). By his cross, death and resurrection they are reconciled through faith (2:12 ff.), renewed, and made to participate in his triumph. ([Ed.] Some scholars see in Col. 2:1–15 Paul's answer to the specifically gnostic features of the Colossian heresy [cf. R. N. Longenecker, The Christology of Early Jewish Christianity, 1970, 56 f.; and the discussions in C. F. D. Moule, " 'Fullness' and 'Full' in the New Testament", SJT 4, 1951, 80; and R. McL. Wilson, "Gnosis, Gnosticism and the New Testament" in U. Bianchi, ed., Le Origini dello Gnosticismo, 1967, 518 ff.]. plērōma was certainly a technical term in later Valentinian gnosticism. But as both Moule and Wilson point out, the expression in Col. 2:9 cannot possibly be equated with the gnostic's hierarchy of beings lying between God and the world. It must mean deity, Godhead, entirety, the sum total of divine attributes. Wilson suggests that certain elements of later gnostic speculation [such as Jesus as the perfect fruit and star of the plērōma] appear to originate in Col. 1:19, 2:9, and Eph. 4:13. He concludes that the term should not be claimed to be specifically gnostic, nor should a gnostic interpretation be put upon it at all costs. On the other hand, a sweeping rejection of any relation to gnosticism would be equally erroneous. The whole complex of ideas in Eph. and Col. suggests that we have to deal with something here that was already in process of developing into what we know as second-century gnosticism. But the obscurity of the situation requires the greatest caution in drawing conclusions.)

(c) Believers "have come to fullness of life in him" (Col. 2:10). But the fact of salvation does not exclude their own contribution to this fullness. Eph. 3:19 contains the prayer that the readers may "know the love of Christ which surpasses knowledge, that you may be filled with all the fullness of God" (RSV). This knowledge is not given automatically. It depends upon the building up of the church as the body of Christ. Christian service must contribute to the realization of the unity of faith and the knowledge of the Son of God. This in turn leads "to the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ" (Eph. 4:13), in which believers are no longer carried about by every wind of doctrine (v. 14). This faith-knowledge is assured by Christ and is given to the church "which is his body, the fullness of him who fills all in all" (Eph. 1:23).

6. The filling up of the measure of sin. It was seen above (section OT) that the filling up of the measure of sin in the OT was applied to the Gentile nations. Tob. 14:5 restricts it to them and argues that God will protect the people of Israel against it. But in Matt. 23:32 Jesus says expressly to the Jewish leaders: "Fill up, then, the measure of your fathers [plērōsate to metron tōn paterōn hymōn]." This implies that they sin just as much as their fathers, or that they fill out what was still lacking in sins. Paul also turns the expression against the Jews in 1 Thess. 2:16: they have killed the Lord Jesus and the prophets "and drove us out, and displease God and oppose all men" (v. 15), "by hindering us from speaking to the Gentiles that they may be saved – so as always to fill up the measure of their sins [eis to anaplērōsai autōn tas hamartias pantote]. But God's wrath has come upon them at last [eis telos]" (RSV; cf. RSV mg. "completely" or "for ever").

7. Filling a need. In the Pauline letters the vbs. anaplēroō (1 Cor. 16:17; Phil. 2:30), antanaplēroō (Col. 1:24) and prosanaplēroō (2 Cor. 9:12; 11:9) are linked with hysterēma, lack (both in sing. and plur.), in the sense of to fill a lack which someone has. Thus, the coming of Stephanas, Fortunatus and Achaicus made up for being separated from the Corinthian church (1 Cor. 16:17). Epaphroditus served Paul as the representative of the Philippian church in their stead (Phil. 2:30). Perhaps he even completed what was still lacking. In Col. 1:24 Paul declares: "Now I rejoice in my suffering for your sake, and in my flesh I complete what is lacking in Christ's afflictions for the sake of his body, that is, the church." There are still afflictions of Christ (→ Persecution, art. thlipsis), for the sufferings of the church are not to be separated from those of Christ. Not all persecution fell to the historical Jesus; a part remains for the members of the → body of Christ, the → church. Paul, the servant (Col. 1:23, 25) felt that the great suffering that was his lot was in a certain measure → suffering for the body of Christ. He can thus rejoice in his own suffering, because he thereby diverts the suffering of the church. ([Ed.] J. B. Lightfooot distinguished between sufferings which made satisfaction and those which were edificatory. Christ's sufferings were the former; Paul's were the latter in that they came about through the work of building up the church [Saint Paul's Epistles to the Colossians and to Philemon, 1879², 164 f.].)

8. Complete joy. In Jn. and the Johannine letters there is a frequent connection between → joy (chara) as a subject and the vb. plēroō in the pass., to be filled. This joy is the joy of Jesus (Jn. 15:11; 17:13) which he brings through his coming (3:29), his words (15:11; 17:13), and his return (16:22) to his disciples (15:11; 17:13). It replaces the sorrow that fills their hearts (16:16, 20). Thus Christ's joy becomes their joy (15:11; 16:24; cf. 1 Jn. 1:4). This joy characterizes the life of the disciples in their walk with Jesus; it becomes complete (Jn. 3:29; 15:11; 16:24; 17:13; 1 Jn. 1:4; 2 Jn. 12). The pass. underlies the fact that it is God who completes this joy.

R. Schippers

χωρέω χωρέω (chōreō), make room, give way, go, go out, go away, reach, have room for, hold, contain.

CL chōreō is a verbal derivative of chōros or chōra, an open space, a land, country, region.

1. Intrans. it means to give room, to be in motion from one place to another. (a) When applied to persons, it means: to give ground in battle (Hom., Il., 17, 533); with preps. in an extended sense, to tackle and carry out something, e.g. to start a rebellion (Appian, Bella civilia, 5, 4, 30); to come to regret an action (Plut., De Fluviis, 9, 2). (b) When applied to things, its meaning includes: to move things, e.g. the fluid content of a body (Aristot., Problemata, 1, 55); to spread news or commands (Xen., Institutio Cyri, 3, 3, 62; Plato, Epistolae, 7, 338b); to take course, of a process or undertaking, e.g. a war (Thuc., 1, 82, 6; without specifying whether a successful outcome was reached, Plut., De Galba, 10, 1).

2. Trans. it means: (a) to be able to take up, hold (of cavities, vessels, Diod. Sic., 13, 83, 3); (b) in an extended sense, to be able to put up with someone (of a city, Dem., 21, 200); in the post-Christian era (cf. OT 2 (b)) also of intellectual and spiritual capacities (Plut., De Catone Minore, 64, 3).

OT 1. chōreō is rare in the LXX. In the 6 instances where there is a Heb. equivalent, it translates 5 Heb. roots. It is used in connection with the capacity to hold of cultic vessels (e.g. 1 Ki. 7:38; cf. Jn. 2:6; see below NT 2 (a)).

2. In the literature of Hel. Judaism outside the LXX chōreō is relatively common: (a) intrans. of war spreading (Jos., War, 6, 130); of human wickedness increasing and spreading (Test. Iss. 1:11); (b) trans. often of man's incapacity to grasp the knowledge of God presented to him (Philo, Spec. Leg., 1, 44) or to bear the word of God (Post. C., 143).

NT 1. Intransitive use. The expression pantas eis metanoian chōrēsai (2 Pet. 3:9, "that all should reach repentance" RSV) corresponds to the use of chōreō in the sense of tackling something and carrying it out. The thought is probably that of a single act that is possible, because God is delaying the last judgment. The phrase eis tēn koilian chōrei (Matt. 15:17 "passes into the stomach") corresponds to the description of physiological processes in medicine (see above, CL 1 (b)). It expresses a certain independence of the natural processes of the mind and the will (→ Heart, art. kardia). chōreō in Jn. 8:37 means to spread or make progress. It is applied to the failure of Jesus' word to make progress in the hearts and minds of his Jewish opponents. The assumption is less likely that en (in) is used in the sense of eis (into), giving the meaning that the word of Jesus finds no access. If the context of Jn. 8:30 is to be understood, Jesus is speaking to Jews who have heard his teaching with approval yet without letting it take effect. On the other hand, there is a tension between Jn. 8:31 and v. 37. The underlying thought is that of a process through which man is freed from the bondage to sin (8:32, 34).

2. Transitive use. (a) chōreō is used to denote the capacity to hold of water jugs (Jn. 2:6), of a place (Mk. 2:2, "so that there was no longer room for them, not even about the door"), and the world (Jn. 21:25). (b) It means to receive or embrace the apocalyptic teaching of Jesus (Matt. 19:11 f., contained in vv. 9 or 10). The meaning corresponds to understanding and grasping the teaching of the parables (cf. Matt. 13:11, 16 f., 19, 23). In both instances Matt. stresses the understanding of the disciples. chōreō appears to go beyond understanding and points to the capacity to receive and act upon the teaching. Matt. 19:12 contains a form of apocalyptic warning found elsewhere in primitive Christianity. It exhorts a group of people who have been given an insight or a gift for something to make use of it, and thereby marks off this group from others. Paul's plea, "Make room for us [chōrēsate hēmas]" (2 Cor. 7:2), takes up his earlier plea to extend themselves (6:13), and corresponds to the assurance that, "You are not restricted [stenochōreisthe] by us, but you are restricted [stenochōreisthe] in your own affections" (6:12). The Corinthians are to recognize Paul in his apostolic ministry as he has given himself to be known by them (2 Cor. 1–6), so that they can be proud of each other on the day of the Lord Jesus (2 Cor. 1:14). P. Schmidt

γέμω

γέμω (gemō), to load, be full; γεμίζω (gemizō), to load; γεμιστός (gemistos), laden.

CL In secular Gk. gemō, used only in pres. and imp., and gemizō were properly used of loading a ship (Herodotus, Thucydides), animals (Posidonius), and of being full, e.g. a harbour with craft (Plato). They are found in an extended sense also: full of truth (Aeschylus); full of evil (Euripides); of over-boldness, of disproportion and ugliness (Plato).

OT In the LXX gemō and its cognates are used only 6 times (omitting a mistaken use in Job 32:19) and translate the Heb. nāśā', in the sense of bearing spices, gold (Gen. 37:25; 2 Chr. 9:21); ṭā'an, loading beasts (Gen. 45:17); mālē', adj. full (Ps. 10:7; Amos 2:13).

NT Of the 20 occurrences of the vbs. in the NT, most convey the sense of filling an object with something, the root idea of "loading", used originally in exaggeration, having been forgotten. In the other instances the filling is with something intangible and usually uncomplimentary: full of wickedness (Matt. 23:25; Lk. 11:39); of cursing and bitterness (Rom. 3:4); of God's wrath (Rev. 15:7); of possessions (Rev. 17:3); of abominations (Rev. 17:4); of seven plagues (Rev. 21:9).

J. G. Baldwin

χορτάζω

χορτάζω (chortazō), to feed, fatten; χόρτασμα (chortasma), used mostly in plur., fodder; χόρτος (chortos), enclosed pasturage, fodder.

CL In earlier Gk. chortazō was used uniformly of animals but in the exaggeration of comedy was applied to men feasting. Under the influence of colloquial use, it lost its strong sense and became virtually the equivalent of esthiō. It used at least twice in this sense by Eubulus. chortos, feeding place, fodder for animals, implies primarily grass or hay for horses and cattle, but as early as the 6th and 5th centuries B.C. it was being used in poetry for food in general (Hipponax, Euripides).

OT In the LXX chortazō translates the Heb. śāḇa', to be sated with. While the basic idea is that of satisfying with food (Pss. 37:19; 59:15; 132:15), the ground is satisfied with rain (Job 38:27), the trees with sap (Ps. 104:13), and the earth with the fruit of God's works (Ps. 104:13). On two occasions disillusion is expressed (Jer. 5:7; Lam. 3:15, 29), but more often the depth of satisfaction goes beyond that of mere food to that of seeing and knowing God (Pss. 17:15; 81:16; 107:9).

chortasma 4 times translates mispô', provender (Gen. 24:25, 32; 42:27; 43:24; Jdg. 19:19), and once 'ēśeḇ, grass (Deut. 11:15). chortos translates a variety of words for grass, plants, among which are 'ēśeḇ, which includes human food (e.g. Gen. 1:29; 2:5; 3:18); deše', grass (Ps. 37:2; Is. 15:6); ḥāṣîr, grass (Isa. 15:6; 44:4; 51:12); šāmîr, thorns (Isa. 32:13). Because grass grows in Palestine only during the period of the winter and spring rains and withers immediately the heat comes, it is a ready illustration of the brevity of human life, used especially in the poetical books (Job 13:25; Pss. 37:2; 102:4, 11; 103:15), and in Isaiah (37:27; 40:6, 7).

NT In the NT chortazō is used almost invariably to mean to eat or to satisfy with food, as in the accounts of the feeding of the five and four thousand (Matt. 14:20; 15:33; Mk. 6:42; 8:4, 8; Lk. 9:17; Jn. 6:26). The evangelists all laid stress on the fact that the crowds not only ate but were satisfied, so taking up the sense of chortazō in the LXX of the Psalms, and Jesus promises the same in the Beatitudes (Matt. 5:6; Lk. 6:21). That all distinction between this vb. and esthiō has vanished is clear from Mk. 7:27, 28, where esthiō is used for the pet dogs and chortazō for the children. For this reason it is probably incorrect to say that Paul allows himself a vulgarism in Phil. 4:12 (Nägeli, 58, quoted in Moulton and Milligan). The only other occurrences of the verb are in Lk. 16:21, Jas. 2:16 and Rev. 19:21. chortasma occurs once only in the sense of food (Acts 7:11). chortos is used of growing plants (Matt. 13:26; Mk. 4:28), of hay as an insubstantial building material (1 Cor. 3:12), and of grass in general, commented upon because only at certain seasons was there green grass (Mk. 6:39), much grass (Jn. 6:10; cf. Matt. 14:19). The short life of the grass of the field is used by Jesus as an a fortiori argument that God will clothe his children (Matt. 6:30; Lk. 12:28). James and Peter quote from Isa. 40:7, 8 (Jas. 1:10, 11; 1 Pet. 1:24), emphasizing the shortness of human life. In the only other occurrences of the word it is used literally of grass (Rev. 8:7; 9:4). J. G. Baldwin

(a). B. W. Anderson, ed., The Old Testament and Christian Faith, 1964; P. Benoit, "Body, Head and Pleroma in the Epistles of the Captivity", Jesus and the Gospel, II, 1974, 51–92; F. F. Bruce, This is That: The New Testament Development of Some Old Testament Themes, 1968; F. F. Bruce, ed., Promise and Fulfilment: Essays Presented to Professor S. H. Hooke, 1963; R. Bultmann, "Prophecy and Fulfilment," Essays, 1955, 182–208; W. D. Davies, "Matthew 5:17, 18," Christian Origins and Judaism, 1962, 31–66; G. Delling, plērēs, plēroō, etc., TDNT VI 283–309; W. Eichrodt, Theology of the Old Testament, I, 1961, 381–7; C. H. Dodd, According to the Scriptures, 1952; E. E. Ellis, Paul's Use of the Old Testament, 1957; R. T. France, Jesus and the Old Testament, 1971; L. Goppelt, typos etc. TDNT VIII, 246–59; R. H. Gundry, The Use of the Old Testament in St. Matthew's Gospel, 1967; F. Hauck, perisseuō, TDNT VI 58–62; W. G. Kümmel, Promise and Fulfilment: the Eschatological Message of Jesus, 1961²; B. Lindars, New Testament Apologetic, 1961; W. Lock, "Pleroma," HDB IV 1 f.; B. J. Roberts, "Bible Exegesis and Fulfilment in Qumran," in P. R. Ackroyd and B. Lindars, eds., Words and Meanings: Essays Presented to David Winton Thomas, 1968, 195–208; C. F. D. Moule, "Fulfilment," IDB II 327–330; and " 'Fulness' and 'Fill' in the New Testament," SJT 4, 1951, 79–86; and "Fulfilment-Words in the New Testament: Use and Abuse", NTS 14, 1967–68, 293–320; G. von Rad, Old Testament Theology, II, 1965, 357–87; J. A. Robinson, St. Paul's Epistle to the Ephesians, 1903, 255–59; K. Runia, "The Interpretation of the Old Testament by the New Testament," Vox Reformata, 5, 1965; J. Schildenberger, "Fulfilment," EBT I 289-95; K. Stendahl, The School of St. Matthew, 1968²; R. Yates, "A Re-examination of Ephesians 1:23," ExpT 83, 1971-72, 146-51. (See also Addenda, p.822.) (b). F. Baumgärtel and W. G. Kümmel, "Weissagung und Erfüllung," *RGG*³ VI 1584–88; H. Berkhof, Die Katholizität der Kirche, 1964; P. Bläser, "Erfüllung der Schrift," LTK III 983 f.; H. Gross, "Zum Problem Verheissung und Erfüllung," BZ 3, 1959, 3–17; P. Ketter, "Nicht alle fassen das Wort," Pastor Bonus 49, 1938–39, 311 ff.; H. Ljungmann, "Das Gesetz erfüllen," Lunds Universitets Årsskrift, New Series I, 30, 1954; W. Rothfuchs, Die Erfüllungszitate des Matthäusevangeliums, 1969; J. Schildenberger, "Weissagung und Erfüllung," Biblica 24, 1943, 107–24 and 205–30; and Vom Geheimnis des Gotteswortes, 1950, 181–204; A. Schlatter, Paulus, der Bote Jesu. Eine Deutung seiner Briefe an die Korinther, 1934; H. Schlier, Christus und die Kirche im Epheserbrief, BHTh 6, 1930; R. Steiger, Die Dialektik der paulinischen Existenz, 1931; A. Suhl, Die Funktion der alttestamentliche Zitate und Anspielungen im Markusevangelium, 1965.

Indexes

Index of Hebrew and Aramaic Words

'āḇ 617, 618, 621
'āḇaḏ 463
'ᵃḇaddôn 463, 464
'āḇaq 645
'abbā' 614, 615, 620
'āḇî 614
'āḏām 84
'ᵃḏāmâh 84
'āḏōm 205
'aḏōnai 71
'āh 255, 258, 260
'aḥar 492
'aḥᵉrê 321, 481
'aḥᵉrôn 326
'āman 97, 100, 595–597, 599, 601
'ᵃmānâh 598
'āmēn 97, 98
'ᵃmorā'îm 69
'anšê 'ᵃmānâh 598
'aṗ 106, 108
'āreṣ 539
'armôn 661
'ārûr 416 'āsar 171, 472
'āšar 215
'aššᵉrê 215, 216
'āwâh 456
'āwen 550
'āzēl 698
'dm 84
'eḥāḏ 665, 678
'ēl 103, 190, 296
'ēlîyyâh, 'ēlîyyâhû 543
'ᵉlōhîm 56
'ēm 87
'ᵉmûnâh 597, 601, 714
'ereṣ 517
'ēš 654, 658
'ēšēr 215
'iggereṭ 246
'im 210
'immā' 614
'mn 100, 606
'ōhel 294
'ôyēḇ 553

'āḇar 699
'ᵃḏî 522
'al 632, 636
'al'ᵉmā' 523
'ām 292–294, 539
'am hā'āreṣ 539
'āmaa 380, 474
'āmāl 262
'ammîm 96
'āpār 520
'aqrāḇ 510
'ᵃrāḇâh 411
'ārâh 549
'ārôm 412
'ᵃṭārâh 405
'aṭîḏ 326
'ᵃzā'zēl 451, 698
'eḇeḏ 283
'eḇrâh 108
'ēḏâh 190, 292–296, 302
'eśeḇ 743
'innâh 495, 612
'iwwēr 218
'ôlāl, 'ôlēl 281
'ôlām 164, 476, 523, 526
'ôp̄ 172
'ormâh 412

ba'al 75
bāḇel 140 bāḡaḏ 461 bāḥan 503
bāḥar 503, 534, 537, 538 bāḥîr 537, 538
bāḥûr 537, 538 bāḵar 667, 668 bāqaʿ 189
bārā' 378–380, 388, 672 bāraḥ 558
bāraḵ 207–209, 218 bārar 537
bārûḵ 210
bārûḵ 'attâh 207
bāśār 233, 434, 672, 673, 675, 676, 678 bāṭaḥ 327, 589, 596, 599, 601 bāzâh 461 beḡeḏ 316 bᵉḵôr 667
bên 283, 285, 288
ben-'āḏām 84 bᵉrākâh 217, 218 bᵉrāḵôṭ 212
bᵉrî'ē bāśār 672
bᵉriṭ 224, 365–368, 376 bêṭ 170 beṭaḥ 663 bîn 694
biṭṭāḥôn 589, 600, 601 biyḏê 636 bō' 327 brk 218, 263 bsr 682 bûz 461

da'aṭ 600
dāḇār 63, 597 dāḡ 670, 671 dāḡâh 670 dām 224, 226
dāraš 64, 580 dāwîḏ 425 dbr 332 dᵉḡaṭ-hayyām 670 dešeʾ 743 dibbēr 333 dîn 503

gā'al 267
gāḇar 103
gaḇrî'ēl 103
gāḏôl 188, 670, 671
gālûṭ 685 gāraš 453 gᵉḇal 243 gᵉmārā' 58
gēr 258, 360, 684, 689, 690 gᵉwiyyaṭ bᵉśārô 676 gᵉzērâh 580 gōlâh 685 gôyim 58, 96 gûp̄ 673
gûr 684, 690

ha'ᵃṭîḏîm 326 haddāḡâh 670
hāgār 80
haggādâh 58, 581, 633, 634 hakkōl 522
hālaḵ 481, 683 hᵃlāḵâh 59 hālal 99
halᵉlû-'eth-yahweh 99 halᵉlû-yâh 99 hallēl 633 hāraḡ 429
hārâh 176, 186, 343 hašḥîṭ 685
heḇel 550, 551

he'ᵉmīn 597
he'ᵉrâh napšô 548 hēmānûṯā' 98
hēqim bᵉriṯ 368 hēsîr 606 hiṯhallēl 227 hiṯnabbē' 527 hōḇēl 194 hôlîḏ 177 hôn 381 hôsî'âh nā' 100

ḥāḇal 468
ḥāḇar 636, 641 ḥāḇēr 259
ḥᵉḇûrâh 641, 643 ḥaḏ 665 ḥaḡ 626 ḥai 87 ḥāḵām 486 ḥālal 164 ḥālāl 444 ḥālaq 534 ḥāmaḏ 456 ḥāmam 318 ḥānaṭ 264 ḥāqaq 333 ḥapᵉs 534
ḥᵉqēl d'ma' 93 ḥārāš 279 ḥārôn 108 ḥarṭummim 574 ḥāsâh 589 ḥāṣâh 534 ḥāṣîr 743 ḥawwâh 87 ḥayyâh 113 ḥāzaq 663 ḥāzôn 574 ḥeleḏ 711 ḥēmâh 106, 108 ḥēq 78 ḥērem 413 ḥeseḏ 367 ḥgg 626 ḥiḏâh 575 ḥinnām 550 ḥiwyā' 87 ḥōm 652 ḥōq 332, 333 ḥōreḇ 652 ḥōrîm 716 ḥōṯer 407 ḥûl 324 ḥuqqâh 332, 333

kāḇēḏ 230, 261
kāḇôḏ 122, 211, 261, 735 kāḥaš 455
kānāp 172 kāpar 455
kāraṯ 307, 368 kāzāḇ 550
kbd 261 kᵉlî 522 kᵉnā'âh 711 kᵉništā' 295 kᵉriṯûṯ 505 kᵉrûḇ 280 keṯer 405 kippēr 698 kôḵim 264 kōl 87, 97, 522
kûn 380

lāḇān 204
lāḇaš 314
lāmaḏ 69, 484–486
lāqaḥ 364, 475 lēḇ 230, 349
lēḇāḇ 230 lᵉbāreḵ 217
leḥem 170, 249 lᵉyômā' 251 lîlîṯ 451 liṣ 194, 580 liwyāṯān 670 lûṣ 580

mā'al 606, 609 mā'ᵉmāḏ 711 mā'as 455
māḥâh 471 maḥᵃlōqeṯ 534 māhār 251 māḵar 268
mal'āḵ 104, 105, 194
mālaṭ 186
mālē' 734, 735, 743 mān 252 mān hû' 252 māqaq 683 māqôm 538 māraḏ 606 mārâh 589 mar'eh 704
māšaḥ 120, 121 māšal 165 māšiaḥ 53, 63 masōret 63 mašriṯā' 295
maśśā' 712 maṣṣāḇ 711 maṣṣēḇâh 711 maṣṣôṯ 250, 625, 626, 628, 632, 633 maṭṭeh 407, 408
māweṯ 432 mazzîqîm 451 mᵉḇaqqēr 190 mᵉḥabbᵉlîm 451 meleḵ 581 mēliṣ 373 mêmrā' 63 memšālâh 165 mᵉnaḥᵉmîm 89 mᵉqalᵉlîm 416 mᵉšārēṯ 485
mēṯ 444 mᵉṯurgām 580 mibbᵉśārî 434, 672
miḏbār 411 middôṯ 580 miḏrāš 64, 580, 581 miḥyâh 711 míkā'ēl 104 miḵtāḇ 246
milḥāmâh 645 mîn 534 minḥâh 250 mipālāś 503 miqrā' 272 mišnâh 54, 64 mišpāḥôṯ 194 mispār 574, 575
mispô' 743 miṣrayim 530 miṣwâh 331–333 miṯṯâh 408 mizreh 685
mô'ēḏ 294, 626 môḵîaḥ 373 môleḏeṯ 181 mšh 124
mûl 307
mûṯ 429, 430, 432

nā'aṣ 498
na'ar 281, 283 nāḏâh 414
nāḏar 344
nāḥam 356, 569 nāḥāš 509 nāḇal 608
nāśā' 587, 698, 743 nāṣaḥ 650 nāsaḵ 476 nāsî 165
nāṭâh 407
nāzâh 144, 152, 225
nāzal 683 nāzar 405 nᵉḏāḇâh 344, 534 neḏer 344
nepeš 444, 495, 548, 555, 612 nēṣaḥ 650
nešer 172 nᵉṣûrê 685 nēṭaḥ 230 nēzer 405 niddaḥ 685 niddûy 414 niḥam 357 niṣṣāḥôn 648
nokrî 360, 684, 687
nûḇ 683
nûs 558, 559

pāḥaḏ 622
pānîm 211, 585, 586
pāqaḏ 189, 332, 333
pāqîḏ 190

pāraḏ 472
pāraš 581 pāša‘ 606 pāsaḥ 632 pāšar 581 pāšaṭ 581 pasḥā’ 632 pāṭaḥ 581 pāṭar 581 p^eḡa‘îm 451 p^eqûḏâh 189
p^equddâh 189, 333
p^eraqlēt 89 p^erî 721 p^ešā‘îm 555
pesaḥ 626, 628, 632 p^ešar 65
pēšer 581, 629
peṭî 281
piqqûḏîm 332, 333 pqḏ 332, 333

qāḇar 264
qāhāl 292–298, 302, 304, 305, 641 qallēl 415, 416
qānâh 380
qārā’ 271, 409–411 qāraḇ 322
qāṣîn 165 qaṭḡôr 83 qāṭḡôr 83
qeḇer 264
q^eḇûrâh 264
qeḏem 164, 665
q^eḏēšôṯ 625
q^ehillā’ 295, 296
q^elālâh 416
qeren 721 qeṣeṗ 108 qhl 307 qin’âh 558 qinyān 381 qiṭrēḡ 83 qōḏeš 272 qôl 292 qômâh 92 qôr 318

ra‘ 459, 562, 565 rā‘âh 258, 451, 562 rā‘aṗ 683 rāḇâh 732 rabbîm 95, 96 rabbî 67
raḥaḇ 670 rāḥām 172
rāḥaṣ 144, 151, 152, 225 rāqîa‘ 523
rāzîm 578 rēa‘ 255, 258, 259 rēqā’ 417, 418 rêqā 417 rē’šîṯ 165 rîq 417, 546
ri’šôn 165, 665, 667 rōḇ 732 rōgez 108 rō’š 165, 665
rûaḥ 102, 451, 672, 674
rûḥôṯ 102, 674
ruqqamtî 712

sālaḥ 698 sanheḏrîn 363
sāpar 574 sārîs 560 sarsōr 374
s^enêḡôr 83
sēper 243, 246, 505
sōḏ 661, 712 sōmēm 75
sōp̄ēr 64 sûḵ 120, 121 sûr 606

ṣā‘aq 409, 410 ṣāḇā’ 522
ṣāḥal 411 ṣar 553
ṣeḏeq 581 ṣ^elēm 706 ṣippôr 172 ṣîr 194 ṣiwwâh 331, 333
ṣûm 612 ṣwḥ 331 ṣwwḥ 409

śāḇa‘ 734, 743 śānē’ 555 śar 102, 165 śārâh 80 śē‘îr 451
ś^eḵār ha-niṣṣāḥôn 648 ś^erāp̄îm 509 śiaḥ 574
śîḇ 196
śîm 696

šāḇa’ 344 šabbāṯ 625 šaḥaṭ 470 šāḥaṭ 468, 470 šāḥōr 203
šāḵaḇ 442 šāḵan 272, 380
šālaḥ 127, 246, 475, 581 šālēm 734
šālîaḥ 127–134, 194
šālôm 208, 211, 213 šālûaḥ 127, 128 šāma‘ 340 šāmaṭ 698 šāmayim 75 šāmēm 75, 530 šāmîr 743 šānâh 64 šāp̄aṭ 503 šāw’ 550 šāwâh 580 šēḇeṭ 407 šēḏ 451
š^e’ēr 672, 673, 675
š^e’ēr b^ešārô 675
š^eḵînâh 586 šēm 68, 272 šēnā’ 442
š^e’ôl 264, 523
š^erā 167 šilōaḥ 581 šiqqûṣ 74, 75 šōmēm 74
šōṭ^erîm 196
šûḇ 354, 357, 358, 362
šûr 694

taḇnîṯ 706 taḥbûlôṯ 194 tālâh 393
talmîḏ 69, 481, 485–488 talmûḏ 69
tāmaḵ 663 tāmam 734 tanna’îm 69 tannîn 670
tannînîm g^eḏōlîm 670
targēm 69, 580, 581 targûm 69
t^e’ēnâh 723
t^ehillâh 164
t^eḵûnâh 712
t^emûnâh 706
tip̄’ereṯ 227, 522 tiqwâh 712 tō’ar 704 tôḏâh 344 tō‘ēḇâh 75 tôḥeleṯ 712 tōhû 550 tôlēḏôṯ 181
tôrāh 54, 70, 333, 714
tôšāḇ 684, 690

ṭa‘am 459
ṭā‘an 743
ṭāḇal 144, 145, 152 ṭāmē’ 447
ṭaṗ 281, 283 ṭ^eḇîlâh 150
ṭ^elîṭā’ qûm 581 ṭûaḥ 120

way^ehî . . . wa 181 w^e‘attâh 246

yā‘aḏ 293 yā’al 164
yā‘aṣ 363

yaḏ 636
yāḏâh 344, 345, 574 yāga' 262
yâh 99
yālaḏ 176, 177, 186 yām 670 yārâh 574 yāraš 453 yārē' 327 yāṣaḇ 474
yāsaḏ 379, 380, 661
yāṣar 380
yāṯar 728 y'd 626 y'hāḇ 277 y'hûḏâh 61 yeleḏ 283 y'qûm 711 yēṣer hā-rā' 459 y'sôḏ 661
yeṯer 728
YHWH 71, 72, 208, 210, 211
yir'ê šāmayîm 360 yiṣḥāq 80 yiśrā'ēl 61, 294 yôḇēl 698 yônēq 281 za'am 108 zā'aq 409 za'a'wâh 685 zānâh 498
zāqēn 193, 196 zār 684 z'ḳûṯ 'mûnāh 714 z'ḳûṯ tôrâh 714 z'nûṯ 499 zera' 177
zûḇ 682

Index of Greek Words

abba 614, 619–621
Abraam 76, 181
abyssos 449
Acheldamach 93
Adam 84, 179
adēlōs 648
adelphē 254, 255, 539
adelphia 257
adelphos 138, 254–257, 259. 260, 305, 373
adelphotēs 254, 257, 305 adiakritos 503, 505 adikeō 467
adokimos 163, 557 aēr 449
aetos 175
agapē 180, 256, 257, 667, 695, 738 agapētos 257, 287, 541 agathos 348, 351, 561, 564 agnoia 422 agnōsia 513 agnostos 670 agō 645
agōn 644–649, 652 agōnia 645, 646
agōnizomai 644–647 agora 267, 291 agoraios 267
agorazō 267, 268 agrios 520
agros 93, 222, 520
aichmalōsia 685
Aigyptios 530
Aigyptos 530
aineō 344
aiōn 105, 125, 164, 179, 325, 326, 476, 523, 524, 601, 708, 718, 737 aiōnios 442, 464
aipys 465 airō 701 aisthētos 523 akakos 561, 563 akantha 725, 726 akanthinos 725 akarpos 721, 723 akatalytos 337
akathartos 500, 637
Akeldaimach 93
Akeldama 93
Akeldamach 93
Akeldamak 92
akoloutheō 324, 480–483, 488, 493 akolouthos 484 akouō 261
akrasia 494–496 akratēs 494–496 akris 119
akrobystia 307, 309, 310 akrogōniaios 541 alalos 428 alazoneia 228
aleiphō 119–121, 124, 471 alētheia 90, 98, 708 alēthinos 98 alēthōs 98 allēgoria 49
allogonēs 684, 685, 687 allophylos 684, 685
allos 666, 684, 691 allotrioō 684 allotrios 683–685, 687 alogos 674
alōpēx 118 amachos 646 amēchanos 107 amēn 97–100 amerimnos 278
ametamelētos 356, 357
ametanoētos 357, 358 amētōr 616
amiantos 447, 448 amphiballō 504 amphisbēteō 504 ana 413
anabiōsis 184 anaboaō 410, 411
anagennēsis 178
anagennaō 176, 178, 180, 181, 184, 185, 188 anaginōskō 243, 245, 248 anagnōsis 245 anakainōsis 178, 185, 708 anakainousthai 185 anakremannymi 391 analēmpsis 738
analogia 49, 50
anamnēsis 370, 483
ananēphō 514, 515
anaplēroō 733, 734, 736, 738, 740, 741 anaplērōsis 735 anaskolopizō 391 anastasis 434, 445
anastauroō 391, 394, 397 anastrephō 354 anatassomai 576 anathema 413–415, 418
anathēma 413, 414
anathematizō 413, 415 andreia 501 anēr 92, 546, 550
angelos 101, 102, 104, 127
anhypokritos 351 anhypostatos 710 aniptos 153 ankalē 239 ankos 239 anō 179
anomia 125, 556, 639 anōthen 179 antagōnizomai 644 antanaplēroō 741 anthrōpologia 682
anthrōpos 50, 162, 192, 335, 374, 377, 401, 407, 535, 701 anti 124 Antichristos 124
antidikos 553, 554
Antiocheus 361
antitheos 124
apallotrioō 684, 685 apantaō 324, 325
apantēsis 324, 325 aparaklētos 89 aparchē 166, 669
aparneomai 454, 455
apatōr 615, 616, 619, 621 apedokimasan 74
apeitheia 588, 589, 593 apeitheō 588, 589, 591, 593 apeithēs 588, 589, 593 apekdechomai 289 apekdyō 314, 315 apekdyomai 314
apekdysis 314, 315
apeleutheros 715, 717, 718 aperchomai 320, 321, 608 aperitmētos 307, 309
apestalmenos 127, 581 aphesis 160, 697, 698, 700–703 aphiēmi 697, 698, 700–703 aphistēmi 606–608, 611

aphobōs 181
aphorizō 472, 473 aphormē 336 aphtharsia 467–470 aphthartos 467, 468 apisteō 591, 594 apistia 594
apistos 594, 602
apo 51, 126, 181, 607, 622, 623, 697 apodeixis 588 apogegrammenos 304 apoginomai 181 apographō 304 apoikesia 685 apoikia 685 apoikismos 685
apokalypsis 50, 737 apokatastasis 521 apokryphos 50 apokryptō 50 apokteinō 429, 430, 463 apokyeō 178, 187
apōleia 462–466, 471 Apollōn 463
apollymi 462–464, 471 apollyō 463
Apollyōn 462–464, 471
apolō 74
apologeomai 51 apologia 51
apolouō 150–152 apolouomai 701 apolyō 505
apolytrōsis 268, 301, 701
apopheugō 558, 559 apopnigō 226
apostasia 51, 606, 607 apostasion 505f., 606, 607 apostasis 606 apostatēs 606
apostellō 126–128, 133, 134, 136, 332 apostolos 126–130, 133, 134, 136, 199, 275 apostrephō 354, 355, 608 aposynagōgos 181 apothesis 314, 315
apothnēskō 327, 430, 431, 435, 443 apotithēmi 314, 315
aprosōpolēmptōs 585, 587 ara 416, 418 araomai 416 archaia 165
archaios 164, 165, 167, 508, 666 archangelos 101, 103
archē 64, 65, 164–167, 169, 377, 383, 536, 588, 628, 665, 712 archēgos 164, 165, 168, 169, 668, 669 archiereus 198, 199 architektōn, 279, 377
archō 164, 165, 167, 169 archōn 105, 164, 165, 168, 169, 407, 536, 537, 665 areskō 537
aretē 459, 645 argos 73 arithmos 665 arkos 118
arneomai 347, 454–456, 608 arrabōn 372, 375, 638, 669 arti 282
artos 249, 251, 253, 586 asebeia 622
askeō 494, 495, 503 askētēs 495
aspasmos 206, 207
aspazomai 206, 213, 218 asphaleia 663, 664 asphalēs 660, 663 asphalizō 663 asphalōs 663 astocheō 608 ataraxia 68
athanasia 58, 430–432, 435 atheteō 74, 462 athetēsis 337 athetēsō 74 athleō 645, 646
athlēsis 645, 646 athlētēs 646 athlon 648 aucheō 227 augē 711 autolexei 580 automatos 723 autos 591, 741 auxanō 732

Babylōn 140
bainō 658
balantion 142 ballantion 142, 143
ballō 376, 454
baptisma 144, 146, 149, 150, 160, 703 baptismos 144, 146, 149, 150 baptistēs 145, 149, 150 baptizō 143–146, 149, 152, 153, 224, 225 baptō 143–145, 152, 160, 224 bareisthai 261
bareō 260, 261 bareōs 261
baros 260, 261, 263 barynō 260, 261
barys 260–262
baryteros 261
barytimos 260
basileia 298, 300–302, 329, 369, 508, 657 basileios 305 basileus 665 bastazō 403 bdelygma 74, 75
bebaioō 658, 659
bebaios 658–660, 663
bebaiōsis 658, 659
Bēthleem 169
biblion 243, 244, 248 biblos 65, 181, 242–244, 248 bios 460, 640 biōtikos 278 blasphēmeō 413
blepō 602, 713 boaō 410–412
boē 410, 411
boulē 292, 693
bouleuomai 430, 537
boulomai 533, 534, 569 bous 115
brabeion 470, 644, 645, 647–649 brabeuō 648, 652
brabeus 648 brephos 160, 280, 281, 283, 284 byblos 243

chairō 206, 246, 247, 739 chalepos 419, 420
chara 400, 459, 460, 731, 741 charagma 114
charaktēr 712
charis 52, 112, 247, 300, 571, 601, 739 charisma 52, 300
charizomai 703
cheir 475, 478
cheirotoneō 471, 478 cheō 520 cheroub 279
cheroubeim, cheroubein 279 cheroubim, cheroubin 279 chiliarchos 666 chliaros 317–319 chliarotēs 318 chliō 318 chilioi 52 chlōros 205 choikos 520 choiros 117 cholos 107
chōra 741 chōreō 728, 741, 742 chōrion 93 chōros 728, 741 chortasma 743, 744
chortazō 728, 743, 744 chortos 743, 744
chous 520 chrēma 138, 465 chrēstologia 212 chrima 121
chriō 53, 119–123 chrisis 121
chrisma 119, 121–123
Christianos 123, 199, 590

Christos 53, 63, 122–125, 181, 214, 237, 242, 278, 299, 302, 321, 399, 414, 476, 592, 639, 647, 708, 718, 720, 739 chronos 326, 734, 738 chthōn 263

daimōn 102, 168, 449–454 daimonion 450–452, 636, 637 daimonizomai 450, 453 daiomai 450
damalis 115
Dauid 181, 425 dechomai 534 deidō 453 deilia 622 deiliaō 622 deinos 348
deisidaimōn 450, 453 deisidaimonia 450, 453
deka 54 delphys 254
dēmiourgeō 378, 387 dēmiourgos 279, 383, 387, 389, 513, 521 dēmos 292, 690
deō 171, 172 derkomai 507 derō 161–163
despotēs 345 deute 493 deuteronomion 54
deuteros 54, 55, 666
dia 123, 503, 570, 601, 704, 736 diabolos 168, 449, 450 diadēma 405 diadeō 405
diakonos 192, 198, 667 diakrinō 503–505
diakrisis 503, 504 diallassō 569 dialogismos 350, 566 dialogizomai 589 dianoia 671, 673 dianoigō 581, 667 dianyktereuō 420 diaphtheirō 463, 467, 468, 470 diaphthora 467, 468, 470 diaspeirō 55, 685 diaspora 55, 683, 685, 686, 691, 692
diastellō 335
diatagma 330 diathēkē 226, 365, 366, 368, 369, 371, 372, 374, 376, 659, 666, 682 diathithemai 365, 368, 369 diatithēmi 365, 376 dichostasia 535 didachē 55, 62 didaskalos 484
didaskō 191, 568, 573
didaskōn 197
didōmi 331, 363, 454 didymos 394
diēgeomai 573, 575, 576 diēgēsis 573–576 dierchomai 320, 321 diermēneia 579
diermēneuō 579–581 diermēneuomai 581 diermēneutēs 579, 581 dihaireō 533–535
dihairesis 533–535
dikaiōma 332, 333, 677, 738 dikaioō 701 dikaiōsis 701
dikaiosynē 112, 501, 639, 701 723 dikē 558, 645, 700
diōkō 553, 558, 649 diōkōn 558 dipsychos 505
distazō 504
dōdeka 131, 489 dogma 330, 331, 336, 342, 533
dogmatizō 330 dokeō 55, 330 doulagōgō 647 douleia 707
doulos 256, 283, 647, 650, 706, 709, 718, 720 dounai 331
doxa 261, 327, 483, 546, 587, 594, 599, 696, 732, 735, 740 doxazō 483
drakōn 507, 508, 510, 511 dynamis 104, 167, 337, 398, 400 dynō 314
dyō 312–314, 317, 470 dyomai 314
dysparaklētos 89

ean 210, 591 echō 137, 337, 560, 600, 635–638, 739 echthos 553 echthra 553–555
echthros 553, 554, 557
edō 611 egeirō 445 egeneto 384
egō 418, 542, 588, 590, 607 ei 592 ei mē 130, 399, 575 eidōlolatria 138, 500 eidōlon 138
eidos 703–705, 708, 714 eikōn 95, 114, 371, 707 eimi 414
einai 179, 181, 271, 592
eipon 341 eirēnē 213
eirgasmenos 348
eis 107, 591, 592, 599, 601, 647, 730, 740–742 eis bebaiōsin 659
eiserchomai 320, 321, 647 eiskaleō 273
ek 601
ekballō 449, 453, 739 ekdiēgeomai 575 ekdotos 693 ekdyō 313, 314 ekdyomai 315
ekeinos 522, 575
ekkaleō 291
ekklēsia 10, 56, 271, 272, 291–293, 295–304, 306, 307, 490, 519, 535, 643 ekklēsiazō 292 eklegō 537
eklegomai 273, 533, 534, 536, 537–542, 598 eklektos 97, 305, 536–541, 598 eklelegmenos 541
eklogē 536, 537, 539, 540 eknēphō 514, 515 ekniptō 153 ekpheugō 558 ekpiptō 608 ekplēroō 734
ekplēssō 527, 529, 530 ekplēssomai 530
ekpyrōsis 178, 184, 654 ekstasis 527, 528, 530 ektitrōskō 182
ektrōma 176, 182, 183, 188 elaion 119
elenchō 89 elenchein 349 elenchōn 373 elenchos 713 eleōn 197 eleos 112 eleusis 320
eleutheria 715–719, 721 eleutheroō 715, 717 eleutheros 715–718 elleipsis 56
elpis 180, 589, 730
elpizō 589, 596, 714
elthe 320, 738
ēlthon 569 emballō 477
emeō 318
Emmanouēl 186 emos 738 empeiria 56 empeirikos 56 emphasis 711
empimplēmi 733, 735 emporeuomai 268 en 592, 679, 706, 742 enankalizomai 239 endeixis 573
endyō 314, 315

enedra 710
eneulogeō 206, 212 eneulogeomai 206 engyaō 372
engyos 372, 373, 375, 376 enkakeō 561, 563 enkaleō 84
enkauchaomai 227, 228 enklēma 84
enkrateia 494–496, 502, 503 enkratēs 494–496
enkrateuomai 494–496, 647 ennomos 578 entaphiasmos 263–265 entaphiastēs 264
entaphiazō 263–265 entellomai 331, 332, 335, 337, 338, 341, 342 entetalmenon 331
enthymeomai 105, 106
enthymēsis 105, 106
entolē 330–337, 341, 342, 430 enypion 511, 512 epagōnizomai 644
epakoloutheō 480, 481 epangelia 271, 372, 557
eparatos 416, 417
epeimi 251 epeisan 589 epekteinomai 649 epelpizō 589 ependyomai 313, 314, 316
eperchomai 320, 322 epi 98, 107, 276, 591, 592 epibarēō 261
epigeios 517, 518 epigraphē 66
epikaleō 271, 272, 345 epikaleomai 271–273, 276 epikataraomai 416
epikataratos 416, 417 epilegō 537 epilyō 576–578 epilyomai 577 epilysis 576–578 epinoia 711 epios 282 epiousa 251
epiousios 143, 249, 251, 253 epiphaneia 504, 658 epiphōneō 408–410
epipotheō 456–458 epipothēsis 458 epipothia 458 episkepsis 189
episkeptomai 188–191, 200 episkopē 188–190, 192
episkopeō 188–190 episkopos 110, 188–191, 198, 199, 333 epispasmos 309 epistēmē 671
epistellō 246, 247, 249
epistolē 242, 246–248 epistrephō 353–355, 357, 359 epistrophē 354, 355 episystasis 292 epitassō 341
epithymeō 106, 456, 457 epithymia 106, 456–458, 460, 461, 645 epitimaō 572, 573
epitimia 572 epitropos 349 epizēteō 460 epoptēs 189 epopteuō 189
eranos 292
erchomai 179, 319–322, 327, 358, 438, 569, 738 erēmōsis 74, 75
ergazomai 266, 267
ergon 197, 228, 229, 271, 446, 535, 566, 603, 723 eriphion 114 eriphos 114
eris 106, 535, 558
eritheia 106, 535 eschata 165 eschaton 56, 211
eschatos 179, 517, 665–667 esthēs 312
esthiō 253, 743, 744 ethnos 541 ēthos 56 etymos 56 eu 206
euangelion 310, 397 eucharisteō 206, 213 eucharistia 206, 213, 730 euchomai 227 eudokeō 534 eudokia 558
euergetēs 519 euēthia 206 eugenēs 187, 188 euharmostia 206 eulabeomai 622
eulogēmenos 206, 213
eulogeō 206, 207, 212, 213, 217 eulogētos 206, 207, 210, 212, 213 eulogia 206, 212–214, 216, 416 eunē 560
eunouchizō 559, 560 eunouchos 559–561 eurhythmia 206 euschēmosynē 206 eusebeia 228, 595, 622, 708 exagorazō 267, 268
exakoloutheō 480, 481 exaleiphō 471
exapostellō 126–128, 136 exēgēma 573 exēgēmatikos 573
exēgeomai 57, 573–576 exēgēsis 57, 573, 574, 576, 580 exēgētēs 573–575, 584 exekklēsiazomai 292
exerchomai 179, 320, 321 exhypnizō 442 existamai 526, 527
existanō 527
existēmi 527, 528, 729 exodos 57 exolethreuō 465 exolethreuomai 465 exomologeō 344–346 exomologeomai 344 exomologēsis 344 exoudeneō 74
exousia 104, 105, 166, 167, 228, 301, 564, 638 exoutheneō 74, 455

Gabriēl 103 gala 282
gamos 498, 560, 625
gē 517, 518, 684
geenna 231, 623 gemistos 742 gemizō 742, 743
gemō 728, 742, 743
genea 176, 187 genesis 176, 181, 182, 184 genna 176 gennaō 176–179, 181, 185–188 gennēthēnai 179, 180 genoito 98
genos 305, 539, 541, 684 gerousia 194–196, 199, 200, 363 gēs 186 geuma 459 gignomai 181 gignōskō 245
ginomai 176, 181, 184, 188, 370, 384, 536, 578, 590, 708 ginōskō 233, 245, 432, 484. 692, 716, 724 glōssa 143, 530
glōssokomeion 143 glōssokomon 142, 143 gnōmē 107 gnōrimos 484
gnōsis 58, 73, 422, 513, 708 gonypeteō 610 gramma 431 grammateus 199
graphē 246, 558, 580, 736 graphō 736 gymnasia 312, 313 gymnazō 312, 313 gymnikos 645 gymnos 312–317
gymnotēs 312–314, 316

hadēs 264, 433, 463
Hagar 80

hagiazō 669
hagiographa 58
hagios 105, 272, 275, 300, 305 hagnos 495
haima 93, 220–223, 226, 376, 647, 685, 699 haimatekchysia 222 haireō 533
haireomai 533, 537, 542 hairesis 533–535 hairetikos 533–535
hairetizō 533, 534, 537 hairetos 533 halia 291
hallēlouia 99, 100 halōsis 469
hamartia 86, 125, 160, 430, 446, 461, 562, 563, 682, 699, 701, 703, 733, 741 hapas 94
hapax 667 haphē 241 haptō 241 harmos 241 harmozō 241 harpagmos 552
heautos 547, 592, 706, 729 hēdonē 231, 233, 456, 458–461, 671 hēdos 458
hedra 363, 661
hedraiōma 658, 660–662 hedraios 658, 660–663 hēdys 458 hēgemōn 270 hēgemonikon 450 hēgeomai 584
heima 316
heis 94, 232, 576, 602, 664, 669, 678, 682 hekastos 94, 576
hēkō 320, 321, 327
Hēlias 543
hēlikia 92, 93, 277
Hellēn 59, 686
hēmera 204, 251, 267, 320, 402, 421, 477, 738 hennymi 316
heortazō 624, 631, 634 heortē 292, 624, 626, 628, 632, 635 heōs 184, 517 hermēneia 59, 579–582, 584 hermēneuō 59, 579–581, 584 hermēneuomai 581 hermēneus 579, 580 hermēneutēs 579, 580, 582 hermēneutikos 579 hetaerae 497, 498
hetairos 254, 259, 260, 484 heteros 666, 708 hetoima 475 hetoimazō 363
Heua 87
heuriskō 709 hiēmi 697 hierateuma 305 hieroprepēs 645
hieros 243, 498, 560, 625 hikanotēs 248
hikesios 687
hilaskomai 89, 437, 694, 697, 699 hilasmos 89 hilastērion 398
himation 312, 316, 317
hina 647, 736 hippikos 645 hippos 118
histēmi 51, 471, 474, 606 hodēgos 220
holos 94, 231, 377
homologeō 344–348, 454
homologia 344, 346, 347 homos 344
hopōs 736 horaō 695 horion 472
hōrismenos 473
horizō 471–473, 478, 533, 693, 695 horkia 594 hormē 710 horos 472 hōs 446, 710 hōs mē 278 hōsanna 100 hōsper 176 hōsperei 182 hote 738
hoti 591, 599
houtos 522, 524–526, 569 hydōr 179, 180
hygros 390
hyios 181, 256, 280, 281, 284, 286–290, 487, 523, 595, 615, 619, 667, 668 hyiothesia 283, 286, 287, 289 hylē 164, 704, 705 hymnos 213 hypakoē 604 hypantaō 324, 325
hypantēsis 324, 325 hyparchōn 706 hyparxis 711 hypatos 270 hyper 398, 647, 728, 729 hyperbainō 138 hyperekperissōs 728 hyperekperissou 730, 731 hypernikaō 650, 651 hyperperisseuō 730 hyperperissōs 728, 729 hyphistamai 710, 711 hyphistēmi 710
hypnoō 442
hypnos 429, 441–443, 446 hypo 736 hypokeimenon 711 hypomonē 646
hypōpiazō 162, 163, 647
hypostasis 703, 710–714 hypostolē 713 hypotagē 347 hypothesis 61
hypsoō 288 hypsos 123 hys 117 hysterēma 741

ichthydion 670
ichthyophagos 670 ichthys 670
idios 197, 578, 579
Iēsous 181, 235, 278, 399, 445, 476
Ioudaia 94
Ioudaios 297, 361
Isaak 81
isangelos 101, 103
ischys 262, 732
Israēl 329, 370

kai 592
kainos 335, 384, 388, 389, 666 kairos 268, 337, 477, 629, 722, 724, 738 Kaisar 269, 345
kakia 561, 563–565, 731 kakologeō 206, 207, 413, 415, 418
kakoō 561–563
kakopoieō 561, 563
kakopoios 561, 563
kakos 107, 125, 138, 228, 513, 561–565, 567 kakourgos 561, 564
kaleō 84, 271–273, 275, 276, 291, 306, 533, 569 kaleomai 271, 274
kalos 197, 722 kaloumenos 271, 273 kalyptō 701 kamēlos 116 kanōn 51 kapēleuō 138
kardia 169, 230, 350, 351, 742 karpophoreō 721, 722 karpos 721–723, 727
kata 50, 376, 576
kata pneuma 675, 719
kata sarka 675, 680, 719 kath' hēmeran 402 kat' opsin 680
kataballō 376, 377 katabareō 261 katabolē 376–378, 383, 388, 542 katabrabeuō 648

katachthonias 518 katagōnizomai 644
katakauchaomai 227, 228 katalaleō 413 katalambanō 649 katallagō 701 katallassō 701
katantaō 324, 325, 327, 649 katapheugō 558
kataphroneō 461, 462 kataphronētēs 461, 462 katapiptō 608 katara 416
kataraomai 207, 413, 416–418 katargeō 466 katartismos 302 kataskeuazō 383 katathema 413, 415
katathematizō 413, 415 katatomē 307, 309
katēgōr 82, 83
katēgoreō 82, 83
katēgoria 82, 83 katēgorōn 83
katēgoros 82–84
katēramenos 416 kateulogeō 212 katharma 479 katharos 351
katheudō 429, 430, 441–443, 447 kathistēmi 471, 472, 478, 533 katholikos 52 kathōs 338
kathōs gegraptai 736 katō 179
kauchaomai 227, 228 kauchēma 227–229
kauchēsis 227, 228, 712 kauma 652, 653
kaumatizō 652, 653 keimai 441, 471 keiō 670 keisthai 635 keklēmenos 272 kel 408 keleuma 408
keleuō 271, 341
keleusma 341, 342, 408–410, 412
keleustēs 408
keleuthros 481 kenodoxia 228, 546 kenodoxos 546
kenoō 546, 547, 706
kenos 546, 547, 550, 551, 553, 671, 706, 707, 709 kenōsis 548, 549 kentron 511
kephalē 238, 301, 665 kērygma 62, 247, 369, 397 kēryssō 397 kēryx 127 kēteios 670
kētos 670, 671 kindyneuō 419 kindynos 419 klasmos 729 klēronomeō 301 klēroō 534 klēros 534
klēsis 271, 273–275
klētos 92, 271–275, 298, 540 koilia 164, 742 koimaō 441
koimaomai 429, 430, 441–443 koinē 62 koinon 639
koinōneō 636, 639, 641 koinōnia 448, 635, 639–644, 649 koinōnikos 639, 640, 642 koinōnos 639, 642, 643 koinoō 448, 639, 642 koinos 291, 292, 448, 639–642, 644 kokkinos 205, 206
kolaphizō 161–164 kolasis 568 kolazō 568 koloboō 542 kolpoō 240 kolpos 240 kōlyō 149 komizomai 713 koniaō 205, 265 konis 520 kōnōps 116 kōphos 428, 429 kopiaō 262, 263
kopos 260, 262, 263, 647 kopria 480 koprion 480 kopron 480 kopros 480 korasion 283 Korinthos 299
kosmeō 521, 524, 526 kosmikos 521, 524
kosmios 521, 524
kosmos 53, 105, 377, 401, 517, 519, 521–526, 542, 613, 651 kotos 107 kpei 378 kraipalē 514 krateō 703 kraugazō 409
krazō 271, 272, 408–410, 412
kreas 671, 672, 674 kreittōn 371, 666 kremannymi 391, 394 krima 210
krinō 60, 503, 648 krisis 386 ktaomai 380 kteinō 429 ktēnos 114 ktēsis 381 kti 378
ktisis 376–378, 381, 383–386, 388, 389 ktisma 378, 381–383, 385–387 ktistēs 378, 382, 383, 387 ktizō 178, 376, 378–380, 383, 384, 387, 388 kybernaō 193, 194, 198
kybernēsis 192–194, 198
kybernētēs 193, 194, 198 kynarion 117 kyōn 117 kyria 539 kyrieuō 445
kyrios 71, 168, 169, 197, 210, 212, 228, 295, 325, 469, 475, 484, 486, 571, 718 kyriotēs 462 kyroō 664 kyros 664

lakaō 94
lambanō 336, 343, 363, 475, 536, 587, 709 lanchanō 471, 478 laos 199, 299, 305, 307, 569, 732 laskō 94
legō 344, 418, 536 legomenos 310 leitourgeō 474 lēkeō 94 leōn 118
leukos 203, 204, 206, 317
lian 729 liaros 318
lithos 541, 660 logion 62, 504 logismos 350
logizomai 472
logos 54, 56, 63, 107, 138, 337, 344, 397, 459, 468, 513, 546, 571, 579, 592, 636, 654, 659, 671, 736 loidoreō 413 louō 143, 144, 150–154, 160, 224, 701 loutron 150–153
lykos 118 lyō 152 lypeō 178
lysis 577, 581 lytron 438 lytrōsis 191

machē 262, 644–646
machomai 645, 646 mainomai 527–530
makar 215
makarios 215, 216
makarismos 215, 216

makarizō 215, 216
Makkabaios 63 makrothymia 646
mallon 534, 591, 729 mammōnas, mamōnas 138, 278, 684 mania 528, 529
manna 205, 249, 252, 253
manthanō 483–487, 493 maranatha 323, 415 martyreō 348 martys 189
mastigoō 161–164 mastix 161–163
mastizō 161, 162 mastos 240
mataiologia 550, 552 mataiologos 550, 552 mataioō 549, 551, 552 mataios 546, 549–552 mataiotēs 549–552 matē 550
matēn 549, 550, 552
mathētēs 167, 303, 304, 480, 481, 483–487, 489, 490, 492 matia 550
mazos 240 mē genoito 181 mē mataion 550 mechri 734 megalōsynē 732 megas 228, 334 megistanes 666 meizōn 334 melan 203
melas 203, 205, 206 mellō 325–327
mellōn 325–327
melō 276, 278, 356
melos 229, 231, 235, 241, 445 mēnis 107 menō 608 merimna 276–278
merimnaō 276–278 mesidios 373 mesitēs 372–376 mesiteuō 373–375 mesonyktion 420
mesos 94, 372, 373
Mesrain 530 messa 665 metakaleomai 273 metamelomai 353–356 metamorphoomai 705, 708
metanoeō 353–359, 362, 600 metanoia 111, 160, 355–358, 362, 422, 702, 703, 742 metaschēmatizō 707–710 metatithēmi 608
metechō 635, 636, 639
mētēr 187, 569, 615 methē 513–515 methermēneuō 579, 580 methermēneuomai 581 methyō 513, 514
methyskō 513
methyskomai 513 methysma 513 methysos 513
metochē 635, 636
metochos 635, 636, 639 metoikesia 685 mētra 667
metron 605, 711, 740 mi 490
mia (fem. of → heis) miainō 447–449
miasma 447, 448
miasmos 447, 448
Michaēl 104
mimēma 491
mimeomai 480, 483, 490, 491, 493 mimēsis 491
mimētēs 287, 490, 491
mimos 490
miseō 553, 555–557 miseomai 555 mnaomai 264 mnēma 263–265 mnēmeion 263–265 mochthos 262 mogilalos 428 moicheia 500
moicheuō 494, 498 mōlōps 163, 164
molynō 448, 449
molysmos 448, 449 monastērion 641 monogenēs 668
monos 216, 664, 665, 667
mōros 281, 418 morphē 50, 204, 355, 703–709, 714 morphoō 705, 708
morphōsis 705, 708 moschos 116 mousikos 645
myron 119, 124
mystērion 64, 370, 539, 578 mystēs 184, 327

naos 234 nauageō 608
Nazaraios 535 neaniskos 192 nekroō 443, 445
nekros 429, 436, 443–446 nekrōsis 443, 445 nektar 513 nekys 443
nēphalios 513–515
nēphō 514, 515
nēpios 92, 238, 280–282, 290 nēsteia 611, 612
nēsteuō 611–613
nēstis 611–613
nikaō 648, 650, 652
nikē 644, 650, 651 nikōn 651
nikos 650
niptō 143, 144, 150–154, 160, 224, 225 noēma 711 noeō 693 noētos 523
nomimōs 645 nomizō 595 nomophylakōn 193
nomos 54, 94, 228, 245, 282, 334, 336, 337, 715, 738 nossia 174
nothos 187, 188 nous 232, 355–357, 443, 444, 481, 521, 546, 557, 568, 595, 636, 638, 671, 676, 693, 706, 708, 739 nouthesia 568, 569 noutheteō 329, 567, 568, 573 nymphē 153 nymphios 325 nyni 282
nyx 420, 421, 425

ochlos 292, 293
ōdinō 178, 180 odynē 726 oikeia 673 oikeios 673 oikeō 518
oikodomē 329, 662 oikodomeō 300, 302
oikonomia 697, 738
oikos 149, 197, 300, 662, 690 oikoumenē 59, 326, 517–519, 521, 523, 526 oikourēma 498 oinophlygia 514 oinos 106 olethreuō 471
olethros 462, 464–467, 500 oligōreō 462 oligos 462, 590
ollymi 462, 463, 465 olothreuō 465 olothreuōn 465 olothreutēs 465 ōn 64 onar 511–513 onarion 117
onkos 671, 674 onoma 272 onos 117 opheilēma 701 ōpheleō 463
ophis 390, 507–509, 511 opi 492
opisō 321, 324, 481, 482, 492, 493 opisthen 492, 493 ops 585 opsarion 670

opsis 680
oregō 460
oregomai 457, 460, 461 orexis 460, 461
orgaō 107
orgē 106–108, 110–113, 464 orgilos 107, 110 orgizō 107 orgizomai 110 ornis 174
orthos 307, 348, 599 orthotomeō 307, 309 osphys 239 osteon 240 oupō 738
ouranos 304, 517 ousia 711

paidagōgos 370
paidarion 283, 284
paideia 462, 568, 569, 639 paideuō 162, 164, 494, 502, 568, 573 paidion 280, 283–285
paidiskē 283, 284 pais 96, 273, 280, 281, 283, 284, 286, 290, 538, 552, 597, 707 palai 165 palaiō 645
palaios 192, 339, 401, 666, 671, 682 palin 184
palingenesia 176, 178, 180, 184, 185, 188, 290, 521 panēgyris 304 panourgia 412, 413
panourgos 412, 413
panta 165, 383, 577, 578 pantes 96 pantote 741 para 690, 714 parabasis 85 parabolē 577
paradosis 199, 335, 485 paraineō 65 parakaleō 88, 89, 91, 197, 249, 271, 329, 568–571, 573 parakalōn 197
paraklēsis 329, 569–571
paraklētōr 89 paraklētos 88–92, 271, 324, 329, 571 parakoloutheō 480, 481 paramytheomai 328, 329 paramythia 328, 329
paramythion 328, 329 parangelia 340, 341
parangellō 330, 340–342 parangelma 339, 340 parapikrainō 202, 203
parapikrasmos 203
parapiptō 608, 609 paraptōma 446, 606, 608, 701
pararrheō 682, 683 pardalis 119 pareiserchomai 320, 322 parepidēmos 305, 683, 689–691 parerchomai 320, 322 paresis 573, 697, 698, 701, 702 pariēmi 698
paristanō 474, 478
paristēmi 471, 474, 475, 478, 533 paroikeō 690, 691
paroikia 685, 690, 691 paroikos 683, 684, 686–691 paroinos 514 parorgismos 107, 110
parorgizō 107, 110 parousia 65, 73, 406 paroxynō 107 paroxynomai 110
paroxysmos 107, 110 parrhēsia 660, 715 parthenos 186
pas 94, 504, 518, 524, 647, 669, 674, 740, 742 pascha 624, 625, 632–635
paschō 487, 632
patassō 161–164
patēr 65, 298, 326, 442, 614–619, 621, 740 pathos 108, 674
patria 615, 616, 621 patris 615, 616
pau 283
peirasmos 461, 682
peismonē 588, 591, 592 peitharcheō 588, 589, 593 peitharchos 588 peithō 228, 588–593, 605 peithomai 328, 587–593, 598 peithos 588, 592
pelas 258 pelazō 258
pempō 126–128 penia 564 penichros 564
penomai 564
pentateuchos 65 Pentēkostē 738 pepeismai 588
pepoitha 587–589, 591, 592 pepoithenai 228, 596 pepoithēsis 588, 589, 592 pepoithōs 598 pēra 143
peri 84, 266, 335, 599 perierchomai 320, 322 periergazomai 266, 267 periergon 266, 267
perikathairō 479 perikatharma 479, 480 perikopē 65 perikoptō 65
periphroneō 461, 462 peripiptō 608 peripoiēsis 305 peripsaō 479
peripsēma 479, 480 perisseia 728–731
perisseuma 728, 729 perisseuō 728–731, 735, 744 perisseuon 729 perisson 729–731 perissos 728 perissōs 728, 730 perissoteron 729–731 perissoteros 728 perissoterōs 728, 731 peristera 175
peritemnō 307, 309, 312 peritomē 307, 309, 310 pernēmi 497 petannymi 172 peteinon 172 peteinos 172
petomai 172
Pharisaios 487, 535 pharmakon 58
phaulos 561, 564 pheidomenōs 214 pherō 722 pheugō 558, 559 pheugōn 558 philadelphia 254, 257
philadelphos 254, 257 philargyria 138 philautia 228
philēdonos 458, 460 philēma 206 philēo 206 philia 257 philos 259, 665 philosophia 664 philotheos 460 philotimia 137
philoxenia 686, 690 philoxenos 686, 690
phobeō 328, 621, 623, 624 phobeomai 361, 484, 621–623 phoberos 621–623 phobēthron 622 phobētron 622 phobos 621, 622
phoboumenos 359, 361, 623 phoinix 648 phonos 558
phortion 260, 261, 335 phortizō 260, 262 phortos 260 phōs 421–424, 723 phragellion 162 phragelloō 162 phrēn 501, 671 phronēma 680
phroneō 502 phronēsis 485 phrontis 276, 277

phrontisteon 377
phrontizō 276, 277
phthartos 468, 470
phtheirō 462, 467–469, 471 phthoneō 557
phthonos 557, 558
phthora 467–470, 681
phygē 558, 559 phylassomai 332 phylē 518, 684 physika 63
physis 460, 481, 714 pikrainō 202
pikria 106, 202, 726 pikros 201, 203
pimplēmi 728, 733–739 pimprēni 94 piprаskō 268
piptō 608, 610, 611
pisteuō 324, 354, 355, 397, 588, 593, 594, 597, 599, 601 pisteuōn 601 pistis 50, 289, 351, 446, 504, 587, 593–595, 597–606, 660, 704, 712, 713 pistoō 594
pistos 305, 310, 593, 594, 598, 602 pithanologia 588, 589, 592 pithanos 588 planaō 608 plassō 383 platos 253 platynō 253, 254 platys 253, 254 plēgē 161–163
pleion 729 plēn 98 pleon 137 pleonekteō 137–139
pleonektēs 137–139
pleonexia 137–139, 214
plērēs 546, 733–735, 738, 739, 744 plērōma 522, 728, 733–735, 738–740, 744 plēroō 93, 171, 532, 552, 728, 733–738, 740, 741, 744 plērophoreō 733, 735, 737 plērophoria 733, 735 plēsion 255, 257–260 plēsios 254, 257, 258 plēthos 292, 728, 731–733 plēthynō 728, 732 ploutos 138
plynō 150, 152, 153
pneuma 66, 90, 232, 234–236, 449, 452, 470, 500, 571, 637, 674, 675, 719, 739 pneumatikos 236, 242, 336, 566 pnigō 220, 226
pniktos 220, 226
poieō 363, 377, 378, 380, 383, 387, 590, 722 poieomai 536 poimainō 408 poimēn 191, 192
polemos 644, 645, 652
pōleō 268
polis 230, 291, 372, 431, 536, 687, 715 politēs 372, 373 politeuma 299 politeuō 373
polloi 94–97, 576 pōlos 117 polys 94, 95
poneō 262, 564 ponēreuomai 562
ponēria 564–566
ponēros 228, 348, 561–567, 656, 722 ponos 260, 262, 271, 459, 564, 647 poreuō 481
pornē 497, 498, 500–502 porneia 106, 494, 496, 497, 499–501, 503 porneuō 233, 494, 497, 507 pornos 497 porphyra 205 porphyros 205 pou 283 pous 239 pragma 138, 271 prēnēs 94 prepei 669
presbeia 192, 193, 197 presbeion 193
presbeuō 192–194, 197
presbeutēs 193, 194
presbys 192, 194, 200
presbytatos 192
presbyterion 192, 194, 197, 198, 201 presbyteron 192 presbyteros 188, 190–193, 195–200, 485 presbytēs 192, 193, 197, 536 presbytis 192, 197 pro 475, 664, 692, 693, 695, 696 procheirizō 471, 475, 476, 478 procheiros 475 procheirotoneō 478
proerchomai 320, 322 proginōskō 471, 692, 693, 695 prognōsis 542, 692, 693 prohēgoumenos 666
prohistamenos 193, 197 prohistēmi 192–194, 197, 201 prohoraō 695
prohorizō 533, 692, 695–697 proidein 695
prokeimai 400 prokoptō 92 prokyroō 664 promerimnaō 277 pronoeō 471, 692–695, 697 pronoia 692–695 prooraō 471
proorizō 471, 478 prophēteia 736 prophētēs 66
prophēteuō 527, 529 propheugō 558
pros 107, 585, 592, 598 prosagōgē 592
prosanaplēroō 734, 741 proschysis 223
prosēlytos 180, 359–362, 560, 589, 623, 684, 688, 689 proserchomai 320, 322, 360 proskaleō 272
proskaleomai 271, 273–275 prosklēsis 271
proskyneō 207, 610
prosōpolēmpsia 585, 587 prosōpolēmpteō 585, 587
prosōpolēmptēs 585, 587 prosōpon 181, 211, 585–587, 704, 708 prostassō 476 prostithēmi 600 prōta 664, 666 protassō 477
proteron 664, 666
prōteuō 664–666
prothesis 542, 692, 695–697 prothesmia 471, 477 prothymia 188 protithēmi 471, 477, 692, 696, 697 prōtokathedria 664, 666 prōtokathedritēs 664, 666 prōtoklisia 664, 666 prōton 664, 666
prōtos 165, 334, 377, 664–669 prōtostatēs 535
prōtotokos 288, 304, 445, 664–669 psallō 344
pseudadelphos 254, 257 pseudēs 66
pseudochristos 124, 125 pseudodidaskalos 535 pseudomai 454 pseudoprophētēs 125 pseudōs 66
psychē 229, 235, 443, 444, 450, 465, 671 psychikos 236
psychō 317, 318 psychos 317–319 psychron 317
psychros 317, 318 pterna 241 pternismos 241

ptōma 608–610
ptōsis 608, 609
pyr 205, 263, 652–654, 656, 657 pyra 653, 656
pyressō 653, 656
pyretos 377, 653, 656 pyrinos 653, 657 pyroō 205, 653, 656 pyrōsis 653, 654, 656 pyrrazō 653, 656
pyrros 205, 206, 653, 656, 657

rhabdizō 161, 163, 407 rhabdos 161–164, 407, 408 rhabdouchos 407 rhacha 417
rhainō 144, 151, 153, 224 rhaka 413, 417, 418
rhantismos 224, 225 rhantizō 144, 151, 152, 220, 224–226 rhapisma 162 rhapizō 162
rhēka 417 rheō 682, 683 rhēthen 736 rhiza 138 rhizoomai 660 rhypainō 479 rhypaō 479 rhypareuō 479 rhyparia 479 rhyparos 479 rhypoō 479 rhypos 479
rhysis 682, 683

Saddoukaios 535
sapros 565, 722
sarkikos 671, 674, 677, 682 sarkinos 236, 337, 671, 674, 682 Sarra 80
sarx 188, 221, 222, 228, 233, 236, 257, 446, 457, 461, 535, 592, 647, 671, 672, 674–682, 719 Satanas 102, 297, 454 schēma 703, 707–709, 714 schēsis 271
schisma 535
sebomai 112, 361, 622, 624, 687 sebomenos 359, 361 sēmantikos 68 sēmeron 251 sēs 119 siteutos 116 sitista 116 skallō 726
skandalon 535, 608 skēptō 407
skēptron 405, 407 skeuos 540 skolops 726, 727 skopeō 188 skopos 188 skorpios 510 skoteinos 421–423 skotia 420, 421, 423, 424 skotizō 421, 423
skotoō 421, 423
skotos 301, 420, 421, 423, *sk*425 skybalon 480 societas 643
sōma 87, 229, 232–237, 241, 242, 275, 300–302, 399, 443, 444, 446, 501, 647, 671, 672, 675, 676, 679, 707 sōmatikos 704 sōmatikōs 740 sophia 165, 228, 400, 485, 501, 592, 692, 696 sophos 192 sōphrōn 494, 501, 502 sōphroneō 501, 502, 528
sōphronōs 501, 502 sōphrosynē 494, 501, 502, 529, 550 sōs 501 sōson 100
sōtēr 519
sōtēria 68, 168, 397, 454, 464, 465 sōzō 210, 397, 463, 519, 697 sperma 377, 378 splanchna 258 spoudē 197 stasis 377
stauroō 391, 393, 394, 397, 399 stauros 197, 228, 389, 391–399, 403, 404, 437, 726 stellō 126 stemma 405 stenochōreō 742 stephanēphoros 648 stephanoō 405, 406 stephanos 405, 406 stephō 405 stereos 660 stērizō 660 stigma 235
stoa 68
stoicheion 104, 105, 282, 331, 332, 401 stolē 312, 317
stratēgos 407, 475, 569 strateuomai 646
strephō 285, 354, 355, 358, 362 strouthion 173 sykē 417, 723 sykea 723
syllambanō 187, 343, 344 syllogismos 664 symbasileuō 643 symbouleuō 362, 363 symboulia 362
symboulion 362, 363 symboulos 362, 363 symmartyreō 350
symmimētēs 490, 491 symmorphizomai 705, 707 symmorphoomai 705 symmorphos 705, 707 sympaschō 643 symplēroō 736–738 sympnigō 226 syn 343, 363, 647
synagō 291, 292, 297, 299, 303 synagōgē 69, 245, 272, 291–293, 295–297, 307, 589 synagōnizomai 645, 647 synakoloutheō 480, 481 synantaō 325
synapothnēskō 430, 431, 435 synarchias 193
synathleō 645–647 syndikos 89 syndoulos 256 syndoxazō 643 synedreuō 363 synedrion 363 synedros 363 synegeiresthai 643 synēgoros 83, 89
syneidēsis 348–351, 353 syneiserchomai 321
synerchomai 320, 322 synesis 348, 485
syngeneia 194, 669 syngraphē 505 synistēmi 166 synkerannymi 69 synklēronomein 643 synkoinōneō 639, 642, 644 synkoinōnos 639, 642, 644 synodos 292
synoida 348, 350, 351, 353 synopsis 69 synopsizō 69
synthaptō 266, 401
synthēkē 365, 366
syschēmatizō 708, 709 systauroō 391, 394, 397–399, 401 systauroumai 643 syzaō 643 syzoōpoieō 643

tainia 648
talitha, koum 581 tapeinoō 569, 731
taphē 264 taphos 263–265
tassō 471, 476, 478, 533

tauros 116 taxis 271, 504
technē 271, 279
technitēs 279, 387 teinō 478 tekein 667 teknion 285, 286
teknogoneō 187, 285
teknogonia 187, 285
teknon 256, 280, 284–287, 290, 291, 416
teknoō 176
teknopoieō 285 teknotropheō 187 tektōn 279 teleios 92, 649 teleiōsis 668
teleō 737
teleutaō 429, 430 telos 69, 164, 429, 741 temnō 307
tēreō 336, 337 tethnēkōs 444 tetokōs 177
thanatoō 430, 431, 435
thanatos 398, 429–431, 435, 441–443, 446, 463, 707 thaptō 263, 264
tharreō 327–329
tharseō 327, 328
thauma 528
thaumazō 528, 587 theatrizomenos 646 theios 645 thēlazōn 281 thelō 534, 569 thematikos 648 themeilia 660 themelioō 383, 660 themelios 658, 660–663 themethla 660 theologeō 70
theomachos 646
theos 70, 96, 98, 111, 112, 138, 164, 179, 192, 197, 212, 257, 273, 281, 283, 287, 289, 295, 298–300, 303, 305, 336, 359, 361, 374, 484, 523, 538, 552, 569, 579, 592, 597–600, 615, 623, 670, 674, 678, 693, 706, 707, 734 theosebēs 361
theotēs 740 thēr 113
thērion 113, 114, 119, 507 thermainō 318
thermē 317, 318
thermos 318, 319
thesmos 477
Thessalonikeus 299 thiasos 292
thlipsis 741 thnēskō 430, 431, 435
thnētos 430, 431, 435 thremma 116
thriambeuō 644, 649, 652 thriambos 649 thygatēr 281 thym 105
thymoomai 105, 106
thymos 105–108, 110, 111, 113, 456, 671 tiara 405
tiktō 176, 178, 186, 187, 280, 285, 668 timē 222
tis 94, 592, 594, 689 tithēmi 413, 471, 477, 478, 568, 660, 696 titlos 392, 396
toioutos 284 tolma 710
tolmaō 364, 365
tolmēros 364, 365
tolmērotoron 365 tolmētēs 364, 365
topos 538 tote 282, 666 trachēlos 241 tragos 114 trechō 648 tribolos 726 tritos 666 trochos 182 tromos 622 trōō 182 trophos 282 tymbos 264
typhlos 218, 220 typos 71, 86, 371, 491, 744

xenia 690
xenizō 689, 690
xenodocheō 686
Xenophōn 569
xenos 683, 686–689, 691 xērainō 515
xēros 390, 515, 516
xylon 214, 389, 390, 394, 404

zaō 181, 739 zēleuō 318
zēlos 106, 535, 557, 558
zēlōtēs 72
Zēn 588
zeō 318, 319
zestos 317–319
zēteō 278, 430, 580 Zeus 687
zōa 443 zōē 337, 431, 464, 657 zōnē 142 zōon 640 zōopoieō 445 zōsa 180
zygos 261

General Index

(chief references in bold figures)

Aaronic blessing 98, 211, 212
Aaron's rod 408
Abandon 455, 488, 513, 526, 541, 549, 606, 613, 681, 701, 720
Abandonment 51, 411, 559, 595
Abase 731
Abba 286, 289, 410, 614, 623
Abdomen 169
Abhor 555
Abide 166, 282, 338, 458, 608, 611, 637, 638, 669, 723
Abiding 73, 469, 719
Ability 248, 278, 481, 676, 681, 731
Ablution 144, 149, 150, 152, 153
Abode 523, 661
Abolish 73, 368, 414, 462, 469, 591, 622, 676, 685, 738
Abolition 719
Abomination 109, 142, 225, 382, 448, 743
Abomination of Desolation 74–75, 125, 566
Aborted 182
Abound 683, 728–744
Above 518, 665
Abraham 76–80, 159, 286, 311, 531, 539, 601, 604, 640, 669, 684, 690, 693
Abraham's bosom 78, 240 Abroad 689
Abrogate 500
Absence 598, 724
Absent 466
Absolute 500, 522, 616, 636, 718
Absolution 639
Absolutism 543
Absolve 529
Absorb 709
Abstain 261, 494, 541, 611, 690, 691, 704
Abstemious 515
Abstinence 494–496, 514, 611, 612, 625
Abstract 450, 537, 562, 609
Abstraction 601, 641
Abstruse 421
Absurd 637
Abundance 727–732
Abuse 183, 264, 413, 418, 646
Abyss 449, 508
Accede 320, 322
Accept 110, 112, 368, 375, 414, 425, 483, 484, 486–488, 556, 568, 578, 590, 629, 666, 695
Acceptable 235, 675, 708
Acceptance 534, 588, 593, 603, 655, 701, 702
Access 223, 324, 390, 485, 592, 603, 611, 638, 742 Accessible 602
Accession 177, 626
Acclamation 122, 629, 630
Accommodate 548
Accompany 322, 480, 481, 585
Accomplish 696, 733, 737
Accomplishment 653, 680, 697
Account 56, 378, 386, 573, 577, 588, 725
Accountability 349, 522
Accursed 265, 390, 413, 414, 416, 417
Accusation 82–84, 281, 373, 402, 577, 594, 609, 612, 631
Accuse 82–84, 349, 350, 410, 473
Accuser 82–84, 454, 554, 610
Accustomed 483, 484
Achievement 398, 431, 432, 485, 492, 493, 502, 612, 645, 647, 650, 651, 676, 697, 722, 723
Acknowledge 265, 489, 549, 587
Acknowledgment 415
Acquaint 692
Acquire 482–484, 635, 639
Acquisition 533
Acquit 205, 352, 439, 505, 558, 698
Action 207, 484, 504, 505, 552, 556, 564, 585, 589–591, 600, 603, 639, 679, 680, 693, 697, 702, 713, 714, 721, 722, 741, 742
Active 400, 605, 624
Activity 489, 491, 595, 627, 655, 686, 693, 695–697 Actor 706, 708
Actual 710, 711
Actualization 711, 713
Adam 71, 73, 77, 84–88, 179, 327, 390, 434, 436, 440, 446, 451, 472, 548, 567, 621, 669, 730
Adapt 481, 483
Add 540
Addict 514
Address 66, 285, 286, 488, 582, 614–617, 620, 622
Adequacy 576
Adequate 690
Adherent 487, 489, 535
Adjuration 97, 98
Adjustment 602, 679, 715
Administer 536
Administration 192, 738
Administrative 198
Administrator 190, 198, 373
Admiration 99, 435
Admit 680
Admonition 110, 319, 462, 502, 568, 569

Adopt 483, 632
Adoption 123, 177–179, 280–291, 410, 534, 615, 668, 708, 738
Adoptionist 473
Adorn 469, 520, 524, 684
Adulation 99
Adult 213, 281, 282, 284, 568, 614
Adulteress 650
Adultery 51, 97, 235, 240, 349, 390, 495, 498–500, 505–507, 655
Advance 320, 322, 473, 692–695
Advantage 137–139, 434, 437, 467, 468, 539, 728–731
Advent 320, 737
Adversary 91, 271, 516, 553, 647 Adverse 572
Adversity 262, 411, 622
Advice 211, 340, 362, 363, 568, 591
Advise 65, 91, 362, 363, 450, 568
Adviser 89, 362, 363
Advisory 193
Advocate 78, 88–92, 266, 271, 324, 329, 571, 572, 637
Aesthetic 459, 536
Affection 177, 254, 742
Affinity 482
Affirm 83, 98, 487, 545
Afflict 188, 189, 467, 612
Affliction 68, 163, 171, 188, 202, 260–262, 329, 410, 422, 539, 648, 652, 653, 687, 725, 727, 731, 741 Affrontery 364
Afraid 453, 621–623, 646, 688
After 321, 480–494
After-life 204
Afternoon 634
Age 92–93, 124, 165, 192–194, 277, 280, 282–289, 298, 368, 431, 477, 522, 524, 566, 620, 638, 675, 683, 709, 718
Age to come 86, 145, 282, 326, 327, 518, 688
Agent 205, 208, 476, 477, 538, 540, 542, 566
Aggravate 496
Agitation 108
Agitator 396
Agony 393, 645, 646
Agree 344, 454
Agreeable 675
Agreement 356, 365, 368, 415, 588, 590, 594, 687
Agricultural festivals 625 Aid 261
Ailment 119, 515, 727
Aim 270, 470, 488, 541, 604, 644, 676, 695, 697, 720
Aimless 546, 550
Air 164, 449–454, 708
Akeldama 93–94, 224
Akkadian 68
Alarm 621, 646
Alcohol 625
Alertness 513, 515
Alien 221, 411, 683–692
Alienate 684, 685
Alive 359, 401, 445, 474, 509, 653, 722
All 94–97, 383, 524, 577, 639, 654, 665, 668, 669, 678, 694, 718, 720, 730, 735, 740
Allegiance 302, 304, 406, 424, 492
Allegorize 577
Allegory 49, 71, 81, 116, 259, 289, 368, 574, 577, 737
Alleviation 328, 727
Alliance 141, 594, 718
Allocate 365, 533, 640
Allotment 475, 533
Allow 506, 507, 529, 587, 676, 686, 691, 698
Allurement 457, 458, 726
Ally 531
Almighty 111
Aloes 122, 265
Alone 492
Aloof 528, 606, 607
Altar 75, 122, 221, 223, 387, 559, 653, 655, 687
Altar of Burnt Offering 633
Altar of Incense 114
Alter 608, 704
Alteration 658
Amaze 527, 529, 530
Ambassador 101, 126, 129, 192–194
Ambition 106, 137, 427, 676
Amen 97–99
Amillennialist 53, 508
Amoraim 49, 69
Amount 734
Amulet 451
Analogy 49, 50, 60, 71, 580
Analyse 353
Analytical study 580
Anarchy 654, 667
Anatomy 241
Ancestor 167, 240, 255, 288, 615
Ancestral 573, 574, 616
Ancestry 187, 427
Anchor 372, 658, 660
Ancient 164, 641, 657, 720
Ancient of Days 204
Angel 54, 101–105, 127, 166, 167, 202, 204, 219, 233, 252, 280, 331, 335, 339, 345, 374, 408–410, 449–452, 464, 465, 474, 476, 478, 489, 490, 508, 512, 517, 544, 570, 585, 586, 622, 623, 648, 656, 657, 659, 677, 690, 733, 736
Angels of the Churches 103, 304
Angel of death 83, 509
Angel of light 710
Angelic 462, 676
Angelology 102
Anger 105–113, 202, 203, 316, 329, 364, 381, 465, 467, 535, 555, 654, 657, 679, 681, 715, 734
Angler 670
Angry 105, 107, 202, 364, 418, 479
Anguish 411, 422, 526
Animal 84, 85, 101, 113–119, 151, 152, 173, 175, 178, 186, 218–226, 232, 234, 239–241, 260, 272, 342, 343, 371, 393, 419, 443, 468, 469, 490, 507, 509, 511, 520, 560, 565, 585, 609, 610, 625, 627, 632, 671, 672, 674, 699, 721, 725, 743

Animate 522, 523
Animation 444, 521
Animism 450
Ankle 393
Annihilation 109, 413, 414, 462, 463, 465, 610, 688, 719
Anniversary 628
Announce 246, 301, 655
Announcement 62, 293, 696
Annoy 557
Annual 632
Annul 370, 416, 578
Anoint 53, 63, 119–124, 178, 427, 471, 512, 544
Anonymous 733
Another 684, 685
Answer 51, 98, 99, 272, 332, 339, 345, 409, 411, 480, 583, 727
Answerable 222, 365
Ant 252
Anthropocentric 383
Anthropological 233, 382, 523, 672, 673, 687, 706
Anthropology 236, 675
Anthropomorphism 50, 63, 66, 239, 472, 585
Antichrist 75, 114, 124–126, 323, 464, 544, 566
Anti-Christian 607, 733 Anticipate 651, 733, 737
Anti-gnostic 603
Anti-God 124, 125
Antinomian 302, 338, 720
Antipathy 555
Antiquity 164, 531
Anti-Semitism 360
Anti-speculative 603
Antithesis 335, 600, 705
Antitype 71, 86, 142, 222, 327
Anxiety 276–278, 421, 455, 597, 622, 646, 651, 715, 723, 726
Apathy 359
Aphorism 555
Apocalypse 50, 528, 541, 656
Apocalyptic 50, 54, 56, 65, 110, 116, 118, 124, 175, 203, 210, 211, 216, 217, 224, 243, 244, 304, 313, 326, 409, 425, 442, 519, 524, 539, 559, 598, 607, 610, 638, 651, 655, 706, 742, Apocalyptist 50
Apocrypha 50, 63, 66–68
Apocryphal 243
Apollyon 462
Apologetic 338, 383, 736, 737
Apologetics 51, 688
Apologist 51, 63
Apology 51
Apophthegm 269
Apostasy 51, 108, 124, 141, 281, 309, 347, 357, 390, 397, 469, 499, 512, 606–608, 611, 693, 703
Apostate 51, 109, 448, 607, 611
Apostle 71, 126–137, 172, 174, 183, 191, 192, 194, 198–200, 214, 246, 247, 256, 274, 275, 298, 301, 307, 332, 337, 340, 474–479, 489, 493, 519, 540, 542, 547, 568, 571, 576, 592, 619, 623, 643, 662, 686, 707, 710, 723
Apostleship 130–134, 183
Apostolate 130–135
Apostolic 469, 478, 491, 496, 592, 644, 733, 742
Apostolic Council 310
Apostolic Fathers 51, 52
Apostolic generation 132
Apostolic office 247
Apostolic ministry 419
Apostolic succession 129
Apostolic tradition 70, 200, 247, 302
Appal 530
Apparent 686
Appeal 206, 269–271, 349–351, 487, 492, 569, 570, 615, 736
Appeal to Caesar 276
Appear 55, 185, 320, 383, 471, 544, 587, 597, 710, 712, 723
Appearance 87, 183, 184, 204, 248, 298, 328, 341, 393, 474, 491, 503, 515, 522, 545, 550, 585–588, 597, 607, 622, 623, 654, 656, 678, 680, 703–711, 734
Appease 450
Appetite 106, 672
Application 577, 601, 647, 703, 709
Appoint 189, 190, 275, 293, 331, 369, 427, 471–478, 533, 534, 538, 540, 626, 627, 696
Appointed day 706
Appointed time 722–738
Appointment 664
Apportion 534, 535
Apprehend 343–344, 425, 523, 692
Apprehension 73, 277
Apprentice 484, 486
Approach 151, 251, 258, 320, 322, 360, 514, 627
Appropriate 223, 224, 486, 616
Appropriation 603
Approval 681, 742
Approve 475, 672
Aqueduct 318
Arabic 68
Arable 517
Arabs 68
Aramaeans 68
Aramaic 51, 63, 68, 69
Arbitrariness 367, 579, 713
Arbitrator 373
Archangel 101, 342, 410
Archetype 491, 492, 522
Ardour 652
Argument 545, 547, 590, 592, 663, 680
Arian 549
Arise 181, 679, 681
Aristocracy 640
Aristocratic 196, 363, 364, 536
Ark of the covenant 122, 143, 195, 252, 280, 293, 294, 492, 537
Ark of Noah 713
Arm 239, 284, 427, 648, 673, 679
Armageddon 114
Armed 651
Armies of heaven 118, 205
Arms-bearer 283

Army 254, 293, 295, 505, 521, 536, 685
Arouse 609
Arrange 241, 476, 477, 503, 504, 521, 692
Arrangement 712
Arrest 343, 364, 395, 630, 633, 663 Arrival 320, 324
Arrive 540, 649
Arrogance 108, 227, 228, 364, 365, 385, 597
Arrow 656, 698
Art 279, 459, 579, 588, 592
Articulation 579, 580
Artificer 387
Artisan 279, 382, 412
Arts 490
Ascended 384, 403
Ascension 123, 128, 183, 204, 372, 631, 668
Ascetic 250, 284, 313, 489, 496, 613, 641, 645
Asceticism 445, 495, 496, 612, 647, 674, 715
Ascription 427
Ashes 115
Ashmedai 451
Ask 227, 488, 504, 509, 569, 570, 571, 600, 639, 730 Asleep 314
Aspect 585, 601
Aspersion 151
Aspiration 426, 456, 533
Ass 115, 117, 409, 725
Assassination 340
Assault 241, 710
Assemble 320, 322, 340
Assembly 56, 69, 199, 291–298, 301–304, 466, 475, 535, 578, 626, 669, 728, 731–733 Assent 271, 331, 454, 594
Assert 83, 541, 596
Assessment 680
Assist 343, 344, 570, 650
Assistance 694
Associate 259, 678, 702
Association 414, 488, 493, 606, 639
Assume 709, 710
Assumption 402, 697
Assurance 223, 225, 328, 351, 409, 492, 542, 604, 659, 660, 663, 703, 713, 733, 735, 740 Assure 733 Assured 719
Assyrians 68, 670
Astonishment 526–530, 729
Astound 527–529, 729
Astral 631
Astrology 521
Astronomical 200
Asylum 687, 691
Atheism 595
Athlete 470, 495, 496, 645, 646
Athletics 312, 313, 406, 469
Atom 671
Atomism 640
Atonement 57, 152, 172, 220, 221, 223, 224, 301, 339, 371, 415, 418, 466, 467, 698–700
Attachment 486, 493
Attack 117, 303, 396, 430, 509, 551, 562, 602, 660 Attacker 451
Attain 635, 644, 723
Attainment 734
Attempt 541
Attend 691, 693
Attendant 102, 407, 485
Attention 457, 591, 731
Attentive 458
Attestation 668
Attic Greek 62
Attitude 70, 217, 275, 331, 333, 349, 355, 484, 485, 492, 496, 510, 553, 571, 583, 589, 591, 592, 596, 598, 600, 602, 603, 609, 611, 616, 621, 622, 627, 629, 635, 639, 641, 680, 686, 687, 691, 701, 709, 710, 714, 715, 725, 737
Attractive 206, 498
Attribute 529, 548, 549, 616, 740
Audacious 364
Authentication 596, 603, 736
Authenticity 51, 68, 247, 266, 419, 513, 598, 620
Author 168, 380, 427, 736 Authoritarian 191
Authoritative 71, 123, 131, 132, 216, 220, 334, 410, 450, 533, 572, 576, 594
Authorities 102, 163, 166, 168, 288, 330, 340, 341, 363, 392, 590, 593, 649, 717 Authority 50, 74, 76, 79, 85, 87, 89, 95, 99, 103, 119, 122, 123, 127–134, 146, 164–166, 171, 190, 192, 194, 196, 200, 219, 222, 228, 247, 261, 269–271, 281, 301, 303, 335, 337, 341, 349, 363, 365, 385, 392, 402, 407, 408, 427, 451, 454, 458, 476, 482, 485–487, 489, 491, 510, 511, 528, 534, 548, 564, 572, 574, 578, 588, 590, 596, 614–617, 638, 664, 667, 700, 703, 704, 718, 720, 729
Authorisation 127, 131–134, 146, 303
Automatic 541, 678, 694, 740
Autonomous 424, 439, 494, 565, 595, 605 Autonomy 693
Autumn 626
Avail 602
Avarice 137–139, 169, 644
Avenge 222
Avoid 272, 423, 432, 485, 514, 558, 559, 625, 684, 687, 699
Avow 346
Await 504, 544, 738
Awake 323, 342, 421–445, 458
Award 648
Aware 483, 513, 549, 569
Awe 621–624, 653
Azazel 451, 698

Baal 209, 497, 498, 527, 543
Baalization 499
Babel 72, 140, 451, 529
Baby 239, 281–283
Babylon 140–142, 469, 501, 531
Babylonian Talmud (→ Talmud, Babylonian)
Bacchantes 528
Back 233
Backslide 481
Bad 56, 106, 236, 349, 350, 357, 419, 422, 456, 459, 469, 504, 557, 561–567, 610, 657, 680, 721, 722, 739

Badge 407
Bag 142–143
Baker 560
Balaam 527
Balance 118, 203
Balsam 120
Ban 171, 413–417
Band 527
Banish 476, 558
Banishment 687
Banking 319
Banner 652
Banquet 210, 274, 460, 689
Baptism 77, 122, 123, 143–154, 179, 180, 184–186, 224–226, 237, 266, 275, 285, 289–291, 300, 311, 315, 316, 346, 351, 358, 360, 400, 401, 438, 446, 466, 487, 570, 601–603, 653, 676, 677, 701–704, 739
Baptism, Infant 148–149, 154–161, 284
Baptize 129, 144, 237, 359, 602, 634, 657
Bar Mitzwah 284
Baraitha 51
Barbarian 518
Barbarity 686
Bare 312, 313
Barley 118, 249, 648
Barnabas 571
Barren 187, 411, 723, 725
Barrier 385, 488, 541, 560, 583, 638, 685
Base 557, 596, 660, 662, 736
Baseless 555
Basic 653, 654, 662, 711, 717, 738
Basilisk 705
Basis 539–541, 546, 601, 605, 620, 637, 640, 659–662, 676, 681, 697, 710, 712, 730
Bath 144, 149–153
Battle 103, 104, 245, 264, 273, 294, 332, 432, 433, 452, 476, 508, 516, 521, 563, 574, 594, 608, 624, 644–646, 654, 656, 741 Battlefield 315
Bay 240
Beam 116, 391, 666
Beans 249
Bear 176–188, 280, 285, 391, 498, 541, 560, 616, 638, 639, 645, 667, 668, 683, 722, 727, 742, 743
Bear (animal) 118, 119, 520
Bear cross 394, 396, 402, 403
Bear fruit 721
Bear Sin 96, 234, 266, 390, 398, 525
Bear witness 83, 89, 275, 323, 339, 350, 364, 535, 541, 556, 659, 704, 731 Bearer 617
Bearing 708, 709
Beast 111, 113, 119, 125, 126, 142, 244, 405, 430, 434, 444, 469, 507, 508, 520, 523, 545, 667, 728
Beat 161–164, 235, 647
Beautification 119
Beautiful 459
Beatitudes 215, 217, 290
Beauty 119, 120, 227, 229, 277, 380, 382, 411, 521, 522, 650, 673, 704
Become 176–188, 285, 481, 548, 667
Bed 408, 560
Beelzebub, Beelzebul 168, 637
Befall 325, 608, 609, 689
Before 668, 696
Beforehand 664, 666, 693, 736
Beg 143
Beget 176–188, 285–287, 378, 445, 617, 674
Beggar 259, 686
Begin 581, 591, 666, 680
Beginning 65, 95, 164–169, 174, 315, 376, 377, 383, 482, 521, 522, 526, 536, 538, 545, 589, 594, 619, 625, 628, 665, 666, 669, 678
Begotten 616
Beguiling speech 592
Behaviour 229, 334, 340, 354, 379, 412, 421, 450, 480, 491, 496, 497, 505, 526–530, 535, 541, 553, 562, 563, 567–569, 591, 593, 596, 597, 607, 644, 701, 714, 720
Behead 393
Behind 481, 492, 493
Being 64, 87, 491, 547, 550, 571, 576, 587, 643, 703–712, 740
Belial, Beliar 124, 125, 288, 296, 423, 452, 554, 563, 587
Belief 69, 76, 77, 81, 101, 102, 179, 216, 253, 286, 308, 311, 322, 324, 330, 347, 354, 372, 395, 415, 417, 432, 433, 437, 439, 446, 451, 476, 483, 505, 524–526, 539, 545, 567, 583, 586–606, 607, 633, 637, 660, 672, 678, 680, 721, 730
Believer 92, 96, 112, 123, 146–148, 159, 167, 179, 181, 183, 185, 203, 214, 224, 225, 227, 232, 252, 256, 275, 305, 310, 315, 325, 327, 338, 346, 351, 375, 377, 385, 397, 400, 401, 412, 424, 440, 464, 469, 473, 474, 478, 491, 492, 497, 504, 505, 507, 526, 534, 551, 559, 571, 578, 595, 596, 598 600–603, 605, 607, 611, 625, 637, 638, 644, 651, 659, 660, 666, 676, 679, 683, 690, 691, 693, 709, 718, 719, 723, 730, 733, 740
Bellicose 657
Belly 73, 169, 212, 671
Belong 308, 463, 525, 684, 686–688, 715, 718
Belongings 381, 414
Beloved 256, 257, 287, 568
Benediction 212, 219, 416
Benefactor 258, 519
Benefit 115, 384, 467, 475, 479, 536, 581, 624, 694, 709, 722
Benevolent 328, 389
Bereaved 520
Bereavement 569 Besiege 554
Best 666
Bestow 208, 209, 211, 237, 271, 406, 542, 625, 668, 714, 722, 728, 732, 739
Bethel 140
Bethesda 637
Bethlehem 169–171, 737
Betray 83, 260, 268, 327, 346, 356, 421, 473, 520, 555
Betrayal 630
Betrothal 128, 506
Better 371, 374, 482, 489, 666, 731

Bewitch 507
Beyond 604, 687, 721
Bias 585, 587
Bible 243
Biblical criticism (→ Criticism, Biblical) Bigamy 383
Bill of divorce 606
Bind 171–172, 259, 394, 405, 415, 452, 472, 484, 488, 491, 508, 594, 600, 638, 650, 651, 669, 703
Binding 98, 99, 241, 331, 338, 341, 346, 397, 472, 595, 619
Binding and loosing 171, 466
Biological 617
Bird 119, 172–176, 262, 277, 286, 557, 610, 671, 672, 674
Birth 147, 151, 159, 160, 172, 176–188, 191, 207, 256, 280, 286, 295, 303, 309, 330, 343, 361, 458, 508, 521, 560, 617, 619, 643, 653, 668, 697, 708, 710, 721, 739
Birth Narratives 104, 182, 187, 256, 283, 512, 737 Birthday 627
Birth-pangs 124, 178, 180
Bishop 110, 136, 188–201, 247, 300, 307, 333, 339, 493, 514, 515, 646, 666, 690
Bit 118
Bitter 201–203
Bitter herbs 633
Bitterness 96, 106, 724, 743
Black 115, 203–206, 319, 656, 657
Blame 247
Blasphemy 79, 126, 270, 294, 317, 327, 394, 396, 466, 637, 700
Blazing 653
Blemish 116, 219, 371, 468, 634
Bless 206–218, 416, 417
Blessed 100, 206–218, 288, 321, 412, 556, 649, 690, 729
Blessing 78, 81, 97, 98, 122, 149, 184, 191, 206–218, 232, 240, 247, 250, 276, 280, 284, 286, 288, 300, 308, 332, 367, 369, 380, 408, 413, 416, 431, 463, 498, 531, 585, 603, 617, 633, 683, 713, 731–733, 735
Blighted 725
Blind 218–220, 319, 341, 355, 420, 421, 424, 429, 473, 513, 525, 572, 610
Bliss 216, 240, 563
Blood 93, 94, 96, 97, 114–116, 144, 151, 152, 174, 186, 220–226, 230, 237, 254, 255, 258, 261, 268, 289, 304, 317, 324, 328, 351, 369, 371, 375, 395, 398, 402, 410, 448, 470, 513, 514, 516, 541, 548, 555, 633, 634, 638, 643, 644, 647, 651, 655, 662, 671, 673, 675–677, 679, 683, 685, 694, 699, 700, 702, 703, 713, 730
Blood money 222, 689
Bloodshed 380, 452, 657, 724
Bloodthirstiness 205
Blot out 244, 370, 374, 471
Blow 161, 162, 241, 263, 317
Blunt 428
Boast 78, 112, 227–229, 320, 399, 499, 547, 566, 601, 637, 675, 680, 684, 727
Boastful 546, 712
Boat 559
Bodilessness 314, 315, 435
Bodily 422, 704, 709, 740
Body 66, 87, 93, 96, 119, 120, 152, 153, 169, 182, 209, 225, 229–242, 250, 266, 275, 277, 278, 300, 302, 307, 310, 312–315, 351, 354, 365, 385, 390, 391, 393, 399, 401, 402, 423, 432, 435, 436, 438, 440, 442–445, 459, 463, 466, 470, 473, 477, 480, 487, 495, 497, 498, 500, 501, 504, 517, 521, 527, 532, 535, 539, 562, 610, 617, 623, 629, 636, 638, 639, 643, 644, 647, 648, 652, 653, 671–676, 679, 682, 687, 695, 705, 707, 709, 711, 715, 721, 722, 727, 728, 732, 733, 739, 741
Body of Christ 10, 55, 92, 147, 148, 153, 237, 238, 301, 327, 398, 400, 467, 501, 541, 662, 723, 740, 741 Body of death 236, 436
Body of Moses 104
Body of sin 73, 236
Boiling 317
Boldness 328, 329, 364–365, 435, 490, 592, 710, 715, 739, 743
Bond 202, 259, 402, 471, 507, 594, 640, 663, 698, 715, 719, 723 Bondage 275, 282, 284, 335, 385, 412, 470, 531, 552, 623, 707, 715, 716, 718, 742
Bondwoman 531
Bone 205, 240, 337, 629, 652, 671, 672, 677
Book 53, 242–249, 292
Book of the Covenant 360
Book of life 448, 471
Born 181, 295, 308, 412, 473, 526, 549, 608, 616, 667, 678, 709, 738
Born again 154, 176, 185, 290, 386, 469, 706
Bosom 240, 575
Bottle 114, 613
Bought 308
Bound 715–718
Boundary 472, 473, 517, 539
Boundless 600
Bounds 729
Bounty 735
Bow 118, 587
Bowels 169
Bowl 106, 449, 653
Box 142–143
Boxes 645
Boy 280–291, 428
Brackish 201
Bragging 228
Brain 230, 679
Branch 515, 644, 648, 722
Brand 114
Brave 364
Bray 409
Breach 308, 630, 641, 687, 717
Bread 143, 170, 205, 237, 249–253, 341, 384, 586, 597, 612, 613, 629–631, 633, 642, 670, 729 Breadth 253, 254
Break 408, 686
Break down 541, 676
Break faith 74

Break in 729
Break loose 639
Break through 488
Breast 240, 515
Breastplate 205, 657
Breath 66, 84, 105, 382, 434, 550, 551, 729
Breathe 317
Brethren 287, 329, 424, 439, 473, 570, 666, 669, 675, 689, 707
Brevity 743
Bribery 137, 219, 268, 468
Bride 120, 145, 153, 475, 507
Bride of Christ 10, 153, 474
Bridegroom 475, 507, 612
Bridge 640
Bridle 627, 735
Brier 726
Bright 204
Brimstone 657
Bring 471, 666, 731, 741
Bring about 552
Bring forth 186, 187, 386, 566, 721, 722, 739
Bring in 471
Bring together 69, 292, 735
Bring to light 106, 469
Bring to mind 123
Bring to pass 471
Bring up 569
Broad 253–254
Broken 629, 641
Bronze 509, 510
Brood 174
Brother 191, 237, 254–260, 305, 318, 339, 341, 352, 364, 418, 504, 556, 557, 572, 637, 664, 666, 669, 672, 675, 691
Brother-in-law 254, 499
Brotherhood 254–257, 305, 640
Brotherly 640, 641
Build 300, 302, 329, 378, 390, 395, 458, 600, 660, 662, 684
Build up 214, 329, 582, 638, 723, 730, 731, 740, 741 Builder 279, 657
Building 300, 305, 377, 389, 390, 426, 490, 521, 529, 609, 658, 660–662, 744
Bull 114, 116, 224, 225, 677
Burden 241, 250, 260–263, 271, 277, 335, 336, 438, 441, 564, 570, 647, 674, 712
Burial 93, 144, 150, 263, 264, 626, 630, 643
Burial ground 520, 689
Burn 94, 109, 205, 235, 279, 390, 466, 509, 515, 652–657
Burnt-Offering 172
Burst 94
Bury 104, 147, 204, 263–266, 315, 390, 393, 401, 435, 437, 438, 446, 455, 487, 671
Bush 725
Business 138, 267, 268, 292, 319, 373, 402, 594
Busybody 266–267
Butler 560
Buy 267–268, 380
By-product 681
Byzantine 70
Caesar 83, 169, 269–270, 276, 331, 474, 652
Calamity 239, 423, 451, 565, 727
Calamus 121
Calendar 61, 272, 624–628, 632
Calf 116
Call 76, 84, 97, 129, 136, 163, 167, 215, 244, 262, 271–276, 285, 289, 291, 295, 298, 300, 301, 303, 311, 319, 322, 329, 340, 342, 344, 345, 357–359, 367, 408–410, 422, 446, 480, 482, 483, 488, 489, 493, 508, 509, 532, 533, 540, 542, 544, 569, 592, 598, 599, 601, 603, 621, 634, 651, 657, 662, 689–691, 695–697, 703, 719, 729, 730
Call away 607
Call for 84
Call in 84, 88, 91, 569
Call on 410
Call to account 332, 333
Called 97, 133, 534
Calmness 68, 432
Camel 116
Camp 295
Canaan 53
Canaanite 543, 640
Cancel 73, 74, 402, 471, 697–699, 701
Canon 50, 51–52, 53, 65, 66, 70, 134, 135, 243, 244
Canopy 653
Capability 502, 526, 675, 723
Capacity 239, 445, 579, 583, 681, 697, 719, 723, 742
Capital 271, 392, 393, 395, 403, 721
Capricious 692
Captive 698, 717
Captivity 52, 53–55, 57, 61, 67, 354, 685, 701, 717
Capture 343, 364, 724
Carcass 230, 232, 610
Cardinal 501, 502
Care 102, 115, 173, 188, 189, 191, 199, 203, 239, 250, 276–278, 335, 464, 498, 523, 587, 612, 616, 620, 642, 676, 689, 692–695, 726
Career 476
Careless 563
Cargo 260
Caricature 114
Carnal 236, 315
Carnality 673
Carousing 458
Carpenter 279
Carpet 317
Carry away 529
Carry out 733–735, 742
Carve 332, 390
Case 52, 484, 645
Cast ashore 608
Cast lots 70
Cast off 574
Cast out 168, 415, 446, 449–454, 541, 572, 623, 651
Castaway 299
Castrate 559–561
Casual 529
Casuistry 52, 67, 334, 335, 485, 700, 730

Catastrophe 108, 224, 450, 596, 610, 611, 622, 657
Catch 469, 609, 671
Catch sight 694
Catchword 351
Catechism 599
Catechumenate 158
Category 635, 681, 694
Catholic Epistles 52
Cattle 114–116, 209, 743
Causality 69
Cause 60, 69, 164, 166, 219, 436, 550, 556, 607, 673, 731
Caution 663
Cavalry 510
Cave 264, 393
Cavity 673
Cease 181, 606, 640, 726
Celebrate 360, 525, 624–634, 649, 700, 727
Celestial 104
Celibacy 192, 495, 496, 560
Cemetery 451
Censer 649, 655
Censure 461, 572
Census 171, 519
Centre 681
Centurion 341
Cereal 250
Ceremonial 122, 123, 295, 373, 629, 641, 649
Ceremonial cleanness 155, 448, 685
Ceremonial law (→ Law, Ceremonial)
Ceremony 152, 155–158, 186, 224, 225, 282, 288, 308, 426, 452, 616, 625
Certain 97–99, 326, 678, 680, 723
Certainty 339, 591, 638, 658–664, 697, 713, 714
Certificate 244
Cessation 551
Chained 452
Chair 661
Chalice 641
Chalk 265
Challenge 258
Champion 104
Chance 687, 694, 725
Change 354, 355, 416, 470, 475, 477, 527, 596, 599, 608, 609, 624, 630, 632, 654, 700, 705, 708
Change mind 356–358, 468
Changed life 223, 358, 604
Channel 581, 683
Chaos 113, 114, 422, 507, 508, 522
Character 56, 187, 188, 206, 236, 239, 271, 274, 479, 491, 532, 535, 542, 543, 561, 565, 601, 603, 642, 644, 651, 678, 693, 704–710, 731, 733 Characteristic 114, 284, 304, 310, 488, 489, 614, 629, 636, 686, 723, 739 Characterize 697, 706, 714, 736, 741 Charge 84, 261, 335, 340, 349, 474, 477, 505, 528, 558, 604, 643, 688, 690
Charger 117
Chariot 280, 531, 537
Charioteer 558
Charisma 52
Charismatic 52, 192, 198, 208, 570, 601, 739
Charity 259
Chase 481
Chassidim 67
Chaste 496, 502
Chasten 373
Chastening 426
Chastise 161–164, 568
Chastisement 407, 639, 734
Chattel 498
Cheat 137–139
Check 352, 495, 722
Cheer 328
Cheerfulness 513
Cherub 101, 279–280, 674
Chest 142, 143
Chief 270
Chief men 168
Chief priest (→ Priest, Chief)
Chief seat 666
Chief Shepherd 305
Child 92, 177, 240, 256, 280–291, 360, 378, 407, 423, 508, 523, 568, 595, 614, 617–619, 621, 639, 708
Child-bearing 187, 378
Child-sacrifice 463
Childbirth 85, 187, 288, 409, 410, 654
Childish 615
Childlessness 288, 499, 531
Childlike 616
Children 149, 160, 212, 213, 219, 238, 254, 256, 267, 277, 293, 308, 329, 332, 358, 395, 411, 431, 445, 498, 507, 510, 551, 556, 569, 572, 614–619, 637, 655, 660, 668, 693, 708, 744 Children of Abraham 77, 111
Children of the curse 416
Children of the Devil 567
Children of God 179, 274, 284, 287, 288, 339, 437, 462, 470, 617, 618, 620, 649, 651, 717
Children of hell 361
Children of light 333, 656
Children of promise 81, 299, 371
Chiliasm 50, 52–53, 64
Chiliast 52
Choice 123, 275, 474, 476, 478, 531, 533–543, 609
Choir 665
Choke 226, 457, 460
Choose 273, 435, 472, 481, 503, 533–543, 556, 563, 680, 693, 714
Chosen 97, 271, 274, 356, 379, 426, 474, 512, 534, 546, 625, 668, 685, 688
Chosen people 99, 485, 618, 636
Christ 53, 63, 123, 168, 404, 436, 472, 572, 581, 677, 683, 684, 740, 741 Christ, Person of 53, 237, 375, 409, 424, 454, 455, 488, 548, 549, 578, 581, 610, 680, 729
Christ, Work of 53, 91, 215, 237, 369, 372, 375, 409, 540, 581, 611, 651, 701, 730
Christ-hymn 58, 707
Christening 707

Christian 453, 480, 490, 507, 519, 534, 535, 552, 566, 590, 610, 619, 628, 644–649, 652, 656, 662, 669, 675, 679, 680, 684, 685, 690, 693, 696, 697, 701, 709, 727, 739, 740
Christmas 631
Christocentric 53
Christological 53, 214, 215, 239, 281, 337, 411, 435, 438, 440, 599, 621, 737
Christology 53, 63, 220, 347, 548, 549, 620, 712
Chronicle 243
Chronicler 53, 55
Chronology 301, 630, 634
Chthonic 498
Church 10, 50–52, 56, 58, 59, 61–63, 65, 66, 71, 87, 89–92, 95, 96, 99, 106, 114, 117, 121, 123, 125, 126, 129–135, 138, 146–150, 154, 157, 159, 160, 166–168, 172, 175, 178, 183, 185, 187, 188, 191, 192, 197–200, 214, 215, 223, 224, 228, 231, 232, 235, 237, 238, 242–244, 246–248, 251, 254, 257, 258, 261, 263, 267, 271, 272, 275, 276, 278, 279, 285–287, 289, 291–307, 310, 311, 322–325, 328–331, 339–341, 343, 344, 346, 347, 351, 359, 361, 363–365, 369, 370, 372, 390, 393–400, 403, 406, 411, 414, 415, 424, 436, 441, 449, 453, 461, 462, 466–469, 473–475, 477, 478, 490, 496, 500, 506, 508, 510, 519, 525, 526, 528, 529, 534, 535, 539–542, 545, 548, 551, 554, 556, 561, 566, 568–572, 578, 579, 582, 589, 591, 592, 599–605, 611, 613, 615, 619, 621, 623, 628, 630–632, 634, 638, 640–644, 646, 648, 651, 653, 660, 662, 664, 666, 667, 669, 675, 686, 689–691, 697, 702–704, 720, 723, 728, 730–733, 736, 739–741
Cinnamon 121
Circle 439
Circumcision 50, 61, 62, 73, 78, 79, 145, 149, 154–160, 235, 283, 307–312, 336, 340, 360, 361, 368, 371, 385, 424, 504, 552, 602, 626, 641, 675, 676, 680, 691, 699
Circumlocution 586
Circumstances 520, 540, 542, 591, 678
Circus 645
Cite 736
Citizen 291, 299, 360, 392, 479, 497, 640, 685, 687, 689–691, 715, 732
City 230, 272, 279, 286, 291, 319, 325–327, 394, 396, 431, 463, 554, 559, 562, 610, 615, 616, 642, 648, 654, 660, 661, 663, 682, 688, 690, 691, 714, 741
City-state 287
Civil code 373
Claim 84, 258, 271, 273, 311, 399, 455, 473, 527, 537, 538, 543, 544, 550, 587, 590, 595, 596, 605, 610, 618, 637, 678, 719, 720, 723
Clan 194, 196, 294, 534, 615, 616, 625, 632
Clarity of mind 514, 515
Class 501 Classical Greek 62
Classification 533
Classify 534
Clay 243
Clean 62, 172, 265, 349, 351, 352, 379, 479, 488
Cleanliness 330
Cleanse 115, 119, 122, 144, 146, 148, 150–154, 158, 223–225, 239, 281, 433, 629, 634, 644, 677, 698, 725
Clear 204, 313, 680
Clever 412, 509, 551, 692
Climax 647, 669, 725
Climb over 71
Cling 700
Close 620, 678
Cloth 205, 312–317
Clothe 312–317, 467, 470, 744
Clothing 114, 116, 204, 207, 234, 312–317, 318, 395, 449, 468, 470, 479, 563, 625, 630, 636, 672, 706–709
Cloud 144, 151, 204, 323, 503, 649, 655
Club 162, 407
Cluster 724
Cock 173
Codex 53, 69
Coffin 674
Coin 463, 592, 643
Coincide 555
Cold 96, 317–319, 733 Collapse 608–610
Collect 508, 536
Collection 128, 138, 214, 301, 332, 478, 642, 731
College 573
Collegiate 199
Colony 685
Colour 203–206, 224, 447, 656, 657
Colt 117
Combat 644, 645, 650
Combustible 653, 656
Combustion 654
Come 174, 319–327, 438, 545, 609
Come between 373
Come near 586
Come together 97
Come to pass 737
Comfort 88, 95, 244, 327–329, 431, 547, 568–571, 639, 681
Comforter 89, 91
Coming 65, 111, 124, 175, 269, 358, 411, 438, 474, 475, 489, 516, 519, 525, 544, 545, 571, 581, 596, 610, 613, 620, 633, 639, 651, 678, 688, 695, 699, 704, 708, 741
Coming One 100, 437
Command 74, 121, 165, 193, 208, 226, 230, 231, 255, 260, 271, 272, 274, 292–294, 303, 308, 310, 322, 330–343, 381, 389, 408–410, 415, 453, 454, 461, 469, 476, 491, 506, 526, 532, 554–556, 559, 560, 572, 604, 617, 622, 623, 683, 714, 731, 741 Commander 164, 270
Commandment 61, 67, 86, 95, 166, 196, 215, 216, 245, 257–262, 293, 294, 316, 331–333, 337–341, 355, 357, 402, 415, 417, 418, 422, 430, 433, 437, 451, 455, 456, 458, 494, 506, 526, 533, 538, 551, 554, 571, 597, 604, 618, 619, 623, 626, 627, 632, 638, 676, 689, 691, 730

Commemorate 626
Commend 278, 731
Commendation 592
Commerce 670
Commercial 268, 344, 484, 721
Commission 98, 103, 122, 123, 127–136, 195, 213, 246, 263, 271, 274, 294, 298, 300, 301, 332, 381, 382, 455, 464, 476, 489, 533, 538, 542, 550, 592, 596, 600, 703 Commit 730, 733
Commitment 239, 284, 344, 368, 496, 502, 514, 680
Common 62, 433, 448, 473, 539, 547, 548, 583, 624, 639, 642, 643, 677, 728
Communal 448, 484, 533, 633, 639, 641, 642, 717, 720
Communication 511, 574, 578, 579, 639, 678, 692
Communion 152, 160, 314, 460, 635, 639, 642
Communism 642
Community 58, 77, 96, 97, 128, 133, 144, 159, 160, 171, 175, 189–191, 194–197, 211, 214, 219, 224, 225, 237, 244, 256–259, 267, 269, 273, 279, 295, 296, 298, 300, 302, 303, 305, 308, 310, 317, 330, 333, 338, 355, 357, 361, 368, 414, 433, 435, 466, 474, 479, 488, 490, 497, 500, 520, 526, 534–536, 538, 542, 544, 554, 560, 577–579, 582, 598, 607, 613, 624, 625, 628, 629, 631, 632, 634, 640–643, 656, 658, 661, 662, 668, 673, 681, 684, 685–687, 690, 693, 700, 715, 720, 732, 733 Community Rule 67
Community theology 58
Communistic 640
Companion 254, 255, 259, 283, 480, 635, 639, 642, 643, 690
Companionship 643
Company 259, 469, 484, 542, 555, 641, 673, 733 Comparable 729
Comparative ethics (→ Ethics, Comparative) Comparative theology (→ Theology, Comparative) Comparison 580, 724
Compassion 110, 112, 113, 214, 258, 334, 335, 486, 569, 679, 699
Compel 505, 718
Compete 645, 647
Competitions 625
Compile 576
Complain 574
Complaint 598, 652
Complete 58, 263, 282, 429, 591, 605, 678, 733, 734, 741 Completion 627
Compliment 461
Compose 676
Comprehend 431, 481, 678
Comprehension 676
Compulsion 272, 401, 496, 718, 719
Comrade 254, 259
Conceal 50, 577
Conceit 546
Conceive 176, 186, 343–344, 425
Concept 612, 711
Conception 152, 186, 187, 343, 625, 708
Concepts, Moral (→ Moral concepts)
Conceptual 582
Concern 102, 191, 192, 276, 277, 646, 595, 731
Concession 496, 506, 709
Conciliator 373
Conclude 330
Conclusion 664
Concubine 230, 498, 499
Condemnation 171, 191, 217, 220, 349, 356, 372, 392, 394–396, 403, 417, 424, 433, 437, 452, 513, 515, 542, 547, 550, 566, 579, 590, 597, 607, 609, 610, 613, 633, 648, 655, 675, 688, 722, 730, 738
Condemnatory 397
Condescension 426
Condition 165, 271, 275, 367, 536, 541, 543, 548, 564, 582, 600, 606, 618, 672, 679, 703, 739
Conditioned 71, 526
Conduct 59, 201, 349, 350, 352, 418, 472, 482, 487, 491, 550, 571, 594, 597, 598, 601, 604, 616, 620, 623, 624, 723
Confer 208, 650, 675
Confess 115, 205, 223, 276, 344–348, 424, 455, 469, 493, 545, 574, 677, 678
Confession 51, 147, 149, 153, 158, 227, 244, 272, 290, 309, 332, 336, 340, 344, 347, 349, 380, 382, 384, 396, 404, 435, 437, 491, 519, 597–599, 604, 636, 638, 662, 668, 669, 679, 700, 702, 708, 735
Confessional 600, 628
Confidence 223, 227, 229, 261, 311, 327, 328, 364, 365, 384, 399, 425, 433, 444, 492, 505, 531, 587, 588, 591, 592, 658–660, 675, 679–681, 703, 710, 712, 713 Confine 735
Confirm 97–99, 415, 538, 545, 594, 596, 597, 600, 658–664, 667, 708, 734
Conflagration 463, 521, 656, 657
Conflict 270, 273, 373, 429, 430, 452, 487, 561, 563, 592, 600–604, 631, 644–653
Conflicting 505
Conform 708, 709
Conformity 371, 400, 481, 603, 693, 705, 707
Confrontation 499, 502, 505, 524, 525, 550, 624, 651 Confusion 468, 527
Confute 577
Congregation 96, 97, 99, 190, 219, 245, 247, 255, 272, 291, 293, 294, 296, 297, 300–305, 496, 500, 501, 572, 582, 618, 643, 732
Conjecture 326
Conquer 118, 252, 400, 434, 445, 458, 460, 563, 564, 644, 650, 688, 718
Conqueror 126, 244, 407, 408, 413, 651
Conquest 402, 445, 446, 533, 686, 713, 716
Conquest of Canaan 53, 55, 61, 66
Conscience 116, 147, 152, 223, 225, 341, 348–353, 448, 449, 495, 552, 566, 572, 604, 677

Conscious 549, 647, 696, 736 Consciousness 348, 351, 353, 485, 491, 497, 527, 528, 538, 539, 699, 700
Conscription 536
Consecrate 210, 224, 239, 294, 295, 405, 413–415, 474, 497, 507, 688 Consent 344
Consequence 268, 396, 419, 437, 478, 541, 611, 679, 687, 702, 716–718, 721, 725 Consideration 105, 106, 537, 675, 680, 723 Consign 730
Consistency 725, 726
Consolation 216, 217, 328, 329
Consolation of Israel 329, 570
Console 88, 328, 329, 341, 567–573
Consolidate 604
Conspicuous 267
Conspiracy 246
Constancy 367, 710
Constellation 670
Constitute 710
Constitution 189, 521, 640, 711
Constraint 496, 525, 693
Construction 521, 522, 713
Consul 169, 269–270, 407
Consultation 293
Consume 390
Consummation 52, 251, 252, 506, 508, 655, 668, 692
Consumption 642
Contact 444, 512, 583
Contain 636, 741 Contaminated 653
Contemplation 529
Contemporary 334
Contempt 74, 75, 254, 397, 461, 479, 481, 539, 647, 726
Contend 645–647, 719
Content 546, 600, 681, 704, 727, 741 Contentiousness 106, 641, 646
Contentment 433
Contest 454, 469, 645
Contestant 646, 647
Context 57, 582, 698, 737
Continue 674
Continuity 299, 736
Contract 121, 243, 291, 344
Contractor 279
Contradict 601, 630, 659, 693
Contrary 597, 606
Contrast 609, 629, 631, 643, 666
Contravention 447
Contribution 642, 740
Contrive 599
Control 208, 260, 273, 365, 429, 436, 450, 452, 458, 494, 495, 501, 502, 517, 527, 595, 650, 651, 654, 671, 692, 697, 715, 720, 733, 738
Controversy 133, 487, 544, 558, 631
Conversation 575, 612
Conversion 77, 111, 136, 144–146, 149, 158–160, 163, 180, 182, 183, 245, 291, 346, 349, 353–362, 422, 511, 557, 560, 589, 590, 623, 685, 688, 691, 702, 703
Convert 191, 247, 350, 413, 689 Conveyance 606
Convict 91, 130, 349
Conviction 365, 392, 482, 492, 545, 587, 595, 604, 710, 713, 731, 735
Convictor 373
Convince 504, 572, 588–590, 594, 663, 681
Convincer 91
Co-ordinate 523
Copy 491, 521, 643
Corn 115, 204, 498, 625
Cornerstone 377, 541, 596, 661, 662
Coronation 121, 426
Corporate 229, 237, 294, 301, 305, 733 Corporeality 87, 233, 500
Corpse 113, 229, 232–234, 393, 429, 443, 444, 446, 450, 480, 608, 610, 653–655
Corpus Hermeticum (→ Hermetic Literature)
Correct 163, 707
Correction 349, 462, 551, 555, 568, 569
Corrector 708
Correlation 60
Correspond 246, 491, 731
Corrupt 96, 350, 402, 464, 467–469, 565, 588, 589, 724
Corruptibility 552
Corruption 76, 266, 299, 381, 458, 467, 468, 470, 559, 562, 590, 611, 677, 681
Cosmetic 119
Cosmic 53, 102, 167, 186, 224, 237, 238, 257, 290, 298, 301–303, 374, 383, 396, 401, 402, 423, 432, 498, 521, 523, 549, 562, 610, 637, 707
Cosmogony 53
Cosmological 166, 386, 452, 523, 616, 674
Cosmology 53, 69, 491, 521, 522, 594, 655
Cosmopolitanism 640
Cosmos 94, 164, 167, 184, 232, 233, 237, 387, 432, 450, 470, 507, 521–526, 595, 616, 715, 716
Cost 404, 414, 679
Council 52, 102, 192, 194, 196, 199, 273, 297, 350, 362–364, 418, 580, 591, 712
Council of Jerusalem (→ Jerusalem Council)
Counsel 89, 362, 363, 425, 451, 552, 569, 625, 684, 696, 738
Counsellor 91, 665
Count 480, 536, 540, 546, 556, 675, 723, 732, 733 Countenance 212, 708
Counteract 693
Counterfeit 187
Country 517, 606, 615, 685, 741 Countryside 520
Courage 314, 327, 364–365, 431, 501, 536, 720, 731
Course 492, 524, 608, 610, 667, 694, 730, 741 Court 101, 102, 267, 271, 315, 321, 344, 347, 349, 350, 363, 364, 373, 393, 414, 415, 478, 554, 560, 580, 665
Courtesan 497
Courtyard 632
Cousin 256
Covenant 58, 59, 61, 71, 77, 79, 81, 96, 98, 108, 109, 123, 149, 154, 159, 160, 185, 189, 195

Covenant continued
199, 210, 221, 222, 224, 225, 243, 248, 258, 280, 293–296, 308, 309, 311, 332, 333, 349, 350, 354, 357, 365–376, 382, 383, 386, 412, 414, 416, 423, 433, 437, 448, 452, 463, 481, 531, 538, 541, 542, 589, 593, 596, 601, 617, 626, 636, 638, 641, 655, 659, 666, 685, 690, 691, 702, 717
Cover 555, 587, 653, 698, 701, 707, 733, 735
Covet 432, 457, 727
Covetous 137, 138, 231, 336
Cow 537, 672, 686
Cowardice 365, 559
Crack, 94
Craft 279, 654, 743
Craftsman 279, 383, 387, 419, 735
Craftsmanship 723, 735
Crafty 412
Crave 456, 671
Crazed 529
Create 259, 272, 349, 378, 380, 383, 402, 422, 493, 563, 590, 672, 673, 678 Created 181, 301, 390, 474, 509, 518, 524, 572, 600, 625, 668, 670
Creation 54, 56, 58, 60, 63, 65, 66, 70, 72, 84, 85, 87, 95, 99 101, 116, 165–169, 175, 180, 185, 211, 213, 216, 230, 236, 256, 279, 313, 333, 355, 376–389, 424, 431, 433, 437, 470, 496, 506, 517, 518, 521, 522, 524–526, 552, 565, 617, 628, 630, 636, 665, 668–671, 694, 713, 732, 733 Creation, New 86, 87, 153, 185, 186, 222, 225, 248, 257, 275, 299, 311, 336, 359, 385, 390, 434, 470, 538, 628, 680 Creation ordinances 333
Creative 384, 400, 643, 692
Creator 92, 112, 138, 175, 178, 216, 227, 375, 378–387, 422, 502, 518, 522, 523, 552, 616, 617, 621, 639, 665, 669–671, 688, 723, 728
Creature 138, 222, 376–389, 439, 471, 521, 674, 679, 723
Creatureliness 85, 221, 233, 552, 678, 679, 700
Credal form 58, 473, 677
Credibility 505, 588, 594, 724
Credit 594
Creed 147, 620
Cremation 264
Crime 151, 392, 410, 519
Criminal 264, 390, 391, 402, 417, 466, 479, 564, 649, 655, 669, 698
Cripple 507
Crisis 436, 724, 725
Critical 583, 584, 602
Criticism 512, 568, 603
Criticism, Biblical 70, 582
Criticism, Historical 57, 60, 61, 548
Criticism, Literary 51, 57, 60, 62, 68
Criticism, Redaction (→ Redaction Criticism)
Criticism, Scientific 71
Criticism, Textual 57, 69–70, 71
Crops 520, 724, 729
Cross 54, 55, 57, 73, 74, 113, 147, 167, 168, 191, 198, 214, 223, 224, 228, 237, 248, 254, 279, 323, 330, 375, 385, 389–405, 409, 411, 417, 430, 437, 439, 455, 461, 464, 473, 479, 483, 510, 540, 544, 547–549, 551, 555, 564, 572, 601, 602, 615, 638, 647, 649, 651, 669, 680, 685, 702, 703, 707, 719, 722, 726, 727, 740
Crowd 292–295, 322, 409, 411, 482, 646, 679, 728, 729, 731, 732, 744
Crown 118, 163, 204, 405–408, 470, 648, 652
Crown of boasting 229
Crown of thorns 726
Crucified 135, 178, 244, 248, 300, 387, 393–396, 439, 455, 466, 473, 564, 629, 633, 643, 727 Crucifixion 154, 162, 163, 168, 290, 298, 304, 390–396, 516, 630
Cruel 108, 392, 393, 520, 652
Crumb 252
Crush 261, 610
Cry 342, 360, 408–412, 464, 610, 615, 623, 724
Cryptic 619
Cuff 163
Culmination 541
Culpable 364
Culprit 415
Cult 53, 64, 66, 69, 101, 102, 109, 123, 142, 207, 224, 226, 255, 294, 340, 367, 444, 498, 499, 514, 529, 560, 587, 595, 599, 625, 649, 653, 655, 687, 698, 708
Cultic 58, 66, 99, 100, 122, 150, 210, 211, 219, 220, 223, 250, 292, 296, 304, 307, 310, 322, 351, 367, 390, 401, 403, 438, 447, 468, 479, 495, 497, 499, 538, 586, 607, 650, 687, 699, 716, 742
Cultivate 681
Cultivation 416, 520, 726
Cultural 518, 583
Culture 59, 68, 70, 452, 522, 543, 598, 625, 640, 732
Cumber 73
Cuneiform 68
Cunning 282, 412–413, 509
Cup 109, 111, 213, 369, 529, 633
Cup-shaped 240
Cure 119, 218, 428
Curious 266
Curse 78, 85, 97, 98, 108, 113, 173, 202, 207–210, 214, 215, 219, 266, 286, 332, 367, 369, 389, 390, 413–418, 421, 452, 463, 464, 509, 547, 554, 673, 719, 724–726, 743
Curtain 280, 677
Custodian 370, 573, 579
Custom 70, 164, 196, 257, 288, 308–310, 314, 315, 364, 394, 402, 406, 511, 570, 586, 611, 626, 627, 629, 631, 655, 687
Customary 709
Cut 309, 368, 527
Cut down 725
Cut off 65, 239, 308, 463, 465, 467, 472, 561, 654
Cycle 182, 625–630, 654
Cynic 127
Cypress 389

Daily 249–253, 261, 278, 624, 630, 702
Damage 182, 563, 678
Damascus Rule 67
Damnation 423, 657
Damning 413
Dancing 108, 625, 626, 709
Danger 116, 187, 241, 278, 299, 372, 381, 419–420, 430, 440, 455, 482, 484, 489, 490, 496, 510, 553, 559, 594, 611, 612, 622, 651, 663, 693, 695, 703, 715
Dangerous 108, 509, 565, 585
Dare 364
Dark 203, 218, 257, 647
Darken 421, 449
Darkness 102, 110, 204, 276, 301, 333, 338, 355, 359, 379, 382, 420–425, 450, 452, 462, 483, 490, 519, 522, 525, 556, 563, 609, 610, 656, 723
Dart 656, 682
Date 477, 627, 628, 630, 631, 634, 739
Daughter 256, 283, 395, 499, 614, 615, 655
David 100, 425–428, 473, 538
Davidic King 100, 405
Davidic Messiah 426
Dawn 630
Day 272, 321, 366, 422, 423, 425, 451, 473, 477, 513, 514, 612, 619, 627–631, 731, 737
Day of Atonement 114, 116, 151, 221, 223, 224, 351, 612, 626, 628, 700
Day of Christ 147, 742
Day of conflict 382
Day of favour 382
Day of judgment 289, 329, 358, 467
Day of the Lord 75, 466, 467
Day of opportunity 115, 174
Day of salvation 440, 638
Day of testing 473
Day of visitation 190
Day of wrath 110
Day of Yahweh 190, 423, 655
Dayspring 191
Dazzling 708
Deacon 198, 472
Dead 79, 103, 120, 125, 147, 166, 186, 204, 205, 221, 225, 232–234, 240, 254, 256, 261, 263–265, 290, 312, 313, 329, 342, 346, 352, 359, 384, 385, 390, 400–402, 410, 421, 429–447, 450–452, 463, 469, 470, 475, 484, 499, 523, 544, 569, 591, 592, 605, 609, 610, 612, 625, 649, 653, 668, 669, 676, 677, 696
Dead Sea Scrolls (→ Qumran)
Dead Works 116, 351, 599
Deadly 645
Deaf 220, 428–429, 509
Dealings 548, 680
Death 73, 78, 84–86, 93, 96, 113, 118, 120, 131, 142, 144, 147, 148, 150, 151, 154, 158, 168, 173, 180, 181, 187, 205, 207, 208, 221–224, 231–237, 240, 248, 257, 264–266, 288, 301–303, 309, 310, 314, 315, 321, 323, 326–328, 331, 336, 343, 346, 354, 359, 364–367, 371, 374, 375, 380, 387, 389–395, 398–406, 409, 416–424, 429–447, 455, 458, 463–474, 482, 483, 500, 501, 505, 507, 511, 512, 518, 524, 525, 529, 543, 548, 549, 552, 556–559, 563, 564, 571, 586, 611, 619, 622, 623, 628–630, 634, 638, 643, 644, 646, 649–651, 654, 659, 672–677, 681, 682, 686, 702, 707–709, 718, 719, 722, 723, 738, 740
Deathbed 586
Death-warrant 471
Debased 671
Debate 601, 631, 715
Debauchery 458, 496, 654
Debit 471
Debt 226, 402, 698, 701
Debtor 505, 702
Decalogue 54, 336, 337, 717
Decapitate 391
Decay 266, 385, 470, 480, 500, 552, 683
Deceased 265, 431
Deceit 296, 299, 421, 509, 551
Deceive 85, 124–126, 212, 336, 413, 430, 468, 481, 508, 552, 592, 657 Decency 501
Deception 87, 126, 550, 693
Deceptive 546, 550, 709, 726
Decide 60, 472, 533, 565, 610, 648, 651, 695
Decision 107, 112, 123, 129, 190, 195, 217, 244, 273, 291, 293, 304, 308, 330, 356, 365, 373, 395, 423, 424, 457, 476, 477, 482, 485, 488, 491, 503, 533, 534, 536, 537, 540–542, 547, 562, 567, 586, 600, 601, 607, 609, 625, 681, 695, 697, 703, 720, 732
Decisive 482, 488, 597, 739
Declaration 402, 702, 738
Declaratory 596
Declare 344, 574–576, 604, 605, 719, 736 Decline 454
Decomposition 265
Decoration 495, 522, 524
Decree 244, 322, 326, 330, 363, 393, 402, 414, 563, 690, 693, 695, 696, 734 Decry 727
Dedicate 413, 414
Dedication 273, 414, 470, 492, 537, 633, 705
Dedication of Temple 629
Deed 79, 212, 214, 236, 243, 244, 254, 271, 457, 482, 546, 556, 568, 572, 679, 713, 719, 722, 723
Deed of cession 505
Deem 595
Deep 522, 670
Defeat 433, 438, 439, 440, 470, 508, 525, 644, 646, 649, 650
Defect 56, 107, 219
Defection 606, 607, 608
Defective 352, 593
Defence 51, 373, 528, 590, 612, 726
Defenceless 416
Defendant 558
Defender 89
Defending Counsel 83, 89
Deferential 609
Defile 96, 205, 265, 384, 390, 393, 447–449, 468, 499, 639, 642, 671

Defilement 152, 204, 225, 479, 480, 507, 559, 641, 677, 688
Definite 693, 734 Define 710
Definition 331, 501, 506, 681
Deformed 287, 479
Defraud 137, 138
Dehistorizing 380
Deification 616, 705
Deism 70, 71
Deity 676, 740
Deity, Heathen 75
Delay 693, 742
Delegate 130, 132, 408
Delegation 197
Deliberate 372, 473, 502, 722
Delight 534
Delinquent 561
Deliver 195, 236, 238, 326, 409, 414, 415, 436, 459, 466, 547, 558, 566, 599, 600, 623, 650, 734 Deliver up 693
Deliverance 68, 70, 99, 141, 315, 345, 438, 439, 531, 532, 544, 554, 566, 596, 655, 699, 701, 702
Deliverer 54, 320
Delphi 653
Delude 552
Delusion 546
Demand 84, 271, 334, 368, 396, 398, 402, 406, 426, 482, 489, 491, 492, 510, 538, 571, 588, 595, 598–600, 602, 616, 626, 627, 640, 643, 647, 714, 719, 730, 738
Demean 449
Demented 529
Demiurge 387, 521
Democracy 732
Demon 54, 95, 102, 119, 121, 168, 219, 322, 382, 409, 415, 431, 446, 449–454, 508, 509, 529, 530, 567, 572, 611, 625, 632, 636, 637, 643, 651
Demon-possessed 79, 453
Demoniac 117, 340, 420, 427, 572, 576
Demonic 114, 139, 151, 408, 414, 449, 452, 500, 510, 511, 522, 527, 611, 613, 644, 650, 651
Demonstration 411, 613, 628
Demythologization 54, 57, 59, 380, 523, 583
Denarius 118
Denizen 510
Denounce 641
Denunciation 410
Deny 74, 126, 202, 268, 346, 347, 421, 427, 433, 454–456, 469, 482, 489, 490, 493, 525, 535, 552, 562, 608, 611, 644, 657, 678, 691, 708, 718, 730
Depart 181, 209, 320, 442, 558, 559, 606, 607, 611, 634
Departure 607, 676
Depend on 591, 649, 659
Dependable 97, 594, 596
Dependence 84, 311, 355, 375, 385, 386, 484, 616, 664, 673, 681, 700
Dependent 385, 427, 440, 480, 541, 542, 612, 730
Depersonalize 566, 612
Depict 689, 690
Depopulation 109
Deport 686
Depose 315
Depraved 398, 565
Depravity 559, 677
Depreciation 524
Depression 163, 262
Deprive 679
Depth 253
Dereliction 615
Derivation 56, 57, 662, 674, 696
Derogatory 732
Descend 675, 704
Descendant 81, 285, 286, 288, 427, 434, 473
Descendants of Abraham 79, 80
Descendants of Adam 96
Descent 187, 283, 289, 427, 433, 438, 525, 541, 557, 616, 619, 667, 677, 681, 683 Descent into hell 677
Descent of Jesus 77, 619
Describe 57, 573–576, 580
Description 57, 614
Descriptive Ethics (→ Ethics, Descriptive)
Desecration 75, 125, 448, 626
Desecularization 122
Desert 411, 451, 509, 550, 729, 739
Deserter 606
Desertion 716
Deserts 722
Deserve 434, 489
Design 556, 670
Designation 332, 473, 501, 623, 626, 735
Designer 279
Desirable 729
Desire 98, 106, 137, 169, 187, 211, 231, 233, 236, 336, 343, 359, 401, 412, 424, 456–461, 494, 495, 501, 502, 509, 528, 530, 533, 534, 537, 555, 557, 611, 630, 645, 646, 671, 672, 676, 678, 680, 681, 692, 723, 724, 726, 734
Desolate 174, 411
Desolation 75, 114, 173, 174, 411, 610
Desolation, Abomination of (→Abomination of Desolation) Despair 106, 314, 411
Despise 74, 400, 453, 455, 461–462, 542, 555
Despoil 651
Despondency 622
Despot 272
Destiny 50, 107, 260, 377, 379, 431, 434, 436, 450, 464, 477, 489, 534, 595, 677, 692, 693, 716
Destitute 318
Destroy 104, 110, 111, 151, 163, 168, 219, 254, 322, 390, 395, 399, 401, 414, 425, 434, 436, 446, 451, 459, 462–471, 500, 521, 530, 546, 552, 554, 555, 563, 608, 623, 638, 655–657, 661, 672, 698, 701
Destroyer 101, 379, 462, 465, 467
Destroying angel 101

Destruction 103, 113, 141, 205, 222, 236, 248, 254, 354, 413–415, 425, 431, 452, 462–469, 525, 554, 593, 608, 610–612, 629, 654, 657, 685, 692, 724
Destructive 207, 210, 413, 416, 418, 452, 457, 459, 461, 463, 555, 561, 563 Detach 674, 715
Determination 240, 648
Determine 54, 326, 457, 458, 471–478, 533, 540, 542, 571, 648, 695–697, 722, 734, 735. 737
Determinism 54
Deterrent 392, 568
Deutero-Isaiah 54
Deuteronomic 55, 426
Deuteronomic School 53, 55
Deuteronomist 55
Deuteronomistic 55
Deuteronomy 53, 54–55, 61, 65
Deutero-Pauline 55, 247
Devalue 674
Devastation 109, 380, 734
Develop 164, 485, 686, 692, 694, 740
Deviant 514
Devil 73, 104, 110, 118, 166–168, 173, 204, 223, 287, 335, 436, 438, 458, 504, 509, 515, 542, 557, 559, 561, 563, 565–567, 609, 610, 651
Devilish 432
Devise 532
Devoid 546
Devote 151, 641, 642, 645
Devotion 58, 239, 265, 329, 413, 469, 492, 510
Devour 508, 655, 656, 730
Devout 537, 539, 597, 641, 666, 691, 708
Dew 177
Diadem 405
Dialectic 533
Diary 243
Diaspora 55, 66, 68, 128, 197, 246, 364, 544, 607, 617, 618, 626, 693
Dichotomy 233
Dictate 248, 573
Dictator 475
Didache 55
Die 181, 219, 234, 256, 314, 327, 352, 397, 400, 401, 429–447, 460, 466, 505, 520, 525, 585, 610, 625, 629, 630, 659, 676, 677, 681, 698, 717, 718
Dietary laws 473
Difference 601, 602, 631
Different 485, 500, 539, 670, 673, 707–709 Differentiate 504
Difficult 364, 419, 536
Difficulty 164, 229, 260, 262, 419, 420, 516, 581, 725
Dignity 193, 537, 668
Dimension 680
Dionysus 528, 529, 647, 649
Dip 144, 145
Direct 330, 331, 340, 483, 486, 509, 597, 693, 696, 718, 737
Direction 357, 423, 481, 484, 492, 512
Directive 341, 476
Director 279
Dirt 315, 479–480, 520
Disability 727
Disadvantage 288
Disagreement 107, 110, 628, 693
Disappear 675, 699, 718
Disappearance 607, 654, 671, 683
Disappointment 202, 585, 594, 724, 725
Disapproval 572, 681
Disarm 314, 649, 651
Disaster 450, 462, 565, 608, 725
Disastrous 699
Disbelief 504, 591, 594
Disc 523
Discard 674
Discern 123, 353, 504, 673
Discernment of spirits 300, 452
Discharge 74, 577, 683, 697, 698
Disciple 136, 148, 153, 166, 167, 183, 200, 203, 204, 213, 214, 239, 251, 252, 256, 262, 266, 274, 276, 284–290, 298, 303–307, 321, 323, 324, 328, 335, 337, 338, 340, 358, 402, 403, 415, 419, 430, 439, 443, 453–455, 464, 480–494, 504, 510, 528, 540, 542, 545, 556, 559, 561, 572, 577, 578, 600, 603, 612, 613, 615, 617, 619, 620, 623, 628, 630, 642, 644, 659, 684, 686, 689, 722, 729, 733, 741, 742
Discipleship 480–494, 541, 607, 722
Disciplinary 392, 414
Discipline 152, 171, 192, 233, 288, 299, 415, 460, 462, 494–503, 506, 515, 535, 539, 561, 569, 572, 639, 647, 652
Disclaim 592
Disclose 50, 313
Discord 646
Discount 399
Discourse 62, 575, 578 Discredit 529
Discretion 555
Discrimination 219, 737
Discussion 338, 488, 506, 552, 595
Disdain 112, 587
Disease 119, 124, 234, 451, 505, 515, 527, 636
Disgrace 288, 391–393
Disguise 709, 710
Dish 633
Dishonest 137
Dishonour 282, 393
Disillusionment 679, 743
Disintegrate 470
Dismembered 230
Dismiss 505, 701
Disobedience 86, 110, 203, 211, 356, 357, 367, 385, 390, 399, 422, 423, 433, 463, 465, 472, 509, 555, 588, 589, 591, 598, 607, 611, 659, 730
Disobedient 102, 109, 202, 219, 449, 569, 588, 589, 593, 594
Disorder 468
Disown 454, 455, 684
Disparage 413, 461
Disparate 525

Dispatch 698
Dispensation 53, 81, 372
Dispense 211, 503, 504
Dispensation 730
Dispersion 55, 141, 361, 671, 683–692
Display 649, 696, 697
Displeasure 318, 740
Disposal 414, 536, 723
Dispose 369, 539, 640, 657, 715
Disposition 107, 485, 511
Disproportion 743
Disprove 74
Dispute 104, 285, 294, 373, 453–455, 504, 535, 558, 578, 687
Disquality 163, 235, 514
Disregard 333, 454, 461, 462, 607
Dissatisfaction 459
Dissection 533
Dissention 535
Dissipation 261, 514, 686
Dissolute 496
Dissolution 496, 578
Dissolve 688, 698, 707
Dissuade 450
Distance 583, 618, 679, 693
Distinction 227, 385, 503, 533, 720
Distinctiveness 240
Distinction 662
Distinguish 60, 503–505, 527, 533, 599, 614, 705, 723, 735, 737 Distraction 526–530
Distress 106, 111, 260, 262, 345, 409, 410, 422, 461, 645
Distribute 365, 453, 533–535, 641
Disturb 698
Disunite 108
Disunity 535
Diversity 602, 654
Divert 741
Divest 549
Divide 398, 503, 504, 523, 533–535
Divine nature 216, 548, 706, 740
Divine origin 85
Divine secret 578
Diviner 573, 575, 579
Divinity 548, 549, 551, 576, 616
Divinization 498, 595, 643, 707
Division 503, 533, 534, 628, 631
Divisive 300, 400
Divorce 243, 244, 335, 340, 384, 453, 500, 502, 505–507, 555, 607, 678, 698, 701
Dizziness 514
Do well 610
Docetic 339
Docetism 55, 58, 338
Doctor 381
Doctrine 62, 70, 238, 247, 279, 282, 330, 341, 346, 544, 636–638, 662, 738–740 Document 243, 246
Dog 117, 118, 444, 744
Dogma 50, 330, 533, 694
Domain 671
Dogmatics 65, 707
Dogmatism 486
Domestic 574
Dominate 407, 424, 436, 457, 458, 466
Domination 670
Dominion 74, 102, 114, 165, 300, 381–383, 454, 462, 522, 524, 526, 610, 651, 701, 734
Donkey 117, 317
Doom 85, 464, 610, 693, 699
Door 303, 646, 690
Doorpost 221
Double birth 653
Double-minded 505
Doubt 76, 323, 503–505, 596, 609
Dough 249
Dove 172, 175, 704
Dovetail 241
Downfall 462, 463, 610
Doxology 97–99, 210, 212, 213, 620
Dragon 87, 104, 111, 114, 119, 125, 175, 187, 205, 390, 405, 507–511, 562, 657
Draw 458, 538
Draw attention 618
Draw up 576
Dream 393, 395, 420, 421, 429, 511–513, 574, 577, 580, 692
Dregs 710
Dress 312–317
Dressing 477
Drift 481, 608, 682, 683
Drink 106, 109, 451, 494, 497, 504, 513, 528, 611, 612, 625, 633, 683
Drip 683
Drive 494, 496, 590, 645, 675, 676, 739
Drive away 686
Drive out 453, 529, 530, 608, 726, 740
Drop 608, 698
Drop off 682
Drought 209, 354, 543, 544
Drown 226, 508
Drunkard 513
Drunken 261, 420, 421, 458, 513–515, 528, 529, 561
Dry 390, 513, 516
Dry up 515–516, 652
Dualism 55, 58, 102, 124, 233, 333, 382, 422, 432, 435, 446, 452, 461, 494, 496, 500, 518, 522, 524, 525, 562, 563, 656, 674, 734
Dubious 352, 539
Dull, 281, 428
Dumb 220, 428–429
Dung 480
Durable 97, 658
Duration 589, 590, 711, 732
Dust 239, 254, 433, 434, 520, 672, 705
Duty 190, 287, 295, 296, 302, 358, 386, 490, 505, 569, 570, 606, 628, 633, 684, 687, 688, 696
Dwell 272, 519, 558, 676, 684, 691, 726, 740
Dwelling place 688
Dye 205
Dying 145, 147, 225, 359, 401, 455, 470, 638, 639, 648
Dynamic 602, 681
Dynasty 596

E source 56, 57, 61
Each 94
Eagle 116, 173, 175, 262
Ear 230, 234, 261, 689
Earlier 666
Earliest 668
Earn 78, 329, 437
Earnestness 492, 612, 613, 730
Earth 54, 95, 254, 272, 302, 313, 322, 380, 381, 383, 387, 402, 443, 449, 466, 469, 498, 508, 509, 517–526, 585, 587, 621, 627, 661, 663, 672, 674, 689–691, 722, 734, 735, 743
Earth-bound 422
Earthen vessels 638
Earthly 401, 520, 547, 587, 638, 639, 642, 643, 706, 707, 709, 720, 728, 738
Earthly man 85
Earthly nature 168
Earthquake 124, 319, 610
Ease 724
East 164, 205, 665
Easter 603, 631, 634, 659
Eat 175, 225, 226, 250, 308, 341, 350–352, 390, 444, 448, 504, 597, 611, 612, 620, 633, 643, 670, 673, 678, 691, 724, 731, 743, 744
Ecclesiology 56
Economic 501, 642, 710
Economics 643
Economy 738
Ecstasy 399, 414, 502, 514, 526–530
Ecstatic 582, 598
Ecumenical 304, 519
Eden 168, 453
Edict 330, 331, 393, 476, 623, 686
Edification 50
Edificatory 741 Edifice 658
Editorial adaptation 57
Educate 352, 617
Educated 498
Education 567–569
Educator 640
Effect 469, 513–515, 546, 550, 601, 610, 652, 733, 738, 742
Effective 311, 515, 540, 547
Efficacy 216, 609, 659
Effort 241, 386, 429, 437, 439, 456, 464, 478, 502, 550, 551, 645, 646, 649, 660, 675, 681, 716, 718, 723
Effulgence 712
Egypt 530–532, 737
Egyptian 530–532
Eighteen Benedictions 444
Eighth day 309, 310
Elation 163, 727
Elder 83, 92, 121, 136, 188–201, 285, 288, 293, 294, 300, 303, 305, 310, 364, 472, 496, 499, 515, 527, 529, 536, 568
Elect 84, 159, 189, 216, 273, 275, 296, 305, 345, 381, 403, 475, 476, 478, 485, 533–543, 545, 617, 646, 647, 655, 673, 697
Election 77, 80, 81, 123, 129, 159, 166, 177, 273, 274, 288, 298, 300, 305, 378, 379, 474, 484, 485, 533–543, 589, 617, 644, 669, 690, 693, 697, 700, 720, 730
Element 653, 655
Elemental powers, spirits 282, 331, 401, 439
Elementary 166
Elements 102, 419, 525, 654, 664, 707
Elephant 116
Elevation 432
Elevated 123
Elias 543, 545
Eligible 533
Elijah 323, 543–545
Elimination 508, 643, 644
Elite 489, 536, 537, 539
Ellipse 56
Ellipsis 56
Elliptical 56
Elohim 56
Elohist 56, 65, 72
Elohistic source 56
Eloquence 212
Elucidate 581
Emanate 616, 705
Embalm 264, 266
Embassy 192, 197
Embellish 265
Embitter 201, 202, 561, 563
Emblem 406–408
Embodiment 501, 545, 705, 708, 712
Embrace 206, 207, 239, 742
Embryo 183, 283, 712
Emmanuel 581, 737
Emotion 106, 230, 239, 240, 461, 555, 567, 656
Empathy 583
Emperor 269, 270, 519
Emphasis 99, 359, 538, 609, 732
Emphatic 600
Empire 519
Empirical 56, 522, 711
Empiricism 56, 64
Empiricist 56
Employ 653
Employment 261
Emptiness 482, 512
Empty 137, 266, 455, 545–553, 611, 612, 623, 706, 707, 709, 714
Empty-handed 546, 547
Empty-headed 417, 418
Enable 681
Enact 369
Enclose 54, 240
Encompass 405
Encounter 335, 611, 623
Encouragement 88, 258, 263, 303, 327–329, 342, 512, 513, 567, 568, 569, 570, 600, 679, 722 End 56, 69, 95, 164, 289, 298, 311, 342, 403, 410, 429, 432–434, 463, 470, 492, 513, 515, 521, 544, 550, 581, 589, 597, 610, 619, 642, 651, 654, 666, 667, 669, 671, 680–682, 696, 698, 712, 719, 734, 735, 737, 739 End of the age 124, 325

End of the world 56, 216, 217, 496, 519, 630
End of time 389, 657
End-time 65, 185, 244, 545, 610, 622, 629, 656, 729, 733, 735
Endanger 241, 500, 687
Endeavour 319, 695, 723
Endorse 99, 679
Endow 207, 654, 739
Endowment 122, 735, 739
Endurance 123, 215, 257, 304, 400, 541, 570, 639, 644, 646, 650, 673, 710, 727
Enduring 711, 739
Enemy 125, 187, 208, 210, 215, 239, 248, 252, 257, 259, 264, 265, 295, 345, 400, 416, 417, 440, 453, 463, 464, 477, 487, 508, 541, 553–557, 567, 572, 610, 622, 649, 650, 652, 655, 657, 662, 679, 686, 702, 726 Energy 671
Engage 372, 494, 656
Engrave 332
Enigmatic 203
Enjoyment 212, 239, 240, 431, 434, 457, 458, 494, 529, 687, 689, 690, 722, 728
Enlarge 253, 732, 733 Enlightenment 421–423, 562
Enmity 85, 223, 289, 370, 417, 458, 501, 525, 553–557, 603, 644, 681
Enough 597, 699, 728, 731
Enquiry 607
Enrage 107
Enrobe 122
Enrolment 330, 669
Enslave 138, 364, 399, 401, 437, 438, 457, 458, 460, 466, 469, 613, 717
Enter 320, 646, 682, 688
Enterprise 710, 712
Entertain 625, 690
Enthronement 121–123, 177, 668
Enthusiasm 528, 529, 594, 598, 600, 601, 604, 642, 679
Enthusiast 638
Entice 458
Entirety 740
Entity 522
Entranced 528
Entrust 273, 332, 594, 596, 684, 730
Entry 317, 325, 629, 724
Envious 557
Environment 679, 693, 720
Envoy 126, 127, 130, 193, 194, 596
Envy 397, 509, 557–558
Epicureans 555, 672, 676
Epilepsy 163, 727
Episcopacy 188–201
Epistle 246
Epistolary style 247
Epitaph 431
Epochs 477
Equal rights 720
Equality 366, 368, 640–642, 691
Erase 471
Erotic 631
Err 400, 467, 608
Errant 664
Erroneous 708
Error 355, 438, 546, 680, 700, 733 Esau 556
Escape 268, 358, 420, 421, 558–559, 657, 677, 717
Eschatological 56, 87, 99, 111, 123, 124, 126, 131, 133, 134, 147, 170, 175, 179, 184–186, 204, 215–217, 224, 225, 231, 237, 244, 260, 262, 263, 269, 278, 289, 296–305, 317, 321, 336, 338, 347, 358, 368, 373, 383, 400, 414, 423, 425, 449, 452, 463, 465, 466, 482, 496, 505, 513, 515, 518, 535, 539, 544, 545, 551, 554, 566, 578, 601, 602, 604, 607, 610, 615, 620, 630, 634, 638, 640, 641, 656, 657, 661, 668, 701, 709, 728, 735, 736
Eschatology 50, 53, 56, 65, 111, 382, 563, 601, 639
Eschatology, Realized 56, 111
Esoteric 577
Essenes 67, 102, 534, 554, 627, 630, 641, 642, 688
Essence 703, 705, 710–712
Essential 549, 701, 703, 704–709, 715
Establish 123, 329, 368, 380, 426, 472, 522, 596, 626, 639, 660, 664, 681, 688, 696 Estate 641
Esteem 106, 197, 553
Estimate 480
Estrangement 421, 459, 474, 684, 685
Eternal 79, 240, 243, 382, 383, 386, 406, 408, 442, 452, 464, 544, 563, 596, 611, 619, 657, 665, 694, 697
Eternal death 434
Eternal destruction 423, 466, 610
Eternal life 78, 79, 112, 244, 250, 253, 254, 337, 406, 423, 434, 439–441, 464, 476, 482, 603, 625, 637, 638, 701, 723
Eternal punishment 339
Eternity 222, 311, 347, 380, 440, 464, 470, 473, 616, 669, 719 Ether 449
Ethic 489, 494, 495, 498
Ethical 333, 334, 339, 412, 420, 448, 460, 483, 490, 501, 514, 543, 546, 561, 562, 565, 607, 612, 626, 640, 649 Ethics 52, 54, 56, 59, 62, 65, 68, 147, 338, 494, 571, 687 Ethics, Comparative 56
Ethics, Descriptive 56
Ethics, Normative 56
Ethics, Philosophical 56, 68, 494
Ethiopic 68
Etruscan 68
Etymology 56–57, 61
Eucharist 154, 702
Eucharistic 437
Eudaemonism 501
Eunuch 341, 559–561
Euphemism 429
Evade 602
Evaluation 348, 480, 504, 528, 666, 679, 680, 736
Evangelism 95, 129, 662
Evangelist 116, 213

Eve 84–88, 390, 413, 451
Evening 629, 632, 634
Event 71, 667, 693, 707, 713, 733, 735, 737, 738
Everlasting 367, 423
Everyday 614, 615, 703
Everyone 94
Evidence 365, 428, 436, 726
Evil 55, 84, 85, 104, 106, 107, 118, 124, 138, 152, 163, 167, 169, 201, 205, 212, 223, 228, 231, 240, 265, 268, 322, 348, 351, 354, 355, 357, 359, 370, 381, 385, 387, 389, 402, 411, 413, 416, 419, 420, 422, 424, 429, 431, 433–435, 449–453, 456, 457, 463, 466, 467, 473, 509, 522, 529, 556, 558, 559, 561–567, 568, 609, 631, 644, 649, 651, 653, 656, 671, 673, 674, 676, 700, 704, 719, 731, 743
Evil-doers 293, 433, 452, 537, 555, 561, 563, 641
Evil eye 423
Evil impulse 83, 459
Evil inclination 231, 336
Evil one 420, 510, 526, 651
Evolve 694
Exact 712
Exaction 572
Exaggerate 528
Exaltation 83, 95, 168, 179, 224, 375, 399, 402, 437, 438, 483, 500, 510, 549, 648, 668
Exalted 133, 135, 168, 214, 244, 248, 269, 300, 305, 338, 375, 387, 403, 482, 491, 532, 540, 565, 603, 643, 656
Examination 163, 602
Examine 189, 485, 503, 591
Example 71, 156, 214, 239, 276, 299, 311, 400, 401, 440, 448, 491, 492, 532, 544, 572, 578, 593, 600, 643, 667, 694, 714
Excavate 520
Exceed 729
Exceeding 728
Excel 728
Excellence 537
Exception 674
Exceptive clause 500
Excess 108, 169, 495, 501, 625, 728, 729
Exchange 469
Excite 733
Excited 107, 528
Excitement 646
Exclude 607, 608, 612, 632, 644, 659, 684, 687, 689, 694, 700, 740
Exclusion 414, 433, 463, 466, 467, 473, 500, 560, 566, 666
Exclusive 539
Excommunication 413, 415
Excuse 270, 385
Execrate 413, 415, 416
Execute 657, 669, 735
Execution 264, 345, 389–396, 429, 466, 693, 737
Exegesis 57, 59, 60, 62, 64, 65, 68, 69, 71, 575, 579
Exemplary 568, 598
Exempt 482, 604, 698, 716
Exercise 312, 313, 495, 496, 522, 645, 647, 671
Exertion 262, 263, 495, 540, 568, 729
Exhaustion 262, 263, 393, 395, 730
Exhibit 371, 696, 697
Exhilaration 173
Exhort 65, 88, 89, 197, 199, 271, 328, 329, 339, 341, 346, 446, 567–573, 623, 634, 644, 687, 713, 739, 742
Exhortation 65, 336, 337, 341, 400–402, 491, 492, 510, 542, 570, 602–604, 607, 623, 630
Exile 52–56, 61, 62, 141, 196, 262, 294, 379, 410, 414, 531, 539, 612, 632, 683, 685, 686, 689, 690, 700, 716, 734
Existence 57, 65, 66, 70, 71, 95, 166, 222, 229, 234, 236, 238, 423, 431, 433, 436, 444, 470, 472, 473, 475, 483, 485, 486, 492, 500, 516, 539–541, 544, 551, 552, 562, 564, 565, 595, 597, 598, 601, 602, 607, 619, 644, 654, 661, 675, 676, 678, 679, 697, 706, 707, 711, 713, 719, 727, 735
Existential ontology 65
Existentialism 54, 57, 59, 64, 65
Existentialist 681
Existentialist Philosophy 54
Exodus 53, 57, 99, 249, 281, 290, 531, 539, 632, 633
Exorcism 121, 384, 451, 453, 572
Exorcist 322, 670
Expand 253
Expectation 296, 329, 423, 440, 482, 544, 545, 553, 598, 633, 634, 642, 660, 689, 690, 702, 706, 712, 713, 720, 722, 725, 729, 735
Expediency 397
Expel 453, 529
Expend 479
Expensive 260
Experience 56, 192, 253, 258, 278, 352, 359, 411, 483, 484, 514, 527, 528, 536, 540, 564, 571, 583, 585, 594, 618, 620, 629, 640, 649, 654, 669, 691, 699, 716, 727
Experienced 56, 332
Expert 484, 512
Expiation 700
Expiatory 107, 344, 479, 612, 699
Expire 430, 431, 734, 737
Explain 57, 59, 506, 573–584
Explanation 57, 59, 573
Exploitation 268, 547
Exponent 574
Expose 349, 390, 416, 422, 425, 459, 489, 577, 602, 718
Exposition 69, 573, 574, 580, 628, 629, 709
Expound 67, 573, 576, 577, 579, 581, 737
Express 669, 722
Expression 579, 580, 602, 642, 655, 705, 727
Expulsion 466, 687
Extend 742
Extension 565
Extermination 465, 468
External 261, 680, 704, 705, 708, 709, 714, 717, 720
Extinction 429, 463, 464, 499, 526
Extinguisher 63
Extol 212

Extra-marital 497–500
Extremity 687
Exult 227
Eye 118, 162, 163, 189, 218, 230, 231, 234, 261, 319, 381, 423, 424, 453, 458, 561, 565, 585, 613, 656, 667, 683, 695, 726, 727, 731
Eye of a needle 116
Eye-service 587
Eye-witness 266, 395

Face 181, 211, 431, 585–587, 609
Factions 533
Factor 692, 738
Fade 411, 673, 678, 724
Fail 609, 610, 673
Failure 219, 378, 426, 544, 597, 607, 723, 725, 726, 736, 742
Faint 262
Faint-hearted 329, 504
Fair 204, 625, 637
Faith 50, 51, 57, 59, 60, 74, 76, 78–81, 93, 95, 97, 110, 112, 116, 120, 123, 138, 148–150, 154, 157–160, 163, 166, 180, 185, 191, 215, 222, 223, 225, 228, 236, 238, 244, 248, 255–257, 261, 275, 277, 281, 282, 286, 289, 297, 298, 300, 301, 303, 304, 308, 309, 311, 316, 318, 321–325, 328, 330, 333, 336, 341, 346, 350, 351, 354, 355, 358, 359, 361, 372, 379, 380, 382, 384, 386, 397, 398, 401, 408, 414, 417, 422, 424, 426, 433, 434, 439–441, 452, 455, 459–461, 467, 472, 475, 478, 480, 483, 486, 489, 491–493, 496, 497, 499, 502, 504, 505, 509, 510, 525, 528, 529, 532, 534, 540, 542, 543, 547, 551, 552, 559, 562, 571, 587–606, 607–609, 619, 624, 633, 637, 639, 641, 643, 644, 647, 649–651, 656, 659–662, 675, 689, 691, 695, 698, 699, 704, 712–714, 719, 722, 723, 730, 731, 735–740
Faithful 99, 118, 217, 293, 406, 424, 455, 513, 532, 568, 571, 594, 627, 656, 684 Faithfulness 74, 227, 251, 311, 346, 357, 367, 386, 490, 499, 591, 594, 597, 598, 603, 659
Faithless 423, 448, 455, 511
Fall 52, 57, 72, 79, 86, 87, 113, 336, 352, 433, 434, 524, 542, 567, 606–611, 682, 692, 693, 724
Fall away 416, 554, 606–611
Fall from grace 611
Fall of angels 102, 103
Fall of Satan 83
Fall short 56, 546, 675
Fallacy 550, 577
Fallen 102, 222, 384, 451, 452, 468, 525
Fallible 678, 679
False 66, 124, 228, 347, 357, 456, 496, 504, 512, 591, 592, 607, 679, 681
False apostle 228, 710
False brother 254, 322
False Christ 124
False confidence 308
False congregation 296
False doctrine 352, 487
False gospel 415
False practice 352
False prophet 114, 125, 323, 383, 512, 527, 550, 567
False security 79, 424, 542, 596, 610
False shepherd 559
False standard 566
False teacher 138, 261, 311, 402, 425, 443, 460, 535, 578, 637
False teaching 238, 257, 460, 469, 604, 611
Falsehood 66, 225, 232, 359, 448, 653
Fame 400
Familiar 484, 614, 615
Family 159, 165, 182, 192, 194–198, 207, 208, 240, 254, 256, 257, 264, 265, 286, 287, 289, 294, 308, 512, 530, 531, 614, 615, 617, 619, 621, 624–626, 629, 634, 640
Family of manuscripts 70
Famine 118, 203, 380, 531, 642, 716
Famous 381
Fantasy 679
Far off 523, 691
Farmer 625, 656
Fascination 625
Fashion 380, 492, 521, 708
Fast 120, 143, 245, 384, 487, 495, 515, 611–613, 625, 630, 672
Fasten 171, 241, 663
Fat 119, 261, 672
Fatal 336, 422, 510, 647, 699
Fate 103, 163, 243, 257, 267, 277, 313, 315, 390, 403, 404, 419, 431, 434, 436, 439, 450, 453, 464, 472, 516, 545, 594, 597, 692, 693
Father 49, 65, 66, 76, 77, 79, 90, 173, 176, 177, 190, 198, 203, 213, 238, 240, 251, 255, 256, 277, 278, 282, 286–289, 301, 311, 323, 324, 326, 329, 336–338, 346, 359, 375, 409, 410, 440, 442, 453, 461, 462, 464, 469, 470, 486, 487, 492, 509, 511, 522, 526, 549, 556, 570, 575, 614–621, 637–639, 651, 655, 667, 674, 681, 693, 704, 712, 716, 720, 729, 730, 740
Father of lies 458
Father of nations 79
Fatherhood 619–621
Fatherland 615, 616
Fatherless 615, 616
Fatigue 262
Fatten 743
Fault 261, 345, 346, 525, 550, 574, 608
Favour 52, 216, 395, 501, 540–542, 590, 622
Fear 111, 168, 173, 239, 265, 276, 310, 327, 329, 360, 361, 409, 412, 420–422, 431–435, 439, 448, 452–456, 484, 507, 510, 530, 537, 559, 570, 577, 586, 590, 609, 611, 621–624, 646, 652, 675, 679, 686–688, 691, 715, 719
Fearful 364, 403
Feast 53, 59, 116, 122, 224, 274, 291, 308, 332, 384, 416, 515, 624–635, 641, 654, 666, 691, 743
Feast of Dedication 626, 629
Feast of Lots 626
Feast of Renewal of Covenant 627
Feast of Tabernacles 100, 626, 628, 629, 632
Feast of Unleavened Bread 633
Feast of Weeks 625–628, 631
Fee 484

Feeble 192
Feed 250, 277, 320, 341, 617, 629, 670, 687, 743
Feeling 106, 230, 555, 568, 622
Fellow 255, 256, 258, 259, 680, 689, 691
Fellowship 95, 97, 126, 148, 175, 213, 219, 222, 225, 232, 237, 257, 259, 292, 294, 298–301, 304, 315, 319, 347, 367, 369, 370, 386, 424, 434, 440, 441, 448, 452, 455, 467, 482, 483, 489–493, 519, 554, 586, 596, 635–644, 657, 685, 688, 691, 696, 702, 719, 722, 723
Ferocity 420, 515
Fertility 208, 209, 354, 497, 498, 560, 611, 612, 624, 625
Fertilize 377, 498
Fervour 318
Fester 683
Festival 245, 249, 250, 272, 294, 304, 360, 612, 624–635, 700
Festival of Lights 627, 631
Festival of Wood-carrying 627
Fetter 171, 190
Fever 94, 377, 572, 636, 652, 653, 656
Few 97, 283, 735, 739
Fictitious 550
Fidelity 589, 594, 595, 603
Field 93, 209, 222, 263, 267, 277, 411, 517, 519, 520, 525, 647, 673, 689, 744 Field of Blood 93
Fierce 260, 261, 520, 653
Fiery 653–656
Fig 73, 417, 515, 600, 721–728
Fight 164, 431, 435, 470, 544, 644–652, 653, 662, 675
Figurative 122, 229, 268
Figure 71, 234, 266, 375, 585, 708, 709
Fill 318, 514, 728, 732, 733, 736 Filth 479–480
Filthiness 448
Final 423, 433, 443, 446, 499, 554, 563, 566, 583, 587, 628, 651, 653, 656, 657, 667, 674, 693, 699, 725, 737
Final state 445
Finality 359
Financial 477, 642
Find 630, 709, 724
Find out 676
Finger 683
Finger of God 651
Finish 429, 581, 734
Finishing-post 493
Fir 723
Fire 144, 146, 151, 182, 205, 209, 224, 231, 314, 318, 322, 380, 387, 390, 414, 418, 420, 467, 652–658, 700, 711
Fire-place 652
Firm 97, 658–664, 735
Firmament 522, 523
First 164, 165, 177, 193, 195, 288, 334, 664–670, 712
First day of the week 630, 631
First-fruits 166, 187, 210, 386, 638
First-ripe 724
Firstborn 166, 177, 193, 194, 208, 221, 256, 288, 304, 445, 519, 664–670, 692, 707, 713
Fish 119, 175, 249, 250, 344, 509, 518, 623, 666, 670–671, 674, 725, 733
Fish-costume 670
Fishermen 488, 489, 493, 642
Fishlike 670
Fist 163
Fit 241, 505, 515
Fix 332, 477, 658, 734, 735
Flame 653, 656
Flame-coloured 653
Flash 610
Flavour 657
Flay 162
Flee 431, 493, 500, 512, 558–559,
Fleeting 433, 512, 516, 651
Flesh 54, 87, 106, 114, 138, 163, 169, 184, 221, 222, 225, 229, 230, 232, 233, 236, 240, 257, 282, 286, 290, 299, 308, 311, 315, 323, 327, 336, 337, 401, 402, 411, 424, 446, 448, 455, 457, 458, 461, 466, 467, 469, 470, 473, 506, 522, 535, 555–557, 592, 602, 625, 629, 637, 638, 647, 670, 671–682, 683, 690, 691, 695, 719, 726, 727, 738, 739, 741
Flight 280, 558, 559, 674, 685
Flock 115, 252, 286, 303, 305, 320, 503, 623, 632, 684
Flog 161, 162, 407
Flood 72, 168, 185, 382, 508, 522, 531, 593, 610, 657
Flour 249, 250
Flourish 678
Flow 682–683
Flower 277, 411, 609, 648, 673, 678
Fluid 741
Fly 172, 608
Foal 117
Fodder 743
Foe 241, 531
Follow 118, 324, 335, 359, 402, 423, 424, 446, 464, 480–494, 588, 591, 593, 600, 605, 615, 619, 644, 649, 651, 659, 667, 684, 702, 733 Followers 173, 213, 274, 361, 396, 400, 533, 616, 669
Folly 227, 277, 281, 397, 418, 550, 555, 673
Food 61, 73, 119, 169, 172, 173, 203, 207, 226, 249, 250, 252, 277, 282, 318, 330, 352, 360, 384, 385, 393, 451, 464, 480, 494, 495, 497, 500, 509, 565, 586, 611, 670, 672, 674, 691, 696, 711, 728, 729, 731, 743, 744
Fool 108, 281, 413–418, 550, 574, 728
Foolhardy 364
Foolish 85, 106, 258, 277, 280, 281, 513, 542, 546, 551, 670, 675, 708, 727 Foot 239, 393, 449, 674
Foothold 710
Footstool 477
Foot-washing 153, 630
Forbearance 398, 699, 734
Forbid 332, 413, 415, 456, 572, 619, 625, 687
Forbidden 87, 139, 171, 221, 389, 390, 426, 499, 505, 611, 630, 631, 655, 670, 685

Force 453, 508, 543, 651, 653, 678, 679, 692, 694, 717, 720, 733 Forearm 393
Forebear 287
Forecast 699
Forecourt 633
Forefather 280, 285, 324, 615, 665
Foreign 305, 505, 522, 550, 551, 553, 622, 655, 683–692
Foreigner 308, 392, 474, 715
Foreknowledge 273, 278, 378, 382, 383, 471, 477, 478, 540, 542, 668, 692–697
Forensic 438
Forerunner 125, 150, 544, 545
Foresee 471, 693, 695
Foreshadow 115, 158, 266, 290, 545
Foresight 692–694
Foreskin 307–309, 672
Foretell 528
Forethought 692, 693
Forfeit 240, 484
Forget 441, 484, 546, 570, 728
Forgiveness 86, 87, 97, 110, 146, 148, 155–158, 191, 216, 222–225, 301, 303, 317, 327, 328, 333, 346, 351, 354, 355, 358, 359, 371, 375, 467, 492, 499, 500, 545, 643, 673, 697–703, 722, 730
Forgiving 617, 620, 640
Form 50, 66, 71, 204, 234, 299, 355, 371, 380, 525, 547, 636, 678, 703–714, 722, 737
Form-criticism 57, 58, 67, 68, 576
Form history 57
Formal 664, 714, 738
Formality 394
Former 665
Former Prophets 66
Formless 380
Formulation 579, 705
Fornication 106, 233, 469, 496–501, 559, 672
Forsake 493, 552
Forsaken 113, 174
Fortress 636
Fortunate 215
Fortune 208, 435, 482, 489, 543, 585, 596, 671, 673
Fortune-teller 463
Forward 665
Foul 110, 114
Found 376, 377, 383
Foundation 244, 279, 302, 327, 329, 375, 376–389, 390, 391, 540, 542, 543, 596, 598, 602, 658–664, 684, 693, 697
Founder 168, 641, 669
Foundling 616
Fountain 151, 552
Fox 118, 173
Fracture 302
Fragile 678
Fragment 464
Fragrance 122, 439, 650
Frailty 678, 679
Frankincense 586
Frankness 329, 715
Fraternal 572
Free 120, 223, 275, 310, 346, 371, 401, 432, 439, 452, 470, 482, 506, 525, 526, 529, 534, 536, 537, 540, 542, 562, 572, 632, 651, 666, 677, 684, 697, 699, 702, 715–721, 723, 728, 742
Free will (→ Will, Free)
Free-will offering 344, 534
Freeborn 411, 715
Freedmen 297, 715, 718
Freedom 54, 62, 79, 81, 148, 219, 238, 248, 286, 289, 298, 310, 360, 383, 386, 400, 412, 435, 439, 447, 458, 475, 483, 494, 500, 525, 534, 569, 629, 633, 642, 667, 674, 715–721, 728, 731, 737
Freeman 299, 392
Freethinkers 62, 555
Freeze 671
Frenzy 528
Friend 77, 206, 215, 254–260, 270, 284, 365, 484, 555, 557, 559, 571, 640, 663, 665
Friendship 338, 553, 554, 687
Fright 621, 673
Frighten 226, 328, 527
Fringes 254
Frivolity 501
Frog 114, 408
Front 665
Frost 652
Frostbite 652
Frozen 443
Fructify 498
Frugal 597
Fruit 77, 85, 87, 112, 139, 178, 181, 187, 228, 240, 297, 358, 382, 389, 390, 417, 496, 515, 540, 557, 565, 633, 669, 671, 681–683, 686, 721–728, 739, 740, 743
Fruit-bearing 542
Fruitful 180, 211, 214, 496
Fruitfulness 723
Fruitless 263, 547, 549, 721, 723
Frustration 468, 681
Fuel 389
Fulfil 99, 178, 216, 289, 322, 335, 337, 349, 352, 367, 369, 409, 417, 492, 509, 545, 556, 596, 604, 640, 658, 674, 711, 713, 719, 728–744
Fulfiller 303
Fulfilment 72, 95, 117, 138, 170, 175, 214, 223, 228, 243, 251, 290, 305, 311, 329, 339, 368, 370, 372, 374, 375, 411, 416, 428, 429, 439, 445, 460, 485, 492, 532, 536, 538, 545, 560, 570, 581, 587, 592, 601–603, 615, 624, 626, 634, 637, 647, 657, 697, 701, 719, 736, 737
Full 546, 732
Fuller 151
Fullness 93, 95, 171, 237, 238, 323, 402, 417, 522, 532, 552, 601, 638, 676, 697, 723, 728–744
Function 128, 129, 133, 188–190, 193, 194, 196–198, 219, 230, 231, 237, 280, 300, 302, 336, 349, 352, 373, 375, 378, 486, 533, 536, 544, 549, 572, 648, 667, 681, 711, 737

Funeral 263, 431, 654
Furrow 493
Furthest 665
Furtiveness 421
Fury 108, 109, 739
Fusion 584, 643, 644
Futility 385, 431, 437, 524, 525, 546, 549, 551, 552
Future 56, 57, 184, 237, 243, 244, 289, 311, 323–327, 372, 383, 438, 482, 489, 496, 508, 512, 519, 525, 531, 551, 554, 562, 587, 592, 593, 596–598, 601, 602, 604, 611, 638, 639, 654, 659–661, 670, 671, 673, 676, 681, 690, 692, 695, 704, 706, 713, 714, 719

Gabriel 101, 102, 103–104, 474
Gain 138, 533, 651, 700, 728, 733 Gall 107, 202
Gallows 389, 394
Games 625
Gap 614, 734
Garden of Eden 139, 389, 433
Garland 405
Garment 204, 205, 240, 312–317, 556, 613, 666, 671
Garrison 710
Gate 254, 303
Gather 273, 291, 297, 298, 304, 305, 466, 490, 544, 610, 724, 725
Gehenna 231, 418, 656, 700
Gemara 58, 69
Gemeinde 58, 59
Genealogy 65, 66, 72, 77, 81, 85, 141, 176, 181, 182, 208, 244, 255, 619
Generate 452, 497, 498
Generation 176, 179, 181, 187, 208, 294, 305, 308, 565, 596, 603
Generous 254, 642, 715
Genius 653
Genre, Literary 57, 58, 68, 582
Gentile 58, 62, 115, 129, 175, 307, 309, 360, 375, 434, 448, 478, 508, 541, 544, 601, 619, 632, 644, 659, 667, 684–686, 689, 691, 695, 730, 731, 733, 737, 740
Gentile Churches 61, 632, 739
Gentle 282, 431, 469, 570
Genuflexion 207
Genuine 356, 607, 637, 681
Geographical 517, 518
Geschichte 58, 60
Gesture 413
Ghost 452
Giant 452
Gift 52, 90, 92, 97, 122, 138, 146, 148, 149, 158, 168, 192, 195, 198, 212, 214, 216, 218, 225, 228, 232, 233, 236, 244, 250, 251, 279, 287, 289, 290, 300, 301, 305, 329, 357–359, 371, 372, 375, 385, 389, 413–415, 428, 478, 485, 496, 498, 502, 511, 531, 532, 535, 536, 558, 571, 573, 586, 601, 602, 607, 609, 617, 620, 637, 638, 642, 648, 655, 661, 691, 699, 716, 718, 722, 723, 731, 733, 739, 742
Girl 283, 287, 505
Give 235, 300, 319, 454, 509, 548, 642, 651, 659, 703, 717, 730, 738, 740, 742
Give ground 741
Give up 413, 698
Give way 741
Giver 375, 498, 543, 716, 718, 738
Giving 732
Gleaning 541, 724
Glib 682
Gloom 110, 421–423, 425
Glorified Christ 131, 399, 587, 709 Glorify 89, 211, 235, 312, 643, 649, 706, 707
Glorious 435, 707, 717
Glory 73, 100, 204, 222, 227, 228, 235, 261, 280, 311, 313, 314, 323, 327, 329, 345, 346, 352, 381, 386, 401, 405, 406, 411, 464, 469, 470, 504, 508, 546, 560, 574, 576, 587, 592, 637–639, 643–645, 653, 655, 656, 669, 673, 675, 677, 678, 688, 696, 704, 706, 712, 730, 732, 735, 740
Glossolalia (→ Speak in tongues)
Gluttony 169, 561
Gnat 116
Gnosis 55
Gnostic 60, 123, 127, 133, 135, 212, 237, 238, 313, 315, 316, 338, 339, 347, 524, 547, 570, 604, 680, 706, 709, 740
Gnosticism 50, 54, 55, 58, 86, 133, 230, 233, 234, 247, 301, 387, 422, 432, 438, 439, 487, 500, 510, 522, 523, 525, 601, 616, 669, 678, 679, 705, 708, 740
Gnostics 55, 58, 134, 534, 638
Go astray 541, 608
Go away 320, 606, 608
Go forth 713
Goad 511
Goal 69, 92, 93, 95, 168, 186, 188, 250, 263, 289, 314, 319, 325, 358, 384, 385, 432, 451, 460, 461, 481, 484, 485, 489, 491, 538, 540, 541, 583, 597, 600–605, 640, 647, 713, 719, 731
Goat 114–116, 224, 225, 299
God 70, 108, 380, 615, 621, 742
God, Concepts of 54, 55
God-fearer 359–361, 688
God-fearing 227, 542, 623
God, Names of 56, 98
God of the Amen 98
God of Truth 98
Godhead 204, 740
Godless 109, 125, 259, 277, 416, 449, 552, 586, 598, 687, 734
Godlessness 716, 717, 719
Godliness 112, 228, 240, 327, 361, 496, 559, 622, 687
Godly 125, 186, 467, 474, 551, 555, 575, 597
Gog and Magog 657
Gold 204, 280, 319, 390, 464, 498, 537, 648, 656, 682, 743
Golden age 508, 640
Golgotha 581
Good 55, 56, 85, 118, 163, 168, 212, 232, 233, 236, 336, 348–351, 356, 370, 389, 413, 434, 458, 463, 468, 469, 473, 490, 495, 501, 504,

Good continued
509, 510, 523, 536, 537, 540, 543, 552, 556, 561–565, 568, 570, 585, 604, 612, 623, 649, 653, 654, 671, 673, 676, 677, 680, 681, 708, 715, 720–723, 731
Good works 316, 604, 735
Goodness 84, 86, 185, 345, 380, 484, 562, 566, 616, 620, 695, 700
Goods 381, 457, 537, 588, 639, 642, 728, 729
Goodwill 558
Gospel 54, 62, 74, 95, 123, 129, 130, 132, 133, 146–148, 150, 153, 157, 158, 166, 168, 171, 180, 182, 222, 238, 239, 248, 258, 259, 269, 275, 297, 310, 311, 322, 331, 336, 338, 350, 367, 370, 384, 396–399, 437, 464, 469, 474, 476, 477, 489, 496, 505, 508, 517, 524, 540, 547, 551, 554, 558, 560, 566, 576, 590, 593, 599, 601–603, 605, 607, 613, 638, 643, 644, 647, 658, 659, 675, 677, 683, 702, 719, 722, 727, 733 Gospel of the Nazarenes 576
Gourd 241
Govern 194, 573, 662
Government 193, 199, 291, 588, 654
Government of God 152, 379, 551
Governor 169, 190, 269–270, 649
Grace 52, 74, 93, 97, 112, 129, 147, 154, 157, 163, 180, 190, 211, 227, 228, 290, 300, 305, 311, 324, 326, 356, 358, 370, 371, 397, 436, 439, 440, 441, 455, 466, 467, 478, 509, 532, 535, 538, 541, 542, 547, 571, 585, 587, 589, 596, 601, 605, 607, 609, 611, 622, 655, 659, 660, 668, 680, 698, 700, 703, 727, 730, 732, 739, 740
Gracious 212, 345, 357, 386, 540, 585, 586, 597, 611, 622, 638, 699, 716, 731
Graft 644
Grain 249, 252, 289, 313
Grandeur 474, 638
Grandson 287
Grant 454, 506, 649
Grapes 224, 725
Grasp 241, 533, 607, 649, 713, 742
Grass 411, 515, 627, 673, 678, 743, 744 Gratification 457
Gratitude 183, 335, 702, 728
Grave 263–266, 470, 655
Great 600
Greater 728, 730
Greatest 285
Greatness 732
Greed 137–139, 456, 611
Greek, 59, 62, 361, 589, 686, 691
Green 390, 653, 744
Greet 206, 585, 724
Greeting 206, 207, 212, 213, 241, 246, 247, 427, 587, 609, 732
Grey 205, 227
Griddle 249
Grief 202, 311, 467, 520, 529, 593, 673
Griffin-vulture 173
Grip 675
Groan 385
Grope 421
Ground 70, 376, 416, 433, 470, 500, 513, 517, 604, 609, 623, 633, 637, 653, 658, 662, 669, 679, 693, 695, 696, 699, 700, 702, 710, 711, 721, 743
Groundless 550
Groundwork 662
Group 208, 229, 237, 274, 280, 286–288, 297, 301–304, 311, 341, 463, 487, 489, 498, 505, 533–536, 539, 602, 627, 628, 632, 633, 643, 644, 693, 712, 732, 733, 742
Grow 181, 284, 289, 504, 557, 681, 722, 728, 732
Growth 92, 174, 214, 238, 282, 302, 305, 343, 602, 625, 722, 723, 725, 726, 731, 744 Grudge 107, 557
Grudging 214
Grumble 465
Guarantee 99, 247, 308, 365–376, 594, 637, 658, 659, 713
Guarantor 371–375, 641
Guard 247, 280, 335, 366, 395, 610, 614, 663
Guardian 188, 191, 196, 477, 498, 560
Guardian angel 102, 304
Guest 249, 271, 612, 686, 687
Guest room 690
Guidance 308, 485, 512, 579, 655
Guide 118, 225, 351, 352, 423, 484, 543, 565, 567–570, 585, 654
Guild 292
Guileless 561
Guilt 85, 89, 221–224, 237, 294, 324, 331, 344, 349, 374, 397, 433, 436–438, 448, 452, 463, 479, 554, 556, 562, 563, 590, 608, 611, 652, 674, 698, 699, 702, 732
Guiltless 563
Guilty 373, 390, 413, 436, 449, 458, 500, 506, 516, 524, 578, 607, 609
Gulf 240, 303, 640, 670
Gush 682

H source 61
Hack 726
Hades 118, 303, 419–421, 438, 464, 674, 677
Haemorrhage 682, 683
Hagar 76, 80–81, 411
Haggadah 58, 59, 64, 67, 69, 70, 485, 599
Hagiographa 58–59, 63, 66
Hail 206, 380
Hair 116, 203, 204, 227, 609, 671, 672, 682
Halachah 58, 59, 64, 67, 69, 334, 485
Half-hearted 318
Half-shekel tax 684
Hall 68
Hallelujah 97, 99–100
Hallow 310
Hammerer 63
Hamper 674
Hand 197, 206, 225, 231, 315, 393, 395, 478, 479, 515, 516, 540, 546, 561, 609, 623, 636, 645, 650, 655, 738
Handy 475
Hang 265, 389–394, 417
Hanker 677
Hanukkah 626, 631

Happen 181
Happiness 216, 501, 640
Happy 79, 206–218
Harass 226, 727
Harbour 645, 743
Hard 419, 420
Hardened, hardening 106, 220, 317, 357, 370–372, 424, 467, 565
Hardness of heart 384, 429
Hardship 262, 420, 563, 645, 647, 727
Harem 560
Harlot 100, 141, 142, 470, 497–499, 501, 593
Harm 443, 451, 452, 510, 553, 561, 563, 565, 572
Harmful 422, 561, 565, 625
Harmless 563
Harmonic 522
Harmonization 130, 241
Harmony 113, 206, 209, 498, 595, 627, 692, 716
Harrow 726
Harsh 202, 420, 520
Harvest 171, 204, 249, 263, 289, 292, 296, 516, 624–627, 719, 722, 724, 733 Hasmonaean 59, 63, 363
Haste 596, 684
Hasten 558
Hate 202, 255, 359, 409, 424, 525, 553–557, 727
Hatred 458, 539, 553, 555
Have 137, 635–644
Hay 743, 744
Hazardous 725, 726
Head 120, 166, 167, 192, 196, 197, 203, 230, 232, 238, 241, 294, 301, 302, 305, 520, 609, 614, 617, 633, 634, 648, 676, 726
Head-dress 405
Headache 163
Healer 600
Healing 83, 117, 119–121, 163, 198, 213, 214, 219, 220, 234, 261, 267, 300, 328, 329, 340, 384, 390, 427–429, 443, 454, 487, 489, 509, 516, 529–531, 572, 656, 685, 701, 729
Health 119, 240, 727
Heap 520, 610
Hear 97, 230, 261, 272, 340, 347, 372, 409, 419, 427, 439, 480, 485, 486, 529, 548, 591, 594, 604, 637, 688, 704, 727, 734, 735, 742
Hearer 577, 583, 599, 603, 725
Hearing 630, 738
Heart 106, 107, 151, 169, 184, 212, 225, 230, 232, 240, 248, 261, 308, 311, 318, 319, 322, 341, 347, 349–351, 357, 368, 371, 372, 379, 418, 424, 425, 448, 456, 457, 460, 492, 501, 506, 509, 518, 552, 566, 587, 592, 604, 648, 660, 673, 682, 726, 729, 741, 742
Hearth 653, 654
Heat 108, 317, 515, 516, 652–654, 656, 743
Heathen 115, 117, 145, 219, 220, 221, 226, 309, 320, 321, 398, 416, 424, 451, 452, 469, 519, 586, 655, 684, 685, 688, 689
Heathenism 626
Heaven 54, 58, 95, 123, 252, 272, 302, 304, 322, 323, 379, 380, 383, 387, 402, 410, 446, 449, 451, 464, 466, 474, 497, 508, 509, 517, 518, 522, 523, 525, 526, 544, 610, 618, 621, 627, 629, 637, 655, 657, 661, 665, 669, 674, 689, 690, 735
Heaven, New (→ New heaven)
Heavenly 547, 609, 619, 627
Heavenly army 104
Heavenly beings 101, 619
Heavenly city 327, 387, 691
Heavenly dress 314
Heavenly gift 372
Heavenly home 460, 684, 691
Heavenly host 100
Heavenly man 85
Heavenly power 90
Heavenly sanctuary 587, 677
Heavenly world 103, 586, 740
Heavy 260–263
Heavy-laden 262
Hebrew 51, 68, 69, 71
Hebrews 68
Heed 410, 704
Heel 241
Heifer 115
Height 92, 123, 253, 288, 608
Heilsgeschichte 59
Heir 80, 185, 208, 214, 286, 289, 532, 556, 669, 719, 731
Hell 54, 173, 231, 264, 433, 436, 449, 462, 509, 559, 623, 653, 655–657
Hellenism 59, 63, 68, 69, 124, 377, 539, 570
Hellenistic period 62, 64
Hellenistic religion 61
Helmsman 198
Help 98, 101, 198, 248, 252, 287, 288, 294, 328, 332, 344, 409, 410, 464, 468, 474, 509, 522, 531, 544, 546, 563, 567, 607, 614, 625, 645, 678, 686
Helper 88–92, 259, 600, 637
Helpless 218, 280, 281, 284, 288, 312, 358, 407, 548, 716
Hen 174
Herald 298, 407, 410, 477, 648, 699
Herb 116, 633
Herd 252, 625 Hereditary 407
Heresy 50, 247, 556, 740
Heretic 117, 413, 416, 462, 466, 533, 535, 632, 708
Heretical 347, 533, 534, 607
Heritage 78, 190
Hermeneutic, New 584
Hermeneutical circle 584
Hermeneutics 57, 59, 581–584
Hermetic literature 60
Hero 101, 431, 490, 645
Heroism 433, 435, 437
Hesitate 326
Hidden 50, 244, 252, 282, 313, 385, 425, 504, 587, 604, 609, 610, 629, 651, 676, 692, 720
Hide 50, 313, 346, 401, 585, 701
Hierarchical 302
Hierarchy 382, 636, 667, 725, 740
Hieroglyphics 574

High-born 188
High-handed 400
High priest (→ Priest, High)
Higher 674
Highway 411
Hill 239, 240, 683
Hind 520
Hinder 149, 284, 592, 593, 636, 730, 740
Hippodrome 645
Hireling 559
Historical 437, 472, 518, 524, 597, 601, 603, 605, 617, 638, 686, 707
Historical background 57–59, 68, 70, 130, 582, 628, 629
Historical criticism (→ Criticism, Historical) Historical perspective 60
Historical relativity 583
Historicality 583
Historicism 60
Historicity 678
Historie 58, 60
History 50, 53, 56, 59, 60, 66, 71, 72, 101, 109–111, 124, 126, 137, 142, 167, 168, 182, 190, 200, 208, 209, 224, 243, 244, 258, 272, 290, 308, 333, 336, 338, 345, 347, 366, 367, 373, 377–381, 383, 398, 411, 426, 434, 477, 504, 523, 531, 538, 541, 551, 563, 583, 596, 599, 604, 626, 632, 634, 640, 641, 655, 679, 694, 700, 713, 716, 737
History of ideas 694
History of redaction 67
History of religions 60–61, 130
Hoar frost 683
Hold 455, 560, 595, 597, 635, 636, 712, 741, 742
Hold back 607, 722
Holiness 101, 151, 175, 204, 219, 221, 225, 258, 304, 386, 473, 538, 627, 655, 673, 675
Holiness code 61, 65, 626
Hollow 546
Holy 74, 108, 117, 189, 235, 243, 300, 305, 336, 339, 368, 370, 424, 451, 474, 542, 545, 585, 621, 634, 645, 647, 653, 654, 657, 719
Holy assembly 272
Holy city 200
Holy congregation 296
Holy family 290
Holy garments 151
Holy of holies 223, 280
Holy One 101, 265, 293
Holy place 114, 121, 122, 478, 685, 687
Holy Spirit (→ Spirit, Holy)
Holy tent 211
Holy war 382, 429, 646, 650
Holy writings 58
Homage 246, 347
Home 327, 328, 449, 460, 615, 616, 652, 654, 672, 687, 690
Homeland 615, 684, 686, 690
Homesickness 460
Homicide 429
Homiletic 628
Homily 737
Homosexual 448, 461, 497
Honesty 413, 695
Honey 682, 683
Honorarium 198
Honour 111, 120, 122, 192, 195, 198–200, 220, 255, 287, 290, 304, 315, 336, 344, 386, 405, 415, 431, 435, 453, 470, 474, 478, 552, 553, 572, 594, 616, 617, 619, 645, 647–649, 665, 668, 669, 687, 688, 715, 717, 722
Honourable 442, 521, 524
Hope 56, 78, 79, 98, 109, 147, 180, 216, 217, 229, 236, 261, 262, 274, 279, 282, 289, 290, 305, 320, 323, 324, 328, 329, 337, 372, 385, 386, 400, 401, 406, 426, 427, 434, 440, 444, 466, 467, 492, 504, 505, 547, 554, 562, 564, 571, 586, 589, 592, 596, 598, 601, 604, 608, 609, 629, 638, 639, 641, 644, 658, 672, 679, 683, 694, 697, 710, 712–714, 724, 725, 730
Hopeless 336, 464, 596, 716
Horizon 583, 584, 681
Horn 114, 118, 121
Horror 75, 114, 431, 437, 526–530, 610, 622
Horse 117, 203, 205, 510, 657, 743
Hosanna 97, 100, 281
Hospice 687, 688
Hospitable 686
Hospitality 686–690
Host 102, 280, 332, 380, 522, 647, 666, 690, 733
Hostile 113, 269, 328, 407, 422, 451, 501, 507, 510, 512, 553, 555, 597, 610, 650, 680, 681, 683, 684, 687, 693
Hostilities 625
Hostility 398, 402, 419, 430, 515, 555, 688, 724
Hot 317–319
Hour 321, 324, 420, 423, 627, 629, 710
House 149, 170, 174, 225, 272, 274, 292, 300–303, 308, 426, 440, 498, 596, 598, 617, 632, 638, 641, 642, 655, 658, 660–662, 687, 688, 695, 697, 716, 730, 734, 738
House church 301, 302
Household 156, 159, 160, 167, 194, 198, 256, 303, 472, 614, 633, 689, 691
Human life 58
Human race 665
Human sacrifice 352
Humanity 86, 233, 255, 427, 474, 521, 524, 547, 556, 625, 631, 672, 675, 678, 680, 694, 709, 718, 719
Humble 109, 308, 345, 479, 495, 547, 584, 587, 609, 612
Humiliation 154, 256, 398, 400, 520, 548, 569, 712
Humility 117, 135, 154, 227, 239, 285, 400, 489, 548, 549, 700
Hunger 109, 217, 250, 252, 253, 272, 277, 381, 497, 613, 651, 653, 671
Hunt 609
Hurt 413, 656, 726
Husband 84, 87, 232, 235, 302, 395, 453, 506, 507, 623
Husbandry 498
Husk 704, 705
Hygiene 119, 120, 309

Hymn 67, 147, 212, 213, 237, 381, 382, 386, 398, 400, 402, 547, 598, 628, 649, 651, 669, 706
Hyperbole 116, 168, 713
Hypocrisy 282, 299
Hypocrite 205, 261, 416
Hypostasized 382, 586
Hypostatic appearance 101
Hypothesis 61
Hypothetical 591, 601
Hyssop 225
Hysteria 163

I am 79, 323, 628
Idea 66, 87, 105, 130, 242, 358, 460, 483, 491, 598, 616, 636, 641, 643, 679, 704
Ideal 426, 460, 491, 492, 640–642, 670
Idealism 694
Idealized 627
Identification 709
Identify 439, 481, 489, 634, 707, 709, 710
Identity 316, 444, 598, 707
Idle 73
Idol 75, 120, 138, 239, 252, 261, 350–352, 382, 390, 428, 444, 537, 546, 550–552, 589, 643, 731
Idolater 467
Idolatrous 75, 151, 410, 532
Idolatry 75, 138, 141, 231, 451, 452, 496, 499, 500, 514, 531, 550, 551, 555, 559, 681, 688
Ignorance 85, 417, 422, 455, 501, 561, 737 Ill 118, 356
Ill-disposed 202
Ill-temper 681
Ill-treated 644
Ill-will 557
Illegitimate 500
Illness 84, 163, 346, 443, 452, 453, 679, 727
Illumine 422
Illuminate 212, 246
Illuminations 629
Illusion 546, 551, 713
Illusory 546
Illustrate 547, 627, 670
Image 71, 75, 86, 87, 95, 107, 114, 138, 168, 175, 203, 205, 236, 237, 339, 340, 360, 380, 382, 386, 407, 469, 491, 522, 552, 580, 586, 609, 654, 657, 661, 662, 693, 707, 714
Imagery 118, 204, 406, 523, 549, 645, 647–649
Imagine 330, 550
Imbecile 509
Imitate 214, 287, 400, 401, 480–494, 498, 522, 638, 702
Immanence 71, 522
Immanent 70, 460, 661, 688, 711
Immaterial 229, 602
Immature 282
Immediate 512
Immerse 144, 147, 155, 224
Immersion 143, 144, 149, 150, 152, 225
Immigrant 625
Imminence 322, 323, 496, 513–515, 612, 725
Immobilization 239
Immoderate 625
Immodesty 496
Immolate 235
Immoral 467, 497
Immorality 138, 231, 466, 494–503, 555, 681
Immortal 66, 229, 233, 432, 433, 435, 467, 468, 469, 705
Immortality 58, 430–432, 435, 444, 463, 467–470, 709
Immovable 586, 663
Impact 733
Impale 391, 393
Impart 207, 208, 479, 620
Impartial 503, 505, 587, 639
Impassibility 108
Impediment 163, 428
Impel 408, 497
Impending 725
Impenetrable 422
Impenitent 106, 357, 358
Imperative 571, 602
Imperfect 491, 518, 587
Imperial 395
Imperishable 236, 467–470, 647
Impermanence 437
Impersonal 484, 566, 693
Impiety 622
Impious 461
Implanted 731
Implication 482, 668
Implore 569, 570
Imply 608, 680
Importance 260, 375, 528, 538, 627, 662, 679, 690
Important 625, 626, 666, 676, 739
Impose 537, 552, 613
Impossible 669, 699, 719
Imposture 550
Impotence 497
Impoverishment 642
Impregnable 659
Impress 712
Imprisonment 219, 323, 432, 564, 731
Impulse 107, 354, 456, 457, 459, 460, 555, 636, 710
Impure 451, 639
Impurity 138, 152, 155, 231, 448, 475, 479, 496
Imputation 671
Inability 556, 561
Inaccessible 445
Inactivity 73, 240, 441
Inadequacy 319
Inalienable 669
Inanimate 429
Inarticulate 409
Inauguration 724
Incantation 409, 450
Incapable 681
Incapacity 742
Incarcerate 452
Incarnate 575, 671, 678, 739
Incarnation 58, 66, 179, 347, 438, 547–549, 644, 668, 678, 679, 706

Incense 151, 478, 509, 655
Incest 499, 500
Incitement 107, 110, 674
Inclination 334, 533, 682
Inclusion 739
Incomparable 615, 619, 729
Incompatible 501, 506, 513, 514, 681
Incomprehensible 363, 529
Incongruous 724
Inconsistent 506
Incorporation 237, 285, 303, 481, 643
Incorruptible 467, 468, 674
Incorruption 380, 470
Increase 411, 600, 728, 730, 732, 733, 742
Incredibility 594
Inculcate 598
Incur 611
Indebted 648
Indecency 505
Indelible 310, 680
Independence 102, 190, 263, 377, 422, 484, 522, 537, 542, 680, 681, 742
Independent 604, 627, 642, 643, 697, 718
Indespensable 618
Indestructible 337, 468
Indeterminism 54
Indicative 602
Indict 349
Indictment 84
Indifference 318, 459, 553, 647, 737
Indignation 106–108, 656
Indignity 264, 265
Indirect 578
Indissolubility 384
Individual 94, 156, 195, 215, 224, 233, 235, 237, 275, 294, 303, 305, 308, 354, 355, 357, 367, 379, 382, 387, 409, 432–435, 463, 482, 485, 505, 520, 525, 536, 537, 539, 568, 569, 595, 597, 600, 612, 617, 618, 620, 624, 626, 632, 633, 636, 640–643, 647, 658, 662, 680, 682, 699, 702, 707, 711, 716, 721, 723, 732, 739
Individualization 433, 625
Indivisible 501 Induce 589
Indulgence 77, 625, 698
Ineffable 705
Ineffective 207, 319, 546, 547
Ineffectual 546, 550
Inefficacy 547
Inescapable 609
Inevitable 326, 327, 418, 431, 432, 437, 681, 719
Inexperience 280, 281
Inexpressible 669
Infallible 351, 527
Infant 280, 281, 283, 290, 308, 512, 737
Infant baptism (→ Baptism, Infant)
Infant communion 160
Infant mortality 498
Infection 611
Inference 580
Inferior 208, 259, 387
Inferiority 734
Infiltration 539
Infinite 164
Infirmity 183, 452, 674, 679
Inflame 418, 656
Influence 165, 196, 302, 414, 423, 543, 564, 567, 568, 587, 590, 591, 611, 618, 624, 655, 676
Influential 188
Inform 246, 350
Ingathering 686, 724
Ingrafting 159
Ingratitude 399, 552
Inhabit 690
Inhabitant 286, 508, 519, 521, 726
Inhabited 518
Inherent 673
Inherit 215, 222, 276, 287, 301, 433, 436, 470, 518, 552, 563, 625, 643, 667, 675
Inheritance 289, 390, 448, 469, 636, 640, 651, 696
Inheritor 79
Inhospitable 657
Inhuman 670
Inhumation 264
Iniquity 115, 202, 231, 296, 308, 607, 673, 734
Initiate 176, 178, 189, 255, 316, 430, 596, 625, 705, 716
Initiated 577, 616, 654
Initiation 144, 149, 151, 154, 155, 159, 160, 237, 286, 288, 432, 470, 611, 616 Initiative 157, 275, 488
Injure 182, 687
Injury 241, 463
Injustice 219, 410, 687, 716
Ink 203, 247
Inn 688
Innate 481, 525
Inner 679, 680
Inner man 169
Innermost being 683
Innocence 221, 222, 269, 287, 288, 390, 395, 507, 510, 561
Innocent 737
Insatiable 137–139, 459, 460
Insect 172, 252
Insight 129, 421, 437, 483, 484, 485, 567, 568, 597, 662, 671, 680, 742 Insignificant 174, 290, 381
Insinuation 565
Insistence 700
Inspect 128, 188, 189
Inspire 427, 529, 578, 629, 734
Instigate 643
Instinct 457, 458, 460, 497, 502, 650
Institution 71, 120, 130, 192, 194, 238, 297–300, 302, 304, 425, 426, 473, 486, 667
Instruct 330, 340, 349, 421, 526, 574, 597, 680, 735
Instruction 52, 64, 69, 70, 246, 281, 332, 341, 462, 487, 491, 567, 568, 570, 578, 593, 595, 600, 603, 617, 627
Instructor 333

Instrument 125, 136, 141, 231, 273, 353, 381, 389, 390, 391, 392, 395, 414, 509, 510, 523, 540, 655, 726
Insubstantial 512, 744
Insult 259, 395, 413–418, 566, 727
Integration 190
Integrity 396, 467, 643
Intellect 399, 420, 568
Intellectual 437, 444, 486, 494, 495, 536, 567, 595, 616, 742
Intellectual death 431
Intelligible 522, 582
Intemperance 672
Intend 471, 696, 704, 718
Intense 726
Intensification 631
Intensity 654
Intention 59, 119, 325, 426, 433, 496, 534, 573, 577, 578, 600, 608, 677, 693, 695–697, 711, 719
Intentional 609
Interact 680
Intercalary days 627
Intercede 210, 647, 688
Intercession 78, 103, 104, 213, 504, 699, 700, 727
Intercessor 83, 88, 89, 544
Intercourse 235, 496–498, 506, 639, 678
Interest 278, 324, 366, 641, 721
Intermediary 104, 372, 449
Intermediate beings 101, 451
Intermediate state 313, 315, 442
Internal 704, 708
Interpose 731
Interpret 57, 59, 69, 103, 573–584, 679
Interpretation 57, 58, 59, 65, 66, 69, 71, 333, 398, 411, 415, 485, 512, 539, 566, 573–584, 598, 616, 628, 737
Interpreter 69, 220, 373, 374, 512, 573
Interrupt 625
Intertestamental period 527
Interval 503, 540
Intervention 379, 381, 385, 512, 521, 543, 544, 551, 609, 643, 670, 716, 738
Intimate 482, 672, 712
Intoxication 513, 515, 528
Introduce 544
Introduction 167
Invalid 514, 720
Invariable 351
Invective 413
Invention 675
Invest 207
Investigate 64, 189, 266, 580
Invincible 443
Invisible 95, 299, 360, 374, 385, 469, 491, 576, 580, 595, 602, 704
Invitation 270, 272, 273, 274, 324, 339, 483
Invite 409, 529, 542, 569, 570
Invocation 271, 276, 367, 569, 570, 615–618, 620, 621
Invocation of saints 78
Involvement 278, 459, 525
Involuntary 561
Involved 601
Inward 612
Iron 164, 407, 463, 726
Irony 277, 382, 411, 413, 479, 590, 710
Irreconcilable 473, 501, 553
Irrelevant 680
Irreligion 74, 186
Irresistible 459, 609
Irresponsibility 559
Irreverence 112
Irrevocable 207, 356, 357, 365, 416, 443, 572, 611, 718, 719
Irritable 107
Irruption 612
Isaac 76, 81, 82, 411
Isaac, Sacrifice of 76, 79, 81, 82, 403, 604, 713
Ishmael 411
Israel 61, 67, 71, 80, 199, 257, 294, 296, 297, 299, 302, 303, 305, 366, 369, 370, 372, 381, 390, 411, 414, 433, 487, 531, 540, 541, 557, 619, 629, 637, 640, 641, 650, 667, 675, 716, 724, 725, 734
Israelite 434
Issue 604, 703
Itinerant 132, 322
Ivy 648

J source 57, 61, 66, 72
Jacob 556
Jaw 694
Jealous 108, 543, 667
Jealousy 106, 201, 557, 558, 681, 739
Jehovah 72
Jerusalem 174, 320, 390, 395, 411, 532, 538, 642, 686, 731, 736, 737
Jerusalem Council 62, 135, 157, 221, 310, 330, 331
Jerusalem, Heavenly 142, 304, 411, 421
Jerusalem Talmud (→ Talmud, Jerusalem)
Jesus Christ 124, 125, 552, 662, 669, 679, 691
Jewel 469
Jewellery 522
Jewish Christians 55, 61, 62, 157, 340, 689
Jewry 473
Jews 361, 385, 395, 487, 503, 529, 554, 565, 622, 659, 684, 685, 686, 708, 720, 730, 737, 739, 740
Jinn 509
John the Baptist 487, 544, 545, 599, 612, 638, 657, 739
Joiner 241
Joint 238, 241
Jonah 671
Journey 173, 263, 626, 649
Joy 119, 120, 122, 217, 227, 263, 335, 358, 359, 381, 400, 411, 412, 423, 459, 460, 490, 530, 561, 603, 607, 612, 633, 648, 729–731, 734, 741
Jubilation 410
Jubilee 698
Judah 61–62
Judaism 61, 64, 67, 69, 72, 145, 154, 155, 160, 169, 174, 284, 308, 360, 382, 396, 399, 402, 405, 414, 435, 437, 486, 515, 524, 534, 580,

Judaism continued
598, 614, 617, 618, 629, 632, 634, 643, 645, 656, 669, 672, 673, 686, 688, 689, 691, 714, 717, 721, 729, 730, 736, 737
Judaism, Liberal 69
Judaism, Talmudic 69
Judaizers 61, 62, 78, 79, 157, 158, 331
Judaizing 309, 487
Judas Iscariot 299, 464, 520, 725
Judge 60, 97, 107, 112, 115, 118, 168, 185, 189, 190, 196, 219, 220, 248, 273, 320, 323, 327, 344, 345, 349, 356, 373, 399, 410, 425, 445, 464, 469, 473, 482, 503–505, 519, 525, 529, 531, 539, 566, 587, 637, 648, 655, 656, 674, 678, 680, 684
Judges 55, 716
Judgment 77, 79, 83, 84, 86, 89, 91, 102, 103, 106, 107, 109–113, 115, 146, 156, 163, 167, 171–173, 175, 185, 190, 191, 203, 205, 209, 210, 219, 224, 228, 231, 233, 240, 243, 244, 320, 321, 326, 327, 343, 345, 347–349, 350, 353, 356, 358, 359, 364, 372, 386, 390, 396, 414–418, 423, 425, 429, 430, 433, 434, 439–441, 443, 446, 449, 452, 462, 465–468, 471, 472, 474, 486, 495, 499, 500, 503, 504, 514, 516–518, 524, 525, 531, 533, 536, 542, 546, 550, 551, 554, 559, 564, 566, 583, 585, 597, 598, 602, 610, 611, 623, 624, 652, 653, 655, 656, 657, 667, 670, 674, 676, 703, 705, 722, 724, 725, 737
Judgment seat 347
Judicial 196, 267, 395, 415, 471, 572, 640
Jug 742
Junction 241
Jupiter 705
Juridical 132, 195, 199
Jurisdiction 360, 364, 395, 610, 627
Juror 205
Just 137, 304, 336, 370, 554, 593, 637, 659, 673, 719, 738
Just One 476
Justice 116, 261, 332, 356, 396, 410, 438, 447, 501, 503, 504, 543, 640, 651, 666
Justification 73, 78, 86, 97, 152, 154, 157, 158, 223, 228, 275, 347, 379, 398–401, 437, 439, 472, 475, 547, 564, 571, 602, 604, 605, 639, 662, 673, 681, 687, 695, 696, 701, 702, 720
Justifying 601, 730

Karaites 67
Keep 332, 337–341, 526, 611, 623, 635, 638, 691
Kenoticism 548, 549
Kernel 704, 705
Kerygma 54, 55, 57, 59, 62, 65, 397, 400, 547, 551, 601, 605
Kick 511
Kid 114
Kidnapping 717
Kidney 230
Kill 174, 175, 220, 222, 223, 336, 390, 394, 395, 401, 429–447, 451, 463, 468, 469, 508, 608, 610, 623, 629, 632–634, 740
Kin 673
Kind 704
Kindle 241, 653, 654
Kindness 461, 665
Kindred 181, 626
King 100, 115, 117, 121, 123, 177, 178, 210, 269, 270, 293, 317, 321, 323, 331, 332, 366, 373, 375, 405, 408, 425, 426, 427, 464, 511, 537, 538, 543, 581, 606, 609, 617, 618, 622, 623, 649, 651, 652, 684, 732
King of ages 469
King of Israel 395
King of the Jews 63
Kingdom 406, 424, 451, 452, 508, 516, 519, 523, 524, 526, 578, 649, 689, 720, 729, 734
Kingdom of Christ 701
Kingdom of God 10, 62, 77, 86, 87, 116, 124, 125, 138, 146, 147, 148, 160, 167, 174, 179, 213, 214, 217, 219, 222, 238, 250, 263, 275, 277, 278, 284, 285, 290, 298, 300, 321, 322, 323, 326, 329, 358, 369, 381, 384, 434, 453, 454, 470, 482, 489, 525, 561, 563, 590, 599, 612, 620, 646, 651, 657, 666, 675, 676, 679, 691
Kingdom of heaven 216, 358, 518, 560 Kingdom of Israel 52
Kingdom of Judah 52
Kingship 210, 241, 374, 405, 406, 425, 426, 427
Kinsfolk 194
Kinship 207, 414, 675
Kiss 206, 207
Knapsack 143
Knife 308
Knowledge 58, 60, 85, 93, 107, 123, 138, 197, 212, 222, 225, 233, 238, 244, 245, 247, 277, 281, 282, 303, 325, 334, 347, 348, 352, 386, 389, 421, 422, 432, 442, 444, 453, 481, 483, 484, 486, 488, 496, 497, 500, 504, 512, 525, 530, 538, 539, 555, 562, 565, 567, 568, 587, 595, 597, 598, 600–603, 605, 620, 637, 638, 644, 650, 675, 684, 685, 692–697, 707, 708, 716, 735, 740, 742, 743
Koine 59, 62

Labour 85, 115, 180, 186, 187, 260–263, 271, 466, 519, 551, 564, 722, 723
Lack 384, 489, 494, 504, 516, 541, 562, 593, 648, 723, 731, 732, 740, 741
Lad 283, 284
Ladder 140
Laden 565, 699, 742
Laity 629
Lamb 114, 115, 118, 119, 142, 164, 223, 240, 241, 274, 317, 386, 448, 482, 525, 629, 630, 633, 634, 651, 652, 691, 702
Lame 637
Lamentation 178, 262, 286, 378, 410, 547, 551
Lamp 234
Lampstand 304
Land 76, 243, 360, 390, 498, 499, 515, 516, 517–526, 537, 565, 607, 625, 640, 641, 684, 688, 710, 726, 735, 741 Language 59, 62
Language-event 583

Lapse 359, 608
Lash 161, 162
Last 56, 97, 326, 653, 665, 666, 667, 669
Last day 421
Last days 151, 218, 224, 244, 420, 460, 496, 512, 556, 566, 607, 610
Last enemy 440
Last judgment 56, 65, 83, 324, 333, 417, 473, 742
Last Supper (→ Lord's Supper)
Last things 56
Last times 452, 675
Late 607
Latent 711
Later 665
Latter Prophets 66
Laurel 470, 648
Lavish 730
Law 52–54, 59, 62, 64, 65, 67, 70, 73, 74, 77–79, 86, 98, 102, 103, 107, 109, 112, 113, 116, 117, 129, 157, 164, 183, 184, 190, 196–198, 214, 218, 219, 220, 221, 228, 230, 231, 234, 243, 245, 252, 258, 261, 263–265, 268, 269, 271, 282, 284, 293–297, 302, 309–311, 321, 322, 327, 328, 331–336, 340, 341, 347, 349, 350, 353, 355, 357, 358, 360, 361, 365, 367, 368, 370, 371, 373, 374, 390, 397, 398, 402, 412, 416–418, 424, 430, 434, 436–439, 446, 448, 452, 457, 458, 461, 463, 468, 471–473, 477, 478, 481, 484–487, 499, 500, 503, 506, 512, 532, 543, 544, 547, 554, 556, 564, 570, 573–575, 579, 589, 591, 592, 595, 597, 598, 601, 606, 607, 609, 610, 612, 622, 625, 627, 630, 631, 637, 645, 654, 659, 663, 667, 674–676, 678, 680, 681, 685–688, 690, 691, 694, 699, 708, 714, 715, 717–720, 729, 730, 733–735, 738
Law-book 243
Law, Ceremonial 75
Lawful 500, 535
Lawlessness 125, 556, 639, 681
Law-suit 267, 345
Lax 333, 560
Lay 413, 477, 662, 684, 696
Lay aside 314, 470
Lay down 660
Lay hands on 197, 207, 213, 284, 684, 735
Lay hold 596
Lay to heart 106
Lay waste 468
Layman 98
Lead 471, 486, 489, 509, 532, 570, 573, 575, 579, 585, 604, 623, 638, 645, 648–650, 669, 680, 719, 720
Lead astray 413, 423, 452, 460, 468, 469, 487, 493, 510, 566, 570, 588, 607, 608, 689
Lead away 685, 688
Leader 132, 164, 165, 168, 191, 193, 198, 200, 220, 270, 293, 294, 424, 462, 475, 568, 591, 596, 610, 629, 664–666, 725, 739, 740
Leadership 196, 197, 199, 300, 425 Leaf 515, 652
Leap over 632
Learn 69, 333, 481, 483–485, 599
Learner 136, 483–485
Leather 243, 254
Leather-worker 279
Leave 488, 607, 697, 698, 701
Leaven 249, 630, 634
Leaves 390, 723, 724
Lectionary 245
Left hand 103
Leg 393, 656
Legal 258, 286, 337, 344, 365, 368, 373, 375, 392, 395, 396, 402, 468, 475, 477, 488, 503–506, 543, 558, 606, 645, 650, 658–660, 664, 668, 687, 697, 698
Legalism 259, 331, 335, 338, 339, 361, 371, 397, 399–402, 487, 532, 597, 602, 681
Legend 58
Legendary 594
Legion 175, 475
Legislation 506
Legitimacy 599
Legitimate 498
Length 253
Leniency 467, 698, 700
Lentils 249
Leopard 119
Leprosy 151, 163, 204, 225 241, 685
Lesbian 498
Let alone 698
Let go 698, 701
Let pass 697, 698
Let slip 682, 683
Letter 62, 242–249, 255, 261, 292, 356, 430, 656, 727, 737
Letter of commendation 592
Level 709
Leviathan 205, 523
Levirite marriage 499
Levites 65, 98, 294, 360, 538, 636
Levitical 80, 211, 245, 337, 341, 408, 619, 677
Levy 296, 537
Liability 373
Liable 418, 550, 657
Liar 166, 350, 423, 424
Libation 648
Liberal 639, 642
Liberal Judaism (→ Judaism, Liberal) Liberality 731
Liberate 399, 401
Liberating word 384, 397
Liberation 58, 138, 209, 277, 385, 432, 435, 522, 524, 715–721
Libertinism 62, 336, 339, 448, 556, 638, 720
Liberty 62, 331, 435, 458, 470, 715–721
Library 377
Licentiousness 494, 500, 681
Lick up 520
Lictor 407
Lie 424, 454, 455, 458, 461, 466, 471, 550, 551, 563, 660, 670
Lie down 442
Life 60, 78, 84, 96, 105, 107, 139, 148, 168, 180, 182, 212, 221, 222, 226, 229, 231, 234, 236, 241, 243, 244, 248, 250, 251, 253, 260,

Life continued
262, 265, 269, 274, 277, 278, 281, 282, 296, 297, 300, 303, 311, 321, 323, 327, 329, 332, 333, 335, 337, 347, 350, 354, 355, 359, 367, 381, 384, 391, 399–401, 403, 406, 416, 417, 421–424, 427, 429–438, 441, 442, 444–446, 456–460, 462–465, 467–471, 479, 480, 483, 488–494, 496, 500, 502, 505, 506, 509, 512–515, 517, 521, 524, 525, 528, 533, 534, 537, 541, 543, 546–552, 556, 557, 561, 565, 568, 570, 571, 574, 595, 597, 601, 603, 604, 608–610, 615, 617, 619, 621, 624, 625, 627, 628, 630, 634, 637, 638, 640–645, 649–651, 653, 654, 656–659, 662, 666, 669, 671–673, 676–682, 689, 697, 703, 709–711, 713, 714, 716–720, 722, 723, 726, 727, 729, 733, 736, 738, 740, 741, 743, 744
Life-destroying 653
Life-giving 329, 430, 436, 649, 653, 665, 722, 723
Lifeless 429, 441
Lifelong 623
Life-span 92, 431
Life-style 110, 185, 598
Lift up 211, 510, 585
Light 60, 120, 174, 203, 219, 220, 261, 286, 320, 323, 333, 338, 355, 359, 379, 382, 420–425, 432, 477, 483, 490, 513, 522, 525, 556, 562, 563, 566, 580, 586, 592, 616, 638, 644, 652, 705, 711, 723
Lighten 699
Lightning 610, 654
Like 206, 491
Likeness 587, 676, 707, 709
Lilith 451
Limb 152, 229–242, 300
Limit 54, 352, 384, 386, 389, 422, 488, 489, 494, 500, 548, 549, 565, 625, 669, 671, 680, 681, 734
Line 426, 427
Lineage 220, 616
Linen 204, 205, 531
Linguistics 56, 582
Link 259, 731
Lion 116, 118, 119, 444, 520, 694
Lips 382, 424, 455
Liquefy 682
Liquid 513, 520, 626
Listen 210, 485, 510, 529, 584, 591
Literal 333, 713
Literary criticism (→ Criticism, Literary) Literary forms (→ Form-criticism) Literary genre (→ Genre, Literary) Little 283, 358, 461, 462, 586, 623
Little Apocalypse 541
Liturgical 98, 99, 280, 346, 514, 618, 620, 628 642
Liturgy 100, 297, 414, 416, 627, 628, 633
Live 181, 234, 435, 444, 513, 517, 597, 600, 613, 621, 643, 661, 676, 677, 679, 682, 685, 686, 690, 691, 713, 723, 739 Livelihood 277, 357
Liver 230
Living 87, 147, 240, 469, 535, 641, 642, 659, 665, 683, 690, 711, 723, 736
Living creature 280
Living stone 305
Load 260, 711, 728, 742, 743
Loaf 249, 250, 586
Loafer 267
Loathe 555, 557
Local 624, 626, 643
Location 527
Locust 118, 119, 342, 409, 511, 612
Lodging 687
Logia 57, 58, 62–63, 67, 68
Logic 481, 664
Logical 333
Logos 60, 63, 166, 178, 374, 438, 575, 576, 595, 711, 739
Loins 239, 240
Loneliness 679
Long 523
Longing 385, 456, 522, 524, 610, 672
Look 231, 456, 510, 585, 694
Look back 493
Look for 189
Look forward 633
Loose 171, 190, 577, 698
Lord 71, 102, 128, 165–168, 187, 205, 209, 221, 222, 256, 270, 325, 346, 355, 381, 382, 396, 427, 475, 489, 519, 522, 523, 549, 602, 603, 610, 652, 665, 668, 669, 674, 675, 688, 720
Lord of heaven 75
Lord of hosts 280
Lord of the spirits 452
Lord's Day 631
Lord's Prayer 249, 251, 384, 566, 567, 615, 619, 621
Lord's Supper 117, 157, 213, 237, 250, 251, 253, 298, 301, 369, 370, 414, 467, 473, 513, 629, 630, 633, 634, 639, 643, 689, 701, 702
Lordship 203, 237, 238, 248, 298, 302, 355, 462, 475, 492, 522, 637, 639
Lose 462, 608–611, 639, 651
Lose heart 561, 563
Lose life 429, 464, 698
Lose way 608
Loss 463, 465, 497, 608, 611, 640, 679, 716
Lost 322, 332, 359, 463, 464, 472, 525, 541, 729
Lot 216, 433, 452, 478, 482, 488, 489, 491, 554, 689, 741 Love 55, 96, 102, 103, 108–110, 112, 126, 166, 167, 171, 173, 180, 190, 191, 197, 206, 207, 215, 232, 235, 236, 238–240, 254–260, 262, 263, 270, 275, 277, 278, 282, 287, 300, 303, 311, 318, 324, 325, 329, 334–339, 341, 347, 351, 352, 359, 367, 377, 385, 386, 414, 417, 419, 422, 424, 439, 456, 458, 460, 461, 464, 469, 484, 490–492, 496, 498, 502, 525, 526, 528, 530, 538, 541, 542, 548, 549, 552–557, 559, 564, 566, 568–570, 574, 590, 596, 601–604, 607, 609, 611, 616, 617, 620, 622–626, 630, 638, 639, 642, 644, 651, 652, 655, 662,

Love continued
664, 666–668, 679, 687, 688, 693, 695, 696, 719, 720, 722, 730, 731, 733, 734, 735, 740
Lover 481, 492, 506, 558
Low 566
Lower 674, 707
Loyalty 189, 270, 281, 308, 367, 529, 618, 688
Lukewarm 317–319
Lull 441
Luminary 422, 451, 523
Lump 634
Lunar cycle 626
Lure 458, 681
Lurk 241
Lust 106, 137, 231, 448, 456–461, 469, 559, 627, 645, 671, 677, 690, 691
Lustration 144, 145, 151, 155, 156, 186, 225
Luxury 118, 205, 531, 671
LXX (→ Septuagint)
Lying 350, 512, 550, 555
Lying in state 696
Lynch 344

Maccabaeans 717
Maccabees 59, 62, 63
Madness 450, 526–530
Magi 170
Magic 95, 119–121, 186, 207, 208, 219, 243, 254, 266, 267, 320, 346, 409, 420, 450–454, 550, 577, 611, 625, 686, 718
Magician 424
Magistrate 163, 168, 193, 341, 407
Magnanimous 715
Maid 283, 284, 498
Maintain 717
Maintenance 414, 525, 602
Majesty 95, 99, 163, 185, 344, 559, 618, 732
Majority 95, 97, 541, 686, 732
Make 378, 383, 387, 471, 474, 477, 520, 523, 732
Make alive 643, 677
Make amends 308
Make known 71, 83, 420, 575, 576, 701
Make room 728–744
Make straight 411
Maker 376–389
Makeshift 610
Malaria 163
Male 308
Malediction 416
Malformation 560
Malice 110, 231, 259, 631
Malignant 203, 520
Maltreat 162, 285
Mammon 138, 684
Man 50, 57, 59, 84, 87, 103, 114–116, 126, 242, 382, 472, 521, 522, 547, 548, 621, 640, 665, 667, 672, 674, 677–679, 701, 705, 708, 720, 722, 732
Man, Second 86, 520, 665
Man of sin 73, 125
Man-centred 501
Mandaeans 422, 653
Manhood 93, 302
Manichaeism 422
Manifest 711
Manifestation 232, 542, 586, 609, 648, 677, 679, 711
Mankind 96, 211, 470, 548, 616, 617, 672, 673, 675, 677, 678, 694, 720, 721, 737
Manna 195, 205, 248–253
Manner 708
Manner of life 469, 623
Manning 733 Manslaughter 151
Manufacture 378, 723
Manumission 267
Manuscripts 53, 70
Many 95–97, 514, 575
Mar 468
March 342, 409
Marital 506
Mark 114, 115, 235, 399, 556, 655, 727, 735, 739
Market 189, 225, 267–268, 283, 352, 625
Marriage 103, 138, 153, 155, 207, 278, 308, 335, 368, 384, 408, 414, 426, 448, 457, 494–496, 498–500, 502, 505, 507, 544, 560, 561, 625, 626, 675, 678, 682, 688, 698, 717
Marriage laws 61
Married 145, 152, 411, 496, 497
Marshall 521
Martyr 222, 257, 312, 406, 435, 438, 440, 455, 474, 529, 645, 649, 694, 709
Martyrdom 163, 235, 403, 440, 647, 651, 653, 707
Marvel 381
Masada 627
Mask 316, 586
Mason 279
Masonry 241
Masoretes 63
Masoretic text 50, 63, 68, 71
Mass 528, 732
Mast 241
Mastema 125, 452
Master 67, 239, 266, 275, 285, 305, 404, 416, 440, 462, 474, 480, 482, 484–486, 488, 494, 609, 610, 617, 623, 637, 638, 680, 715–717, 720
Master-builder 377
Mastery 265, 460, 571
Match-maker 475
Material 209, 458, 459, 513, 522, 537, 562, 589, 639, 642, 676, 680, 687, 710, 716, 744
Material world 58, 139, 233, 250, 387
Materialism 532
Materialistic 186, 583
Mathematics 665
Matter 55, 66, 236, 380, 443, 450, 562, 704, 705, 711
Maturity 92–93, 284, 302, 325, 474, 565, 568, 647
Mazda teaching 653
Meal 212, 213, 219, 250, 272, 282, 292, 308, 367, 369, 414, 480, 629, 630, 632–634, 641
Meaning 57, 68, 250, 338, 381, 551, 574, 614, 629, 632, 633, 676, 678, 737

Meaningless 522
Means 580, 581, 681
Measure 602, 711, 728, 733–735, 738, 740, 741
Meat 226, 230, 249, 261, 350–352, 630, 643, 671, 731
Meddle 266–267
Mediate 102, 210, 375, 380, 381, 466
Mediation 282, 346, 374, 570, 571
Mediator 101, 103, 127, 238, 294, 304, 365–376, 380, 382, 450, 451, 485, 617, 668, 669
Medical 302, 443, 692
Medicinal 120, 319
Medicine 119, 381, 484, 577, 742
Meditation 245, 338, 521, 653
Medium 512
Meek 217, 518, 570
Meekness 731
Meet 734
Meeting 267, 291, 296, 302, 324, 325, 363, 466, 587, 698, 713
Megilloth 58, 63
Melchizedek 80, 99, 100, 581, 619, 677, 731
Melt 682, 683
Member 153, 189, 229–242, 275, 278, 301, 303, 305, 310, 341, 344, 368, 433, 475, 484, 496, 500, 501, 518, 534, 539, 542, 554–556, 568, 596, 598, 601, 607, 614, 618, 625, 628, 633, 641, 642, 653, 689, 691, 700, 732, 739, 741 Membership 144, 148, 159, 181, 280, 287, 288, 299, 308, 364, 414, 539, 641, 693
Memorial 263, 624, 632
Memory 431, 471, 627, 629, 631, 683
Memra 63
Men of faithfulness 598
Menial 239
Menstruation 151
Mental 240, 527, 676, 680, 681, 711, 715
Mention 619
Merchant 117
Merciful 349, 356, 616, 617
Mercy 112, 113, 116, 180, 185, 189, 191, 197, 228, 258, 261, 335, 345, 356, 359, 464, 570, 593, 611, 615, 620, 666, 671, 679, 687, 730, 732, 733 Mercy seat 114, 151, 280
Merit 329, 399, 478, 489, 538, 539
Meritorious 702
Merkabah 527
Message 133, 171, 197, 202, 217, 239, 244, 246–248, 275, 282, 325, 334, 358, 397, 399–401, 409, 411, 468, 482, 486, 489, 511, 512, 527, 529, 541, 551, 600, 601, 638, 647, 659, 717, 719
Messenger 101–104, 127–130, 133–135, 163, 279, 280, 283, 301, 304, 416, 430, 450, 467, 475, 509, 595, 623, 686, 690, 727
Messiah 53, 63, 72, 77, 79, 123–125, 141, 144–146, 170, 171, 177, 178, 213, 252, 253, 276, 296, 302, 305, 321, 323, 330, 347, 373, 381, 407, 409, 414, 426–428, 451, 455, 470, 473, 544, 545, 560, 581, 586, 607, 610, 612, 613, 627, 629, 633, 661, 665, 675, 700, 717, 720, 724
Messiahship 428, 473
Messianic 114, 174, 210, 219, 250, 320–323, 329, 406–408, 473, 599, 633, 666
Messianic age 175, 185, 253, 354, 510, 543, 544, 700, 724
Messianic anointing 123
Messianic community 302
Messianic hope 426, 570, 629
Messianic king 100, 210
Messianic rule 67
Messianic secret 335
Messianic titles 63
Messianism 427
Metal 653, 654
Metaphor 50, 93, 122, 169, 187, 204, 219, 220, 224, 239–241, 247, 255, 259, 260, 281, 282, 285, 290, 300, 305, 315–317, 320–322, 324, 325, 364, 372, 386, 387, 390, 405, 406, 409, 421, 423, 424, 431, 438, 444, 447–449, 471, 477, 479, 481, 482, 527, 538, 546, 556, 558, 559, 565, 577, 586, 609, 610, 617, 635, 643, 645, 648, 650, 651, 654, 656–658, 670, 721, 723, 726
Metaphysical 422, 492, 561, 562
Metaphysics 53, 57, 63–64, 665
Mete out 572
Metempsychosis 594
Meteorite 610
Method 486, 533, 569, 582, 684
Metonymy 267
Michael 83, 101–103, 104, 452, 504, 508
Microcosm 232, 521
Middle 372
Middle man 374
Midnight 284, 420, 633
Midrash 64, 67, 485, 628, 630
Mien 708
Might 95, 142, 167, 175, 228, 336, 347, 466, 531, 638, 649
Mighty works 600
Military 340, 377, 475, 476, 505, 536, 553, 645–647, 650, 680, 710, 732
Military service 687
Milk 282, 682, 683
Milkless 515
Millennium 52, 53, 64, 254, 508
Mind 106, 231–233, 245, 266, 350, 355–357, 398, 413, 443, 448, 459, 460, 501, 502, 514, 515, 518, 523, 546, 547, 549, 555, 557, 568, 587, 594, 595, 636, 638, 676, 678, 680, 700, 706, 708, 723, 739, 742 Minister 74, 462, 476
Minister of death 101
Ministry 175, 192, 219, 329, 403, 419, 429, 477, 478, 488, 515, 516, 559, 568, 570, 613, 684, 689, 724, 725, 735, 742
Minor 92, 280, 281, 477, 509, 568
Minor Prophets 66
Minority 95, 97, 686
Mint 704
Miracle 57, 58, 114, 195, 218, 220, 248, 252, 253, 313, 341, 384, 427, 428, 470, 487, 574, 583, 596, 599, 600, 617, 620, 623, 659, 670, 724

Miraculous 398, 595, 616, 619, 629, 671, 739 Mirror 181
Miscarriage 124, 176–188
Mischief 186
Misconceive 715
Misconduct 506
Miserable 561, 565
Miserliness 138
Misery 450, 734
Misfortune 84, 162, 203, 561, 563, 564, 608, 611, 688, 705
Mishap 52, 608
Mishnah 51, 52, 58, 59, 64, 67, 69, 70, 364, 485
Misinterpretation 429
Mislead 174, 555, 589, 606, 680
Misplaced 531, 729
Misrepresent 644
Miss 718
Miss mark 608
Missing 332
Mission 95, 127–129, 133, 135, 142, 146, 155, 214, 256, 282, 331, 339, 361, 403, 411, 488, 510, 536, 538, 547, 581, 596, 599, 601, 603, 620, 657, 667, 678, 700, 736
Missionary 77, 128, 131–134, 166, 192, 214, 247, 263, 303, 329, 335, 350, 355, 359, 360, 547, 551, 570, 599, 650, 662, 686, 688, 689, 723, 733, 739
Mistress 239, 498
Mistrust 86, 594
Misunderstanding 121, 443, 498, 502, 544, 601, 643, 680, 693, 719, 720
Misuse 459, 579, 719
Mitigating 500
Mix 69, 289
Mixed marriages 155, 688
Mockery 205, 246, 395, 406, 410, 541
Mode 547, 706, 707
Model 491
Moderation 494, 501, 502, 647
Modesty 501
Modification 541
Monarchical 190, 192, 198, 200
Monarchy 52, 55, 109, 121, 122, 195, 196, 425, 426, 478, 716 Monastery 641
Monastic 641
Monepiscopacy 192
Money 93, 142, 143, 265, 377, 406, 461, 465, 497, 520, 564, 641, 648, 671, 684, 715, 731
Money, Love of 137–139
Money-box 142, 143
Money changer 704
Monism 255
Monogamy 166, 335, 383, 384
Monotheism 77, 452, 543
Monster 113, 114, 431, 508
Monstrous 670
Month 390, 723
Monument 431
Mood 107
Moon 124, 224, 420, 425, 449, 451
Moral 114, 206, 334, 348, 352, 353, 365, 419, 420, 432, 441, 447–449, 460, 462, 468, 479, 480, 498, 502, 524, 559, 562, 563, 565, 570, 571, 595, 607, 608, 628, 645, 699, 708, 709, 722, 725, 726, 732
Moral concepts 56
Moral evil 422
Moral freedom 62
Moral impurity 155
Morality 483, 484
Moral language 56
Moral philosophy 56, 502
Morals 56, 107, 206, 469, 687
More 137, 728
Morrow 251
Mortal 169, 233, 234, 430–432, 435–438, 440, 468–470, 499, 679, 705
Mortification 443
Mosaic dispensation 73
Mosaic legislation 70, 330, 500
Moses 252, 253, 373, 374, 399, 487, 539, 545, 639, 729
Moses' seat 297
Most High 321, 380, 381
Moth 119, 468
Mother 87, 239, 240, 288, 336, 461, 501, 517, 556, 615, 619, 739
Mother of harlots 142
Motherless 616
Motivate 537
Motivation 358, 397, 558, 686, 691
Motive 265, 270, 352, 395, 418, 549, 558, 603, 611, 612, 622–625, 641, 738
Motiveless 546
Mould 543, 676, 681, 708
Mountain 379, 387, 504, 559, 600, 602, 610, 661
Mournful 705
Mourning 120, 203, 217, 239, 265, 329, 520, 569, 571, 612, 625, 630
Mouth 347, 414, 476, 508, 657, 729
Move 741 Movement 487, 521, 602, 720
Multiform 705
Multiply 728, 732, 733
Multitude 95, 292, 293, 529, 670, 728–744
Mummy 263
Mundane 644
Murder 51, 309, 364, 410, 418, 420, 429, 443, 468, 499, 546, 558, 640
Murderer 166, 168, 458, 556
Murderous 657
Murex 205
Murmuring 195, 509
Music 625
Mustard 173
Muster 189, 292, 293, 296, 332, 333
Mute 428, 509
Mutilation 307, 309, 311
Mutual 240, 300, 303, 385, 639, 643, 662, 686, 724, 733 Muzzle 115
Myrrh 120–122, 265, 266
Myrtle 648
Mystery 64, 129, 167, 169, 171, 179, 351, 370, 371, 427, 498, 509, 541, 565, 566, 661, 677, 737, 740

Mystery Religions 59, 64, 123, 150, 176, 186, 230, 271, 282, 284, 316, 327, 373, 432, 438, 439, 470, 484, 595, 611, 616, 625, 643, 650, 654, 705–708, 716
Mystical 66, 123, 302, 337, 500, 513, 514, 636, 638, 643, 644
Mysticism 432, 527, 643
Myth 53, 54, 57, 87, 230, 336, 507, 508, 523, 640, 669
Mythical 498, 508, 523, 594, 616
Mythological 617
Mythology 124, 126, 229, 230, 233, 508, 514, 522, 563

Nail 330, 393, 402
Naked 312–317
Name 101, 146, 152, 167, 174, 179, 192, 200, 205, 209, 211, 244, 247, 271–274, 276, 290, 293, 309, 321, 338, 340, 345, 346, 382, 415, 455, 466, 471, 489, 499, 550, 555, 556, 566, 570, 571, 581, 600, 607, 616, 618, 619, 700, 715
Names of God 71
Narcotics 443
Narrative 57, 58, 62, 66, 573–584
Narrow door 646
Nation 612, 625, 641, 677, 685, 687, 688, 734, 740
National 269, 409, 426, 539, 545, 626, 654, 724
National guardians 102
Nationality 258
National unity 332
Nations 58, 97, 101, 109, 111, 115, 142, 164, 186, 214, 224, 374, 380, 390, 407, 477, 508, 519, 523, 541, 550, 574, 640, 685, 686, 688, 692, 699, 735
Nativity 623
Natural 441, 469, 551, 616, 617, 631, 647, 654, 679, 680, 690, 702, 722, 723, 725, 742 Natural man 422, 423
Natural phenomena 102
Natural theology 70
Naturalism 669
Nature 68, 70, 101, 107, 167, 179, 182, 186, 288, 315, 380, 384, 437, 470, 481, 483, 484, 488, 492, 535, 538, 542, 543, 548, 555, 561, 564, 620, 625–627, 636, 643, 644, 653, 670, 677, 679, 692, 694, 699, 703, 705, 706, 710, 712, 714–716, 725, 726, 734
Nature of God 108
Nazarene 535
Nazirite 645
Nearest 665
Necessity 173, 278, 310, 318, 326, 384, 561, 611, 623, 679, 692
Neck 241, 609
Necromancy 450
Necropolis 431
Nectar 513
Need 143, 165, 191, 257, 258, 272, 278, 285, 314, 318, 319, 409, 426, 436, 473, 500, 525, 544, 548, 578, 597, 600, 604, 614, 622, 642, 673, 679, 680, 702, 741 Needle 116
Needy 115, 218, 410, 570, 642
Negation 66
Negative 352, 553, 561, 583
Neglect 460, 698, 713
Negligible 561
Negotiate 193
Negotiator 194, 373, 374
Nehushtan 509
Neighbour 232, 254–260, 334, 335, 337, 386, 439, 455, 554, 556, 560, 667, 690, 691, 720, 726, 730, 738
Neo-Platonism 66, 595
Neo-scholasticism 65 Nephew 254
Neutral 373, 482, 739
New 613, 620, 628, 634, 642, 643, 661, 666, 678, 681, 686, 687, 689, 699, 708, 713, 717, 721
New age 86, 124, 219, 251, 317, 421, 513, 601
New birth 178, 359
New commandment 526
New covenant 185, 304, 374, 386, 408–411, 448, 593, 601, 666, 690, 700
New creation (→ Creation, New)
New creature 702
New earth 56, 65, 185, 380, 518, 525
New existence 272, 470, 643
New heart 151, 354
New heaven 56, 65, 185, 380, 518, 525
New Jerusalem 185, 380, 390, 448, 587
New law 586, 602, 689
New life 359, 437, 439, 443, 469, 474, 486, 489, 675, 701, 702
New man 185, 311, 316, 359, 386, 402
New moon 245, 626
New nature 315, 654
New order 73, 643
New people 76, 380
New spirit 151, 354
New world 327, 630, 723
New year 626, 628
Newborn 283, 284, 360
News 167, 298, 322, 529, 612, 741
Next 665, 666
Niche 264
Nickname 271, 273
Nicolaitans 407
Night 272, 323, 366, 420–425, 450, 512, 513, 559, 630, 634, 652, 731
Nihilism 381, 550, 551
Nisan 628, 629, 632
Noah 691
Noahic commandments 691
Nobility 117, 717
Noble 187, 438, 665, 683, 715, 716
Nobleman 165
Nomad 519
Nominate 475
Nomism 309
Non-Christian 506, 507, 593, 601, 630
Non-citizen 690
Non-cultic 292
Nonentity 551, 552
Non-Israelite 360, 690

Non-Jew 360, 385, 581, 623, 689
Non-objective 71
Norm 546, 602, 604
Normal 527, 664, 679
Normative 333
Normative ethics (→ Ethics, Normative) Nose 108
Note 694
Nothing 639, 678
Nothingness 446, 523, 546, 547, 550, 551
Notice 484, 506, 693, 695
Notorious 701
Novice 611
Null 550
Nullify 73, 462
Number 119, 126, 136, 165, 508, 625, 711, 728, 731–734, 739 Number of the Beast 126 Numbers 66
Numerous 729
Numinous 498
Numismatic emblem 406
Nurse 239, 240, 282
Nursery 285

Oarsman 408
Oath 98, 344, 346, 356, 372, 374, 375, 415, 594, 658, 659, 731
Obedience 58, 67, 77, 79–81, 109, 123, 138, 166, 210, 211, 223, 236, 238, 244, 265, 286, 293, 294, 296, 304, 332, 337, 347, 349, 350, 358, 367, 368, 372, 375, 389, 398, 399, 401, 408, 456, 461, 463, 472, 480, 482, 484, 487, 488, 491–493, 501, 502, 506, 525, 537, 538, 540, 542, 543, 548, 549, 552, 556, 571, 593, 598, 601, 602, 604, 615, 616, 618, 619, 622, 626, 638, 639, 655, 659, 679, 680, 681, 703, 713, 722, 730
Obey 106, 219, 234, 339, 381, 481, 484, 588, 589, 591–594, 674 Object 492, 525, 538, 567, 658, 687, 705, 709, 711 Objection 596, 659, 701
Objective 71, 436, 697
Obligation 98, 120, 210, 270, 275, 310, 340, 401, 439, 471, 481, 499, 509, 536, 556, 595, 618–621, 639, 647, 687, 690, 691, 698, 716, 734
Obligatory 601
Obliterate 471
Obscenity 501
Obscurity 420, 421, 577, 581
Observance 592, 626
Observe 189, 333, 627, 632, 693
Observer 585
Obsolete 371
Obstacle 370
Obstinacy 506
Obtain 713
Obvious 711
Occasion 52
Occult 420
Occupation 275, 625, 629, 633 Occupy 728
Ocean 422, 522
Offence 345, 399, 414, 448, 473, 547, 555, 608, 684, 699, 733 Offend 514
Offended 217
Offender 415, 466, 471
Offensive 386
Offer 96, 115, 172, 224, 351, 352, 405, 414, 455, 478, 482, 546, 628, 655, 702, 731
Offering 175, 234, 250, 294, 413, 479, 648, 654, 677, 731, 732
Offering of Sheaves 628
Office 95, 122, 128, 129, 131, 132, 134, 135, 163, 178, 188, 190–193, 195, 197–200, 275, 300, 302, 315, 329, 371, 375, 405, 407, 461, 471, 472, 474, 478, 514, 533, 536, 540, 560, 574, 666, 667, 698
Officer 190, 407, 462
Official 189, 196, 255, 259, 274, 302, 330, 363, 373, 393, 402, 536, 537, 560, 573, 574, 579, 580, 687
Officious 266
Offscouring 479
Offspring 239, 240, 280, 287, 427, 721, 722, 729
Oil 118–121, 471, 498, 627, 648
Ointment 119–121, 319
Old 164, 167, 192, 193, 197, 198, 277, 339, 363, 386, 433, 448, 470, 512, 601, 613, 631, 634, 666, 701
Old aeon 421
Old age 86, 93, 124, 219, 227, 562
Old-fashioned 192
Old Latin 71
Old man 311, 386, 401, 616, 657, 702, 718
Old nature 106, 168, 315, 402, 457, 469
Olive 644, 648
Omen 172
Ominous 420, 421
Omnipotent 180, 548, 549
Omnipresence 102, 548, 549
Omniscience 102, 106, 548, 549, 565, 694
Once-for-all 355
One 94, 95, 664, 665, 667, 679, 738
Oneness 240
Onlooker 530
One-sided 365
Only 664, 665
Only-begotten 256, 575
Ontic 64
Ontological 64
Ontology 64–65, 491
Open 253, 486, 581, 667, 681, 687, 690, 692, 717, 719
Openness 328, 329, 611, 660, 702, 715, 720
Operate 540, 541, 720
Operation 647, 694
Ophites 510
Opinion 130, 330, 350, 357, 481, 485, 594, 602
Opponent 125, 138, 199, 261, 281, 331, 335, 365, 413, 445, 468, 496, 515, 529, 553, 554, 598, 604, 623, 638, 644, 647, 671, 678, 710, 727, 731, 742

Open space 741
Opportunity 268, 274, 335, 336, 364, 385, 432, 438, 473, 533, 536
Oppose 687, 693, 709, 740
Opposite 424
Opposition 102, 241, 244, 302, 328, 339, 364, 396, 399, 404, 424, 455, 501, 514, 525, 532, 535, 562, 563, 565, 593, 597, 598, 600, 609, 631, 638, 641, 647, 651, 675, 676, 681, 699
Oppression 408, 411, 612, 640, 644, 651, 679
Oppressive 482
Optimum 679
Optional 722
Oracle 58, 62, 245, 246, 426, 444, 519, 527, 574, 575, 577, 594, 611, 730, 734
Oral instruction 485
Oral tradition (→ Tradition, Oral)
Oral transmission 70
Oratory 248
Ordain 259, 330, 445, 473, 612, 626, 695, 696
Ordeal 646
Order 107, 109, 116, 197, 243, 269, 271, 272, 330–343, 369, 408, 476, 521, 522, 524, 572, 595, 600, 625, 641, 654, 662, 664–667, 692, 696, 715, 718, 731
Ordinal number 665
Ordinance 70, 109, 301, 308, 330–337, 370, 371, 381, 386, 402, 496, 716, 734
Ordinary 62, 680
Ordination 196, 197, 478
Organ 230, 239, 350, 423, 451
Organism 232, 234, 237, 238, 300, 302, 522
Organization 300, 302–304, 521
Organized 642
Orgiastic 514
Oriental 521, 522
Orientation 583
Origin 53, 56, 64, 95, 164–169, 176, 179, 181, 426, 434, 440, 469, 498, 520, 521, 561, 562, 563, 576, 578, 616, 619, 624, 631, 654, 656, 669
Original 664, 721, 737
Original sin 433, 721
Original state 654
Originate 377
Originator 164–169, 378, 736, 739
Ornament 241, 495, 521, 522
Orphan 191, 324, 477, 616, 691
Orphism 616
Orthodox 549, 631, 669
Orthodoxy 590
Ossuary 264, 393
Ostentatious 613
Other 666
Otherness 679
Outcast 616, 685
Outcome 590, 741
Outcry 410
Outflank 728
Outgoing 547
Outlaw 616, 686
Outlook 534, 540, 598, 602, 605, 643, 680, 681, 686, 709
Outpost 710, 711
Outpouring 549
Outside 300, 303, 534, 685
Outsider 488, 581, 626
Outstanding 729
Outward 469, 552, 703–705, 708, 709 Outwit 137
Outworking 723
Oven 249
Overcome 85, 205, 328, 391, 424, 431, 432, 437, 441, 443, 597, 623, 624, 645, 650, 651, 674, 700, 723
Overflow 728, 729, 731
Overseer 188–190, 477
Oversight 191
Overtake 623
Overthrow 599, 610
Overtone 483, 604
Owe 498
Own 684
Ownership 299, 642
Ox 115

P source 57, 61, 66
Pack 711
Paederast 625
Paedophilia 497, 498
Pagan 109, 111, 112, 139, 159, 208, 237, 282, 320, 327, 328, 341, 360, 361, 405, 407, 449, 453, 499, 501, 503, 504, 551, 552, 598, 628, 631, 632, 639, 643, 717
Paganism 452, 481, 547, 598, 611
Pain 187, 239, 240, 260, 262, 288, 352, 353, 392, 459, 461, 466, 471, 510, 564, 734 Painful 725
Paint 121
Palm 648
Palm Sunday 623, 724, 725
Panic 527, 621
Pantheism 95, 636, 654, 692
Pantheistic 734, 735
Papyrus 243, 247
Parable 57, 58, 154, 575, 577, 578, 580, 582, 583, 652, 689, 724, 737
Paraclete 88–92, 324
Paradise 103, 113, 114, 389, 390, 509
Paradox 375, 427, 643
Paraenesis 65, 215, 502, 570, 604, 693
Parallelism 117
Paralysis 516
Paralytic 701
Paraphrase 69
Parchment 243
Pardon 219, 697–699, 702
Parentage 619
Parents 212, 219, 280, 285–289, 335, 423, 490, 497, 619, 622, 687, 739 Parish 690
Parody 126
Parousia 50, 53, 59, 65, 73, 247, 298, 303, 313, 315, 316, 342, 410, 425, 449, 469, 470, 496, 514, 571, 657, 668, 693
Parsley 406

Part 300, 534, 537, 689, 706, 740
Partake 414
Partiality 585, 587
Participant 639, 733 Participate 95, 329, 414, 483, 595, 635–644, 651, 685, 687, 715, 740
Participation 709, 736
Parting 241
Partition 676
Partner 366, 367, 507, 587, 635, 639, 642, 644, 660 Partnership 291, 367, 678
Party 533, 535, 645
Pass 320–322, 698, 718
Pass away 421, 458, 518, 525, 566, 673, 709
Pass by 699
Pass over 697, 701
Passing 304, 470
Passion 58, 63, 105–108, 162, 186, 198, 199, 231, 233, 234, 396, 401, 435, 445, 456, 458, 459, 469, 495, 501, 528, 572, 630, 633, 654, 655, 674, 715, 725
Passionate 107
Passionless 432
Passover 157, 205, 223, 240, 241, 265, 294, 295, 308, 360, 364, 384, 437, 624–635, 691, 699, 713
Past 164, 493, 496, 597, 681, 702
Pastor 103, 303
Pastoral 191, 475
Pastoral Epistles 55, 65
Pasture 632, 743
Patch 613
Paternal 572
Path 481, 605
Patience 80, 99, 215, 217, 257, 339, 364, 496, 497, 593, 639, 644, 646, 679, 712
Patriarch 65, 66, 72, 76–78, 81, 165, 200, 327, 381, 541, 604, 615–617, 637, 675, 689–691, 713, 732
Patriarchal 56, 195, 539
Patristic period 61
Pattern 71, 301, 304, 333, 366, 371, 380, 492, 512, 689, 690, 716
Pauper 479
Pause 594, 624
Pawnbroker 373
Pay 226, 248, 250, 377, 684, 734
Pay attention 591
Payment 484, 684, 687, 716
Peace 114, 118, 123, 141, 208, 210, 211, 222, 224, 237, 239, 269, 275, 301, 321, 322, 341, 348, 366, 367, 402, 459, 469, 489, 543, 555, 585, 638, 648, 653, 730, 732, 733
Peaceable 646
Peacemaker 290
Pearl 117, 647
Peasant 642 Peculiar 305
Peddler 138
Penal 393, 394, 396, 398, 429
Penalty 61, 309, 364, 391, 394, 430, 433, 468, 500, 505, 572 Penance 51
Penetrate 517
Penitence 109, 110, 145, 146, 148, 333, 349, 353–362, 466, 520, 572
Penitential Psalms 346
Pentateuch 54, 56, 57, 61, 62, 65, 66–68, 70, 72, 243
Pentateuchal criticism 66
Pentecost 129, 157, 158, 528, 532, 632, 634, 738
People 431, 433, 520, 541, 690, 715, 731, 732
People of God 76, 125, 129, 146, 159, 180, 191, 223, 243, 255, 256, 297, 299, 302–304, 311, 369–373, 385, 410, 411, 433, 462, 465, 489, 499, 508, 509, 532, 535, 540, 541, 543, 604, 619, 637, 650, 651, 661, 663, 684, 685, 687–689, 713, 716, 717, 720, 732, 733 Perceive 106, 674, 692, 693, 735
Perdition 462–464, 467
Perfect 163, 225, 231, 281, 304, 399, 467, 474, 521, 604, 623, 627, 668, 669, 708, 720, 727, 740
Perfecter 168, 604
Perfection 282, 371, 372, 475, 521, 647, 649, 694, 729
Perform 484, 600, 610
Performance 624
Perfume 683
Pericope 65, 576
Perfume 649, 650
Peril 241, 419–420, 421, 510, 513
Period 473, 612, 628, 629, 735
Perish 203, 397, 462–471, 500, 547, 603, 672, 725
Perishable 390, 406, 468–470, 671
Permanence 207, 516, 609, 611, 661, 680, 711, 718
Permeate 734
Permission 657
Permit 467, 478, 500, 698
Permissible 351
Perpetual 705
Persecution 126, 166, 174, 183, 215, 233, 261, 263, 269, 278, 301, 303, 322, 347, 382, 394, 395, 396, 399, 403, 406, 455, 460, 462, 491, 493, 508, 540, 541, 553, 559, 567, 471, 604, 607, 613, 639, 644, 651, 653
Persecutor 694
Perseverance 80, 494, 570, 712
Persian 653, 656
Person 71, 233–236, 240, 241, 272, 274, 276, 324, 329, 338, 347, 358, 375, 426, 491, 501, 526, 527, 563, 565, 585–587, 595, 662, 665, 672, 688, 705, 707, 709, 716, 732, 733 Person of Christ (→ Christ, Person of) Personalize 695
Personification 125, 410, 431, 463, 501, 508, 561, 563, 566, 655
Persuade 587–606, 733 Persuasion 588, 589
Persuasive 588
Pervade 616, 723
Perversion 460, 461, 677

Perversity 725
Pervert 219, 397, 412, 413
Pesher 65–66, 67
Pesikta 628
Pessimism 262, 434, 459
Pestilence 109, 118, 716
Pet 117
Petition 410, 566, 567
Phallus 625
Pharaoh 508
Personal 244, 269, 336, 357, 360, 368, 483, 491, 499, 546, 553, 562, 563, 566, 579, 586, 587, 590, 592, 597, 603, 618, 636, 644, 650, 692, 693, 698, 702, 739
Personality 229, 233, 432, 453, 457, 485, 492, 643, 707
Pharisees 72, 196, 199, 205, 220, 288, 289, 340, 363, 364, 427, 434, 487, 488, 509, 516, 534, 535, 539, 565, 567, 612, 627, 630, 680, 729, 730 Phenomenon 680
Philadelphia 254, 257
Philology 57, 61, 68
Philosopher 443, 484, 616, 640
Philosophical 230, 432, 481, 595, 598, 616, 660, 661, 694, 711, 712, 715 Philosophical ethics (→ Ethics, Philosophical) Philosophical school 68, 484, 488
Philosophy 57, 59, 64, 70, 127, 164, 268, 330, 460, 483, 485, 501, 604, 636, 654, 664, 665, 687 Philosophy, Moral (→ Moral Philosophy)
Philosophy of religion 59
Phylactery 254
Physical 71, 138, 230, 234–236, 240, 241, 308, 309, 365, 436, 440–443, 447, 461, 462, 466, 467, 494, 495, 518, 539, 560–563, 565, 595, 600, 616, 617, 650, 667, 671, 674, 675, 677–681, 710, 726, 727, 735
Physiological 742
Physique 183
Pick out 536
Piece 729
Pierce 444
Piety 58, 102, 399, 451, 481, 539, 594, 595, 597, 599, 604, 622, 694, 708
Pig 117, 119, 125, 226
Pigeon 172
Pilgrim 100, 173, 205, 305, 628, 632, 691
Pilgrimage 626, 661
Pillar 131, 302, 420, 523, 626, 656, 712
Pilot 194
Pine 509, 648, 723
Pioneer 168, 604, 669
Pious 112, 218, 358, 416, 492, 527, 528, 552, 562, 612, 614, 708
Pit 470
Pitch-fork 685
Pity 565, 569, 715
Placate 479
Place 275, 331, 413, 474, 475, 477, 660, 661, 666, 680, 684, 685, 686, 690, 696, 742
Place of honour 664
Place of meeting 69
Place under 710
Plague 114, 124, 162, 163, 241, 380, 463, 465, 509, 568, 612, 651, 721, 743
Plain 577
Plan 194, 244, 322, 329, 330, 332, 346, 356, 380, 383, 430, 471–473, 476, 540, 541, 552, 562, 662, 671, 692, 693, 695–697, 730, 735–738
Planet-gods 631
Plant 178, 187, 313, 380, 389, 406, 515, 516, 560, 586, 625, 652, 721, 722, 725, 726, 743, 744 Plaster 471
Platonic 66, 595, 602, 671
Plausible 592
Play 267, 590, 708, 710
Play on words 592, 593
Plea 410
Pleasant 458
Please 349, 534, 544, 680, 687
Pleasure 431, 456–461, 498, 530, 534, 537, 623, 630, 713
Pledge 369, 372, 375, 440, 594, 638, 663, 710, 719 Plot 363
Plough 115
Ploughman 493
Pluck 721
Pluck out 561, 727
Plunder 508, 546
Plunge 611
Plurality 94
Pneumatic 133, 500, 502
Pneumatological 66
Pneumatology 66
Pod 117
Poet 579
Poetry 59, 582, 640
Point out 574, 731
Pointed 726
Pointless 547
Poison 108, 202, 459, 510, 563
Pole 389
Polemic 248, 302, 383, 672, 676
Police 337, 396
Polish 471
Political 124, 267, 291, 475–478, 492, 501, 517–519, 532, 534–536, 539, 545, 596, 606, 607, 610, 624, 627, 640, 715–718, 720, 732
Politics 645
Poll-tax 269
Pollution 265, 447, 449
Pommel 647
Ponder 106
Pool 581, 637
Poor 216, 217, 219, 249, 334, 335, 358, 489, 542, 547, 555, 564, 565, 642, 733 Populace 731, 733 Popularity 681
Popularize 671
Populate 518
Population 519, 728, 731, 732
Porch 68
Porcupine 725

Portent 622
Portion 640, 673
Position 129, 188, 299, 471, 533, 538, 540, 610, 651, 667, 739
Positive 98, 496, 553, 583, 654, 678–680, 686
Possess 548, 557, 635, 636, 659, 660, 729, 739
Possessed 428, 450, 453, 516, 528, 529, 673, 734 Possession 539, 615, 636, 637, 639, 661, 664, 688 Possessions 137, 138, 139, 143, 272, 277, 292, 381, 456, 457, 482, 495, 508, 514, 641, 642, 644, 684, 717, 729, 743
Possible 714, 730, 742
Possibility 493, 600, 678, 681, 705, 738
Post 314, 476
Post-apostolic 602
Posterity 209, 431, 721, 729
Postmillennialist 53, 508
Posture 609, 635
Pot 252
Potency 497, 625
Potentate 406
Potter 93, 380, 387, 520
Potter's field 93, 520, 689
Pour out 369, 520, 548, 648, 651, 653, 683, 702
Poverty 142, 172, 277, 313, 314, 489, 547, 564, 731
Power 100, 106, 111, 119, 122, 123, 130, 141, 142, 149, 151, 152, 163–167, 171, 175, 180, 186, 190, 205, 207–209, 214, 219, 221, 223–225, 236, 241, 244, 250, 269, 271, 276, 299, 311, 315, 323, 329, 335, 336, 344, 347, 369, 371, 378, 380, 381, 383, 386, 387, 398–401, 413–417, 421–424, 427, 429, 430, 432, 434, 436–440, 443, 445, 451–454, 457–460, 466, 469, 473, 476, 485, 494, 496–498, 500, 504, 507, 508, 511, 514, 515, 525–528, 530, 543–547, 551, 555, 562–567, 579, 594, 595, 597, 599, 600, 602, 603, 609, 610, 612, 623, 647, 650–652, 655, 657, 669, 676, 688, 692, 694, 701, 702, 706–709, 712, 718, 722, 723, 727, 730, 731, 739
Power of attorney 331
Powerful 451, 610, 669
Powerless 209, 217, 277, 315, 336, 418, 420, 549, 552, 616
Powers 95, 102, 103, 113, 114, 118, 120, 124, 127, 167, 169, 208, 209, 222–224, 236, 238, 301–303, 315, 327, 343, 374, 389, 402, 413, 414, 424, 438, 443, 449, 452, 454, 457, 459, 461, 462, 467, 476, 509, 519, 525, 527, 564, 610, 631, 644, 647, 649–651, 657, 676, 701, 718, 719 Practical 601
Practice 70, 526, 613, 686–688
Practise 481, 494, 495, 733
Praise 99, 100, 101, 103, 116, 200, 206, 208, 210, 212, 213, 227, 257, 263, 281, 320, 344, 345, 346, 370, 371, 379, 380–382, 387, 409, 413, 444, 469, 508, 514, 521, 523, 597, 598, 651, 689, 695, 703, 731, 732
Praiseworthy 456, 457
Prattle 550, 552
Prayer 76, 98, 99, 107, 109, 110, 120, 121, 128, 143, 151, 163, 207, 210, 211, 223, 225, 227, 246, 247, 251, 252, 272, 274, 276, 278, 285, 320, 321, 323, 332, 339, 345, 380–382, 409, 411, 420, 426, 433, 452, 459, 484, 487, 504, 509, 515, 528, 544, 562, 563, 566, 567, 569, 586, 592, 609, 610, 612–620, 625, 627, 628, 633, 637, 642, 646, 647, 650, 704, 723, 727, 730, 732, 734, 740
Preacher 131, 132, 199, 298, 662
Preaching 54, 55, 62, 95, 111, 121, 123, 129, 131, 158, 160, 168, 213, 214, 216, 235, 238, 239, 246, 263, 266, 289, 322, 324, 358, 359, 396, 397, 400, 445, 446, 475, 486, 489, 496, 508, 519, 540, 543, 545, 547, 551, 558, 572, 589, 599, 601, 613, 619, 644, 660, 665, 675, 677, 684, 686, 689, 701, 702, 727, 735, 738
Precedence 78, 134, 533, 556, 729
Precept 332, 340, 525
Precious 260, 478, 480, 537, 596, 634, 665
Precious stones 205, 380
Precipitation 683
Preclude 668, 730, 736
Precondition 309, 482, 619, 702
Predestination 244, 378, 382, 471, 473, 478, 692–697, 707
Predetermination 692
Predict 692
Prediction 198, 290, 381, 541, 545, 572, 737
Pre-eminence 135, 193, 666, 667
Pre-existence 66, 166, 178, 232, 522, 547, 549, 619, 668, 706
Pre-existent 707
Preface 247
Prefect 270
Preference 534, 536, 539, 587, 667
Prefigure 619
Pregnancy 176, 186, 288, 466, 506, 512
Pre-history 56
Preincarnate 677
Pre-judgment 584
Premature 183
Premillennialist 52, 508
Preoccupation 400
Preordain 695
Preparation 411, 612, 625, 630, 633
Prepare 423, 475, 541, 543, 561, 611, 633, 641, 662, 722
Prerequisite 600
Prerogative 697
Presage 737
Presbyter 136, 188–201, 477
Presbyterate 197
Presbyterian 199
Prescience 383
Prescribe 54, 573
Presence 65, 90, 91, 102, 103, 104, 175, 223, 232, 239, 250, 272, 276, 280, 299–301, 335, 346, 384, 409, 466, 474, 475, 490, 525, 586, 607, 612, 629, 681, 723, 734
Present 204, 234, 235, 305, 319, 320, 323, 327, 400, 406, 425, 437, 466, 469, 471–478, 491, 508, 524, 525, 572, 590, 603, 607, 638, 639, 646, 647, 648, 651, 655, 657, 671–673, 696, 701, 702, 706–708, 713, 717, 719, 728, 736, 737

Present age 326, 327, 566, 677
Presentation 474, 696
Preserve 266, 333, 463, 479, 498, 597, 631, 640, 641, 657, 662, 685, 700, 715, 717 Preside 199
President 190, 196, 666
Press 649
Pressure 568, 607, 678, 679, 729, 733 Presumption 412, 551
Presupposition 583, 598
Pretence 587
Pretender 629
Pretest 334, 719
Prevail 303, 731
Prevent 457, 497, 499, 560, 608, 676, 687, 715
Previously 666, 695
Prey 114, 172, 484, 550, 611, 709
Price 268, 432, 572
Prick 726
Prickle 725
Pride 113, 140, 227, 229, 259, 311, 381, 405, 406, 458, 531, 644
Priest 53, 80, 100, 122, 152, 190, 196, 198, 204, 208, 210–212, 214, 216, 219, 221, 255, 271, 272, 294, 305, 322, 344, 360, 363, 373–375, 405, 414, 416, 474, 485, 499, 511, 537, 538, 543, 574, 575, 579, 586, 596, 617, 625, 628, 633, 687, 690, 699, 731, 733 Priest, Chief 83, 199, 281, 337, 395, 413, 665
Priest, High 122, 123, 151, 168, 198, 205, 221, 321, 322, 324, 327, 340, 341, 351, 357, 363, 371, 375, 386, 405, 448, 472, 487, 544, 619, 637, 665, 685, 689
Priest-King 99, 619
Priesthood 61, 66, 80, 120, 333, 405, 408, 619, 677, 731
Priestly 426, 630, 699
Priestly anointing 123
Priestly decision 70
Priestly garment 312
Priestly oracle 58
Priestly ordinances 66
Priestly people 309
Priestly tradition 53
Priestly writing 53, 65, 66
Primal 654, 697
Primal man 302
Primary 664, 711
Prime numbers 665
Primeval 422, 507, 508, 522, 640, 641
Primitive 99, 298, 303, 457, 473, 528, 545, 599, 613, 619, 634, 642, 645, 686
Prince 102, 164, 168, 293, 294, 464, 648
Prince of demons 452
Prince of evil 452
Prince of this world 458, 525
Principalities 315, 424, 525, 647
Principle 165, 230, 256, 271, 353, 483, 502, 542, 549, 561, 563, 565, 569, 578, 582, 583, 619, 653, 654, 675, 705, 715, 719
Priority 334, 664, 666, 697
Prison 171, 229, 328, 340, 487, 522, 717
Prisoner 191, 505, 649
Prisoner of war 716
Private 535, 577–579, 582, 641–643, 647, 680
Privilege 385, 480, 538, 539, 621, 666, 716, 739
Prize 406, 470, 644–652
Probability 60, 326
Problem 500, 505, 532, 564, 577, 578, 583, 584, 592, 603, 716
Procedure 364, 535, 580
Proceed 320, 322
Proceedings 364, 698
Process 432, 437, 484, 486, 541, 597, 600, 602, 625, 652, 654, 656, 666, 668, 669, 711, 722, 736, 740–742 Procession 492, 625, 626, 629, 647
Proclaim 89, 222, 245, 277, 338–340, 371, 402, 409, 423, 431, 436–438, 485, 489, 532, 544, 590, 594, 640, 662, 689, 708, 717, 729
Proclamation 62, 63, 95, 111, 127, 135, 146, 147, 167, 179, 237, 248, 272, 297, 298, 310, 340, 346, 355, 384, 397, 399, 409, 410, 445, 454, 495, 523, 568, 572, 599, 647, 650, 662, 677, 688, 701, 702, 716, 719
Proconsul 270
Procreation 79, 177, 497
Procurator 166, 270
Procure 374, 680
Produce 176, 186, 378, 380, 383, 714, 722, 723, 725
Product 165
Production 642
Profane 344, 379, 447, 448, 467, 639, 641
Profession 201
Professional 512, 575
Profit 546, 678
Profound 707
Profuse 728
Profusion 729
Progress 164, 165, 584, 742
Progression 548
Progressive 432
Prohibition 226, 231, 340, 384, 426, 499, 500, 625, 670, 688
Proletariat 500
Prologue 576, 628
Prominent 680
Promiscuity 497
Promise 53, 72–74, 76, 77, 80, 81, 98, 99, 112, 123, 128, 141, 146, 148, 159, 173, 185, 208–211, 214, 215, 217–219, 224, 237, 238, 262, 271, 276, 286, 296, 305, 308, 311, 317, 324, 327, 328, 339, 344, 346, 347, 350, 358, 359, 367–372, 374, 375, 385, 407, 410, 412, 422, 426, 427, 439, 445, 446, 458, 460, 461, 466, 483, 484, 489, 490, 504, 505, 518, 531, 532, 537, 541, 545, 551, 556, 557, 571, 581, 587–589, 595, 596, 598, 600, 603, 604, 609, 615, 617, 633, 637, 638, 640, 644, 651, 658–660, 663, 678, 681, 685, 688–691, 697, 701, 713, 714, 717, 719, 731, 732, 733, 737, 744
Promise-breaking 74
Promised land 321, 682, 684, 691, 723
Promissory 319
Promote 499

Prompt 719
Pronounce 208, 216, 217, 414, 447, 466, 581, 603, 699, 702
Proof 65, 398, 417, 547, 588, 594, 714, 736, 737
Propaganda 688, 708
Propagate 451
Property 360, 373, 398, 505, 639–641, 643, 688, 710, 716
Prophecy 73, 117, 124, 135, 170, 185, 199, 290, 320, 329, 339, 411, 429, 512, 519, 527, 529, 545, 554, 578, 579, 623, 657, 735, 737, 739
Prophet 66, 67, 76, 116, 121, 125, 128, 129, 131, 132, 135, 146, 163, 167, 174, 191, 192, 198, 200, 208, 210, 222, 248, 265, 273, 328, 335, 358, 373, 374, 375, 394, 395, 403, 423, 474, 482, 485, 492, 512, 527, 530, 543, 548, 569, 570, 574, 578, 579, 582, 590, 595–597, 612, 617, 626, 641, 643, 662, 686, 717, 720, 729, 730, 735, 736, 738, 740
Prophetic 202, 208, 246, 326, 328, 332, 334, 335, 358, 371, 409, 410, 414, 429, 445, 527–529, 574, 597, 619, 638, 659, 693, 699
Propitiation 89, 349, 398, 438, 694, 697, 700
Propitiatory 437, 700
Propitious 516
Proposal 61, 325
Propose 692, 696
Proposition 664
Propriety 501, 628, 684
Prorogative 557
Prosecute 415
Prosecutor 349, 475, 558
Proselyte 77, 78, 145, 149, 150, 154–159, 180, 255, 258, 353–362, 555, 560, 688, 689
Proselytizing 228, 516
Prospect 623, 643
Prospective 601
Prosperity 210, 216, 354, 682, 724
Prostitute 117, 231, 232, 494–503, 507
Prostitution 497, 499, 500, 560, 625
Protect 212, 221, 277, 332, 340, 451, 468, 510, 542, 617, 632, 662, 688, 716, 740 Protection 96, 101, 122, 151, 211, 218, 269, 272, 280, 281, 316, 360, 367, 411, 541, 562, 595, 596, 607, 625, 653, 686, 687, 688, 690, 691, 717 Protector 654
Protector of Israel 104
Protest 284, 410
Prototype 81, 266
Proud 709, 742
Prove 303, 542, 571, 598, 604, 622, 656, 659, 708, 713, 731
Provender 743
Proverb 58, 139, 580
Proverbial 218
Provide 683, 693, 694, 731
Providence 173, 203, 278, 377, 383, 450, 467, 471, 478, 479, 562, 692–697
Providential 462, 523, 670
Province 392, 466
Provision 143, 252, 276–278, 425, 512, 531, 670, 693–695, 716
Provocation 107
Provoke 107, 202
Proxy 128
Prudence 412, 494–503, 536
Psalms 58
Pseudepigrapha 50, 66, 67
Pseudo-apostle 710
Pseudonymity 247
Pseudonymous 66
Psychological 507, 583, 678, 679
Puberty 308
Public 330, 346, 347, 390, 391, 392, 402, 407, 410, 501, 535, 536, 582, 590, 613, 639, 649, 689, 696, 715, 738
Publish 71, 572
Puffed up 107
Punish 189, 332, 381, 509, 568, 688, 735
Punishment 85, 107, 109, 113, 125, 141, 162, 163, 190, 191, 195, 219, 241, 264, 288, 308, 329, 333, 345, 354, 380, 391, 392, 394, 396, 398, 403, 414–416, 418, 432–434, 436, 438, 444, 448, 450, 451, 465, 466, 529, 537, 555, 562, 564, 568, 569, 572, 586, 607, 623, 655–657, 686–688, 698–700, 721, 734
Punitive 414
Puny 673
Pupil 69, 280, 282, 285, 287, 480–486, 487, 492, 617
Purchase 93, 606
Purchaser 120
Pure 143, 205, 220, 223–225, 284, 351, 368, 447, 469, 495, 502, 512, 521, 542, 544, 545, 552, 604, 640
Purgatory 656
Purge 151, 537
Purification 119, 143, 145, 149–151, 153, 154, 221, 223, 225, 371, 432, 612, 654, 655, 677
Purify 116, 154, 204, 221, 224, 543, 654, 657
Purim 626
Puritanical 687
Purity 152, 204, 284, 294, 360, 413, 448, 499, 653
Purple 205, 317
Purpose 69, 74, 80, 81, 87, 99, 127, 219, 243, 275, 278, 355, 357, 383, 392, 426, 459, 474, 475, 483, 506, 510, 536–538, 540, 541, 543, 550, 562, 569, 577, 597, 612, 625, 632, 638, 654, 655, 668, 669, 696, 697, 737
Purposeful 533, 692, 694
Purse 142
Pursue 481, 648, 649, 681
Put away 202, 479, 505, 506, 606, 662, 731
Put forward 696
Put in charge 471
Put in motion 697
Put in order 521, 524
Put off 311, 314, 315, 469, 676
Put on 158, 311, 314, 315, 316, 386, 470, 674
Pyrhus 205
Pythagoreans 640, 642

Q source 62, 63, 67
Quail 173, 195, 252, 460, 672

Qualification 198, 297, 500, 538, 539, 597
Qualify 648, 715
Quality 272, 284, 314, 315,459, 485, 491, 525, 538, 557, 596, 603, 617, 658, 711, 722, 739
Quantity 728
Quarrel 106, 108, 377, 503, 504, 535, 644–646, 654
Quarterly 627
Quartodecimans 634
Quasi-egalitarian 641
Quasi-personal 437
Question 413, 540, 577, 583, 584, 725
Quiet 210, 420, 469, 529, 630, 681
Qumran 50, 54, 65, 67
Quotation 736, 737

Rabbi 67, 69, 213, 259, 481, 482, 488, 527, 581, 688, 689, 691
Rabbinic 599
Rabbinic theology 67, 321, 619
Rabbinism 64, 67, 69
Rabble-rouser 267
Race 176, 541, 548, 637, 647, 649, 662, 684, 685
Radical 598, 730
Rage 105, 106, 108, 528, 543, 608
Rahab 523
Raiment 204, 319, 708
Rain 187, 209, 416, 498, 513, 517, 543, 597, 614, 653, 743
Raise 103, 125, 234, 236, 261, 265, 346, 384, 399–401, 430, 437, 439, 443, 445, 470, 592, 643, 653, 668, 673, 718
Ram 677
Rank 123, 165, 192, 193, 197, 200, 272, 273, 532, 664–669, 687
Ransom 96, 97, 223, 308, 322, 438, 479
Rapacity 495
Rape 505
Raphael 102
Rapid 610
Rapt 529
Rapture 545, 673
Rash 364
Ratify 664
Rational 353, 481, 521, 582, 676, 680, 692
Rationalism 694
Rave 528
Raven 173, 408, 409
Reach 730
Reaction 528, 530, 561, 585, 603, 688
Read 245, 247, 536, 628
Reader 685
Readiness 514, 634, 646, 699, 702
Ready 358, 475, 482, 483, 489, 516, 546, 612, 690, 700, 712
Reaffirm 664
Real 80, 711, 712
Reality 436, 461, 551, 563, 601, 620, 629, 640, 662, 673, 679, 703, 704, 707–709, 711, 714, 719
Realization 597, 697, 699, 703, 711, 713, 740 Realized eschatology (→ Eschatology, Realized) Realm 707, 718, 738
Reanimation 184
Reap 469, 681, 719
Reaper 204, 453
Rear 287, 492
Re-arrange 576
Reason 63, 68, 107, 232, 281, 355, 356, 413, 432, 450, 460, 481, 507, 521, 527, 529, 547, 562, 595, 636, 650, 654, 671, 674, 693, 708
Reasonable 501, 502
Reassurance 104, 590
Rebel 202, 294, 438, 537, 606
Rebellion 51, 142, 203, 270, 436, 468, 535, 606, 607, 680, 741 Rebellious 372, 385
Rebirth 176, 178, 181, 184, 185, 187, 284, 290, 521
Rebuild 734
Rebuke 340, 425, 567–573
Recall 683
Receive 123, 185, 285, 300, 487, 597, 601, 605, 607, 620, 639, 668, 673, 675, 677, 689, 690, 702, 722, 730, 731, 742
Received text 70
Reception 534, 599, 600, 737
Recipient 739
Reckless 715
Recklessness 710
Reckon 311, 472, 596, 600, 627, 630, 675
Recline 471, 633
Recognition 245, 347, 486–488, 516, 522, 529, 541, 543, 568, 588, 594, 595, 603, 607, 616, 620, 631, 643, 731, 742
Recognize 708, 722, 728
Recoil 606
Recollection 483
Recommend 65, 246, 248, 690
Recompense 217, 240, 648
Reconciliation 89, 97, 107, 113, 167, 197, 222–224, 237, 275, 279, 298, 301, 302, 385, 398, 401, 402, 415, 430, 437, 477, 521, 525, 544, 666, 694, 697, 699–703, 740
Reconnoitre 481
Reconsecration 626
Reconstitute 698
Record 242, 544, 582
Recording angel 104
Recount 574
Recover 446
Recovery 611
Recreation 147, 175
Red 84, 203–206, 224, 653, 656, 657
Redaction 57, 67, 68
Redaction Criticism 57, 67
Redaktionsgeschichte 67
Redeem 267, 282, 317, 413, 438, 468, 518, 525, 617, 634, 668, 678, 694, 697, 738
Redeemer 54, 133, 148, 152, 187, 214, 227, 230, 253, 320, 434, 438, 455, 526, 547, 669, 672 Redemption 53, 57, 58, 64, 123, 125, 142, 145–148, 150, 158, 191, 210, 214, 219, 223, 224, 230, 233, 238, 268, 301, 313, 314, 320,

Redemption continued
371, 372, 380, 381, 385, 397, 398, 409, 417, 436, 438, 440, 464, 470, 518, 525, 538, 539, 541, 545, 552, 596, 611, 617, 618, 629, 631, 633, 634, 638, 669, 697, 701, 703, 716, 722, 730
Redemptive 496, 651
Redirect 480, 485, 568
Re-establish 627, 664
Reference 680
Refine 146
Reflect 105, 106, 712
Reflection 105, 106, 353, 540, 583, 584, 612, 699, 707, 719
Reflective 502
Reform 427, 632, 687
Reformation 603
Refrain 587, 727, 734
Refreshment 420, 441, 513, 729
Refuge 174, 327, 531, 532, 559, 589, 653, 687
Refuse 272, 308, 324, 400, 414, 419, 424, 454, 455, 479–480, 545, 600, 629, 684, 688, 689, 696
Refute 199, 504, 545, 688
Regard 675, 710
Regeneration 147, 153, 154, 158, 160, 176–188, 290, 616
Region 472, 742
Register 243, 544
Regret 356, 357, 467, 741 Regulate 365
Regulation 327, 330, 367, 370, 401, 439, 457, 521, 525, 677, 687, 689
Reign 234, 440, 467, 640, 643, 653
Reign of Christ 52, 649
Reign of God 121, 185, 489
Reign of sin 457
Reject 73–74, 239, 336, 356, 359, 370, 372, 375, 386, 399, 424, 425, 453–455, 462, 464, 486, 499, 504, 532, 538–542, 544, 554–557, 569, 590, 610, 625, 631, 638, 643, 644, 646, 666, 678, 681, 693, 715, 730, 733 Rejoice 741 Rejoicing 99, 227, 625
Relate 573, 576
Relationship 84, 85, 192, 236, 240, 254–259, 269–271, 280, 282, 285–287, 289, 300–302, 316, 332, 343, 344, 349, 357, 358, 365–369, 371, 373, 374, 384, 385, 409, 420, 433, 434, 442, 455, 459, 469, 472, 480–482, 484–486, 488, 491, 496, 498, 499, 501, 522, 523, 525, 528, 535, 547, 549, 551, 553, 583, 585, 587, 588, 595–597, 601, 604, 606, 607, 615–618, 620, 622, 624, 636–640, 643, 662, 667, 672, 673, 675, 678, 680, 681, 686, 690, 693, 698, 701, 704, 707, 709, 711, 714, 715, 730
Relativism 60, 550
Relax 513, 527, 698
Relearn 708
Release 173, 429, 431, 438, 505, 508, 576–578, 613, 697, 698, 701
Relevant 681
Reliable 99, 595, 658, 659, 660
Reliance 372, 461, 546, 680, 713
Relief 473
Religion 450, 453, 552, 686
Religions 69, 643, 688
Relinquish 505
Reluctant 459
Rely 588, 589, 596, 597, 730 Remain 676, 686, 713, 738
Remarriage 500, 506, 507
Remember 582, 679
Remembrance 247, 333, 370, 612
Remind 487, 542, 567, 568, 578, 633
Remission 154, 156, 698, 702
Remit 697, 700
Remnant 296, 302, 305, 368, 370, 452, 541, 545
Remonstrate 626
Remorse 357
Remould 491
Removal 314, 315, 699
Remove 466, 526, 587, 602, 606, 667, 700, 719, 722, 723, 738
Rend 672
Render 477
Renew 106, 185, 221, 223, 509, 518, 626, 703, 716
Renewal 143, 147, 148, 153, 176, 184, 185, 290, 332, 367, 371, 416, 452, 708, 724
Renounce 414, 454, 455, 561, 641
Renown 296
Renunciation 186, 309, 358, 398, 400, 403, 455, 488, 489, 495, 599, 604, 647, 675
Repair 663
Repeat 58, 64
Repentance 77, 110, 144, 146, 147, 150, 152, 154, 156, 157, 159, 163, 167, 189, 308, 316, 319, 322, 339, 340, 345, 346, 353–362, 356–359, 422, 423, 464, 465, 467, 476, 509, 545, 559, 564, 599, 600, 607, 700, 702, 703, 716, 722, 725, 742
Repercussion 680
Repetition 64, 632
Replace 741
Report 57, 574, 588
Reprehensible 565
Represent 680
Representation 360, 489, 491, 654, 670, 712, 724
Representative 85, 102, 121, 127, 128, 134, 177, 193, 195, 196, 198, 199, 285, 294, 296, 372–374, 385, 398, 423, 472, 478, 538, 628, 633, 666, 741 Repress 572
Reproach 215, 341, 453, 637, 704
Reprobation 378
Reproduction 492
Reprove 349
Reptile 175
Repudiation 529, 604
Repugnant 694
Repulsive 480
Reputation 546, 558, 565, 590
Repute 546
Request 278, 425, 511, 569, 570, 609

Require 730
Requirement 714, 729, 738
Requisition 536
Requital 598
Requite 324
Rescue 464, 544, 547, 713
Research 504
Resent 547, 553
Reservation 482
Reserved 721
Resident 687, 689, 690
Resident alien 690, 691
Residue 711
Resignation 262, 551
Resin 723
Resist 354, 446, 458, 515, 550, 559, 710
Resistance 392, 539, 568, 686, 710
Resolution 293, 475, 534, 692
Resolve 363, 533, 540, 696, 697, 737
Resources 319
Respect 192, 206, 288, 301, 462, 491, 492, 498, 512, 542, 572, 586, 614, 617, 618, 621, 686 Respectable 520, 524
Respectful 585, 615, 616
Response 319, 324, 335, 460, 476, 482, 508, 525, 538, 540, 578, 595, 603, 699, 726 Responsible 562, 610, 617
Responsibility 54, 104, 131, 191, 261, 276, 285, 288, 302, 317, 353, 373, 395, 415, 452, 525, 529, 536, 552, 614, 619, 660, 679
Rest 95, 115, 239, 263, 280, 321, 327, 335, 372, 521, 595, 600, 626, 675, 688, 727
Restitution 545
Restlessness 239
Restoration 109, 113, 184–186, 225, 385, 467, 486, 508, 521, 531, 544, 545, 701, 702
Restraint 422, 494, 501, 574, 679
Restriction 331, 365, 495, 651, 681, 688, 742
Result 165, 436, 437, 542, 546, 562, 580, 590, 592, 607, 609, 611, 697, 721, 723
Resurrection 53, 54, 56, 57, 65, 73, 78, 86, 87, 131, 132, 134, 136, 142, 144, 147, 148, 150, 158, 167, 179, 180, 181, 183–185, 224, 233, 236, 239, 242, 265, 266, 290, 298, 303, 310, 313, 323–325, 351, 365, 375, 393, 399, 400, 419, 427, 433–435, 437, 440, 442–446, 469, 470, 473, 478, 511, 544, 551, 560, 564, 601, 602, 630, 631, 634, 638, 643, 649, 651, 668, 669, 672, 695, 702, 707, 719, 740
Resurrection body 87, 114, 236, 241, 313, 316
Resuscitation 470
Retain 467, 703
Rethink 699
Reticence 375, 528
Retribution 392, 410, 659, 683
Return 184, 262, 354, 355, 359, 410, 523, 543, 544, 607, 611, 612, 667, 671, 673, 678, 685, 686, 720, 737, 741
Return of Christ 229, 244, 315, 386, 607, 634, 649, 651
Reveal 103, 106, 112, 305, 313, 324, 327, 338, 400, 472, 474, 484, 487, 541, 543, 575, 598, 620, 629, 638, 649, 680, 719, 726, 730, 735, 736, 738
Revealer 85, 250, 253, 303, 337, 423, 678
Revel 458, 460, 628
Revelation 50, 62, 70, 78, 90, 101, 103, 111, 112, 127, 146, 147, 180, 222, 244, 250, 272, 282, 294, 336, 373, 374, 385, 387, 412, 427, 428, 483, 486, 487, 504, 511, 528, 530, 535, 550, 551, 566, 575, 576, 587, 594, 595, 598, 605, 610, 619, 627, 666, 727, 737, 740
Revenge 555
Revered 653
Reverence 71, 239, 450, 609, 621–623, 687
Review 189
Revile 415
Revival 185
Revive 437
Revoke 207, 367
Revolt 459, 535, 606, 688
Revolution 275, 543, 640
Revolutionary 643
Reward 98, 111, 367, 406, 432, 450, 489, 537, 598, 648, 651, 688, 716, 734
Rewarding 647
Rhetoric 574
Rhythm of life 624
Rhythmic 628
Rib 672
Rich 109, 116, 319, 341, 466, 515, 547, 571, 587, 596, 688, 722, 730, 732, 733, 735
Riches 142, 457, 684, 726, 730
Riddle 657
Rider 118, 203, 205, 317, 430, 657
Ridicule 455
Right 56, 193, 200, 219, 295, 299, 329, 336, 352, 360, 368, 375, 392, 400, 413, 460, 475, 484, 485, 500, 555, 571, 572, 639, 640, 641, 648, 668, 669, 679, 684, 686, 687, 690, 691, 700, 715, 717, 720
Right hand 167, 384, 643, 663
Righteous 110, 115, 174, 216, 222, 274, 278, 288, 356, 358, 371, 381–383, 390, 395, 398, 408, 410, 411, 422, 434, 444, 472, 554, 556, 564, 586, 597, 598, 605, 627, 650, 706, 707, 713, 721, 738
Righteousness 78, 79, 86, 89, 96, 107, 108, 110, 112, 115, 118, 147, 181, 185, 217, 231, 234, 273, 278, 311, 314, 317, 321, 332, 339, 346, 358, 370, 371, 382, 386, 390, 397, 398, 438, 446, 475, 495, 501, 515, 519, 559, 581, 591, 598, 601, 607, 639, 649, 673, 675, 680, 681, 700–702, 710, 714, 720, 723, 729, 730, 738, 739
Rigidity 516
Ring 683
Ringleader 535
Rinse 144, 152, 153, 224
Riot 419
Ripe 204, 516, 682
Ripen 722
Rise 495, 497, 591, 625, 692
Risen 86, 87, 130, 167, 174, 178, 183, 204, 213, 266, 300, 303, 328, 399, 437, 476, 517, 551, 592, 601, 643, 668, 677, 708

Rising 145, 147, 225, 359
Risk 364, 365, 419–420, 592, 658, 710
Rite 115, 116, 123, 158, 159, 237, 288, 289, 309, 426, 432, 497, 498, 611, 612, 625, 626, 630, 654, 699, 700, 702, 705, 716
Ritual 53, 70, 121, 122, 177, 308, 316, 448, 525, 611, 625, 626, 701
Ritual anointing 122
Ritual bath 144, 145, 152, 153
Ritual cleansing 149, 447, 654
Ritual institutions 66
Ritual law 61
Ritual purification 225
Ritual washing 152–154
Rival 269, 486, 558
Rivalry 650
River 165, 654, 682, 683
River of life 390
Road 254, 520
Roam 519
Roast 249
Rob 439, 705
Robe 122, 315, 317
Robber 419
Robust 727
Rock 80, 240, 382, 610, 636, 662, 673, 683
Rod 51, 111, 161, 162, 164, 405–408
Role 134, 302, 373, 549, 641, 687, 708, 717, 727, 737
Roll 53
Romanticism 694
Rome 501
Roof 632
Room 718, 741, 742
Root 118, 138, 202, 427, 459, 516, 563, 652, 660, 680, 730
Rot 463, 683
Rotten 722
Rower 408, 521
Royal anointing 123
Royal cult 426
Royal priesthood 305
Royal rite 640
Royalty 405, 406, 469
Rub 479
Rubbish 479, 480
Rudder 118
Ruin 106, 451, 462–471, 561, 562, 608, 610, 611, 693
Rule 51, 59, 95, 99, 121, 135, 142, 163, 164–169, 192, 235, 243, 300, 301, 330, 333, 358, 387, 395, 396, 408, 423, 426, 435, 449, 457, 459, 509, 518, 524, 525, 533, 543, 580, 582, 607, 614, 619, 648, 651, 707, 715, 729
Rule out 639
Ruler 95, 109, 111, 123, 164–169, 170, 194, 198, 246, 269, 270, 273, 274, 325, 365, 378, 407, 422, 450, 482, 508, 512, 593, 610, 622, 647, 648, 649, 651, 665, 686, 718
Run 262, 648, 682
Runner 493
Rupture 640
Rust 463
Sabbath 83, 115, 245, 310, 335, 360, 384, 625–628, 630, 631, 634, 654, 688, 691, 699
Sabbath-breaker 294
Sabbath year 691
Sackcloth 203, 672
Sacral 211, 267, 374
Sacrament 58, 149, 285, 358, 466, 629
Sacramental 123, 145, 282, 288, 344, 445, 446
Sacramentalism 54
Sacred 61, 172, 414, 498, 560, 573, 574, 588, 625
Sacrifice 57, 61, 74, 75, 107, 113–116, 122, 125, 145, 151, 152, 166, 172, 211, 219–226, 230, 234, 235, 239, 250, 252, 261, 292–294, 308, 320, 325, 350–352, 360, 371, 372, 375, 398, 399, 402, 405, 414, 426, 437, 451, 475, 479, 488, 497, 538, 546, 625–627, 629, 639, 642, 643, 649, 655, 666, 669, 673, 685, 699, 700, 702, 703, 713, 732 Sacrifice of Isaac (→ Isaac, Sacrifice of) Sacrificial 398, 468, 474, 475, 552, 630, 634, 648, 653, 655, 691
Sacrilege 125, 212
Sacrosanct 122
Sad 565
Saddle 317
Sadducees 196, 364, 434, 487, 534, 535, 627
Safe 660, 663
Safeguard 663
Safety 483, 501
Sage 574
Sail 698
Sailor 559
Saint 78, 204, 222, 266, 275, 300, 302, 305, 321, 514, 642, 689, 691, 731
Sale 505
Salt 657, 670
Salvation 54, 68, 73, 77, 78, 80, 87, 100, 112, 113, 123, 141, 148–150, 157, 158, 168, 184, 186, 190, 191, 208–210, 214, 217, 218, 239, 246, 248, 251, 252, 257, 284, 289, 297, 299, 300, 310, 314, 316, 317, 322, 330, 331, 346, 347, 356, 357, 359, 367, 368, 370, 373–375, 379, 382–384, 397, 399–401, 410, 414, 415, 420–422, 424, 436, 437, 440, 441, 455, 461, 464, 465, 467, 469, 472, 473, 477, 484, 489, 492, 499, 510, 519, 523, 525, 534, 541, 544, 554, 557, 560, 564, 572, 585, 594–597, 600, 601, 603, 604, 607, 609–613, 620, 623, 626, 629, 632, 636–638, 641, 647, 660, 669, 696, 719, 723, 732, 735–738, 740
Salvation history 59, 186, 286, 289, 296, 303, 367, 375, 438, 604
Samaria 67
Samaritan 52, 67, 599, 685
Samaritan Pentateuch 67
Sammael 125
Sample 577
Sanctification 122, 152, 222, 223, 231, 371, 372, 475, 564, 722, 730, 739
Sanctifier 669
Sanctify 211, 221, 275, 305, 462, 542, 552, 669
Sanctuary 55, 115, 122, 151, 174, 224, 250, 272, 280, 294, 308, 320, 351, 372, 408, 497, 498, 500, 511, 523, 586, 587, 627, 648, 668

Sandal 674
Sanhedrin 83, 168, 195–198, 341, 362–364, 394, 395
Sap 252, 743
Sarah 76, 80, 411
Sarai 80
Sariel 102
Sarkic 500
Satan 83–85, 89, 103, 104, 124, 125, 163, 168, 169, 205, 254, 297, 355, 424, 436, 449–453, 454, 458, 466, 467, 496, 508–510, 524, 554, 563, 566, 567, 572, 610, 637, 645, 657, 710, 718, 727, 739
Satanic powers 111, 519
Satanic trinity 114
Sate 743
Satisfaction 741, 743
Satisfactory 610
Satisfy 217, 459, 460, 673, 731, 733–735, 743, 744
Satyr 451
Sauce 633
Savage 261, 520
Save 100, 185, 186, 223, 228, 322, 323, 345, 359, 371, 380, 390, 395, 414, 464, 466, 483, 509, 510, 525, 531, 547, 571, 593–595, 599, 601, 604, 713, 730, 731, 740
Saving act 77, 181, 185, 224, 239, 319, 346, 347, 422, 484, 524, 598, 600, 605, 640, 713, 717
Saving event 62, 345, 401, 601, 603
Saving plan 697
Saving power 336, 532
Saving presence 324
Saving proclamation 397
Saving truth 86
Saving work 68, 221, 224, 326, 331, 600, 669, 730
Saviour 77, 127, 168, 320, 323, 396, 509, 519, 567, 636
Saying 62, 68, 70, 575, 582
Sayings of Jesus 57, 58, 68, 600, 619
Scaffold 393
Scandal 439
Scandalous 397, 546
Scapegoat 479
Scar 235
Scarlet 205
Scatter 55, 109, 629, 686
Scattered 685
Scavenger 117
Sceptic 70
Scepticism 59, 211, 512, 550, 551, 595
Sceptre 162, 163, 405–408, 648, 649
Schism 238
Scholar 69, 486
School 486–488, 533, 535, 627, 631, 671
School of Hillel 67, 69, 506
School of Shammai 67, 69, 500, 506
Schoolmaster 568
School of philosophy 533, 534
Scientific criticism (→ Criticism, Scientific) Scoff 296
Scold 626
Scorching 515, 652, 653
Scorn 418, 607, 642
Scorpion 464, 507–511
Scourge 161–164, 364, 393, 395, 657
Scream 94
Scribes 64, 196, 199, 200, 205, 248, 281, 311, 363, 364, 395, 413, 427, 451, 487, 488, 509, 544, 545, 567, 574, 617, 631, 729
Scripture 167, 245, 246, 248, 437, 485, 544, 577–579, 584, 641, 662, 680, 695, 735–738
Scroll 53, 58, 118, 202, 243, 244
Scruples 449
Scrupulosity 265
Scrutinize 189, 241
Scum 479
Sea 144, 240, 382, 383, 387, 419, 508, 515, 517, 617, 698, 734, 735
Sea-creature 670
Sea-monster 670, 671
Sea-snake 507
Seal 79, 118, 123, 225, 244, 308, 309, 311, 393, 403, 658, 660
Sear 350, 352
Search 737
Search out 64, 503
Season 624, 724, 737
Seat 521, 661, 666, 710
Seat of honour 664, 666
Seclusion 421, 641
Second 54, 55, 666
Second coming 52, 56, 235, 315, 319, 320, 323, 324, 425, 508, 514
Second death 441, 501
Second man (→ Man, Second)
Secondary 664
Secrecy 421
Secret 50, 129, 167, 175, 244, 370, 375, 452, 466, 529, 539, 540, 574, 578, 613, 625, 628, 722, 729, 737
Secretary 248, 582
Secretly 120, 424
Sect 510, 533–535, 554
Sectarianism 294, 644
Section 65
Secular 209, 211, 497, 574, 583, 588, 614, 618, 643, 675, 717
Secularization 367, 500
Secure 464, 651, 658, 660–663, 680, 681
Security (→ False security) 95, 97, 208, 277, 392, 426, 440, 466, 483, 596, 599, 623, 663, 713
Sedar 64
Sedentary 661
Sediment 711
Seduce 468, 555
Seductive 526
See 230, 261, 421, 444, 603, 604, 613, 667, 672, 677, 692, 694, 708, 712, 713, 727, 735, 740, 743
Seed 159, 173, 174, 177, 186, 226, 236, 377, 378, 469, 470, 517, 560, 653, 686, 722 Seedling 281
Seed-time 624
Seek 266, 322, 397, 430, 464, 473, 603, 630, 666, 681, 687, 735

Seem 55
Seer 208, 582
Segregation 688
Seize 343, 533
Selection 191, 536, 537, 540, 629
Self 235, 236, 240, 335, 336, 386, 401, 455, 460, 466, 467, 475, 680, 716
Self-abasing 609
Self-adjustment 602
Self-assertion 531, 676
Self-assurance 386
Self-awareness 604
Self-castration 560, 561
Self-centred 398, 459, 675, 681
Self-confidence 228, 499, 592, 736
Self-consciousness 349, 427, 529
Self-contained 355
Self-contradictory 473
Self-control 494–496, 501, 502, 515, 623, 645, 647
Self-correction 491
Self-critical 602
Self-deception 400, 587
Self-denial 470, 475, 483
Self-destruction 460
Self-determined 722
Self-direction 601
Self-discipline 163, 459
Self-emptying 548
Self-esteem 112, 540
Self-examination 415
Self-explanatory 577
Self-expression 460
Self-giving 338, 492
Self-glorification 228
Self-gratification 496
Self-humiliation 399
Self-immolation 235
Self-indulgence 448, 495
Self-interest 420
Self-justification 675, 676
Self-knowledge 590
Self-love 228
Self-perpetuating 364
Self-praise 227, 228
Self-realization 497
Self-reliance 681
Self-renunciation 403
Self-respect 679
Self-restraint 494
Self-revelation 222, 384
Self-righteousness 439, 680
Self-sacrifice 474, 539, 731
Self-security 730
Self-seeking 398, 400, 638
Self-sufficiency 319, 661, 680
Self-surrender 397, 548
Self-understanding 59, 488
Self-will 365, 532, 608
Selfish 106, 381, 384, 547, 681
Sell 118, 267–268, 288, 352, 497, 688, 691
Seller 120
Semantics 68
Semblance 709
Semite 68
Semitic 68
Send 126–129, 131, 133, 134, 136, 246, 332, 453, 510, 526, 581, 603, 637, 689, 698, 704, 705, 738
Seniority 193
Sense 546, 681, 700
Senseless 424, 546
Senses 56, 432, 443, 444, 458, 459, 523, 527, 530, 652
Sensible 501 Sensitive 352
Sensuality 494, 498, 680
Sensuous 676
Sentence 86, 364, 393, 395, 415, 479, 597, 630, 677
Sentry 314
Separate 413, 419, 422, 441, 444, 455, 459, 472, 473, 503, 504, 506, 507, 525, 533, 539, 545, 556, 564, 566, 606, 607, 608, 625, 653, 677, 678, 707, 718, 719, 741
Separation 60, 115, 145, 155, 239, 240, 289, 360, 405, 433, 488, 500, 503, 504, 522, 537, 565, 607, 674
Septuagint 50, 53–55, 57, 62, 65, 68, 71
Sepulchre 264, 265
Sequence 473
Seraph 101, 239, 279, 280, 509
Serfdom 707
Seriousness 627
Sermon 58, 245
Sermon on the Mount 217, 277, 278, 335, 339, 384, 738
Sermon on the Plain 217, 277
Serpent 86, 87, 168, 175, 413, 465, 468, 507–511, 523, 562, 565, 568, 653, 705
Servant 177, 219, 226, 272, 280–291, 311, 404, 426, 474, 477, 479, 481, 485, 492, 513, 538, 539, 547, 549, 565, 569, 598, 617, 646, 655, 667, 702, 703, 706, 709, 710, 720, 729, 741 Servant of God 96, 97, 102, 111, 281, 290, 385, 587, 597, 699
Servant of the Lord 262, 283, 409, 544, 707
Servant of Yahweh 373, 374
Serve 101, 102, 116, 129, 136, 173, 191, 192, 198, 200, 212, 231, 305, 307, 335, 351, 381, 469, 474, 481, 486, 551, 552, 676, 718–720, 741 Service 96, 99, 115, 116, 127, 129, 135, 143, 190, 191, 235, 238, 239, 245–248, 259, 273, 275, 283, 285, 293, 304, 319, 336, 382, 384, 386, 421, 474–476, 482, 489, 490, 493, 505, 513, 536–538, 542, 600, 619, 625, 630, 631, 646, 659, 674, 720, 731, 740
Servile 485
Servitude 209, 531, 674, 707, 719
Set 314, 413, 471, 477, 494, 518, 523, 604, 609, 696
Set apart 336, 472–474, 537
Set aside 74, 337, 719
Set at naught 74
Set free 437, 505, 698, 715, 716

Set up 474, 476
Settle 576, 578
Settled 518, 519, 543
Settlement 685
Seven 129, 361
Seven Rules of Hillel 580
Seventh day 211
Seventy 282, 489
Sever 74, 515
Severance 713
Severity 568, 611, 727, 731
Sex 85, 86, 233, 235, 285, 459, 497
Sexes 87
Sexual 137, 169, 420, 441, 448, 449, 457, 461, 494–502, 509, 612, 625, 656
Sexual relations 138, 151, 232, 322, 448, 451, 498–502, 637, 678
Shade 431, 433, 653, 705
Shadow 327, 371, 435, 559
Shake 540
Shallow 546
Sham 709
Shame 85, 113, 314, 349, 390, 399–401, 461, 559, 608, 649, 723
Shammaite 627
Shape 383, 705, 708
Share 123, 158, 316, 359, 360, 375, 468, 478, 489, 492, 493, 526, 534, 558, 571, 615, 618, 635–644, 669, 671, 676, 691, 696, 702, 707, 712, 723
Sharp 726
Shatter 610
Shed 97, 152, 220–223, 369, 654
Sheep 114–116, 118, 119, 190, 299, 319, 453, 463, 464, 503, 559, 684
Sheep's clothing 118, 119
Sheep-shearing 626
Shell 704, 706, 709
Shell-fish 205
Shelter 653
Shem 68
Sheol 433
Shepherd 65, 163, 190–192, 303, 305, 407, 453, 464, 483, 559, 625, 684
Shepherd of Israel 598
Shield 103, 648, 656, 689
Shift 504, 680
Shine 211, 424, 585–587
Ship 118, 476, 537, 645, 694, 698, 734, 743
Shipwreck 608
Shock 530
Shoe 241
Shoot 426
Shortness of life 433, 609, 743, 744
Shoulder 241, 391, 403
Shout 94, 271, 342, 408–411
Show 574, 649, 650, 720, 722, 724
Showbread 586, 696, 697
Shun 558, 564
Shut 545, 694
Sibyls 529
Sick 120, 411, 446, 450, 564, 565, 599, 600, 674
Sickle 204
Sickness 108, 151, 348, 433, 463, 635, 673, 674
Sidereal hour 710
Sieve 480
Sigh 385, 552
Sight 219, 424, 703, 704
Sign 119, 124, 125, 129, 219, 220, 275, 309, 311, 347, 358, 386, 391, 397, 399, 403, 415, 454, 474, 492, 503, 508, 525, 527, 603, 622, 626, 641, 648, 652, 655–657, 659, 686, 692, 702, 723, 733
Signal 341, 342, 408, 410
Significance 219, 302, 399, 605, 624, 628, 631, 651, 675, 694, 723
Significant 68, 290, 727, 737
Silence 340, 543, 609, 619
Siloam 581
Silver 93, 498, 537, 648
Simile 577
Simple-minded 563
Simplicity 280–282, 504
Sin 57, 77, 78, 85–87, 89, 96, 97, 108, 111–113, 115, 125, 126, 138, 144, 146–148, 150–152, 154, 156, 163, 166, 181, 187, 202, 204, 216, 221–225, 228, 229, 231, 234–236, 268, 277, 294, 301, 303, 320, 324, 325, 328, 336, 343, 345, 346, 349, 355, 357, 359, 370–372, 374, 390, 391, 398, 399, 401, 402, 417, 418, 420, 423, 424, 430, 433, 434, 436–441, 446, 451, 459, 461, 465, 466, 469–471, 474, 475, 496, 499, 501, 504, 524, 525, 532, 551, 554, 556, 562–565, 567, 569, 606–609, 611, 639, 641, 643, 644, 651, 653, 673–677, 685, 698–703, 717–719, 721, 723, 725, 730, 733–735, 738, 740, 742
Sin-bearing 266
Sin-offering 114, 172, 225, 294
Sinai 81, 159, 411
Sinaiticus 53
Sincerity 351, 469, 552, 604, 631, 695, 710
Sinew 671, 672
Sinful 168, 401, 402, 416, 417, 466, 468, 488, 518, 562, 585, 677, 696, 701, 718, 723
Sing 344, 411, 574, 633, 651
Singer 53, 200, 665
Single 705
Sinister 203, 550, 686, 699
Sinlessness 284, 434, 544
Sinless perfection 186
Sinner 109, 141, 147, 171, 239, 274, 322, 333, 343, 349, 358, 359, 379, 381, 399, 417, 436, 439, 451, 465, 472, 501, 680, 681, 699, 701, 702, 706, 733, 734
Sister 254–256, 556
Sit 363, 474, 482, 658, 661
Situation 271, 603, 625, 686, 702, 703
Sitz im Leben 57, 58, 68
Size 93, 522, 671
Skeleton 431, 444
Skill 279, 412, 512
Skilled 735
Skin 114, 162, 671, 672
Skull 581

Sky 517, 545, 587
Slacken 698
Slain 118, 164, 264, 438, 444, 532
Slander 110, 413, 561, 654
Slaughter 205, 482, 629, 737
Slave 120, 234, 256, 261, 268, 275, 280, 283, 284, 299, 308, 360, 366, 371, 392, 457–459, 462, 498, 499, 513, 587, 609, 610, 637, 638, 650, 667, 675, 680, 684, 698, 703, 715–718, 720
Slave-market 268
Slave-wife 453
Slavery 222, 412, 438, 498, 629, 633, 647, 716
Slay 509
Sleep 93, 261, 382, 420, 425, 429–447, 672
Sleeper 421
Sly 412, 509
Small 118, 597, 600, 670, 732
Smear 121
Smelting 711
Smite 163, 164
Smith 279
Smitten 683
Smoke 449, 657
Smuggle 453
Snake 507–510
Snare 343, 433, 531, 532, 609
Snow 204, 682, 708
Sober 425, 501, 513–515, 528, 529
Social 289, 312, 496, 566, 640, 716
Society 138, 209, 255, 269, 280, 287, 479, 506, 521, 536, 640, 642, 686, 715, 717
Sodom and Gomorrah 677
Sodomite 255
Soil 381, 517, 520, 691, 722, 723
Sojourn 360, 531, 685
Sojourner 683, 684, 686, 690, 691, 713, 714
Solar year 627
Soldier 259, 359, 396, 406, 650, 652
Solemnity 622
Solicitude 695
Solid 660, 682
Solidarity 146, 641
Solstice 631
Solution 65, 531
Solve 532, 576, 577, 578
Son 123, 177, 209, 255, 256, 273, 280–291, 337, 338, 374, 375, 408, 410, 430, 440, 473, 487, 500, 509, 511, 525, 526, 532, 549, 556, 595, 603, 614, 615, 619–621, 637, 643, 655, 667–669, 676, 684, 693, 703, 707, 719, 729, 737, 738
Son of Abraham 182, 286, 288, 289
Son of Belial 288
Son of consolation 571
Son of corruption 288
Son of the covenant 288
Son of darkness 102, 287, 288, 554, 556, 646
Son of David 63, 122, 182, 288, 290, 427, 428, 675
Son of the day 425
Son of destruction 289
Son of the devil 289
Son of disobedience 110, 289, 593
Son of encouragement 289
Son of the evil one 289
Son of God 63, 85, 96, 101, 177, 240, 256, 272, 274, 276, 281, 283, 287–290, 323, 325, 373, 385, 397, 448, 473, 522, 523, 531, 538, 597, 616, 619, 638, 669, 684, 740
Son of God's good pleasure 288
Son of grace 288
Son of heaven 102, 225, 288
Son of hell 289
Son of iniquity 288
Son of the Kingdom 77, 289
Son of light 102–104, 287–290, 423, 452, 554, 556, 593, 646
Son of his love 424
Son of man 62, 63, 84, 96, 113, 185, 204, 290, 321, 322, 326, 327, 410, 489, 510, 725 Son of mischief 288
Son of the Most High 274
Son of perdition 125, 463, 464
Son of the prophets 288
Son of the resurrection 288, 290
Son of righteousness 288
Son of thunder 289
Son of truth 288
Son of unrighteousness 288
Son of the world 288
Song 58, 103, 213, 344, 381, 440, 469, 580, 625
Song of faith 598
Sonship 188, 286, 385, 417, 619, 623, 637, 639, 675, 696
Soothe 328
Soothsayer 208, 575
Sophism 477
Sorcery 420, 452, 499
Sore 117
Sorrow 162, 217, 240, 241, 316, 317, 356, 357, 456, 467, 569, 741 Soteriological 68, 386, 396, 402, 523, 617, 668
Soteriology 53, 68, 220, 401, 620
Soul 66, 79, 103, 106, 191, 221, 229, 230, 232, 233, 235, 236, 250, 312, 422, 431–436, 442–444, 446, 450, 459, 460, 463, 464, 480, 483, 495, 501, 512, 522, 544, 555, 562, 611, 612, 621, 623, 636, 653, 665, 671–674, 677, 682, 687, 705, 711, 713, 724, 731
Sound 501
Sound mind 501, 502
Soundness 604
Source 55, 56, 62, 63, 66, 67, 68, 70, 433, 435, 441, 561, 563, 566, 598, 710, 723, 736
Source criticism 68
Sovereign 614, 615, 734
Sovereignty 80, 95, 243, 358, 413, 477, 538, 543, 562, 594, 715
Sow 299, 313, 377, 468–470, 612, 627, 681, 686
Sower 173, 516, 517
Space 102, 236, 521, 728
Spare 390, 414, 632, 633, 725, 727, 729, 734
Spark 422, 616
Sparrow 173
Spatial 692

Speak 206, 271, 332, 340, 429, 579, 598, 729, 739, 740
Speak evil 415
Speak in tongues 300, 528, 529, 581, 582
Spear-point 656
Special 540, 620, 666–668
Species 670, 722
Specify 581
Spectacle 649
Spectators 646
Speculation 71, 641, 707, 740
Speculative 601–603, 607, 694
Speech 66, 69, 70, 206, 212, 421, 428, 528, 571, 574, 575, 578, 579, 582, 587–589, 715
Spell 450, 477
Spend 551
Sperm 498
Spherical 521
Spices 121, 264–266, 743
Spider 490, 510
Spin 490
Spirit 55, 58, 66, 91, 105, 108, 138, 144, 146–148, 152, 153, 160, 171, 179, 200, 217, 225, 230, 232, 234–237, 246, 248, 279, 286, 289, 290, 300, 303–305, 311, 318, 322, 324, 327, 329, 335, 336, 340, 349, 368, 369, 379, 410, 414, 424, 428, 430, 440, 443, 446, 449, 452, 458, 466, 467, 470, 473, 490, 496, 498, 500, 501, 504, 514, 515, 557, 558, 562–565, 570, 578, 579, 595, 601, 602, 605, 609, 615, 623, 625, 631, 637, 642, 649, 654, 657, 662, 665–667, 672, 673, 675–679, 682, 683, 700, 705, 711, 717, 719, 722, 723, 729, 734, 735, 737–739 Spirit, Holy 52, 66, 90, 91, 95, 106, 116, 122, 128, 129, 146, 148, 155, 158, 160, 168, 169, 175, 176, 185, 186, 202, 232, 235, 248, 355, 372, 375, 414, 491, 511, 526–528, 530, 535, 584, 592, 598, 623, 638, 639, 643, 656, 660, 679, 680, 681, 704, 719, 723, 730, 735, 738, 739 Spirit of Christ 147, 214
Spirit of divination 340
Spirit of light 452
Spirit of truth 89, 90, 123
Spirits 102, 118, 123, 166, 167, 347, 382, 401, 411, 450–453, 463, 504, 556, 563, 621, 674
Spiritual 71, 75, 183, 290, 311, 336, 338, 398, 399, 406, 416, 435, 444, 449, 455, 482, 484, 492, 528, 531, 539, 563, 566, 569, 595, 616, 617, 619, 628, 638, 639, 642, 647, 650, 662, 665, 674, 678–681, 725–727, 742
Spiritual anointing 123
Spiritual armour 316, 647, 656
Spiritual body 236
Spiritual death 406, 431, 436, 440
Spiritual evil 429
Spiritual gifts 129, 535
Spiritual house 305
Spiritual life 70, 138, 249
Spiritual man 85, 127, 133
Spiritual milk 284
Spiritual poverty 313, 358
Spiritual power 424
Spirituality 352
Spiritualization 625, 650
Splendour 474, 552, 650, 730
Splinter 116, 453, 667, 726
Split 535
Spoil 467, 565
Spoken word 416, 679, 736
Spokesman 194, 373, 579, 580
Spontaneous 500
Sport 470, 625, 644, 645, 648
Spot 634
Spotted 556
Spread 457, 647–649, 653, 733, 741, 742
Spring 195, 201, 319, 441, 513, 632, 743
Sprinkle 114, 144, 151, 220–226, 304, 351, 369, 633
Spurious 187, 590
Spurn 448
Spy 294
Squander 464
Stability 661, 675, 711
Stable 661
Stadium 645, 646
Staff 161, 162, 407
Stage 282, 540, 549
Stagger 514, 673
Stain 447, 641
Stake 389, 391–394, 726
Stamp 712
Stand 51, 411, 474, 543, 651, 658, 660, 672, 685, 719
Stand before 474, 622
Stand between 739
Stand by 474
Stand under 710
Standard 51, 175, 220, 273, 396, 443, 460, 542, 546, 604, 675, 729
Standing 351, 430, 472, 536, 544, 610, 659
Star 102, 124, 272, 380, 407, 451, 508, 522, 523, 610, 621, 627, 657, 740
Start 600, 741
Starting point 710
Starvation 328, 611
State 168, 189, 232, 275, 392, 468, 501, 508, 519, 549, 565, 611, 617, 639, 640, 678, 687, 715, 723–725
Statement 573, 574, 588
Statesman 193
Station 275, 476
Stature 92–93, 183, 277, 740
Status 131, 268, 275, 324, 364, 385, 398, 432, 439, 538, 539, 549, 615, 618–620, 664, 694
Statute 330, 332, 335, 350, 677 Statutory 578
Stave 390
Stay 690
Steadfast 217, 494, 602, 607, 660, 662, 663, 674, 710
Steady 658
Steal 208
Steamed 226
Steer 694
Step 600

Step-mother 500
Steward 684
Stewed 226
Stick 161, 162, 657, 726
Still 384, 419
Still birth 183
Sting 436, 507–511, 719, 738
Stinginess 214
Stir up 563
Stoa 68, 643
Stock 427, 710, 721
Stoic 63, 432, 444, 450, 501, 616, 640, 654, 656, 694, 715, 718, 734
Stoicism 59, 68–69, 127, 351, 432, 502, 595
Stomach 169, 202, 500, 611, 742
Stone 74, 77, 140, 205, 240, 248, 294, 308, 332, 377, 390, 393, 394, 409, 463, 477, 596, 610, 660, 662, 682, 724
Storm 384, 419, 572
Story 575
Strain out 116
Strange 509, 671, 683, 684, 686, 688–690, 728
Stranger 180, 203, 221, 255, 258, 265, 305, 346, 360, 528, 683–692, 717
Strangled 220–226, 261
Strangulation 391, 392
Strata 68
Straw 390
Stray 115, 239
Stream 652, 653, 655, 682, 683
Strength 106, 119, 122, 173, 229, 239, 314, 329, 343, 436, 445, 467, 531, 551, 564, 607, 636, 650, 667, 680, 686, 710, 732, 736 Strengthen 99, 463, 492, 570, 604, 639, 658
Stress 420, 597, 638, 720, 739
Stretch 478, 649
Stretch out 127, 460
Strict 500, 568, 688
Strife 380, 535, 555, 558, 638, 681
Strike 161–163, 376, 585, 653
Strike out 529
Strip 313, 314, 393, 564
Strive 80, 456, 460, 461, 469, 637, 645, 646, 673, 723, 731
Stroke 161, 241, 260
Strong 103, 352, 366, 475, 504, 508, 650, 651, 727, 731
Strong ones 101
Structure 390
Struggle 336, 503, 539, 564, 595, 602, 604, 626, 644–647, 649, 651, 687, 716–718
Stubbornness 152, 241, 308, 424, 426, 554
Student 484, 486
Study 219, 459, 485, 486, 580, 641, 656, 662, 735
Stumble 610, 663
Stumbling-block 535
Subdue 336, 647, 671
Subject 235, 360, 366, 385, 436, 437, 444, 446, 457, 458, 470, 492, 538, 542, 543, 548, 552, 583, 595, 603, 610, 660, 685, 687, 692, 707, 716, 720
Subjection 439, 509, 524, 525, 586, 591, 609, 676, 718
Subjective 284
Subjectivity 583, 584
Submerge 144
Submission 81, 239, 281, 330, 347, 401, 415, 439, 475, 600, 647
Submissive 364, 593
Submit 602
Subordinate 283, 452, 481, 485, 501, 508, 523, 599, 605, 712
Subordination 190, 386, 492
Subservience 670
Subservient 492
Substance 327, 605, 679, 703–714
Substantial 710, 711
Substitute 319, 504, 629, 681
Substitution 398, 417, 426, 437, 438
Subterranean 509
Success 412, 557, 611, 612, 688, 741 Succession 200, 301, 426, 664, 665
Succumb 467
Suckling 281
Suddenness 609
Suffer 55, 191, 239, 240, 260, 395, 483, 489, 553, 612
Suffering 68, 108, 123, 129, 163, 165, 173, 211, 214, 219, 223, 227, 261, 273, 276, 301, 305, 326–328, 374, 375, 385, 386, 389, 391, 395, 396, 400, 401, 404, 406, 411, 432, 440, 441, 444, 445, 455, 460, 462, 482, 483, 487, 489, 491, 493, 510, 519, 539, 541, 545, 561, 562, 564, 565, 571, 598, 623, 625, 628, 632, 638, 639, 643–649, 651–653, 656, 657, 669, 675, 677, 679, 689, 700, 707, 720, 726, 727, 731, 741 Sufficient 163, 248, 727, 728
Suffocation 393, 395
Suggestion 61, 510, 544
Suicide 93, 432, 433
Suit 478, 536
Suitably 536, 537
Sully 447
Sulphur 657
Sum 521, 598
Summer 627, 724
Summit 165
Summon 88, 270, 271, 292, 293, 295, 308, 331, 340, 342, 489, 492, 569, 570, 600, 638, 689, 719
Sun 124, 203, 252, 314, 420, 425, 449, 451, 515, 516, 586, 587, 627, 652, 653, 728
Sunburn 652
Sun-cult 631
Sunday 631
Sunrise 665
Sunset 633
Sun-worshippers 631
Superabundant 729
Superfluous 266, 371, 728, 729, 731
Superhuman 450
Superintend 189
Superior 588, 644, 659
Superiority 301, 337, 356, 371, 386, 408, 409, 427, 539, 650, 651
Supernatural 60, 104, 113, 122, 167, 413, 424, 504, 511, 607, 609, 647, 718

Superscription 132, 392, 396
Supersede 601, 631, 666
Superstition 450, 453
Supervise 450
Supplement 70
Suppliant 612, 687
Supplication 239, 320, 600
Supply 318, 731
Support 115, 261, 288, 328, 474, 554, 614, 636, 658
Suppose 61, 330, 475, 670
Suppress 494, 502, 718
Supreme 616, 668
Sure 365, 591, 594, 596, 658–660, 663, 729
Surety 372, 374, 669
Surface 585, 587
Surmount 71
Surpass 137, 650, 730, 740
Surplus 728, 731
Surprise 425, 466, 540
Surrender 70, 223, 309, 335, 355, 417, 435, 455, 486, 499, 525, 561, 709, 715 Surround 405
Survival 540, 592, 596, 687
Suspect 414
Suspend 523
Suspicion 563
Sustain 549, 616
Sustenance 84, 173, 249, 250, 711
Swallow 116, 173, 440, 470, 490, 651
Swamp 688
Swear 203, 344, 346, 554, 659
Sweet 202, 458, 480, 513
Swell 94, 107, 240
Swift 280
Swine 117, 672
Swineherd 559
Sword 109, 118, 272, 322, 377, 380, 407, 464, 513, 559, 655, 716
Symbol 87, 115, 116, 119–122, 126, 146, 148, 149, 152, 156, 158, 159, 171, 175, 185, 201, 203–205, 209, 225, 238, 239, 241, 252, 254, 266, 280, 284, 294, 297, 316, 317, 321, 351, 377, 389, 391, 420, 422, 448, 470, 489, 497, 507, 509, 510, 512, 514, 516, 531, 532, 577, 625, 629, 630, 650, 652, 655, 724–726
Symmetry 206
Sympathy 220, 329
Symptom 445
Synagogue 59, 67, 69, 128, 163, 166, 168, 181, 194, 196, 199, 219, 245, 257, 291–307, 321, 347, 360, 361, 395, 414, 453, 589, 590, 607, 623, 624, 628, 666, 738
Syncretism 58–61, 69, 487, 500, 595, 640
Synecdoche 239, 240
Synod 52
Synoptic criticism 62
Synoptic Gospels 67, 68, 69
System 660, 700
Systematized doctrine 702

Tabernacle 66, 114, 122, 252, 280, 380, 735
Table 252, 586, 641
Tablet 243, 248
Tail 508, 510
Taint 265, 641
Take 343, 533, 587
Take apart 533
Take away 115, 225, 701, 702
Take care 189
Take heart 327
Take issue 504
Take offence 653
Take out 453
Take possession 534, 635
Take sides 585
Take up cross 455, 482
Taken up 677
Talk 550, 574
Talmud 58, 59, 64, 67, 69
Talmud, Babylonian 69
Talmudic Judaism (→ Judaism, Talmudic)
Talmud, Jerusalem 69
Tamarisk 252
Tame 495
Tangible 679
Tannaim 49, 67, 69
Tannaitic 51
Targum 51, 63, 69
Task 273, 331, 412, 476, 522, 533, 536, 544, 568, 569, 583, 602, 610, 617, 624, 626, 650
Taste 201, 202, 439, 458, 459
Tawny 205
Tax 269, 270, 537, 684, 687
Tax-collector 488, 499
Teach 87, 164, 191, 197, 248, 340, 341, 485, 486, 488, 494, 502, 535, 568, 598, 599, 620, 628
Teacher 69, 90, 123, 132, 191, 192, 198–200, 259, 280, 282, 287, 333, 480–482, 484–486, 490, 492, 515, 530, 533, 548, 572, 581, 598, 614, 617, 684, 708
Teacher of righteousness 96, 598
Teaching 55, 62, 69, 166, 171, 192, 220, 261, 263, 292, 305, 331, 335, 339, 347, 386, 400, 483, 486–488, 490, 491, 495, 506, 530, 533, 534, 539, 548, 558, 563, 566–568, 572, 577, 579, 589, 590, 595, 599–604, 607, 623, 640, 642, 662, 669, 689, 702, 708, 709, 720, 722, 730, 731, 742
Team 648
Tear 533
Tear clothes 317
Tears 471, 683
Technical 495, 722
Technique 723
Teleology 69
Tell 57, 573–584
Temper 107, 202
Temperament 107, 540
Temperance 501
Temperate 513, 514, 671
Temperature 318
Tempest 653
Temple 53, 73, 75, 125, 174, 195, 210, 221, 234, 235, 245, 256, 269, 272, 274, 280, 293, 295, 314, 321, 344, 360, 395, 396, 413, 414,

Temple continued
448, 467, 468, 478, 497, 500, 530, 537, 555, 586, 587, 607, 626, 627, 629, 632, 633, 652, 661, 684, 687, 688, 700, 725, 735
Temporal 542, 667, 692, 734, 737
Temporality 500
Temporary 408, 675, 676, 687, 734, 739
Tempt 452, 466, 496, 563
Temptation 244, 290, 304, 335, 384, 385, 433, 457, 519, 540, 567, 597, 607, 625, 644, 660, 727
Temptation of Jesus 125
Tempter 599, 718
Ten 54
Ten commandments (→ Decalogue)
Tenant 640
Tendency 613, 619
Tender 240
Tension 423, 496, 502, 595, 599, 602–604, 624, 628, 738
Tent 294, 684, 691
Tent-maker 279
Tent of meeting 294
Terms 366
Terrain 520
Terrible 611, 621, 622
Terrify 527, 528
Territory 519
Terror 224, 420, 422, 431, 432, 527, 529, 610, 621, 622, 685
Terrorize 610
Test 188, 347, 390, 414, 516, 562, 567, 653, 656, 657, 679, 731
Testament 332, 365
Testator 371
Tested 596
Testify 684
Testimony 122, 151, 200, 248, 266, 346, 350, 402, 406, 445, 597, 598, 603, 639, 680, 731
Tetragam 71, 72
Text 63, 68–71, 254
Textual criticism (→ Criticism, Textual) Textus receptus 70
Thank 206, 213, 278, 344, 345, 381, 384, 413, 492
Thankful 433, 685
Thanksgiving 99, 213, 227, 247, 278, 385, 597, 609, 650, 730, 731
Theatrical 590
Theism 70, 71
Theistic 70
Theme of Scripture 59
Theocracy 426
Theocratic 425
Theological reflection 65
Theological thought 70
Theologoumenon 70
Theology, Comparative 60
Theology, Natural (→ Natural theology)
Theophany 655, 661
Theoretical 595
Thief 323, 420, 421, 425, 572
Think 106, 276, 330, 461, 472, 528, 529, 552, 589, 693, 727, 730
Thinker 484
Third 666
Thirst 217, 546, 653, 671, 672, 683
Thistle 416, 721–728
Thomism 65
Thorn 163, 226, 406, 416, 457, 460, 674, 721–728, 743
Thorn in the flesh 467, 726, 727
Thought 105, 106, 230, 322, 350, 357, 448, 456, 457, 469, 509, 528, 551, 552, 561, 567, 579–581, 587, 679, 680, 693, 695, 711
Thoughtful 502
Thousand 52
Thousand years 508, 649
Threat 416, 422, 426, 430, 433, 451, 459, 460, 499, 501, 508, 509, 512, 519, 524, 544, 562, 594, 611, 626, 675, 678, 688, 731
Three days 395
Threshold 613
Throat 241
Throne 102, 116, 122, 185, 198, 200, 386, 426, 427, 482, 508, 656
Throne of God 101, 103, 204, 279, 280, 304, 510, 654
Throne-chariot 280
Throne of grace 322
Throng 731
Throw 70, 376, 508, 520, 608
Throw away 479
Thunder 108
Thwart 552
Tiamat 523
Tidings 239, 576
Tie 171, 289, 482, 493, 538, 619, 626, 636, 690
Till 381
Time 86, 93, 102, 124, 164–167, 203, 236, 268, 294, 321, 322, 325, 326, 390, 397, 420, 421, 423, 476, 477, 521, 523, 524, 526, 601, 624, 626, 627, 629, 632, 638, 697, 711, 718, 719, 724, 728, 732, 734, 735, 737, 738
Timeless 703
Time-limit 477
Times of the Gentiles 737
Timidity 622, 623
Tired 262, 548, 561, 563
Tishri 626
Tithe 80, 116
Title 66, 188, 189, 191, 193, 197, 199, 200, 220, 255, 256, 273, 281, 297, 304, 375, 469, 560, 616, 617, 619, 647, 665–669, 708
Today 179, 251, 738
Toil 115, 173, 209, 260–263, 546, 564, 565, 647, 728
Token 655
Tolerable 431
Toleration 499
Tomb 174, 204, 205, 263–266, 623
Tomorrow 251, 597
Tongue 118, 175, 182, 201, 231, 382, 418, 530, 532, 564, 579, 656, 735
Tongues, Gift of 103, 198, 300, 723, 739
Torah 62, 64–67, 69, 70, 83, 180, 230, 243–245,

Torah continued
316, 374, 405, 416, 433, 459, 481, 484–486, 539, 597, 617, 619, 656, 665, 668
Torch 656
Torment 161, 163, 164, 461, 612, 655, 710
Torso 232
Torture 163, 389–391, 393, 395, 466, 511, 646, 656
Tosefta 70
Totality 95–97, 301, 303, 501, 702, 740
Touch 121, 207, 241
Toughness 658
Tower 272
Town 520, 665, 689
Trace 71
Tractate 64, 70
Trade 267, 268, 279, 319, 419, 484, 558, 688
Tradition 57, 59, 60, 63, 69, 70–71, 99, 102, 116, 129, 131, 134, 135, 153, 171, 194–196, 199, 209, 216, 217, 247, 250, 252, 278, 289, 297, 304, 305, 309, 332, 335, 346, 359, 394–396, 403, 425, 473, 482, 484–487, 489, 490, 499, 500, 502, 506, 531, 539, 543, 544, 580, 581, 585, 595–600, 602–604, 620, 625, 628, 630–632, 641, 657, 707, 730, 739
Tradition history 70, 71
Tradition, Oral 57, 58, 71
Tragedy 687
Tragic 551
Train 312, 313
Training 462, 481
Trample 109, 117
Trance 527, 528
Transaction 664, 721
Transcend 602, 625, 716
Transcendence 71, 101, 495, 679
Transcendent 70, 204, 360, 363, 380, 383, 422, 502, 521, 734
Transcience 406, 433
Transfer 208, 209, 699, 701
Transfiguration 204, 290, 335, 406, 527, 541, 545, 587, 623, 659, 668, 708
Transform 223, 375, 397, 600, 601, 647, 705, 708
Transformation 355, 470, 492, 539, 602, 643, 654, 705, 706, 708–710
Transgress 606, 729
Transgression 83, 85, 86, 97, 112, 322, 345, 353, 357, 385, 434, 446, 447, 452, 659, 699
Transgressor 85, 97, 463
Transient 73, 316, 379, 444, 458, 515, 524, 526, 587
Transition 711
Transitoriness 119, 222, 277, 337, 411, 552, 671, 673
Translation 57, 69, 71, 433, 484, 578–582
Translator 580, 582
Transmigration of souls 432, 594
Transmit 735
Travail 186, 187, 411, 708
Travel 209, 268, 682, 727
Traveller 117, 407, 520
Treachery 241, 461, 725
Tread 109, 510, 658
Treason 270, 331, 392
Treasure 566, 638, 647, 710
Treasured 536
Treasurer 560
Treatment 119, 637, 670, 686
Treaty 74, 189, 344, 594
Tree 120, 181, 234, 265, 389–405, 443, 515, 520, 565, 652, 656, 722–725, 743
Tree of knowledge 85
Tree of life 279, 389, 390, 722, 723
Tremble 622, 661
Trembling 622, 623, 685
Trespass 333, 402, 437, 701, 730
Trial 267, 346, 460, 467, 558, 629, 630, 633, 651
Tribal 624
Tribe 195, 208, 255, 294, 366, 367, 407, 463, 489, 498, 518, 543, 544, 619, 625, 640, 684
Tribulation 125, 328, 381, 571, 607, 610, 653
Tribune 340, 341
Tribute 406, 537, 671, 684, 734
Trickery 413
Trickle 683
Trim 524
Trinity 535
Tripartite 235, 523
Trito-Isaiah 54
Triumph 227, 239, 244, 261, 317, 410, 440, 452, 469, 644–652, 727, 740
Triumphal procession 647, 649, 650
Trivial 727
Trivialization 703
Troops 292–297, 476, 537, 732
Trouble 260, 262, 277, 433, 459, 519, 550, 563, 568, 600, 612, 651, 652, 675, 687, 698, 726
True 56, 97, 99, 100, 118, 178, 219, 225, 250, 253, 255, 296, 297, 299, 302, 303, 305, 311, 315, 338, 346, 347, 386, 400, 406, 424, 446, 455, 458, 460, 481, 483, 489, 498, 522, 527, 539, 542, 590, 595, 598, 603, 628, 634, 637, 639, 656, 659, 669, 676, 678, 684, 686, 687, 690, 704, 718, 719, 722, 736 Truly 98, 720
Trumpet 202, 273, 342, 410
Trust 142, 143, 177, 203, 216, 223, 227, 278, 289, 351, 381, 411, 504, 510, 531, 542, 587–589, 591–596, 598–602, 604, 615, 616, 622, 652, 658, 660, 673, 679–681, 683, 713, 729, 732
Trustee 373
Trustworthiness 311, 587, 588, 594, 659
Truth 70, 86, 87, 89, 90, 98, 102, 106, 114, 130, 166, 173, 188, 200, 219, 220, 222, 225, 232, 238, 241, 266, 270, 271, 304, 323, 324, 336, 347, 359, 374, 382, 386, 413, 424, 461, 464, 470, 473, 483, 512, 525, 529, 540, 546, 563, 575, 577, 578, 590–593, 598, 603, 631, 645, 653, 659, 662, 670, 671, 678, 680, 708, 717, 740, 743
Try 364, 395
Tumult 292
Turn 353, 355, 358, 359, 473, 585, 587, 601, 608, 688, 696, 700, 722

Turn away 585
Turtledove 172
Tutor 370
Twelve 129–136, 142, 213, 274, 298, 407, 489, 540, 733
Two ages 524
Two-natures doctrine 548
Type 85, 86, 88, 141, 149, 222, 273, 411, 487, 491, 508, 510, 524, 619, 679, 725
Typical 664, 666
Typology 49, 71, 86, 223, 436
Tyranny 124, 141
Tyrant 125, 269, 645
Tyrian games 645

Ugaritic 68
Ugliness 743
Ulcer 520
Ultimate 651, 661, 713, 734
Umpire 373, 648
Unanimity 642
Unauthorized 535
Unaware 663, 690
Unbaptized 117
Unbegotten 616
Unbelief 74, 76, 120, 159, 160, 303, 473, 505, 529, 554, 559, 587–606, 608, 678
Unbeliever 315, 350, 415, 439, 464, 473, 505, 507, 529, 566
Unbiased 485, 585
Unbind 394
Unborn 283, 285
Unbridled 494, 501
Unburied 264, 265, 450
Uncertainty 421, 505, 512
Unchangeable 357, 521, 660, 731
Unchanged 720, 726
Unchastity 235, 261, 497, 500
Uncircumcised 307–309, 311, 361, 675
Uncircumcision 145, 155, 307, 310, 311, 336, 385, 602, 676
Unclean 62, 117, 122, 152, 153, 155, 169, 172, 340, 444, 448, 452, 479, 488, 557, 637, 642, 685
Uncleanness 151, 155, 205, 398, 448, 479, 480, 641
Uncommitted 530, 731
Unconditional 207, 210, 483, 488, 611
Unconditioned 71, 538
Unconscious 549
Uncontrolled 494
Uncover 50, 313, 444
Uncreated 653
Uncritical 512
Unction 121, 123
Undefiled 233, 447, 469
Understanding 92, 103, 123, 212, 220, 253, 261, 282, 480, 481, 485, 487, 489, 533, 537, 541, 556, 568, 578, 583, 584, 597, 601, 602, 671, 676, 680, 692, 694, 699, 714, 732, 735, 736, 738, 742
Underworld 101, 431, 449, 463, 464, 523, 654
Undress 314
Uneducated 498
Unending 716
Unenlightened 561
Unfading 469
Unfailing 663
Unfaithfulness 109, 370, 449, 455, 461, 532, 594, 606
Unfathomable 594
Unfavourable 561
Unfettered 718
Unfit 163, 274, 560, 565
Unforgivable 499, 700
Unforgiving 111, 226
Unfounded 546, 550
Unfree 718
Unfruitful 607, 721, 723
Unfulfilled 178
Ungodliness 227, 352, 559, 622, 641
Ungodly 381, 382, 409, 423, 444, 463, 466, 539, 597, 609, 656
Ungrateful 552
Ungrudging 214
Unheeded 410
Unhistorical 208
Unholy 507
Unilateral 641
Unimportant 561
Unintelligible 582
Unintentional 609
Union 148, 507, 513, 640, 643, 669, 678
Unique 95, 474, 538, 540, 604, 615, 619, 620, 665, 667, 713
Unite 636, 639, 641, 730
Unity 93, 209, 230, 237, 238, 294, 296, 300, 302, 304, 325, 335, 370, 375, 399, 501, 522, 602, 630, 640, 642, 643, 647, 669, 740
Universal 52, 95, 99, 255, 375, 426, 432, 433, 436, 512, 516, 535, 541, 616, 618, 621, 629, 641, 654, 739 Universe 53, 69, 70, 94, 102, 238, 272, 317, 387, 439, 521–524, 616, 639, 654, 661, 712, 734 Unjust 563
Unjustified 228
Unknown 686
Unlawful 155
Unleash 610
Unleavened 249, 250, 631, 633
Unlimited 600
Unmarried 217, 278, 561
Unmask 439, 739
Unmoved 521
Unmutilated 307
Unnatural 499, 677
Unnecessary 728
Unpalatable 202
Unpredictable 653, 666
Unproductive 73, 723
Unprovable 664
Unpunished 698, 701
Unreality 550
Unredeemed 313, 398, 557
Unregenerate 319, 726
Unreliable 594
Unrepeatable 667

Unrest 642
Unrestrained 459, 552, 715
Unrestricted 459
Unrighteous 110, 115, 182, 202, 434, 554, 555, 684, 721
Unrighteousness 112, 591, 609, 662
Unseen 80, 713
Unselfish 547
Unsettled 518
Unshakeable 658, 661
Unshaken 660, 663
Unspiritual 248
Unstained 337, 341
Unsuitable 561, 684
Unsuspecting 343
Untie 577
Untilled 520
Untimely 182, 184, 434
Untouched 563
Unusable 565, 610, 722
Unused 73
Unutterable 603
Unveiled 312, 313
Unwavering 503, 505, 597
Unwilling 509
Unwise 108, 282, 288
Unworthy 183, 414, 415
Upbringing 288, 569
Upheaval 610
Uphold 658, 663, 697, 712
Upright 479, 608
Uprising 292
Uproar 410
Uproot 600
Upward 674
Urge 65, 271, 456, 457, 609, 689, 693, 731
Urgency 239, 501, 611
Urn 263, 674
Usage 70
Use 548, 550, 619, 653, 687, 731, 742
Useless 73, 337, 480, 546, 549, 550, 565, 679, 722, 729
Utopia 640
Utterance 58, 582, 602, 734, 736, 737

Vain 209, 437, 459, 546–553, 571, 705
Vainglory 228, 546
Valentian gnosticism 740
Valid 98, 187, 286, 385, 402, 403, 658, 660, 664, 666, 691
Validated 398
Validity 439, 473, 486, 538, 594, 601, 609, 619, 659, 702
Valley 240, 422
Valuable 605
Value 173, 311, 327, 349, 353, 457, 480, 496, 512, 513, 565, 572, 613, 628, 654, 666, 670, 679, 710
Value-judgment 681
Vanishing 681
Vanity 262, 296, 546
Vanquished 676, 686
Vapour 449
Variant reading 69, 71
Variety 670
Vaticanus 53
Vault 523
Vaunt 727
Veil 73, 221, 245, 280, 587
Venerable 616
Veneration 103, 384, 525
Vengeance 107, 111, 225, 240, 375, 410, 539, 556, 735
Venom 108
Venture 710, 712
Verdict 351, 386, 397, 545, 566, 604, 609, 679, 680, 702
Versions 69, 71
Vessel 149, 540, 546, 636, 638, 673, 733, 741, 742
Vessel of mercy 112
Vessels of the sanctuary 122
Vessels of wrath 112
Vetus Latina 71
Vicarious 372
Vice 108, 110, 138, 202, 412, 452, 459, 496, 499, 513, 514, 559, 593, 676, 687, 689, 739
Viciousness 511
Victim 239, 392, 393, 410, 438, 459–461, 479, 498
Victor 303, 382, 467, 470, 526, 644, 648, 649, 650, 716
Victorious 663, 730
Victory 100, 114, 125, 239, 241, 244, 339, 359, 372, 405, 406, 423, 432, 436–438, 440, 469, 470, 508, 564, 624–627, 644–652
View 70, 188, 599, 711
Vigil 495
Vile 564
Village 520, 689
Vindication 175, 411, 434, 470, 529, 672, 677
Vine 303, 722, 724
Vine-dresser 725
Vinegar 726
Vintage 724
Violence 288, 430, 532
Viper 510
Virgin 414, 468, 505
Virgin birth 179
Virginity 256, 449, 668
Virtue 175, 217, 314, 316, 431, 432, 459, 461, 494, 496, 501, 502, 559, 598, 603, 627, 645, 690, 700, 734
Virtuous 435, 524
Visible 95, 219, 299, 490, 491, 523, 595, 602, 650, 679, 703, 704
Vision 103, 116, 175, 202, 204, 216, 274, 319, 420, 421, 426, 429, 469, 512, 527, 528, 574, 576, 593, 609, 623, 640, 675, 704, 727
Visionary 527, 638
Visit 188, 189, 191, 207, 333, 420, 697
Visitation 188, 190, 191, 562
Visitor 529, 688
Visual 735
Vital 671
Vitality 240
Vivid 670
Vocation 271, 275, 522, 690

Voice 280, 292, 372, 410, 411, 476, 541, 543, 684, 704, 705
Void 334, 546, 547, 638
Volcano 655, 657
Volition 686
Voluntary 355, 482, 613, 626, 642, 697
Vote 478
Voter 732
Voltive offering 413, 414
Vouch 659
Vow 107, 203, 344, 352, 472, 734
Vulgate 50, 71
Vulnerable 678
Vulture 172, 173, 175, 610

Waft 683
Wages 117, 436, 723
Wail 420
Wait 482, 552, 596, 646, 650
Walk 59, 110, 257, 262, 354, 384, 420, 422, 424, 458, 483, 571, 623, 644, 675, 704, 713, 723, 741
Wall 205, 377, 676
Wander 320, 322
Wandering 209, 304, 424, 488, 568
Want 456, 556, 565, 623, 687, 717, 731
War 67, 102, 118, 124, 151, 224, 293, 294, 340, 341, 392, 409, 429, 452, 484, 492, 529, 553, 558, 612, 645, 646, 650, 652–654, 656, 657, 674, 677, 683, 686, 687, 720, 741, 742
Ward off 646
Warm 614, 615
Warn 156, 163, 247, 329, 341, 372, 403, 419, 463, 469, 496, 526, 559, 567–573, 587, 607, 679, 680, 683, 684, 689, 709, 725, 729, 731
Warning 109, 205, 235, 244, 247, 286, 352, 404, 410, 417, 462, 501, 512, 513, 538, 567–573, 578, 591, 593, 604, 608, 610, 611, 623, 690, 691, 734, 742
Warrior 102, 732
Wash 117, 143–154, 185, 186, 224, 225, 239, 351, 395, 471, 625, 630, 698, 701
Waste 464, 467, 470
Watch 217, 294, 420, 474, 655
Watch over 189, 543
Watcher 101, 102
Watchfulness 425, 442, 460, 693
Water 113, 143, 151–153, 158, 160, 164, 175, 179, 180, 185, 201, 202, 224, 225, 319, 351, 379, 384, 389, 420, 433, 508, 509, 513, 515, 517, 518, 522, 523, 526, 610, 612, 617, 623, 629, 652, 670, 683, 710, 711, 735, 742
Waver 503, 505
Waves 520
Wax 471
Way 168, 191, 225, 269, 272, 292, 339, 375, 403, 411, 415, 423, 426, 464, 491–493, 499, 513, 541, 543, 547, 551, 552, 564, 568, 571, 594, 596, 630, 668, 695, 717, 719, 726, 731, 733 Wayside 608
Wayward 556
Weak 334, 366, 449, 475, 542, 561, 602, 676, 677, 716
Weak brother 352
Weaken 680
Weakness 163, 192, 218, 222, 229, 281, 337, 399, 467, 551, 679, 727, 731
Weal 379
Wealth 119, 138, 139, 205, 319, 322, 381, 515, 536, 683, 731, 735
Wealthy 188
Wean 614
Weapon 120, 314, 379, 380, 392, 468, 652, 653, 656, 675, 726
Wear 241, 648
Weary 262, 263, 426, 496, 497, 729
Weave 490
Wedding 120, 122, 274, 317, 506, 612
Wedlock 187, 188, 616
Weeds 289, 299
Week 627–631
Weekday work 631
Weep 201, 329, 395
Weight 260, 261
Weigh up 106, 591
Welcome 206, 211, 213, 325
Welfare 562
Well 116
Well-being 208, 210–216, 232, 400, 553, 671
Well-born 176–188
Well-favoured 188
Well-ordered 666
Whale 670
Wheat 118, 249, 289, 625
Wheel 182
Whip 161, 162
Whisper 510
White 115, 203–206, 265, 317, 319, 656, 657, 708
Whitewash 205, 471
Whitsun 631
Whole 94, 294, 295, 302, 518, 672, 674, 675, 677, 706, 708, 709, 732, 738
Whore 481, 497, 501 Whoredom 514
Wicked 103, 109, 146, 194, 343, 479, 646, 673, 702, 726
Wickedness 96, 112, 231, 296, 332, 349, 382, 420, 550, 555, 561–567, 645, 647, 654, 673, 731, 733, 742, 743
Wide 253–254
Widespread 733
Widow 187, 191, 266, 322, 341, 499, 690, 691, 729, 730
Wife 80, 84, 87, 232, 235, 302, 395, 498, 505–507, 537, 555, 556, 637 Wild 520, 726
Wilderness 99, 114, 249, 253, 294, 303, 380, 411, 453, 460, 465, 473, 510, 519, 527, 531, 568, 593, 626, 629
Wiles 282
Wilful 607
Will 74, 177, 231, 234, 244, 355, 365, 368–371, 376, 378, 416, 437, 447, 457, 460, 461, 477, 495, 497, 533–535, 564, 567, 568, 575, 594, 623, 643, 647, 655, 664, 670, 671, 681, 696, 699, 708, 719, 742

Will of God 70, 95, 103, 121, 145, 166, 173, 187, 203, 243, 268, 273, 275, 282, 289, 311, 326, 350, 370, 384, 386, 456–459, 473, 476, 484–488, 494, 496, 506, 540, 459, 565, 575, 593, 594, 597, 602, 603, 641, 647, 659, 669, 674, 677, 696, 697, 699, 708, 717, 719, 728, 738
Will, Free 54
Will, Human 54, 355, 594, 608, 722
Willing 546, 604, 606
Win 423, 651
Wind 66, 280, 379, 380, 517, 673, 678, 683, 740
Wine 106, 116, 118, 224, 237, 250, 381, 498, 513–515, 613, 625, 626, 633, 641, 672
Winepress 106, 109, 111
Wing 173, 174, 262, 280, 451
Winged 172, 279, 509
Winter 743
Wipe 479
Wipe away 471
Wisdom 74, 92, 103, 109, 165, 169, 173–175, 192, 193, 225, 228, 268, 277, 281, 285, 286, 302, 322, 363, 380–382, 397–400, 418, 439, 452, 463, 485, 501, 502, 505, 510, 537, 547, 551, 589, 592, 593, 597, 602, 604, 653, 675, 692, 695, 696, 728, 729, 739
Wisdom literature 598
Wise 68, 107, 175, 188, 216, 282, 321, 395, 413, 432, 463, 468, 481, 512, 513, 574, 650, 675, 680, 728
Wish 227, 344, 416, 456, 457, 534, 734
Withdraw 211, 431, 585, 606, 607
Wither 406, 411, 417, 515–516, 673, 678, 743 Withhold 648
Withstand 660, 678, 710
Witness 83, 91, 95, 98, 99, 131, 132, 135, 136, 183, 189, 195, 222, 228, 243, 246, 248, 265, 271, 275, 276, 285, 294, 298, 301, 303, 305, 308, 311, 322–324, 349, 350, 366, 367, 369, 373, 374, 383, 384, 410, 430, 476, 478, 490, 511, 512, 517, 522, 540, 554, 576, 587, 595, 600, 602, 603, 620, 625, 626, 638, 640, 657, 659, 669, 693, 704, 723
Woe 216, 282, 321, 358, 379, 473, 571
Wolf 118, 119, 261
Women 84, 85, 87, 88, 109, 266, 293, 385, 514, 515, 517, 594, 612, 621, 672, 678, 704, 705, 709, 720, 738
Womb 169, 254, 667, 673, 739
Wonder 119, 129, 220, 381, 531, 659, 692
Wonderful 424, 574
Wonder-worker 415
Wood 389–405, 463, 516, 537
Wool 204, 319
Word 54, 56, 63, 70, 79, 96–99, 103, 107, 123, 147, 153, 158, 166–168, 171, 173, 178, 180, 188, 206, 207, 214, 216, 222, 234, 241, 245, 248, 250, 273, 274, 299, 313, 322, 325, 329, 333, 337, 338, 340–342, 350, 351, 353, 369, 374, 379, 380–382, 384, 386, 397–400, 411, 413, 418, 421, 424, 436–439, 451, 453, 454, 456, 457, 462, 466, 468, 469, 476, 477, 485, 486, 490, 491, 499, 504, 510, 512, 515, 516, 526, 530, 531, 533, 536, 540, 546, 547, 549, 550, 566, 575, 578–580, 583, 591–594, 596, 597, 600, 604, 605, 620, 623, 633, 637, 638, 653, 655, 658–660, 662, 671, 678, 679, 682, 702, 708, 711, 712, 719, 722, 726, 731, 733, 734, 736, 738, 739, 741, 742
Word Studies 57
Work 89, 95, 115, 131, 168, 198, 219, 228, 250, 260, 262, 263, 266, 271, 275, 279, 287, 300, 304, 313, 319, 324, 341, 358, 372, 378, 382, 387, 401, 414, 429, 467, 471, 476, 477, 489, 495, 497, 517, 527, 528, 541–543, 547, 549, 551, 562, 564, 566, 584, 591, 592, 600, 602, 607, 610, 618, 623–625, 639, 644, 647, 650, 654, 657, 659, 684, 688, 689, 701, 708, 723, 730, 731, 733, 734, 741
Work out 623
Work together 700
Worker 115, 643
Workman 279
Workmanship 228, 386, 657
Work of Christ (→ Christ, Work of) Works 73, 78, 79, 81, 116, 157, 197, 228, 329, 385, 386, 408, 424, 436, 446, 462, 532, 535, 555–557, 574, 599, 600, 603–605, 612, 620, 622, 668, 671, 676, 681, 702, 714, 723, 739, 743
World 53, 58, 59, 60, 66, 68, 69, 71, 73, 77, 79, 95, 97, 164, 166–168, 178, 185, 214, 217, 237, 238, 243, 244, 250, 254, 257, 281, 300, 303, 319, 323, 325, 328, 337, 377–379, 383, 385, 387, 397, 399–401, 421–424, 432, 438, 457, 458, 460, 461, 463, 464, 466, 468, 469, 473, 481–483, 490, 491, 495, 500, 502, 507–509, 513, 514, 517–526, 530, 532, 537, 539, 542, 544, 551, 552, 556, 557, 559, 562, 566, 583, 586, 595, 598, 602, 603, 610, 614, 615, 623–625, 627, 628, 640, 646, 647, 649, 651, 654–656, 659, 661, 665, 667, 672, 676–679, 681, 684, 687–689, 691–695, 700, 702, 704, 706–709, 711, 714, 716, 720, 723, 726, 735, 740, 742
World to come 77, 97, 586, 604, 700
World-power 610
World-rulers 73
World-soul 636, 711
World-view 524
Worldly 397, 467, 521, 532, 547
Worldwide 686
Worm 116
Wormwood 202
Worry 92, 276–278, 384, 420
Worse 731
Worship 53, 55, 69, 70, 75, 98, 99, 111, 114, 119, 125, 145, 198, 210, 211, 213, 244, 271, 272, 280, 291, 293, 295, 296, 304, 311, 320, 324, 339–341, 344, 360, 361, 367, 384–387, 409, 410, 452, 488, 495, 508, 538, 551, 552, 582, 586, 607, 622, 626, 627, 632, 637, 642, 650, 655, 667, 672, 698, 733
Worshipper 618, 625, 627, 687
Worth 598, 664, 665
Worthless 436, 480, 520, 546, 549, 550, 551, 565, 700

Worthy 275, 329, 384, 386, 475, 571
Wound 114, 119, 161, 163, 182, 235, 241 Woven 712
Wrangling 106, 108, 645, 646
Wrath 105–113, 163, 211, 286, 320, 327, 354, 413, 415, 417, 449, 464, 465, 467, 529, 559, 651, 653, 657, 673, 685, 687, 734, 739, 741, 743
Wreath 405, 406, 648
Wrestle 600, 645, 646, 679
Write 582
Writing 53, 70, 243, 246, 247, 332 Writings 58
Writing-tablet 471
Written 485, 604
Wrong 56, 138, 352, 414, 423, 468, 506, 561, 564, 568, 680, 727

Yahweh 55, 56, 58, 63, 67, 71, 72
Yahwist 61, 65, 72
Year 624, 626, 629, 734, 737
Year of jubilee 698
Year of release 272, 698
Yearning 456, 558
Yellow 204, 205
YHWH 72
Yield 454, 475, 591, 709, 723
Yoke 262, 284
Young 193, 198, 283, 284
Youth 203, 281, 283, 462, 559

Zeal 197, 278, 361, 543, 568, 637, 655, 675, 688, 733 Zealot 72, 269, 403, 488, 599, 627, 717
Zealous 318, 730
Ziggurat 140
Zion 55, 96, 122, 304, 570, 661
Zoology 670
Zorastrianism 563, 653

Addenda

SINCE THE PUBLICATION OF THE FIRST EDITION OF The New International Dictionary of New Testament Theology the University of Chicago Press has published an extensively revised edition of Arndt and Gingrich's standard dictionary of New Testament Greek: A Greek-English Lexicon of the New Testament and Other Early Christian Literature: A Translation and Adaptation of the Fourth Revised and Augmented Edition of Walter Bauer's Griechish-Deutsches Wörterbuch zu den Schriften des Neuen Testaments und der übrigen urchristlichen Literatur by William F. Arndt and F. Wilbur Gingrich; Second Edition Revised and Augmented by F. Wilbur Gingrich and Frederick W. Danker from Walter Bauer's Fifth Edition, 1958, 1979. This work will remain indispensable to students of the New Testament for years to come. Further volumes of the Theological Dictionary of the Old Testament have also appeared and these should be consulted by those wishing to pursue the study of related Old Testament themes.

Among the general books and commentaries, relevant to the New Testament, its background and the articles in this volume, are: J. G. Baldwin, Daniel: An Introduction and Commentary, TC, 1978; H. D. Betz, Galatians: A Commentary on Paul's Letter to the Churches in Galatia, Hermeneia, 1979; F. F. Bruce, Paul: Apostle of the Free Spirit, 1977; B. S. Childs, Introduction to the Old Testament as Scripture, 1979; P. C. Craigie, The Book of Deuteronomy, The New International Commentary on the Old Testament, 1976; C. E. B. Cranfield, A Critical and Exegetical Commentary on the Epistle to the Romans, ICC, I, 1975; II, 1979; J. D. G. Dunn, Unity and Diversity in the New Testament: An Inquiry into the Character of Earliest Christianity, 1977; G. Hughes, Hebrews and Hermeneutics: The Epistle to the Hebrews as a New Testament Example of Biblical Interpretation, Society for New Testament Studies Monograph Series 36, 1979; A. Lacocque, The Book of Daniel, 1979; I. H. Marshall, The Gospel of Luke: A Commentary on the Greek Text, The New International Greek Testament Commentary, 1978; and The Epistles of John, 1978; R. H. Mounce, The Book of Revelation: The New International Commentary on the New Testament, 1977; H. Ridderbos, Paul: An Outline of his Theology, 1975; E. P. Sanders, Paul and Palestinian Judaism: A Comparison of Patterns of Religion, 1977; E. Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ (175 B.C.-A.D.135), revised and edited by G. Vermes, F. Millar and M. Black, I, 1973; II, 1979; S. Smalley, John: Evangelist and Interpreter, 1978; G. Vermes, The Dead Sea Scrolls: Qumran in Perspective, 1978; G. J. Wenham, The Book of Leviticus, The New International Commentary on the Old Testament, 1979; H. W. Wolff, Joel and Amos, Hermeneia, 1978; W. Zimmerli, Ezekiel 1, Hermeneia, 1979.

Attention is also drawn to the books and articles which supplement the bibliographies given under the following headings:

Abomination of Desolation
D. Ford, The Abomination of Desolation in Biblical Theology, 1979

Advocate, Paraclete, Helper
D. E. Holwerda, The Holy Spirit and Eschatology in the Gospel of John, 1959

Animal
H-W. Kuhn, "Das Reittier Jesu in der Einzugsgeschichte des Markus-evangeliums", ZNW 50, 1959, 82-91; O. Michel, "Eine philologische Frage zur Einzugsgeschichte", NTS 6, 1959-60, 81f.

Bird
H. von Baer, Der Heilige Geist in den Lukasschriften, 1926 (on the dove at Jesus' baptism); H. Greeven, peristera, TDNT VI 63-72; L. E. Keck, "The Spirit and the Dove", NTS 17, 1970-71, 41-67; F. Sühling, Die Taube als religioses Symbol im christlichen Altertum, 1930.

Birth, Beget, Bear
R. E. Brown, The Virginal Conception and Bodily Resurrection of Jesus, 1973; R. E. Brown, The Birth of the Messiah: A Commentary on the Infancy Narratives in Matthew and Luke, 1977; R. E. Brown, K. P. Donfield, J. A. Fitzmyer and J. Reumann, eds., Mary in the New Testament, 1978.

Body, Member, Limb
R. H. Gundry, SOMA in Biblical Theology with Emphasis on Pauline Anthropology: Society for New Testament Studies Monograph Series 29, 1976; H. W. Wolff, Anthropology of the Old Testament, 1974.

Church
R. E. Brown, The Community of the Beloved Disciple, 1979; G. Johnston, The Doctrine of the Church, 1942; E. Schweizer, The Church as the Body of Christ, 1964.

Covenant, Guarantee, Mediator
A. Jaubert, La Notion d'Alliance, 1963.

Cross, Wood, Tree
M. Hengel, Crucifixion in the Ancient World and the Folly of the Message of the Cross, 1977.

Curse, Insult, Fool
R. A. Guelich, "Mt. 5.22: Its Meaning and Integrity", ZNW 64, 1973, 39-51; C. H. Hunzinger, Die jüdische Bannpraxis im neutestamentlichen Zeitalter (Dissertation, Göttingen), 1954.

Death, Kill, Sleep
L. R. Bailey, Sr., Biblical Perspectives on Death, 1979.

Disciple
R. P. Meye, Jesus and the Twelve: Discipleship and Revelation in Mark's Gospel, 1968; T. J. Weeden, Mark, Traditions in Conflict, 1971.

Dream
J. Campbell, ed., Myths, Dreams and Religion, 1970; E. Fromm, The Forgotten Language: An Introduction to the Understanding of Dreams, Fairy Tales and Myths, 1951; M. T. Kelsey, Dreams: The Dark Speech of the Spirit; A Christian Interpretation, 1968.

Earth, Land, World
A. Alon, The Natural History of the Land of the Bible, 1978; D. Baly, The Geography of the Bible, 1974[2].

Father
J. Carmignac, Recherches sur le "Notre Père", 1969.

Fellowship, Have, Share, Participate
C. F. D. Moule, The Origin of Christology, 1977, 47-96.

Fullness, Abound, Multitude, Fulfil, Make Room
F. F. Bruce, The Time is Fulfilled: Five Aspects of Fulfilment of the Old Testament in the New Testament, 1978.

The New International

Dictionary of New Testament Theology Vol.2

Editor: Colin Brown

10th printing

The New International

Dictionary of New Testament Theology Vol. 2

Editor: Colin Brown

THE NEW INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY OF NEW TESTAMENT THEOLOGY is, first, a basic translation, and then an extensive revision and considerable enlargement, of a German work entitled Theologisches Begriffslexikon Zum Neuen Testament. On its first publication in German this was recognized as a major work of reference, and has since become more and more widely acclaimed as an important tool for understanding the theology and message of the Bible. Its translation and publication in this new English edition, together with the extensive revisions and extensive additions, have enlarged it so as to make it a unique source of information, invaluable to ministers, teachers, and anyone interested in the study as well as the teaching of the Bible.

What the reviewers say:

"This Dictionary had already proved its worth in its original German form, and the present revised and enlarged English edition will make it a much appreciated companion to the New Testament for students, preachers, and teachers throughout the English-speaking world." (F. F. Bruce, University of Manchester)

"Indispensable for advanced theological students and scholars as well as for ordinary Bible students." (Christianity Today)

"The ministry of any pastor would be enriched immeasurably if he would keep this dictionary on his desk for constant reference during the time of sermon preparation. . . . it is perhaps the best buy of the year." (Eternity)

"It is an excellent work. . . . I am impressed with the significance of this dictionary. It is characterized by the most thorough scholarship." (Donald W. Burdick, Conservative Baptist Theological Seminary)

(continued on back flap)

ISBN 0-310-21900-0

(continued from front flap)

COMPANION TEXTS FOR NEW TESTAMENT STUDIES

A Critical Lexicon and Concordance to the English-Greek New Testament (Bullinger)
A Dictionary of New Testament Greek Synonyms (Berry)
A Grammar of Septuagint Greek (Conybeare/Stock)
A Greek-English Lexicon of the New Testament and Other Early Christian Literature (Bauer, Arndt, Gingrich, and Danker)
A Greek Grammar of the New Testament and Other Early Christian Literature (Blass and Debrunner, Funk)
A Linguistic Key to the Greek New Testament (Rienecker, Rogers)
A Reader's Greek-English Lexicon of the New Testament (Kubo)
A Shorter Lexicon of the Greek New Testament (Gingrich)
Do It Yourself Hebrew and Greek (Goodrick) Greek and English Lexicon to the New Testament (Greenfield, Green) Greek-English Lexicon of the New Testament (Thayer)
New Testament Greek Primer (Marshall)
The Analytical Greek Lexicon Revised (Moulton)
The Englishman's Greek Concordance of the New Testament (Wigram)
The Englishman's Greek New Testament (Newberry)
The Greek New Testament Slidaverb Conjugation Chart (Peterson)
The Interlinear Greek-English New Testament (Berry)
The Interlinear Greek-English New Testament (Marshall)
The New International Dictionary of New Testament Theology (Brown)
The NIV Interlinear Greek-English New Testament (Marshall)
The RSV Interlinear Greek-English New Testament (Marshall)
The Zondervan Parallel New Testament in Greek and English (Marshall)

The Editor

In its English form THE NEW INTERNATIONAL DOCTIONARY OF NEW TESTAMENT THEOLOGY was edited by Colin Brown, who holds the B.D. from the University of London, the M.A. from the University of Nottingham, and the Ph.D. from the University of Bristol. His publications include Karl Barth and the Christian Message and Philosophy and the Christian Faith. Before becoming Professor of Systematic Theology at Fuller Theological Seminary Dr. Brown was Vice-Principal of Tyndale Hall. He has been Visiting Professor at Trinity Evangelical Divinity School, Deerfield, Illinois, and at Regent College, Vancouver.

THE NEW INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY OF NEW TESTAMENT THEOLOGY is a unique source of information, invaluable to ministers, teachers, and anyone interested in the study as well as the teaching of the Bible.

Some of its main features are:

- Concise discussion of the major theological terms of the Bible
- Arranged in English alphabetical order; does not demand prior knowledge of Greek or Hebrew
- Discusses the use of each key word in classical and secular Greek, the Old Testament and Rabbinic writings, the New Testament usage and reference
- English edition based on Theologisches Begriffslexikon zum Neuen Testament, extensively revised and enlarged
- Glossary of Technical Terms giving concise definitions of specialist expressions and usage in Vol. 1
- Index of Hebrew, Aramaic, Greek, and theological subjects (Vol. 1 and 2 separately indexed, Combined Index to all three Vols. in Vol. 3)
- Full and up-to-date bibliographies
- International team of contributors

The three-volume set of The New International Dictionary of New Testament Theology is a treasure house of knowledge concerning a study of Greek words. But it is so written as to be usable by pastors and lay people who are not versed in the Greek language. It treats these words in alphabetical order and relates them to passages in which they appear in the New Testament.

Unlike most works of this type, these volumes provide a maximum of information with a minimum of reading. I know of no other work like it. And I heartily recommend it to all serious students of the New Testament.

Herschel H. Hobbs
Past President of the Southern Baptist Convention

Editor:
Colin Brown

The New International

Dictionary of New Testament Theology Vol. 2

G~Pre

ZONDERVAN

The New International Dictionary of New Testament Theology

The New International Dictionary of Companion Volume

THE NEW INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH

Volume 2: G-Pre

New Testament Theology

Colin Brown
GENERAL EDITOR

Translated, with additions and revisions, from the German

THEOLOGISCHES BEGRIFFSLEXIKON
ZUM NEUEN TESTAMENT

Edited by Lothar Coenen, Erich Beyreuther and Hans Bietenhard

Regency
Reference Library
from Zondervan Publishing House
1415 Lake Drive, S.E., Grand Rapids, Michigan 49506

THE NEW INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY OF NEW TESTAMENT THEOLOGY, VOL. 2

Originally published in German under the title,

THEOLOGISCHES BEGRIFFSLEXIKON ZUM NEUEN TESTAMENT

© 1967, 1969, 1971 by Theologischer Verlag Rolf Brockhaus, Wuppertal. English Language edition copyright © 1976, The Zondervan Corporation, Grand Rapids, Michigan, U.S.A. and The Paternoster Press, Ltd. Exeter, Devon, U.K.

All rights in this work are reserved by the publishers, and no part may be reproduced without written permission, except for brief quotations in reviews.

Library of Congress Cataloging in Publication Data
Main entry under title:

The new international dictionary of New Testament theology.

"Translated, with additions and revisions, from the German Theologisches Begriffslexikon zum Neuen Testament, edited by Lothar Coenen, Erich Beyreuther and Hans Bietenhard."

"Companion volume: The new international dictionary of the Christian Church."

Includes bibliographical references and indexes.

1. Bible. N.T.—Theology—Dictionaries. 2. Bible. N.T.—Dictionaries. I. Brown, Colin.
BS2397.N48 230'.03 75-38895
ISBN 0-310-21900-0

Printed in the United States of America

84 85 86 87 88 — 10

Contents

PREFACE 7

TABLE OF ARTICLES IN VOLUME 2 11

CONTRIBUTORS TO VOLUME 2 21

ARTICLES 27

INDEXES:

HEBREW AND ARAMAIC WORDS 937

GREEK WORDS 942

GENERAL INDEX 956

ADDENDA 1025

Preface

Omnis recta Dei cognitio ab obedientia nascitur – "All right knowledge of God is born of obedience." This was the testimony of Calvin in his Institutes of the Christian Religion, 1, 6, 2. It could be said that church history is the story of how the people of God have learned this truth the hard way. The relevance of Calvin's observation does not stop there. What applies to institutions applies equally to individual lives. Yet the Christian religion is not one of relentless dour demands and gritted determination to do better next time. As Calvin went on to say, "Surely in this respect God has, by his singular providence, taken thought for mortals through all ages."

The Bible is not only the primary historical source for our knowledge of ancient Israel and the beginnings of the Christian church; it is the record of God's gracious dealings with his people in times past and the Word of God for them today. The obedience to which God calls is not blind submission but a considered response to himself as he has revealed himself in the past – and as he continues to reveal himself in the present in the light of the past.

The Reformers distinguished three aspects of faith: cognition, assent and trust. Without the element of trust theology is a mere intellectual exercise which becomes increasingly irrelevant in the modern world. But unless our trust has a basis in fact – and can be shown to have a basis in fact – then faith is at the mercy of the crank and the fanatic. Clearly, studying a work like The New International Dictionary of New Testament Theology is no substitute for the obedience of which Calvin spoke. Knowledge of God comes about in the whole range of life through response to the God who reveals himself and illuminates our way in his Word. But in order to be obeyed the Word must first be understood. It is with the understanding of the Word, as it is expressed in the words of the New Testament, that this dictionary is concerned.

The present volume contains 106 main articles on New Testament concepts, comprising 256 studies arranged under key Greek words or themes. The entries under the key Greek words are normally divided into three parts as follows:

CL Discussion of the word in secular Greek. Uses of the word are illustrated by reference not only to classical literature but also to inscriptions and papyri. But in view of the expressly theological interest of the dictionary discussion here is kept to a minimum.

OT Discussion of the word and related terms in the OT. The language of the church in the NT era was Greek, and the Old Testament Scriptures used by the church were largely the Greek translation of the Hebrew known as the Septuagint (LXX). The discussion is therefore based on the terms as they occur in the LXX, but comparing the LXX throughout with the corresponding Hebrew Masoretic text. This section also takes account of terms as used by Philo, Josephus, the Dead Sea Scrolls and rabbinic writers.

NT Discussion of the word and related terms in the NT, noting statistical occurrences, the use in relation to the background, and specific emphases of individual writers and writings.

For further discussion of the layout and scope of the dictionary the reader is referred to the Introduction to Volume I.

The New International Dictionary of New Testament Theology is based upon the Theologisches Begriffslexikon zum Neuen Testament which was first published in German in 1965. In preparing this work for English readers the opportunity has been taken to make revisions and to incorporate extensive new material. This second volume contains 22 completely new articles and a total of 71 new entries on key Greek words and related themes. However, in addition much new material has been incorporated into the revision of the existing articles. The bibliographies have been completely revised. As in Volume I, they have been divided into two sections: (a) works in English, and (b) works in other languages. The purpose is to offer readers a conspectus of literature as a guide to the immense amount of work that has been carried out in biblical studies in recent years. The separation of the two sections will enable them to see at a glance which works are relevant to their particular needs. Most English readers will naturally wish to consult the works in the first section. On the other hand, it was decided to include titles not available in English in order to meet the needs of the more specialist student.

In his review of the first volume of this Dictionary Dr. I. H. Marshall suggested that "It is probably best taken as a reference work to the words used in any particular NT text, by means of which the reader may be guided to the ideas expressed by those words and thus have a better understanding of the text" (EQ 48, 1976, 106). The Editor finds himself in basic agreement with this view, if it be stressed that to understand the words of the text one has also to penetrate the thought-world of their background. In preparing this English edition the overriding aim has been to present a concise and yet balanced guide to the theological vocabulary of the NT in the light of international contemporary scholarship. Like all other academic disciplines, theological study has experienced a knowledge-explosion in the last half-century. It is essential to the purpose of The New International Dictionary of New Testament Theology to enable the reader to explore for himself the new avenues of discovery that have been opened up and to weigh for himself the views of scholars who have contributed to the modern study of the Bible.

The draft translation of the German original was prepared by a team of scholars which included Professor G. H. Boobyer, the Rev. Dr. Colin Brown, Mr. H. L. Ellison, the Rev. M. C. Freeman, the late Rev. Dr. George Ogg, Mr. John D. Manton, the Rev. Philip J. Seddon, the Rev. David Sharp and the Rev. Dr. A. J. M. Wedderburn. A particular debt of gratitude is owed to Professor F. F. Bruce, Rylands Professor of Biblical Criticism and Exegesis in the University of Manchester. In addition to the contributions which appear over his name, Professor Bruce has read the entire work in galley and page proof. He has been unstinting in the advice and expert help that he has given from first to last. Thanks are also due to the Rev. A. C. Thiselton of the University of Sheffield for reading the typescript of the bibliographies and for making many helpful suggestions. Once again the Rev. Michael Sadgrove has shouldered the heavy burden of proof-reading in the course of his doctoral studies at Oxford. The magnificent indexes are entirely the work of the Rev. Norman Hillyer whose sharp and fresh eye has also contributed to the correction of the page proofs. On numerous points of detail the Editor has benefited from the advice and comments of many friends and colleagues in addition to those already named. Among them are Dr. Cleon Rogers, Principal of the Freie Theologische Akademie, Seeheim, Bergstrasse, the Rev. J. A. Motyer, the Rev. G. T. D. Angel, the Rev. P. J. Budd, Miss J. G. Baldwin, Miss E. M. Embry and Miss M. Langley of Trinity College, Bristol, Mr. Alan Millard of the University of Liverpool, Dr. D. W. Burdick of the Conservative Baptist Theological Seminary, Denver, Colorado, Dr. Janice Allister and Dr. M. G. Barker.

The article on Prayer contains the Eighteen Benedictions used in daily Jewish prayer, in the translation of the Rev. R. A. Stewart which first appeared in his book Rabbinic Theology: An Introductory Study, published by Oliver and Boyd, 1961. They are reproduced here by kind permission. Scripture quotations in this Dictionary from the Revised Standard Version of the Bible are used by permission of the owners of the copyright, the Department of Christian Education of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the United States of America.

Finally, the Editor would like to record once more his appreciation of the happy co-operation at all stages of the work with the Editor of the German edition, Dr. Lothar Coenen, and the German publishers, the Theologischer Verlag Rolf Brockhaus of Wuppertal, and to thank them for their kind agreement to the features incorporated in the English edition. He also wishes to pay tribute to the skill and craftsmanship of the staff of Redwood Burn in producing such a handsome book from a typescript which was often well-nigh illegible.

A full list of abbreviations and a key to the transliteration of Hebrew, Greek and Arabic words will be found in Volume 1, pp. 31–47. Volume 1, pp. 49–72, also contains a Glossary of Technical Terms which defines many of the terms currently used in theological discussion.

For this new printing of the Dictionary, the opportunity has been taken to make a number of minor corrections and alterations, and the bibliographies have been updated in the Addenda.

C. Brown, 1981.

Table of Articles in Volume II

Title	Key Greek Words		Author	Page
Gall, Poison, Wormwood	χολή, ἰός, ἄψινθος	cholē, ios, apsinthos	L. Morris	27
Gate, Door	πύλη, πυλών	pylē, pylōn	D. Hill	29
	θύρα	thyra	D. Hill	30
Gather, Scatter	συνάγω	synagō	A. A. Trites	31
	σκορπίζω	skorpizō	A. A. Trites	33
Generation	γενεά	genea	R. Morgenthaler, C. Brown	35
Gift, Pledge, Corban	ἀρραβών	arrabōn	O. Becker	39
	δῶρον	dōron	H. Vorländer	40
	κορβᾶν	korban	C. Brown	43
Glory, Honour	δόξα	doxa	S. Aalen	44
	τιμή	timē	S. Aalen	48
Goal, Near,	ἐγγύς	engys	W. Bauder, H.-G. Link	52
Last, End, Complete	ἔσχατος	eschatos	H.-G. Link	55
	τέλος	telos	R. Schippers	59
God, Gods, Emmanuel	θεός	theos	J. Schneider, C. Brown, J. Stafford Wright	66
	Ἐμμανουήλ	Emmanouēl	J. Stafford Wright, C. Brown	86
Godliness, Piety	εὐλάβεια	eulabeia	W. Mundle	90
	σέβομαι	sebomai	W. Günther	91
Gold, Silver, Bronze, Iron	χρυσός	chrysos	J. G. Baldwin	95
	ἀργύριον	argyrion	J. G. Baldwin	96
	χαλκός	chalkos	J. G. Baldwin	96
	σίδηρος	sidēros	J. G. Baldwin	97
Good, Beautiful,	ἀγαθός	agathos	E. Beyreuther	98

Kind	καλός	kalos	E. Beyreuther	102
	χρηστός	chrēstos	E. Beyreuther	105
Gospel, Evangelize, Evangelist	εὐαγγέλιον	euangelion	U. Becker	107
Grace, Spiritual Gifts	χάρις	charis	H.-H. Esser	115
Greek	Ἕλλην	Hellēn	H. Bietenhard	124
Grow	αὐξάνω	auxanō	W. Günther	128
	πλεονάζω	pleonazō	W. Bauder, D. Müller	130
Guard, Keep, Watch	τηρέω	tēreō	H.-G. Schütz	132
	φυλάσσω	phylassō	H.-G. Schütz, C. Brown	134
	γρηγορέω	grēgoreō	C. Brown	136
	ἀγρυπνέω	agrypneō	C. Brown	137
Guilt, Cause, Convict, Blame	αἰτία	aitia	F. Thiele, C. Brown	137
	ἐλέγχω	elenchō	H.-G. Link	140
	ἔνοχος	enochos	F. Thiele	142
	ἄμεμπτος	amemptos	T. McComiskey	143
Hand, Right Hand, Left Hand, Laying on of Hands	δεξιά	dexia	C. Blendinger	146
	ἀριστερός, εὐώνυμος	aristeros, euōnymos	C. Brown	148
	χείρ	cheir	F. Laubach, C. Brown	148
	ἐπιτίθημι	epitithēmi	H.-G. Schütz	150
Hard, Hardened	σκληρός	sklēros	U. Becker	153
Head	κεφαλή	kephalē	K. Munzer, C. Brown	156
Heal	θεραπεύω	therapeuō	F. Graber, D. Müller	163
	ἰάομαι	iaomai	F. Graber, D. Müller	166
	ὑγιής	hygiēs	D. Müller	169
Hear, Obey	ἀκούω	akouō	W. Mundle	172
	ὑπακούω	hypakouō	W. Mundle	179
Heart	καρδία	kardia	T. Sorg	180
Heaven,	ἀναβαίνω	anabainō	B. Siede,	184

Ascend,			C. Brown
Above	ἄνω	anō	H. Bietenhard	187
	οὐρανός	ouranos	H. Bietenhard	188
Height,	βάθος	bathos	J. Blunck	197
Depth,	ὕψος	hypsos	J. Blunck	198
Exalt	ὑψόω	hypsoō	D. Müller	200
Hell, Abyss,	ἄβυσσος	abyssos	H. Bietenhard	205
Hades,	ᾅδης	hadēs	H. Bietenhard	206
Gehenna,	γεέννα	gehenna	H. Bietenhard	208
Lower Regions	κατώτερος	katōteros	H. Bietenhard	209
Herb, Plant, Grass	λάχανον	lachanon	N. Hillyer	210
Hide,	καλύπτω	katalyptō	W. Mundle	211
Conceal	κρύπτω	kryptō	W. Mundle	214
Hinder,	ἐνκόπτω	enkoptō	C. H. Peisker	220
Prevent,	κωλύω	kōlyō	C. H. Peisker	221
Forbid
Holy, Consecrate,	ἅγιος	hagios	H. Seebass,	223
Sanctify, Saints,			C. Brown
Devout	ἱερός	hieros	H. Seebass	232
	ὅσιος	hosios	H. Seebass	236
Hope,	ἐλπίς	elpis	E. Hoffmann	238
Expectation	ἀποκαραδοκία	apokaradokia	E. Hoffmann	244
House,	οἶκος	oikos	J. Goetzmann	247
Build,	οἰκοδομέω	oikodomeō	J. Goetzmann	251
Manage,	οἰκονομία	oikonomia	J. Goetzmann	253
Steward
Humility,	πραΰς	praÿs	W. Bauder	256
Meekness	ταπεινός	tapeinos	H.-H. Esser	259
Hunger,	πεινάω	peinaō	W. Bauder	264
Thirst,	βρῶμα	brōma	H. Kropatschek	268
Food,	γεύομαι	geuomai	E. Tiedtke	269
Taste,	ἐσθίω	esthiō	G. Braumann	271
Eat,	πίνω	pinō	G. Braumann	274
Drink
I Am	ἐγὼ εἰμί	egō eimi	G. Braumann, H.-G. Link	278
Image,	εἴδωλον	eidōlon	W. Mundle	284
Idol,	εἰκών	eikōn	O. Flender	286
Imprint,	χαρακτήρ	charaktēr	J. Gess	288

Example	ἀπαύγασμα	apaugasma	R. P. Martin	289
	ὑπόδειγμα	hypodeigma	R. P. Martin	290
	ὑπογραμμός	hypogrammos	F. F. Bruce	291
	παραδειγματίζω	paradeigmatizō	R. P. Martin	291
Incense, Myrrh	λίβανος	libanos	N. Hillyer	293
	σμύρνα	smyrna	C. Brown	294
Inheritance, Lot Portion	κλῆρος	klēros	J. Eichler	295
	μέρος	meros	W. Mundle	303
Israel, Jew	Ἰσραήλ	Israēl	R. Mayer	304
Hebrew, Jacob, Judah	Ἰακώβ	Iakōb	T. McComiskey	316
	Ἰούδα	Iouda	T. McComiskey	319
Jerusalem	Ἱερουσαλήμ	Ierousalēm	H. Schultz	324
Jesus Christ, Nazarene, Christian	Ἰησοῦς	Iēsous	K. H. Rengstorf	330
	Ναζαρηνός	Nazarēnos	K. H. Rengstorf	332
	Χριστός	Christos	K. H. Rengstorf	334
	Χριστιανός	Christianos	K. H. Rengstorf	343
Join, Cleave to	κολλάομαι	kollaomai	H. Seebass	348
Jonah	Ἰωνᾶς	Iōnas	J. A. Motyer	350
Joy, Rejoice	ἀγαλλιάομαι	agalliaomai	E. Beyreuther	352
	εὐφραίνω	euphrainō	E. Beyreuther	354
	χαίρω	chairō	E. Beyreuther, G. Finkenrath	356
Judgment, Judge, Deliver, Judgment Seat	κρίμα	krima	W. Schneider	361
	παραδίδωμι	paradidōmi	H. Beck	367
	βῆμα	bēma	T. McComiskey	369
	καταδικάζω	katadikazō	T. McComiskey	370
King, Kingdom	βασιλεία	basileia	B. Klappert	372
Knowledge, Experience, Ignorance	αἴσθησις	aisthēsis	E. Schütz	390
	γινώσκω	ginōskō	E. D. Schmitz	392
	ἀγνοέω	agnoeō	E. Schütz	406
Lamb, Sheep	ἀμνός	amnos	J. Gess	410
	πρόβατον	probaton	R. Tuente	412
Lame, Crippled	κυλλός	kyllos	R. K. Harrison	414 χωλός	chōlos	R. K. Harrison	415
Lament, Sorrow,	κλαίω	klaiō	H. Haarbeck	416
	κόπτω	koptō	H. Haarbeck	417

Weep, Groan	λυπέω	lypeō	H. Haarbeck, H.-G. Link	419
	βρύχω	brychō	T. McComiskey	421
	πενθέω	pentheō	T. McComiskey	421
	στενάζω	stenazō	T. McComiskey	423
Large, Small	μέγας	megas	F. Thiele	424
	μικρός	mikros	F. Thiele	427
Laugh	γελάω	gelaō	E. M. Embry	429
Law, Custom, Elements	ἔθος	ethos	H.-H. Esser	436
	νόμος	nomos	H.-H. Esser	438
	στοιχεῖα	stoicheia	H.-H. Esser	451
Layman	ἰδιώτης	idiōtēs	O. Flender	456
Lead Astray, Deceive	πλανάω	planaō	W. Günther	457
Leaven	ζύμη	zymē	G. T. D. Angel	461
Leprosy	λεπρός	lepros	R. K. Harrison	463
	λέπρα	lepra	R. K. Harrison	464
Levite	Λευίτης	Leuitēs	H. L. Ellison	466
Lie, Hypocrite	ὑποκρίνω	hypokrinō	W. Günther	467
	ψεύδομαι	pseudomai	U. Becker, H.-G. Link	470
Life	βίος	bios	H.-G. Link	474
	ζωή	zōē	H.-G. Link	476
Light, Shine, Lamp	λάμπω	lampō	H.-C. Hahn	484
	λύχνος	lychnos	H.-C. Hahn	486
	φαίνω	phainō	H.-C. Hahn	487
	ἐμφανίζω	emphanizō	T. McComiskey	488
	φῶς	phōs	H.-C. Hahn, C. Brown	490
Like, Equal	ἴσος	isos	E. Beyreuther	496
	ὅμοιος	homoios	E. Beyreuther, G. Finkenrath, M. Farmery	500
Lord, Master	δεσπότης	despotēs	H. Bietenhard	508
	κύριος	kyrios	H. Bietenhard	510
Lord's Supper	δεῖπνον	deipnon	B. Klappert	520

Love	ἀγαπάω	agapaō	W. Günther, H.-G. Link	538
	φιλέω	phileō	W. Günther, C. Brown	547
Magic, Sorcery, Magi	μαγεία	mageia	C. Brown, J. Stafford Wright	552
Man	ἀνήρ	anēr	H. Vorländer, C. Brown	562
	ἄνθρωπος	anthrōpos	H. Vorländer, J. Stafford Wright	564
	ἄρσην	arsēn	C. Brown	569
Mark, Brand	στίγμα	stigma	R. P. Martin	572
	χάραγμα	charagma	R. P. Martin	573
	καυστηριάζω	kaustēriazō	R. P. Martin	574
Marriage, Adultery, Bride, Bridegroom	γαμέω	gameō	W. Günther, C. Brown	575
	μοιχεύω	moicheuō	H. Reisser	582
	νύμφη	nymphē	W. Günther	584
	κοίτη	koitē	T. McComiskey	586
	ὑπέρακμος	hyperakmos	C. Brown	587
Melchizedek, Salem	Μελχισεδέκ	Melchisedek	B. A. Demarest	590
	Σαλήμ	Salēm	B. A. Demarest	592
Mercy, Compassion	ἔλεος	eleos	H.-H. Esser	593
	οἰκτιρμός	oiktirmos	H.-H. Esser	598
	σπλάγχνα	splanchna	H.-H. Esser	599
Might, Authority, Throne	δύναμις	dynamis	O. Betz	601
	ἐξουσία	exousia	O. Betz	606
	θρόνος	thronos	C. Blendinger	611
Mind	φρόνησις	phronēsis	J. Goetzmann	616
Miracle, Wonder, Sign	θαῦμα	thauma	W. Mundle	620 σημεῖον	sēmeion	O. Hofius, C. Brown	626
	τέρας	teras	O. Hofius	633
Moses	Μωϋσῆς	Mōÿsēs	H. Seebass, C. Brown	635
Myth	μῦθος	mythos	F. F. Bruce	643
Name	ὄνομα	onoma	H. Bietenhard, F. F. Bruce	648

Nature	φύσις	physis	G. Harder	656
Necessity,	ἀνάγκη	anaγkē	R. Morgenthaler	662
Must,	δεῖ	dei	E. Tiedtke,	664
Obligation			H.-G. Link
	ὀφείλω	opheilō	E. Tietdke,	666
			H.-G. Link
	πρέπω	prepō	C. Brown	668
New	καινός	kainos	H. Haarbeck,	669
			H.-G. Link,
			C. Brown
	νέος	neos	H. Haarbeck	674
Nicolaitan	Νικολαΐτης	Nikolaitēs	C. J. Hemer	676
Nineveh	Νινευή	Nineuē	T. McComiskey,	678
			C. Brown
Noah	Νωέ	Nōe	F. F. Bruce	681
Number	ἀριθμός	arithmos	E. D. Schmitz,	683
			C. J. Hemer
	δύο	dyo	C. J. Hemer	686
	τρεῖς	treis	C. J. Hemer	686
	τρίτος	tritos	C. J. Hemer	687
	ἐνιαυτοὺς τρεῖς καὶ μῆνας ἕξ	eniautous treis kai mēnas hex	C. J. Hemer	688 τέσσαρες	tessares	E. D. Schmitz	688
	πέντε	pente	C. J. Hemer	689
	ἑπτά	hepta	E. D. Schmitz	690
	ὀκτώ	oktō	C. J. Hemer	692
	δέκα	deka	C. J. Hemer	692
	δεκάτη	dekatē	M. J. Harris	693
	δώδεκα	dōdeka	E. D. Schmitz	694
	τεσσεράκοντα	tesserakonta	C. J. Hemer	696
	ἑβδομήκοντα	hebdomēkonta	C. J. Hemer	696
	χιλιάς	chilias	C. Brown	697
Offence,	πρόσκομμα	proskomma	J. Guhrt	705
Scandal,	σκάνδαλον	skandalon	J. Guhrt	707
Stumbling Block
Oil,	ἔλαιον	elaion	R. T. France	710
Olive,
Gethsemane
Old	πάλαι	palai	H. Haarbeck	713
One,	ἅπαξ	hapax	K.-H. Bartels	716
Once,	εἷς	heis	K.-H. Bartels	719
Only	μόνος	monos	K.-H. Bartels	723

Open, Close, Key	ἀνοίγω	anoigō	C. H. Peisker, C. Brown	726
	κλείς	kleis	D. Müller, C. Brown	729
Openness, Frankness, Boldness	παρρησία	parrhēsia	H.-C. Hahn	734
Orphan	ὀρφανός	orphanos	J. Pridmore	737
Other	ἄλλος, ἕτερος	allos, heteros	F. Selter, C. Brown	739
Parable, Allegory,	παραβολή	parabolē	C. H. Peisker, C. Brown	743
Proverb	παροιμία	paroimia	C. H. Peisker	756
Paradise	παράδεισος	paradeisos	H. Bietenhard, C. Brown	760
Patience, Steadfastness,	ἀνέχομαι	anechomai	U. Falkenroth, C. Brown	764
Endurance	καρτερέω	kartereō	W. Mundle	767
	μακροθυμία	makrothymia	U. Falkenroth, C. Brown	768
	ὑπομένω	hypomenō	U. Falkenroth, C. Brown	772
Peace	εἰρήνη	eirēnē	H. Beck, C. Brown	776
Pentecost, Feast of	πεντηκοστή	pentēkostē	J. D. G. Dunn	783
People,	δῆμος	dēmos	H. Bietenhard	788
Nation,	ἔθνος	ethnos	H. Bietenhard	790
Gentiles,	λαός	laos	H. Bietenhard	795
Crowd,	ὄχλος	ochlos	H. Bietenhard	800
City	πόλις	polis	H. Bietenhard	801
Persecution,	διώκω	diōkō	G. Ebel	805
Tribulation, Affliction	θλῖψις	thlipsis	R. Schippers	807
Pharisee	Φαρισαῖος	Pharisaios	D. Müller	810
Please	ἀρέσκω	areskō	H. Bietenhard	814
	εὐδοκέω	eudokeō	H. Bietenhard	817
Poor	πένης	penēs	L. Coenen	820
	πτωχός	ptōchos	H.-H. Esser, C. Brown	821

Possessions, Treasure,	θησαυρός	thēsauros	J. Eichler, C. Brown	829
Mammon,	μαμωνᾶς	mamōnas	C. Brown	836
Wealth,	περιποιέομαι	peripoieomai	E. Beyreuther	838
Money	πλοῦτος	ploutos	F. Selter	840
	χρῆμα	chrēma	F. Selter	845
	Coins in the Bible and Theological Issues		G. L. Archer, Jr.	847
Pour	ἐκχέω	ekcheō	R. T. France	853
Prayer,	αἰτέω	aiteō	H. Schönweiss	855
Ask,	γονυπετέω	gonypeteō	H. Schönweiss	859
Kneel,	δέομαι	deomai	H. Schönweiss	860
Beg,	προσεύχομαι	proseuchomai	H. Schönweiss, C. Brown	861
Worship,
Knock	προσκυνέω	proskyneō	H. Schönweiss, C. Brown	875
	ἐρωτάω	erōtaō	G. T. D. Angel	879
	κρούω	krouō	G. T. D. Angel	881
	ἐντυγχάνω	entynchanō	C. Brown	882
Present, Day,	ἡμέρα	hēmera	G. Braumann, C. Brown	886
Maranatha, Parousia	μαραναθά	maranatha	W. Mundle, C. Brown	895
	παρουσία	parousia	G. Braumann	898
	The Parousia and Eschatology in the NT		C. Brown	901

Contributors

Editors and Advisors

Editor of the English edition	Colin Brown
General Editor of the German edition	Lothar Coenen
Greek philology, philosophy and classical background	Gerhard Fries
Old Testament and Septuagint	Horst Seebass
Qumran	Reinhard Deichgräber
Rabbinics	Hans Bietenhard
New Testament philology and theology	Hans Bietenhard
Church history and historical theology	Erich Beyreuther
Bibliographical consultant to the German edition	Werner Georg Kümmel
Indexes	Norman Hillyer

Contributors to Volume 2

In the following list the author's work is denoted by the Greek words or sub-title which follow the title.

Sverre Aalen, Dr. theol., Professor, Oslo Glory, Honour, doxa, timē

Gervais T. D. Angel, M.A., M.Ed., Dean of Studies, Trinity College, Bristol Leaven, zymē; Prayer, Ask, Kneel, Beg, Worship, Knock, erōtaō, krouō

Gleason L. Archer, Jr., B.A., LL.B., A.M., Ph.D., B.D., Professor, Trinity Evangelical Divinity School, Deerfield, Illinois Possessions, Treasure, Mammon, Wealth, Money, Coins in the Bible and Theological Issues

Joyce G. Baldwin, B.A., B.D., Dean of Women, Trinity College, Bristol Gold, Silver, Bronze, Iron, chrysos, argyrion, chalkos, sidēros

Karl-Heinz Bartels, Dr. theol., Niderbieber
One, Once, Only, hapax, heis, monos

Wolfgang Bauder, Cologne Goal, Near, Last, End, Complete, engys (part); Grow, pleonazō (part); Humility, Meekness, praÿs; Hunger, Thirst, Food, Taste, Eat, Drink, peinaō

Hartmut Beck, Karlsruhe Judgment, Judge, Deliver, Judgment Seat, paradidōmi; Peace, eirēnē (part)

Oswald Becker, Bonn Gift, Pledge, Corban, arrabōn

Ulrich Becker, Dr. theol., Professor, Hanover Gospel, euangelion

Ulrich Becker, Osterwald über Wunstorf Hard, Hardened, sklēros; Lie, Hypocrite, pseudomai (part)

Otto Betz, Dr. theol., Professor, Tübingen Might, Authority, Throne, dynamis, exousia

Erich Beyreuther, Dr. theol., Feldkirchen, Munich
Good, Beautiful, Kind, agathos, kalos, chrēstos; Joy, Rejoice, agalliaomai, euphrainō, chairō (part); Like, Equal, isos, homoios (part); Possessions, Treasure, Mammon, Wealth, Money, peripoieomai

Hans Bietenhard, Dr. theol., Professor, Steffisburg Greek, Hellēn; Heaven, Ascend, Above, anō, ouranos; Hell, Abyss, Hades, Gehenna, Lower Regions, abyssos, hadēs, gehenna, katōteros; Lord, Master, despotēs, kyrios; Name, onoma (part); Paradise, paradeisos (part); People, Nation, Gentiles, Crowd, City, dēmos, ethnos, laos, ochlos, polis; Please, areskō, eudokeō

Christian Blendinger, Nuremberg Hand, Right Hand, Left Hand, Laying on of Hands, dexia; Might, Authority, Throne, thronos

Jürgen Blunck, Solingen Height, Depth, Exalt, bathos, hypsos

Georg Braumann, Dr. theol., Billerbeck Hunger, Thirst, Food, Taste, Eat, Drink, esthiō, pinō; I Am, egō eimi (part); Present, Day, Maranatha, Parousia, hēmera (part), parousia

Colin Brown, M.A., B.D., Ph.D., Professor, Fuller Theological Seminary, Pasadena, CA Generation, genea (part); Gift, Pledge, Corban, korban; God, Gods, Emmanuel, theos (part), Emmanouēl (part); Guard, Keep, Watch, phylassō (part), grēgoreō, agrypneō; Guilt, Cause, Convict, Blame, aitia (part); Hand, Right Hand, Left Hand, Laying on of Hands, aristeros, euōnymos, cheir (part); Head, kephalē (part); Heaven, Ascend, Above, anabainō (part); Holy, Consecrate, Sanctify, Saints, Devout, hagios (part); Incense, Myrrh, smyrna; Light, Shine, Lamp, phōs (part); Love, phileō (part); Magic, Sorcery, Magi, mageia (part); Man, anēr (part), arsēn; Marriage, Adultery, Bride, Bridegroom, gameō (part), hyerakmos; Miracle, Wonder, Sign, sēmeion (part); Moses, Mōÿsēs (part); Necessity, Must, Obligation, prepō; New, kainos (part); Nineveh, Nineuē (part); Number, chilias; Open, Close, Key, anoigō (part), kleis (part); Other, allos, heteros (part); Parable, Allegory, Proverb, parabolē (part); Paradise, paradeisos (part); Patience, Steadfastness, Endurance, anechomai (part), makrothymia (part), hypomenō (part); Peace, eirēnē (part); Poor, ptōchos (part); Possessions, Treasure, Mammon, Wealth, Money, thēsauros (part), mamōnas; Prayer, Ask, Kneel, Beg, Worship, Knock, proseuchomai (part), proskyneō (part), entynchanō; Present, Day, Maranatha, Parousia, hēmera (part), maranatha (part), The Parousia and Eschatology in the NT

Frederick Fyvie Bruce, M.A., D.D., F.B.A., Emeritus Professor, University of Manchester
Image, Idol, Imprint, Example, hypogrammos; Myth, mythos; Name, onoma (part); Noah, Nōe

Lothar Coenen, Dr. theol., Wuppertal Poor, penēs

Bruce A. Demarest, M.A., Ph.D., Associate Professor, Conservative Baptist Theological Seminary, Denver, Colorado
Melchizedek, Salem, Melchisedek, Salēm

James D. G. Dunn, M.A., B.D., Ph.D., Lecturer, University of Nottingham Pentecost, Feast of, pentēkostē

Günther Ebel, Speyer Persecution, Affliction, Tribulation, diōkō

Johannes Eichler, Frankfurt am Main Inheritance, Lot, Portion, klēros; Possessions, Treasure, Mammon, Wealth, Money, thēsauros

Henry Leopold Ellison, B.A., B.D., Dawlish, Devon Levite, Leuitēs

E. Margaret Embry, B.A., B.D., Lecturer, Trinity College, Bristol Laugh, gelaō

Hans-Helmut Esser, Dr. theol., Professor, Horstmar bei Münster
Grace, Spiritual Gifts, charis; Humility, Meekness, tapeinos; Law, Custom, Elements, ethos, nomos, stoicheia; Mercy, Compassion, eleos, oiktirmos, splanchna; Poor, ptōchos (part)

Ulrich Falkenroth, Dr. theol., Braunschweig Patience, Steadfastness, Endurance, anechomai (part), makrothymia (part), hypomenō (part)

Michael Farmery, B.D., Bristol
Like, Equal, homoios (part)

Günter Finkenrath, Burscheid-Hilgen
Joy, Rejoice, chairō (part); Like, Equal, homoios (part)

Otto Flender, Villigst
Image, Idol, Imprint, Example, eikōn; Layman, idiōtēs

Richard Thomas France, M.A., B.D., Ph.D., Senior Lecturer in New Testament, London Bible College, Northwood, Middlesex Oil, Olive, Gethsemane, elaion; Pour, ekcheō

Johannes Gess, Kassel
Image, Idol, Imprint, Example, charaktēr; Lamb, Sheep, amnos

Jürgen Goetzmann, Essen
House, Build, Manage, Steward, oikos, oikodomeō, oikonomia; Mind, phronēsis

Friedrich Graber, Riehen, Basel
Heal, therapeuō (part), iaomai (part)

Walther Günther, Dr. theol., Stuttgart
Godliness, Piety, sebomai; Grow, auxanō; Lead Astray, Deceive, planaō; Lie, Hypocrite, hypokrinō; Love, agapaō (part), phileō (part); Marriage, Adultery, Bride, Bridegroom, gameō (part), nymphē

Joachim Guhrt, Bentheim Offence, Scandal, Stumbling Block, proskomma, skandalon

Hermann Haarbeck, Schwelm Lament, Sorrow, Weep, Groan, klaiō, koptō, lypeō (part); New, kainos (part), neos; Old, palai

Hans-Christoph Hahn, Bad Boll Light, Shine, Lamp, lampō, lychnos, phainō, phōs (part); Openness, Frankness, Boldness, parrhēsia

Günther Harder, Dr. theol., Dr. jur., Professor, Berlin Nature, physis

Murray, J. Harris, M.A., Ph.D., Professor, Bible College of New Zealand, Auckland, New Zealand Number, dekatē

Roland K. Harrison, B.D., M.Th., Ph.D., D.D., Professor, Wycliffe College, Toronto Lame, Crippled, kyllos, chōlos; Leprosy, lepros, lepra

Colin J. Hemer, M.A., Ph.D., Librarian, Tyndale Hall, Cambridge Nicolaitan, Nikolaitēs; Number, arithmos (part), dyo, treis, tritos, eniautous treis kai mēnas hex, pente, oktō, deka, tesserakonta, hebdomēkonta

David Hill, B.D., S.T.M., Ph.D., Senior Lecturer, University of Sheffield Gate, Door, pylē, pylōn, thyra

Norman Hillyer, B.D., S.Th., formerly Librarian of Tyndale House, Cambridge Herb, Plant, Grass, lachanon; Incense, Myrrh, libanos

Ernst Hoffmann, Vevey
Hope, Expectation, elpis, apokaradokia

Otfried Hofius, Dr. theol., Professor, Paderborn Miracle, Wonder, Sign, sēmeion (part), teras

Bertold Klappert, Dr. theol., Göttingen
King, Kingdom, basileia; Lord's Supper, deipnon

Hans Kropatschek, Lic. theol., Göttingen Hunger, Thirst, Food, Taste, Eat, Drink, brōma

Fritz Laubach, Dr. theol., Hamburg Hand, Right Hand, Left Hand, Laying on of Hands, cheir (part)

Hans-Georg Link, Dr. theol., Cologne Goal, Near, Last, End, Complete, engys (part), eschatos; Guilt, Cause, Convict, Blame, elenchō; I Am, egō eimi (part); Lament, Sorrow, Weep, Groan, lypeō (part); Lie, Hypocrite, pseudomai (part); Life, bios, zōē; Love, agapaō (part); Necessity, Must, Obligation, dei (part); opheilō (part); New, kainos (part)

Thomas McComiskey, B.A., B.D., Ph.D., Professor, Trinity Evangelical Divinity School, Deerfield, Illinois Guilt, Cause, Convict, Blame, amemptos; Israel, Jew, Hebrew, Jacob, Judah, Iakōb, Iouda; Judgment, Judge, Deliver, Judgment Seat, bēma, katadikazō; Lament, Sorrow, Weep, Groan, brychō, pentheō, stenazō; Light, Shine, Lamp, emphainizō; Marriage, Adultery, Bride, Bridegroom, koitē; Nineveh, Nineuē (part)

Ralph P. Martin, M.A., Ph.D., Professor, Fuller Theological Seminary, Pasadena, California
Image, Idol, Imprint, Example, apaugasma, hypodeigma, paradeigmatizō; Mark, Brand, stigma, charagma, kaustēriazō

Reinhold Mayer, Dr. theol., Wiss. Rat, Tübingen Israel, Jew, Hebrew, Jacob, Judah, Israēl

Robert Morgenthaler, Dr. theol., Professor, Muri bei Bern Generation, genea (part); Necessity, Must, Obligation, anankē

Leon L. Morris, B.Sc., Ph.D., formerly Principal of Ridley College, Melbourne Gall, Poison, Wormwood, cholē, ios, apsinthos

John Alexander Motyer, M.A., B.D., Principal of Trinity College, Bristol Jonah, Iōnas

Dietrich Müller, Marburg
Grow, pleonazō (part); Heal, therapeuō (part), iaomai (part), hygiēs; Height, Depth, Exalt, hypsoō; Open, Close, Key, kleis (part); Pharisee, Pharisaios

Wilhelm Mundle, Lic. theol., Professor, Marburg
Godliness, Piety, eulabeia; Hear, Obey, akouō, hypakouō; Hide, Conceal, katalyptō, kryptō; Image, Idol, Imprint, Example, eidōlon; Inheritance, Lot, Portion, meros;

Miracle, Wonder, Sign, thauma; Patience, Steadfastness, Endurance, kartereō; Present, Day, Maranatha, Parousia, maranatha (part)

Karlfried Munzer, Gauting
Head, kephalē (part)

Carl Heinz Peisker, Dr. theol., Mülheim, Ruhr Hinder, Prevent, Forbid, enkoptō, kōlyō; Open, Close, Key, anoigō (part); Parable, Allegory, Proverb, parabolē (part), paroimia

John Pridmore, M.A., Witley Orphan, orphanos

Horst Reisser, Ilten Marriage, Adultery, Bride, Bridegroom, moicheuō

Karl Heinrich Rengstorf, D. theol., Dr. theol., D.D., Professor, Münster Jesus Christ, Nazarene, Christian, Iēsous, Nazarēnos, Christos, Christianos

Reinier Schippers, Dr. theol., Professor, Amsterdam Goal, Near, Last, End, Complete, telos; Persecution, Tribulation, Affliction, thlipsis

Ernst Dieter Schmitz, Wuppertal Knowledge, Experience, Ignorance, ginōskō; Number, arithmos (part), tessares, hepta, dōdeka

Johannes Schneider, D. theol., Dr. theol., Professor, Berlin
God, Gods, Emmanuel, theos (part)

Walter Schneider, Hanover Judgment, Judge, Deliver, Judgment Seat, krima

Hans Schönweiss, Dr. theol., Stuttgart
Prayer, Ask, Kneel, Beg, Worship, Knock, aiteō, gonypeteō, deomai, proseuchomai (part), proskyneō (part)

Eduard Schütz, Dr. theol., Hamburg Knowledge, Experience, Ignorance, aisthēsis, agnoeō

Hans-Georg Schütz, Dr. theol., Dortmund Guard, Keep, Watch, tēreō, phylassō (part); Hand, Right Hand, Left Hand, Laying on of Hands, epitithēmi

Helmut Schultz, Marburg Jerusalem, Ierousalēm

Horst Seebass, Dr. theol., Münster
Holy, Consecrate, Sanctify, Saints, Devout, hagios (part), hieros, hosios; Join, Cleave to, kollaomai; Moses, Mōÿsēs (part)

Friedel Selter, Rheinkamp-Repelen
Other, allos, heteros (part); Possessions, Treasure, Mammon, Wealth, Money, ploutos, chrēma

Burghard Siede, Coburg
Heaven, Ascend, Above, anabainō (part)

Theo Sorg, Stuttgart Heart, kardia

Friedrich Thiele, Kassel Guilt, Cause, Convict, Blame, aitia (part), enochos; Large, Small, megas, mikros

Erich Tiedtke, Frankfurt am Main Hunger, Thirst, Food, Taste, Eat, Drink, geuomai; Necessity, Must, Obligation, dei (part), opheilō (part)

Allison A. Trites, M.A., Ph.D., Acadia Divinity College, Acadia University, Wolfville, Nova Scotia Gather, Scatter, synaģō, skorpizō

Rudolf Tuente, Bremerhaven
Lamb, Sheep, probaton

Herwart Vorländer, Dr. phil., Professor, Ludwigsburg Gift, Pledge, Corban, dōron, Man, anēr (part), anthrōpos (part)

J. Stafford Wright, M.A., formerly Principal of Tyndale Hall, Bristol God, Gods, Emmanuel, theos (part), Emmanouēl (part); Magic, Sorcery, Magi, mageia (part); Man, anthrōpos (part)

G

Gall, Poison, Wormwood

These words are linked by the common association of bitterness and harmfulness. The notions of bitterness and poison seem to have been closely connected in the thought of antiquity. The terms vary in the extent of the destructiveness that they signify, but there is nothing attractive about any of them. This leads to a common usage in a metaphorical sense, and all three are employed to convey thoughts of bitterness and the like.

χολή, ἰός, ἄψινθος

χολή (cholē), gall, bile; ἰός (ios), poison; ἄψινθος (apsinthos), wormwood.

CL & OT cholē appears to be cognate with the Lat. (h)olus, perhaps also with the Gk. chloē (green shoot, grass), and to refer in the first instance to the colour of bile, from which it comes to be used of gall or bile itself. But the impressive thing was clearly its bitter taste. Arndt (891) cites the tragedian Philocles: epekaleito Cholē dia to pikron (who "was called Cholē because of his bitterness"). In the LXX the word translates a variety of Heb. words and all three meanings, "gall", "poison" and "wormwood" are found: (1) mᵉrōrâh, gall (Job 20:14); (2) rō'š, poison (Deut. 32:32; Ps. 69:21 [68:22]; cf. Matt. 27:34); (3) laʿᵃnâh, wormwood (Prov. 5:4; Lam. 3:15). On occasion the word refers to a plant (e.g. Deut. 29:18; 32:32), but it remains uncertain which plant is meant.

There is dispute over the derivation of ios, and whether it means "arrow" as well as "poison", or whether this is another word. O. Michel is emphatic that the two should be distinguished and connects the word for poison with the Sanskrit viṣa and the Lat. virus (TDNT III 334; cf. Liddell-Scott, 832). In secular Gk. the term is used of a variety of poisons, especially of the poison of snakes (Liddell-Scott note its use also for the venom of a mad dog). It is used for the rust on iron and also of other deposits, such as verdigris and the patina on bronze statues. In the LXX ios is used for ḥel'âh, rust (Ezek. 24:6, 11 f.), and ḥēmâh, poison (Ps. 140[139]:3). It also occurs in the LXX of Ps. 14 [13]:3; the Epistle of Jeremy 12, 24; Prov. 23:32; and Lam. 3:13, where it means an arrow.

apsinthos occurs in several secular Gk. forms. Most usual is the neut. apsinthion, but the fem. apsinthia is also found as well as the form apsinthos which is usually designated fem., but which is masc. in Rev. 8:11 (perhaps because it is the name of a star, astēr, which is masc.). This last form is not found in the LXX or in classical authors. All the forms noted refer to some variety of the plant group Artemisia, of which several varieties occur in Palestine. All of them have a very bitter taste. apsinthion occurs in Aquila's translation of Prov. 5:4; Jer. 9:15(14); 23:15.

NT Two of the terms are used in the NT in the literal sense. cholē is used of the wine mixed with "gall" which was offered to Jesus as the soldiers prepared to crucify him (Matt. 27:34). In view of the parallel in Mk. 15:23, it seems that the word here refers to myrrh. ([Ed.] "According to the Talmud (San. 43a, cf. Prov. 31.6–7) a man about to be executed could beg a 'grain of incense' (a narcotic) in wine in order to dull his senses and alleviate pain. Jesus refuses the sedative and heroically endures his sufferings to the end" [D. Hill, The Gospel of Matthew, 1972, 353]. Matt. 27:48; Mk. 15:36; Lk. 23:36; and Jn. 19:29 f. relate how a soldier subsequently gave Jesus oxos, sour wine or wine vinegar, which relieved the thirst more effectively than water and was popular in the lower strata of society because it was cheaper than ordinary wine [Arndt, 577 f.]. Like Matt. 27:34, this may also have been seen as a fulfilment of Ps. 69:21[68:22]. Gos. Pet. 5:15 f. gives the impression that the cholē was actually poison [cf. the MT of Ps. 69:21] which was mixed with wine and given to Jesus to hasten his death before nightfall. Jesus' death ensued not long afterwards.) apsinthos likewise appears to be understood literally in Rev. 8:11: "The name of the star is Wormwood. A third of the waters became wormwood, and many men died of the water, because it was made bitter." It is part of a vision of judgment on the ungodly world (see further discussion below).

But all the terms are also used metaphorically and this is the more important usage for an understanding of the NT. Outside the NT cholē is used for "bitter anger", "wrath" (Liddell-Scott, 1997), but this does not appear to be the case in the NT. The thought is always that of bitterness. Thus Simon Peter charged Simon Magus with being "in the gall [cholē] of bitterness" (Acts 8:23), when he had offered the apostle money for the gift of conferring the Holy Spirit by the laying on of hands. The thought is that to have such a complete misunderstanding of Christianity is not simply to be pleasantly mistaken. It is to find oneself in a situation which must be described in terms of bitterness. Simon had had an inkling of what Christianity was all about. He had welcomed the gospel and accepted baptism. It is not clear whether he himself received the laying on of hands (→ Hand), but he was certainly numbered among the band of converts. It was an exceedingly bitter thing when a man of whom so much might well have been expected proved to be so completely out of harmony with the gospel. He was caught in a bitter bondage to sin.

So it is with ios. In Romans 3 Paul is concerned with the universality of sin and with the way sin finds expression in what men say. "The poison of asps" is under the lips of sinners (Rom. 3:13), a quotation Paul takes from Ps. 140:3 (LXX 139:4). In his catena of quotations Paul lays emphasis on what words can do, referring to the throat, the tongue, the lips and the mouth ("feet" and "eyes" are mentioned once each, vv. 15, 18, but no other part of the body). The deadliness of wicked speech is stressed. James likewise finds "poison" an apt word for the untamed tongue. He thinks that such a tongue is capable of all sorts of evil and brings out the harm it causes by referring to it as "full of deadly poison" (Jas. 3:8). It is apparently the same word when James castigates the rich for their "rusted" gold and silver and sees the "rust" as evidence against them and as something that will in due course eat them up (Jas. 5:3). There is a problem in that → gold and silver do not rust, but James is speaking metaphorically and expressing forcefully the view that the treasures of the rich are tarnished and tainted and tainting.

There is a problem in the use of apsinthos in Rev. 8:11. It is used as the name of a star and then it describes the water into which the star fell. Obviously the water became bitter and the name of the star is connected with this bitterness. The problem is that in Revelation the water causes death, whereas wormwood, at least as we understand the term, is bitter but not poisonous. The author may have in mind a substance other than the wormwood we know and which was genuinely poisonous. Or he may be employing a way of speech we have already noted in antiquity whereby bitterness and poison were connected. He may be reasoning from the bitterness of the taste to the bitterness of the results. This fits in also with the fact that in the OT wormwood is used of God's punishment of the wicked, e.g. "Thus says the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel: Behold, I will feed this people with wormwood, and give them poisonous water to drink" (Jer. 9:15 RSV; cf. 23:15; Lam. 3:15, 19; the LXX does not use apsinthos, but the meaning is the same).

L. Morris

→ Bitter, → Dragon, Serpent, Scorpion, Sting, → Wine

Arndt, 128 f., 379, 891; Liddell-Scott, 229, 832, 1997; O. Michel, ios, TDNT III 334 ff.

Gate, Door

πύλη, πυλών

πύλη (pylē), gate, door; πυλών (pylōn), gate, gateway, entrance.

CL In classical Greek pylē is used, mostly in the plural, to mean the gates of a town, although it appears in the tragedians with the meaning house-door (→ thyra). It can be employed in a general sense to designate any entrance or opening (e.g. a geographical pass or straits). The gates of Hades is a fairly common periphrasis for the nether world, the realm of the dead (cf. Homer, Il. 5, 646; 9, 312; Od. 14, 156; Aesch., Ag. 1291). pylōn means a gateway or gate-house.

OT In the LXX pylē translates chiefly ša'ar which is used to refer to: (a) the gate of a city, building, farm or village; (b) the area immediately inside a city-gate; and (c) the gate(s) of death (Job 38:17; Ps. 107:18), of Sheol (Isa. 38:10) and of heaven (Gen. 28:17). pylōn usually translates ša'ar or peṯaḥ: the latter denotes an entrance, gate or doorway.

NT 1. Literal Meaning. In the NT pylē denotes: (a) a city-gate (Lk. 7:12; Acts 9:24; 16:13): that Jesus suffered outside the gate (Heb. 13:12; cf. Lev. 16:17) emphasizes that his suffering represents the true offering of the Day of Atonement and that, in his death, he is classified with law-breakers who were stoned outside the camp (Lev. 24:14; Num. 15:35); (b) a gate of the temple (Acts 3:10; cf. Acts 3:2 which uses thyra); (c) a prison gate (Acts 12:10) → thyra.

2. Figurative Use. (a) pylē is used of the narrow gate (cf. Lk. 13:24 which, in a rather different context, uses thyra) through which one must pass to enter into life (Matt. 7:13 f.). This image was familiar in the ancient world and here indicates an entrance that is difficult to find and hence ignored by many. The Matthean instruction on the two gates and two ways – and these are synonymous metaphors – is not so clearly eschatological in character as the corresponding verse in Lk. In the context of the well-known catechetical schema the words form an appeal to decision to follow Christ and face all the consequences that obedience entails.

(b) pylē is used of the gates of Hades in Matt. 16:18. The image expresses the commonly-held ancient idea that the underworld was secured by strong gates which prevented escape and barred access to invaders. In pre-Christian Jewish usage the expression functions as a pars pro toto term for Hades (→ Hell), i.e. the realm of the dead, even death itself (Isa. 38:10; Wis. 16:13; 3 Macc. 5:51; Ps. Sol. 16:2). It is improbable that the gates of Hades in Matt. 16 denotes the ungodly powers of the underworld which assail the rock (cf. TDNT VI 927), for Hades is not regarded as the abode of evil powers, whence they emerge to attack men. In the light of the Jewish background, the image is best understood as affirming that death, in spite of its hitherto unconquerable power, will not win control over the rock or, more probably, over the ekklēsia erected on the rock: death will not vanquish the messiah who builds the church, nor the members of the messianic community.

pylōn denotes: (a) the gateway or porch of a house (Matt. 26:71; Lk. 16:20; Acts 10:17; 12:13; in Acts 12:14 it appears to mean the actual gate to be opened); (b) the gate of a city (Acts 14:13, perhaps temple-portals) and, in particular, the gates of the New Jerusalem (Rev. 21:12 f., 21, 25; 22:14). D. Hill θύρα (thyra), door, entrance.

| θύρα |

CL In classical Greek thyra denotes a house-door and occasionally the house itself, expressing the whole by the part. The phrase "at the door(s)" may be used to indicate nearness of place or time: to be "at the door" of a king or other influential person means to be paying court to, or seeking benefit from him. The noun can also be used, in a general sense, for any entrance, literal or metaphorical.

OT In the LXX thyra often translates: (a) peṯaḥ which denotes an opening, doorway or gate; and (b) deleṯ which denotes a house-door, a gate, and figuratively, any aperture (e.g. an animal's jaws, human lips).

NT 1. Literal Meaning. In the NT thyra is used to mean: (a) the door of a house or room (Matt. 6:6; 25:10; Mk. 1:33; 2:2; 11:4; Lk. 11:7; Jn. 18:16; 20:19; Acts 5:9; 12:13); (b) the door of the temple (Acts 3:2; 21:30); (c) prison doors (Acts 5:19, 23; 12:6; 16:26 f.) which miraculously open to liberate apostles: the motif – which may reflect the developing use of the theme in the biographies of heroic figures in antiquity – affirms that the progress of the gospel cannot be hindered by imprisonment or bonds; (d) the entrance to a cave-tomb (Matt. 27:60; Mk. 16:3); (e) the opening in a stone enclosure (Jn. 10:1 f.).

2. Figurative Use. (a) The phrase "before" or "at the door(s)" indicates nearness in time or place (Matt. 24:33; Mk. 13:29; Acts 5:9; Jas. 5:9).

(b) The image of the open door denotes the provision of opportunity. This usage, which has parallels only in Rabbinic literature (cf. SB III 631; and TDNT III 174), is found in missionary contexts. God opens a door for the missionary (for the Word, in Col. 4:3) by giving him a field in which to work (1 Cor. 16:9; 2 Cor. 2:12; Rev.

3:8 (?)) and he opens a door of faith to Gentiles by giving them the possibility of believing in Christ (Acts 14:27).

(c) The opposite figure, the closed door (Matt. 25:10; Lk. 13:25; Rev. 3:7) carries the sense of judgment. The narrow door in Lk. 13:24 (cf. Matt. 7:13 f. where pylē is used in a different context) denotes the entrance into the eschatological → kingdom of God, and the shutting of that door indicates irrevocable loss of an opportunity. According to Rev. 3:8, the exalted Christ alone has the authority to grant access to the eschatological realm. Rev. 3:20 is best understood in an eschatological setting: the returning Saviour seeks fellowship with the disciple in a festal meal; the door is opened by obedience and faith. The NT only once expressly refers to the door of heaven (Rev. 4:1), though the figure – reflecting an ancient oriental view of the world – probably underlies other passages which speak of the opening and closing of heaven (Lk. 4:25; Rev. 11:6).

(d) The "I am the door" sayings in Jn. 10:7, 9. If, as seems probable, the more difficult reading "door" (and not "shepherd", so p^{75} and Sah.) is the correct one in v. 7, and if that image is interpreted in terms of vv. 1–3, then the sense is that Jesus is the gate to the sheep, the door whereby the genuine shepherd approaches the flock. In v. 9 the image is that of the gate through which the sheep go in and out, i.e. that Jesus is the gate for the sheep to go into the fold, the gate leading to salvation and life (cf. Jn. 14:6), an idea which may be indebted to a messianic interpretation of Ps. 118:20. The image of Jesus as the gate to salvation appears early in patristic exegesis (Ign., Phil. 9:1; Hermas, Sim. 9, 12, 3 f.). It is not likely that v. 9 gives expression to a Johannine revelation-formula: it is rather a pointer to the interpretation of the figure in the opening verses. We need not suppose that v. 7 and v. 9 are drawn from different sources or that one is supplemental to the other. They are two explanations of Jesus as the gate. The only unity in the discourse of Jn. 10 is christological: Jesus draws to himself every image which the picture of sheep, shepherd and sheepfold suggests. (For other "I am" sayings → I Am.; → also Open). D. Hill

(a). Arndt, 366, 736; E. F. F. Bishop, "The Door of the Sheep – Jn. x. 7–9", ExpT 71, 1959–60, 307 ff.; R. E. Brown, The Gospel according to John, I–XII, 1966, 385 f.; O. Cullmann, Peter: Disciple, Apostle, Martyr, 1962²; J. Jeremias, thyra, TDNT III 173–80; and pylē, TDNT VI 921–28; P. W. Meyer, "A Note on John 10:1–18", JBL 75, 1956, 232–35; J. A. T. Robinson, "The Parable of the Good Shepherd (John 10:1–5)", ZNW 46, 1955, 233–40 (reprinted in Twelve New Testament Studies, 1962, 67–75).
(b). E. Fascher, "Ich bin die Tür: eine Studie zu Joh. 10, 1–18", Deutsche Theologie 9, 1942, 34–57, 118–35.

Gather, Scatter

συνάγω

συνάγω (synagō), gather; ἐπισυνάγω (episynagō), gather together; συλλέγω (syllegō), gather up; τρυγάω (trygaō), gather in; συστρέφω (systrephō), gather together; ἀθροίζω (athroizō), gather together; συναθροίζω (synathroizō), gather together; ἐπισυναγωγή (episynagōgē), gathering together; ἐπαθροίζομαι (epathroizomai), be gathered even more.

CL In secular Greek synagō is used of bringing together, collecting or convening (Homer, Herodotus). It appears in a hostile sense of joining battle (Iliad). It can refer to uniting in marriage (Aeschylus), or to concluding from premises (Aristotle). Sometimes it speaks of gathering together stores or crops (Xenophon).

OT In the LXX synagō is employed about 350 times, and stands chiefly for the Heb. 'āsap̄. It is used of collecting things, especially fruits (Exod. 23:10; Lev. 25:3, 20; Isa. 17:5), but also ears of grain (Ruth 2:7), quails (Num. 11:32), money (2 Ki. 22:4; 2 Chr. 24:11), and the ashes of a red heifer (Num. 19:9). More importantly, the verb may refer to the gathering together of persons such as men, people, nations, armies (Exod. 3:16; 4:29; Num. 11:16; 21:16, 23; 2 Sam. 10:17; 12:29). It is also used of being gathered to one's people in Sheol (2 Ki. 22:20; 2 Chr. 34:29[28]). Other passages speak of the gathering of the dead slain in battle for the purpose of burial (Jer. 9:22[21]; Ezek. 29:5).

The verb qāḇaṣ also means to gather, and is used of collecting grain (Gen. 41:35, 48), booty (Deut. 13:16[17]), money (2 Chr. 24:5), birds (Isa. 34:15,[16]) and beasts (Ezek. 39:17). In the passive it frequently refers to the assembling of persons (Gen. 49:2; Isa. 45:20; 48:14; 49:18; 60:4; 2 Chr. 20:4). In the intensive form it is used of gathering grapes (Isa. 62:9), and of assembling people (Deut. 30:3, 4; Jer. 31[38]:10), particularly of God recalling and assembling the exiles (Isa. 40:11; 43:5; 56:8). Reference is made to gathering the nations for judgment (Mic. 4:12; Isa. 66:18), and to Yahweh's gathering his dispersed people, sometimes under the figure of a flock (Mic. 2:12[11]; 4:6).

NT In the NT synagō appears 59 times (24 in Matt., 5 in Mk., 6 in Lk., 7 in Jn., 11 in Acts, 5 in Rev. and once in Paul). In Matt. gathering refers to people (crowds, 13:2; wedding guests, 22:10), or things (birds, 6:26; fish, 13:47; vultures, 24:28). It is contrasted with → skorpizō (scatter) in connection with the mission of the church (12:30; 25:24, 26). There are frequent references to the assembling of the religious leaders (2:4; 22:34, 41; 26:3, 57; 27:17; 27:62; 28:12), and one reference to the whole Roman cohort gathering in the Praetorium at the crucifixion (27:27). The nations will be gathered together at the last judgment (25:32), and the messiah will gather the wheat into his barn (3:12; cf. 13:30, where the reapers are the angels who are sent by the Son of man). Wherever several believers gather in Christ's name, he will be in the midst (18:20). In 25:35, 38, 43 synagō means invite in, receive as a guest.

Lk. notes the gathering of the chief priests and scribes to condemn Jesus (22:66), the selfish collecting of material things (12:17, 18), and the prodigal's reckless selling of his goods (15:13). On the other hand, he recognizes that the messiah will gather the elect (3:17), and cites Jesus' principle that "he who does not gather with me scatters" (11:23).

In Jn. the fragments from the feeding of the five thousand are gathered up (6:12, 13). Christian workers gather fruit unto life eternal (4:36), and Christ's mission is to gather into one the children of God scattered abroad (11:52). Fruitless branches, however, are gathered and burned (15:6). Jesus often gathers his disciples to Gethsemane (18:2), and the chief priests and Pharisees gather or convene a council (11:47).

In Acts there are references to the church gathering for prayer (4:31), instruction (11:26), information (14:27; 15:30), consultation (15:6) and the breaking of bread (20:7, 8). The Jewish religious leaders assemble (4:5); so do Herod and Pilate

(4:26, 27). In Pisidian Antioch practically the whole city gathers to hear the word of God (13:44).

The only instance of synagō in Paul occurs in 1 Cor. 5:4 where believers assemble to deal with a case of incest requiring excommunication (→ Destroy, art. olethros NT 3).

In Rev. we read of gathering for the great eschatological battle (16:14, 16; 19:19; 20:8) and for the great supper of God (19:17).

episynagō is used in Jesus' lament over Jerusalem (Matt. 23:37; Lk. 13:34), in eschatological passages speaking of the gathering of the elect (Mk. 13:27; Matt. 24:31), and in connection with crowds gathering about Jesus (Mk. 1:33; Lk. 12:1). In Lk. 17:37 episynagō is used in a warning: "As surely as vultures find the carcass, so surely will divine judgement come; therefore always be ready!" (Oxford Annotated Bible, 1271; → Bird NT).

The verb syllegō is utilized for collecting grapes (Matt. 7:16; Lk. 6:44), good fish (Matt. 13:48), and of gathering up the tares for destruction (Matt. 13:28, 29, 30, 40, 41).

trygaō appears as a stylistic variation for syllegō in Lk. 6:44. In Rev. 14:18, 19 it speaks of gathering the clusters of the vine where the wine press of God's wrath is in view.

Several other words refer to gathering together (cf. Latin congregare), but are used sparingly: (1) systrephō in Acts 28:3, of Paul's gathering a bundle of sticks; (2) athroizō in Lk. 24:33, of the eleven apostles and others gathered together in Jerusalem; (3) synathroizō in Acts 12:12, of the believers assembled in the home of John Mark's mother; (4) epathroizomai in Lk. 11:29 of crowds gathered.

The noun episynagōgē in 2 Thess. 2:1 refers to the "gathering together" of believers to Christ at the Parousia (cf. Latin congregatio). A. A. Trites σκορπίζω

σκορπίζω (skorpizō), scatter, disperse, distribute; διασκορπίζω (diaskorpizō), scatter, disperse, waste; διαλύω (dialyō), break up, dissolve, disperse; διασπείρω (diaspeirō), scatter; διασπορά (diaspora), dispersion.

CL The verb skorpizō is probably adopted from the Macedonian dialect about the time of Alexander. It means scatter, disperse. Examples tend to be late: Hecataeus in Phrynichus (p. 218); Strabo 4, 4, 6; Pseudo-Lucian, Asinus 32; Aelianus, Varia Historia 13, 45; Josephus, Ant. 16, 10. diaskorpizō also means scatter, disperse. It appears in Aelianus, Varia Historia 13, 46; Polybius 1, 47, 4; 27, 2, 10; and Josephus, Ant. 8, 404. diaspeirō speaks of scattering (e.g., Sophocles and Herodotus). In the Christian era it is sometimes used in the passive of churches (cf. Lucian, Toxaris 33; Iamblichus, De vita Pythagorica 35, 253; Josephus, Ant. 7, 244; 12, 278). dialyō, which generally means break up, dissolve, can be used of the dispersing of a crowd (Herodotus 8, 11; Josephus, Ant. 20, 124).

OT In the LXX diaspeirō appears approximately 60 times, diaskorpizō around 50, skorpizō about 14 and dialyō about a dozen times. These represent quite a number of Hebrew verbs, the chief of which are pûṣ, nāpaṣ and zārâh. The first of these verbs is used generally intransitively of those who disperse themselves and are scattered; e.g., a people (Gen. 11:4; Num. 10:35; 1 Sam. 11:11; 14:34; Ps. 68:1 [2]; Ezek. 46:18) or a flock (Ezek. 34:5; Zech. 13:7). Similarly, nāpaṣ is used reflexively of a people dispersing themselves and being scattered (1 Sam. 13:11; Isa. 33:3; cf. Gen. 9:19) as well as transitively of dashing or shattering a people (Jer. 13:14; 51[28]:23).

The verb zārâh means to scatter, cast loosely about, spread (e.g., Exod. 32:20; Num. 17:2[16:37]; Mal. 2:3). It can mean to winnow, that is, disperse by casting up and scattering in the wind (Isa. 30:24; Jer. 4:11; Ruth 3:2). At times it speaks of the routing of enemies (Jer. 15:7; Isa. 41:16; Ezek. 5:2), or the dispersing of the nations (Lev. 26:33; Ezek. 5:10; 6:5; 30:26).

NT skorpizō occurs only 5 times in the NT, once in connection with the persecution of Christians (Jn. 16:32) and once in the pastoral allegory of Jn. 10, where the "wolf snatches the sheep and scatters them" (Jn. 10:12). Both Matt. and Lk. draw attention to the missionary principle enunciated by Jesus: "He who is not with me is against me, and he who does not gather with me scatters" (Matt. 12:30 = Lk. 11:23). Jesus here takes the theme of gathering and scattering which is applied in the OT to the people of God (Isa. 40:11; 49:6; Ezek. 34:13, 16) and applies it to his own significance in the end-time. The comparable inverted form of the saying, "he that is not against us is for us" (Mk. 9:40; Lk. 9:50) occurs in the context of casting out demons. "But they are not contradictory, if the one was spoken to the indifferent about themselves, and the other to the disciples about someone else" (A. H. McNeile, The Gospel according to St. Matthew, 1915, 177; cf. D. Hill, The Gospel of Matthew, 1972, 217). Paul uses the verb once in a quotation from Ps. 112:9 when he is advocating charity and benevolence (2 Cor. 9:9).

diaskorpizō (9 times in NT) refers on occasion to the squandering of resources, either one's own or those entrusted to him by another (Lk. 15:13; 16:1). The verb also highlights the persecution and dispersion of the messianic community, for the "shepherd" will be smitten and the "sheep" scattered (Mk. 14:27; Matt. 26:31; cf. Zech. 13:7). Luke uses it in the Magnificat to express Mary's confidence in God's ability to turn tables on the lofty (Lk. 1:51). A striking instance of the scattering of the proud appears in the case of Judas the Galilean, whose followers are dispersed when he is discredited as a messianic pretender (Acts 5:37). Matthew twice contrasts "scattering" and "gathering" in an argumentum ad hominem involving sowing and reaping (Matt. 25:24, 26). John sees the mission of Jesus embracing Gentiles as well as Jews, in order that he might "gather into one the children of God who were scattered abroad" (Jn. 11:52).

The verb dialyō appears only once in the NT when Gamaliel draws attention to the futility of the revolt led by Theudas and the subsequent dispersal of his followers (Acts 5:36).

The verb diaspeirō is used 3 times of the dispersion of the early Christians through persecution (Acts 8:1; 11:19). The beneficent result of such circumstances was the proclamation of the Christian message in new areas; the persecution paved the way for missionary advance. It is not surprising, then, to find an epistle directed to "God's elect, strangers in the world, scattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia and Bithynia" (1 Pet. 1:1). The word diaspora also appears in Jas. 1:1 of "the Twelve Tribes dispersed throughout the world", while the customary usage of the LXX is maintained in Jn. 7:35, where it is a technical term for the "dispersion of the Jews among the Gentiles" (cf. Deut. 30:4; Ps. 146[147]:2).

A. A. Trites

→ Foreign, → Seed, Harvest

(a). Arndt, 187, 789 f.; S. W. Baron, A Social and Religious History of the Jews, I–XV, 1952–73²; BDB, 62 f., 867 f.; J. Bright, A History of Israel, 1972²; M. Grant, The Jews in the Roman World, 1973; T. Nicol, "Dispersion", International Standard Bible Encyclopaedia, ed. J. Orr, II 855–59; K. L. Schmidt, diaspora, TDNT II 98–104; W. L. Walker, "Gather", International Standard Bible Encyclopaedia, III 1177 f. On the dispersion of the Jews generally see W. Förster, Palestinian Judaism in New Testament Times, 1964; F. C. Grant, Ancient Judaism and the New Testament, 1960; M. Hengel, Judaism and Hellenism, I–II, 1975; Moore, Judaism, I–III; T. Reinach, "Diaspora", JE IV 559–74; S. Safrai, M. Stern, D. Flusser and W. C. van Unnik, eds., The Jewish People in the First Century, I, 1974; J. A. Sanders, "Dispersion", IDB I 854 ff.; Schürer, I–II; F. Zweig, "Israel and the Diaspora", Judaism 7, 1958, 147–50.
(b). A. Causse, Les Dispersés d'Israël, 1929; J. Juster, Les Juifs dans l'Empire romain, 1914; K. G. Kuhn, "Die inneren Gründe der jüdischen Ausbreitung", Deutsche Theologie 2, 1935, 9–17; K. Müller, ed., Die Aktion Jesu und die Reaktion der Kirche, 1972.

Generation

γενεά

γενεά (genea), generation, family, clan, race, age; γενεαλογία (genealogia), genealogy, family tree; γενεαλογέω (genealogeō), trace descent; ἀγενεαλόγητος (agenealogētos), without genealogy.

CL & OT genea, derived from the root gen-, means birth, also (noble) descent, then descendants, family, race (i.e., those bound together by a common origin). Those born at the same time constitute a generation ("three generations of men are a hundred years", Hdt. 2, 142). Associated with this is the meaning: the body of one's contemporaries, an age. In the LXX genea is almost always the translation of dôr and means generation, in which case the whole history of Israel is often regarded as a work of God extending through many generations ("from generation to generation", "from all generations").

The noun genos, formed from the same stem and related to the verb ginomai (→ Birth), is frequently translated by race (except where it corresponds to the Hebrew mîn = "kind" in Gen. 1). Both in the LXX and in the NT its prime meaning is nation, people or tribe, and therefore is discussed under → people.

NT genea occurs 43 times in the NT, mainly in the Gospels and Acts; on the other hand its compounds are found only rarely: genealogeomai occurs once, genealogia twice, agenealogētos once.

1. The meaning of the word in the NT comes from the idea of historical sequence referred to above. It occurs 4 times in Matt. 1:17, in the context of Christ's genealogy. The remote past is denoted – as in OT and late Jewish usage – by the phrase apo geneōn, from (all) generations (Col. 1:26; Acts 15:21). Similarly the unending future is expressed by eis geneas kai geneas, "to all generations" (lit. "to generations and generations") (Lk. 1:50; 1:48; Eph. 3:21). Acts 13:36 refers to David's generation, and Acts 14:16; Eph. 3:5 to earlier generations. genealogia occurs in the NT only in 1 Tim. 1:4 and Titus 3:9, and alludes specifically to the practice of searching back through one's family tree in order to establish ancestry. On any straightforward exegesis, those doing this can only have been Jews who, starting out from OT and other genealogies, were propagating all kinds of "Jewish myths", quite probably pre-Christian gnostic speculations. But it is also possible that the Ebionites were using similar arguments to attack the doctrine of the miraculous birth of Jesus which was circulating in the Christian church (cf. the genealogies in Matt. 1 and Lk. 3). (On the genealogies of Jesus → Son.)

In Gen. 14 → Melchizedek is introduced without any such statement as is usual elsewhere in the OT regarding a person's ancestry ("son of . . ."). For that reason he is described in Heb. 7:3 as agenealogētos, and in 7:6 as mē genealogoumenos, i.e. he can have had no natural ancestry like others. The author of Heb. is certainly not attempting to call in question indirectly the true humanity of Jesus. For him this is bound up with his true divinity.

2. Almost all the remaining NT genea-passages speak of "this generation" (hē genea hautē). This construction in Greek, with the demonstrative regularly following its noun, is clearly the equivalent of haddōr hazzeh. It is interesting that the OT does not know this stereotyped phrase in its NT sense, though Ps. 12:7 comes very close to it (cf. Gen. 7:1; Exod. 1:6; Deut. 1:35). In these passages the demonstrative has a pejorative character, i.e. the reference is to a class of people who in this world stand over against the children of light and are further described as faithless (Mk. 9:19), faithless and perverse (Matt. 17:17), adulterous (Mk. 8:38), evil and adulterous (Matt. 12:39), evil (Lk. 11:29), crooked (Acts 2:40), crooked and perverse (Phil. 2:15). The Song of Moses in Deut. 32 (vv. 5 and 20) seems here to have had a certain influence on the wording. In these passages the temporal, "genealogical" element is completely absent. The emphasis lies entirely on the sinfulness of this class, this type of people.

3. In Jesus' discourse about the future the phrase clearly bears this second meaning: Mk. 13:30; Matt. 24:34; Lk. 21:32. Indeed, in every other NT passage where hautē forms part of this phrase, it has the same pejorative character. But since the discourse refers to this genea "passing away", the temporal, genealogical element is also present, though of secondary importance. By using this phrase, Jesus appears to set a time limit for certain events, and the question then is: Which events are they? There are various conflicting views.

(a) Only a comprehensive analysis of Mk. 13 and its parallels can clarify the situation, but the following brief observations may be made. Mk. 13:1–36 with its 600 words is the most extensive complete section within the basic synoptic tradition ("triplex traditio marciana", de Solages). Like Mk. 4, it is an important piece of early Christian didachē (teaching); indeed the Gospel of Mk. as a whole bears the marks not of kērygma (proclamation) but of didachē. (Note the use in Mk. of the word-group didaskein; didachē; didaskalos; → teaching, and in particular Mk. 1:22, 27; 4:1, 2; 11:18; 12:38.) In Mk. 13:1–4 a purely didactic situation is outlined as the Sitz im Leben. Attempts have been made, on the basis of literary criticism, to exclude a greater or lesser portion of Mk. 13:1–36 as being of non-Marcan origin. Such attempts have failed, however, since both in terms of word-frequency and of grammar the whole passage is thoroughly Marcan in character. It is very significant that a succession of recent investigators have made their incisions at totally different places. To call the whole chapter (or part of it) "apocalyptic" can only be misleading, for there is a complete absence of apocalyptic features: history written as prophecy, descriptions of heaven, astronomical speculations, symbolism based on animals or colours or numbers, visions, heavenly messages brought by angels, pseudonymity, precise expressions of time, portrayal of conditions in heaven or hell. Moreover, where isolated ideas or phrases are borrowed from apocalyptic, these are re-moulded in typically non-apocalyptic, indeed anti-apocalyptic fashion. The imperatives which dominate the whole chapter are essentially non-apocalyptic. Many modern form-critics see the passage as a hortatory discourse of early Christian didachē which originated as separate elements but was put together in its present form by the author and by the church tradition available to him. In the context of the whole gospel it is clearly presented as a farewell discourse. This type of address occurs frequently in the literature of pre-Christian times and of late Judaism, as well as in the rest of the NT. Its essential and recurring features are warnings of future apostasy and persecution, the promise of coming redemption and the exhortation to watchfulness.

(b) It is precisely these features that are present in Mk. 13 and its parallels, coupled with a tradition according to which Jesus announces the coming destruction of → Jerusalem (1–4; 14–20). The Lucan parallel to Mk. 13:14–20 (Lk. 21:20–24) shows clearly enough how Lk. understood Mk.'s cryptic language, but as Dodd, Michaelis and others have shown, this by no means implies that Lk. was prophesying after the event. Such a conclusion is suggested only by a theological interpretation, which sees Jerusalem as the embodiment of the people of Israel, whose hearts God had hardened in judgment, whilst the "times of the Gentiles" (kairoi ethnōn), in the sense of the "times when salvation comes to the Gentiles", had already begun (cf. Acts 28:24–28; Rom. 11:25, 26). These times cannot be calculated in advance (Lk. 17:20 f.). But they will soon come to an end with the coming of the → kingdom of God, the → Son of man, and the → Day of the Lord. (Lk. 18:8 and 21:34–36 suggest that Lk. expected that the end may come at any moment within his own lifetime.) Whilst in Lk. the "end" of Jerusalem and the "end of the world" are clearly separated from one another, Matt. has closely linked the two together. The sentence pronounced upon Jerusalem was available both to him and to Lk. in the logia source (Matt. 23:37–39 = Lk. 13:34, 35) and in the special material (Matt. 22:7; Lk. 19:41–44; 23:28–32). This close association in Matt. is shown by the form of the question in 24:3, and with particular clarity by the expression "immediately" in 24:29 (eutheōs), and in general by the entirely new version of the discourse which he gives. The expression synteleisthai in Mk. 13:4 is not by any means a technical term of apocalyptic as has been asserted (Acts 21:27 being quoted in support!), and the adverbial phrase of time in Mk. 13:24 ("but in those days after that tribulation") is linguistically semitic and ambiguous, telling us very little. Mk. occupies, so to speak, a middle position, as indeed he does in textual matters throughout. (Cf. de Solages' conclusive arguments; see bibliography below.)

Only by such considerations can the word in Mk. 13:30 and its parallels be explained. In Matt. it has the sense of this generation, and according to the first evangelist, Jesus expected the end of this age (→ Time, art. aiōn) to occur in connection with the judgment on Jerusalem at the end of that first generation (see Mk. 9:1 and Matt. 16:18). But in view of the happenings of A.D. 70 and their theological relation to the preaching of Paul, Lk. understood genea as a class of people, perhaps even as Israel. Since the special material and the logia source do not link the judgment on Jerusalem and the end of the world, and since the text of Mk. 13 in general (especially vv. 13 and 24) has an indefinite and open ring, we must conclude that in this regard Jesus expressed himself in an ambiguous manner. The evangelists, however, were not copyists, but witnesses who, led by the Spirit, testified to the word they had heard and brought it to bear upon their own times.

Acts 8:33 is a literal rendering of Isa. 53:8. The passage is interpreted christologically, but the precise interpretation presents difficulties. It is fairly certain that "generation" is used in its genealogical sense. However, E. Haenchen thinks that it may be understood as referring to "spiritual descendants". The sentence would then mean: "The number of his disciples will grow incalculably, because he has become the Exalted" (The Acts of the Apostles, 1971, 312). R. Morgenthaler

4. The events referred to in Mk. 13:30 par. Matt. 24:34 and Lk. 21:32 have generally been taken to refer to cosmic events associated with the second coming of Christ. (For the survey of views see G. R. Beasley-Murray, Jesus and the Future: An Examination of the Criticism of the Eschatological Discourse, Mark 13, with Special Reference to the Little Apocalypse Theory, 1954; cf. the same author's A Commentary on Mark Thirteen, 1957.) But if these events were expected within the first generation of Christians (and "generation" is the most probable translation of genea), either Jesus or the evangelists were mistaken. The failure of events to materialize has been put down to a postponement of the catastrophe and to a telescoping of events, comparable with seeing a mountain range at a distance. The perspective makes the mountains appear to stand close together, and indeed relatively speaking they do stand close together. However, there is an alternative interpretation of the passage which points out that insufficient attention has been paid to the prophetic language of the passage as a whole.

The imagery of cosmic phenomena is used in the OT to describe this-worldly events and, in particular, historical acts of judgment. The following passages are significant, not least because of their affinities with the present context: Isa. 13:10 (predicting doom on Babylon); Isa. 34:4 (referring to "all the nations", but especially to Edom); Ezek. 32:7 (concerning Egypt); Amos 8:9 (the Northern Kingdom of Israel); Joel 2:10 (Judah). The cosmic imagery draws attention to the divine dimension of the event in which the judgment of God is enacted. The use of Joel 2:28–32 in Acts 2:15–21 provides an instance of the way in which such prophetic cosmic imagery is applied to historical events in the present (cf. also Lk. 10:18; Jn. 12:31; 1 Thess. 4:16; 2 Pet. 3:10 ff.; Rev. 6:12–17; 18:1). Other OT passages relevant to the interpretation of the present context are Isa. 19:1; 27:13; Dn. 7:13; Deut. 30:4; Zech. 2:6; 12:10–14; Mal. 3:1. In view of this, Mk. 13:24–30 may be interpreted as a prophecy of judgment on Israel in which the → Son of man will be vindicated. Such a judgment took place with the destruction of Jerusalem, the desecration of the → Temple and the scattering of Israel – all of which happened within the lifetime of "this generation." The disintegration of Israel as the people of God coincides with the inauguration of the → kingdom of the Son of man. Such an interpretation fits the preceding discourse and the introductory remarks of the disciples (Mk. 13:1 ff. par.). It would not, however, pre-empt the → judgment of mankind in general. (See further J. Marcellus Kik, Matthew XXIV: An Exposition, 1948; R. T. France, Jesus and the Old Testament, 1971, 227–39.) → Present: The Parousia and Eschatology in the NT C. Brown

(a). E. L. Abel, "The Genealogies of Jesus HO CHRISTOS", NTS 20, 1973–74, 203–10; G. R. Beasley-Murray, Jesus and the Future: An Examination of the Criticism of the Eschatological Discourse, Mark 13, with Special Reference to the Little Apocalypse Theory, 1954; and A Commentary on Mark Thirteen, 1957; F. Büchsel, genea etc., TDNT I 662–65; C. H. Dodd, "The Fall of Jerusalem and the 'Abomination of Desolation' ", Journal of Roman Studies, 1947, reprinted in More New Testament Studies, 1968, 69–83; L. Gaston, No Stone on Another: Studies in the Significance of the Fall of Jerusalem in the Synoptic Gospels, 1970; T. F. Glasson, His Appearing and His Kingdom: The Christian Hope in the Light of its History, 1953; M. D. Johnson, The Purpose of the Biblical Genealogies: With Special Reference to the Setting of Genealogies of Jesus, Society for New Testament Studies Monograph Series 8, 1969; W. Kelber, The Kingdom in Mark: A New Place and a New Time, 1974; J. M. Kik, Matthew XXIV: An Exposition, 1948, reissued in An Eschatology of Victory, 1971; W. G. Kümmel, Promise and Fulfilment: The Eschatological Message of Jesus, 1961²; A. L. Moore, The Parousia in the New Testament, 1966; G. Neville, The Advent Hope: A Study of the Content of Mark XIII, 1961; B. de Solages, A Greek Synopsis of the Gospels, 1959; W. Strawson, Jesus and the Future Life: A Study in the Synoptic Gospels, 1959; R. R. Wilson, "The Old Testament Genealogies in Recent Research", JBL 94, 1975, 169–89.
(b). G. Bolsinger, "Die Ahnenreihe Christi nach Matthäus und Lukas", BuK 12, 1957, 112 ff.; F. Busch, Zum Verständnis der synoptischen Eschatologie, Mk. 13 neu untersucht, 1938; J. Conrad, Die junge Generation im Alten Testament, AzTh 1/40, 1970; E. Grässer, Das Problem der Parusieverzögerung in den synoptischen Evangelien und in der Apostelgeschichte, 1957; G. Harder, "Das eschatologische Geschichtsbild der sogenannten kleine Apokalypse Mk. 13", ThV, 1952, 71 ff.; M. Meinertz, " 'Dieses Geschlecht' im Neuen Testament", BZ 1, 1957, 283 ff.; A. Pfleiderer, "Über die Komposition der eschatologischen Rede Mt. 24:4 ff.", Jahrbuch für Deutsche Theologie, 1868; A. Piganiol, Observation sur la Date de l'Apocalypse synoptique, 1924; E. des Places, "Ipsius enim genus sumus (Act. 17, 28)", Biblica 43, 1962, 388 ff.; G. C. B. Pünjer, "Die Wiederkunftsreden Jesu", ZWT 2, 1878, 153–208; A. Schlatter, Der Evangelist Matthäus, 1929, 554; E. F. Strömer, Die grosse Zukunftsrede des Herrn nach Matthäus, 24, 1922.

Gift, Pledge, Corban

A gift (dōron and related words) is qualified by the reason for which it is given and the end which it is intended to serve. Its characteristic feature is not the act of giving (didōmi), but the intention behind it. This can be to fulfil an obligation or cancel a debt. But a gift may also be a present given without ulterior motive. When man gives something to God, his gift has the character of an offering (→ Sacrifice). But in the NT the theological emphasis lies, significantly, on the idea of gift as a present from God to man, In this connection → Jesus Christ and his redeeming work appear as the one great fundamental gift of God. There is also the gift of the Holy → Spirit with his various charismata (→ Grace). The former gives man union and → fellowship with Christ; the latter equips him for service arising from this fellowship. The arrabōn, first instalment, earnest, is a more specific idea, denoting the pledge which guarantees fulfilment (→ Fullness) of the → promise.

ἀρραβών

ἀρραβών (arrabōn), first instalment, down payment, deposit, pledge, earnest.

CL & OT The Gk. word arrabōn (borrowed from the Semitic, cf. Heb. ʿērāḇôn) is a legal concept from the language of business and trade. It is found only rarely (Isaeus, Aristotle and later grammarians such as Suidas) and means: (1) an instalment, with which a man secures a legal claim upon a thing as yet unpaid for; (2) an earnest, an advance payment, by which a contract becomes valid in law; (3) in one passage (Gen. 38:17 ff.) a pledge. In each case it is a matter of payment by which the person concerned undertakes to give further payment to the recipient (Arndt, 109). A metaphorical use is also possible (e.g. skilfulness as an arrabōn of life, Antiphon, Frag. 123, 6).

NT In all three passages where the word occurs in the NT the Holy → Spirit is referred to.

1. Eph. 1:14 interprets the other two passages: the Spirit as the present earnest of our future → inheritance guarantees our complete, final salvation, i.e. eternal communion with God. This statement, as also 2 Cor. 1:22, is probably associated with → baptism (→ Seal). In the sealing of the believer, the Holy Spirit is given to the human → heart (kardia) as an earnest. The future reality represented by the earnest of the Spirit appears in 2 Cor. 5:5 as the "house" expected from heaven, which will one day replace the present "tent", our earthly body. Thus in Paul the Spirit is not the earnest of a soul freed from its earthly body, but of a new existence in an immortal body (heavenly garment; → Clothe).

2. Similarly Rom. 8:23 speaks of "the first fruits [aparchē] of the Spirit". Here the genitive "of the Spirit" explains the meaning of aparchē (gift of firstfruits; → Sacrifice; cf. 2 Cor. 1:22; 5:5). E. Schweizer holds that aparchē, like arrabōn, does not mean a preliminary participation in the Spirit. The present reality of the Spirit is a sign and pledge of that which is to come (TDNT VI 422). In Polycarp 8:1 Jesus Christ is referred to as arrabōn. But the NT avoids this and speaks of him only as engyos (surety; → Covenant).

In all three NT passages, however, the arrabōn should not be understood to imply that, in giving the earnest of the Spirit, God is legally our debtor. Even the instalment of the Spirit remains a free, undeserved gift of God to men.

O. Becker

δῶρον

δῶρον (dōron), gift, present; δωρεά (dōrea), gift; δωρεάν (dōrean), as a present, gratis; δωρέομαι (dōreomai), give, present; δώρημα (dōrēma), present; δίδωμι (didōmi), give, grant; δόμα (doma), gift; προσφορά (prosphora), presentation, offering, gift.

CL dōron (found already in Mycenean Greek) is from the same root as didōmi. metadidōmi means to give a share in; dosis and doma, gift, are infrequent. The derivative vb. dōreomai, present, is used in the mid. (originally also in the act.). Corresponding to it are the Attic noun dōrēma present, and dōrea, present, gift, bestowal. The acc. of the latter, dōrean, is used adverbially in the sense of gratis, undeservedly, as a present.

In extra-Biblical use, dōron (similarly dōrea) denotes especially a complimentary gift. As a gift from the gods (e.g. in Homer), it can also mean dispensation. Brought by men to the gods, dōron denotes a consecrated gift. It can also mean tax, tribute, or bribe.

OT 1. The LXX uses dōron to render several Hebrew words with the following principal meanings: (a) generally, a present such as men give to one another (Gen. 24:53; 32:13, 18 f. and passim); (b) tribute (Jdg. 3:15, 17 f. and passim; Jdg. 5:19 = booty); (c) bribe (Exod. 23:7 f.; Deut. 16:19; 27:25; Ps. 15:5 and passim; Deut. 10:17 and passim; negatively when the reference is to God; (d) most frequent is the cultic meaning offering, Heb. qorbān, especially in Lev. and Num. (Lev. 1:2 f., 10, 14; 2:1, 4 ff. etc.; Num. 5:15; 6:14, 21 etc.; also for minḥâh in Gen. 4:4; for nēḏer in Deut. 12:11 and passim), often with the vb. prospherō, to bring, to offer (prosphora, offering; the act of offering); (e) a gift brought to God in recognition of his greatness and power (by kings, Pss. 68:30; 72:10; by peoples, Isa. 18:7, cf. Ps. 68:32 etc.); (f) a gift from God (Gen. 30:20).

dōron rarely appears in late Jewish literature. dōrēma appears in the LXX only once, in the Apocrypha (Sir. 31[34]:18).

2. dōreomai, rare in the LXX, stands for 3 Hebrew verbs having the sense of "giving": (a) by men to one another (nāṯan, Est. 8:1; also Prov. 4:2); (b) by man to God (qorbān, Lev. 7:15 [LXX v. 5]); (c) by God to men (zāḇaḏ, Gen. 30:20). Much more frequent is didōmi, which as a rule renders the Hebrew nāṯan, to give (likewise used in this threefold way), but also a large number of other verbs.

3. dōrea occurs frequently in late Jewish literature, but in the canonical books always in the adverbial acc. form dōrean. It corresponds in meaning to the Heb. term ḥinnām: (a) for nothing (without payment, Exod. 21:2, 11; Num. 11:5; 2 Sam. 24:24 and passim; without recompense, Gen. 29:15; Jer. 22:13 and passim); (b) without cause (1 Sam. 19:5; 25:31; Ps. 35:7 and passim); (c) in vain (Ezek. 6:10; Mal. 1:10).

NT 1. (a) In the NT dōron (19 times) stands once for the human gift (Rev. 11:10; cf. Matt. 7:11 par. Lk. 11:13 doma) and once for the divine gift (Eph. 2:8). For the latter dōrea is found more often (e.g. Jn. 4:10; Acts 2:38; Rom. 5:15, 17; 2 Cor. 9:15; Eph. 4:7; Heb. 6:4). In Rom. 5:16 and Jas. 1:17 dōrēma is used (in the latter passage together with dosis). For the rest dōron is the offering (e.g. Matt. 5:23 f.; 23:18 f.; Mk. 7:11; Lk. 21:1–4; Heb. 5:1; 8:3 f.; 9:9; 11:4; while in Matt. 2:11 it is the gift of adoration). The occasional combination with prospherō to bring, offer, underlines the connection with the OT sacrifice system. In this sense dōron is parallel to thysia, offering (→ Sacrifice), and prosphora, offering.

(b) didōmi (416 times in the NT) is found in all the nuances of presenting, giving, bestowing, granting, etc., both (i) among men (Matt. 7:11a; Acts 20:35 and passim; also dōreomai Mk. 15:45; and metadidōmi Lk. 3:11; Rom. 1:11; 12:8; Eph. 4:28; 1 Thess. 2:8); and (ii) by God (Matt. 7:11b; 1 Jn. 4:13; Rev. 2:7, 17; cf. also 3:21 and passim; dōreomai 2 Pet. 1:3). The meaning to offer also occurs (Lk. 2:24), while a metaphorical meaning is found in Mk. 10:37; Acts 13:20 and passim.

(c) dōrean (8 times in the NT) has the threefold meaning common in the OT: (i) gratis, gratuitously, for nothing (Matt. 10:8; Rom. 3:24; 2 Cor. 11:7; 2 Thess. 3:8; Rev. 21:6; 22:17); (ii) without cause (Jn. 15:25, OT quotation from Pss. 35:19; 69:4); (iii) in vain (Gal. 2:21).

2. dōron and didōmi as cultic terms (→ Sacrifice) are found in contexts where the subject-matter is the regular offering (Matt. 5:23 f.; 8:4; Lk. 2:24; in Lk. 21:1, 4 with the meaning money-offering). There are also other passages (Mk. 7:11; Matt. 15:5) which emphasize, in line with OT prophecy, that offerings (even in a metaphorical sense) are no substitute for obedience to God's will (cf. Isa. 1:10–17; Mic. 6:6–8; also Deut. 10:12 f.). The problem of the sacrificial cult is squarely faced in the Epistle to the Hebrews (5:1 ff.; 8:3 f. and passim), where a contrast is drawn between the merely temporary OT system with its offerings (dōron and thysia) made by men, and the final, once-for-all offering of Christ (prosphora and thysia) (7:26–28; 9:25 ff.; 10:10 ff. and passim; cf. also Eph. 5:2).

3. This opens up the NT teaching that God is a God who gives, and that his giving is seen supremely in the redeeming work of Christ (→ Redemption).

(a) There are general statements to the effect that God "gave" his → Son (Jn. 3:16) and passages where Jesus as such is referred to as "the gift of God" (dōrea, Jn. 4:10). The statement that Christ has "given" himself for us, for our sins, appears as a credal formula in Gal. 1:4; 1 Tim. 2:6 (for literature on NT credal formulae → Confess).

(b) In addition there are references which point particularly to Jesus' death on the cross: Jesus gave his life as a ransom for many (Mk. 10:45 par.; cf. Jn. 10:15b). Likewise Lk.'s account of the Last Supper (22:19) speaks of Christ's body "given for you."

(c) This gives to Christians the assurance of belonging for ever to the → church of Christ. Jn. in particular sees the basis for this assurance in the fact that the church has been given to Christ by God (10:28 f.; cf. 17:6 ff.). Moreover, to belong to this church means to share in the gift of eternal → life (10:28; cf. 3:15 ff.; 11:25 f.; 17:3).

(d) In Paul the gift-motif is incorporated into his preaching of the free and unmerited grace of God (N.B. dōrean, Rom. 3:24) which declares the sinner justified "without works" (→ Righteousness; → Grace; → Reconciliation). dōrea or dōrēma (Rom. 5:15–17; 2 Cor. 9:15), taken together with charisma, sums up the whole of God's saving work of pardon, justification and reconciliation (cf. also Eph. 2:8).

(e) God is praised as the giver of all good gifts in general (Jas. 1:17; cf. Matt. 7:11b etc.). All who call upon him for his gifts can do so with the utmost confidence (Matt. 7:7). Yet the one great gift which he gives to his church is his → Spirit (2 Cor. 1:22; 5:5; 1 Thess. 4:8; Lk. 11:13; cf. Acts 2:38; 8:17; 10:47; 19:6; also the OT quotations in Acts 2:17 f. [Joel 2:28 ff.] and Heb. 8:10 [Jer. 31:33]). In the church, all other "gifts" (usually charisma, → Grace) are the results of this one gift (Rom. 12:3 ff.; 1 Cor. 12:1 ff.; cf. also 2 Pet. 1:3). In the letters of Rev. 2 and 3 the gift of eternal life is promised to him who "overcomes" trial and temptation.

(f) doma, gift, occurs only at Matt. 7:11 (cf. Lk. 4:6); Eph. 4:8 (on the interpretation of this verse → Heaven, art. anabainō); and Phil. 4:17.

4. The man who has received Christ as a free gift, responds to the twofold → commandment (Matt. 22:37–40) by a twofold giving:

(a) He gives himself to God (cf. 2 Cor. 8:5 and similar passages). According to the NT, this is the only legitimate "offering" which can and should be brought by men to God (Rom. 12:1 and passim). It includes the "sacrifices" of word and deed (Heb. 13:15 f.; 1 Pet. 2:5), and may mean even the laying down of one's life for Christ (Phil. 2:17).

(b) He gives himself to other men, as required by the "new commandment" (Jn. 13:34). This shows itself in the first instance within the church, where the giving should be a reflection of God's giving. To give simply and without ulterior motives (Rom. 12:8) is the way in which God gives (Jas. 1:5). See also 2 Cor. 9:7 on God's love for the cheerful giver (dotēs, found only here in the NT); Mk. 12:41–44 = Lk. 21:1–4 (Jesus' verdict on the poor widow's gift); and the precepts of the Sermon on the Mount (Matt. 5:42; cf. Lk. 6:38). But the Christian, having first received the gift of the gospel, is concerned to pass this gift on to others. This is giving in its profoundest sense (Rom. 1:11; 1 Thess. 2:8; cf. Matt. 10:8b).

H. Vorländer

κορβᾶν

κορβᾶν (korban), corban, gift; κορβανᾶς (korbanas), temple treasury.

OT The Gk. word korban is transliterated from the Heb. qorbān and denotes a gift consecrated to God (Lev. 1:2; 22:27; 23:14; Num. 7:25; Ezek. 20:28; 40:43). Many scholars think that these passages reflect the outlook of post-exilic Judaism. The offerings mentioned include both sacrifices and gifts.

Later Judaism used the word in a more technical sense. Josephus mentions those who "dedicate themselves to God, as a corban, which denotes what the Greeks call a gift" (Ant. 4, 73; cf. Ap. 1, 167). Release from the vow could be obtained by payment of an appropriate sum. Rab. practice was formulated in the Mishnah in the tractate on Nedarim (Vows), see especially sections 1, 3, 8, 9, 11 and the developments in the Babylonian Talmud (Ned. 1:4; 2:2; and 3:2). The rabbis appear to be divided over the extent to which a gift vowed as corban (also later termed kōnām) was binding. The Mishnah indicates that most of them held that duty to one's parents constituted grounds for release from a gift vowed to God. (Ned. 9:1). The Babylonian Talmud attributed this view to the school of Shammai, whereas that of Hillel took the more rigorist view. "If anyone expressly lays such a corban on his relatives, then they are bound by it and cannot receive anything from him that is covered by the corban" (Ned. 3:2). The context of these pronouncements show that the question was not so much the handing over of certain things to God but their withdrawal from use by specified persons.

NT The rigorist position which permitted a man to neglect the care of parents on the grounds that the gift is dedicated to God as corban was denounced by Jesus according to Mk. 7:11 (The par. in Matt. 15:5 uses dōron, gift, offering, instead of the technical term korban.) The act is condemned as an act of hypocrisy in the words of Isa. 29:13 (cf. Mk. 7:6 f.; Matt. 15:7). The Pharisaic teaching on this point is characterized as "tradition" which makes void the → "word of God" (Mk. 7:13). The scribes might have claimed the support of Deut. 23:21 ff. and Num. 30:1 ff. in teaching that vows could not be broken. But they had allowed obligation to something that was relatively trivial to take precedence over a fundamental, humanitarian → command (in this case the Fifth Commandment [Exod. 20:12, par. Deut. 5:16]).

korbanas (Matt. 27:6; cf. Josephus, War 2, 175) denotes the temple treasury in which everything offered as korban (or the price of its redemption) was collected.

The chief priests declined to put into it Judas' thirty pieces of silver on the grounds that they were "blood money." C. Brown

→ First, → Fruit, → Grace, Spiritual Gifts

(a). B. Ahern, "The Indwelling Spirit, Pledge of our Inheritance", CBQ 9, 1947, 179–89; J. Behm, arrabōn, TDNT I 475; M. Black, An Aramaic Approach to the Gospels and Acts, 1967³, 139; F. Büchsel, didōmi, TDNT II 166–73; J. D. M. Derrett, "KORBAN, HO ESTIN DŌRON", NTS 16, 1969–70, 364–68; N. Q. Hamilton, The Holy Spirit and Eschatology in St. Paul, 1957, 17–40; J. H. A. Hart, "Corban", JQR 19, 1907, 615–50; C. C. Oke, "A Suggestion with Regard to Rom. 8:23", Interpretation, 2, 1957, 455–60; K. H. Rengstorf, korban, TDNT III 860–66; S. S. Smalley, "Spiritual Gifts and I Corinthians 12–16", JBL 87, 1968, 427–33.
(b). SB I 711.

Glory, Honour

Two different Gk. word-groups are represented by the Eng. words glory and honour. From classical Gk. onwards timē denoted recognition of another's work by giving him the position and honours he merited. It is always something given to God or one's fellow-man (though not necessarily one's social superior). doxa is often used as a synonym, but in the Bible it is a quality belonging to God and is recognized by man only in response to him. It is more often translated glory. It suggests something which radiates from the one who has it, leaving an impression behind. As such, it is in applicable to relationships between men.

δόξα

δόξα (doxa), radiance, glory, repute; δοξάζω (doxazō), praise, glorify; ἔνδοξος (endoxos), honoured, glorious; ἐνδοξάζω (endoxazō), honour, glorify; συνδοξάζω (syndoxazō), glorify together; κενόδοξος (kenodoxos), desirous of praise, conceited, boastful; κενοδοξία (kenodoxia), desire for praise, conceit, vanity, illusion.

CL This word-group affords one of the clearest examples of change in meaning of a Gk. word, when it came under the influence of the Bible. The basic meaning of doxa in secular Gk. is opinion, conjecture. This ranges from the opinion about a person or thing that I am prepared to defend to the valuation placed on me by others, i.e. repute, praise.

Accordingly, the noun doxa in secular Gk. means expectation, view, opinion, conjecture, repute, praise, fame. The vb. doxazō means: think, imagine, suppose, magnify, praise, extol (→ Think, art. dokeō NT).

OT 1. The concepts of doxa and doxazō were transformed in the LXX. This is shown, for example, by the fact that the original meaning "opinion" is not found. The meanings praise and honour are shared with secular Gk. But whereas doxa is seldom used for the honour shown to a man (for this timē is employed), it is frequently used for the honour brought or given to God (cf. e.g. Ps. 29:1; Isa. 42:12). This usage meant losing contact with secular Gk. The meaning of pomp, power, earthly majesty is based on OT (Isa. 17:4; 35:2; Hag. 2:3). But above all, doxa expresses God's glory and power (Pss. 24:7 ff.; 29:3; Isa. 42:8). In spite of the new reference of the words, the general structure of their meaning remains unchanged, for in LXX also they are used for appearance, i.e. for the manifestation of a person, with special stress on the impression this creates on others. This aspect is essential for our understanding of the concept.

2. Behind this new meaning lies the Heb. OT concept of kāḇôḏ, glory, honour. The LXX represents this by doxa and gives it essentially the same meaning. When it is used of God, it does not mean God in his essential nature, but the luminous manifestation of his person, his glorious revelation of himself. Characteristically, kāḇôḏ is linked with verbs of seeing (Exod. 16:7; 33:18; Isa. 40:5), and appearing (Exod. 16:10; Deut. 5:24; Isa. 60:1). We may recognize this kāḇôḏ in creation (Ps. 19:1 [MT 19:2]; Isa. 6:3), but it expresses itself above all in salvation history, i.e. in God's great acts (Exod. 14:17 f.; Ps. 96:3), and especially in God's presence in the sanctuary (Exod. 40:34 f.; 1 Ki. 8:10 f.; Ps. 26:8), which can be conceived as fire (Lev. 9:23 f.; Ezek. 43:2; Exod. 24:17). In 1 Sam. 4:21 f. the loss of the ark of God to the Philistines meant that "The glory has departed from Israel". The event was reflected in the name Ichabod ('îḵāḇôḏ, where is the glory?). The ark symbolized the divine presence which could not be borne (1 Sam. 5 f.; cf. Exod. 33:17–23). In the last days a full manifestation of the kāḇôḏ was expected. Its purpose was to bring salvation to Israel (Isa. 60:1 f.; Ezek. 39:21 f.), but also to convert the nations (Ps. 96:3–9; Zech. 2:5–11 [MT 2:9–15]). This glory is normally found only in God, though in Ezek. 8:2; 1:7, 13 and Dan. 10:5 f. angelic beings show some of its characteristics.

3. The inter-testamental period showed a strong interest in the heavenly world. The concept of glory is not confined, as in the OT, to God's self-revelation. It is also applied to the realities of heaven; God, his throne, and the angels. In such cases glory may be used with a watered-down meaning, as an epithet which may be applied in the language of liturgy and hymns to almost any concept which is linked with God. Of importance is the notion that → Adam in paradise possessed glory but lost it through the Fall (cf. G. Kittel, TDNT II 246; SB IV 940 ff., 1138). This led to the idea that men too could share in the glory (but cf. Exod. 33:17–23; 34:29–36).

In Qumran it was expected that the elect would "inherit all the glory of Adam" (1QH 17:15; cf. CD 3:20). Apocalyptic writings also specially stressed the sharing of the saved in glory, while the rabbis described salvation rather as the vision of the glory of God. More nationalistic concepts understood the eschatological revelation of glory one-sidedly as a glorification of Jerusalem and Israel. Isa. 60:1 ff. was used as a proof-text (cf. SB IV 894, 960). The nations would be drawn by the visible manifestation of glory, would stream to Jerusalem and would accept the faith of Israel.

NT A. 1. doxa is found 165 times in NT, 77 cases being in the Pauline epistles (including Rom. 16 times; 1 Cor. 12 times; 2 Cor. 19 times), it also figures prominently in the Petrine letters (1 Pet. 10 times; 2 Pet. 5 times), the Johannine writings (Jn. 18 times; Rev. 17 times), and Lk. (13 times), though the word-group is completely lacking in 1, 2 and 3 Jn. John (23 times) is the chief user of doxazō, found more than 60 times in all. For other forms see A.3.

2. The meaning of doxa and doxazō is a continuation of the LXX usage and the underlying Heb. (cf. OT 1, 2 above). As a result, the ideas of opinion and conjecture are not found. We can separate the various shades of meaning as follows. The references given are representative instances.

(a) The meanings honour, fame, repute and in the case of the vb. to honour, praise, and the special uses to seek honour (Jn. 7:18; 8:50; 5:44; 1 Thess. 2:6) and to receive honour (Jn. 5:41, 44) belong to general Gk. usage. The specifically biblical connotation may be seen in expressions like "to give God glory" (Lk. 17:18 AV, RV; Acts 12:23; Rom. 4:20; Rev. 4:9; 11:13), "to the glory of God" (Rom. 15:7; 1 Cor. 10:31), in the so-called doxologies (Lk. 2:14; 19:38; Rom. 11:36; Gal. 1:5; Phil. 4:20; Eph. 3:21; 1 Tim. 1:17), and in application to Christ (Rom. 16:27; 2 Tim. 4:18; Heb. 13:21; 1 Pet. 4:11; 2 Pet. 3:18; Jude 25).

(b) When applied to men or earthly powers with the meaning of splendour, radiance, glory, doxa reflects OT usage: e.g. "all the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them" (Matt. 4:8 par. Lk. 4:6; Matt. 6:29; 1 Pet. 1:24).

(c) doxa in the sense of God's glory, majesty and power is pre-eminently the inheritance of the OT. The attempt to link it with Hel. usage (cf. Arndt. 202 f.) is untenable, for the magical texts quoted have themselves been influenced by Jewish thought. God is "the God of glory" (Acts 7:2), "the Father of glory" (Eph. 1:17), "the majestic glory" (2 Pet. 1:17). The expression "the glory of God" is frequent (e.g. Matt. 16:27; Acts 7:55; Rom. 1:23; 6:4; Eph. 3:16; 1 Tim. 1:11; Rev. 15:8). The → power of God can be mentioned along with his glory (Matt. 5:13 [many MSS]; Col. 1:11; 2 Thess. 1:9; Rev. 19:1). The concept is also applied to Christ: to his earthly life (Lk. 9:32; Jn. 1:14; 2:11; 1 Cor. 2:8), his exalted existence (Lk. 24:26; Jn. 17:5; Rom. 8:17; Phil. 3:21; 2 Thess. 2:14; 1 Tim. 3:16), his return (Matt. 16:27 par. Mk. 8:38, Lk. 9:26; Matt. 24:30 par. Mk. 13:26, Lk. 21:27; Tit. 2:13; 1 Pet. 4:13; Jude 24 [but this latter probably refers to the Father]), to his pre-existence (Jn. 12:41; 17:5) and also as an all-embracing epithet (Jn. 17:22, 24; 2 Cor. 3:18; 4:4, 6; 2 Thess. 2:14; cf. 1 Cor. 2:8).

The vb. also is used in a corresponding sense, especially in Jn. Its meaning oscillates between transfigure, cause to share in God's glory (Jn. 7:39; 12:16) and make the glory of God or of the Son effective (Jn. 11:4; 13:31 f.; 17:1, 4 f.).

(d) The NT also contains evidence of the concept which had been widespread since Ezekiel, that angels and other heavenly beings are endowed with glory (cf. OT 2, 3 above). This is found in manifestations from heaven, where stress is laid on the visible light, a concept taken from the concept of kāḇôḏ (Lk. 2:9; 9:31; Acts 22:11; Rev. 18:1). It is carried a step further when angelic powers are called doxai in Jude 8 and 2 Pet. 2:10 (cf. E.M.B. Green, 2 Peter and Jude, 1968, 104 f., 168 f.). Paul is using Jewish language when he speaks of the doxa of the stars (1 Cor. 15:40 f.).

(e) When Paul speaks of the glory of the first man (1 Cor. 11:7; perhaps also Rom. 3:23) and explains the shining of Moses' face as the shining of the glory (2 Cor. 3:7, 13, 18; cf. Exod. 34:30) he is also using Jewish concepts (cf. C. K. Barrett, The First Epistle to the Corinthians, 1968, 252; The Second Epistle to the Corinthians, 1973, 115–126).

(f) Equally of Jewish origin is the important conception (cf. OT 3, above) that believers share in the glory (Jn. 17:22; 2 Cor. 3:18; Rom. 8:30 vb.) or will do so (Rom. 8:17; vb. 8:18, 21; 1 Cor. 2:7; 2 Cor. 4:17; Phil. 3:21; 1 Thess. 2:12; Heb.

2:10; 1 Pet. 5:1, 4, 10). The Christian hope is "the hope of glory" (Col. 1:27; cf. Eph. 1:18; 2 Thess. 2:14; 2 Tim. 2:10).

3. The other forms of the word-group need only brief mention. syndoxazomai (only Rom. 8:17), be glorified together with someone, has essentially the same meaning as 2 (f) above. endoxazomai (only 2 Thess. 1:10, 12) is synonymous with doxazomai in meaning to be recognized as glorious (cf. 2 (c)). The adj. endoxos (4 times) means glorious; in 1 Cor. 4:10 it is to be linked with 2 (a), in Lk. 7:25 with 2 (b), in Eph. 5:27 with 2 (f). Lk. 13:17 looks back to the OT concept that glory is revealed in the mighty acts of God (cf. OT 2). kenodoxos (only Gal. 5:26) and konodoxia (only Phil. 2:3) express the vain desire for honour. This meaning is not unknown in secular Gk., but it is in Christian literature that those words first find wider usage.

B. 1. For the Greeks fame and glory were among the most important values in life. The rabbis also had a high esteem for a man's honour. In Matt. 6:2 Jesus censured a piety which looks for honour from men. In Jn. 5:44 he stated that this attitude is incompatible with faith. Paul, following the example of Jesus (Jn. 5:41; 8:50; cf. Heb. 5:4 f.; 2 Pet. 1:17), did not seek glory from men (1 Thess. 2:6). He voluntarily accepted dishonour (2 Cor. 6:8; 4:10), strove to carry out his service to the honour of the Lord (2 Cor. 8:19 ff.), and looked to the honour and praise which Christ would give him as reward on his day (1 Thess. 2:19 f.; Phil. 2:16). Paul's statement that in the final judgment the righteous will receive "glory and honour and immortality" refers to eternal life itself (Rom. 2:7, 10; 5:2).

2. The glory of this world is depreciated in the light of eschatology (cf. NT A. 2 (b) above). Jesus, however, could also see the glory of the creation (Matt. 6:29; par. Lk. 12:27).

3. The highest duty of man is to glorify and praise God in worship, word and act (Matt. 5:16; Rom. 1:21; 1 Cor. 6:20; 10:31). In the doxologies (cf. NT A. 2 (a) above) there is no clear indication as to whether we should add the ind. or subj. of the vb. to be. 1 Pet. 5:11 suggests the former.

4. In the contexts mentioned under 1 and 3 doxa can in general be rendered honour. In such cases timē may be used as a synonym. Occasionally the two words are used together. We can, however, always hear the overtone of glory when honour is given to God and in similar settings (cf. NT A. 2 (a) above), for it must include the recognition of God's glory.

(a) The NT concept of glory shows an important expansion of the OT concept of kāḇôḏ in certain directions. This is due to the NT eschatological outlook. In the NT glory means the divine-eschatological reality or manner of existence. Salvation lies in man and nature having a share in this manner of existence.

(b) This concept does not, however, cancel the link with the OT kāḇôḏ. For glory manifests itself in the NT, just as in the OT, in the operation of God's power and salvation in "salvation history". It appears above all in Christ and his work of salvation (Matt. 17:2–5 par. Mk. 9:2–7, Lk. 9:29–35; Jn. 1:14; 2:11; 2 Cor. 4:4, 6), in believers (Jn. 17:22; 2 Cor. 3:18; Eph. 1:18; 3:16; Col. 1:11), and indeed already in the old covenant (2 Cor. 3:7–11). Just as in the OT, glory is partly linked with God's action (Rom. 6:4) and is partly an attribute of his being (cf. NT A. 2 (c)). The presence of this "personal" doxa of God in Christ means the presence of salvation (Jn. 1:14; 17:22; 2 Cor. 4:4, 6).

(c) The expectation of a revelation of glory at the end of time (cf. OT, 2 above) is also derived from the OT. The thought in both Judaism and the NT that the eschatological glory will take the believers and the whole creation up into itself by a new creation or transfiguration is, however, new (Rom. 8:18, 21; 1 Cor. 15:43; 2 Cor. 3:18; 4:17; Phil. 3:21; Col. 3:4; 1 Pet. 5:1). Nevertheless, the concept had been anticipated by Isa. 66:19, 22.

(d) The way in which heaven is included in this concept is important for the understanding of the NT idea of glory. Heaven in the NT is not, as was later generally believed, the permanent and final scene for the revelation of glory. Glory reveals itself from heaven, but its goal is the transfiguration of the created world and mankind. It takes place in the transformed creation. Significantly the eschatological glory appears in a revelation from heaven (Matt. 24:30; Phil. 3:20 f.; Col. 3:4; Rev. 21:10 f.).

(e) Glory with its transforming power is operative even now among believers (2 Cor. 3:18; Rom. 8:30; cf. (b) and NT A. 2 (f) above) through the resurrection of Christ and our fellowship with him, who is "the first fruits of those who have fallen asleep" (1 Cor. 15:20).

5. It is a matter of debate whether Jn. shares this outlook. But here too glory is to be understood as a revelation of God, or as the intervention of his power in history (Jn. 1:14; 2:11; 11:4; 12:41). We can hardly interpret the relatively strong diminution of interest in eschatology in this gospel as meaning that heaven has replaced the eschatological completion as the goal of all that exists. The glorification of Jesus is not accomplished merely by his entry into heaven; it becomes a reality by his sufferings, death, resurrection (Jn. 12:23–28), and finally by the witness of the Spirit (Jn. 14:16). In other words it is a parallel concept to the "righteousness" of Jesus (Jn. 16:8–11; cf. 1 Tim. 3:16).

6. The transfiguration of Jesus (Matt. 17:1–8 par. Mk. 9:2–8, Lk. 9:28–36) corresponds in the Synoptics to the continuing possession of doxa in Jn., though only in Lk. 9:32 does the narrative use this word. The transfiguration is a parallel on a higher plane to Moses' meeting with God on Mount Sinai (Exod. 24:15 ff.; 33:18–34:35). However, it is not to be understood, as in the case of Moses, as merely a reflection caused by temporary contact with the heavenly world, but rather as a revelation of the glory which Jesus possessed continually but not openly. We can deduce this from the fact that the transfiguration preceded the voice from heaven. At his parousia Jesus will be revealed in his glory and power (Matt. 19:28 par. Lk. 22:30; 24:30). S. Aalen

τιμή

τιμή (timē), price, value, honour, respect; τιμάω (timaō), set a price on, honour; ἀτιμία (atimia), shame, dishonour, disgrace; ἄτιμος (atimos), despised, dishonoured; ἀτιμάζω (atimazō), dishonour, treat shamefully; ἔντιμος (entimos), respected, honoured, valuable, precious.

CL 1. The word timē (from the Iliad on) is used in secular Gk. with the following main meanings: (a) worship, esteem, honour (used of people); (b) worth, value, price (of things); (c) compensation, satisfaction, penalty.

2. In Gk. thought timē is the proper recognition which a man enjoys in the community because of his office, position, wealth etc., and then the position itself, the office with its dignity and privileges. The timē of a person, state, or deity must be distinguished from that of another. It is a personal possession. Slaves had no timē.

3. Every deity was shown honour because of the sphere of influence he controlled. This was done by sacrifice and hymns of praise. The gods on their part "honoured" men by giving them their earthly positions of honour and good fortune.

4. Shame and dishonour (atimia) put a person outside the community. atimia was the technical term for the deprivation of a citizen's rights.

5. The Stoics (cf. Epictetus) tried to rise above insult and disgrace by pretending that they did not touch the true self but only the body and visible possessions. Honour derived from position, such as that of a king, was regarded as a matter of indifference. They found fault, however, with the disgraceful treatment of slaves.

OT 1. (a) In contrast to its use of doxa, the LXX seldom uses timē for God's honour. Normally it applies timē to human honour, although both words usually render Heb. kāḇôḏ. Man has a position of honour in the creation (Ps. 8:3–8 [4–9]). Honour and position of office belong together (cf. timaō beside archē in Ps. 139:17 [LXX 138:17]). Honour should be shown to parents (Exod. 20:12; Sir. 3:3–16), the old (Lev. 19:32), to kings and the mighty (Dan. 2:37; Job 34:19 LXX). The rabbis stressed the honour due to a teacher of the law, and also one's neighbour including the poor (cf. also Prov. 14:21, 31 [LXX]; Sir. 10:23) and Jewish slaves, but not to Canaanite ones. There was a difference of opinion about the honour to be shown to a non-Israelite.

(b) A man marked out by honour might expect a corresponding position, wealth (Gen. 31:1 LXX; Isa. 16:14 LXX), and influence (Job 29:20; 30:4, 8, LXX – sometimes doxa is used in such passages). A worthy appearance (2 Sam. 10:5 LXX; Isa. 53:3), fitting speech (Sir. 5:13; cf. Job 29:21–25), and generosity (Prov. 22:9, LXX) also went with it.

2. (a) The godless experience atimia (Isa. 10:16 LXX; Jer. 23:40; cf. Dan. 12:2). The people did not grasp where the deepest dishonour lay, i.e. in faithlessness to God (Jer. 6:15), and this had to be recognized (Ezek. 16:63).

(b) For the godly in the OT there was the problem of how dishonour could come to them (Job 10:15; 30:1–12). Only the → Servant of the Lord bears shame patiently (Isa. 53:3) and leaves his cause in God's hand. Judaism ascribed an atoning value to the death of the martyrs and regarded it as honourable (4 Macc. 1:10;17:20; Josephus, War 2, 151). The pious rejected the scorn of the godless as something derived from a false outlook. The true basis of honour is not earthly prosperity but virtue and wisdom (Wis. 3:14–5:5). Mankind should be honoured provided that the fear of the Lord is there (Sir. 10:19). A sublimation and restriction of the concept of honour may be detected here. Apart from Isa. 53, no positive value was given to shame.

NT 1. The word-group is not strongly represented in the NT. Timē is found 41 times, timaō 21 times, the other forms more rarely. Only Paul uses atimia.

2. (a) Only the positive forms are used in the sense of price, sum of money: e.g. timē (price) in 1 Cor. 6:20; timaō (to set a price on) in Matt. 27:9 ("the price of him on whom a price had been set by some of the sons of Israel"); and entimos (precious) in 1 Pet. 2:4, 6.

(b) The meaning of timaō in the sense of show honour is rare (e.g. Acts 28:10 (RSVmg)). It is not clear whether timē should be rendered honour or honorarium, i.e. remuneration in 1 Tim. 5:17 (cf. Sir. 38:1; so J. N. D. Kelly, The Pastoral Epistles, 1963, 125).

(c) Generally timē represents the recognition of the dignity of an office or position in society. Examples are the authorities (Rom. 13:7; 1 Pet. 2:17), owners of slaves (1 Tim. 6:1), a wife (1 Pet. 3:7), the sexes in general (1 Thess. 4:4), service in the church (cf. 4 (c) below). In Heb. 5:4 timē means the honour of a position or the position itself (cf. 1 Pet. 1:17). The honouring of God is uppermost in the doxologies, where both doxa and timē occur (1 Tim. 1:17; 6:16; Rev. 4:11). For the vb. cf. also Jn. 5:23, 8:49. Honour should be shown to all men (1 Pet. 2:17).

(d) timē is used for exaltation in the ultimate eschatological salvation (Rom. 2:7, 10; 1 Pet. 1:7; 2:7; Jn. 12:26).

3. (a) In the case of atimos the negative aspect sometimes receives less stress. It can mean without honour, unhonoured, less honourable (1 Cor. 12:23). In 1 Cor. 4:10 it is stronger, and means despised.

(b) atimazō means to handle shamefully, with or without physical maltreatment: e.g. the tenants of the vineyard (Mk. 12:4 par. Lk. 20:11), the treatment of the apostles by the Sanhedrin (Acts 5:41), the poor (Jas. 2:6).

(c) atimia is generally translated in the NT by dishonour, e.g. of a man's long hair (1 Cor. 11:14; RSV "is degrading"), of the dead body (1 Cor. 15:43), of the apostles "in honour and dishonour" (2 Cor. 6:8). RSV renders atimia by "ignoble" in 2 Tim. 2:20 which speaks of various kinds of vessels.

(d) None of the uses deviates from secular Gk. A deepening ethical sense can be found in Rom. 1:26, where under the OT influence atimia means "shameful" (NEB, cf. v. 24 where atimazomai is rendered "degradation"). In secular Gk. aischros (cf. Lat. turpis) could be used in such contexts.

4. (a) As in Gk. society and the OT, timē is also used in the context of the social order decreed by God. timē is respect for the standing and task of a person who has his place in this order. When it is applied to things, it means the recognition of the value something has according to recognized norms. It may be summarized by saying that timē is high valuation based on position in an organized whole. This whole is God's world of men, animals and things. The distinctive distribution of honour among things of varying worth is important. The resultant order and grades of honour must be respected not only by the one placed lower, but also by the one placed higher. While the wife is placed below her husband, but she is to receive full honour from her husband (1 Pet. 3:1, 7).

(b) Things and animals have no honour. In the ancient world this was true also of slaves (though both the Stoics and the NT judge otherwise), because they had no right to direct their lives; they were looked on as things which had timē in the sense only of value or worth. Even this was not inherent, but was placed on them by their owner.

(c) The Biblical teaching about natural relationships, e.g. man and wife, parents and children, the authorities (see above NT 2(c), OT 1(a)), was developed from this. The same principle was applied to church life. Honour was to be shown the elders (1 Tim. 5:17, but see above 2(b)), widows (1 Tim. 5:3), and the responsible leaders of the congregation in general (Phil. 2:29). It is noteworthy, however, that this hierarchical line is crossed by one offering honour to those on a lower level. Those who carry out the lowest services should be shown particular honour (1 Cor. 12:23 f.; cf. the admonition to show mutual honour, Rom. 12:10). Those who carry out their service in purity are all vessels for honour (2 Tim. 2:20).

(d) Man's intrinsic honour is based on his position of dominion in creation (Ps. 8:5–8 [MT 8:6–9]). To that extent it is conferred by his status in the structure. However, it is also derived from man's being formed in the → image of God which determines his essential nature. All men should be honoured (1 Pet. 2:17; cf. Rom. 12:10; this was also the teaching of the Stoics, though they did not base it on the imago Dei). Hence slaves were members of the church (1 Cor. 12:13; 7:22 f.; Eph. 6:9), just as much as non-Israelites. In the church the restoration of the image of God has once more become universally possible (Col. 3:10 f.).

(e) This does not lead, as it did with the Stoics, to the reduction in principle of all to the same level and to the refusal of special honour to those holding office. The uniqueness of the NT concept of honour lies in the universal claim to honour because of the imago Dei. At the same time honour is given to office in its various expressions. The honour of man and the honour of office are not mutually exclusive any more than are the honour of man and the honour of God. True enough, preference for one side or the other must sometimes be shown in definite cases, e.g. in the relationship between husband and wife (1 Cor. 11:2 ff.) where Paul seems to see a special aspect of the image of God in the man (vv. 7,14), i.e. presumably the gift of leadership. (Elsewhere the subjection of the wife is counter-balanced by the love of the husband which becomes a reciprocal subjection [Eph. 6:21–33; Col. 3:18 ff.].)

(f) According to the NT, therefore, the Christian must not despise any class of man. He must, however, be willing to bear personal dishonour. This is not because it was not real suffering as the Stoics thought. The NT agrees with the Stoic and Jewish Wisdom Literature, in contrast with the early Israelite, that material possessions and wealth no longer constitute a basis for honour. Hence to lose them is in itself nothing to be ashamed of. On the other hand, the NT does not reduce the ground for honour, as did the Stoics, to an inner quality, such as virtue or wisdom. Dishonour, through being despised or suffering physical violence, must be borne for the sake of love after the pattern shown by Christ (Isa. 53:3–8; 1 Pet. 2:23 f.; Heb. 12:2; 1 Cor. 4:10). It is to be endured by the power of God (2 Cor. 6:7 f.), and is made less bitter by the hope of eternal life and glory (1 Pet.1:7; Heb. 12:2; 1 Cor. 15:43; 2 Cor. 4:17, cf. 4:8). All this presupposes that it is as a righteous person that one suffers shame (1 Pet. 3:13, 17).

(g) The dishonour caused by sin, disgrace and degradation is something quite different (Rom. 1:24, 26). Sin of this kind is not regarded simply as a moral lapse. The shame lies essentially in the fact that the man has fallen from the honour given him by God in creation and has misused his body. Honour is also lost not only by perversions but by false asceticism (Col. 2:23). S. Aalen

On doxa:
(a). I. Abrahams, The Glory of God, 1925; G. R. Berry, "The Glory of Jahweh and the Temple", JBL 56, 1937, 115–17; L. H. Brockington, "The Presence of God, a Study of the Use of the Term 'Glory of Yahweh' ", ExpT 57, 1945, 21–25; and "The Septuagintal Background to the New Testament use of doxa" in D. E. Nineham, ed., Studies in the Gospels: Essays in Memory of R. H. Lightfoot, 1955, 1–8; G. B. Caird, "The Glory of God in the Fourth Gospel: An Exercise in Biblical Semantics", NTS 15, 1968–69, 265–77; G. H. Davies, "Glory", IDB II 410 ff.; C. H. Dodd, The Interpretation of the Fourth Gospel, 1953, 201–13; A. H. Forster, "The Meaning of doxa in the Greek Bible", Anglican Theological Review, 12, 1929–30, 311–16; D. M. Hay, Glory at the Right Hand: Psalm 110 in Early Christianity, 1974; D. Hill, "The Request of Zebedee's Sons and the Johannine DOXA-Theme", NTS 13, 1966–7, 281–5; E. Jacob, Theology of the Old Testament, 1958, 79–82; G. Kittel and G. von Rad, dokeō, doxa etc., TDNT II 232–55; H. G. May, "The Departure of the Glory of Yahweh", JBL 56, 1937, 309–21; J. Morgenstern, "Biblical Theophanies", Zeitschrift für Assyriologie und verwandte Gebiete 25, 1911; 139–93; A. M. Ramsey, The Glory of God and the Transfiguration of Christ, 1949; A. Richardson, An Introduction to the Theology of the New Testament, 1958, 64–67, 182 ff.; C. Ryder Smith, The Bible Doctrine of Man, 1951, 116–23 and 223–29.

(b). S. Aalen, Die Begriffe "Licht" und "Finsternis" im Alten Testament, im Spätjudentum und im Rabbinismus, Skrifter utg. av Det Norske Vitenskaps-Akad. i Oslo, Hist.-filos. Kl. 1, 1951; H. Baltensweiler, Die Verklärung Jesu, 1959; H. Bietenhard, Die himmlische Welt im Urchristentum und Spätjudentum, 1951; W. Caspari, Die Bedeutungen der Wortsippe kbd im Hebräischen, 1908; H. J. Duplacy, "L'espérance de la gloire de Dieu dans l'Ancien Testament", Bible et Vie Chrétienne 8, 1954; A. von Gall, Die Herrlichkeit Gottes, 1900; F. Hesse and E. Fascher, "Herrlichkeit Gottes", *RGG*³ III 273 ff.; H. Kittel, Die Herrlichkeit Gottes, 1934; E. Larsson, Christus als Vorbild, 1962, 275 ff.; A. Laurentin, Doxa: I Problèmes de Christologie: Études des Commentaires de Jean 17.5 depuis des Origines jusqu' à Thomas d'Aquin; II Dossier des Commentaires de Jean 17.5, 1972; J. Schneider, Doxa, Neutestamentliche Forschungen III/3, 1932; B. Stein, *Der Begriff k*ᵉ*bôd Jahwe und seine Bedeutung für die alttestamentliche Gotteserkenntnis*, 1939; M. Steinheimer, Die "Doxa tou Theou" in der römischen Liturgie, 1951; C. Westermann, kbd, THAT I 794–812.

On timē:

(a). Arndt, 825; G. W. Harrelson, "Honor", IDB II 639 f.; J. Pedersen, Israel, its Life and Culture, I–II, 1926, 213–44; R. Schnackenburg, The Moral Teaching of the New Testament, 1965 (see index); J. Schneider, timē, TDNT VIII 169–80.

(b). M. Greindl, Kleos, Kydos, Euchos, Timē, Phatis, Doxa, Dissertation, Munich, 1938; K. Keyssner, Gottesauffassung und Lebensauffassung im griechischen Hymnus, Würzburger Studien zur Altertumswissenschaft 2, 1932; B. Reicke, "Zum sprachlichen Verständnis von Kol. 2, 23", StTh 6, 1952, 39–53 (especially 47–51); R. Reitzenstein, Die hellenistischen Mysterienreligionen, 1927³, 252 ff.; G. Steinkopf, Untersuchungen zur Geschichte des Ruhmes bei den Griechen, Dissertation, Halle, 1937.

Goal, Near, Last, End, Complete

Gk. and Buddhist thought has a cyclical understanding of the world in terms of eternal, circular movement. By contrast, Christianity developed a fundamentally historical understanding of the world in which existence began with → creation and will reach its consummation at the end of the world. Beginning and end, primal time and final time are not poles in a continuous process divorced from → time, separated only by interludes of human activity. According to the Christian understanding of the → beginning, the path of history which began with creation will lead to a final consummation. This is the goal and destiny of creation which will contain more than was given at the beginning. These ideas find expression in the NT statements about the telos, the goal and end of the divine purposes. Paul uses the the noun skopos (goal) which is attested only in Phil. 3:14. The adverbs engys (near) and makran (far) and the adj. eschatos (last) are basically designations of place. They have acquired a temporal sense particularly in the LXX and the NT.

In biblical language engys frequently denotes temporal proximity, whereas eschatos is applied chiefly to the final times and the last day.

ἐγγύς

ἐγγύς (engys), near; ἐγγίζω (engizō), approach, come near; μακράν (makran), far.

CL 1. In secular Gk. the adv. engys (used from Homer onwards as the opposite of makran and porrō, far) means: (a) near (in space), near by (e.g. Thuc, 3, 55, 1); (b) near in the sense of temporally imminent (e.g. Epict., Dissertationes 3, 26, 6); (c) with numbers, nearly (e.g. Xen., Hell. 2, 4, 32); (d) related or similar (e.g. Plato, Phd. 55a; Rep. 3, 319e); (e) in the figurative sense of intellectual proximity (e.g. Epict., Dissertationes 1, 2, 14).

2. The later vb. engizō (Aristot. onwards), trans. to bring near, occurs mostly intrans. meaning to approach, to come near (e.g. Polyb. 4, 62, 5), occasionally with the addition "(to) the gods" (e.g. Epict., Dissertationes 4, 11, 3).

OT In the LXX engys mostly translates the Heb. qārōḇ. engizō translates forms of qāraḇ, draw near, approach, and nāḡaš, draw near, approach. The words are often found alongside the opposites makran, far, and makrothen, from afar, which render formations from the stem rāḥaq, to withdraw.

1. (a) In the spatial sense engizō is frequently found in phrases which describe approach to cultic centres (e.g. Exod. 3:5). Only the priests who conform to the requirements of the cultic prescriptions can draw near Yahweh's sanctuary (Lev. 21:21, 23; Ezek. 40:46; cf. Ezek. 44:13). engizō can also denote more generally participation in worship (Isa. 29:13; Ecc. 4:17) and even a devout attitude of nearness to God (Ps. 119:169; Hos. 12:7 [EVV v. 6]).

(b) Like makran (distant, far), engys (near) can also characterize the approval of Yahweh. It is one of the distinctive characteristics of the God of Israel, who can also work from afar (Ps. 136:8; 139:2), to draw near to his people. "What great nation is there that has a god so near to it as the Lord our God is to us, whenever we call upon him?" (Deut. 4:7; cf. also Ps. 34:19; Jer. 23:23 LXX). The nearness of God is not understood as a static condition, but as the free divine act of approaching (theos engizōn). It is experienced above all in Israelite worship (cf. Ps. 145:18).

(c) The pair of words "the near and the far" (Deut. 13:7; Isa. 33:13; 57:19; Ezek. 6:12) is a description of totality, meaning and embracing all. Later on in Judaism engys, near, marks out the Israelite as distinct from non-Israelites, and within Israel the righteous as distinct from the godless. For the meaning next of kin, one's relative, cf. Lev. 21:2 f.; Job 6:15; Est. 1:14 (→ Brother).

2. As an indication of time, the word-group expresses the imminent approach of the Day of Yahweh. In opposition to the way of thinking that saw that day in the far distance (cf. the quotations in Isa. 5:19; Ezek. 12:22, 27; Amos 6:3), the prophets proclaimed its nearness. This day always brings with it the impending judgment (Isa. 13:6; cf. also Ezek. 7:7; 30:3; Joel 1:15; 2:1; Zeph. 1:7, 14) which occasions darkness and terror. Only the later chapters of Isa. announce the approach of a new age of salvation which will bring forth salvation and righteousness (Isa. 46:13; 50:8; 51:5; 56:1).

3. The priestly language of the OT lived on, albeit transformed in meaning, in the Qumran literature. The community viewed itself in a priestly light. One who comes to the community may thus draw near to God. The words "come near" and "send away" (in the case of refusal) became technical terms for entrance into the community (cf. 1 QS 6:16, 19, 22). In a similar way, "to come near" is a technical expression in Rab. Judaism for the recruiting of a proselyte.

NT The vb. engizō, to approach, to come near, is chiefly used in the NT by the Synoptics and Acts with its original meaning. Paul and Heb. use it more rarely, and in John it is not found at all. The adv. engys, near, also occurs most frequently in the Synoptics. There are a number of instances in John, but Paul scarcely uses it at all.

1. (a) In the spatial sense engys, near, is used a greater number of times than engizō, to come near. In Acts and Jn. the adv. engys has almost exclusively a local meaning (e.g. Acts 1:12, "which is near to Jerusalem"; Jn. 19:20, "was near to the city"). Occasionally the vb. serves to indicate both place and motion (e.g. Mk. 11:1 [cf. Matt. 21:1; Lk. 19:29], "when they drew near to Jerusalem").

(b) The terms are more frequently used with a temporal meaning: the hour of the passion has drawn near (Matt. 26:45), the end of all things has come near (1 Pet. 4:7), summer is near (Matt. 24:32), the Passover was near (Jn. 2:13).

2. (a) The theological interpretation of the vb. engizō, to come near, in the Synoptics is linked with Isa.'s proclamation of salvation: ēngiken hē basileia tōn ouranōn, the → kingdom of heaven has drawn near (Matt. 4:17 par. Mk. 1:15; Matt. 3:2; 10:7; Lk. 10:9, 11; cf. above OT 2). Behind the formulation ēngiken, it has drawn near, stands the thought of the divine → promise and preparation. The perf. ēngiken (the most frequently used tense of engizō) thus expresses the end of the time of preparation. God's kingdom has drawn near, i.e. in the proclamation and work of Jesus it is already in the present time. "Thus Mk. also sees Jesus' proclamation not as the first step of a coming kingdom, but as the consummation which has now made its appearance and become real here" (E. Lohmeyer, Das Evangelium des Markus, 1967 [17], KEK I, 2, 30). Corresponding to ēngiken, has drawn near, is the negative formulation ou makran, not far, which expresses the overcoming of the separation between God and man (e.g. Mk. 12:34).

(b) engys and engizō are also used in the context of the awaited apocalyptic end-time and the return of the → Son of man. Lk. in particular awaits the future of the all-embracing → kingdom of God. The desolation of Judaea and cosmic catastrophes will announce the dawn of the end of the world (Lk. 21:20 ff.). "So with you when you see these things happening, know that the kingdom of God is near" (Lk. 21:31; cf. v. 28 "when these things begin to take place . . . your redemption is drawing near"). The connection between the dawn of the kingdom of God in the coming of Jesus and the awaited coming of the Son of Man in the establishment of the reign of God is brought out by Matt. and Mk. Apart from this, both use engizō only in connection with the fate of Jesus (Matt. 21:1 par. Mk. 11:1, Lk. 19:29; Matt. 26:46 par. Mk. 14:42). (On the time and character of these events → Generation; → Present, art. parousia.)

3. (a) Whereas in the Synoptics the vb. is used in both perf. and fut., expressing the consequent tension, Paul relates these terms exclusively to the future. In Rom. 13:12 and Phil. 4:5 the prospect of the approaching day and the coming Lord provide the basis for the admonitions to the Christians to live a life full of hope.

"If the deliverance is near, then it is the hour to wake up from sleep" (A. Schlatter, Gottes Gerechtigkeit, [1935] 1952, 359).

(b) The word-group in the Catholic Epistles and Heb. similarly refers to the near return of Christ and the imminent end of all things (Jas. 5:8; 1 Pet. 4:7; Heb. 10:25). Thus engizō in the NT designates almost exclusively the drawing near of God and of his salvation to men. Only Heb. 7:19 and Jas. 4:8 speak of a responsive drawing near of man to God. W. Bauder, H.-G. Link

ἔσχατος

ἔσχατος (eschatos), extreme, last, least; ἔσχατον (eschaton) (noun), end, (adv.) finally; ἐσχάτως (eschatōs), finally.

CL 1. (a) The adj. eschatos, attested from Hom. onwards, is a superlative form derived from the prep. ek/ex, out of, away from, and originally designated the person or thing that was furthest outside (ex). Spatially it meant the place furthest away (e.g. Hesiod, Theog. 731, the utmost ends of the earth), temporally the last events of a series (e.g. Hdt., 7, 107), materially the extreme, rarely the highest (e.g. Libanius, Orationes 59, 88, greatest wisdom), mostly the lowest place in order of rank (e.g. Plato, Tht. 209b; Diod. Sic. 8, 18, 31, the most miserable of men).

(b) Substantivally to eschaton means the end in spatial and temporal respects (e.g. Hdt. 7, 140; 8, 52). Without the art. eschaton can be used just like eschatōs as an adv., both meaning "finally" (e.g. Xen., Anab. 2, 6, 1; P.Oxy. 886, 21).

2. The Gk. language uses the term eschatos to designate the end-point of a continuously conceived succession of circumstances. It corresponds with naturalistic Gk. thinking that the "extreme" is initially represented as the "ends of the earth" (Dem. Ep. 4, 7; Xen., Vect. 1, 6; Theocritus, 15, 8). In qualitative respects eschatos designates an extreme positive or negative intensification (Pindar, Ol. 1, 113, the highest reaches its peak with kings; Plato, Rep. 361a, greatest injustice; Gorgias 511d, extreme danger). In Aristotle the term denotes the conclusion of a logical path of thought and thus contributes to the systematization of the thought-processes (An. 3, 10, 433a, 16). As the expression of order of rank among men, eschatos means the opposite of prōtos (→ first): the lowest and most miserable of men (Dio Cass., 42, 5, 5; Dio Chrys., 21, [38] 37; Appian, Bell.Civ. 2, 77, §322). The temporal dimension is expressed in occasional prospects of the end (e.g. Diod. Sic., 19, 59, 6, the last, i.e. the concluding and final decision) and in the comprehensive designation of God as "the first and the last" (prōtos kai eschatos) e.g. Ps.Arist., Mund. 401a, 28). But this is the least developed sense. Gk. thought has no developed eschatological understanding of time, i.e. one directed towards a future goal or end of the historical process.

OT The very different historical understanding of existence in the OT writing is immediately apparent in a preliminary survey. eschatos occurs some 150 times in the LXX. It has local significance only in isolated cases (e.g. Deut. 28:49; Isa. 48:20; 49:6; Jer. 6:22, ap' or heōs eschatou tēs gēs, from or to the ends of the earth). It is not found at all in a disqualificatory sense. Its use is predominantly in the temporal sense to translate formations from the root of 'aḥar (after, behind) and meaning last, finally, outcome, end. In the historical books the term plays no real role, apart from the characteristic and stereotyped phrase "from beginning to end" (cf. 2 Chr. 16:11; 20:34; 25:26). On the other hand, eschatos features particularly in prophetic and apocalyptic expectations of the future.

1. A number of prophets use the formula "at the end of the days" (b^{e}'aḥ^{a}rîṯ hayyāmîm, LXX ep' eschatou tōn hēmerōn, e.g. Hos. 3:5; Isa. 2:2; 41:23; Mic. 4:1; Jer. 23:20; 30:24; 49:39; Ezek. 38:16). This indicates the future-directed thinking of the prophets which pointed Israel's self-understanding – till then largely orientated around past events – in a totally new direction. Moreover, the context in which this formulation is found reveals that the prophets do not think of "the end of the days" in mythical or non-historical terms. It was a renewed historical time-span, the final or end-time. Finally, it is noteworthy that the formula is mostly encountered in announcements of salvation or prefacing them. Eschatological time will be stamped by Yahweh's saving activity. Yahweh will make it possible for his people to turn back (Hos. 3:5). He will destroy his enemies (Jer. 23:20; 30:24). The nations will come to Jerusalem and receive instruction from Israel (Isa. 2:2 ff.; Mic. 4:1 ff.). Salvation will penetrate "to the end of the earth" (Isa. 48:20; 49:6). Here the local significance has a universal eschatological function. In all this Yahweh will reveal himself as holy (Ezek. 38:16, 23). However much the individual pictures of salvation presented by the various prophets differ, the expectation of a comprehensive age of salvation "at the end of the days" brought in by Yahweh himself is common to them all.

2. Apocalyptic literature contains numerous allusions to the end of the days (e.g. Dan. 2:28, 45; 10:14; 2 Esd. 6:34; Syr. Bar. 6, 8). They are distinguished from the prophetic expectation by the progression from the more simple pictures of the future into the realm of the visionary, allegorical, and other-worldly. A certain element of calculation concerning the final times is discernible (Dan. 8:19 ff.; 10:14; 12:5 ff.; 2 Esd. 14:5). According to the apocalyptic outlook, dramatic battles will take place between various world-powers. There will be cosmic catastrophes in the final times, before Yahweh establishes his transcendent imperishable → kingdom (cf. especially Dan. 2:3 ff.; 7:17 ff.). The end of this world signifies the simultaneous beginning of the coming one (2 Esd. 6:7; 7:113).

In Rabbinic Judaism the calculation of the end (qēṣ) is concentrated on the arrival of the messiah (2 Esd. 12:32; cf. SB III 671; IV 1003, 1006).

The formula "the end of the days" ('aḥ^{a}rîṯ hayyāmîm) is also found in the Dead Sea Scrolls (e.g. 1QpHab 2:5 f.; 9:9; CD 4:4; 6:11). The calculating tendency of apocalyptic has here hardened into a rigid deterministic understanding of the final time. It is the fixed and predetermined time of divine visitation (1QS 3:18, 23; CD 8:2 f.), when the godless and wickedness will be annihilated, but the righteous and truth will live for ever (1QS 4:18 ff.; 1QH 6:30 f.). It is not the saving character of the final times that stands in the foreground – as it does in the prophets – but the day of disaster, judgment and vengeance (1QS 10:18 ff.; CD 19:5–16). Only a small community of elect (4Qflor 1:19), "the poor of the flock" (CD 19:9), will be saved. By contrast with the expectations of Rab. Judaism, the members of the Qumran sect understand themselves as already the eschatological community of the saved in Israel (1QSa 1:1). It is they who obediently fulfil the divine regulations (CD 20:27 f.), and will be demonstrated to be the true Israel at the end of days (CD 20:33 f.).

NT As in the LXX, the spatial aspect of eschatos in the NT fades into the background. In Acts (1:8; 13:47) as in Isa. (see above OT 1) the spatial formula "to the end of the earth" (heōs eschatou tēs gēs) has a universal eschatological significance. More important are the material overtones of the least and lowest (e.g. Lk. 14:9), frequently in the antithesis of prōtos and eschatos (e.g. Mk. 9:35). But in the NT, the chief stress again falls on the temporal dimension of eschatos. On the one hand, it distinguishes the time characterized by the coming of Jesus from the past (e.g. Heb. 1:2). On the other hand, it contrasts the final future of God with the present (e.g. Jn. 11:24). eschatos is a concept which features in the Gospels (Matt. 10 times; Jn. 7 times). It also plays a particular role in Paul (6 times) and Rev.

1. The Synoptic Gospels record 4 times a maxim from the proclamation of Jesus about the first and the last (Mk. 10:31; Matt. 19:30; 20:16; Lk. 13:30). "Many who are first will be last, and the last first [esontai prōtoi eschatoi kai eschatoi prōtoi]." This maxim, formulated with inversion in antithetical parallelism, possibly meant originally something like: "How quickly man's fortunes change overnight" (cf. J. Schniewind on Mk. 10:31, Das Evangelium nach Markus, [1931] 1968, 136). In the mouth of Jesus this aphorism undergoes an eschatological radicalization as the conclusion of a discussion concerning the rewards of discipleship (Mk. 10:28–31 par.). The antithesis of first and last indicates a succession of rank customary amongst men (see above CL 2). The first are the nobles in society, kings and rulers; the last are the lowest, slaves and outcasts. The point of this logion of Jesus lies in the fact that in the coming age this order of precedence will be reversed. In the kingdom of God earthly power structures are stood on their head. God stands on the side of those who are the last and lowest on earth. To them, like the poor followers of Jesus, the kingdom of God is promised, whereas those who regard themselves as its first candidates, the noble, the rich and the pious, are excluded from it (Lk. 13:28 ff.; Matt. 8:11 f.). Jesus' followers are given the commission of anticipating and realizing now in the present this eschatological reversal of all values. It is in this sense that Jesus answers the disciples' disputes about seniority with the reminder: "If anyone wants to be first, let him be last of all and servant of all" (Mk. 9:35).

2. (a) Both the way of life and the proclamation of Paul are in accord with this instruction of Jesus. He counters the Corinthian enthusiasts by saying that God has paraded the apostles as the lowest of men, like those condemned to death, a spectacle and the scum of the world – not for ever but "to this day" (1 Cor. 4:9–13; → Dirt, art. peripsēma, perikatharma). This may be compared with 1 Cor. 15:8, where with the thought of negative quality is linked the significance of the chronological conclusion of the list of witnesses ("last of all") (cf. G. Kittel, TDNT II 697; → Birth, art. ektrōma).

(b) Within the framework of his Adam–Christ typology (cf. Rom. 5:12–21; 1 Cor. 15:21 f.) Paul contrasts in 1 Cor. 15:45 the first man → Adam (NT 3(e)) with Christ "the last Adam" (eschatos Adam). Adam and Christ are not here thought of as individual persons, but each as representatives of a whole humanity. The "last Adam" therefore does not mean the last man either numerically or chronologically, but – as the allusion to the gnostic primal man myth in v. 47 shows – Christ as the new, the second representative of a new humanity created in his image, by contrast with the first humanity summarised in Adam (cf. C. Colpe, *TDNT*VIII 474 ff.). Paul therefore understands the risen Christ, the creator of life, as the eschatological prototype of God's new humanity. With the resurrection of Jesus the final time has already begun.

(c) The letters of other authors confirm that this is not only a Pauline idea, but one belonging to early Christian eschatology generally. In Heb. 1:2 the prophetic expectation of the final times expressed in the formula ep' eschatou tōn hēmerōn ("in the last days", cf. above OT 1) is related to the present time of the early Christians by the addition of the demonstrative toutōn ("these", i.e. "in these last days"). This has come about through the fact that "God has spoken to us by a Son". With the enthronement of Jesus as → Son and as → Lord of → Creation the turning-point of the ages has come. Hebrews understands the early Christian present as the beginning of the final time. 1 Pet. also speaks of Christ "revealed at the end of the times" (1:20; cf. also Mk. 12:6), and 1 Jn. makes the recipients of his letter emphatically aware that they are living in the "last hour" (2:18). To the NT writers, the characteristics of the final time, now dawned, include the outpouring of the → Spirit (Acts 2:17; cf. Joel 2:28–32), the growth of moral corruption (2 Tim. 3:1 ff.), and the appearance of scoffers (2 Pet. 3:3; Jude 18) and → antichrists (1 Jn. 2:18).

(d) The term eschatos does not, however, serve merely to denote the new time which has begun with the coming of Jesus. It also refers to the final, consummative action of God that is still to come. In 1 Cor. 15:23 ff. Paul makes use of apocalyptic ideas (see above OT 2) in order to express the chronological sequence of the future events of the final times. In this scheme death is chronologically the last and physically the hardest enemy to be destroyed before the final goal (→ telos) of God is reached (v. 26 ff.).

3. Only in John's Gospel is explicit allusion found to the "last day" (eschatē hēmera, e.g. 6:39 f., 44, 54; 11:24; 12:48). It is absent from the synoptics. The expression takes up and continues the prophetic exposition of the "day of Yahweh" (on this see G. von Rad, Old Testament Theology, II, 1965, 119–125). R. Bultmann contends that these passages have been redacted by the early church (cf. his treatment of 6:27–59 in The Gospel of John, 1971, 218–34). But in view of the context (cf. 6:39 f.), and of the existential bent of his interpretation (e.g. on 11:24 f.), this must remain a hypothesis on the level of conjecture. The decisive mark of the "last day", according to the Johannine witness, is the resurrection of the dead. The judgment of unbelievers (12:48) represents the negative side of this. Thus in the expectation of the end in John's Gospel, as in the eschatological proclamation of the prophets (see above OT 1), it is not the thought of judgment, but the all-embracing salvation that stands in the foreground.

4. (a) The deterministic thinking about judgment in the Dead Sea Scrolls (see above OT 3) did not find acceptance in the NT. The only reminder of the conceptions of vengeance of the Qumran sect is the vision in Revelation of the seven last plagues, through which the divine wrath is discharged (15:1 ff.; 21:9; → Anger, Wrath). But the climax of this vision is not in the annihilation of enemies, but in the song of praise to the → Lamb (15:3; 19:7 ff.; 21:22).

(b) The formula "the first and the last" (ho prōtos kai ho eschatos) is only found as a self-designation of the exalted Christ (1:17; 2:8; 22:13). This goes back to the

Heb. wording of the divine predicates in Isa. 41:4; 44:6; 48:12. In the Gk. translation of this expression the LXX has avoided the divine title of eschatos and uses a paraphrase instead, perhaps because of negative undertones. The formula belongs essentially to the synonymous phrases "the Alpha and the Omega" (Rev. 1:8; 21:6; 22:13; Alpha being the first, and Omega the last letter of the Gk. alphabet), and "the beginning and the end" (22:13). The application of these divine predicates to the exalted Christ means the ascription to him of a rank equal with God's with the attribution of the functions of Creator and Perfecter. H.-G. Link

τέλος

τέλος (telos), end, conclusion, close, goal; τελέω (teleō), bring to an end, finish, complete, carry out, accomplish; τελειόω (teleioō), bring to completion, complete, accomplish, finish, fulfil, make perfect; τέλειος (teleios), complete, perfect; τελειότης (teleiotēs), perfection, maturity; τελείωσις (teleiōsis), perfection, fulfilment; τελειωτής (teleiōtēs), perfecter; συντέλεια (synteleia), completion, close, consummation; συντελέω (synteleō), bring to an end, complete, carry out, fulfil, accomplish; τελευτάω (teleutaō), come to an end, in the sense of die; τελευτή (teleutē), end, euphemism for death.

CL 1. (a) The noun telos is derived from a root tel-, which means to turn round (telos = tax; Dem., Or. 20, 19). Originally it meant the turning point, hinge, the culminating point at which one stage ends and another begins; later the goal, the end. Marriage is in this sense a telos (Artemidorus, Onirocriticus 2, 49; the spouse is teleios, complete, Pausanias 8, 22, 2), as also is death (Xen., Institutio Cyri 8, 7, 6; Plato, Leg. 4, 717e). telos can mean the completion of intellectual development (Plato, Menexenus 249a) and physical (Plato, Leg. 8, 834c) development, as the use of the term teleios also makes clear (Hdt. 1,183,2). telos can have dynamic character, and is used, for example, of the ratification of a law (Aristot., Pol. 6, 8p, 1322b, 13; cf. teleō, to bring to a telos, to complete, e.g. to make his word come true [Hom. Il. 14, 44]).

This dynamic character is also clear in the religious sphere, where sacrifices and religious rites are called telē; their intention is to bring men nearer to God (Soph., Ant. 143). Also of significance is the religious description of God as the archē kai telos, the beginning and end of all things (cf. K. Preisendanz, Papyri Graecae Magicae, IV, 2836 f.). He alone embraces beginning and end (Scythinos; cf. Diels I, 189, 32 f.). The function of the formula is thus to make a statement which embraces totality.

(b) Anything that has reached its telos is teleios, complete, perfect (e.g. unblemished sacrifical animals, Hom., Il. 1, 66). Both a doctor and a thief can be perfect (Aristot. Metaph. 4, 16p, 1021b, 15 ff.). One brings something to completion, to perfection (teleioō, e.g. Aristot., Eth. Nic. 3p, 1174a, 15 f.). The pass. of teleioō, to be made perfect, i.e. to reach perfection, is used equally of human adulthood (Plato, Symp. 192a) and of fully-grown plants (Aristot., Gen. An., 776a, 31). The noun teleiotēs occurs only rarely. It denotes a state of completeness or perfection (e.g. Aristot., Phys., 8, 7p, 261a, 36). teleiōsis is the carrying out of the teleioun, the realization, execution, conclusion (e.g. of some work [cf. W. Dittenberger, Sylloge Inscriptionum Graecarum[3] II, 799, 1, 29]). A teleiōtēs is one who effects the teleioun, the perfecter. This word is hitherto only once attested in Christian literature (Heb. 12:2).

2. In Gk. philosophy telos has the primary meaning of goal. For the pre-Socratics the goal of life was delight in the beautiful (Leucippus), contentment (euthymia, Democritus; cf. F. Copleston, A History of Philosophy, I, 1946, 125 f.), and contemplation (theōria, Anaxagoras, Frag. 29; cf. Diels II, 13,11). In Plato and Aristotle the telos to which one aspires is an ethical goal (Plato, Rep. 2 introduction; Aristot., Eth. Nic. introduction), and ultimately happiness and bliss (eudaimonia). In the realm of ethics, therefore, Plato can equate the concept of the perfect (teleios) with that of the good (agathos) (Phlb. 61a).

In gnosticism "perfection" is a technical term in the myth of the "redeemed Redeemer." He is the "perfect man" (cf. Hippol., Haer. 5, 7, 37). Anyone who is saved by him through true knowledge is the "perfect" gnostic (cf. Hippol., Haer. 5, 8, 30). Whether teleios was a technical term for initiates in the Hel. mystery religions is disputed (cf. the literature referred to by Arndt, 817).

OT 1. (a) telos occurs more than 150 times in the LXX, chiefly in adverbial combinations. Thus eis to telos, for ever, is the puzzling and erroneous translation of the Heb. phrase lam^enaṣṣēaḥ in the heading of 55 Pss. and Hab. 3:19. It should probably be translated by "for the choirmaster" or "for musical performance" (cf. H.-J. Kraus, Psalmen, I, 5; cf. A. A. Anderson, The Book of Psalms, I, 1972, 48). eis telos is found more than 15 times as translation of lāneṣaḥ, for ever (e.g. Job 20:7; Ps. 9:7; Hab. 1:4). Starting from the basic meaning "to the finish," eis telos can mean utterly (e.g. 2 Chr. 12:12), or, when understood temporally, for ever (e.g. Job 23:7). Sometimes eis telos is used where there is no MT equivalent (e.g. Gen. 46:4; Ezek. 15:4). It is also of importance that telos occurs repeatedly as a translation of qēṣ, qāṣeh or q^eṣāṭ, end, border, boundary. In such cases it means conclusion, end (cf. 2 Sam. 15:7; 2 Ki. 8:3). qēṣ in the eschatological sense is translated in the LXX not by telos, but by synteleia, completion (see below, 2(a)).

(b) teleō is found some 30 times for 8 Heb. equivalents: most frequently (7 times) for the vb. kālâh (qal and piel) meaning to bring to an end, to fulfil (e.g. Ruth 2:21; Ezra 9:1). It occurs in the pass. as a religious term: to consecrate oneself (e.g. to the service of Baal Peor, cf. Num. 25:3, 5; Ps. 105:28; Hos. 4:14).

(c) teleios is attested 20 times in the LXX: 7 times as equivalent of the Heb. root šālēm, to be sound, and 7 times for tām(îm), complete, sound. The stress lies on being whole, perfect, intact. It is used of the heart which is wholly turned towards God (1 Ki. 8:61; 11:4), and of the man who has bound himself wholly to God (Gen. 6:9; cf. Deut. 18:13). The thought of totality is also shown in the mention of a total depopulation (Jer. 13:19), and in the fact that whole-offerings can be called teleiai (Jdg. 20:26; 21:4).

(d) teleioō (25 instances) has likewise the semantic content of being perfect and whole: to show oneself perfect, i.e. blameless (2 Sam. 22:26, hith. of tāmam; cf. Sir. 31:10); to make beauty perfect (Ezek. 27:11). It is used 9 times in the Pentateuch as a religious term (apart from Lev. 4:5) to translate the Heb. phrase millē' (yāḏ), to fill (the hand), i.e. to consecrate for the cult (e.g. Exod. 29:9, 29). But teleioō also means to bring to its conclusion (2 Chr. 8:16; Neh. 6:16).

(e) teleiotēs (occurring only 5 times) can also be an equivalent for formations from the root tām signifying perfection or integrity (Jdg. 9:16, 19; Prov. 11:3). Wis. 6:15 speaks of perfection of understanding.

(f) teleiōsis (16 times in the LXX) occurs mainly in connection with cultic usage. On 10 occasions it translates millû'îm (e.g. Exod. 29:22, 26; cf. (d)) and means consecration. It occurs chiefly in connection with the consecration of priests.

2. (a) In the apocalyptic literature of the OT the Heb. qēṣ is understood eschatologically (see above 1 (a)). The LXX translates it chiefly by synteleia, end, completion (e.g. Dan. 8:19; 11:27). In this eschatological sense qēṣ in Rab. literature refers chiefly to the days of the messiah's coming which were ordained before the end of the world (cf. SB I 671; III 416). The end of the world can also be spoken of idiomatically in the sense of going on for ever (e.g. Yeb. 1:1; Nazir. 1:3).

(b) In Qumran the use of qēṣ as an eschatological technical term is not attested. The final times are called haqqēṣ hā'aḥ^{a}rôn, the last time (1 QpHab 7:7, 12; cf. also the expression g^{e}mar haqqēṣ, the consummation of time, 1QpHab 7:2). Otherwise qēṣ means time, period, in general.

In Qumran the term "perfect" is coloured by the OT. Those who are perfect (tāmîm) are those who keep God's law wholly and so walk perfectly in his ways (1QS 1:8; 2:2). In a narrower sense the members of the community are called "the perfect" (1QS 8:20; cf. 8:4 ff.).

(c) Philo has a double telos in the life of man: → wisdom (sophia), i.e. the perfect and direct understanding of God which comes about by learning, and → virtue (aretē) which is attained by practice (cf. W. Völker, Fortschritt und Vollendung bei Philo von Alexandrien, 1938, 176 f., 203 ff.). He has three stages on the way to perfection: beginners, advanced and perfect (Leg. All. 3, 159). To Philo repentance holds second place to perfection (teleiotēs) and the "unbroken perfection of virtues stands nearest to divine power" (Abr. 26). Both Philo (Plant. 93) and Josephus (Ant. 8, 280) have the comprehensive description of God as archē kai telos, beginning and end (see above, CL 1 (a)).

NT In the NT the words of this group occur fairly often: telos 41 times, teleō 28 times, teleios 20 times, teleioō 23 times, teleiotēs twice, teleiōtēs once (Heb. 12:2) and teleiōsis twice. A striking point is that telos occurs relatively frequently in the Synoptics and Paul, teleō particularly in the Synoptics and in Rev., whereas teleios and its derivatives are more common in Heb. than in any other NT writing.

1. The Letters of Paul. (a) Paul uses telos to mean end-result, ultimate fate (cf. G. Delling, telos, TDNT VIII 55). Rom. 6:21 f. speaks of the alternatives which face man as a result of his conduct: death (v. 21) or life (v. 22; cf. Ps. 73:17). According to Phil. 3:19, the enemies of the cross of Christ find their ultimate fate in eternal destruction (cf. also 2 Cor. 11:15). telos occurs 3 times after a preposition: "who will sustain you to the end [heōs telous]" (1 Cor. 1:8); "understand fully [heōs telous]" (2 Cor. 1:13); "at last [eis telos]" (1 Thess. 2:16 RSV, cf. mg. "completely", "for ever"). telos means end in the sense of cessation in Rom. 10:4 (in Christ the law has ceased to be the way of salvation), and also 2 Cor. 3:13 (the end of the brightness on the face of Moses concealed by the veil). ([Ed.] M. Black, however, argues that telos in Rom. 10:4 involves more than the simple idea of cessation. As in 1 Pet. 1:9, the idea conforms more closely to classical Gk.: "the logical end of a process or action – its issue, consummation, perfection – and thus in philosophical writings its chief good." The idea is similar to that of 1 Tim. 1:5: "the end of the commandment is love." Black concludes that Christ is the end of the law in the sense of "the climactic development (practically 'perfection', 'perfecting')" which in turn implies the cessation of the validity of the "old law" (Romans, New Century Bible, 1973, 138; cf. E. E. Schneider, "Finis Legis Christus," ThZ 20, 1964, 410–22; R. Bultmann, "Christ the End of the Law," Essays Philosophical and Theological, 1955, 36–66; F. Flückiger, "Christus, des Gesetzes Telos," ThZ 11, 1955, 153–7; R. Bring in StTh 20, 1966, 1–36.)

1 Cor. 10:11 deals with the ends of the times which "have come over us" (H. Conzelmann, Der erste Korintherbrief, 1969[11], KEK 5; cf. C. K. Barrett, The First Epistle to the Corinthians, 1968, 227 f.): the old time will soon be past; we are living at the close of time (cf. 1 Cor. 7:29, 31: 16:21). In 1 Cor. 15:24 telos means the conclusion of the eschatological events (cf. Mk. 13:7 par. Matt. 24:6, Lk. 21:9), the point of time when Christ hands over the → kingdom to his → Father. telos as goal is found in 1 Tim. 1:5. Finally, in Rom. 13:7 telos means tax (cf. v. 6 [telein], to pay taxes).

(b) teleō twice means to achieve one's object: of the power of Christ in the weakness of the apostle (2 Cor. 12:9); of the desires of the flesh (Gal. 5:16). In two other places it means to bring to an end: of fulfilling the Law (Rom. 2:27); and of completing one's course (2 Tim. 4:7). Acts 20:24 uses teleioō in this sense (cf. 13:25). In Rom. 13:6 teleō means to pay (cf. above (a)).

(c) teleios occurs 5 times meaning mature, adult: 1 Cor. 2:6; 14:20; Phil. 3:15 (Paul's statement in v. 12 that he has "not yet become perfect [ouch hoti ēdē teteleiōmai]" means that he has not yet attained the final thing, the victor's prize of the heavenly calling in Christ Jesus [v. 14]); Eph. 4:13 (the church is figuratively called a "grown man"); and Col. 1:28 (the grown man as the goal of the apostle's instructions).

Twice teleios is that which is wholly in accord with God's will (Rom. 12:2, cf. Gen. 6:9; and Col. 4:12). In 1 Cor. 13:10 "the perfect" means the future world, in which everything imperfect (v. 9) which distinguishes our present world, is overcome. In Col. 3:14 love is called "the bond of perfectness [syndesmos tēs teleiotētos]" (AV; cf. RSV "which binds everything together in perfect harmony"). For by it the gifts given to the → church (v. 12 f.) are fitted together into a whole.

2. The Synoptic Gospels. (a) In the eschatological discourses of Jesus telos is used as a technical term for the end of the → world (Matt. 24:6 par. Mk. 13:7; Matt. 24:14; Lk. 21:9; cf. the expression synteleia [tou] aiōnos, the consummation of the age, Matt. 13:39 f., 49; 24:3; 28:20). It also occurs several times in the prepositional combination eis telos (cf. NT 1 (a)). This probably refers to the end of the world (Matt. 10:22; 24:13 = Mk. 13:13), since this is mentioned in the context (Matt. 24:6, 14; Mk. 13:7). In Lk. 18:5 eis telos means finally.

The phrase telos echein, to have an end, occurs twice. In Mk. 3:26 a kingdom in which division dominates is said to have an end, i.e. ceases to stand (cf. on this Lk. 1:33: the reign of Christ has no end). Lk. 22:37 attributes to Jesus the statement that "what has been written about me has an end [RSV 'fulfilment']," for the words of Scripture (Isa. 53:12) are being fulfilled in him. telos as outcome is found in Matt. 26:58, and as tax in Matt. 17:25 (cf. v. 24 where teleìn means to pay).

(b) Typical for Matt. is his use of teleō in redactional passages. His formula "when Jesus had ended" concludes the five great instructional discourses (7:28; 19:1; 26:1; 11:1; 13:53). Matt. 10:23 (the disciples will not have come to the end of the towns of Israel before the parousia breaks upon them) and Lk. 12:50 (Jesus is in great distress until his baptism, i.e. his suffering [cf. Mk. 10:38], has been completed) also have the sense of "carrying through to the end." Lk., however, uses the vb. twice in the pass. for the fulfilment of Scripture (Lk. 18:31; 22:37; cf. also Acts 13:29) and once in the act. for the fulfilling of the → law (Lk. 2:39).

(c) The adj. teleios occurs only in Matt. In 5:48 there is the summons to be perfect, as the heavenly → Father is perfect. In the light of the context, this is a command to be compassionate, to love friend and foe (cf. Lk. 16:36). To serve God with an undivided heart (cf. OT 1 (c)) can also mean: sell your possessions and give them to the poor (19:21).

(d) The vb. teleioō is used only in Lk. When the days of the Passover feast were ended the boy Jesus stayed behind at Jerusalem (Lk. 2:43). Jesus told the Pharisees to tell Herod that, "the third day I shall be completed" (Lk. 13:32). Despite Herod Antipas' threats of murder he intended to continue his work for the salvation of men "today" and "tomorrow". What his completion on the third day signifies is not entirely clear. Does it mean that God will put an end to his work on the third day? Or does Jesus mean: Whatever violence men inflict on me I shall go on working, for "on the third day" I shall be completed notwithstanding, i.e. rise from the dead (cf. 9:22; 18:33; 24:7, 46)? (→ Number, art. tritos.)

Finally teleiōsis also occurs in Lk. 1:45 meaning "fulfilment."

3. James and 1 Peter. In Jas. the stress lies on teleios (which occurs 5 times), in 1 Pet. on telos (which 4 times).

(a) teleios has also the basic meaning of "whole" in James. One is perfect, i.e. not lagging behind in any point (1:4), when one is patient and forbearing. Jas. calls the law of → freedom, by which he means the commandment to love one's neighbour (2:8), perfect (1:25), because this alone makes men really free (cf. Jn. 8:31 f.; Gal. 5:13). That God's gifts can be called perfect (1:17) goes without saying. According to Jas., the man who does not offend in his words is whole and without fault (3:2). teleioō accordingly means to become whole: only through works is faith brought to wholeness (2:22, cf. vv. 17, 20). Elsewhere Jas. also uses telos as outcome (5:11; cf. Matt. 26:58) and teleō as to fulfil (a law 2:8; cf. Lk. 2:39).

(b) 1 Pet. uses telos as goal (1:9), as an eschatological term (4:7; cf. Matt. 24:6), as ultimate fate (4:17; cf. Rom. 6:21 f.), and as meaning finally (3:8). teleiōs, used adverbially, occurs in 1:13, meaning entirely.

4. Hebrews. In Heb. this word-group occurs with the greatest frequency, relatively speaking (18 times); only the vb. teleō is lacking.

(a) By contrast with its use in the rest of the NT, teleioō is here attested 9 times, nearly always with cultic overtones (cf. OT 1 (d)). It means to make perfect, in the sense of consecrate, sanctify, so that – like the OT priests – one can come before God. Heb. uses the vb. to elucidate the distinction between Christ, the high → priest perfected through suffering (2:10) and eternally perfect (7:28), who was thus able to be the source of eternal salvation for his people (5:9), and the priests of the old → covenant who were men subject to weakness (7:28), and whose → sacrifices could not perfect their consciences (9:9; cf. also 10:1). Christ alone was able to perfect his people by a single sacrifice (10:14). The → law (7:19), i.e. the Levitical priesthood, has utterly failed to bring about sanctification (teleiōsis, 7:11). Therefore, Heb. calls Christ's heavenly sanctuary the "more perfect" (9:11) by contrast with the earthly one.

teleioō is twice used without cultic reference. Heb. 11:40 means that the witnesses to faith under the old covenant (v. 39) did not reach perfection, for this was alone given by Christ (cf. 10:14). Now, however, they too have come to share in the perfection (12:23).

(b) teleios, meaning adult, occurs in 5:14. teleiotēs, "maturity" (RSV, 6:1), correspondingly means that part of Christian doctrine which is intended for adults It is the opposite of archē, → beginning (5:12; 6:1).

teleiōtēs stands alongside archēgos in 12:2 (cf. the formula archē kai telos, see CL 1 (a)): Jesus is the beginner and perfecter of faith. He has not only maintained faith right to the end (5:7 f.; 12:3); he has also laid the foundation of faith (cf. 1:3).

(c) telos occurs in 2 prepositional combinations: mechri telous, to the end (3:14, this same phrase in v. 6 probably derives from v. 14); and achri telous, until the end (6:11). telos means outcome in 6:8 and end in 7:3.

5. The Johannine Writings. teleioō occurs (a) 5 times in Jn. and teleō twice; (b) 4 times in 1 Jn.; (c) teleō twice in Jn. Rev. has teleō 8 times and telos 8 times.

(a) In Jn. 4:34; 5:36; 17:4, teleioō is used where Jesus speaks of the works of the → Father which he has to accomplish. On the → cross he can say that they are accomplished (tetelestai, it is finished, 19:30, cf. v. 28). In the High Priestly Prayer Jesus prays that his own may be perfected in unity (17:23), so that the world may recognize the sending of Christ (cf. v. 21). In Jn. 19:28 teleioō is used of the Scriptures being fulfilled (cf. Ps. 22:18). telos occurs once, in the prepositional combination eis telos (13:1): Jesus loved his own to the end, i.e. perfectly, wholly.

(b) In 1 Jn. the pass. of teleioō is used 4 times with reference to → love. Love of God reaches its wholeness, when men keep his word (2:5) and love their neighbours (4:12). This love attains its goal in that they are liberated from fear on the day of judgment (4:17; cf. 2:28). One who knows fear is not perfectly determined by this love, for perfect love drives out fear (4:18).

(c) Revelation has teleō 6 times meaning to finish, or (pass.) to be finished. Rev. 11:7 refers to the completion of a testimony. Rev. 15:1 announces the seven last plagues upon the world in which God's wrath is brought to completion (cf. v. 8). Rev. 20 speaks 3 times of the end of the thousand-year reign (vv. 3, 5, 7; → Chiliasm in Glossary of Technical Terms). Rev. 10:7 and 17:17 deal with the mystery of God or the words of God being fulfilled. What God has previously determined is fulfilled (cf. Lk. 18:31; 22:37).

The formula "beginning and end" (cf. Isa. 41:4; 44:6; 48:12) expresses the power of God (21:6) and Christ (22:13) which embraces time and creation. Just as God is the beginning and end (cf. 1:8), the creator and perfecter of all things, so also is the exalted Christ (cf. 1:17; 2:8). Rev. has telos once in the prepositional combination achri telous, until the end (2:26). It occurs in a summons to hold fast continually the works of Christ.

6. In summing up the theological function of the word-group in the NT, a distinction can be drawn between an eschatological and an anthropological aspect. The two are bound up with the general areas of meaning associated with telos on the one hand and teleios on the other.

(a) First and foremost is the eschatological function of telos. The dynamic, goal-directed character of the noun is further underlined by the frequent use of the vb. teleō. This aspect stands out with particular clarity in those passages which are concerned with the future consummation both in the Synoptics (cf. the so-called Little Apocalypse, Mk. 13 par.), the Pauline letters (e.g. Phil. 3:19) and Rev. (e.g. 20:1 ff.). The important point here is that the end is not understood simply as the mechanical cessation of movement. It is the consummating conclusion of a dynamic process, the goal of which manifests the realization of its meaning and its intentions. Since telos is a term with heavy apocalyptic overtones, the historically conditioned apocalyptic images and computations linked with it cannot be taken over wholesale without more ado by contemporary eschatological thought about the future promised in Christ. Rather, the universal, cosmic themes and implications inherent in them must be restated within the framework of Christian eschatology.

(b) Connected with the idea of the end as the completion and realization of a goal is the sense of teleios as that which has reached its goal, and is thus completed and perfected. To the extent that the whole is achieved only at the end, teleios may be applied in its fullest sense only to God (e.g. Matt. 5:48) and Christ (e.g. Heb. 7:28). In the context of individual human development teleios applies to the man who has reached maturity, the grown man who has come of age (especially in Paul). The NT does not speak of an ideal of ethical perfection which is to be realized by degrees (cf. G. Delling, TDNT VIII 77). Rather, when viewed against the background of the OT concepts of tāmîm and šālēm and applied to people's actions, teleios signifies the undivided wholeness of a person in his behaviour. It is in this sense that the later writings of the NT, especially Matt. (e.g. 19:21) and James (e.g. 1:4), frequently use the word. When applied to man and ethics, therefore, teleios denotes not the qualitative end-point of human endeavour, but the anticipation in time of eschatological wholeness in actual present-day living. Christian life in the NT is not projected idealistically as a struggle for perfection, but eschatologically as the wholeness which a person is given and promised.

R. Schippers

→ Abomination of Desolation, → Beginning, → Present, → Time

(a). R. Bultmann, "Christ the End of the Law", Essays Philosophical and Theological, 1955, 36–66; A. Deissler and F. Mussner, "Perfection", EBT II 658–67; G. Delling, telos etc., TDNT VIII 49–87; E. E. Ellis, "Present and Future Eschatology in Luke", NTS 12, 1965–66, 27–41; R. N. Flew, The Idea of Perfection in Christian Theology, 1934; E. Fuchs, skopos, etc. TDNT VII 413–17; E. Käsemann, "An Apologia for Primitive Christian Eschatology", in Essays on New Testament Themes, 1964, 169–95; G. Kittel, eschatos, TDNT II 697 f.; W. G. Kümmel, Promise and Fulfilment, 1957; J. Moltmann, Theology of Hope, 1967; C. F. D. Moule, "Obligation in the Ethic of Paul", in W. R. Farmer, C. F. D. Moule and R. R. Niebuhr, eds., Christian History and Interpretation (John Knox Festschrift), 1967, 401 ff. (on telos in Rom. 10:4); R. Niebuhr, The Nature and Destiny of Man, II Human Destiny, 1943; M. Noth, "The Understanding of History in Old Testament Apocalyptic", in The Laws in the Pentateuch and Other Studies, 1966, 194–214; H. P. Owen, "The 'Stages of Ascent' in Heb. v. 11–vi. 3", NTS 3, 1956–57, 243–53; J. du Plessis, Teleios: The Idea of Perfection in the New Testament, 1959; H. Preisker, engys etc., TDNT II 330–33; A. Wikgren, "Patterns of Perfection in the Epistle to the Hebrews", NTS 6, 1959–60, 159–67; R. Schnackenburg, "Christian Adulthood according to the Apostle Paul", CBQ 25, 1963, 254–370.

(b). J. Blinzler, "Vollkommenheit", LTK X 863 f.; R. Bring, StTh 20, 1966, 1–36; G. Delling, "Zur Paulinischen Teleologie", TLZ 75, 1950, 12 ff.; J. Dupont, " 'Soyez parfaits' (Mt. 5:48), 'Soyez miséricordieux' (Lc. 6:36)", Sacra Pagina 1959, 150–62; C. M. Edsman, A. Jepsen, R. Meyer, H. Conzelmann, H. Kraft, and P. Althaus, "Eschatologie", *RGG*³ II 650 ff.; F. Flückiger, "Christus, des Gesetzes Telos", ThZ 11, 1955, 153–7; P. Hoffmann, "Die Toten in Christus". Eine religionsgeschichtliche und exegetische Untersuchung zur Paulinischen Eschatologie, NTAbh Neue Folge 2, 1966; K. Karner, "Gegenwart und Endgeschichte in der Offenbarung des Johannes", TLZ 93, 1968, 641 ff.; B. Klappert, Die Eschatologie des Hebräerbriefes, ThEH 156, 1969; J. Kögel, "Der Begriff teleioun im Hebräerbrief", in Theologische Studien für Martin Kähler, 1905, 35–68; H. Kosmala, Hebräer-Essener-Christen, 1959, 208–39; H. Kremers and R. Prenter, "Eschatologie", EKL I 1152 ff.; H. W. Kuhn, Enderwartung und gegenwärtiges Heil, StUNT 4, 1966; W. G. Kümmel, "Die Eschatologie der Evangelien", ThBl 15, 1936, 225 ff., reprinted in Heilsgeschehen und Geschichte, 1965, 48 ff.; W. Lohff, "Telos", *RGG*³ VI 678 ff.; U. Luck, Die Vollkommenheitsforderung der Bergpredigt, ThEH 150, 1968; R. Mach, Der Zaddik in Talmud und Midrasch, 1957; R. Mehl, "Vollkommenheit", *RGG*³ VI 1486 ff.; N. Messel, Die Einheitlichkeit der jüdischen Eschatologie, BZAW 30, 1915; O. Michel, "Die Lehre von der christlichen Vollkommenheit nach der Anschauung des Hebräerbriefs", ThStKr Neue Folge 1, 1934–35, 333–55; H. P. Müller, "Zur Frage nach dem Ursprung der biblischen Eschatologie", Vetus Testamentum 14, 1964, 276 ff.; F. Nötscher, Gotteswege und Menschenwege in der Bibel und in Qumran, 1958; and "Heiligkeit in den Qumranschriften", Revue de Qumran 2, 1959–60, 163–81 and 315–44; O. Plöger, Theokratie und Eschatologie, WMANT 2, 1959; K. Prümm, "Das neutestamentliche Sprach- und Begriffsproblem der Vollkommenheit", Biblica 44, 1963, 76 ff.; B. Rigaux, "Révélation des mystères et perfection à Qumran et dans le Nouveau Testament", NTS 4, 1957–58, 237–62; SB IV 799–1015; F. J. Schierse, Verheissung und Heilsvollendung. Zur theologischen Grundfrage des Hebräerbriefes, 1955; H. Schlier, Christus und die Kirche im Epheserbrief, 1930; R. Schnackenburg, "Die Vollkommenheit des Christen nach den Evangelien", Geist und Leben 32, 1959, 420–33; E. E. Schneider, "Finis Legis Christus", ThZ 20, 1964, 410–22; J. Schreiner, "Das Ende der Tage, Die Botschaft von der Endzeit in den alttestamentlichen Schriften", BuL 5, 1964, 180 ff.; C. Spicq, "La perfection chrétienne d'après l'Epître aux Hébreux", Mémorial J. Chaine, 1950, 337–52; G. Stählin, "Fortschritt und Wachstum. Zur Herkunft und Wandlung neutestamentlicher Ausdrucksformen", Festgabe J. Lortz, II, 1958, 13–25; W. Thüsing, Erhöhungsvorstellung und Parusieerwartung in der ältesten Christologie, 1970; W. Völker, Fortschritt und Vollendung bei Philo von Alexandrien, TU 49/1, 1938.

God, Gods, Emmanuel

θεός

θεός (theos), God; θεῖος (theios), divine; θειότης (theiotēs), deity; θεότης (theotēs), deity, divinity.

CL The etymology of the Gk. word has not yet been clarified; the only thing that is certain is that it was originally a title.

1. Gk. religion was polytheistic. The gods were represented in anthropomorphic form as personal beings who exercised a determining influence on the world and fate of men, but who themselves were dependent on a superior fate. As they were not creator-gods, they were not thought of as outside the universe and transcendent. The cosmos included both gods and men. The influence of the gods was not universal, but was limited by their natures and attributes. They were not → righteous in the OT sense. The Gk. gods had form. Consequently, the statement "God is spirit" (Jn. 4:24) could not be applied to them. From Aeschylus onwards the different gods came increasingly to be identified. Their convergence into one divine being was prepared by the pre-Socratic thinkers and the ideas of classical tragedy.

2. The Gk. philosophical understanding of god was non-personal. Philosophers sought the origin of all things and the principle that shaped the world. In the process of rationalizing and moralizing, brought about by philosophical criticism and reflection, an important transformation of the Gk. concept of god took place. The divine forms were spiritualized and finally replaced by general concepts like "world reason," "the divine," and "being," which influenced and formed the world as powers giving it meaning and creating order. In Hellenistic syncretism the various Gk. and non-Gk. divinities were assimilated and even equated as a result of the recognition that behind the diverse names stood the same entities. This is particularly clear in the Isis cult. Not infrequently these tendencies lead to the honouring of one godhead as the divine All. The development reached its height in Neo-Platonism, where the divine is the universal One which has no objective existence or personality. It is being itself which is manifested through a series of hypostases and emanations in the world, since it is the ground and force behind everything that is.

OT The religion of the OT and Judaism is monotheistic and personal.

1. In the OT the words 'ēl, 'elôah and 'elōhîm, from related roots, are generic designations of God. Alongside and alternating with them stands the individual, personal name Yahweh (cf. G. Quell, theos, TDNT III 79 ff.). The cult names formed with 'ēl are as a rule connected with local shrines.

'ēl is a word common to all Semitic languages. It occurs as a common noun (the god, god) and also as the proper name for a particular god. This is clearly demonstrated in the texts from Ugarit in North Syria (14th century B.C.). It is true also of the Canaanites in the first and second millennia B.C. and the patriarchs, for whom 'ēl is clearly not the highest god in a pantheon, but the only God, whom they honoured on the basis of his revelation. He appears as 'ēl 'elyôn, "God Most High" (Gen. 14:18–22, RSV who was blessed by → Melchizedek); 'ēl rō'î, "God of Seeing" (Gen. 16:13 RSV); 'ēl 'ôlām "the Everlasting God" (Gen. 21:33 RSV, so called by Abraham); 'ēl bêṯ'ēl, "God of Bethel" (Gen. 31:13; 35:7, so called by Jacob; Bethel meaning lit. "house of God"); 'ēl 'elōhê yiśrā'ēl, "God, the god of Israel" (Gen. 33:20); and 'ēl šadday, "God Almighty" (Gen. 17:1; 28:3; 35:11; 48:3; 49:25; Exod. 6:3). (On these titles see A. Alt, "The God of the Fathers", in Essays on Old Testament History and Religion, 1966, 3–66, especially 8 ff.) God is most frequently referred to as šaddai, Almighty, in Job where it is used along with El, Elohim, Eloah and Yahweh (cf. E. Dhorme, Job, 1967, lxv ff.). The shrine of Shechem seems to have been the first central shrine of the twelve united tribes (Jos. 24).

'elōhîm, though plur. in form, is seldom used in the OT as such (i.e. gods). Even a single heathen god can be designated with the plur. 'elōhîm (e.g. Jdg. 11:24; 1 Ki. 11:5; 2 Ki. 1:2). In Israel the plur. is understood as the plural of fullness; God is the God who really, and in the fullest sense of the word, is God.

J. Schneider

2. The origin and meaning of the divine name Yahweh has been the subject of considerable discussion. Some scholars derive it from a primitive form Yah which they regard as an interjection associated with the moon cult (cf. G. R. Driver, ZAW, 46, 1928, 24). It is suggested that it derives from Ya-huwa, meaning "O he" (cf. M. Buber, Moses, (1946) 1958, 49 f.; S. Mowinckel, "The Name of the God of Moses," Hebrew Union College Annual 32, 1961, 121–33). But this has been rejected on the grounds that to regard the name as an interjection makes it difficult to account for the religious content which faith has always found in the name and the revelatory value which is attached to it (cf. E. Jacob, Theology of the Old Testament, 1964³, 48). It is more likely that the name is connected with the verbal root hwy or hwh, meaning to be (cf. R. de Vaux, "The Revelation of the Divine Name YHWH" in J. I. Durham and J. R. Porter, eds., Proclamation and Presence: Old Testament Essays in Honour of Gwynne Henton Davies, 1970, 59 ff.; E. Jacob, op. cit., 50 f.; J. P. Hyatt, Exodus, 1971, 79; T. C. Vriezen, "'Ehje 'ašer 'ehje", in W. Baumgartner et al., Festschrift Alfred Bertholet, 1950, 498–512).

The only interpretation of the name Yahweh given in the OT is at the theophany of the burning bush (Exod. 3:13 ff. attributed to the E source or tradition). "Then Moses said to God, 'If I come to the people of Israel and say to them, "The God of your fathers has sent me to you," and they ask me, "What is his name?" what shall I say to them?' God said to Moses, 'I AM WHO I AM [MT: 'ehyeh 'ašer 'ehyeh]'. And he said, 'Say to this people of Israel, 'I AM ['ehyeh] has sent me to you.' " God also said to Moses, 'Say this to the people of Israel, "The LORD [MT: YHWH], the God of your fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, has sent me to you"; this is my name for ever, and thus I am to be remembered throughout all generations' " (RSV).

There has been considered debate as to the translation and meaning of the words 'ehyeh 'ašer 'ehyeh. This is partially reflected in the RSV mg alternative translations: "I AM WHAT I AM" and "I WILL BE WHAT I WILL BE." J. P. Hyatt lists five lines of interpretation (op. cit., 75 ff.). (i) That the reply is intentionally evasive, because it is God's nature to remain hidden, or because to know God's name might give man power over him. But against this is the fact that the name is revealed to Moses in v. 15. (ii) God is the eternally existent one. (iii) "I am because I am." This suggests that there is no cause for God's existence outside himself. (iv) "I will be what I will be," or "I will be what I intend to be." (v) "I am he who is," or "I am the one who is." He is the God who alone has real existence. For discussion of the syntax involved in this translation see E. Schild, Vetus Testamentum 4, 1954, 296–302; J. Lindblom, Annual of the Swedish Theological Institute, III 1964, 4–15; B. Albrektson "On the Syntax of 'hyh 'šr 'hyh in Exodus 3:14," in P. R. Ackroyd, and B. Lindars, eds., Words and Meanings: Essays Presented to David Winton Thomas, 1968, 15–28.

R. de Vaux holds that the best rendering of the formula is "I am He who Exists" (op. cit., 71). Yahweh is the God whom Israel must recognize as really existing. This is not presented as part of a metaphysic of being (cf. Thomas Aquinas, Summa Theologiae I, Q. 2 art. 3). In the context of Exodus the revelation of the divine name is a proclamation to Israel of the one with whom they have to do. God is calling his people out of → Egypt and promises to be with Moses for that purpose (Exod. 3:10 ff.; 4:12; 15, 22 f.; 6:2 f.; cf. J. A. Motyer, The Revelation of the Divine Name, 1959). The proclamation of the Decalogue begins with the words: "I am Yahweh" (Exod. 20:2; cf. Deut. 6:5). The first commandment requires exclusive worship and service (Exod. 20:3, cf. 5). When Moses sought God's presence, he was not permitted to see God's → face but nevertheless received the reply: "I will make all my goodness pass before you, and will proclaim before you my name Yahweh; and I will be gracious to whom I will be gracious, and will show mercy on whom I will show mercy" (Exod. 33:19). The God who thus reveals himself to Moses and to Israel is distinct from the deities of Egypt and Canaan with their fertility rites concerned with the cycle of nature. He remains a mystery, and yet he is graciously active in the history of his people.

It is possible that the name of Yahweh existed outside Israel prior to Moses, but there is no conclusive proof (for a review of evidence see R. de Vaux, op. cit., 49–56; E. Jacob, op. cit., 48 ff.). Nevertheless, Exod. 3 does not appear to give a new name for the first time but the explanation of a name known already but now identified as that of the saving God of Israel. Although Israel did not work out a metaphysical doctrine of → time, the idea of God as "He who Is" is paralleled by numerous other statements about God in the OT (Pss. 90:1; 102:27 f.; Hab. 1:2; Exod. 30:8; Isa. 41:4; 48:12). But the thought of time is also bound up with that of Yahweh's ongoing presence (Gen. 20:28; Jos. 3:7; Jdg. 6:12; Isa. 49:6, 26; cf. E. Jacob, op. cit., 52).

The Heb. name YHWH ṣᵉḇā'ôṯ, Lord of hosts, occurs some 279 times. It is absent from the Pentateuch, Jos. and Jdg., but is frequent in the prophets (especially Isa. 1–39 [54 times]; Jer. [77 times]; and Zech. 1–8 [44 times]). The hosts in question have been variously interpreted as the earthly armies of Israel, the armies of the stars, and the celestial armies of spirits and angels. E. Jacob relates the title to the ark of the → covenant accompanied by the armies of Israel in battle (1 Sam. 17:45; 2 Sam. 6:2, 18; 7:2, 8, 26 f.; 1 Chr. 17:7; cf. op. cit., 55). He notes that it is found most frequently among the prophets for whom Yahweh was above all a warrior God. It is not simply a case of the prophets transferring the hosts from the terrestrial to the celestial plane. The term refers to the totality of forces over which Yahweh rules. But possibly the term also had polemical overtones, directed against the cult of the stars and spirits, claiming by its use that Yahweh also controlled them. In the LXX the term is translated by kyrios pantokratōr, → Lord Almighty (2 Sam. [2 Ki.] 5:10; 7:8, 25 ff.; cf. Jer. 3:19; Hos. 12:6; Amos 3:18; 4:13; 5:14; Zeph. 2:10; 2 Macc. 8:18; 3 Macc. 6:2; Arndt, 613 f.) and basileus tōn dynameōn, → king of powers (Ps. 67:13 LXX). The term pantokratōr is taken up by 2 Cor. 6:18; Rev. 1:8; 4:8; 11:17; 15:3; 16:7, 14; 19:15; 21:22. The Gk. transcription sabaōth (which occurs some 65 times in the LXX and other versions) is twice used in the NT (Rom. 9:29 = Isa. 1:9; Jas. 5:4; cf. Arndt, 746).

The name of Yahweh was combined with various Heb. verbs to form proper names: e.g. Jehoiachin (Yahweh establishes, from Yahweh and kûn), Jonathan (Yahweh gives, from Yahweh and nāṯan), and Joshua (Yahweh is salvation, from Yahweh and šûa' or yēšûa'). The latter is the oldest name containing Yahweh (Koehler-Baumgartner, 370). M. H. Segal sees in its early existence evidence that the name Yahweh was known prior to the revelation to Moses (The Pentateuch, 1967, 4). Joshua is the Heb. form which underlies the name of → Jesus.

The form Jehovah arose out of a misunderstanding which in turn arose out of the reluctance of pious Jews to pronounce the divine name (c. 300 B.C.). Instead they uttered the word 'ᵃḏōnāy, my Lord. In the MT the divine name was written with the consonants of YHWH and the vowels of 'ᵃḏōnāy, as a reminder to say the latter whenever the word was read. The divine name appears as yᵉhōwâh in the MT. The LXX reflects the Jewish reluctance to pronounce the divine name and puts the word kyrios, → Lord, in its place. The RSV and other Eng. versions also reflect the practice by giving the word LORD in capital letters whenever the name YHWH stands in the text. The Lat. likewise gives the word Dominus, Lord, for YHWH. The form Jehovah is thus a malformation giving what is virtually a transliteration of a word which is found in the text of the Heb. OT, but which was never actually used as a word. It became current in the sixteenth century and is attested in the Lat. of P. Galatinus in the form Iehoua (De Arcanis Cath. Veritatis, 1516, II, 1 f., xlviii). In 1530 Tyndale used Iehouah in his translation of Exod. 6:3 (Wycliffe had Adonay). Subsequently Jehovah became the standard spelling. But → also Lord, art. kyrios OT 2. C. Brown

It was only in the course of history that the belief in the superiority of Israel's God over all other gods led to the development of absolute monotheism. Jeremiah was probably the first to support the proposition that the gods of the heathen are no gods (Jer. 2:11). This knowledge was first given full expression in Isa. 40:55. The God of Israel is the Lord of all, whose sovereign power fills all the earth (Isa. 6:3). There are no gods apart from the One (Isa. 41:4; 42:8; 43:10 ff.; 45:3, 6; 48:11). (See further H. H. Rowley, The Re-Discovery of the Old Testament, 1945, 77–93; G. E. Wright, The Old Testament against its Environment, 1950, 9–41; C. F. Whitley, The Prophetic Achievement, 1963, 93–128.)

3. The LXX is characterized by the Hellenizing of Israelite–Jewish monotheism and by the reduction of the designations of God. Thus the Heb. words 'ēl, 'ᵉlōah and 'ᵉlōhîm are as a rule rendered by theos, "God", and in exceptional cases by kyrios, "Lord", or other expressions. Apart from theos and kyrios, 'ēl is translated about 20 times by ischyros, "Mighty One", "Powerful One", otherwise by dynamis "Might", "Power" (Neh. 5:5), or dynastēs "Prince", "Ruler", "Potentate" (Sir. 46:5, 6). The name Yahweh or Yah, which is mostly translated by kyrios, is replaced by theos only about 330 times (G. Quell, TDNT II 79).

4. The OT contains no all-embracing definition of the concept of God. On the other hand, it makes an extensive range of statements which testify to the being of God and have their basis in the divine revelation. Nor is there in the OT any theogony; it does not go beyond the assertion that God is. He is the first and the last (Isa. 41:4; 44:6; 48:12), the eternal, the almighty and the living one (Ps. 36:10), the creator of heaven and earth (Gen. 1:1; 2.4, etc.); the Lord, who guides the destinies of the nations, but who has made → Israel a people for his own possession (Exod. 19:5 f.). Israel stands, therefore, under his special protection. Yahweh not only leads, guides and gives Israel his promises; he also imposes his judgments when he goes his own way. God is the commanding and demanding God who makes his will known and demands obedience. The history of Israel is the history of God with this → people. Thus Israel's belief in God is founded on a theology of history.

It expresses a conception of God as personal, that God is capable of all the emotions that a person can have: → love, → anger, → repentance and other emotions. But even if human characteristics can be attributed to him, he cannot be compared with any human being (Hos. 11:9). The transcendent God who dwells in light, where no one can approach, is exalted above time and space and is therefore unique in his Godhead, not to be portrayed or localized (cf. Exod. 20:4). He is the eternal → king (Isa. 52:7) who rules over all the → kingdoms of the world (Isa. 37:16).

The most fundamental feature of God's being is expressed by the word → "holy". In the OT this has become the characteristic attribute of God. He is the Holy One (Isa. 40:25; Hab. 3:3; Hos 11:9). But the holy, transcendent God steps out of his concealment through his word and his acts of revelation, and repeatedly communicates with his people in demonstrations of power and glory.

The holy God is just in all that he does (cf. Ps. 7:11). He is the → judge who condemns unrighteousness and to whom man has to answer. But the OT also testifies to his → grace and → mercy (e.g. Exod. 34:6; Ps. 103:8). He comforts the pious (Job 15:11), → blesses him and helps him in his need (Pss. 45:7; 90:1; 94:22). Through the personal relationship between God and his people there is created an I-Thou relation between God and the individual believer who can turn to him in → prayer in all his needs.

God in the OT is also called → Father; he is the father of the people of → Israel (Exod. 4:22 f.; Deut. 32:6; Isa. 63:16; Jer. 31:9; Hos. 11:1). However, a full knowledge of the divine grace and love which embraces the whole world is only arrived at through the revelation of the new → covenant. Nevertheless, the OT testifies to the fact that God forgives transgressions and → sins (Exod. 34:6 f.). He has mercy on his people in everlasting grace (Isa. 54:8), and in particular takes up the cause of the poor and needy, and widows and orphans (Isa. 49:13; Ps. 146:9). Therefore, even in the OT God is not just a dreaded → enemy of man in his unholiness; he also makes it possible for him both to trust and love, because he himself loves his chosen people.

5. Judaism confessed the one God in unswerving loyalty and fought passionately against pagan polytheism. But it saw the one God working in a multitude of mediatorial and → angelic beings. Dualistic concepts were taken up in apocalyptic writings. It was this, E. Stauffer argues, that gave the fundamental monotheistic conviction of the OT the character of a "dynamic monotheism" (TDNT III 96).

The rabbis laid great stress on avoiding the name of God; in its place they put a whole system of substitute terms: e.g. → Heaven (ha-šāmayim or šāmayim), the → Lord (ʾᵃḏōnāy) and later the → Name (ha-šēm) (cf. K. G. Kuhn, TDNT III 92 ff.). In addition there were abstract terms like Glory, Power and the Abode (of God).

6. The Essenes of the Qumran community took over a cosmological dualism which was probably influenced by Zoroastrianism: e.g. God and Belial, →light and darkness, → Spirit of truth and Spirit of falsehood. To this corresponds the anthropological opposition of → flesh and spirit, the pious and the godless, sons of light and sons of darkness. However, the dualism of the two spirits that rule the world is subordinated to the fundamental OT, Jewish idea of God as the creator of all things. For he created the spirits of light and of darkness which lie at the basis of his working (1QS 3:25; cf. 3:19–26).

The Qumran texts give a series of designations of God. God is not only the creator of the world and of men, but also in a special way the "God of Israel" (1QM 1:9 f.; 14:4; 18:6), the "Father of the sons of truth" (1QH 9:35). His majesty and glory are expressed in his being called the "Prince of gods," the "King of majesties," the "Ruler of all creatures" (1QH 10:8), the "Highest" or the"Highest of all" (1QS 4:22; 1QGen Ap 2:4; 20:12), the "God of gods" (1QM 14:16), the "King of kings" (ibid.), the "Ruler over all the kings of the earth" (1QGen Ap 20:13). He is the "God of knowledge" (1QS 3:15; 1QH 1:26), full of deep and unfathomable secrets (1QS 11:5; 1QH 10:3; 12:13), who hides all wisdom within himself (1QH 12:10) and thus is the foundation of knowledge (1QS 10:12). The eternal God (1QH 13:13) is wise (1QH 9:17), just (1QH 11:7, 18; 14:15), all his deeds are just (1QH 13:19), the True (1QH 15:25) and Holy (1QM 19:1), but also the God who is full of grace, favour, goodness and mercy (1QH 4:32, 37; 7:30 f.; 9:34; 10:14, 16; 11:29), who forgives sins and by his righteousness cleanses men from their guilt and from the "terrors of falsehood" (1QH 4:37; cf. 1QS 11:14; 1QHFr 2:13). He is the source of judgments (1QS 10:18) and acts of grace (1QS 10:16) found in history and the life of individuals.

All this is experienced by the pious who belong to the sons of light. Through the grace and goodness of God they receive → justification and atonement (1QS 11:13 f.). But above all they have received through revelation and instruction, the → mysteries of God and of his mighty acts which are otherwise hidden from men (1QH 11:9f., 17).

The Qumran doctrine of God stands out as being rigidly deterministic. God's actions are determined by a fixed plan (1QS 3:15; 11:11; 1QH 18:22). Nothing happens apart from his will (1QS 3:15; 11:17, 19; 1QH 1:20; 10:9), for all authority is in his power.

This is especially true for the personal life of the individual. The pious poet acknowledges, "Thou hast not cast my lot in the congregation of vanity, nor hast thou placed my portion in the council of the cunning" (1QH 7:34). "Thou hast known me from [the time of] my father [and hast chosen me] from the womb" (1QH 9:30). His hand leads him at all times and his just rebuke accompanies all his perversity (1QH 9:32 f.). He can only speak because God opens his mouth (1QH 11:33). All his thinking and planning is determined by God (1QH 10:5 f.).

The eschatological statements of Qumran are also strongly characterized by determinism. God created the righteous for eternal salvation and lasting peace, but the "perverse" for the time of his wrath (1QH 14:15 ff.); from their mother's womb they were "dedicated to the Day of Massacre" (ibid., 15:17). The "lot" of Belial will bring judgment to eternal destruction (1QM 1:5); all "men of lies" will be destroyed (1QH 4:20).

The influence of the Qumran texts on the NT has been greatly overestimated. In the case of the doctrine of God, at any rate, no real connections are to be found. Primitive Christianity is much more independent in the expression of its theological thought than is often accepted. (This is true also of the cases when it has borrowed Jewish apocalyptic and gnostic concepts as vehicles for primitive Christian theology and preaching.)

7. Philo's concept of God has been affected by his attempt to link the OT idea of Yahweh with the Platonic-Stoic idea of God. When he speaks of the God of Israel, he distinguishes between ho theos and ho kyrios. ho theos is the good God, the Creator; ho kyrios the kingly Lord of the world. By omitting the definite article and speaking of theos he indicates the "second God," the Word. Philo also makes extensive use of the philosophical concept of to theion, the divine. For Philo God is fully transcendent and also the active power in everything. He produces out of himself the original, typical ideas, and forms them into the visible world. The Word is his mediator for creation and revelation. (See further H. A. Wolfson, Religious Philosophy, 1961; and Philo: Foundations of Religious Philosophy in Judaism, Christianity and Islam, I–II, 1962³.)

NT The NT rests firmly on the foundation of the OT, when it speaks about God, but its emphases are new. He is the God who is near, the Father of Jesus Christ who justifies freely by his grace (cf. the Pauline concept of the → righteousness of God). His action in election bursts all claims to exclusiveness. But it is the same God who reveals himself here as in the OT, and whose plan of salvation, there promised, comes to fulfilment here.

1. The one God. (a) theos is the most frequent designation of God in the NT. Belief in the one, only and unique God (Matt. 23:9; Rom. 3:30; 1 Cor. 8:4, 6; Gal. 3:20; 1 Tim. 2:5; Jas. 2:19) is an established part of primitive Christian tradition. Jesus himself made the fundamental confession of Judaism his own and expressly quoted the Shema (Deut. 6:4 f.; Mk. 12:29 f.; cf. Matt. 22:37; Lk. 10:27). This guaranteed continuity between the old and the new → covenant. For the God whom Christians worship is the God of the fathers (Acts 3:13; 5:30; 22:14), the God of → Abraham, of → Isaac and of → Jacob (Acts 3:13; 7:32; cf. Matt. 22:32; Mk. 12:26; Lk. 20:37), the God of Israel (Matt. 15:31; Lk. 1:68; Acts 13:17; cf. 2 Cor. 6:16; Heb. 11:16), and the God of → Jesus Christ (2 Cor. 1:3; Eph. 1:3; 1 Pet. 1:3). Just as God once made → Israel his → people, so now he has chosen those who believe in Christ as an elect race and a holy people for his possession (Acts 15:14; 20:28; 1 Pet. 2:9; Heb. 11:25). → Faith is in him (Rom. 4:3; Gal. 3:6; Tit. 3:8; Jas. 2:23; Heb. 6:1; 1 Pet. 1:21), → hope is on him (Acts 24:15; Rom. 4:18; 2 Cor. 3:4; 1 Pet. 3:5), and → prayer is to him. The community of Jesus may have no false gods beside him, whether Mammon (Matt. 6:24), the → "belly" (Phil. 3:19) or the cosmic powers (Gal. 4:8 ff.). It must serve him alone, do his will and remain faithful to him.

(b) Confession of the one God appears in Eph. 4:6 in an expanded form ("one God and Father of us all, who is above all and through and in all"), which glorifies, no doubt under Jewish-Hel. influence, the omnipresence of the rule of God. Similar formulae, referring now to God, now to Christ, occur in Rom. 11:36 and 1 Cor. 8:6. (See further J. N. D. Kelly, Early Christian Creeds, 1972³, 1–29; O. Cullmann, The Earliest Christian Confessions, 1949; V. H. Neufeld, The Earliest Christian Confessions, 1963; E. Stauffer, New Testament Theology, 1955, 244 ff.)

(c) The one God is the living and only true God (Rom. 3:30; Gal. 3:20; 1 Thess. 1:9; 1 Tim. 1:17; 2:5; Jude 25; cf. Jn. 17:3). He is the God whom the heathen do not know (1 Thess. 4:5). It is true that Paul reckons with the existence of "so-called" gods, who have authority as demonic powers over the heathen, but for the Christians there is only the one God (1 Cor. 8:5 f.). Even if the honour and power of gods does not belong to the stoicheia (→ Law, article stoicheia) which the Galatians previously worshipped, they can still intrude divisively between the young congregation and their God (Gal. 4:8 f.).

This one God is called "our God" (Acts 2:39; 2 Pet. 1:1; Rev. 4:11; 7:12; 19:5). The individual believer, above all Paul, can speak quite personally of him as his God (Rom. 1:8; 1 Cor. 1:4; 2 Cor. 12:21; Phil. 1:3; 4:19; Phlm. 4). Belief in the one God involves turning away from all heathen ways. Therefore in missionary preaching testimony to God is linked with the struggle against the worship of false gods (Acts 14:15; 17:24 f.; 19:26).

(d) The Epistles and especially Acts give a partial picture of the excesses of the NT world and their local expression. According to Acts, Paul was painfully impressed in Athens by the many figures of gods and shrines which he saw as he went through the city (Acts 17:16, 23). Just how strongly the cult of Artemis dominated the religious life of Ephesus is clear from the impressive account in Acts 19:23–41. (On the background to this see E. Haenchen, The Acts of the Apostles, 1971, 571 ff.) Here things came to a head through a violent clash with the silversmiths who derived great profit from making little models of the temple of Artemis and felt their economic existence threatened by Paul's preaching. 1 Cor. 8:1–7 indicates the significance of sacrificial meals in the heathen cultus at Corinth. → Magic played an important part in Hel. times; in Acts it is mentioned in 8:9 (Samaria), 13:6 (Cyprus) and 19:13 ff. (Ephesus). In Ephesus, as a result of the powerful testimony borne to the Christian message of salvation, the books of magic were publicly burned (Acts 19:19). (See further below, section 9.)

Conversion to the true and living God was experienced by those who had become believers as a gift of grace; for they had been freed from bondage to false gods (1 Thess. 1:9). But for many Christians the fascinating power of the heathen cults had not entirely lost its force. Therefore Paul explained to the Corinthians, "I do not want you to be partners with demons" (1 Cor. 10:20), for the heathen presented their sacrifices to demonic beings and not to God (see further C. K. Barrett, The First Epistle to the Corinthians, 1968, 236 ff.).

2. The transcendent God. (a) God is the creator, sustainer and Lord of the world (Acts 17:24; Rev. 10:6), the master-builder of all things (Heb. 3:4). He exercises his lordship from → heaven, for heaven is his throne and the earth his footstool (Matt. 5:34; 23:22; Acts 7:49). He is the Almighty with whom nothing is impossible (Mk. 10:27). No one can hinder, let alone destroy, his work (Acts 5:39; cf. 2 Tim. 2:9). He is the highest (Mk. 5:7; Lk. 1:32; Acts 7:48; 16:17; Heb. 7:1), the great → king (Matt. 5:35), the king of the nations (Rev. 15:3).

(b) Prayer is a powerful witness to belief in the transcendent God, for → prayer is directed to God who is in heaven (Matt. 6:9; cf. Jn. 17:1), but who hears the suppliant here. At present the → Satanic and demonic powers still stand opposed to God's rule on earth. Therefore the congregation of Jesus prays for the full revelation of his basileia (→ kingdom), for the full accomplishment of his will ("on earth as it is in heaven," Matt. 6:10), and for the hallowing of his → name (Matt. 6:9). In Jesus the kingdom of God has already broken in; it has been demonstrated by his powerful and wonderful acts. He has broken into Satan's realm and driven out demons by the "finger of God" (Lk. 11:20); but only the age to come will bring the full establishment of the kingdom of God. Then Christ will conquer the powers opposed to God (1 Cor. 15:24; 2 Thess. 2:8; Rev. 21:8, 27). When he has completed this his last task, God will be all in all (1 Cor. 15:28).

3. The personal character of God. When speaking about the personal character of God, it is illegitimate to transfer to God the concept of the human personality. God must not be imagined to possess a limiting → form. On the other hand, we are only capable of speaking of him in concepts which belong to our categories of thought. Moreover, if the personal character of God is ignored or restricted, the meaning of revelation is drastically changed. A depersonalized God is not the God of the NT.

The God to whom the NT testifies is the God who speaks and acts; he reveals himself through word and deed. He works in sovereign, absolute power (Jn. 5:17).

He makes his will known in → command and demand, and brings everything to the → goal that he has → determined. After he had spoken in the old → covenant in many ways to the fathers in the prophets, he has spoken in these last days "to us" through the Son, who reflects his → glory and bears the very stamp of his nature (Heb. 1:1 ff.). In the preaching of the word he addresses every man personally and receives into his → fellowship all who believe on Jesus. There are countless illustrations of this I-Thou relationship in the NT; it is the distinguishing mark of genuine biblical piety. Without it Christian belief in God would lack its ultimate depth.

(b) It belongs to the personal character of God that he is → Spirit (Jn. 4:24). Activities of the Spirit and of power proceed from him. The Spirit of God descended on Jesus at his → baptism (Matt. 3:16; cf. 12:18). Filled by this Spirit, he worked as the messiah sent by God. Matt. 12:28 states explicitly that he cast out the evil spirits through the Spirit of God. Christians are characterized by having, not the spirit of the world, but the Spirit who is from God (1 Cor. 2:12), for the natural man does not understand anything that comes from the Spirit of God (1 Cor. 2:14 f.). Only the spiritual man is capable of knowing God (1 Cor. 2:11) and of penetrating the depths of God. God has revealed his secret wisdom to believers through his Spirit (1 Cor. 2:10). He dwells in them and thus becomes the formative power of their being (1 Cor. 2:11).

In this age limits are imposed on the believer's knowledge. In God's rule over salvation history there are "times and seasons" of true revelation which he has reserved for himself (Mk. 13:32; Acts 1:7; 1 Thess. 5:2), "judgments" which are incomprehensible and "ways" which are unsearchable (Rom. 11:33). Nevertheless, → mysteries, which have been hidden in God from the beginning of time until now, have been made known through the proclamation of the message of salvation. The apostolic ministry, given by grace, testifies to the world of the unfathomable riches of Christ. Through the Christian community the knowledge about God's manifold wisdom has penetrated even as far as the cosmic powers (Eph. 3:8–10). Paul saw himself as the custodian of the mysteries of God (1 Cor. 4:1).

In 1 Cor. 6:11 the apostle explains that the Spirit of God (in conjunction with the name of the Lord Jesus Christ) has washed, sanctified and justified Christians. Through the divine Spirit working in them they are no longer in the realm of the → flesh but in that of the Spirit. Hence they live according to the Spirit (Rom. 8:4–14).

True confession of Christ is brought about by the Spirit of God (Rom. 10:9; 1 Cor. 12:3; cf. Matt. 16:17). In situations of suffering he gives the word that is necessary for the defence of and witness to the gospel (Matt. 10:20). He rests on those who are abused on account of the name of Christ (1 Pet. 4:14).

(c) The personal character of God finds special expression in the confession of God as → Father. Jesus' relationship to God is essentially determined by his Father–Son relationship. As the "only-begotten" Son, he is bound to God in a special way, as Jn.'s use of the monogenēs is intended to show (cf. Jn. 1:14, 18; 3:16, 18; 1 Jn. 4:9). ([Ed.] Lit. the Gk. means "of a single [monos] kind [genos]." While genos is distantly related to gennan, beget → Birth, there is little linguistic justification for translating monogenēs as "only begotten." The latter practice originated with Jerome who translated it by the Lat. unigenitus to emphasize Jesus' divine origin in answer to Arianism. The word monogenēs reflects the Heb. yāḥîd, only, precious [Gen. 22:2, 12, 16, of Isaac], and is used in Heb. 11:17 of Isaac who was unique in the sense of being the sole son of promise, but who was not the only son whom Abraham begat. Perhaps the word may best be translated as "unique". Jn. clearly intends to distinguish Jesus' unique relationship with the Father from that of others who become children of God through him [cf. Jn. 1:14 with v. 13]. For further discussion see Arndt, 528; D. Moody, JBL 72, 1953, 213–19; R. E. Brown, The Gospel According to John, I, 1966, 13 f.)

In → prayer Jesus called God "Abba, Father" (Mk. 14:36) or → "Father" (Matt. 11:25 f.; Lk. 23:24; Jn. 11:41; 17:1; 5, 11). At other times he spoke of him as his heavenly Father (e.g. Matt. 10:33; 16:17). Jn. emphasizes the Father-Son relationship between God and Jesus (about 80 times) more strongly than the Synoptics (but see the fuller version of Peter's confession of Christ in Matt. 16:16 ff. par. Mk. 8:29, Lk. 9:20; cf. Jn. 6:68 f.). Jesus also gave his disciples the right to approach God with the invocation "our Father" (Matt. 6:9; Lk. 11:2). In the quiet room at home the individual may pray personally to his Father (Matt. 6:4, 6, 18). The name "Father" is applied to God in illustrations and parables (e.g. Lk. 15:11 ff.). As Father, God is the God who is near to whom man can turn in believing trust with all his petitions. Moreover, God is the sustainer of the creatures he has made. He receives them with fatherly goodness and surrounds them with his care (Matt. 6:26–32; 10:29–31).

The NT epistles use the solemn, confessional formula "the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ" (Rom. 15:6; 2 Cor. 1:3; Eph. 1:3; Col. 1:3; 1 Pet 1:3). In Christ believers are related to God as children. His Spirit testifies to them that they are God's children (Rom. 8:16). Therefore, in prayer they too may cry "Abba, Father" (Gal. 4:6; Rom. 8:15). This is a gift of grace procured through the Spirit of the Son of God.

The idea of the children of God takes on a special colouring in 1 John. Here the statements are no longer determined, as in Paul, by the concept of adoption, of being received into the place of a child, but by that of begetting (→ Birth, art. gennaō). Christians are God's children because they have been begotten by God (1 Jn. 3:9; cf. 2:29; 4:7). This means that the origin of their new being is to be found solely in God (1 Jn. 4:4). With this are linked statements of a mystical nature. John knew not only a Christ-mysticism but also a God-mysticism. There is true fellowship with God only when Christians abide in God and when God abides in them (1 Jn. 4:16). But as God is love, this means abiding in love. Out of this deep, inner relationship with God arises a completely new, concrete, ethical obligation: love of the brethren which must lead to practical aid (1 Jn. 3:16 f.).

4. The attributes of God. (a) In the NT there is no fixed, systematically ordered doctrine of the attributes of God. But there is a wealth of allusions, especially in expressions of prayer and faith and in descriptions of divine acts. More rare than in the OT but nevertheless present are allusions to the → holiness of God (Jn. 17:11; 1 Pet. 1:15; Rev. 3:7; 4:8; 15:4), his (present and future) wrath (→ Anger) (Rom. 1:18; 2:5; 9:22; Eph. 5:6; 1 Thess. 1:10; Rev. 6:17; 11:18; 14:10), and his glory (Acts 7:2; Rom. 1:23; 6:4; Eph. 3:16; 1 Thess. 2:12; Tit. 2:13; Rev. 15:8; 21:11, 23). It is otherwise in the case of the kingly rule of God (→ Kingdom), which in the Synoptic Gospels forms the centre of Jesus' preaching, but which in the proclamation of the apostles withdraws into the background in favour of the message of Christ. Only once is God called teleios, in the sense of moral perfection (Matt. 5:48, → Goal). The → will of God is spoken of more often (as commanding, demanding and gracious); his mysterious counsel (Acts 20:27) and plan of salvation (Eph. 1:3–11) are also spoken of. Paul strongly emphasizes the faithfulness of God (Rom. 3:3; 1 Cor. 1:9; 10:13; cf. 2 Cor. 1:18). God abides by his → promises and fulfils them (Rom. 9:6 ff.; → Fullness, art. plēroō). For Israel this means that God's gifts of grace and their election by God are irrevocable (Rom. 11:29). God does not lie (Heb. 6:18; cf. Tit. 1:2); he is utterly true and his testimony is absolutely valid (Jn. 3:33).

(b) God is the eternal (Rom. 16:26) and only wise God (Rom. 16:27). Beside these expressions stand others which are to be found in contemporary philosophical language. Thus God is described as the invisible (Rom. 1:20; Col. 1:15 f.; 1 Tim. 1:17; Heb. 11:27) and the immortal (Rom. 1:23; 1 Tim. 1:17). In 1 Tim. 1:11 and 6:15 he is called by an attribute taken over from Hellenistic Judaism, the "blessed" God. The doxology in 1 Tim. 6:15 f. is reminiscent of the prayers of the Hellenistic synagogue (for a review of background ideas see C. Spicq, Les Épîtres Pastorales, 1947, 200 f.). It confesses God in solemn words as the only Sovereign, the King of kings, the Lord of lords, who alone is immortal, who dwells in unapproachable light and whom no man has ever seen nor can see.

Paul's description of God in the Areopagus speech (Acts 17:24) also betrays Hellenistic influence. It uses Isa. 42:5 freely and has affinities with Seneca, Ep. 41, 3 (cf. E. Haenchen, The Acts of the Apostles, 1971, 522; cf. also 2 Ki. 19:18; Dan. 5:4 LXX; Wis. 13:10). God created the world and everything that is in the world. The Lord of heaven and earth does not dwell in temples made by human hands. Nor is he served by human hands, as though he needed anything, since he himself gives to all beings life and breath and everything else. Though some of these expressions may sound strange today, Paul was concerned to testify to the true and living God in terms that were relevant to his day. This is the God whom the heathen of Athens worshipped, more unconsciously than consciously, and to whom they had erected an altar with the inscription "To an unknown god [agnōstō theō]" (Acts 17:23). (E. Norden interpreted this as a reference to the unknown God of Gnosis in Agnostos Theos, 1913, 57 ff., but this is generally recognized as incorrect [cf. E. Haenchen, op. cit., 521, and also Arndt, 12]). The apostle could even press into service for his missionary task the words of a Greek poet which carry the stamp of pantheistic mysticism, "In him [God] we live and move and have our being" (Epimenides); "We are his offspring" (Aratus, Phaenomena 5; cf. Acts 17:28; see also below, section 9). ([Ed.] For Paul, man had a natural awareness of God which was consonant with the revelation of God in the OT and Christian experience. This knowledge is sufficient to show the error of identifying God with any finite thing or creature. Paul does not argue that man may arrive at such a conclusion as the result of a metaphysical proof. Man has this awareness already, and reflection on the finite character of the natural order should be sufficient to tell him that God is not to be identified with anything or anyone within that order [Acts 14:17; Rom. 1:19 ff., 32; and possibly Rom. 2:12–16, though this last passage may well refer to Gentile believers who have responded to the gospel without having had the law and who thus fulfil the promise of the new covenant of Jer. 31:31 ff.]. For further discussion see N. B. Stonehouse, Paul before the Areopagus and Other New Testament Studies, 1957, 1–40; H. P. Owen, "The Scope of Natural Revelation in Rom. 1 and Acts 17," NTS 5, 1958–9, 133–43; C. Brown, Karl Barth and the Christian Message, 1967, 94–98; and the literature listed by E. Haenchen, op. cit., 516.)

(c) A central concept in Paul's theology is the → righteousness of God (Rom. 1:17, 21 f.; 9:30; 10:3; 2 Cor. 5:21; Phil. 3:9). It is a judging but also a saving righteousness. God is just when he condemns sinful mankind. But he is equally just when he bestows his forgiving grace on those who have believed in Christ and in the salvation procured through him. For Christ's sake, in whom God himself offered the atoning sacrifice for the → guilt of mankind, he does not count their sins against them but pronounces them righteous. Thus the dikaiosynē theou forms the foundation of Paul's doctrine of → justification (cf. L. Morris, The Apostolic Preaching of the Cross, 1963³, 273 ff.; D. Hill, Greek Words and Hebrew Meanings, 1967, 82–162).

(d) Because God is the initiator of salvation, both he and Christ are called sōtēr, saviour (1 Tim. 1:1; 2:3; 4:10; Tit. 1:3; 2:13; 3:4). God sent his Son into the world (Gal. 4:4) and delivered him to death for us (Jn. 3:16; 1 Jn. 4:10; cf. Rom. 8:32). The saving act of God is proclaimed through the word of the cross which is understood by believers as God's power and God's wisdom (1 Cor. 1:18, 24). For Christ has been made by God our → wisdom, righteousness, sanctification (→ Holy) and → redemption (1 Cor. 1:30).

Paul can call the whole message of salvation, declared to the world, the → "gospel of God" (Rom. 15:16; 1 Thess. 2:2; 1 Tim. 1:11; cf. also 1 Pet. 4:17). It brings salvation to everyone who believes (Rom. 1:16; cf. 1 Cor. 2:5). At the same time the offer of salvation, which comes through the proclamation, is universal. God desires that all men should be saved and come to the knowledge of the truth (1 Tim. 2:4), for his saving grace has appeared to all men (Tit. 2:11).

The power of God (→ Might) is not only at work in the gospel; it has demonstrated itself to be powerful from the beginning. Every man can recognize the invisible being of God in the works of creation (Rom. 1:20). It is also the power of God which raised Christ from the dead (Acts 2:24, 32; Rom. 8:11; 10:9) and thereby ushered in the new creation of mankind and of the universe. Believers even now experience the transcendent → fullness of God's power (2 Cor. 4:7), his mighty strength (Eph. 1:19; 3:20). Hence the apostle prays that they may be continually built up through the Spirit, according to the riches of his glory, with power in the inner man (Eph. 3:16). But the ultimate aim of faith, knowledge and love is to be filled with all the fullness of God (Eph. 3:19).

John has the expression which does not occur elsewhere in the NT, "to have God" (1 Jn. 2:23; 2 Jn. 9). Having God, which includes having the Son (1 Jn. 5:12), is bound up with a firm, true confession of Christ, free from every false doctrine (1 Jn. 5:11; → Fellowship, art. echō).

(e) The saving power of the divine being is expressed in a series of genitives which are connected with the noun God. God is the God of → peace (Rom. 15:33; 16:20; 1 Thess. 5:23; Phil. 4:9; 1 Cor. 14:33; cf. Heb. 13:20), the God of → mercy (Lk. 1:78), the Father of mercies and the God of all → comfort (2 Cor. 1:3; cf. Rom. 12:1), the God of all grace (1 Pet. 5:10, 12), who has blessed us in Christ with the fullness and the riches of his grace (Eph. 1:7), the God of → love (2 Cor. 13:11).

(f) The full depth of God's being, is expressed in the statement: God is love (1 Jn. 4:8). His → love embraces the lost world which has turned away from him. It is the decisive reason for his saving and redeeming activity. He has proved his love by giving up his Son to death in order that all who believe on him may have eternal life (Jn. 3:16). Above all his love is for the individual believer; God loved us (1 Jn. 4:10); we are the beloved of God (Col. 3:12).

All real love has its origin in God (1 Jn. 4:7). Whoever does not love has not known God (1 Jn. 4:8). The love of God is poured out in our hearts through the Holy Spirit (Rom. 5:5). It is the highest spiritual → gift, without which all the other charismata are meaningless (1 Cor. 13).

As God of love, God is rich in → goodness, forbearance and patience (Rom. 2:4). Tit. 3:4 speaks of the goodness and kindness of God towards men, using Hel. language associated with the solemn courtly style for the Hel. ruler and frequently discussed by philosophers (cf. C. Spicq, Les Épîtres Pastorales, 1947, 275 f.).

5. God and Christ. The uniqueness of → Jesus Christ as the → Son of God is most fully developed in Jn. and the epistles. He was "descended from → David according to the → flesh" (Rom. 1:3; cf. Matt. 1:1–17; Lk. 3:23–38; Acts 2:30; 2 Tim. 2:8; and cf. Mk. 12:35 f. par. Matt. 22:21, Lk. 20:41). And he was "designated Son of God in power according to the Spirit of holiness by his resurrection from the dead, Jesus Christ our Lord" (Rom. 1:4). Perhaps the correct meaning here is: "whom God decreed Son of God with power . . . through resurrection . . ."(cf. M. Black, Romans, 1973, 36). The allusion is to the divine decree of Ps. 2:6 ff. (cf. L. C. Allen, "The Old Testament Background of prohorizein in the New Testament," NTS 17, 1970–71, 104 ff.; see also on this passage M. E. Boismard, "Constitué Fils de Dieu," RB 40, 1953, 5–17; E. Schweizer, "Röm. 1:3 f. und der Gegensatz von Fleisch und Geist vor und bei Paulus," EvTh 15, 1955, 563–71; E. Linnemann, "Tradition und Interpretation in Röm. 1:3 ff.," EvTh 31, 1971, 264–75; and for patristic interpretations M. F. Wiles, The Divine Apostle: The Interpretation of St Paul's Epistles in the Early Church, 1967, 80 f.). According to the developed christology of Jn. 1:1, he existed already before his earthly existence as the divine → Word (logos) with God. Thus he comes from God (Jn. 3:2; 13:3; 16:27 f.). It was God himself who sent him into the world at the time that he had determined to carry out his saving purposes among men (Gal. 4:4 f.). Therefore he comes with divine authority; God is with him (Jn. 3:2). He is the image of the invisible God (Col. 1:15); in him the fullness of the Godhead dwells bodily (Col. 2:9). Because he has come from God, he alone is capable of bringing an authentic message from God (Jn. 1:18). Thus he is the only true and trustworthy revealer. He and the Father are one (Jn. 10:30; 14:10; 17:11, 21). Therefore, whoever sees him sees God (Jn. 12:45; 14:9).

(b) There is not only a oneness of being shown by God and Jesus Christ, but also a complete harmony in speech and action. The words which Jesus speaks are words he has heard from the Father (Jn. 14:10); the works he performs are the works of God (Jn. 9:4). They serve to reveal the divine glory and therefore to glorify God (Jn. 17:4). This is expressed particularly in Jesus' words of self-disclosure in statements using divine → "I am" formulae (egō eimi) which in the OT are self-revelations of God himself. He is the → light (Jn. 8:12; cf. 1:4, 8 f.; 9:5; 12:35), → life (Jn. 14:6; cf. 31:5 f.; 10:10 ff.; 28; 17:2 f.; 20:31), → truth (14:6; cf. 1:14, 17; 4:23 f.; 8:32), the living → bread (Jn. 6:48; cf. vv. 51 ff., 63), → water (Jn. 4:13 ff.; cf. 6:35; 7:38), and the only way to God (Jn. 14:6; cf. 10:9). (On the background and significance of these terms see C. H. Dodd, The Interpretation of the Fourth Gospel, 1953; and the commentaries on John by R. Schnackenburg, I, 1968; R. E. Brown, I, 1966, II, 1971; B. Lindars, 1972; and L. Morris, 1972.) In Rev., too, there occur divine I-am formulae like, "I am the first and the last," which come now from the mouth of God and now from that of the eternal Christ (Rev. 1:8, 17; 21:6; 22:13). It is clear that in the NT belief in God is most closely bound up with belief in Christ. The fate of men before God is decided by their position in relation to Christ.

(c) But Jesus Christ does not usurp the place of God. His oneness with the Father does not mean absolute identity of being. Although the Son of God in his preexistent being was in the → form of God, he resisted the temptation to be equal with God (Phil. 2:6). In his earthly existence he was obedient to God, even unto death on the cross (Phil. 2:8). He is the mediator, but not the originator, of salvation (2 Cor. 5:19; Col. 1:20; Heb. 9:15), the → lamb of God who bears the sins of the world (Jn. 1:36). After the completion of his work on earth he has indeed been raised to the right → hand of God (Eph. 1:20; 1 Pet. 3:22) and invested with the honour of the heavenly Kyrios, → Lord (Phil. 2:9 f.). But he is still not made equal to God. Although completely co-ordinated with God, he remains subordinate to him (cf. 1 Cor. 15:28). This is true also of his position as eternal high → priest in the heavenly sanctuary according to Heb. (Heb. 9:24; 10:12 f.; cf. Ps. 110:1). He represents us before God (cf. also Rom. 8:34). If in Rev. 1:13 ff. the appearance of the heavenly son of man is described with features from the picture of the "Ancient of Days" (God) of Dan. 7, this is not to say that Christ is equal with God. In Rev. a distinction is always made between God and the "Lamb" (cf. Rev. 5:6 ff.; → Like).

6. Christ as God. A few NT texts raise the question whether the Son of God is also called God.

(a) Rom. 9:5 is disputed. After Paul has expounded the position of Israel in salvation history and has emphasized as an especial advantage the fact that Christ, according to the flesh, stems from this people, he adds a relative clause, which runs lit. "who is over all God blessed for ever. Amen." It would be easy, and linguistically perfectly possible to refer the expression to Christ. The verse would then read, "Christ who is God over all, blessed for ever. Amen." Even so, Christ would not be equated absolutely with God, but only described as a being of divine nature, for the word theos has no article. But this ascription of majesty does not occur anywhere else in Paul. The much more probable explanation is that the statement is a doxology directed to God, stemming from Jewish tradition and adopted by Paul. Overwhelmed by God's dealings with Israel, Paul concludes with an ascription of praise to God. The translation would then read, "The one who is God over all be blessed for ever. Amen." or alternatively, "God who is over all be blessed for ever. Amen." ([Ed.] See further M. Black, Romans, 1973, 130; B. M. Metzger, "The Punctuation of Rom. 9:5", in B. Lindars and S. S. Smalley, eds., Christ and Spirit in the New Testament. In Honour of Charles Francis Digby Moule, 1973, 95–112;

W. L. Lorimer, NTS 13, 1966–67, 385 f.; H.-W. Bartsch, "Röm. 9:5 und 1 Clem. 32:4: eine notwendige Konjektur im Römerbrief," ThZ 21, 1965, 401–9; H. M. Faccio, De Divinitate Christi iuxta S. Paulum: Röm. 9:5, 1945; for patristic interpretations M. F. Wiles, The Divine Apostle: The Interpretation of St Paul's Epistles in the Early Church, 1967, 83 ff.; and J. Murray, The Epistle to the Romans, II, 1965, 245–8. Murray claims that the passage cannot be treated as a doxology to God the Father, since it does not follow the form of doxologies elsewhere in the LXX and the NT. The application of theos to Christ suits the context and could be regarded as the culmination of a sequence of privileges given to Israel which Paul is enumerating. Moreover, comparable assertions of divinity may be found in 2 Thess. 1:12; Tit. 2:13; Phil. 2:6; Col. 2:9; and 2 Cor. 3:17. The assertion of Christ's Lordship is in accord with Paul's teaching elsewhere [cf. Rom. 1:4; 14:9; Eph. 1:20, 23; Phil. 2:9–11; Col. 1:18 f.; cf. also Matt. 28:18; Jn. 3:35; Acts 2:36; Heb. 1:2 ff.; 8:1; 1 Pet. 3:22]. Hence, Murray argues that "God blessed for evermore" stands in apposition to Christ.)

(b) Several passages in Jn. contain ascriptions of divinity. Jn. 1:1 (RSV) declares: "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God [kai theos ēn ho logos]." ([Ed.] The fact that there is no definite article before theos here has been taken to imply that the Word may be understood as being some kind of divine being but not in the fullest sense of the term. Such views have been put forward from Origen [Commentary on Jn. 2, 2], whose views were taken up by the Arians in the fourth century, to the Jehovah's Witnesses today. The passage is rendered by the NEB: "what God was, the Word was." J. A. T. Robinson appealed to it in support of his plea for a restatement of orthodox christology [Honest to God, 1963, 71; cf. The Human Face of God, 1973, 182; and the discussion by E. D. Freed, "Honest to John," ExpT 75, 1963–64, 61 ff.]. R. E. Brown considers the NEB rendering more accurate than saying simply that the Word was "divine" [The Gospel according to John, I, 1966, 5]. In any case, the adj. for "divine" is theios, whereas it is the noun theos that is used here. R. E. Brown points out that there are instances of nouns with the definite article after the vb. "to be" in Jn. (e.g. 11:25; 14:6), implying that we might expect the article here if Jn. had meant to say that "the word was God." On the other hand, the passage conforms to the pattern that in the NT definite nouns which precede the vb. regularly lack the article [cf. E. C. Colwell, JBL 52, 1933, 12–21; Funk, 143, §273; Moule, 116]. Hence, the RSV translation would be the correct one. For further discussion see B. M. Metzger, ExpT 63, 1951–52, 125 f.; J. G. Griffiths, ExpT 62, 1950–51, 314 ff.; N. Turner, Insights, 17; E. M. Sidebottom, The Christ of the Fourth Gospel, 1961, 48 f.; L. Morris, op. cit., 77. On the patristic interpretation of Jn. generally see M. F. Wiles, The Spiritual Gospel: The Interpretation of the Fourth Gospel in the Early Church, 1960; and F.-M. Braun, Jean le Théologien, I–III, 1959–66.)

On monogenēs see above 3 (c). In Jn. 1:18 a number of very good MSS read monogenēs theos ("the only God" RSVmg) instead of ho monogenēs hyios ("the only Son" RSV). The unusualness of such a reading is regarded by some as grounds for accepting its authenticity (cf. L. Morris, op. cit., 113 f.). If so, it would be a further affirmation of the deity of the Word.

Jn. 20:28 contains the unique affirmation of Thomas addressing the Risen Christ as God: "My Lord and my God [ho kyrios mou kai ho theos mou]." The statement marks the climax of the Gospel. God has become visible for Thomas in the form of Jesus. The climax of Johannine teaching occurs in the confessional formula of 1 Jn. 5:20 which asserts the full identity of essence of Christ and God: "And we know that the Son of God has come and has given us understanding, to know him who is true; and we are in him who is true, in his Son Jesus Christ. This is the true God and eternal life" (RSV). This gives a lit. reproduction of the Gk. words. An alternative translation is: "This [Christ] is the true one, God and eternal life."

(c) This is the nearest that the NT comes to asserting the full identity of Christ with God. Tit. 2:13 speaks of "awaiting our blessed hope, the appearing of the glory of our great God and Saviour Jesus Christ" (RSV, cf. RSV mg. "of the great God and our Saviour"). Hesitation has been expressed about appealing to this text as such an instance. "The application of the formula "great God" to Jesus which was a title for God firmly rooted in late Judaism would be completely unique in the New Testament" (J. Jeremias, NTD 9, 58). Paul's teaching in Phil. 2:6 speaks against complete equation, when it draws a distinction in the words, "though he was in the form of God, did not count equality with God a thing to be grasped." E. Stauffer is doubtless correct when he writes: "The Christology of the NT is carried to its logical conclusion with the thorough-going designation of Christ as theos" (TDNT III 106). J. Schneider

(d) Jesus' cry of desolation is recorded in Matt. 27:46 and Mk. 15:34. Both give a version of Jesus' words in the original language and add their own translation: "ēli ēli lema sabachtani? that is 'My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?' " (Matt.); "elōi elōi lama sabachthani which means, 'My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?' " (Mk.). The cry corresponds to the opening words of Ps. 22 which in the MT reads 'ēlî 'ēlî lāmâh ʿazaḇtānî. Mk. appears to have written the Aram. 'elōi. The bystanders evidently took it to be a call to → Elijah who was taken up to heaven (2 Ki. 2:9–12) and was believed to rescue the righteous in distress (SB IV, 2, 76 ff.).

From the earliest times the cry has been felt to raise problems for christology. These are reflected in the MSS variants and the version of Gos. Pet 5:19: "My power, O power, thou hast forsaken me!" (cf. K. Stendahl, The School of St. Matthew, 1967², 83–7; Henn.-Schn., I, 184). It is felt that the words imply an abandonment by God which is incompatible with belief in his divinity, and a lack of trust on Jesus' part. Nevertheless, Matt. and Mk. did not shirk to record it. The cry expresses a sense of utter desolation, such as Jesus had not even experienced on occasions of temptation, rejection and in Gethsamene. His faithfulness to God's will had led him to the point where that will had to be done without the conscious awareness of God's presence. This was the experience of the Psalmist. And in recording the cry the evangelists may well have seen in it further fulfilment of Ps. 22 (cf. Matt. 27:35; Mk. 15:24; Lk. 23:34; Jn. 19:25 with Ps. 22:18; and Matt. 27:39, 43; Mk. 15:29; Lk. 23:35 with Ps. 22:7 f.; cf. also Heb. 2:12 with Ps. 22:22; see further B. Lindars, New Testament Apologetic, 1961, 89–93; H. Gese, "Psalm 22 und das Neue Testament", ZTK 65, 1968, 1–22). The poignancy of the parallels and the solemnity of the narrative may have been too great for the evangelists to pause to speak of → fulfilment. Jesus' cry is all the more poignant in view of the taunt (also made to the Psalmist): he trusts in God, let God deliver him. The suggestion that the cry was an interpretation put into the mouth of Jesus' perhaps in the light of the Ps. (cf. R. Bultmann, The History of the Synoptic Tradition, 1963, 313) raises more problems than it solves, for it is incredible that the church would have invented an utterance which appears to go back on all that Jesus had taught. The cry reveals the anguish felt by Jesus in being utterly rejected by friend and foe alike and in dying the most excruciating death. At the same time we may say with C. E. B. Cranfield that the cry is to be understood in the light of Mk. 14:36 (and par. Matt. 26:39; Lk. 22:42; Jn. 12:27) and the Pauline interpretation of Jesus' death in 2 Cor. 5:21 and Gal. 3:13. "The burden of the world's sin, his complete self-identification with sinners, involved not merely a felt, but a real, abandonment by his Father" (The Gospel According to Saint Mark, 1963, 458).

The parallels with Ps. 22 may, however, be pursued even further. G. Dalman has suggested that for the Jews the opening words were recognized as an effective prayer for help in the light of the latter part of the Ps. (Jesus-Jeshua, 1929, 206). The Psalmist survives his immediate desolation to praise God in the congregation (v. 22; cf. Heb. 2:12). All the ends of the earth shall remember and turn to the Lord (v. 27). Dominion belongs to the Lord and he rules over the nations. (v. 28). Posterity shall serve him and proclaim his deliverance to a people yet unborn (vv. 30 f.). If the earlier part of the Ps. may be seen as being fulfilled in Jesus' death, the latter may be said to find fulfilment in the revelation of the risen Christ in the great commission to evangelize (Matt. 28:16–20). C. Brown

7. God and the Church. The community of believers is called the ekklēsia tou theou (Acts 20:28; 2 Cor. 1:2; 10:32; 11:16, 22; 15:9; 2 Cor. 1:1; Gal. 1:13; 1 Thess. 2:14; 2 Thess. 1:4; 1 Tim. 3:5, 15; → Church). It consists of those chosen by God and called to be saints (Rom. 1:7; cf. the opening address of most of Paul's epistles) and who have received all the gifts of salvation and grace. They have peace with God (Rom. 5:1), for they have been reconciled through Christ (2 Cor. 5:18). As the beginning of God's new creation (2 Cor. 5:17) they are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus for good works (Eph. 2:10). God works in them both to will and to accomplish (Phil. 2:13), and gives them assurance of the completion of their salvation (Rom. 5:2, Phil. 3:21). At the return of Christ he will give life to their mortal bodies (Rom. 8:11) and a share in his glory and in eternal life.

(b) The church is the → temple of God (1 Cor. 3:16; 2 Cor. 6:16; Eph. 2:21); God's holy building into which all believers are placed as living stones (1 Pet. 2:4); the dwelling of God in the Spirit in which Christians are members of God's household (Eph. 2:19, 21). It is the new people of God (1 Pet. 2:9) which forms the → body of Christ in which believers have a share in the plērōma, the fullness of the being of God and Christ (Col. 2:10; Eph. 1:23; → Fullness, art. plēroō). The community stands under God's protection. It is hidden in him, for God is on its side (Rom. 8:31). Therefore no power, whatever it may be called, is capable of separating it from God's love.

Paul emphasized strongly that the ekklēsia of God consists of Jews and Gentiles. This is because Christ has reconciled Jews and Gentiles to God in one body through the → cross. Whoever receives the word of reconciliation (2 Cor. 5:19) and believes in Christ has free access to the Father (Eph. 2:18). In God's people of the new → covenant racial and national differences are removed.

8. The Trinity. The NT does not contain the developed doctrine of the Trinity. "The Bible lacks the express declaration that the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit are of equal essence and therefore in an equal sense God himself. And the other express declaration is also lacking, that God is God thus and only thus, i.e. as the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit. These two express declarations, which go beyond the witness of the Bible, are the twofold content of the Church doctrine of the Trinity" (Karl Barth, CD, I, 1, 437). It also lacks such terms as trinity (Lat. trinitas which was coined by Tertullian, Against Praxeas, 3; 11; 12 etc.) and homoousios which featured in the Creed of Nicea (325) to denote that Christ was of the same substance as the Father (cf. J. N. D. Kelly, Early Christian Doctrines, 1968[4], 113, 233–7). But the NT does contain the fixed, three-part formula of 2 Cor. 13:13 (EVV 14) in which God, the Lord Jesus Christ and the Spirit are mentioned together (cf. 1 Cor. 12:4 ff.). The Trinity of Father, Son and Holy Spirit occurs only in the baptismal formula in Matt. 28:19. The later addition, 1 Jn. 5:8 (in Lat. texts from the 6th cent.), contains the triad, the Father, the Word and the Holy Spirit (cf. E. Stauffer, TDNT III 108 f.). An extension of the triadic form in which, however, the important element is "the one God," "the one Lord" and "the one Spirit," appears in Eph. 4:4 ff. Gal. 4:4 ff. does not, strictly speaking, present a formula. It sets out the action of God in salvation history, placing God, Christ and the Holy Spirit in their right relationship: God first sends the Son and then the Spirit of his Son to continue the work of Jesus on earth.

On the other hand, God and Christ especially are closely connected in two-part formulae: "one God, the Father . . . and one Lord, Jesus Christ" (1 Cor. 8:6). "one God . . . and one mediator between God and men" (1 Tim. 2:5). In this connection Matt. 23:8–10 must also be mentioned, where Jesus draws the disciples' attention to the fact that they have one master (himself) and one God in heaven. In all these statements the two facts, that God and Christ belong together and that they are distinct, are equally stressed, with the precedence in every case due to God, the Father, who stands above Christ. (On the formulae see E. Stauffer, New Testament Theology, 1955, 235–57, J. N. D. Kelly, Early Christian Creeds, 1972[3], 6–29; V. F. Neufeld, The Earliest Christian Confessions, 1963.)

A close relationship exists also between Christ and the Holy → Spirit. Thus Paul can say outright that the Lord is the Spirit (2 Cor. 3:17). In John's Gospel the Holy Spirit (the Paraclete, → Advocate) appears with "certain independence" (E. Stauffer, TDNT III 107). But in his work he is bound to the exalted Christ (Jn. 16:14; "He will take what is mine"). Christ and the Holy Spirit are in an interchangeable relationship. But even here there is no strict, dogmatic assertion. Although the Spirit is distinguished from Christ and subordinated to him, it can be said in 1 Jn. 2:1 that Christ is the Paraclete with the Father. All this underlines the point that primitive Christianity did not have an explicit doctrine of the Trinity such as was subsequently elaborated in the creeds of the early church. (For discussions of the Trinity in the NT see L. Hodgson, The Doctrine of the Trinity, 1943, 38–84; A. E. J. Rawlinson, ed., Essays on the Trinity and the Incarnation, 1933; Karl Barth, CD, I, 1, 339–560; G. A. F. Knight, A Biblical Approach to the Doctrine of the Trinity, 1953; A. W. Wainwright, The Trinity in the New Testament, 1962.)

J. Schneider

9. Pagan Deities. It is unlikely that the average Greek and Roman took the old gods and goddesses seriously, but tradition and superstition led people to altars, shrines and images. The multiplicity of altars at Athens moved Paul to describe the Athenians as deisidaimonesterous (Acts 17:22), a comparative form compounded from deidō (fear) and daimōn (a deity or demon). The adj. deisidaimōn often means superstitious. But Paul evidently intended it in a more positive sense, i.e. "quite religious" (cf. the noun deisidaimonia which can mean superstition, fear or reverence for the divinity in a good sense, and religion [cf. Arndt. 172]).

The main Gk. pantheon, with the Roman equivalents given in brackets, was: Zeus (Jupiter), Hera (Juno), Apollo (Apollo or Phoebus), Ares (Mars), Poseidon (Neptune), Aphrodite (Venus), Hermes (Mercury), Athene (Minerva), Artemis (Diana), Hades or Pluto (Pluto or Orcus).

In 1 Cor. 10:20 Paul equated pagan deities with demons, but in addressing the intelligent Athenians, he quoted with approval Epimenides, Aratus, Phaenomena 5, and Cleanthes, Hymn to Zeus 4 (cf. F. F. Bruce, The Acts of the Apostles, 1951, 338 f.; see also above, section 4 (b)). "Yet he is not far from each one of us, for 'In him we live and move and have our being'; as even some of your poets have said, 'For we are indeed his offspring' " (Acts 17:27 f.). The poets are actually praising Zeus, but Paul makes it clear that he treats the quotations as referring to their highest conception of the supreme God, or rather their non-conception, the Unknown God, of whom he proceeded to speak.

The following Greek deities are named in the NT. (i) Zeus and Hermes. At Lystra, after an outstanding miracle of healing, Barnabas and Paul were treated as heavenly visitants, the dignified Barnabas as Zeus and Paul, the talker, as Hermes (Acts 14:8-18). (ii) Ares. At Athens Paul was taken to the Areopagus, or Hill of Ares, where speakers were allowed to hold forth, as at Hyde Park Corner in London, and where the Athenian Council met (Acts 17:19). (iii) Artemis. Her temple at Ephesus was one of the wonders of the world, and Paul's successful preaching roused the makers of shrine souvenirs (Acts 19:21–41). The Ephesian Artemis was only loosely identified with Artemis the huntress. Statues and descriptions show that she was the great Mother Goddess. (iv) Hades. In classical Gk. the god's name came to stand for his kingdom of the underworld, although it was quite common to use the expression en Hadou (gen. instead of dat.), meaning "in the house of Hades." In the NT the word is used of the place or state only (e.g. [en tō Hadē] Lk. 16:23; → Hell, art. hadēs).

Two Canaanite gods appear in quotations from the OT: Baal (Rom. 11:4; 1 Ki. 19:18) and Moloch (Acts 7:43; Amos 5:26). J. Stafford Wright

10. There are several compound words in the NT which indicate an actual or potential link with God. (i) theosebeia (1 Tim. 2:10) means reverence for God, piety, religion. theosebēs (Jn. 9:31) means God-fearing, devout, a worshipper of God. The vb. theosebeō, to worship God, does not occur in the NT but is found in Ep. Diog. 3:1 in early Christian literature. In all these forms the root is from the vb. sebō, worship or reverence, plus theos, God (→ Godliness, art. sebomai). Proselytes were sometimes referred to as sebomenoi [ton theon] (e.g. Acts 13:43; 18:7). These God-fearers were Gentiles who accepted the Jewish way of life in general, but did not bind themselves to keep all the ritual details of the → law, in particular → circumcision (→ Conversion, art. prosēlytos). (ii) theostygēs (Rom. 1:30) is a compound from stygeō, to hate, plus theos. In cl. Gk. it means God-hated or God forsaken. But in its sole NT occurrence an active meaning appears necessary, i.e. God-hating, haters of God (RSV). (iii) Theophilos, Theophilus, is derived from phileō, to love. Its meaning is either "dear to God", as generally in cl. Gk., or "lover of God." In the NT it occurs only in Lk. 1:3 and Acts 1:1 as the name of the person for whom Luke writes. It is almost certainly a proper name, perhaps a pseudonym for some well-known person, but it could stand for any Christian reader (for discussion and literature see F. F. Bruce, The Acts of the Apostles, 1951, 65 f.; E. Haenchen, The Acts of the Apostles, 1971, 136 f.). (iv) theios occurs 3 times in the NT. With the art., to theion means the Deity (Acts 17:29). As an adj., it means divine and is used with power and nature in 2 Pet. 1:3 f. (v) theiotēs (Rom. 1:20) means deity: God's "invisible nature, namely, his eternal power and deity has been clearly perceived in the things that have been made" (see above, 4 (b)). theotēs, deity, divinity (Col. 2:9), is a stronger word and is used as an abstract noun for theos in connection with the incarnation: "For in him the whole fulness of deity dwells bodily." By contrast the weaker words to theion (Acts 17:29) and theiotēs (Rom. 1:20) speak of the Gentile awareness of the deity. (See further H. S. Nash, theiotēs-theotēs, JBL 18, 1899, 1–34; Moulton-Milligan, 286 ff.; and Arndt, 354, 357 ff. for the terms discussed above.) J. Stafford Wright

| Ἐμμανουήλ | Ἐμμανουήλ (Emmanouēl), Emmanuel.

OT The name Emmanuel which occurs in Isa. 7:14 and 8:8 means lit. "God [is] with us" (Heb. 'immānû 'ēl). In the context of the times of Isaiah and King Ahaz the name is given to a child as yet not conceived with the promise that the danger now threatening Israel from Syria and Samaria will pass "before the child knows how to refuse evil and choose the good." Thus, the child and its name is a sign of God's gracious, saving presence among his people. The name can have either a minimum or a maximum significance. It could be a general statement that the birth and naming of the special child will indicate that the good hand of God is upon us. Or it could be a divine name meaning that God's presence with us is to be found in the child. In justification of the latter interpretation is the name of the one whom we may fairly regard as the same child in Isa. 9:6. One of his names here is 'ēl gibbôr which, in the light of its application to Yahweh himself in 10:21, means Mighty God. (See further E. J. Young, The Book of Isaiah, I, 1965, 283–94, 306 f., 335 ff.; O. Kaiser, Isaiah 1–12, 1972, 96–106; J. Lindblom, A Study on the Immanuel Section of Isaiah, 1958 reprint; J. A. Motyer, "Context and Content in the Interpretation of Isaiah 7:14," TB 21, 1970, 118–25.)

NT Matt. 1:23 sees the angel's promise to Joseph of the son conceived in Mary by the Holy Spirit, who is to be called "Jesus, for he will save his people from their sins," as a fulfilment of Isa. 7:14. The quotation corresponds largely with the LXX, though the LXX does not give a translation of the name to indicate its significance. It does not necessarily mean that a virgin birth was prophesied, for parthenos could be used of others than virgins (e.g. Gen. 34:3), and similarly the Heb. 'almâh could mean a young woman married or single (Gen. 24:43; Exod. 2:8; Pss. 68:25; Prov. 30:19; Cant. 1:3; 6:8). On the question of the virgin birth see J. Orr, The Virgin Birth of Christ, 1907; J. G. Machen, The Virgin Birth of Christ, [1930] 1958; T. Boslooper, The Virgin Birth, 1962; R. E. Brown, The Virginal Conception & Bodily Resurrection of Jesus, 1973. This question rests on the interpretation of verses other than Matt. 1:23. The name Emmanuel is not applied to Jesus elsewhere in the NT. The point of the present passage is to see in the birth of Jesus a saving act of God, comparable with the birth of the first Emmanuel. Both births signify God's presence with his people through a child. But whereas the earlier event in Isaiah's day was regarded at the time as having decisive significance, in the light of the coming of Jesus it proves to be merely the anticipation of the really decisive saving act and presence of God. For Matt.'s concept of fulfilment → Fullness, art. plēroō, NT 1 (c). See also on this passage W. C. van Unnik, "Dominus Vobiscum", in A. J. B. Higgins, ed, New Testament Essays: Studies in Memory of T. W. Manson, 1959, 270–305.

One may link Matt.'s quotation, written in the light of the disciples' experience of Jesus Christ, with Lk. 1:35, where the unique act of the Holy Spirit means that the child will be "the Son of God." Thus "God with us" is to be taken in a similar way. The child will be God come to earth. The conception by the Holy Spirit draws attention to the role of God in the birth and life of Jesus.

J. Stafford Wright, C. Brown

On God in the OT and in the ancient world:
(a). W. F. Albright, Archaeology and the Religion of Israel, 1956; From Stone Age to Christianity, 1957; and Yahweh and the Gods of Canaan, 1968; A. Alt, "The God of the Fathers", in Essays on Old Testament History and Religion, 1966, 1–77; L. R. Bailey, "Israelite 'ēl šadday and Amorite bêl šadê", JBL 87, 1968, 434–38; T. Boman, Hebrew Thought Compared with Greek, 1960; but see also the discussion of Boman's metholodogy in J. Barr, The Semantics of Biblical Language, 1961; M. Buber, The Prophetic Faith, 1960; J. S. Chesnut, The Old Testament Understanding of God, 1968; R. E. Clements, God and Temple, 1965; A. Deissler, "God", EBT I 298–309; R. C. Dentan, The Knowledge of God in Ancient Israel 1968; W. Eichrodt, Theology of the Old Testament, I–II, 1961–67; O. Eissfeldt, " 'My God' in the Old Testament", EQ 19, 1947, 7 ff.; M. Eliade, From Primitives to Zen, 1967; J. Ferguson, The Religion of the Roman Empire, 1974²; J. Goldingay, " 'That You May Know that Yahweh is God': A Study in the Relationship between Theology and Historical Truth in the Old Testament", TB 23, 1972, 58–93; W. L. Holladay, " 'Yahweh, Maker of Heaven and Earth': A Study in Tradition Criticism", JBL 91, 1972, 321–37; J. P. Hyatt, "Was Yahweh Originally a Creator Deity?", JBL 86, 1967, 369 ff.; B. van Iersel, The Bible on the Living God, 1965; E. Jacob, Theology of the Old Testament, 1964³; E. O. James, The Ancient Gods, 1960; N. B. Johnson, Prayer in the Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha: A Study in the Jewish Conception of God, 1948; A. Jukes, The Names of God in Holy Scripture, (1888) 1967; G. A. F. Knight, A Christian Theology of the Old Testament, 1959; C. J. Labuschagne, The Incomparability of Yahweh in the Old Testament, Pretoria Oriental Series 5, 1966; T. Ling, A History of Religion East and West, 1968; G. van der Leeuw, Religion in Essence and Manifestation: A Study in Phenomenology, 1964²; H. Miskotte, When the Gods are Silent, 1967; J. A. Motyer, The Revelation of the Divine Name, 1959; and "Context and Contents in the Interpretation of Isaiah 7:14", TB 21, 1970, 118–25; A. Marmorstein, The Old Rabbinic Doctrine of God, (1927) 1937; M. Noth, "God, King and Nation", in The Laws the Pentateuch and Other Studies, 1966, 145–78; J. Barton Payne, The Theology of the Older Testament, 1962, 120–76; J. Plastras, The God of Exodus, 1966; G. von Rad, Old Testament Theology, I, 1962, 203–19; H. Ringgren and A. V. Ström, Religions of Mankind: Yesterday and Today, 1967; H. H. Rowley, "The Nature of God", in The Faith of Israel: Aspects of Old Testament Thought, 1956, 48–75; and The Religion of Israel, 1956; H. J. Schoeps, The Jewish-Christian Argument: A History of Theologies in Conflict, 1963; N. Smart, The Religious Experience of Mankind, 1969; R. A. Stewart, Rabbinic Theology, 1961, 18–46; R. de Vaux, "The Revelation of the Divine Name YHWH", in J. I. Durham and J. R. Porter, eds., Proclamation and Presence: Old Testament Essays in Honour of Gwynne Henton Davies, 1970, 48–75; Th. C. Vriezen, An Outline Theology of the Old Testament, 1958, 128–98; H. J. Wicks, The Doctrine of God in the Jewish Apocrypha and Apocalyptic Literature, 1915; H. M. Wolf, "A Solution to the Immanuel Prophecy in Isaiah 7:14–8:22", JBL 91, 1972, 449–56; R. C. Zaehner, The Dawn and Twilight of Zoroastrianism, 1961.

(b). K. L. Bellon, "Der Sinn der Frage nach dem Ursprung der Gottesidee", Zeitschrift für Missionswissenschaft 38, 1954, 318 ff.; H. A. Brongers, "Die Wendung b^{e}šēm jhwh im Alten Testament", ZAW 77, 1965, 1ff.; M. Buber, "Die Götter der Völker und Gott", Festschrift for O. Michel, 1963, 44–57; E. L. Dietrich, "Die rabbinische Kritik an Gott", ZRGG 7, 1955, 193 ff.; O. Eissfeldt, Vom Werden der biblischen Gottesanschauung, 1926^{2}; and "Jahwe, der Gott der Väter", TLZ 88, 1963, 481–90; A. Gelin, "Le monothéisme d'Israel", Lumière et Vie 29, 1956, 9–26; V. Hamp, "Monotheismus im Alten Testament", Sacra Pagina 1, 1959, 44–56; J. Hempel, Gott und Mensch im Alten Testament, BWANT III, 2, 1936^{2}; W. Jaeger, Die Theologie der frühen griechischen Denker, 1953; J. Jeremias, Theophanie. Die Geschichte einer alttestamentlicher Gattung, Wissenschaftliche Monographien 10, 1965; R. Knieriem, "Das erste Gebot", ZAW 77, 1965, 20 ff.; H.-J. Kraus, "Der lebendige Gott", Biblisch-theologische Autsätze, 1972, 1–36; W. F. Otto, Die altgriechische Gottesidee, 1926; and Die Götter Griechenlands, 1934^{2}; H. D. Preuss, Jahweglaube und Zukunftserwartung, BWANT 87, 1968; G. von Rad, Gottes Wirken in Israel: Vorträge zum Alten Testament, 1974; B. Renaud, Je suis un Dieu jaloux, 1963; R. Rendtorff, "El, Baal und Jahwe. Erwägungen zum Verhältnis von kanaanitischer und israelitischer Religion". ZAW 78 Neue Folge 37, 227 ff.; H. Schrade, Das verborgene Gottesbild und Gottesvorstellung in Israel und im Alten Orient, 1949; H. Seebass, Der Erzvater Israel und die Einführung der Jahweverehrung in Kanaan, 1966; N. Söderblom, Das Werden des Gottesglaubens, 1926^{2}; C. Steuernagel, "Jahwe und die Vätergötter" in Festschrift for G. Beer, 1935; U. von Wilamowitz-Moellendorff, Der Glaube der Hellenen, I, 1955^{2}; H. Wildberger, "Das Abbild Gottes, Gen. 1, 26–30", ThZ 21, 1965, 481 ff.

On God in the NT:
(a). A. W. Argyle, God in the New Testament, 1965; R. M. Grant, The Early Christian Doctrine of God, 1966; R. G. Crawford, "Is the Doctrine of the Trinity Scriptural?", SJT 20, 1967, 282–94; D. A. Hagner, "The Vision of God in Philo and John: A Comparative Study", Journal of the Evangelical Theological Society, 142, 1971, 81–93; H. Kleinknecht, G. Quell, E. Stauffer and K. G. Kuhn, theos, TDNT III 65–123; G. A. F. Knight, A Biblical Approach to the Doctrine of the Trinity (SJT Occasional Papers No. 1), 1953; J. Jeremias, The Prayers of Jesus, 1967; T. W. Manson, The Teaching of Jesus, 1935^{2}, 89–170; H. W. Montefiore, "God as Father in the Synoptic Gospels", NTS 3, 1956–7, 1–11; K. Rahner, "Theos in the New Testament", Theological Investigations, I, 1965^{2}, 79–148; J. A. Sanders, "Dissenting Deities and Philippians 2:1–11;" JBL 88, 1969, 279–90; R. Schnackenburg, "God", EBT I 309–16; E. Schweizer, "What is Meant by 'God'?", Interpretation 21, 1967, 421–34; H. F. D. Sparks, "The Doctrine of Divine Fatherhood in the Gospels", in D. E. Nineham, ed., Studies in the Gospels: Essays in Memory of R. H. Lightfoot, 1955, 241–62; W. C. van Unnik, "Dominus Vobiscum", in A. J. B. Higgins, ed., New Testament Essays: Studies in Memory of T. W. Manson, 1959, 270–305; A. W. Wainwright, "The Confession 'Jesus is God' in the New Testament", SJT 10, 1957, 274–99; and The Trinity in the New Testament, 1962.
(b). H. Braun, Gesammelte Studien zum Neuen Testament und seiner Umwelt, 1967^{2}; G. Delling, "Partizipiale Gottesprädikationen in den Briefen des Neuen Testaments", StTh 17, 1963, 1–59; J. Feiner and M. Löhrer, eds., Mysterium Salutis, II, 1967; W. G. Kümmel, "Die Gottesverkündigung Jesu und der Gottesgedanke des Spätjudentums", Judaica 1, 1945, 40–68, reprinted in Heilsgeschehen und Geschichte, 1965, 107–25; J. Leipoldt, Das Gotteserlebnis Jesu im Lichte der vergleichenden Religionsgeschichte, 1927; W. Marchel, Abba, Vater!, 1963; C. Müller, Gottes Gerechtigkeit und Gottes Volk. Eine Untersuchung zu Röm. 9–11, FRLANT 86, 1964; T. Müller, Gottesbild und Gottesbeziehung im Neuen Testament, 1966; E. Pax, "Die Epiphanie Gottes im Neuen Testament", BuK 19, 1964, 106 ff.; E. Rohde, "Gottesglaube und Kyriosglaube bei Paulus", ZNW 22, 1923, 43 ff.

God in Systematic Theology:
(a). J. Baillie, Our Knowledge of God, 1939; K. Barth, CD, I, 1–2, The Doctrine of the Word of God; CD II, 1–3, The Doctrine of God; H. Bavinck, The Doctrine of God, 1951; L. Berkhof, Systematic Theology, 1938; 19–178; E. Brunner, Dogmatics, I, The Christian Doctrine of God, 1949; J. Daniélou, God and Us, 1967; E. Farley, The Transcendence of God, 1962; E. J. Fortman, The Triune God: A Historical Study of the Doctrine of the Trinity, 1972; R. T. France, The Living God, 1970; R. S. Franks, The Doctrine of the Trinity, 1953; H. Gollwitzer, The Existence of God as Confessed by Faith, 1965; R. P. C. Hanson, The Attractiveness of God: Essays in Christian Doctrine, 1973; C. F. H. Henry, "God", ZPEB II 742–58; E. Hill, "Our Knowledge of the Trinity", SJT 27, 1974, 1–11; C. Hodge, Systematic Theology, I, reprint 1960, 191–482; L. Hodgson, The Doctrine of the Trinity, 1943; J. R. Illingworth, Personality: Human and Divine, 1894; The Doctrine of the Trinity Apologetically Considered, 1907; and Divine Transcendence, 1911; E. Jüngel, The Doctrine of the Trinity, 1976; J. N. D. Kelly, Early Christian Creeds, 1972[3]; Early Christian Doctrines, 1968[4]; and The Athanasian Creed, 1964; J. K. Mozley, The Impassibility of God: A Survey of Christian Thought, 1926; and The Doctrine of God, 1928; J. I. Packer, Knowing God, 1973; W. Pannenberg, Basic Questions in Theology, I-III, 1970–73; L. G. Patterson, God and History in Early Christian Thought, 1968; G. L. Prestige, God in Patristic Thought, 1936; K. Rahner, The Trinity, 1970; "Remarks on the Dogmatic Treatise 'De Trinitate' ", Theological Investigations, IV, 1966, 77–102; A. E. J. Rawlinson, ed., Essays on the Trinity and the Incarnation, 1928; C. C. Richardson, The Doctrine of the Trinity, 1958; N. H. G. Robinson, "God", in A. Richardson, ed., A Dictionary of Christian Theology, 1969, 137–46; and "Trinitarianism and Post-Barthian Theology", JTS N. S. 20, 1969, 186–201; E. Schillebeeckx, God and Man, 1969; D. Sölle, Christ the Representative: An Essay in Theology after the "Death of God", 1967; H. E. W. Turner, "Trinity", in A. Richardson, op. cit., 345–51; B. B. Warfield, "The Biblical Doctrine of the Trinity" and "The God of our Fathers and the Lord Jesus Christ", in Biblical and Theological Studies, 1952, 29–59 and 60–78; A. C. Welch, The Trinity in Contemporary Theology, 1952; H. Zahrnt, The Question of God, 1966; and What Kind of God? A Question of Faith, 1971.

(b). G. Aulén, Das christliche Gottesbild in Vergangenheit und Gegenwart, 1930; K. H. Bernhardt, "Fremde Götter", BHHW I 589 ff.; K. Goldammer et al., "Gott", RGG[3] II 1701 ff.; H. Gollwitzer, "Das Wort "Gott" in christlicher Theologie", TLZ 92, 1967, 161 ff.; J. Haeckel et al., "Gott", LTK IV 1070 ff.; H.-J. Iwand, Glauben und Wissen. Nachgelassene Werke, 1961, 27 ff.; E. Jacob and W. Schmauch, "Gott", BHHW I 585 ff.; W. Knevels, Die Wirklichkeit Gottes, 1964; W. Künneth, Von Gott Reden?, 1965; B. Lonergan, De Deo Trino, 1961; and Divinarum Personarum Conceptionem Analogicam, 1957; F. Mildenberger, "Überlegungen zum Gottesbegriff", ZTK 62, 1965, 458 ff.; O. Plöger, W. Kasch and W. Wiesner, "Gott, Gottesglaube", EKL I 1639 ff.; H. H. Schrey, "Zwischen Orthodoxie und Häresie. Die doppelte Verantwortung unseres Redens von Gott", Evangelische Kommentare, 1968, 250 ff.

On God in philosophy and philosophical theology:

J. Adam, The Religious Teachers of Greece, 1908; T. J. J. Altizer and W. Hamilton, Radical Theology and the Death of God, 1968; J. Barnes, The Ontological Argument, 1972; P. A. Bertocci, The Person God Is, 1970; J. Bowker, The Sense of God, 1973; C. Brown, Philosophy and the Christian Faith, 1971[2]; S. C. Brown, Do Religious Claims Make Sense? 1969; M. Buber, Eclipse of God, 1952; R. Bultmann, "What Does it Mean to Speak of God?" and "The Problem of 'Natural Theology' " in Faith and Understanding: Collected Essays, 1969, 53–65 and 313–331; D. R. Burrell, The Cosmological Arguments, 1967; J. Collins, God in Modern Philosophy, 1960; M. Durrant, The Logical Status of God", 1973; and Theology and Intelligibility, 1973; H. H. Farmer, The World and God, 1935; A. M. Farrer, Finite and Infinite, 1943; F. Ferré, "Is Language about God Fraudulent?", SJT 12, 1959, 337–60; and Language, Logic and God, 1962; and Basic Modern Philosophy of Religion, 1965; A. G. N. Flew, God and Philosophy, 1966; A. G. N. Flew and A. MacIntyre, eds., New Essays in Philosophical Theology, 1955; E. Boyce Gibson, Theism and Empiricism, 1970; K. Hamilton, God is Dead: The Anatomy of a Slogan, 1966; R. W. Hepburn, Christianity and Paradox, 1958; J. Hick, Philosophy of Religion, 1963; Evil and the God of Love, 1966; Arguments for the Existence of God, 1970; God and the Universe of Faiths, 1973; J. Hick, ed., The Existence of God, 1964; J. Hick and A. McGill, eds., The Many-Faced Argument, 1968; W. Hordern, Speaking of God: The Nature and Purpose of Theological Language, 1965; W. D. Hudson, A Philosophical Approach to Religion, 1974; F. von Hügel, The Reality of God and Religion and Agnosticism, 1931; E. O. James, The Concept of Deity, 1950; D. Jenkins, Guide to the Debate about God, 1966; A. Kenny, The Five Ways, 1969; R. H. King, The Meaning of God, 1974; H. D. Lewis, Our Experience of God, 1959; B. Lonergan, Insight, 1957; Collection, 1967; Philosophy of God and Theology, 1974; and A Second Collection, 1975; J. Macquarrie, Principles of Christian Theology, 1966; God-Talk, 1967; Thinking about God, 1975; T. McPherson, The Argument from Design, 1972; and Philosophy and Religious Belief, 1974; E. L. Mascall, He Who Is, 1943; Existence and Analogy, 1949; The Secularisation of Christianity, 1965; and The Openness of Being, 1971; W. I. Matson, The Existence of God, 1965; W. R. Matthews, God in Christian Thought and Experience, 1930; H. Meynell, God and the World, 1971; B. Mitchell, The Justification of Religious Belief, 1973; B. Mitchell, ed., Faith and Logic, 1957; R. C. Neville, God the Creator: On the Transcendence and Presence of God, 1968; S. M. Ogden, The Reality of God, 1967; T. W. Ogletree, The "Death of God" Controversy, 1968; J. Oman, The Natural and the Supernatural, 1931; R. Otto, The Idea of the Holy, 1925; H. P. Owen, The Moral Argument for Christian Theism, 1965; The Christian Knowledge of God, 1969; Concepts of Deity, 1971; and "God, Concepts of" in P. Edwards, ed., The Encyclopedia of Philosophy, III 344–48; N. Pike, God and Timelessness, 1970; N. Pittenger, God in Process, 1967; A. Plantinga, God and Other Minds: A Study of the Rational Justification for Belief in God, 1967; and A. Plantinga, ed., The Ontological Argument, 1968; A. S. Pringle-Pattison, The Idea of God in the Light of Recent Philosophy, 1920; I. T. Ramsey, Religious Language: An Empirical Placing of Theological Phrases, 1957; Christian Empiricism, 1974; I. T. Ramsey, ed., Words about God, 1971; J. A. T. Robinson, Honest to God, 1963 (cf. D. L. Edwards, ed., The Honest to God Debate, 1963); and Exploration into God, 1967; N. H. G. Robinson, "The logical placing of the name 'God' ", SJT 24, 1971, 129–48; F. Schaeffer, Escape from Reason, 1968; The God Who is There, 1968; and He is There and He is Not Silent, 1972; F. Sontag, Divine Perfection, 1962; G. F. Stout, God and Nature, 1952; A. E. Taylor, "Theism", ERE XII 261–87; W. Temple, Nature, Man and God, 1934; F. R. Tennant, Philosophical Theology, II, The World, the Soul and God, 1937; P. Tillich, Systematic Theology, I, 1953; T. F. Torrance, God and Rationality, 1971; I. Trethowan, The Basis of Belief, 1960; and Absolute Value: A Study in Christian Theism, 1970; B. Tyrrell, Bernard Lonergan's Philosophy of God, 1974; G. N. A. Vesey et al., Talk of God: Royal Institute of Philosophy Lectures 1967–1968, 1969; K. Ward, The Concept of God, 1974; C. C. J. Webb, Religion and Theism, 1934; V. White, God and the Unconscious, 1952; and God the Unknown, and Other Essays, 1956. A. N. Whitehead, Religion in the Making, 1926; and Process and Reality 1929.

Godliness, Piety

When faced with that which is awe-inspiring, sublime, or holy, man always keeps a respectful distance and sometimes is seized with fear. The idea of distance is basic to the sebomai group of words. They denote the appropriate attitude to that which merits reverence, ranging from respect for one's fellow-men and the rules of society to reverence in public worship. On the other hand, the eulabēs group of words has more the character of caution and circumspection, and with this background came to be used for the normal religious attitude. The adj. sebomenos, which became the regular term for non-Jews who attached themselves to the synagogue, is discussed separately under → Conversion (art. prosēlytos).

εὐλάβεια

εὐλάβεια (eulabeia), fear, awe, piety; εὐλαβής (eulabēs), devout; εὐλαβέομαι (eulabeomai), to reverence, to be afraid.

CL The eulabeia word-group is found in profane Greek from the 3rd or 4th cent. B.C. Originally it denoted caution, circumspection, discretion, and then in later Gk. reverence (cf. R. Bultmann, TDNT II 751; Liddell-Scott, 720). The meanings discretion, fear and reverence are found in early Christian literature (Lampe, 567). From the basic meaning of eulabeia there evolved the additional idea of fear, dread, anxiety.

OT In the LXX the vb. in particular occurs frequently. The original meaning of eulabeomai, to take care, is clearly recognizable in Deut. 2:4; Sir. 18:27; 26:5.

For that reason the word is not used for numinous terror (→ Miracle). The meaning to → fear predominates in the LXX: Exod. 3:6; 1 Sam. 18:15, 29 (chiefly for the Heb. yārē' or gûr). It is frequently found in combination with phobeisthai from which it cannot be sharply distinguished (e.g. in Jer. 5:22; Mal. 3:16). But eulabeomai can also stand for the Heb. ḥāsâh; the appropriate translation is then to trust, to seek or take refuge, or to honour (Nah. 1:7; Zeph. 3:12 and passim). eulabeomai thus approaches the idea of devoutness. The adj. eulabēs, devout, godly, is found with the v.l. eusebēs in Mic. 7:2; Sir. 11:17; Acts 22:12. The noun eulabeia is found in Jos. 22:24 and Wis. 17:8 with the meaning fear; in Prov. 28:14 it means circumspection.

NT 1. eulabēs occurs 4 times in the NT and means as in the LXX devout, God-fearing. Thus in Lk. 2:25 Simeon is described as dikaios kai eulabēs, righteous and devout. In Acts 2:5 the witnesses from the Jewish diaspora on the day of → Pentecost are described as "devout men", likewise in Acts 8:2 the men who buried Stephen. In Acts 22:12 Ananias who was sent by the Lord to Saul is said to have been anēr eulabēs according to the law, i.e. his Jewish piety revealed itself in his keeping of the law.

2. eulabeia occurs in the NT only in Heb. 5:7 and 12:28. In Heb. 5:7 the old translations differ in their understanding of the words eisakoustheis apo tēs eulabeias. The Old Latin translates a metu, i.e. heard (set free) from his fear. The Vulgate rendering, however, is more likely: pro sua reverentia, Jesus was heard for his devoutness, i.e. his obedience (v. 8). The raising of Jesus from the dead was God's answer to his Son's supplication in the days of his flesh (cf. Phil. 2:8 ff.). In Heb. 12:28 the understanding of eulabeia as fear is suggested by v. 29 (cf. Phil. 2:12, "fear and trembling"); but the rendering "devoutness" is equally possible. The vb. eulabeisthai is found in the NT only in Acts 23:10 (eulabētheis as an alternative to phobētheis, which has the same meaning but is better attested in the MSS; → fear), and in Heb. 11:7, where eulabētheis denotes the attitude of → Noah while building the ark; the translation "in the fear of God" would seem to be correct.

W. Mundle

σέβομαι

σέβομαι (sebomai), to reverence, shrink back in fear, worship; σεβάζομαι (sebazomai), show religious reverence, worship; σέβασμα (sebasma), object of religious reverence, holy thing, sanctuary; εὐσεβέω (eusebeō), reverence, be devout; εὐσέβεια (eusebeia), devoutness, piety, fear of God, religion; εὐσεβής (eusebēs), God-fearing, devout, pious; θεοσέβεια (theosebeia), fear of God, reverence for God, devoutness; θεοσεβής (theosebēs), devout, God-fearing; ἀσέβεια (asebeia), impiety, godlessness; ἀσεβής (asebēs), godless, impious; σεμνός (semnos), honourable, worthy of reverence, venerable, holy; σεμνότης (semnotēs), honourableness, dignity, holiness.

CL 1. The root seb- meant originally to step back from someone or something, to maintain a distance. From this spatial meaning, as contexts often gave the reason for maintaining a distance, there developed the metaphorical idea of trepidation ranging from shame, through wonder, to something approaching fear.

This attitude is evoked by that which is sublime and majestic, or by the risk of failure.

The act. sebō (post-Homeric) is rare; as a rule the mid. forms sebomai or sebazomai (from sebas) are used. The combination with eu (well, which in compounds was used to imply abundance) rarely occurs in the case of the vb. (eusebeō); on the other hand the noun eusebeia and the adj. eusebēs are frequently found. The word theosebeia, which in form conveys the more restricted idea of one's attitude towards deities, does not in fact differ essentially either in use or meaning from eusebeia. sebasma is an object of religious reverence, an idol; in the plur. it often means the cult.

The negative, asebēs, asebeia, is used to denote an outrage against someone, whereby established laws and ordinances are broken.

semnos and semnotēs denote that which is sublime, majestic, holy, evoking reverence. The difference between these words and sebō is that they contain a stronger aesthetic element: thus a royal throne, an ornament, or sublime music can be so described. The adj. and the noun often denote the majesty of deity, but sometimes also the solemnity, serious purpose and grandeur of a man.

2. Words deriving from the stem seb- are very frequent in Gk., and convey the idea of devoutness and religiousness so characteristic of the Greeks. This devoutness does not consist – as in the Bible – in a committed obedience to a single, personally-conceived God; but rather in a holy trepidation, wonder, or admiration called forth by a majesty in things, men or deities. Accordingly religious homage can be paid to very different objects: one's country, a landscape, dreams, parents, heroes, the dead, etc. Later this basic idea fades, and sebomai can assume the meaning to bless or congratulate.

For the Greeks those who are worthy of reverence are above all the members of one's own family (including one's ancestors), the gods and the laws ordained by them. In religious usage there is an easy transition from respect or honour to the reverence of the cult. eusebeia is one of the virtues of the man who is righteous and acceptable to the gods.

The negative form asebeia likewise has an ethical and religious content. Because of the close connection between the ordinances of the Gk. city state (→ People, art. polis CL) and the worship of the gods, the asebēs is often named side by side with the adikos (→ sin); want of reverence for the gods and neglect of cultic obligations were considered anti-social. In the case of a man who was a misfit in the community, adikia was that aspect of his behaviour which was against the ordinances, while asebeia described that aspect which was against the gods. asebeia refers specifically to the cult of the state in Athenian trials for "impiety" (especially the one against Socrates). In Greece the worship of the gods declined more and more in favour of a philosophical ideal and an ethico-moral attitude. A philosopher could be an atheist (atheotēs), and Christians also were described in this way because they did not reverence the old gods (cf. Lampe, 44 f.). Being accused of denying the old gods, however, did not mean they were accused of asebeia; for the term asebēs was reserved exclusively for the man with no religion and no morals (Liddell-Scott, 255).

OT These ideas rarely appear in the LXX because the basis of OT piety is quite different from that of Hellenism. God the creator lays claim to man's service in thought, word and deed; he requires active obedience, not devout trepidation to which lip-service is paid just on fixed occasions in cultic homage, or in the sphere of intellectual rhetoric. This active obedience, together with worship, is the characteristic feature of the fear of God (phobos theou, → Fear), which is essentially the OT (as opposed to the Gk.) idea of piety. Thus, in the few cases where eusebeia and its cognates are used, it usually renders words from the root yārē', to fear. But often they are without Heb. equivalent. For eusebeia see Prov. 1:7; 13:11; Isa. 11:2; 33:6; Wis. 10:12; Sir. 49:3; 4 Macc. 5:18, 24, 31, 38; 6:2, 22 etc.; eusebeō Dan. LXX Su. 64; 4 Macc. 9:6; 11:5, 8, 23; 18:2; eusebēs Jud. 8:31; Job 32:3; Prov. 12:12; 13:19; Eccl. 3:16; Sir. 11:17, 22; 12:2, 4; Isa. 24:16; 26:7; 32:8; 4 Macc. 1:1, 7; 6:31; 7:16; 10:15 etc.; eusebōs 4 Macc. 7:21.

Only in the Wisdom literature, in Job and the Apocrypha (esp. 4 Macc.), do eusebeia and its related words occur more frequently – an indication of Hel. influence. The same is true of the semnos word-group (of which the noun and adv. appear once each, and the vb. not at all): out of 12 occurrences, 3 are in Prov., one is a v.l., and all the rest are in Macc. This adj. describes that which is sublime, holy and thus worthy of God; in contrast with hagios (→ holy), therefore, it is the aesthetic element which predominates. For semnos see Jdg. 11:35; Prov. 6:8; 8:6; 15:26; 2 Macc. 6:11, 28; 8:15; 4 Macc. 5:36; 7:15; 17:5; for semnotēs 2 Macc. 3:12; semnōs 4 Macc. 1:17.

In the LXX the negative compound asebēs is used synonymously with adikos, unrighteous, unjust, and describes both an individual action and the general attitude of men, in departing from God. An injustice among men, particularly in Israel, is at the same time an offence against God and his commandments (cf. CL above). Thus asebeia and adikia stand very close to hamartia, → sin: social order and social justice are inseparable from worship. asebēs renders some 16 Heb. expressions and is particularly frequent in Job (e.g. 3:17; 6:19; 8:13, 19f., 22; 40:7[12]); Pss. (e.g. 1:1, 4 ff.; 9:23, 34 [10:2, 13]; 50[51]:13); and especially Prov. (e.g. 1:7, 10, 22, 32; 2:22; 3:25, 33, 35). For asebeia see, e.g., Deut. 9:4 f.; 18:22; Ps. 5:10; Prov. 1:19, 31; 11:5 f. The vb. asebeō is rather less common than the adj. and the noun (e.g. Deut. 17:13; 18:20; Job 9:20 f.; 10:2 f., 7, 15; 34: 8, 10).

NT 1. In the NT this word-group is rarely found. Apart from the OT quotation in Mk. 7:7 par. Matt. 15:9 (= Isa. 29:13 LXX), sebomai occurs only in Acts, usually in its adjectival form as a technical term to denote the Gk. adherents of Jud. (→ Conversion, art. prosēlytos). In Acts 17:23 and 2 Thess. 2:4 sebasma is the heathen object of worship. sebazomai appears only in Rom. 1:25, where it means to show religious reverence. The vb. eusebeō (only twice), the adj. eusebēs (3 times), the adv. eusebōs (twice) and the noun eusebeia (15 times) are, apart from 4 instances in Acts, confined to the Pastoral Epistles and 2 Pet. In Acts 25:21, 25 sebastos is simply the Greek translation of Augustus – the exalted one; in Acts 27:1 it is used adjectivally to describe a cohort as "imperial", a common designation of certain auxiliary cohorts.

Like hosios (→ holy) which frequently stands alongside dikaios (→ righteousness), eusebēs and eusebeia denote a moral attitude in the Gk.-speaking world. Both ideas occur frequently in Hel. Jud. They are almost entirely lacking in the earlier NT literature, though very much in evidence in the Pastoral Epistles. This fact is best explained by supposing that early Christianity used these words at first for non-Christian piety and that only later did the Pastoral Epistles and 2 Pet. give them Christian content. Exceptions are the negative forms asebeia, godlessness (in thought and attitude) and the adj. asebēs, which are already found in Paul (Rom.).

2. Whilst latreuō (→ serve) is a neutral word for cultic worship, sebomai retains the anthropological emphasis of typical Gk. piety, i.e. deference to that which is sublime and exalted. It is very difficult to use such language in relation to God and Christ, because the Christian is in personal union with them, a union in obedience and trust.

In Rom. 1:18 Paul describes pre-Christian man as enslaved by asebeia and adikia "ungodliness and wickedness" (RSV; → sin), and states that the wrath of God rests upon him for giving divine honours to the creature rather than the creator (Rom. 1:25). He thus pronounces judgment upon all contemporary religious activity, for being wise in its own eyes, it fails to make any contact with the one true God and with his holy purpose either in the realm of worship or in that of interpersonal relationships. Here, as in the LXX, there is no longer a sharp distinction between asebeia and adikia (but cf. CL), because in the light of Christ's revelation, both are hamartia (→ sin). This important term gained ascendancy over asebeia, as indeed over all other terms which denote the outworkings of the power of evil.

As in the OT, hamartōlos and asebēs can stand side by side in Paul to describe the sinner whom Christ makes righteous (cf. Rom. 5:6 with 5:8; Rom. 4:5). The Pastoral Epistles take over this association (1 Tim. 1:9; cf. 1 Pet. 4:18). But here asebeia is in particular the antithesis of the much used eusebeia. According to Tit. 2:12, → grace leads us to turn away from an irreligious existence in order to live sōphronōs kai dikaiōs kai eusebōs, soberly, uprightly and godly. In 2 Tim. 2:16 the false teachers' alienation from God is described as asebeia.

3. The word theosebēs, which has the ring of Gk. piety about it, is used in Jn. 9:31. The additional thought that piety consists in doing the will of God shows, however, that this statement is firmly rooted in OT-Jewish tradition. In Acts the fear of God is described by the combination of eusebēs and phoboumenos (10:2): God is revered in that man fears him, i.e. offers him veneration, worship and sacrifice. At the same time the appropriate distance is maintained, because man is a sinner. This also explains the technical term sebomenos used in Acts. It denotes those Gentiles who worshipped the God of the Jews without wholly belonging to his people, i.e. without circumcision and minute observance of the law (Acts 13:43, 50; 16:14; 18:7; → Conversion, art. prosēlytos). This group of words is naturally used also for Gentile veneration of the gods (cf. Acts 17:23; 19:27).

4. The Pastoral Epistles use the relevant Gk. vocabulary more freely than the other NT writings, the probable reason being that → faith (pistis) is here more of a virtue than in Paul's other epistles and now means primarily a Christian attitude to life. Only on that account can the OT phrase phobos theou (fear of God) be rendered so consistently by the Hel. eusebeia, though to be sure the attitude of the believer – zēn eusebōs en Christō Iēsou, "live godly in Christ Jesus" (2 Tim. 3:12; cf. 1 Clem. 1:2) – is based on faith in Christ (1 Tim. 3:16; cf. 6:3), and its secret is the revelation of God in the flesh. The NT devout person now understands himself as a follower of Jesus Christ. Consequently devoutness becomes one in a series of Christian virtues (1 Tim. 6:11; Tit. 1:1; 2:12). Thus pistis, faith, here takes on a special colouring as compared with its use elsewhere in the NT. Good works are definitely included in it (1 Tim. 2:10; 5:4) – not however in the sense of justification by works which was precisely the error for which the false teachers are attacked (1 Tim. 4:7 f.; 6:5 f.; 2 Tim. 3:5). Faith is now seen as something ethical and relating to this world; only once is it defined in relation to its ultimate goal, the coming → kingdom of God (1 Tim. 4:8).

5. The use of the semnotēs group (noun 3 times, adj. 4 times) also fits into this framework. In Paul it is used only once (Phil. 4:8), where directions are being given to Christians for the conduct of their everyday lives. Otherwise it occurs almost exclusively in the Pastoral Epistles. semnotēs differs from eusebeia in that it indicates, without direct reference to God, an ethical and aesthetic outlook resulting in decency and orderliness. Seriousness both of doctrine and of life is expected of the leaders of the church. By ruling their own families well and setting a good example, they are to bring up their children to be obedient and to lead honourable lives (1 Tim. 2:2; 3:4, 8; Tit. 2:2, 7).

6. In Jude and 2 Pet. Christians are described as the righteous who live, like Noah and Lot, in the midst of asebeis, ungodly men (Jude 4, 15, 18; 2 Pet. 2:5 f.; 3:7). Here eusebeia is seen as the Christian manner of life, which keeps Christ's return constantly in view (2 Pet. 3:11 f.). The Christian who lives in this expectation attains to knowledge and is preserved from temptation (2 Pet. 1:3–8; 2:9).

W. Günther

(a). R. Bultmann, eulabēs etc., TDNT II 751–4; W. Foerster, sebomai etc., TDNT VII 168–96.
(b). W. Foerster, "eusebeia in den Pastoralbriefen", NTS 5, 1958–9, 213 ff.; J. Jeremias, "Hebr. 5, 7–10", ZNW 44, 1952–53, 107 ff.; E. M. Kredel and A. Auer, "Frömmigkeit", LTK IV 398 ff.; H. J. Schultz, Frömmigkeit in einer weltlichen Welt, 1959; A. Strobel, "Die Psalmengrundlage der Gethsemane-Parallele Hebr. 5, 7 ff.", ZNW 45, 1954, 252 ff.

Gold, Silver, Bronze, Iron

χρυσός

χρυσός (chrysos), gold; χρυσίον (chrysion), a piece of gold, gold coin; χρυσόω (chrysoō), adorn with gold; χρυσοῦς (chrysous), golden.

CL The Gk. word is a borrowing from the Near East, Heb. ḥārûṣ, Assyr. ḫurāšu. This may reflect the fact that gold was rare in Greece before Alexander the Great captured Persia's stores of gold, but in Egypt, W. Arabia, in the mountains of Armenia and Persia gold was widely used and the goldsmith's art perfected from the third millennium B.C. Hesiod in Works and Days wrote of a golden age and a golden race of men who reflected the glory of the immortals.

OT In the LXX chrysos and chrysion, which became interchangeable terms, translate six different Heb. words for gold, of which the most common is zāhāḇ. These probably indicated differing degrees of purity in the gold which was often mixed with varying percentages of silver (cf. Gen. 2:11 f.). There were three ways of working gold. It could be melted and cast into moulds to form solid figures (Exod. 32:4), beaten into sheets with which objects could be covered (Exod. 25:11), or beaten into a particular shape (Exod. 25:31). Besides the cultic associations of gold in both the Tabernacle and the → Temple, in countries round about it was made into idols (Exod. 20:23). It was frequently used for jewellery (Gen. 41:42; Jdg. 8:26) and at a comparatively early date it was used for currency (2 Ki. 18:14; 23:33). Since royalty throughout the ages made use of gold for crowns and thrones, cups and drinking bowls (1 Ki. 10:18, 21; Est. 1:7), gold became an appropriate gift for a king (Ps. 72:15). In Daniel's interpretation of Nebuchadrezzar's → dream the Babylonian king is the head of gold (Dan. 2:38). Because gold is indestructible it becomes a symbol for great value and enduring worth (Prov. 8:18 f.).

NT In the NT the danger of covetousness and the association of idolatry colour the thinking of several writers (Acts 17:29; 20:33; 1 Tim. 2:9; Jas. 5:3; 1 Pet. 1:18; Rev. 9:20). On the other hand, gold is presented to the infant Jesus (Matt. 2:11; → Gift; → Incense), and symbolizes lasting value (1 Cor. 3:12) and heaven's perfection (Rev. 21:18, 21). J. G. Baldwin

ἀργύριον

ἀργύριον (argyrion), silver; ἄργυρος (argyros), [less frequent] silver; ἀργυροῦς (argyrous), made of silver.

CL The Gk. word derives from the adj. argos, shining, white, and occurs first in Homer. While the word denotes anything silver, it often has the significance of money. In Hesiod the silver age followed the golden and was inferior to it.

OT In LXX argyrion translates the Heb. kesep̄, which occurs frequently in the OT, often in connection with gold. Silver had been known as early as gold, but it was less plentiful in ancient Babylon and Egypt. It is first mentioned in the Bible as a medium of exchange (Gen. 23:15) and this use predominates in the OT. But it was also used for jewellery (Exod. 3:22; Cant. 1:11) and was sometimes fashioned into an idol (Jdg. 17:3). Mining for silver is mentioned in Job 28:1, and because it was rarely found in pure form, but was most frequently mixed with other metals, it regularly needed refining and so became symbolic of God's refining process in men's hearts (Isa. 1:25; Zech. 13:9; Mal. 3:3).

NT As in the case of gold, silver in the NT is associated with idolatry (Acts 17:29; 19:24; Rev. 9:20). It is corruptible and a potential source of corruption (Matt. 26:15); it is therefore an unworthy goal for living (Jas. 5:3; 1 Pet. 1:18). Indeed the follower of Jesus may be called upon to do without it altogether (Matt. 10:9). J. G. Baldwin

χαλκός

χαλκός (chalkos), copper, bronze (not brass, AV, RV), a copper coin; χαλκίον (chalkion), a copper vessel or implement; χαλκεύς (chalkeus), coppersmith.

CL Since copper was the first metal to be worked in Greece, chalkos became the word for metal in general and applied at first also to iron. Later it also included bronze, copper to which a small amount of tin had been added.

OT In the LXX copper (Heb. nᵉḥōšeṯ) is first mentioned, together with iron, in connection with Tubal-Cain, who made cutting instruments (Gen. 4:22). This draws attention to an important development in the history of mankind. Copper weapons, mace heads, helmets, axe blades, were developed in the Early Bronze period, and a cache of 450 copper objects, including a socketed axehead of c. 3100 found at Nahal Mishmar in the Judean desert in 1961, has pushed back into the fourth millennium the achievement of high technical standards. Bronze probably made its appearance c. 2000 B.C., but copper remained in use for objects which did not need to be cast, and both metals became much more common from this time on. A hard cutting edge was achieved on this soft metal by hammering.

The altar of sacrifice in the tabernacle was bronze covered (Exod. 38:2), whereas its carrying rings were cast (38:5), and Solomon imported Hiram from Tyre to oversee the lavish bronze and copper work connected with the Temple (1 Ki. 7:13–47). Copper smelting was carried out as early as 4000 B.C. at Timnah, a mining site about 15 miles north of Elath. It was here that N. Glueck thought (in 1940) he had found King Solomon's mines, but B. Rothenberg has now proved that Egyptians operated these mines in the 14th–12th centuries B.C. In 1974 a network of underground mines and shafts, penetrating for hundreds of yards in all directions and at several levels, was excavated. These mines are at least a thousand years older than the earliest previously explored underground mines. The deepest workings are several hundred feet below the surface and are supplied with ventilation by air channels, roughly the diameter of a thumb, yet very few technical errors were noted. The description of mining in Job 28:1–11 will be illuminated by the new evidence now available.

([F. F. Bruce] In Ezek. 1:4, 27; 8:2 ḥašmal, which LXX renders ēlektron, electrum, silver-gold alloy, may mean brass [like Accad. elmešu]; the imagery of Ezekiel's inaugural vision "will have been suggested to him . . . by . . . the work of a Babylonian brass-founder" [G. R. Driver, "Ezekiel's Inaugural Vision", VT 1, 1951, 60–62].)

NT The word occurs only 6 times in the NT meaning copper coin (Matt. 10:9; Mk. 6:8; 12:41), the material from which an idol is made (Rev. 9:20), a commodity of merchandise (Rev. 18:12) and a clanging gong (1 Cor. 13:1), such as was used in various cults and here symbolizing the emptiness of speaking in tongues when devoid of understanding and love. The compound chalkolibanon (Rev. 1:15) describes an alloy, the exact nature of which is not known.

J. G. Baldwin

σίδηρος

σίδηρος (sidēros), iron; σιδηροῦς (sidērous), made of iron.

CL The Gk. word meant not only iron but also anything made of iron and a place for selling iron. In Homer's time iron was highly valued and pieces were given as prizes. Hesiod considered the Iron Age in which he lived to be the epitome of human evil. The word is used symbolically by Homer to mean hard, stubborn, merciless.

OT In the LXX the word occurs frequently, translating Heb. barzel (Aram. parzel). Anatolian armourers were experimenting as early as the third millennium B.C.

with iron blades for swords, and one example from Dorak is dated 2500 B.C. The metallurgy of iron is believed to have been developed by the Hittites during the second millennium B.C. Deuteronomy mentions "the iron furnace" (Deut. 4:20), and it will be interesting to see how old smelting crucibles in the Sinai and Negev regions prove to be. Hittite iron was brought to Palestine by merchants from Tyre and later by the Philistines, who monopolized the blacksmith's art (1 Sam. 13:19, 20). The Canaanites had chariots of iron (i.e. with iron fittings) in the Judges period (Jos. 17:16; Jdg. 1:19; 4:3). By the time of David iron was used for nails (1 Chr. 22:3), though bronze was still being used in large quantities. The OT uses iron as a symbol of strength (Ps. 2:9; Jer. 1:18), endurance and hardness (Job 19:24; Mic. 4:13), and cruelty (Dan. 7:7, 19; Amos 1:3). In Nebuchadrezzar's image (Dan 2) iron with clay represented the last human kingdom before God's kingdom filled the earth.

NT In the NT the word is used in a symbolic sense (Rev. 2:27; 9:9; 12:5; 19:15), and once as an item of merchandise (Rev. 18:12). Rev. 2:27; 12:5; and 19:15 interpret Ps. 2:9 christologically as a picture of Christ reigning in → judgment. The iron sceptre may have been a short-handled battle mace (A. A. Anderson, The Book of Psalms, I, 1972, 69). J. G. Baldwin

D. R. Bowes, "Bronze", ZPEB I 655 f.; "Gold", ZPEB II 771 f.; "Iron", ZPEB III 307 ff.; "Silver", ZPEB V 437 f.; N. Glueck, "Ezion-geber", BA 88, 1965, 70–87 (this article revises some of the author's earlier opinions); A. Negev, ed., Archaeological Encyclopedia of the Holy Land, 1972, 208–11; B. Rothenberg, PEQ 104, 1962, 5–71; S. M. Paul and W. G. Dever, eds., Biblical Archaeology, 1973, 193–204; C. Singer, E. J. Holmyard, A. R. Hall and T. I. Williams, eds., A History of Technology, I, 1954, 582–88.

Good, Beautiful, Kind

Just as the concept → evil can have different, distinct shades of meaning, the ideas contained in the concept good are expressed in NT Gk. by three word-groups, each with its own separate emphasis. agathos is used generally for what is good and useful, especially moral goodness in relation to God who is perfect. kalos can be used as a synonym, but in comparison with the ethical and religious emphasis of agathos, it stresses more the aesthetic aspect, and stands for beautiful, fine, free from defects. When applied to acts, it means noble, praiseworthy. For Plato the kalon is the realization of the agathon in the sphere of objects. chrēstos expresses the material usefulness of things with regard to their goodness, pleasantness and softness.

ἀγαθός

ἀγαθός (agathos), good; ἀγαθοεργέω (agathoergeō), do good; ἀγαθοποιέω (agathopoieō), do good; ἀγαθοποιός (agathopoios), doing good, one who does good; ἀγαθοποιΐα (agathopoiia), doing good; ἀγαθωσύνη (agathōsynē), goodness, uprightness, generosity.

CL As an adj. in secular Gk. agathos means serviceable and good; used in conjunction with a noun it denotes the excellence of the object described. Used as a noun, to agathon and the plur. ta agatha mean the good or good things which evoke a state of well-being. They may be material, intellectual, moral or religious, depending on one's ideal for life. It is only agathos itself which is used with this wide range of meaning from the time of Homer to Koine Gk. All the other derivatives listed above do not occur until the LXX or the NT. Cl. Gk. used euergeteō and other terms in their place.

1. In Gk. philosophy the concept of the good plays a major rôle. For Plato the idea of the good is the all-embracing, highest, and indeed dominant idea or form. For the good is the power which preserves and supports in contrast to evil which spoils and destroys (Rep. 608 e). In Plato the idea of the good has a religious colouring (Rep. 517 b 7–c 4), but Aristotle applies it as a formal concept to the totality of human relations. In his Ethics he defines the goal of all action as the attainment of some form of good (Eth. Nic. 1, 1; cf. F. Copleston, A History of Philosophy, I, 1946, 160 ff., 177 ff., 332–50; W. Grundmann, agathos, TDNT I 11 f.).

2. In Hel. thought the ancient humanistic attitude to life was shattered (→ Foreign, art. xenos) and the predominant meaning of the concept of good is once again religious. According to the Hermetic writings, the salvation brought about by the deity, i.e. deification, is the good (Corp. Herm. 1, 26). Thus the predicate good was reserved for the deity who brings salvation (to agathon ho theos, God is the good; 2, 16; cf. 1, 7; 6, 3 f.; 11, 17), for he alone is free from attachment to the material (cf. W. Grundmann, TDNT I 12 f.).

As an expounder of Hel. Jud., Philo names enkrateia (moderation, Spec. Leg. 1, 149), eusebeia (fear of God, Spec. Leg. 4, 147) and sophia (wisdom, Rer. Div. Her. 98) as the highest possessions by means of which the soul finds the way to God, the highest good (W. Grundmann, TDNT I 13).

OT 1. In the OT the concept of the good is indissolubly linked with personal faith in God. An idea of the good, freed from the concept of God as personal – comparable with the ideas in Gk. and Hel. thought – is inconceivable. The good is always a gift from God and as such is outside the control of man in his own strength (Gen. 3:5). It is presupposed throughout that God is the One who is good, and not just "the good." This realization is further developed within the OT in the course of a deepening of the relationship of the people and of individuals to God (e.g. Pss. 34:10 [MT 34:11]; 84:11 [MT 84:12]; 23:6).

Thus ṭôḇ became the regular designation of the goodness of God's character or actions. The LXX translates ṭôḇ in this connection almost exclusively by to agathon, and thus approaches the Graeco-Hellenistic outlook. It only rarely employs the nearly synonymous → kalos (e.g. Gen. 1:18). Thus God, according to the usage of the LXX, becomes man's highest good, and man finally becomes the lord of this good in the sense that he acquires a right to "good" treatment, as long as he regards God as his highest good.

2. That → God is the One who is good is made clear in the OT through his saving dealings with his chosen people, in the giving of the → law (Deut. 30:15; Prov. 28:10), in the historical events of the Exodus from → Egypt and the conquest of Canaan (Exod. 18:9; Num. 10:29 ff.). The Israelite found renewed reason for praising God as the One who is good in the knowledge that everything that comes from him is good, whether it be his work in creation (Gen. 1:18; ṭôḇ here also embraces the aesthetic moment of beauty), his → word (Isa. 39:8), his → spirit (Ps. 143:10), even when appearances seem to say the opposite (Gen. 50:20).

The constant tension between God's → promises and their incomplete → fulfilment was bearable for Israel, because they recognized that God's promises in all their temporal fulfilments always look beyond themselves towards a final, eschatological fulfilment. The good which God has promised to his people will come to its real fulfilment in messianic, eschatological salvation. It is in this sense that texts like Isa. 52:7 and Jer. 32:41 have been interpreted messianically by Israel.

Recognition of the goodness of God could not be taken away from the → remnant even by hard, shattering, historical events like the exile. Nevertheless, Yahweh's goodness, his benevolent action in history, had been temporarily withdrawn from Israel and was deeply concealed. In the Wisdom literature, for example, striking expression is given to the way in which man saw his own limitations without illusion in the presence of the incomprehensible God. He recognizes the uncertainty of all life's values and the vanity of existence (Eccl. 3:12; 5:17), and sees clearly man's inability to achieve good (Eccl. 7:20). But in the last analysis even this scepticism, in which God is withdrawn and man stands alone, could not destroy the knowledge of the goodness of God, of his benevolent activity.

Post-exilic Judaism and Rab. theology also held firmly to the fact that God is good. For Rab. Judaism God's goodness brings salvation. It is revealed in the Law which is good and can be carried out. In carrying out God's law, man can now himself do good and be good (SB III 92 f.; IV 466 ff., 536 ff.). Nevertheless, essential goodness can only be realized in a man's personal relationships with God and with his fellow-men (Mic. 6:8).

3. The Qumran sect by the Dead Sea radicalized this unshaken confidence that good could be achieved into a strict asceticism, and linked it with the command to hate for ever the sons of wickedness. But here too – as consistently throughout the OT – it is the newly emerging songs of praise which are the genuine expressions of the sect's piety. They begin and end with the praise of God and his benevolent actions even in the midst of need and oppression. What stands out is what has been asserted in every period of Israel's history and expressed most completely in the Psalms (e.g. Pss. 16:2; 118:1; cf. 1 Chr. 16:34, 2 Chr. 5:13), namely that God himself is the One who is really and exclusively good. In the language of the LXX, he is the highest good.

NT agathos occurs very frequently (107 times) in all the NT writings except Rev. (where kalos does not occur either). The compounds formed with poieō are rare, and are found almost exclusively in 1 Pet. (apart from 3 occurrences of agathopoieō in Lk.). agathoergeō occurs only once (1 Tim. 6:18), and agathōsynē in 4 places in the Pauline writings.

1. According to the Synoptics, the OT statement about God's essential goodness is radicalized in Jesus' preaching: oudeis agathos ei mē heis ho theos, no one is good save God alone (Mk. 10:17 f.; Lk. 18:18 f.; Matt. 19:17). However, this does not prevent a natural application of the predicate "good" to the moral differences between men, who do good as well as evil (Matt. 12:35; 25:21; and par. Lk. 6:45; 19:17), an application which includes within it the goodness of God (Matt. 5:45; 22:10 and often).

But this admission of normal differences and the demand for works of love (Matt. 5:16; 25:31–45, where → kalos is used instead of agathos) must not be separated from Jesus' preaching as a whole. Jesus calls sinners to repentance. In this connection it is impossible to ignore the call, "Unless your righteousness exceeds that of the scribes and Pharisees, you will never enter the kingdom of heaven" (Matt. 5:20). "You therefore must be perfect, as your heavenly Father is perfect" (Matt. 5:48).

2. Jn. 5:29 proclaims judgment according to works. But this statement too has to be seen within the context of the whole message (cf. Jn. 10:27–29; 15:5 ff.). It is only in Jesus Christ that man is given a new opportunity of existence. In so far as he receives a share in God's goodness he also can pass on good to others by doing good. According to Jn. 10:11 and 14, Jesus is the good (→ kalos) → shepherd who lays down his life and makes available here and now the eternal good of redemption. In these passages kalos is used as a synonym for agathos. In Jn. 1:46 (in the form of a proverb?) the sceptical question is posed, "Can anything good (agathon, i.e. salvation) come out of Nazareth?" ([Ed.] L. Morris points out that the question does not reflect any known opinion of Nazareth; it is most likely to be understood as the utterance of a man who could not conceive of the messiah coming from such an insignificant place. The difference between agathos and kalos in Jn. appears to be grammatical: agathos is used predicatively at 1:46 and 7:12, as a noun at 5:29, while kalos is always attributive (The Gospel according to John, 1972, 165; cf. G. D. Kilpatrick, The Bible Translator 11, 1960, 173 f.).)

3. Paul takes up the message of the Synoptic Gospels. He too acknowledges the relative difference between good and evil men. Within God's sustaining order of things, the civil authorities receive their dignity and task to maintain law and order and punish evildoers (Rom. 13:1–4). The concept agathopoios, used only in 1 Pet. 2:14, also belongs in this context: the man who does right will receive praise from the authorities.

But the distinction which is justified among human institutions breaks down before God. The natural man is irretrievably in bondage to the powers of → sin and → death, and has no right to claim the attribute "good" for himself. Even if he is a fanatical observer of the law, which is good, it only works death for him (Rom. 7:18 ff.; cf. 3:20; 6:23; Gal. 3:10 ff.). But through the redemption which has taken place in Christ goodness overflows the believer. "We know that in everything God works for good with those who love him, who are called according to his purpose" (Rom. 8:28 RSV, cf. v.l. in RSV mg "in everything he works for good", or "everything works for good"; see M. Black, "The Interpretation of Romans viii 28" in Neotestamentica et Patristica, Supplements to NovT 6, Festschrift for O. Cullmann, 1962, 166–72; and Romans, 1973, 124; cf. also Rom. 11:32–36).

In Christ the believer is created for good works (Eph. 2:10), and receives a good → conscience (cf. Acts 23:1; 1 Tim. 1:5, 19). This also underlies the urgent exhortations to bear → fruit in good works (Col. 1:10), to seek to do good (1 Thess. 5:15) and to do it to everyone (Rom. 15:2; 16:19; Gal. 6:6, 10). Likewise, in Rom. 15:14 (cf. 2 Thess. 1:11) believers are exhorted to agathōsynē, good and fitting behaviour. agathos is essentially a quality which a man has (TDNT I 16 f., 18).

All honour is due to the one who does good (Rom. 2:7). Paul also maintains the concept of judgment according to works (2 Cor. 5:10; Gal. 3:10). But comparison with Rom. 8:31–39 is not intended. The gift and the task of the new life are kept in tension, with both aspects fully emphasized. Just as kalos can stand for agathos, Paul employs kalopoieō (2 Thess. 3:13) and agathoergeō once (1 Tim. 6:18), as synonymous expressions meaning to do good. agathoergeō also occurs once in Acts 14:17, where it refers to God who does good. A striking fact is the marked preference for → kalos as opposed to agathos in the Pastorals.

4. In the remaining NT writings agathapoieō, to do good, is used only in 1 Pet. 2:15, 20; 3:6, 17; 3 Jn. 11; and Lk. 6:9, 33, 35. agathopoiia, doing good, is employed only in 1 Pet. 4:19. Such right action is the visible proof that a man has really and gratefully grasped the new opportunity for existence as his own. 1 Pet. 3:16, 21 indicate the good conscience which the believer ought to demonstrate to the pagan.

In contrast, Heb. 9:11 and 10:1 lay their emphasis upon future, eschatological gifts (cf. 1 Pet. 4:19). In this age there is a permanent tension between God, who is good and who gives good gifts, and reality, characterized by sin and death, in which the Christian's life is caught up. It is in this perspective that the promise of Phil. 1:6 stands and has meaning: "He who began a good work in you will bring it to completion at the day of Jesus Christ." Therefore the warning of Gal. 6:9 also holds good: "Let us not grow weary in well-doing, for in due season we shall reap, if we do not lose heart." E. Beyreuther

καλός

καλός (kalos), good, beautiful, noble; καλοποιέω (kalopoieō), do good.

CL 1. kalos (cf. Sanskrit kalya, healthy, strong, excellent) has as its basic meaning: organically fit, suitable, useful, sound, e.g. a suitable harbour (Homer); a healthy body (Plato); pure, genuine gold (Theognis); an unblemished sacrifice (Xenophon). Aesthetic judgments were very early attached to the concept of the fit and organically sound. kalos then also came to mean the aesthetically beautiful. Finally the concept was broadened again and gained the additional sense of morally good (Sophocles, Pindar and others). Thus, in the course of the history of Greek thought, the concept kalos achieved an inclusive meaning, linked with taxis (order) and symmetria (symmetry). In this context kalos came to mean "the total state of soundness, health, wholeness and order, whether in external appearance or internal disposition. For the Gk., then, the term applies particularly to the world of the divine" (W. Grundmann, kalos TDNT III 537).

2. A Greek ideal for life and education was expressed by the phrase kalos kai agathos which showed the aristocracy how it should live. An education based on the arts and exemplary behaviour moulded the nobleman in the ethics of his class. In Homer it is an expression of ancient European aristocratic pride among the leading tribes of Greece. For them inherited position had to be earned afresh by meeting high and inexorable demands. It had to be embraced along with a heroic bearing, self-discipline, and the will to be fair in all dealings between noble and commoner. Thus kalos and agathos were united in the single concept kalos kagathos (cf. W. Grundmann, TDNT III 538 f.).

Socrates and Plato raised this chivalrous class-ethic to the position of the general goal of all Gk. educational principles. In their writings the kalos kagathos is a man who is respectful and fair, thoughtful and discreet, moderate and capable in the way he conducts his life, a man for whom everything is in order (Grg. 470e, 518a–c; Rep. 3, 425d).

3. Finally Plato raised the concept kalos in the sphere of philosophy and religion to the status of an eternal idea by linking it with the experience of erōs (→ love). The unremitting longing and striving of the soul is directed towards the kalon. erōs is the force which drives men to seek and to recognize the kalon in this world (Symp. 204, 211 ff.; cf. Phdr. 249 ff.). That which links the divine and earthly realms and which gives life meaning and an eternal dimension is the kalon. Earthly beauty partakes of the eternal archetype of the beautiful. This religious significance which Plato's doctrine of ideas imparted to the concept kalos was retained throughout the development of Hellenistic Christian thought. For Plotinus the kalon was what flowed forth, the equivalent of the idea (Enneads, 1, 6; cf. 6; 7). Ecstasy, as a glimpse of the eternal beauty, is the highest experience. It is granted only to beautiful souls who grow to maturity on earth through the virtues of self-discipline, fearlessness and freedom from attachment.

For Augustine, too, and for Thomas Aquinas true beauty is at one with the eternally true and good, and is only found with God; everything on earth is merely a reflection of the divine beauty (cf. Augustine, De Civ. 19, 3; 22, 19; De Pulchro; Aquinas, Summa Theologiae, 1 Q. 5, 4; 1^{a} 2^{ae} Q. 27, 1).

OT The meaning which the Greeks gave to kalos, which became decisive for Christian antiquity and via Christendom for the development of thought throughout the western world, scarcely penetrated the world of the OT or the NT. In the LXX kalos is used as the translation of yāpeh (e.g. Gen. 12:14; 29:17; 39:6; 41:2) and denotes a beautiful external appearance. But kalos occurs most frequently beside → agathos and → chrēstos as a translation of ṭôḇ. It means good, not so much in the sense of an ethical evaluation as in that of pleasant, enjoyable, beneficial. kalos, as opposed to agathos, is what is pleasing to Yahweh, what he likes or what gives him joy, whereas agathos suggests more the application of an ethical standard. But it is impossible to draw any clear-cut lines of demarcation for the basic meaning of the Heb. ṭôḇ, for it contains both aspects. Only in one place does the use of kala give rise to what is probably the expression of an aesthetic judgment (Gen. 1:31). Perhaps one should translate even here kai idou kala lian as "and behold [it was] completely successful" (cf. MT: "and behold it was very good"). It means fair or beautiful in, e.g., Gen. 6:6; 12:14; 2 Sam. 11:2; 13:1. Otherwise it is striking that there is no room in the OT for the Greek ideal of beauty as a motive for living and for education. Everything is directed towards the will of God which is expressed in the law. Any ideal of self-perfection is thus excluded. Hence kalos is frequently used as a synonym for → agathos (cf. Mal 2:17; Mic. 6:8; Isa. 1:17; and also Num. 24:1; Deut. 6:18; 12:28; 2 Chr. 14:2 [MT 14:1]; and later Prov. 3:4). In the story of the fall kalos is used in the description of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil (Gen. 2:17; cf. v. 18; 3:5 f., 22). The LXX translates the Heb. ṭôḇ wārāʿ by kalon kai ponēron, "good and evil" (→ Adam; → Evil; → Knowledge; → Sin).

NT It is striking that in the NT kalos is used almost as frequently as agathos to denote good, and this happens consistently throughout the NT writings (agathos 104 times; kalos 99).

1. In the Synoptic Gospels, John the Baptist demanded from those who would enter the fellowship of the → kingdom good → fruit (karpon kalon, Matt. 3:10 par. Lk. 3:9). Jesus made the same demand (Matt. 7:17 ff.; 12:33; cf. Lk. 6:43 ff.). The parables speak of good seed (kalon sperma), good men (kaloi) who are caught in the net (Matt. 13:24, 27, 37, 38), and good ground (kalē gē) in which the word flourishes (Matt. 13:23 par. Mk. 4:20 Lk. 8:15). It is in this sense that Jesus calls men to good → works (kala erga, Matt. 5:16). Once again kalos is used almost synonymously with agathos. The fine or good works which Jesus expects are summed up in the maxim of Matt. 25:40, "As you did it to one of the least of these my brethren, you did it to me." They remain connected with the works of love which served as directives for the practice of mercy in Judaism (cf. Isa. 58:6–7, where they are already listed). At the same time the kala erga are removed from all thought of striving after reward (cf. Lk. 10:30 ff., the parable of the Good Samaritan; → Reward).

In the story of the anointing at Bethany (Mk. 14:6) Jesus, aware of his imminent passion, placed the deed of love which had been done to him higher than the almsgiving of his disciples. The opportunity for this act – the anticipatory anointing of his body and thus the affirmation by his disciples of his path of suffering – only offered itself in this historical moment.

2. In Jn. Jesus is the good → shepherd (ho poimēn ho kalos). Here kalos is used to bring into focus his office as shepherd in all its uniqueness, in contrast to contemporary false claims to the office of shepherd and to the shepherd-gods of antiquity (Jn. 10:11, 14). He is the good, the lawful shepherd, because he opposes the wolf at the risk and at the cost of his life. ([Ed.] This may be seen against the OT background of Yahweh as shepherd [Gen. 49:24; Pss. 23; 78:52 f.]. The patriarchs were shepherds. Ungodly kings were denounced as wicked shepherds [1 Ki. 22:17; Jer. 10:21; 23:1 f.]. Ezek. 34:5 f. pictures Israel as a flock without a shepherd and Yahweh as the true shepherd [vv. 11–16]. Cf. C. K. Barrett, JTS 48, 1947, 163 f.; R. E. Brown, The Gospel according to John, I, 1966, 397 f.)

Jn. 10:31 speaks of Jesus' many good works (polla erga kala) in the context of a controversy with the Jews. It is not the works that are in dispute, but his messianic claim, the evidence for which is in these very works.

3. Paul employs kalos as a synonym for → agathos; it does not convey anything which could not be expressed by agathos (cf. Rom. 7:18, 21; 2 Cor. 13:7; Gal. 6:9; 1 Cor. 7:1, 8, 26).

4. On the other hand, the preference for kalos in the Pastorals is striking (cf. 1 Tim. 5:10, 25; 6:18; Tit. 2:7, 14; 3:8, 14; 1 Tim. 3:1). Military imagery, in particular, is linked with the concept kalos (cf. 1 Tim. 6:12; 2 Tim. 2:3; 1 Tim. 1:18; 2 Tim. 4:7). But in other contexts kalos is used remarkably often instead of agathos (cf. 1 Tim. 1:8; 3:7; 3:13; 4:6; 6:19; 2 Tim. 1:14; 1 Tim. 4:4). The reason for this usage here is clear. The word was a favourite in popular Hellenistic speech and it expressed a Hellenistic sense of values. It is used here in order to express the more clearly for the second generation of Christians what characterizes discipleship of Christ. In any case, both OT and NT right on into the Catholic Epistles

(Jas. 2:7; 3:13; 4:17; 1 Pet. 2:12; 4:10) demonstrate a use of the term kalos which, without undergoing any change of meaning, is freely employed to express Biblical ideas in the context of Gk. language and thought. E. Beyreuther

χρηστός

χρηστός (chrēstos), mild, pleasant, kind, good; χρηστότης (chrēstotēs), goodness, kindness, friendliness; χρηστεύομαι (chrēsteuomai), show kindness.

CL chrēstos originally denoted usefulness, and hence what appeared useful, good, suitable and proper (e.g. mild wine). This was very soon followed by the broadening of the concept to include moral excellence and perfection, in which inner greatness was linked with genuine goodness of heart. So chrēstos meant morally good and honourable, the capacity to show kindness to everyone. Used as a noun, to chrēston meant a friendly nature, kindness; in the plur. ta chrēsta, kind actions (Herodotus). In the same way the noun, hē chrēstotēs, from Euripides on, acquired the meaning of friendliness, kindness, mildness, and was used in inscriptions as a title of honour for rulers and important public figures.

OT 1. In the LXX the Hebrew word ṭôḇ in its many shades of meaning is translated by chrēstos along with → agathos and → kalos. There is little contemplation in the OT of the goodness of God in and of itself. On the other hand, his benevolent activity is constantly sung and recognized in hymns of praise. chrēstos and chrēstotēs are favourite, although not the only, words for expressing the abundance of good which God in his → covenant faithfulness displays to his people and to all men as his creatures. This constant mercy and readiness to help on the part of God is one of the essential themes of the Pss. (e.g. 25:7 f.; 31:19 [MT 31:20]; 65:11 [MT 65:12]). But chrēstos also occurs in prophetic texts, especially in Jeremiah (e.g. 40[33]:11; cf. 24:2 f., 5). This picture of the kindness of God grows deeper in the face of the bewildering recognition of the enduring nature of sin. Yet he still remains kind! Nor could the fate of the nation after the exile, with its conviction that God's dealings are incomprehensible, suppress the acknowledgment that Yahweh is kind (cf. 2 Macc. 1:24).

2. The Qumran documents continue the same train of thought. Just as the OT expected the pious, for his part, to show kindness which should reflect the kindness he had received from God, the sect also expected its members to show gracious kindness to one another. The often recurring phrase used to denote this is 'ahªḇaṯ ḥeseḏ, gracious love (e.g. 1QS 2:24; 5:4, 25; 8:2). Beside mercy (raḥªmîm) and patience the Spirit of Light shows "eternal kindness" (ṭôḇ 'ôlāmîm, cf. 1QS 4:3). But in unexpected juxtaposition to the demand for gracious kindness towards one another stands the command for "eternal hatred" of the sons of wickedness (1QS 4:17). Here we can see, as it was radicalized in later Judaism, the limitation of the OT command to love or show kindness which was not taken to include unconditional love of one's enemies.

NT In the NT chrēstos occurs 7 times; hē chrēstotēs 10 times; the former 3 times, the latter exclusively in Paul.

1. chrēstos is used of things, as in secular Gk., to denote their goodness (Lk. 5:39, good wine).

2. The concept is used in Lk. to break down the limitation of the OT commandment to love (Lk. 6:35). God's kindness embraces even the ungrateful, and the wicked (obstinate sinners); because it is without limit, it calls for unconditional love for their enemies on the part of Jesus' disciples. Jesus invited those who had become exhausted by legalistic piety to take upon themselves his easy yoke (ho gar zygos mou chrēstos, Matt. 11:30). In experiencing his kindness, men are to be like him in showing kindness towards others (v. 29).

3. While chrēstos only appears 3 times in the Synoptic Gospels, the Johannine writings and the Catholic epistles do not employ the word at all. But Paul makes striking use of it together with the noun chrēstotēs which he prefers.

In his attack on self-righteous Jewish piety he shows that the goodness of God is no cheap grace which is there to be made a convenience of. It should lead to a horror of one's unwillingness to repent so that God's aim of converting men to himself may be achieved (Rom. 2:4).

Especially in his use of the noun hē chrēstotēs the apostle makes repeated use of the idea of the incomprehensible kindness of God. He does not desire the death of the sinner but his salvation (Rom. 11:22; Eph. 2:7; Tit. 3:4). His purpose is to show the meaning of kindness in the life of the man whom Christ has grasped. Kindness and gentleness belong to the visible gifts of the Spirit (Gal. 5:22). Love (→ art. agapē) shows itself as kindness (1 Cor. 13:4, expressed here by the vb. chrēsteuetai hē agapē). For kindness is an unmistakable and essential characteristic of love. Because kindness is one of the chief gifts of the Spirit, it becomes the subject of the exhortation of Col. 3:12: "Put on then, as God's chosen ones, compassion, kindness." As a direct out-working of agapē, it is always alive and active, breaking out spontaneously in the life of the man who is led by Christ. This completes the circle from the original kindness of God who created the world and men, separated a people for himself, and remains kind despite sin and wickedness, to the revelation of his incomprehensible kindness in Jesus Christ in the fullness of → time. Here God's saving activity reaches its → goal. In Jesus Christ God's fatherly kindness can be seen as in a mirror. Moreover, the members of the Christian community, the church, have to choose as their path in the world the way of kindness which they must show to all men. At the same time they have to choose it in a world which often betrays little sign of it.

E. Beyreuther

(a). W. Barclay, Flesh and Spirit, 1962, 97–102; M. Buber, Good and Evil: Two Interpretations, 1953; G. W. Buchanan, "The Old Testament Meaning of the Knowledge of Good and Evil", JBL 75, 1956, 114–20; W. M. Clark, "A Legal Background to the Yahwist's Use of 'Good and Evil' in Genesis 2–3", JBL 88, 1969, 266–78; I. Engnell, " 'Knowledge' and 'Life' in the Creation Story", Supplements to Vetus Testamentum 3, 1955, 103–19; R. Gordis, "The Knowledge of Good and Evil in the Old Testament and the Qumran Scrolls", JBL 76, 1957, 123–38; W. Grundmann, agathos etc., TDNT I 10–18; W. Grundmann and G. Bertram, kalos, TDNT II 536–56; R. Koch, "Good and evil", EBT I 317–21; L. J. Kuyper, "To Know Good and Evil", Interpretation 1, 1947, 490 ff.; H. D. A. Major, "The Tree of the Knowledge of Good and Evil", ExpT 20, 1908–9, 427 ff.; A. Millard, "For He is Good", TB 17, 1966, 115 ff.; C. L. Mitton, "Motives for Goodness in the New Testament", ExpT 63, 1951–52, 73 ff.; C. J. Orlebeke and L. B. Smedes, God and the Good, 1975; G. von Rad, Old Testament Theology, I, 1962, 154–60; B. Reicke, "The Knowledge Hidden in the Tree of Paradise", JSS 1, 1956, 193–201; C. Spicq, Agape in the New Testament, I–II, 1963–65; F. L. R. Stachowiak, "Goodness", EBT I 321–8; H. S. Stern, "The Knowledge of Good and Evil", Vetus Testamentum 8, 1958, 407 ff.; K. Weiss, chrēstos etc. TDNT IX 472–81; J. W.

Wenham, The Goodness of God, 1974; F. Wisse, "The Righteous Man and the Good Man in Romans v. 7", NTS 19, 1972–73, 91 ff.

The following works deal with ethical aspects of the question of "good": W. W. Bartley, Morality and Religion, 1971; R. M. Hare, The Language of Morals, 1952; T. W. Manson, Ethics and the Gospel, 1960; I. T. Ramsey, ed., Christian Ethics in Contemporary Philosophy, 1973, reprint; S. S. Smalley, "Good, Goodness", in C. F. H. Henry, ed., Baker's Dictionary of Christian Ethics, 1973, 267 f.; C. L. Stevenson, Ethics and Language, 1944; J. O. Urmson, The Emotive Theory of Ethics, 1968; G. H. von Wright, The Varieties of Goodness, 1963.

(b). J. Begrich, "Die Paradieserzählung", ZAW 50, 1932, 93 ff.; J. Chatillon, "Dulcedo", Dictionnaire de la Spiritualité III 1777–95 (Volume XXIV); J. Coppens, "La Connaissance du Bien et du Mal et le Péché du Paradis", Analecta Lovaniensia Biblica et Orientalia, 1948; J. de Fraine, "Jeux de mots dans le récit de la chute", Mélanges Bibliques A. Robert, 1957, 47–59; P. Humbert, Études sur le Recit du Paradis et de la Chute dans la Genèse, 1940, 82–116; H. Junker, Die biblische Urgeschichte, 1932; A. I. Mennessier, "Douceur", Dictionnaire de la Spiritualité III 1674–85 (Volume XXIV); H. Renckens, Urgeschichte und Heilsgeschichte: Israels Schau in die Vergangenheit nach Gen. 1–3, 1961²; H. Schmidt, Die Erzählung von Paradies und Sündenfall, 1931; S. H. Siedl, Qumran – eine Mönchsgemeinde im Alten Bund, 1963, 195–209; C. Spicq, "Bénignité, mansuétude, douceur, clémence", RB 54, 1947, 321–9; F. L. R. Stachowiak, chrēstotēs, ihre biblisch-theologische Entwicklung und Eigenart, 1957; A. Vögtle, Die Tugend – und Laster-Kataloge im Neuen Testament, NTAbh 16, 4/5, 1936; S. Wibbing, Die Tugend- und Lasterketaloge im Neuen Testament und ihre Traditionsgeschichte unter besonderer Berücksichtigung der Qumran-Texte, BZNW 25, 1959; K. Winkler, "Clementia", RAC III 106–31; J. Ziegler, Dulcedo Dei, Alttestamentliche Abhandlungen 13/2, 1937.

Gospel, Evangelize, Evangelist

εὐαγγέλιον

εὐαγγέλιον (euangelion), good news, gospel; εὐαγγελίζω (euangelizō), bring or announce good news, proclaim, preach; mid. εὐαγγελίζομαι (euangelizomai), bring good news, proclaim glad tidings, proclaim, preach; εὐαγγελιστής (euangelistēs), proclaimer of glad tidings or of the gospel, evangelist.

CL 1. The mid. vb. euangelizomai (Aristophanes), euangelizō, a form not encountered until later Gk., together with the adjectival noun euangelion (Homer) and the noun euangelos (Aesch.), are all derived from angelos, messenger (probably an Iranian loan-word originally), or the vb. angellō (announce; → Angel). euangelos, messenger, is one who brings a message of victory or other political or personal news that causes joy. In the Hel. period the word can also mean one who announces oracles. Similarly the vb. euangelizomai means to speak as a messenger of gladness, to proclaim good news; and where it is used in a religious sense, to promise. euangelizomai also gains a religious meaning when it is used in connection with the appearance of a "divine man", whose approach is announced with joy (e.g. of Apollonius of Tyana in Philostratus, VA 1, 28, 3rd cent. A.D.). On the other hand, the vb. is often found with its original sense weakened to make it synonymous with angellō, to bear a message, announce.

2. The noun euangelion means: (a) the reward received by the messenger of victory (his good news brings relief to the recipients; therefore he is rewarded); (b) the message itself, chiefly a technical term for the message of victory, but also used of political and private messages bringing joy. Such messages are seen as a gift of the gods. When the message has been received, sacrifices are offered to them out of gratitude but also in order to hold the gods to their gift (cf. the phrase euangelia thyein, to celebrate good news by sacrifice, first found in Isocrates). "Behind such sacrifices lies the animist's distrust of his own religious cult: hurry to thank the gods for the message, or else you may miss the good fortune of which it tells" (J. Schniewind, Euangelion, 1931, 182).

(c) It is chiefly in connection with oracles (i.e. the promise of some future event) and in the imperial cult that euangelion acquires a religious meaning. In the latter sphere news of the divine ruler's birth, coming of age, or enthronement, and also his speeches, decrees and acts are glad tidings which bring long hoped-for fulfilment to the longings of the world for happiness and peace. An instance of this is the decree of the Greeks of the province of Asia c. 9 B.C. marking the birthday of Augustus (23 September) the beginning of the civil year: "It is a day which we may justly count as equivalent to the beginning of everything – if not in itself and in its own nature, at any rate in the benefits it brings – inasmuch as it has restored the shape of everything that was failing and turning into misfortune, and has given a new look to the Universe at a time when it would gladly have welcomed destruction if Caesar had not been born to be the common blessing of all men. . . . Whereas the Providence (pronoia) which has ordered the whole of our life, showing concern and zeal, has ordained the most perfect consummation for human life by giving to it Augustus, by filling him with virtue for doing the work of a benefactor among men, and by sending in him, as it were, a saviour for us and those who come after us, to make war to cease, to create order everywhere . . . and whereas the birthday of the God [Augustus] was the beginning for the world of the glad tidings [in the Greek the 'Evangel'] that have come to men through him . . . Paulus Fabius Maximus, the proconsul of the province . . . has devised a way of honouring Augustus hitherto unknown to the Greeks, which is, that the reckoning of time for the course of human life should begin with his birth" (quoted from E. Barker, From Alexander to Constantine: Passages and Documents Illustrating the History of Social and Political Ideas 336 B.C.–A.D. 337, (1956) 1959, 211 f.; cf. W. Dittenberger, Orientis Graeci Inscriptiones, II, No. 458; for other data on background see G. Friedrich, TDNT II 721–5). The proclamation of this euangelion does not merely herald a new era: it actually brings it about. The proclamation is itself the euangelion, since the salvation it proclaims is already present in it.

3. It is not difficult to trace the connection between this religious use of the word euangelion in the Hel. world, especially in the imperial cult, and its use in the NT. The latter takes up a term widely used in the Hel. world and loaded with religious concepts, when it speaks of its own euangelion or gospel. At the same time the OT roots of the NT concept of euangelion must not be ignored.

OT 1. In the Gk. translation of the OT euangelion never appears in the sing. form. The plur., used to render the Heb. bᵉśōrâh, means reward for good news (2 Sam. 4:10). Occasionally euangelia, a form unknown in the NT, also appears for the Heb. bᵉśōrâh in the sense of glad tidings (e.g. 2 Sam. 18:20, 22). On the whole, however, the substantival forms are not of particular importance. Of greater significance for the further development of the concept is the fact that the vb. euangelizomai – which is likewise not found frequently elsewhere and is limited to a few writings – comes to stand for the Heb. biśśar, to announce, tell, publish (e.g.

1 Ki. 1:42; Jer. 20:15). This verb is the term used in the Pss. 40:9[10]; 68:11[12]; 96:2 ff. and Isa. 41:27 and 52:7 to herald Yahweh's universal victory over the world and his kingly rule. With his enthronement (cf. the enthronement psalms, especially Ps. 96) and with his return to Zion (in Isa.) a new era begins. The messenger of good tidings (m^{e}baśśēr, substantival part., translated by euangelizomenos in the LXX) announces this new era of world history and inaugurates it by his mighty word. Peace and salvation have now come; Yahweh has become king (Isa. 52:7; cf. also 40:9); his reign extends over the whole world (Ps. 96:2 ff.). This "'gospel' is effective speech, a powerful saying, a word which brings its own fulfilment. In the mouth of his messengers God himself speaks: he speaks and it is accomplished; he commands and it is done (Ps. 33:6)" (G. Gloege in Theologie für Nichttheologen, I, 1963, 100). The act of proclamation is itself the dawn of the new era. Hence it is easy to understand the special significance that attaches to the messenger of the good news. With his arrival on the scene and the delivery of his message, salvation, redemption and peace become a reality. (Cf. on this Isa. 61:1, where the connection between message and mission is particularly prominent; → Apostle.)

2. When the LXX was translated, this concept of the messenger of glad tidings and his powerful, effective word was no longer understood, and the meaning was weakened. The proclamation of the message was separated from the action originally associated directly with it (cf. e.g. Isa. 52:7, where LXX translates: "Your God will be king"). Neither Philo nor Josephus takes up the concept of the messenger of glad tidings as found in Isa. in their use of euangelion and euangelizomai. They use the words in the normal Hel. sense (cf. War, 2, 420; 4, 656; cf. TDNT II 725 f.). They do not therefore contribute anything further to our understanding of the NT use of these terms. The same cannot however be said of Rab. Judaism.

3. Rab. Judaism kept alive the concept of the messenger of good tidings. He was variously expected: as an unknown figure, the forerunner of the Messiah, or as the Messiah himself (→ Jesus Christ). The content of his message was already familiar from Isa., and was therefore no longer of primary interest. The important thing about him was rather that the m^{e}baśśēr is coming, and by his proclamation he will usher in the era of salvation. Everything depends on his appearance and on his act of proclamation (cf. Pes. R. 36 [162a] SB III 9ff.; cf. also 1QM 18:14, where the messenger's self-designation as "messenger of good news" is a clear echo of Isa. 61). Here the same observation may be made that was made concerning OT usage. The eschatological event finds expression in the vb. (biśśar means to preach the eschatological message of joy) and in particular the participial noun (m^{e}baśśēr, the eschatological messenger of joy), but not in the noun. b^{e}śōrâh, good news. This fact suggests that the NT term euangelion is derived from Gk. usage rather than the Heb., or more precisely from the language of the imperial cult. The question cannot be decided with certainty, especially since "The imperial cult and the Bible share the view that accession to the throne, which introduces a new era and brings peace to the world, is a gospel for men" (TDNT II 725). The only difference, in fact, is in the content of the euangelion.

NT 1. Although the vb. euangelizomai and the noun euangelion are such important NT terms, the two words are found with varying degrees of frequency in the various writings of the NT. euangelizomai is found only once in Matt. (11:5). In Lk.-Acts, on the other hand, it occurs 25 times, in Paul 21 times (including twice in Eph.), twice in Heb., and 3 times in 1 Pet. In addition euangelizō is found twice in Rev. Although the vb. is not found in Mk., the noun occurs there 7 times, and 4 times in Matt. Luke, however, shows a distinctive predilection for the verbal form euangelizomai; he uses the noun only twice (Acts 15:7 and 20:24). The noun euangelion occurs particularly often in Paul (60 times, including 4 times in Eph., and 4 times in the Pastoral Epistles), and once each in 1 Pet. and Rev. The fact that the Johannine writings (gospel and epistles) know neither the vb. nor the noun is most remarkable. It may perhaps be explained by the characteristic theology underlying them, their so-called present eschatology. It would be a mistake, however, to assume that because certain NT writings do not use the vb. or the noun, the thought expressed by them is therefore completely lacking. In the Johannine writings, for instance, the concept is expressed by terms like martyreō, to witness, and martyria, → witness.

2. It has been questioned whether Jesus himself used the term euangelion (or, to be more precise, its Heb. or Aram. equivalent) as a broad description of his message. Nevertheless, the term is attributed to him in Mk. 1:15; 8:35; 10:29; 13:10; 14:9; [16:15]; Matt. 4:23; 9:35; 24:14; 26:13; cf. also Mk. 1:1, 14). It is possible that Jesus indicated that the words of messianic expectation in Isa. 35 and 61 are fulfilled in his words and actions (cf. Matt. 11:5 f. = Lk. 7:22, Q: ptōchoi euangelizontai, the glad tidings go out to the poor; also Lk. 4:18, where Jesus refers to Isa. 61:1). But if so, they are fulfilled in a way which will disappoint (Matt. 11:6) the expectations popularly attached to the messenger of glad tidings in Isa. (i.e. political liberation and the destruction of Israel's enemies). Certainly the answer to the Baptist's question in Matt. 11:5 f. means that the glad tidings awaited since Isa. are now being proclaimed and are already effective.

The really decisive question is not whether Jesus himself used the word euangelion but whether it is a word appropriate to the substance of his message. There is no doubt that Jesus saw his message of the coming → kingdom of God (Mk. 1:14) which is already present in his word and action as good news. "Blessed are your eyes, for they see, and your ears, for they hear" (Matt. 13:16). This message of joy is no longer to be separated from the messenger who brings it, and this messenger is Jesus himself (cf. Lk. 11:20; Matt. 5:1 f.; cf. TDNT II 728 f.). Moreover, he appears not only as the messenger and author of the message, but at the same time as its subject, the one of whom the message tells. It is therefore quite consistent for the early Christian church to take up the term euangelion to describe the message of salvation connected with the coming of Jesus.

3. There is good reason to believe that it was Paul who established the term euangelion in the vocabulary of the NT. That is not to say that he was the first to use this word without further qualification for the total content of the message, and to make it synonymous with the name of → Jesus Christ. On the contrary, Paul's frequent use of the word euangelion absolutely (at least 23 times without further qualification to describe the content of the message) suggests that he was taking over phraseology already familiar to his readers. The latter knew what the content of the gospel was. It is thus reasonable to suppose that in the early churches this terminology had developed by analogy out of that associated with the "gospel" of the imperial cult, though also in conscious opposition to the latter. In the sphere of missionary outreach in particular, the message of salvation through Jesus Christ came into conflict with the political, messianic message by reason of its universal claims. It was inevitable that very soon OT statements and ideas, especially from the prophecy of Isa., would become linked with this Hel. terminology, "This could readily happen, not least because the connection between the Hellenistic-Oriental concepts of the redeemer and the ideology of the saviour-king that stands behind deutero-Isaiah was suggested by the subject matter itself" (W. Schneemelcher in Henn. Schn., I, 72).

In Paul euangelion has become a central concept of his theology. It means the familiar good news: that God has acted for the salvation (→ redemption) of the world in the incarnation, death and resurrection of Jesus (cf. the development of these ideas in confessional formulae in Rom. 1:1 ff.; 1 Cor. 15:1 ff.). In so far as this event is already promised in the OT, the OT belongs to the gospel. (epangelia, → promise, is closely related both linguistically and conceptually to euangelion, and it is significant that the conflict of law and gospel appears in Paul's writings in connection with this term.) However, euangelion, as used by Paul, does not mean only the content of what is preached, but also the act, process and execution of the proclamation. Content and process of preaching are one. They are not separated in thought (Rom. 1:1), apart from when they are set close alongside each other (1 Cor. 9:14, 18). For in the very act of proclamation its content becomes reality, and brings about the salvation which it contains. "The gospel does not merely bear witness to salvation history; it is itself salvation history" (G. Friedrich, TDNT II 731). The action of → proclamation is denoted not only by the vb. euangelizomai (as e.g. in 1 Cor. 1:17), but also by euangelion used as a noun of action. Thus in 2 Cor. 8:18 euangelion means preaching of the gospel. Similarly the gen. in the phrases "gospel of God", or "gospel of Christ", and "of the Son of God" (e.g. Rom. 1:1; 15:16; 1 Cor. 9:12; 2 Cor. 2:12) should be taken as both objective and subjective: Christ or God is both the content and author of the gospel. It is difficult to make a clear distinction here, since Paul sometimes stresses the one aspect and sometimes the other. Wherever it is proclaimed (euangelizesthai in 2 Cor. 11:7; Gal. 1:11; kēryssein in Gal. 2:2; 1 Thess. 2:9; katangellein in 1 Cor. 9:14; lalein in 1 Thess. 2:2), this gospel is charged with power. It creates → faith (Rom. 1:16 f.; Phil. 1:27), brings salvation, life (Rom. 1:16; 1 Cor. 15:2) and also → judgment (Rom. 2:16). It reveals God's → righteousness (Rom. 1:17), brings the fulfilment of → hope (Col. 1:5, 23), intervenes in the lives of men, and creates churches. Since this gospel is no invention of man (Gal. 1:11), but rather God or Christ himself speaking through his messengers, the → apostles, the gospel is closely associated with the apostolate (2 Cor. 10–13). (See also Gal. 2:7 f., where euangelion in the sense of the proclamation of the message is clearly set out as the purpose and content of the apostolē or apostolic mission of both Paul and Peter, to the Gentiles as well as to the Jews.) Just as in Isa. 40:9; 52:7; and Nah. 1:15 the heralds and watchmen on the walls proclaim the coming of God, so the messengers proclaim the gospel (Rom. 10:15). Paul was conscious of having been called to bring the gospel to the Gentiles especially (Rom. 1:1; Gal. 1:16), and so to carry the eschatological event beyond the borders of Israel (Rom. 15:9). His whole activity was euangelizesthai (1 Cor. 1:17). As the "partner of the gospel"

(1 Cor. 9:23), therefore, he could speak of "his gospel" (e.g. Rom. 16:25; 2 Cor. 4:3). By this he meant the one gospel which was preached in Jerusalem (Gal. 1:6–9; 2 Cor. 10:13–16) and which has only now broken out of the bounds of the Jewish law, and become the gospel for the Gentiles, freed from the law (Gal. 1:16; 2:7, 8; Rom. 1:15). Paul's opponents, on the other hand, have "another gospel" (Gal. 1:6–10; 2 Cor. 11:4). They make attacks upon Paul. But since apostleship and the preaching of the gospel belong together, every attack on Paul and his apostleship is an attack on the gospel, and vice versa. To preach the gospel is not to commend oneself, but – as if compelled (1 Cor. 9:16) – to commend the Lord (2 Cor. 10:18; 4:5; Gal. 1:10).

4. In the Synoptic Gospels likewise, euangelion is the name given to the good news of the saving event in Jesus Christ, as preached in the church. The separate evangelists do, however, have different emphases when it comes to detail. These are conditioned by their respective theological outlooks:

(a) Mark stands very close to the Pauline use of euangelion, always using it absolutely except at 1:1 and 1:14. Since it is evident that he uses it in redactional passages, scholars have assumed that he was the one who introduced this word (taking it over perhaps from Paul) into the synoptic tradition. Matt. and Lk. are dependent on him, but modify his ideas. Mk., like Paul, sees Jesus Christ as both content and author of the gospel. Where it is proclaimed, he is present and at work – present to such a degree that what is done for the gospel's sake is done for Jesus' sake as well (Mk. 8:35; 10:29). The content of this gospel is the history of Jesus with its individual events (cf. Mk. 14:5). Mk. does not record them merely out of historical interest, but rather uses the narrative about Jesus in order to express what the gospel is. It is not information about a glorious divine redeemer, but the message of salvation through the suffering Son of man whose hidden glory as → Son of God did not become apparent except to his followers (→ disciple) on the way of the cross. Mk. therefore sets euangelion as a kind of title over his whole book (1:1, "The beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God"); this means that these stories are not merely reports about Jesus, but an address. They are the good news in which Jesus is proclaimed as the living Lord and in which he himself addresses the readers of the Gospel of Mark, bringing about and strengthening faith (Mk. 1:15).

(b) In contrast with this use of euangelion in Mk., Matt. never uses the word without further qualifying it as "the gospel of the kingdom" (4:23; 9:35) or "this gospel" (26:13; cf. also 24:14). In so doing he has shifted the emphasis. In the foreground now is the idea of Jesus as the bringer and proclaimer of the gospel. The content of the gospel is now to be seen chiefly in the → teaching in which Jesus instructs his disciples (4:23; 9:35; 24:14; but in 26:13 "gospel" refers to the passion narrative). But in so far as the church passes on this gospel, Jesus himself is also its content (cf. especially Matt. 24:14; 26:13).

(c) In Luke-Acts the term euangelion is found only at Acts 15:7 and 20:24. Possibly this has to do with his particular scheme, according to which the era of Jesus must be distinguished from the era of the church, and so too the preaching of Jesus from that of the apostles. Thus he can describe as euangelion the apostolic preaching (Acts 15:7; 20:24), but not the preaching of Jesus. Particularly instructive in this context is the alteration of euangelion in Mk. 10:29 to basileia in Lk.

18:29. This suggestion is not upset by the fact that Lk. evidently has a special predilection for the vb. euangelizesthai. It no longer has the pregnant meaning which it has for Paul, who uses it to embrace the whole work of Jesus, but has almost become a technical term for proclamation. Further evidence in this direction is provided by the fact that it is used interchangeably with other verbs of → proclamation like kēryssein (cf. here the Markan version behind Lk. 4:43; 9:6; and also Lk. 4:18), katangellein (Acts 13:5, 38; 15:36; 16:17; 17:23; 26:23), didaskein (Lk. 20:1, → teach). Moreover, Lk. generally qualifies this oral proclamation by a phrase like "kingdom of God" (4:43; 8:1) or "Jesus" (Acts 5:42; 8:25; 11:20). Thus Lk. can also describe the Baptist's activity as euangelizesthai (3:18), although he explicitly stresses that the kingdom of God was not proclaimed until after the Baptist (16:16). euangelizesthai thus practically regains here its broader, more general Hel. meaning of proclaiming good news, and is no longer a term with christological overtones.

5. The other NT writings which use euangelion or euangelizomai on the whole follow the above outline of Paul. They tend to bring out certain aspects of this powerful gospel which is not a human word but the word of God (1 Pet. 1:12). It was entrusted to Paul as a preacher, apostle and teacher (2 Tim. 1:11). Its message of Jesus Christ, risen from the dead, and descended from David (2 Tim. 2:8) is not limited to a single, past event, but is experienced as a word charged with power in the present so that it cannot be fettered by human chains (2 Tim. 2:9). This gospel produces rebirth and new life (1 Pet. 23–25). It brings peace (Eph. 2:17; 6:15), and draws together the near and the far off, the Gentiles and the Jews (Eph. 3:1–9). It gives salvation (Eph. 1:13), and has "brought life and immortality to light" (2 Tim. 1:10).

6. However varied may be the emphasis and development of the term euangelion in the NT, the reference is always to the oral proclamation of the message of salvation and never to something fixed in writing, such as a → book or a letter. This is shown not least by the synonyms of euangelion and euangelizomai: kēryssein, katangellein, lalein, logos, etc. This oral message is one, even if Paul speaks of "his" gospel (euangelion mou, Rom. 2:16). The NT knows only the gospel; the plur. "the gospels" is a contradiction of its nature (G. Bornkamm, RGG[3] II 749).

Nevertheless, from the 2nd cent. onwards reference is made to gospels, meaning the written gospels (cf. Iren., Haer. 3, 11, 8; cf. 3, 1, 1; Clem. Alex., Strom, 1, 136, 1; cf. Lampe, 555 ff.). This is the outcome of a development which can be traced in its origin back to Mk. Mk. associated the gospel with the stories about Jesus which he had written down, but he did not identify the two. The introductory phrase "The beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ" (1:1) clearly does not mean that in what follows he is writing a biography of Jesus (see above 4 (a)). This identification did, however, take place at a later stage as a result of an historicizing tendency which may already be seen in Matt. and Lk. Hence, "gospel" came to be used as a description of a book, and consequently the plural form ta euangelia became possible as a collective term for these "reports". This was not yet true in the case of Lk. For in his prologue (1:1–4) he did not employ the term "gospels" for the narratives about Jesus which were evidently in bountiful supply in his day. Instead he used diēgēsis, narrative. In the course of the 2nd cent., however, this use of the term for a type of literature without parallel in the NT world became established. At the same time the NT insight was retained. For the four gospels "testify to the one gospel, to the proclamation of salvation in Jesus Christ" (W. Schneemelcher, Henn. Schn., I, 75). Similarly Luther declared: "The gospel . . . is not in truth that which is written in books and set down in letters, but rather a spoken message and living word, and a voice which sounds out into the world and is publicly proclaimed, that it may be heard everywhere" (Weimarer Ausgabe XII, 259).

7. euangelistēs is a term for one who proclaims the euangelion. This word, which is very rare in non-Christian literature, but common enough in early Christian writings, is found in the NT only at Acts 21:8 (of Philip who had been one of the Seven, Acts 6:5; cf. also 8:5 ff.), Eph. 4:11 (along with apostles, prophets, pastors and teachers), and in 2 Tim. 4:5 (of Timothy). In these three passages the evangelist is distinguished from the apostle. This is especially obvious in the case of the evangelist Philip, whose activity has to be ratified by the apostles Peter and John (Acts 8:14 f.). The term euangelistēs is thus clearly intended to refer to people who carry on the work of the apostles who have been directly called by the risen Christ. But it is difficult to decide whether the reference is to an office, or simply to an activity. These evangelists may have been engaged in missionary work (Acts 21:8), or church leadership (2 Tim. 4:5). As a term for the author of a gospel, euangelistēs is not found before the time when euangelion is used to describe a book and "gospels" are spoken of (cf. Lampe, 559). U. Becker

→ Confess, → Law, → Proclaim, → Scripture, → Teach, → Word

(a). R. S. Barbour, Traditio-Historical Criticism of the Gospels: Some Comments on Current Methods, 1972; K. Barth, God, Grace and Gospel, 1959; J. W. Bowman, "The term Gospel and its Cognates in the Palestinian Syriac", in A. J. B. Higgins, ed., New Testament Essays: Studies in Memory of Thomas Walter Manson, 1959, 54–67; F. F. Bruce, "Galatian Problems 3: The 'Other' Gospel", BJRL 53, 1971, 253–71; Jesus and Christian Origins outside the New Testament,1974; and "The Speeches in Acts – Thirty Years After", in R. Banks, ed., Reconciliation and Hope, 1974, 53–68; R. Bultmann, Theology of the New Testament, I, 1952, 87 ff.; The History of the Synoptic Tradition, 1968²; M. Burrows, "The Origin of the Term Gospel", JBL 44, 1925, 21–33; H. Conzelmann, The Theology of St. Luke, 1960; M. Dibelius, From Tradition to Gospel, reprinted 1971; C. H. Dodd, The Apostolic Preaching and its Developments, 1936; and Gospel and Law, 1951; C. F. Evans, "The Kerygma", JTS 7, 1956, 25–41; G. Friedrich, euangelizomai, euangelion, TDNT II 707–37; K. Grayston, "'Not Ashamed of the Gospel'", StudEv 11 1964, 569–73; F. W. Grosheide, "The Pauline Epistles as Kerygma", in Studia Paulina in Honorem J. de Zwaan, 1953, 139–43; R. H. Gundry, "Recent Investigations into the Literary Genre 'Gospel'", in R. N. Longenecker and M. C. Tenney, eds., New Dimensions in New Testament Study, 1974, 97–114; D. Guthrie, New Testament Introduction, I, 1965, The Gospels and Acts; W. H. P. Hatch, "The Primitive Christian Message", JBL 58, 1939, 1–39; S. Johnson, The Theology of the Gospels, 1966; W. G. Kümmel, Introduction to the New Testament, 1975²; X. Léon-Dufour, The Gospels and the Jesus of History 1968; W. Marxsen, Mark the Evangelist, 1969; C. F. D. Moule, The Birth of the New Testament, 1962; and "The Intention of the Evangelists", in A. J. B. Higgins, ed., op. cit., 165–79; H. Palmer, The Logic of Gospel Criticism, 1968; J. Rohde, Rediscovering the Teaching of the Evangelists, 1968; B. Reicke, "A Synopsis of Early Christian Preaching", in A. Fridrichsen, ed., The Root of the Vine, 1953, 128–60; J. Schmid, "Gospel", EBT I 328–32; W. Schneemelcher, "Gospels: Non-Biblical Material about Jesus", in Henn.-Schn., I, 69–84; R. H. Strachan, "The Gospel in the New Testament", IB VII 3–31; B. H. Streeter, The Four Gospels, 1924; V. Taylor, The Formation of the Gospel Tradition, 1933; H. G. Wood, "Didache, Kerygma and Evangelion", in A. J. B. Higgins, op. cit., 306–14.

(b). M. Albertz, Die Botschaft des Neuen Testaments, I/1, 1947; R. Asting, Die Verkündigung des Wortes im Urchristentum, 1939; P. Bläser, "Evangelium", Handbuch theologischer Grundbegriffe, I, 1962, 355 ff.; G. Gloege, "Evangelium", Theologie für Nichttheologen, I, 1963, 97 ff.; E. Haenchen, Der Weg Jesu. Eine Erklärung des Markus-Evangeliums und der kanonischen Parallelen, 1966; A. Harnack, Entstehung und Entwicklung der Kirchenverfassung in den zwei ersten Jahrhunderten, 1910, 234 ff.; P. Hoffmann, ed., Orientierung an Jesus. Zur Theologie der Synoptiker. Für Josef Schmid, 1973 (see especially the article by R. Schnackenburg.); O. Michel, "Evangelium", RAC VI, 1965, 1107 ff.; E. Molland, Das paulinische Evangelium. Das Wort und die Sache, 1934; H. Ristow and K. Matthiae, Der historische Jesus und der Kerygmatische Christus, 1961²; W. Schmauch, "Evangelium", EKL I 1213 ff.; K. L. Schmidt, "Die Stellung der Evangelien in der allgemeinen Literaturgeschichte", Eucharisterion, II (dedicated to H. Gunkel), 1925, 50–134; J. Schniewind, Euangelion. Ursprung und erste Gestalt des Begriffs Evangelium, (1927–31) 1937–41; E. Schweizer, "Die theologische Leistung des Markus", EvTh 24, 1964, 337 ff.; G. Strecker, Der Weg der Gerechtigkeit. Untersuchung zur Theologie des Matthäus, 1966²; and "Literarische Überlegungen zum euangelion-Begriff im Markusevangelium", in H. Baltensweiler and B. Reicke, eds., Neues Testament und Geschichte. O. Cullmann zum 70. Geburtstag, 1972, 91–104.

Grace, Spiritual Gifts

χάρις

χάρις (charis), grace, gracefulness, graciousness, favour, thanks, gratitude; χάρισμα (charisma), gift given out of goodwill; χαρίζομαι (charizomai), show favour or kindness, give as a favour, to be gracious to someone, to pardon; χαριτόω (charitoō), endue with grace.

CL 1. Words formed from the Gk. root char indicate things which produce well-being. They belong to the Indo-European family of words which includes Old High German ger (greed); New High German Geier (vulture; cf. Eng. gerfalcon); Lat. caritas; Eng. greedy; cf. chara (→ Joy). charis (from Homer on) which is not always clearly distinguished in literature from chara (from Sappho on) means that which brings wellbeing among men (cf. charma), while chara (→ Joy) is the individual experience or expression of this wellbeing. From this basic meaning of the noun the individual meanings of charis are derived: grace, favour, beauty, thankfulness, gratitude, delight, kindness; expression of favour, good turn, benefit; in the plur. debt of gratitude, gratitude, recompense, thanks (these meanings from Euripides on). The acc. sing. with echein means to be grateful; with the addition of pros tina it means to have someone's goodwill. Linked with apodounai, or ōphelein, the acc. sing. means to return thanks or to owe thanks. Indicative of the characteristic use of the noun are: (a) the combinations (without the article) with eis, for someone's good, as a favour; en, for the benefit of; pros, to oblige someone, in kindness, as desired; syn, to the satisfaction of; (b) the adverbial use charin tinos to someone's advantage, for someone's sake, on account of.

charis designates not only the attitude of the gods but also that of men (e.g. the emperor's dispensations). Like charma (cf. Lat. carmen, spell, whence charm, French charme), charis can also designate the physical causes of the benevolent gift, charm, attraction, and in the plur. it can mean amiable characteristics. In mythology personifications of charis occur: Charis is the exceedingly beautiful wife of Hephaestus; hai Charitēs, the Graces, are the creators and bestowers of charm.

2. The derived noun charisma, gracious gift, donation (only from God to men) is found in pre-Christian literature only in one LXX version of Sir. 7:33; 38:30; Ps. 30:20 (Theod.); Philo. Leg. All. 3, 78; Sib. 2, 54. In post-Christian secular literature it occurs in Alciphron 3, 17, 4 (2nd cent. A. D.) meaning a benevolently dispensed gift (cf. Arndt, 887).

3. The vb. charizomai (common from Homer onwards) does not occur with God as its subject until Aelius Aristides (2nd cent. A.D.), when it means to give graciously. When applied to men's dealing with one another, it means to do something pleasant for someone, to be kind, gracious, or obliging, to oblige or gratify someone (from Diodorus Siculus, 1st cent. B.C.). With the construction tini pros ti, it is used in the sense of courting a god's favour by sacrifice; and in the case of a woman, to grant favours, to indulge her passions. charisamenos used absolutely means as a favour. In the context of ethics and law it means to grant, remit, forgive, or pardon, with the dat. of the person and the acc. of the thing (since Dionysius of Halicarnassos, 1st cent. B.C.). It is used particularly in the sense of granting someone's life (to a third party), i.e. to set him free to please someone (cf. NT below on Acts 3:14; 25:11, 16; 27:24; Phlm. 22). In the perf. and plupf. pass. the vb. means to be pleasant, agreeable, or desired. The perf. part. has the sense of a noun, pleasantness, agreeableness (cf. the formula hōs kecharismenoi, as those who have received a gift).

4. The vb. charitoō occurs only in a few LXX and extra-canonical passages (Sir. 18:17; Ps. 17:26 [Sym.]; Aristeas 225 and Test. Jos. 1:6), always with reference to divine blessing. Otherwise it is confined to the NT and late post-Christian secular literature (Libanius, 4th cent.).

OT 1. The LXX uses the word charis about 190 times of which only about 75 have a Heb. equivalent. Among the equivalents the noun ḥēn (61 times) is the most frequent, mostly in the sense favour, inclination. It rarely means attractiveness, beauty, charm (e.g. Ps. 45:2 [MT 45:3; LXX 44:3]). Occasionally it is used as an adj. (Prov. 1:9; 4:9; 5:19). Other equivalents are rāṣôn, what is acceptable (between men, Prov. 10:32), favour which one seeks from God (Prov. 11:27), favour which one obtains from God (Prov. 12:2); ḥeseḏ (twice), favour (Est. 2:9, 17, here parallel to ḥēn); raḥam (twice, plur.; → Mercy, arts. oiktirmos and splanchna), brotherly feeling (Dan. 1:9), compassion (Gen. 43:14) once each; ṭôḇ, a good thing (Prov. 18:22); gᵉḏûlâh, sign of honour (Est. 6:3); as a conjunction or preposition bammeh, why (2 Chr. 7:21); biglal, on account of (variant of 1 Ki. 14:16); ḥālāq (Ezek. 12:24), accommodating with smooth flattery (W. Zimmerli, Ezechiel, BKAT ad loc.).

2. (a) The use of the word ḥēn clarifies the meaning of "grace" in history and actions. It denotes the stronger coming to the help of the weaker who stands in need of help by reason of his circumstances or natural weakness. He acts by a voluntary decision, though he is moved by the dependence or the request of the weaker party. A typical expression used to describe such an event from the standpoint of the weak is the formula to find favour in someone's eyes, i.e. to acquire his favour, liking, benevolence, condescension, and understanding. The action itself is what makes the weaker party acceptable: e.g. Jacob to Esau (Gen. 32:5, MT 32:6); Joseph to Potiphar and Pharaoh's men (Gen. 3:4 and 50:4); the Egyptians to Joseph (Gen. 47:25); Ruth to Boaz (Ruth 2:2, 10, 13); a young wife to her husband (here in the negative, Deut. 24:1); Hannah to Eli (1 Sam. 1:18); David to Saul and Jonathan (1 Sam. 16:22; 20:3); Joab to David (2 Sam. 14:22); Esther to the king (Est. 8:5 etc.). This acceptance is desired (Zech. 4:7) or experienced (Eccl. 9:11) as fortune or salvation. Often it can only be understood as the result of the special intervention of God who supplies grace to the weak (Gen. 39:21; Exod. 3:21; 11:3; 12:36).

(b) ḥēn denotes relatively seldom the activity of God. It is used mostly in the sense of his undeserved gift in election. Noah (Gen. 6:8) is singled out of mankind sentenced to destruction (cf. below on Gen. 8:21 f.). The choice of this one individual allows us to recognize mercy in the midst of judgment. Moses, the chosen mediator, was permitted to remind Yahweh of his electing gift (Exod. 33:12, 13a) and therefore request a renewed gift of Yahweh (Exod. 33:13b, 16; cf. Num. 11:1), recognizable as Yahweh's care in history for the → covenant people and renewed on account of the mediator's intercession (Exod. 33:17). David also surrendered himself in moments of crisis to the providence of God (2 Sam. 15:25). Bowing before God, → humility and petition appear here not as necessary preconditions of the merciful gift of God, but as the way open to man. Wisdom literature recognized, in the relationship between man's humility and divine grace, something of the character of a law (Prov. 3:34, taken up in 1 Pet. 5:5). The translation of Zech. 12:10 is disputed: AV "spirit of grace", RSV "spirit of compassion." The passages refer to the eschatological outpouring of the spirit upon men (cf. Joel 2:28 [MT 3:1]) which is described as "a spirit of compassion and supplication" (RSV). The meaning lies somewhere between "sympathy", "commiseration" (Koehler-Baumgartner, 314) and being touched (K. Elliger, Kleine Propheten, ATD 25, 1967[6] ad loc.). It is followed by taḥ[a]nûnîm also from the root ḥnn (RSV "supplication"). (See further J. G. Baldwin, Haggai, Zechariah, Malachi, 1972, 190 ff.)

(c) Even the postponement in history of punishment is a gracious act of God (2 Ki. 13:23, ḥnn). Where the concept is not found, the idea frequently is (e.g. 1 Ki. 21:29; 2 Ki. 10:30; 14:26). Various writers on OT theology rightly point out that, over and above the occurrences of the concept of grace, the OT teaches that "every creature lives by the grace of God" (L. Koehler, Old Testament Theology, 1957, 124) and that Yahweh's grace "produces everything that furthers life" (G. von Rad, Old Testament Theology, I, 1962, 229). The theological ideas of the Yahwist in which the increase of sin is followed by the greater increase of grace must be considered here: deluge followed by the Noahic covenant (esp. Gen. 8:21 f.); the tower of → Babel followed by the Abrahamic covenant for the blessing of all peoples (Gen. 11–12). In Ps. 63:3 (MT 63:4) the OT is already advancing to the "discovery of the spiritual as a reality beyond the frailty of the corporeal" (von Rad, op. cit., I, 403): "Thy steadfast love [Gk. eleos → mercy] is better than life."

3. In addition to the established OT concepts, the apocryphal Wisdom Literature speaks of grace as a reward for good works which include benevolence (Sir. 12:1; 17:22; 35:2; 40:17; the pass. is used as a substitute for the divine name), renunciation and self-denial, especially that of the martyr (Wis. 3:14 tēs pisteōs charis, the gracious reward of faith for "the eunuch whose hands have done no lawless deeds"; cf. Isa. 56:3 ff.). On the grace of martyrdom, see 4 Macc. 11:12 where the tyrant is said to bestow great favour through enabling the martyr in his suffering to demonstrate his loyalty to the law.

4. In the Qumran texts a distinctive theology of grace is found. It is linked particularly with the concept ḥeseḏ and also with rāṣôn. ḥēn is not mentioned. It is a theology which, within the bounds of covenant grace (1QM 12, 3 etc.; → Mercy, art. eleos OT), expresses in confession and prayer hope for the gift of God reserved for the individual (1QS 11:12 f. ["through his showing favour comes my justification"]; 1QH 2:23, 25; 4:37; 7:27, 35; 9:10 ["I chose judgment upon myself . . . for I wait for your mercy"]; 9:14 ["hope . . . through your mercy"]; 11:31; 16:12). Although the Qumran and Pauline documents stand close to each other in their deep recognition of human sin and the consequent knowledge that God can justify and pardon, a fundamental difference exists. Radical liberation from the → law has not yet taken place (cf. H. Braun, see bibliography; H. Conzelmann, An Outline Theology of the New Testament, 1969, 223 ff.). The divine pleasure (rāṣôn) works as providence and foreknowledge which make possible knowledge and a change for the good (1QS 11:18; 10:6; 14:13 etc.). Through obedience and sacrifice this good pleasure can be influenced (1QS 9:4 f.; 1QM 2:5).

5. Rab. literature contains more than a one-sided doctrine of justification by works. On the one hand, grace can be procured by human behaviour (cf. SB I 767 f.; II 152). Grace may come about only where works are lacking, for rewards are given only for deeds (2 Esd. 8:31–33, 36; cf. SB III 201 on Rom. 4:4; 268 on Rom. 9:15 = Exod. 33:19; further IV 21 ff. Excursus on the Sermon on the Mount). On the other hand, there is the belief that grace is necessary for every action. Grace initiates and completes even the actions of the elect (Aristeas 195; cf. SB III 618 f.). The divine reward is a reward of grace (cf. SB IV 486 ff. on Matt. 20:1–16). According to SB IV 490, the early synagogue did not hold fast the idea of reward by grace. It even denied that one could recognize election by success in the world. The successful man may be suspected of having already forfeited his future reward.

NT The NT employs the term charis 155 times, mostly in the Pauline letters (100 times) especially in 1 and 2 Cor. (10 and 18 times), Rom. (24 times) and Eph. (12 times). In the Catholic Epistles it is found most frequently in 1 Pet. (10 times); it occurs in Heb. (8 times). Acts uses charis 17 times, Lk. 8 and Jn. 4; the word is lacking in Matt. and Mk. With the exception of one text in 1 Pet., charisma is an exclusively Pauline concept (16 times). charizesthai occurs only in Paul (16 times) and Luke (Lk. 3 times; Acts 4 times), likewise charitoun (once each).

1. In Jesus' teaching the concept of grace in the sense of the undeserved gift of God evidently did not occur. But the theme of his teaching and his acts as a whole centred on God's condescension to the weak, poor, hopeless, lost (Matt. 11:5, 28 ff.; Mk. 10:26 ff.; Lk. 15). Immeasurable remission of debt (Matt. 18:21–34), gracious reward in the kingdom of God (Matt. 20:1–16), and pardon leading to a new life (Lk. 13:6–8; 7:36–50; 19:9 f.) are central themes in his ministry.

2. (a) In the few places where Lk. introduces the concept of grace into Jesus' words it means reward in the last day, payment for something taken as a matter of course (Lk. 6:32–34; cf. Matt. 5:46; Lk. 17:9), and means almost the opposite to its basic meaning. In Lk. 4:22 the expression "words of grace" seems to include both the astonishing rhetorical force of Jesus' words, his authority (see v. 22c "Is not this Joseph's son?"; cf. Eph. 4:29; Col. 4:6), the boldness of his claims (cf. v. 21 with vv. 18 f.), and also the content of his teaching (Matt. 11:5; cf. above 1 (a)).

Otherwise Lk. uses charis in its OT sense to express the favour and the acceptability of Mary or the child Jesus before God (1:30; 2:40) and men (2:52; quoting

1 Sam. 2:26). In the history of doctrine a special significance attaches to the angel's greeting to Mary, "Favoured one!" (kecharitōmenē Lk. 1:28; AV, "highly favoured"). This does not exalt Mary in her essential being over the rest of mankind. (The same is true of Stephen, for example, who is full of grace, Acts 6:8.) But Mary is promised as a special favour of God a unique role in the history of God's saving purposes, of being the handmaid of the Lord, and this came about (genoito, Lk. 1:38).

(b) In Acts grace is that power which flows from God or from the exalted Christ, and accompanies the activity of the apostles giving success to their mission (Acts 6:8; 11:23; 14:26; 15:40; 18:27). It appears in "the word of grace" which is identical with the → gospel (13:43; 20:24). The Lord himself confirms it (14:3). It is that which enables men to believe (18:27). The word of grace is that which builds up believers (20:32). Even where the sense "favour with men" is present God's initiative is the decisive factor (2:47; 4:33). It occurs exclusively in the sense of human favour only in 24:27; 25:3, 9. The Pauline contrast of law and grace (cf. 4 (a)) is echoed in the Peter's speech which contrasted the unnecessary "yoke" (zygos, see Matt. 11:28 ff.) of → circumcision with "the grace of the Lord Jesus" (15:10 f.).

charizesthai is employed in Acts 4 times in the sense of granting someone's life to a third party (3:14; 27:24) and handing over someone (25:11, 16).

3. In Jn. charis occurs 4 times in the prologue only, where it is perhaps influenced by Pauline thought. It plays no further part in the Gospel. The antithesis of law and grace (1:17) is typically Pauline (cf. 4 (a)). The evangelist has here, as in 1:14 (cf. Exod. 34:6, "abounding in steadfast love [ḥeseḏ] and faithfulness [ʾemeṯ]), linked charis with one of his favourite concepts, → truth. As in Paul, the event of Christ (here in particular in his earthly life) is identified with grace. As in Eph., Col., and the Pastorals (see below 5 and 6), grace is seen as the essence of his → glory (doxa, v. 14); it is poured out in overflowing → fullness (charin anti charitos, "grace upon grace," v. 17; cf. v. 14). In the teaching of Jn. as a whole, the gift which the Revealer brings such as "life" and "light" are identified with Jesus Christ himself, and can only be understood as gifts of his grace (→ "I am" sayings).

4. For Paul charis is the essence of God's decisive saving act in Jesus Christ, which took place in his sacrificial death, and also of all its consequences in the present and future (Rom. 3:24 ff.). Therefore, the use of charis at the beginning and end of the Pauline letters is much more than a mere polite cliché. "Grace" is not just a good wish for salvation; it is qualified as the grace of Christ (cf. 2 Cor. 13:13 [EVV v. 14], where it is linked with the name of Jesus).

(a) The apostle unfolds the reality and power of charis in a stubborn conflict with Rab. ideas of justification by works and synergism (see above OT 5; → Law NT 2). This leads him to set up in contrast two antithetical, mutually exclusive series of ideas: grace, gift, the righteousness of God, superabundance, faith, gospel, calling, in grace and hope on the one side; and law, reward, sin, works, accomplishment owed, one's own righteousness, honour, worldly wisdom, futility on the other side. The person and work of the Son made it possible for justice in the judge's pardon not to conflict with grace (Rom. 3:21 ff.; 8:32; Gal. 2:20 f.; Phil. 2:8 ff.). In Christ, therefore, God's grace is given as a precious gift (1 Cor. 1:4). Apart from him there can be no talk of grace (cf. 1 Cor. 1:30 f.; see also Jn. 1:14, 16 f.). But this also means that grace can never become a quality which an individual may possess in his own right, nor may it ever be placed at his disposal.

(b) In the following extracts from his letters Paul uses the series of ideas mentioned above, or aspects of them. charis occurs in a central position, or at the climax of the argument. Most often it is defined by means of a contrast.

(i) Rom. 3:21–31: Men are justified by his (God's) grace as a gift (dōrean; → Gift, art. dōron) through the redemption which is in Christ Jesus (v. 24). Here grace is pardon by the divine judge who reckons to the sinner the → righteousness of Christ.

(ii) Rom. 4:2, 25: The ideas "of grace [kata charin]" and "as debt [kata opheilēma]", i.e. a reward for work accomplished, are mutually exclusive (v. 4). "That is why it depends on faith, in order that the promises may rest on grace and be guaranteed to all his [Abraham's] descendants – not only to the adherents of the law but also to those who share the faith of Abraham, for he is the father of us all" (v. 16). Only the free gift of God ensures the extension of the saving → promise to all men.

(iii) Rom. 5:15–21 and 6:1: Rom. 5:15 declares that "the free gift [charisma] is not like the trespass [paraptōma]." Here charisma is used in the sense of charis. charisma is the gift of life, which as "the grace of God and the free gift in the grace of that one man Jesus Christ abounded for many" (v. 15, cf. by contrast v. 20b). But grace is not given to let men go on in → sin (6:1). It does not owe its origin to sin, nor can it be manipulated by men. It is a new reality, a dominion established once and for all by Jesus Christ. Like a mighty lord, it exercises kingly rule (basileuein). Its ground is the new → righteousness of Christ, and its → goal is eternal → life (5:21).

(iv) Rom. 6:12–23 carries this thought further. Vv. 14 f. argue that the man who has died with Christ and lives in him (cf. v. 11) no longer lives under the dominion of sin (hamartia), but under that of grace. V. 15 takes up the formula and guards against its misunderstanding (as above in 6:1 f.). God's gracious gift (charisma) of eternal life has made the power of death as the wages of sin something that belongs to the past which is now done away with (v. 21 ff.).

(v) Rom. 11:5 f.: "God's gracious choice" (eklogē charitos) and the life based on → "works" (ex ergōn) have nothing in common. Otherwise grace would no longer be pure grace. It would be compromised by the Rab. principle of accomplishment and achievement (see above OT 5).

(vi) 2 Cor. 1:12. To the Jewish desire for control of one's fate through works of law (see (i), (ii), (v)) corresponds the Greek striving for autonomy by means of earthly → wisdom (sophia sarkikē). Grace opposes the pride of both as the sole source of power for the apostolic mission (see below) and for the Christian's life (cf. 1 Cor. 1:30 f.).

(vii) In Gal. 2:21 Paul formulates the climax of his theology of grace: "I do not nullify the grace of God; for if justification were through the law [dia nomou], then Christ died to no purpose" (here dōrean in its negative sense).

(viii) Gal. 5:1–6. Paul accuses the Galatian churches in v. 4 of doing what he repudiated for himself in 2:21, i.e. of wanting by implication to be justified through the law. By doing this he says that they are "severed from Christ" and "fallen away from grace." They have plunged into the abyss of their own righteousness and thus of bondage.

(c) Apart from the antithetic use of charis and law, Paul employs the concept of grace in various other connections. (i) With the exclamation "but thanks be to God" (charis de tō theō or tō de theō charis; Rom. 6:17; 7:25; 1 Cor. 15:57; 2 Cor. 2:14; 8:16; 9:15) at crucial points in his letters Paul praises the gracious acts of God (Rom. 7:25; cf. 1 Tim. 1:12; 2 Tim. 1:3; and in Heb. 12:28 the phrase echōmen charin, "let us be grateful" [RSV]). (ii) When one partakes in that which is by nature good without a load on the conscience, one does it "with thankfulness" (chariti) (1 Cor. 10:30). (iii) The spiritual song is understood as thankfulness to God (Col. 3:16). (iv) In 1 Cor. 16:3 and 2 Cor. 8:6, 7, 19, charis is the technical term for the gift of gratitude and love (RSV, NEB, "gift") for the collection for the Jerusalem community.

(d) Arising out of the basic act of pardon and legal acquittal (Rom. 8:31 ff.), Paul understands the whole movement of the Christian life from beginning to end as grace (2 Cor. 6:1–9; Rom. 5:2; cf. also Jn. 1:16). It is guaranteed by being anchored in the purpose of God (prothesis) (Rom. 8:28). Human weakness, not self-determination, is its sphere of activity (2 Cor. 12:9). The grace of God makes the new man what he is (1 Cor. 15:10). (It might even be said that he remains as dependent on it as the released prisoner is upon the connections, help and tasks offered by the after-care service which make life in freedom possible for him.) This is as true of the apostolic mission in particular (Rom. 1:5; 12:3; 15:5; 1 Cor. 3:10; Gal. 2:9; Phil. 1:7) as it is of the Christian life in general (Rom. 12:3, 6; 1 Cor. 1:4 ff.; 2 Cor. 4:15; 6:1; 8:1; 9:8, 14; Phil. 1:7, grace as the bond of fellowship). The relationship with Christ is frequently expressed by dia, through. When grace is said to be "given", or to "overflow" etc., the intention is to acknowledge its reality in human life, and not to imply that it is a thing or an object.

(e) The manifold outworking of the one grace in individual Christians through the one → Spirit is called by Paul charisma, a personal endowment with grace. This is the specialized use of charisma as distinct from the general (see above on Rom. 5:15 f.; 6:23). In Rom. 12 and 1 Cor. 12 Paul develops the meaning of this special, spiritual endowment for service for the life of the community. It has both inward and outward-looking aspects: prophecy as a gift of proclamation, service, teaching (didaskalia), spiritual exhortation (paraklēsis), leadership in the congregation, and also beneficence and compassion (→ Mercy; cf. Rom. 12:6–8). In addition Paul has already listed in 1 Cor. 12:9 ff. and 28 ff. → faith, the gift of healing, special authority to distinguish between spirits, speaking in tongues, the interpretation of tongues and, as first in the order of functions, the service of the → apostle (v. 28). It is inconceivable to Paul that there should be any Christian without some gift of grace. At the same time, a single individual may be characterized by more than one gift of grace. Paul himself had, beside his apostleship (2 Cor. 1:11), the gift of celibacy (1 Cor. 7:7) which did not belong of necessity to the apostolate (1 Cor. 9:5). He also had the gift of tongues (1 Cor. 14:18), and no doubt also prophecy, teaching and administration. Capacity for spiritual service is determined by one's present charisma. It must not be overstepped through ambition (1 Cor. 12:11–27; Rom. 12:3–5; cf. also 1 Pet. 4:10). On the other hand, Paul encouraged desire (zēloute) for the best gifts (1 Cor. 12:31), which can be attained not through achievements, but only through → prayer and obedience (→ Faith, art. peithomai). Rom. 11:29 designates as charismata the abiding privileges of Israel in salvation history (cf. 9:4 f.).

(f) The vb. charizomai, like the noun, is used chiefly in connection with the decisive, gracious gift of God. Rom. 8:32 speaks of the all-embracing gift of God in the giving of his Son (cf. Jn. 3:16). The Spirit of God leads to the knowledge of what God has bestowed (1 Cor. 2:12). Already in the old → covenant the free gift of God is linked only with the → promise (epangelia, Gal. 3:18), and not with the → law. Readiness to suffer for Christ's sake is, like faith, given to the church by grace for Christ's sake. It is expressed in the pass. in Phil. 1:29, to avoid use of the divine → name. By the prayer of the household of Philemon the imprisoned Paul hoped that he would be granted to that church as a guest (pass. as above, Phlm. 22).

The second meaning of the vb. is to forgive (e.g. 2 Cor. 2:7, 10; cf. also Eph. 4:32; Col. 3:13; 2:13). Christians are to forgive each other, since God in Christ (or the Lord) has forgiven them. In 2 Cor. 12:13 the vb. is used almost ironically to mean excuse.

5. In the letter to the Ephesians charis occurs in only two places. It is used as indicated above under 4(b) in an antithetical connection: "dead through our trespasses, made alive together with Christ, by grace [chariti] you have been saved" (2:5): "by grace . . . through faith . . . the gift of God" in opposition to "not your own doing . . . not because of works, lest any man should boast" (2:8 f.). In contrast to the earlier epistles, however, charis is connected in both places not with dikaioō, justify (which does not occur in Eph. and Col.), but with sōzō, save. The emphasis is thus shifted from forensic justification to effective salvation (cf. R. Bultmann, Theology of the New Testament, 1955, II 176), i.e. from pardon to blessing (Eph. 1:6). Hence grace is connected with charitoō, to favour, bless. It looks forward to exaltation (Eph. 1:6 f.; 2:7), though it is still related to "redemption through his blood" (1:7; cf. 2:15; 4:9).

The cognitive aspect of grace which comes to men in the gospel is stressed in Col. 1:6. Grace and → truth belong together (Col. 1:5b; cf. Jn. 1:14). In Eph. 4:7 charis is used in the sense of charisma: "grace [charis] was given to each one of us according to the measure of the gift [dōrea] of Christ."

6. In the Pastorals 1 Tim. 1:12 ff. alludes autobiographically to Rom. 5:20b. 2 Tim. 1:9 takes up the connection of the purpose of God and the grace of Christ (cf. Rom. 8:28 with 32), and gives with Tit. 2:11 a doxology of joy over the present → revelation (phaneroō or epiphainō) of grace. As in Eph., grace and salvation are connected in Tit. 2:11 (sōtērios, saving); grace works to train us (paideuousa) away from the world and towards eschatological hope. In Tit. 3:7 grace has a double connection. On the one hand, it refers back to the Saviour Jesus Christ who pours out the renewing Holy Spirit (cf. vv. 5 f.). On the other, it is related to justification in the truly Pauline sense (dikaiōthentes tē ekeinou chariti, "justified by his grace"). Christ's grace brings about – likewise forensically – the appointment of heirs to future life. Otherwise the Pastorals say nothing more about individual gifts of grace, but only speak of grace for office (so charis, 2 Tim. 2:1). charisma is passed on through the → laying on of hands (1 Tim. 4:14; 2 Tim. 1:6).

7. Of the remaining NT epistles 1 Pet. and Heb. come nearest to the Pauline understanding of grace.

(a) Like Eph. and Col., 1 Pet. does not specifically link grace and justification. It speaks of the grace of God which is given through Christ (1:10, announced by the prophets), the future revelation of which determines conduct and hope (1:13), and as stewards of which, in its manifold forms (4:10; 5:10), Christians should live. Grace also permits the endurance of undeserved suffering to be understood as approved by God (2:19 f.; cf. also 5:10). In the concluding message the standing of the addressees in grace is confirmed as true (5:12).

(b) Heb. 2:9 understands grace as God's care in salvation history which is made effective in Jesus' substitutionary death. Therefore the throne on which Christ sits to rule is "a throne of grace." Here forgiveness (= grace and compassion, eleos; → Mercy) can be received from the one who can sympathize with the weak, for he has identified himself with them as high → priest.

(c) The remaining texts in Heb. are concerned with the problem of cheap grace. In this they may be compared with similar texts in the Catholic Epistles. To abuse the spiritual gift by one's way of life is worse than transgressing the Mosaic law (10:29); grace once abandoned is not to be regained (12:15 ff.). But firmness of heart remains, in spite of all exhortations, a gift of God and not the result of keeping special regulations (13:9). The danger of falling away occurs in Jas. 4:6; the Spirit's offer of gifts outweighs his yearning demands (there follows a quotation from Prov. 3:34; cf. 1 Pet. 5:5, above OT 2). 2 Pet. 3:18 can even paradoxically exhort us to grow in grace, in contrast to falling from our own firm position (cf. Gal. 5:4 with 1 Cor. 12:31). Jude 4 warns against the misuse (metatithēmi) of grace to satisfy our passions, a danger which Paul had already repulsed in Rom. 6:1 (cf. above 4 (b) (ii), (iii)).

8. In general the Apostolic Fathers hardened the development in the understanding of grace which can be seen in the later Pauline and Catholic Epistles. Grace is institutionalized as grace for the community and for office. It is an aid for the preservation of correct → teaching and of the ethics of the new law (→ command, cf. R. Bultmann, op. cit., II, 210 f., 216; T. F. Torrance, The Doctrine of Grace in the Apostolic Fathers, 1948). H.-H. Esser

→ Gift, → Mercy, → Spirit

(a). D. R. Ap-Thomas, "Some Aspects of the Root ḥnn in the Old Testament", JSS 2, 1957, 128–48; F. Büchsel and J. Herrmann, hileōs, TDNT III 300–23; G. C. Berkouwer, The Triumph of Grace in the Theology of Karl Barth, 1956; R. Bultmann, Theology of the New Testament, I, 1952 (see index); D. Doughty, "The Priority of CHARIS", NTS 19, 1972–3, 163–80; W. Eichrodt, Theology of the Old Testament, I, 1961, II, 1967; O. Eissfeldt, "The Promise of Grace to David in Isaiah 55:1–5", in B. W. Anderson and W. Harrelson, eds., Israel's Prophetic Heritage, 1962, 196–207; E. E. Ellis, "Spiritual Gifts in the Pauline Community", NTS 20, 1973–4, 128–44; G. Farr, "The Concept of Grace in the Book of Hosea", ZAW 70, 1958, 98–107; N. Glueck, Ḥesed in the Bible, 1967; E. Jauncey, The Doctrine of Grace, 1925; H.-J. Kraus, Worship in Israel, 1966; W. F. Lofthouse, "ḥēn and ḥesed in the Old Testament", ZAW 51, 1933, 29–35; H. D. McDonald, "Grace", ZPEB II 799–804; J. Moffatt, Grace in the New Testament, 1931; R. S. Moxon, The Doctrine of Sin, 1925; T. Y. Mullins, "Greeting as a New Testament Form", JBL 87, 1968, 418–26; A. Nygren, Agape and Eros, 1953²; W. L. Reed, "Some Implications of ḥēn for Old Testament Religion", JBL 73, 1954, 36–41; J. Schildenberger and G. Trenkler, "Grace", EBT I 337–44; C. Ryder Smith, The Bible Doctrine of Grace, 1956; N. H. Snaith, The Distinctive Ideas of the Old Testament, 1944, 94–130; O. J. Thomas, "Irresistible Grace", Vox Evangelica 4, 1965, 55–64; T. F. Torrance, The Doctrine of Grace in the Apostolic Fathers, 1948; N. P. Williams, The Grace of God, 1930.

(b). H. Braun, "Das Erbarmen Gottes über den Gerechten. Zur Theologie der Psalmen Salomos", ZNW 43, 1950–51, 1 ff. (reprinted Gesammelte Studien zum Neuen Testament, 1967², 8 ff.); and "Röm. 7, 7–25 und das Selbstverständnis des Qumran-Frommen", ZTK 56, 1959, 1 ff. (reprinted op. cit., 100 ff.); U. Brockhaus, Charisma und Amt: Die paulinische Charismenlehre auf dem Hintergrund der frühchristlichen Gemeindefunktionen, 1972; N. Glueck, Das Wort ḥeseḏ im alttestamentlichen Sprachgebrauch, BZAW 47, (1927) 1961²; A. von Harnack, Sanftmut, Huld und Demut, 1920; J. Haspecker, "Gnade", LTK IV 977–80; J. Hempel, Gott und Mensch im Alten Testament, 1936²; M. Hengel, Nachfolge und Charisma, BZNW 34, 1968; N. J. Hein, E. Würthwein, G. Stählin, E. Kähler, and W. Joest, "Gnade", *RGG*³ II 1630 ff.; A. Jepsen, "Gnade und Barmherzigkeit im Alten Testament", KuD 7, 1961, 261–71; J. Köberle, Sünde und Gnade im religiösen Leben des Volkes Israel, 1905; O. Loew, Charis, 1908; E. Lohse, Märtyrer und Gottesknecht, 1963²; H. Niederstrasser, Kerygma und Paideia. Zum Problem der erziehenden Gnade, 1967; O. Perels, "charisma im Neuen Testament", Fuldaer Hefte, 15, 1964, 39 ff.; J. Schreiner, Sion – Jerusalem. Jahwes Königssitz, 1963; H. J. Stoebe, "Die Bedeutung des Wortes ḥäsäd im Alten Testament", Vetus Testamentum 7, 1961, 261–71; H. J. Stoebe, W. Kasch and W. Pannenberg, "Gnade", EKL I 1604 f.; G. P. Wetter, Charis, 1913; R. Winkler, "Die Gnade im Neuen Testament", ZSTh 10, 1933, 642–80; J. Wobbe, Der Charisgedanke bei Paulus, 1932; J. Ziegler, Die Liebe Gottes bei den Propheten, Alttestamentliche Abhandlungen 11, 3, 1930.

Greek

Ἕλλην

Ἕλλην (Hellēn), a Greek; Ἑλλάς (Hellas), Greece; Ἑλληνικός (Hellēnikos), Greek; Ἑλληνίς (Hellēnis), a Greek woman; Ἑλληνιστής (Hellēnistēs), a Hellenist; Ἑλληνιστί (Hellēnisti), adv. Greek, in the Greek language.

CL Hellēn means a Greek, as opposed to a Barbarian. In Homer the word denotes a Thessalian tribe in the region of Pharsalos. In Herodotus it has become the name for all Greeks. In between are the mythological genealogies which invented a hero, Hellen, son of Deucalion (there is also a tradition that he is a son of Zeus), father of the Doric and Aeolian tribal heroes (as early as Hesiod).

The opposition between Greek and non-Greek was one of culture and not religion. In the period after Alexander the Great, especially in the east, all who had adopted Greek language, culture and way of life were counted as "Greeks", even though they were of a different ethnic origin.

OT 1. In the LXX Hellēn is sometimes used for Heb. yāwān or yᵉwānîm (actually the Ionians; Dan. 8:21; 10:20). The experiences of the Jews under Antiochus IV Epiphanes resulted in the word Greek taking on the additional shade of meaning "hostile to the Jews", as in 2 Macc. 4:36; 11:2; cf. Hellēnikos in 4:10, 15; 6:9; 11:24; 13:2. It thus had the overtone of pagan (→ People, art. ethnos). In this way Hellēn, originally a term of respect, was surrendered to the language of religious contempt, because the Jew began from his belief in the one God, whereas the Greek, in his contempt for the Jews, began from his philosophical culture.

Elsewhere in the LXX Hellas occurs in Isa. 66:19; Ezek. 27:13 (in both cases for Heb. yāwān; RSV Javan); 1 Macc. 1:1; 8:9; Dan. 11:2 v.l.; Hellēn for yāwān in Joel 3(4):6; Zech. 9:13; Dan. 11:2; for pᵉlištîm (Philistines) in Isa. 9:12 (11); and without Heb. equivalent in Joel 2:25 v.l.; Dan. 7:6 v.l.; 1 Macc. 1:10; 6:2 v.l.; 8:18; 3 Macc. 3:8; 4 Macc. 18:20; Hellēnikos in Jer. 26 (46):16; 27 (50):16 (in both cases the Heb. is different); 4 Macc. 8:8; Ezek. 4:8 v.l.; Hellēnis in 2 Macc. 6:8 v.l.

2. The world into which Christianity entered was characterized by the pervading influence of Gk. culture, above all in the eastern part of the Roman empire. The conquests of Alexander the Great and his policy of Hellenization, which was continued by his successors, caused the Gk. language and Gk. ways to become the decisive cultural factor. Gk. cities arose everywhere, including Syria and Palestine, bursting the old tribal groupings of the native peoples (which was their professed intention). The upper strata in these cities spoke Gk. which became the language of trade in the eastern part of the Roman empire and which was also widely understood in Palestine. Just how far the process of Hellenization had gone can be seen, for example, in the case of the Jews of Alexandria in Egypt, for whom a Greek translation of the Bible, the LXX (Septuagint → Glossary of Technical Terms) had to be made in the third century B.C. For many of the people no longer understood or spoke their ancestral Hebrew (Aramaic) tongue. The LXX was far from being the only translation. It became the best known, because it was adopted by the Greek-speaking Christians. This in turn led to new translations of the MT into Gk. in opposition to the LXX. (See further S. Jellicoe, The Septuagint and Modern Study, 1968, which contains an extensive bibliography.)

Philo of Alexandria (c. 20 B.C.–c. A.D. 50) was a Hellenistic philosopher and writer who sought to restate Jewish belief in terms of Gk. philosophy. (For his major writings which were written in Gk see the table of abbreviations.) He developed an allegorical method of interpreting the OT which saw Gk. philosophical ideas embodied in the history and institutions of Israel. In his system he accorded a central place to the Logos (→ Word) as the creative power which orders the world and the intermediary which enables men to know God. (On Philo see H. A. Wolfson, "Philo Judaeus", in The Encyclopedia of Philosophy, ed. P. Edwards, IV, 1967, 151–5; and Philo: Foundations of Religious Philosophy in Judaism, Christianity and Islam, I–II, 1962³.) Besides Philo there were numerous other Jewish authors who used Gk. language and thought forms to proclaim and spread as missionaries Jewish belief in God and the → law. Flavius Josephus (c. A.D. 37–c. 100) wrote his celebrated history of the Jewish War (c. 77, probably originally in Aramaic) and his Antiquities of the Jews (c. 94) with a view to gaining Roman sympathies. (See further H. Montefiore, Josephus and the New Testament, 1960.)

1 Macc. gives an account of the heavy inroads the Gk. spirit and the Gk. attitude to life had made into the Jerusalem priesthood. There was even a risk of losing fundamental religious tenets, and many were prepared to apostatize from their fathers' faith in God and turn from the → law. This and the violent and clumsy attempts at Hellenization made by Antiochus Epiphanes (d. 163 B.C.) provoked a reaction in the circles loyal to the law, which issued in the Maccabean movement (cf. 2 Macc. 6:1 ff.). Relatively soon, however, the Maccabees themselves became Hellenized. Thus the ranks of pious Jews, loyal to the law, were penetrated by Gk. thought, teaching and myths (including the idea of tradition, the immortality of the soul, and myths of the beyond). Even the Rabbis understood Gk. and were acquainted with Homer. The very numerous Gk. loan-words in the Talmud and Midrash are evidence of the cultural supremacy of Greece, even in the realm of Judaism. A reaction which, however, could not make much headway, showed itself at the beginning of the second cent. A.D., when the learning of Gk. was prohibited. The prohibition was soon afterwards watered down to one against the learning of Gk. "wisdom" (Sot. 9:14; cf. Sot. 49b). The Jewish Karaite sect in the ninth cent. A.D. also arose in opposition to Gk. philosophy. In calling Jews back to a study of the Scriptures alone, it was opposing Gk. influences in the Talmud and other bodies of writing.

NT In the NT Hellas, Greece, occurs only in Acts 20:2. Of the 26 occurrences of Hellēn in the NT, 10 are in Acts and 13 in Paul's letters; it does not appear in the Synoptics. Hellēnis is found in Acts 17:12 and Mk. 7:26. It is used to describe the Syrophoenician woman, but it is not absolutely clear what is meant by the double description. It is certain that the woman who probably spoke Gk. was a pagan whom Jesus helped on account of her faith. ([Ed.] W. L. Lane suggests that, "She was a member of the Hellenized citizen class in the Phoenician republic of Tyre, a Gentile by birth and culture. She is designated a Syrophoenician because Phoenica belonged administratively to the province of Syria and was distinguished from Libophoenicia with its centre at Carthage in North Africa" [The Gospel of Mark, NLC 1974, 260; cf. Did. Sic. 19, 93; Polyb. 3, 33; Strabo, 17, 3, 9].) Hellēnikos, Greek (adj.), occurs only in Rev. 9:11. The name of the angel of the abyss is en tē Hellēnikē (supply glōssē), i.e. "in the Greek language", Apollyon (→ Destroy, art. apōleia NT 4). Hellēnisti means in Greek; the title on Jesus' cross was written in Hebrew, Latin and Greek (Jn. 19:20). The officer who rescued Paul from the mob was surprised to discover that Paul understood Gk. (Acts 21:37).

Hellēnistēs (a new formation from the verb Hellēnizein) means a man who speaks Gk. and lives as a Gk. (Acts 6:1; 9:29). In Acts 9:29 the word refers to Jews who sought to kill Paul, and in Acts 6:1 it refers to Gk.-speaking Jewish Christians who were strictly orthodox Jewish Christians and not Greeks at all. Paul's later struggle for a gospel free from the law would otherwise be incomprehensible (cf. also Acts 10 f. and 15), and uncircumcised pagans were certainly not accepted into synagogue congregations.

1. In Jn. 7:35 the Jews suggest that Jesus intends going to the Gk. dispersion, to the Jews who lived among the Greeks, and from this base to teach them. In Jn. 12:20 ff. Hellēnes refers to Gk.-speaking proselytes (→ Conversion, art. prosēlytos) and not pagans, for they wanted to worship in the → Temple. They wanted to see Jesus. This gives rise to a prospect of the mission to the Gentiles for which Jesus' death is a prerequisite. It was Gk.-speaking Jewish Christians who first preached the gospel to the Greeks (Acts 11:20). This was done above all by Paul and his companions (Acts 17:4; 19:10; etc.). Whenever the Jews refused the message, Paul turned to the Greeks. Jews and Greeks lived everywhere side by side, with the result that mixed marriages took place. From one of these came Timothy (Acts 16:1). Paul was accused of taking Greeks into the Temple and thus of defiling it (Acts 21:28). Sometimes the word Hellēn can also mean a proselyte (Acts 14:1; 17:4; → Conversion, art. prosēlytos).

2. The expression "Jews and Greeks" which occurs especially in Paul's writings can stand for the whole of humanity (1 Cor. 1:24; 10:32; 12:13; Gal. 3:28; Col. 3:11). The Jews are mentioned first as an expression of their privileged place in salvation history. But God is just as much God of the Greeks as of the Jews (Rom. 10:12). Paul was set aside in a special way to exercise his apostolic ministry among the Greeks (Rom. 1:14; Gal. 1:16; 2:9; cf. Eph. 3:6 f.; 1 Tim. 2:7). Not all pagans were Hellēnes, for alongside them Paul refers also to barbarians and Scythians (Rom. 1:14; Col. 3:11). The Hellēnes were characterized by their seeking → wisdom (art. sophia), which made the cross of Christ seem folly to them (1 Cor. 1:22 f.).

The picture painted by Paul in Rom. 1:18–32 of the Greeks (v. 16) or the heathen (→ People, art. ethnos) is a gloomy one. Nevertheless, God directs his message as much to them as to the Jews (Rom. 1:16; 2:9, 3:9). If the Greek does good and fulfils what the law requires, he will receive honour like the Jew (Rom. 2:9 f., 14–16; cf. Jer. 31:33 f.). (On revelation to the Gentiles → God, art. theos, NT 4 (b), 9.) As the Greeks were all pagans from the beginning, the concepts pagan and Greek are interchangeable when contrasted with that of the Jew (cf. Rom. 3:29 f. with 1 Cor. 1:22–24). The Greeks figure here as the foremost representatives of the pagan world. The church in Corinth was given the warning not to offend the Jews, the Greeks or the church of God (1 Cor. 10:32). The non-Christian population of Corinth fell into the two first-mentioned groups, alongside which the church now stood as a new people (→ People, art. laos).

In this new people of God, the → church, differences of origin are removed. God who in reality had always been the God of the Greeks (Rom. 10:12), though they did not recognize him, has now become consciously and in fact their God, in that they have believed in Jesus Christ and through the Holy Spirit they have been → baptized into one → body (1 Cor. 12:13).

Whoever has been baptized into Jesus Christ is God's child and has put on Christ, whether he is Jew or Greek, and so the man who was born a Hellēn now belongs to the offspring of → Abraham (Gal. 3:26–29). Being a Greek or a Jew belongs to the old man, which has to be put away along with all its evil characteristics (Col. 3:11; cf. v. 5–10, 12 f.). H. Bietenhard

→ Israel, → People

(a). A. W. Argyle, "The Greek of Luke and Acts", NTS 20, 1973–74, 441–45; R. Bultmann, Primitive Christianity in its contemporary Setting, 1956; G. Dix, Jew and Greek: A Study in the Primitive Church, 1953; C. H. Dodd, The Bible and the Greeks, 1935; E. von Dobschütz, "Hellenism", DAC I 547 ff.; F. C. Grant, Roman Hellenism and the New Testament, 1962; R. H. Gundry "The Language Milieu of First-Century Palestine", JBL 83, 1964, 404 f.; W. K. C. Guthrie, The Greeks and their Gods, 1954²; E. Haenchen, The Acts of the Apostles, 1971; N. G. L. Hammond, History of Greece, 1967²; M. Hengel, Judaism and Hellenism, I–II, 1974; G. H. C. MacGregor and A. C. Purdy, Jew and Greek: Tutors unto Christ. The Jewish and Hellenistic Background of the New Testament, 1959²; I. H. Marshall, "Palestinian and Hellenistic Christianity: Some Critical Comments", NTS 19, 1972–73, 271–287; C. F. D. Moule, "Once More, Who were the Hellenists?" ExpT 70, 1958–59, 100 ff.; S. Safrai, M. Stern, D. Flusser and W. C. van Unnik, eds., The Jewish People in the First Century: Historical Geography, Political History, Social, Cultural and Religious Life and Institutions, I, 1974; Schürer (see index); J. N. Sevenster, Do You Know Greek? How Much Greek Would the First Jewish Christians have Known? Supplements to NovT 19, 1968; J. B. Skemp, The Greeks and the Gospel, 1964; N. Turner, "The Literary Character of New Testament Greek", NTS 20, 1973–74, 107–14; S. G. Wilson, The Gentiles and the Gentile Mission in Luke–Acts, 1973; H. Windisch, Hellēn etc., TDNT II 504–16.

(b). A. Bauer, Vom Griechentum zum Christentum, 1910; J. Jüthner, Hellenen und Barbaren, 1923; J. Kaerst, Geschichte des Hellenismus,² I, 1917, II, 1926; W. Nestle, Griechische Religiosität, III, 1934, 5 ff.; F. R. Walton, "Griechische Religion", *RGG*³, III 1860 ff.; U. von Wilamowitz-Moellendorff, Der Glaube der Hellenen, I–II, (1931–32) 1955².

Grow

auxanō and pleonazō both denote increase in quantity or quality. auxanō is a word to do with plant-life and originally denoted the natural process of growth into fruition. It is only used in a positive sense in the NT. pleonazō is a quantitative word which originally meant to overflow, and thus to exceed. In figurative NT usage the differences are still clearly discernible.

αὐξάνω

αὔξω and αὐξάνω (auxō, auxanō), grow, cause to grow, increase; αὔξησις (auxēsis), growth, increase; ὑπεραυξάνω (hyperauxanō), grow abundantly; προκοπή (prokopē), progress, advancement, furtherance; προκόπτω (prokoptō), go forward, advance, make progress, prosper.

CL The vb. is attested since Pindar, both in the short form auxō and in the strengthened form auxanō, and means to cause to grow, to cause to increase. Trans. it is used equally for natural growth, such as that of fruits, and for increase and advancement in respect and power. The mid.-pass. can also mean to be exalted, glorified, or praised. The noun auxēsis is used from the Pre-Socratics and Hdt. onwards, and means growth; in the phrase auxēsin poieisthai, to cause to grow, to grow. hyperauxanō is used from Andocides onwards, meaning to grow abundantly, plentifully, or extravagantly. The Lat. augere (increase, grow), augustus (august, venerable) are cognates. Probably deriving from the same root is Lat. auxilium (help).

Our word is particularly used of natural growth. On the same lines is the use of the word for the waxing of the moon and and the sun (Kalendarium of Antiochus [c. A.D. 200] on 25 Dec.; cf. E. Norden, Die Geburt des Kindes, 1924, 99 ff.; Arndt, 121). No specific philosophical or religious significance stand out in the Gk. world, by contrast with prokoptō and prokopē which both in Stoic philosophy and in Philo denote ethical advance.

OT In the LXX auxanō stands for pārâh 11 times in the qal, meaning to be fruitful, plentiful; 8 times in the act. hiph. meaning to make fruitful or plentiful. God is mainly the subject of the process of causing growth (thus Gen. 17:20 of Ishmael; and Gen. 35:11 in the blessing to Jacob who is to become a great nation; cf. Jer. 3:16; 23:3). It is frequently linked with plēthynō, to fill, to multiply, and occurs in the original creation ordinance to humanity and subsequently renewed to the Jewish people to be fruitful and multiply (Gen. 1:22, 28; 9:1, 7 to Noah; 17:6 to Abraham). In the parabolic promise of Isa. 61:11 the process of growth is not viewed as something automatic and inevitable. The point of the comparison is the difference between the first state and the last. The surprising thing is that the beginning and and end stages are two completely different states. Where previously there was nothing, God's creative will becomes effective: he creates righteousness and praise. Sir. 43:8 speaks of the waxing of the new moon. Here, too, God is the originator of the growth.

NT 1. In the NT auxanō is found 22 times, including 4 times in 1 and 2 Cor., twice in Eph., 3 times in Col., and 7 times in Lk. The noun auxēsis occurs only in Eph. 4:16 and Col. 2:19 in connection with the vb.

2. Natural growth is alluded to directly only in Lk. 1:80 and 2:40, where the child Jesus is said to grow in physique (→ Age) and in the → Spirit.

3. (a) auxanō features in Mk.'s version of the parable of the sower (Mk. 4:8), the parable of the mustard seed (Matt. 13:32; Lk. 13:19), and the saying about the lilies of the field (Matt. 6:28). According to the synoptic account of Jesus' preaching, the picture of plant-like growth illustrates the coming of the kingdom through the word in the face of all opposition. God is the one who causes to grow that which he himself sows through Jesus, or plants through his servants (cf. also 1 Cor. 3:6 f.; 2 Cor. 9:10).

(b) In the teaching of Paul auxanō is significantly lacking in Rom. and Gal. It is not part of the doctrine of justification, but belongs to paraenesis. Only God can cause the church to grow (1 Cor. 3:5–11). Only by remembering its origin which is given in Jesus Christ (1 Cor. 3:11) can the church truly grow (→ Firm, art. themelios NT 1). The thought here is not solely of numerical increase, but also of maturity and the consolidation of the community in Christ from which good works naturally grow (2 Cor. 9:6–11).

(c) Eph. 2:20 ff. does not contradict the picture of 1 Cor. 3:11, where the apostles and prophets are said to be the foundation on which the building grows (→ House, art. oikos, oikodomeō). For Jesus Christ is described as "the chief cornerstone" (cf. Pss. 118:22; Matt. 21:42; Mk. 12:10 f.; Lk. 20:7; Acts 4:11; 1 Pet. 2:7; → Rock, Stone, Cornerstone, art. gōnia). Moreover, the church was by this time uniquely dependent on the witness of the apostles and prophets for the preaching of Christ. Therefore the growth of the community in Eph. derives ultimately from Jesus Christ who at the same time holds the building together (cf. 2:20 f. with 1:5 ff., 10; 2:10; 4:15 f.). Growth does not mean that the gospel calls men into some kind of extra-historical existence. Because Christians are placed in the fellowship of the people of God, they are thereby placed in a historical process which is determined by the promise of the world-wide rule of Christ. The existence together of Jews and Gentiles as children in the presence of the Lord of the church opens up a new dimension for the church as it grows into a single structure. "The growth of the church in personal holiness in Christ is a continuous process. The present tense of auxein makes this clear. auxein is the mode of the church's being. The church exists as it grows. It is only ever holy in so far as being holy, it becomes holy, and both 'in Christ' " (H. Schlier, Der Brief an die Epheser, 1965[5], 144).

(d) The conception of building corresponds with that of the growing → body (Eph. 4:15 f.; Col. 2:19). Some scholars think that both ideas are taken from gnosticism. Eph. 4:15 f. shows the way that this growth is to take place. When truth is spoken in love, and love takes effect, the church grows into Christ, the one → head. According to Col. 1:6, all growth springs from the gospel. As men are moved by the gospel, they grow in knowledge of God (Col. 1:10 f.) and in grace (cf. 2 Pet. 3:18).

4. The NT can also speak of growth in → faith (2 Cor. 10:15; 2 Thess. 1:3; 2 Pet. 3:18 v.l.). Faith is conditioned by one's personal circumstances as well as by God's saving acts in history. It is brought about and renewed by the → Word, the living Christ himself. But it undergoes transformation in the life of the Christian. The believer always has his own particular history in relation to his Lord. He lives between the "no longer" and the "not yet" (cf. Phil. 3:12–15; R. Bultmann, Theology of the New Testament, I, 1952, 322). The decision which leads to → baptism is admittedly taken only once, but faith needs to be constantly renewed (cf. Rom. 14:1; 1 Thess. 3:10). Faith grows out of the obedience of the believer in the fellowship of the Christian community (2 Thess. 1:3; cf. Phil. 1:25 f.). It leads to a more effective → witness in the world (2 Cor. 10:15 f.). Quantitative and qualitative growth are closely connected. The final goal of growth in faith is the day of Christ (Phil. 1:6). Growing faith always works outwards, bringing → fruit and bearing witness (2 Thess. 1:3; 2 Cor. 10:15). A summons to growth in faith can even be given in the imperative (2 Pet. 3:18 v.l.).

5. In Acts growth is an important word for the missionary activity of the community (6:7; 12:24; 19:20). Acts 7:17 ("the people grew and multiplied in Egypt") provides a clear reminder of OT salvation history. The promise to Israel (Exod. 1:7) is eschatologically applied to the Christian community (Acts 12:24; cf. also Did. 16:3; 1 Clem. 33:6).

6. The derivation of the expression "He must increase, but I must decrease" is disputed. R. Bultmann traces it back to an astral picture (The Gospel of John, 1971, 174). G. Delling rejects this in favour of the ancient linguistic usage of increasing or decreasing in esteem or importance (TDNT VIII 519). The emphasis surely lies here on increase in influence and importance. The Baptist points to his Lord and withdraws his own light so that the One to whom he points may be seen.

auxanō is distinguished from the noun prokopē (Phil. 1:25; 1 Tim. 4:15) and the vb. prokoptō (Lk. 2:52; Rom. 13:12; Gal. 1:14; 2 Tim. 2:16; 3:9, 13) meaning advance, progress, in that in the NT it occurs exclusively in a positive sense. It has thus more positive theological associations. For not every "advance" is also "growth". W. Günther

πλεονάζω

πλεονάζω (pleonazō), to be or become more or great, to grow, to increase; ὑπερπλεονάζω (hyperpleonazō), to be present in great abundance.

CL pleonazō, used from Thuc. onwards, is formed from pleon (more), the comparative of polys (much, many), with the ending -azein, and means to be or become (too) much or many. The augmented form hyperpleonazō, to be present in excessive quantity, is rare. The developed basic meaning of pleonazō appears intrans. as to be or become (too) great, to exceed the correct amount, and thus fig. to be overweening or to become presumptuous. It also means to overflow (of a sea or a river), to augment, to become (too) numerous (e.g. the Jews in Rome), to be present in plentiful abundance (e.g. joys), to be rich in something, to have more than is necessary, to abound in, and, as a commercial term, to have a balance (of cash). Trans. pleonazō occurs as to make rich, to increase or multiply, to cause to grow. In ethical contexts (as in Thuc., Dem., Aristot., Stoics) pleonazō denotes in a censorious way that which violates the ideal of moderation, reason and natural wholeness.

OT The LXX has pleonazō 28 times; of these, 18 render Heb. equivalents, generally 'āḏap̄ to be surplus, and rāḇâh to be or become many: e.g. of good (Exod. 16:18, 23), people (1 Chr. 4:27; 5:23; Jer. 30:19), money etc. (2 Chr. 24:11; 31:5; Sir. 35:1), sins (Sir. 23:3).

NT In the NT pleonazō occurs 9 times (intrans. 7 times in Paul and 2 Pet. 1:8; trans. in 2 Thess. 1:3); hyperpleonazō only in 1 Tim. 1:4. It always expresses in the NT a process of growing, multiplying or increasing. It stands in contrast with perisseuō which expresses in an eschatological sense the element of the abundance which far exceeds all measurement and of the fullness which overflows all previously fixed boundaries (→ Fullness, art. perisseuō). pleonazō renders more the idea of development, the growth process of something: "that grace may abound" (Rom. 6:1); "your faith is growing" (2 Thess. 1:3); "if these things [godliness, love etc.] abound" (2 Pet. 1:8). perisseuō exceeds pleonazō in expressing superabundant quantity. This emerges in a number of passages, in which both terms stand in the same context.

1. In Rom. 5:20 Paul is formulating the relationship between → law and → grace. Through the → law (art. nomos) sin increases (pleonazō) to its full extent and exposes the hopelessness of humanity in the face of death. But grace has abounded all the more (hypereperisseusen) in the new age. The more hopelessly man entangles himself in increasing sin, the greater is God's liberating act in giving pardon. This view of the relationship between sin and grace obviously led to a misunderstanding in Judaism, which Paul goes into in Rom. 6:1 ff.

It is interesting that Paul here (6:1) now uses pleonazō with reference to grace and not, as one might have supposed, perisseuō. In this context Paul is concerned with the process of grace becoming greater. It cannot be stimulated by a conscious persistence in sin.

2. 2 Cor. 4:15 also links charis, grace, with pleonazō. As grace extends (pleonasasa) to more and more people, thanksgiving overflows (perisseusē) to the glory of God. "Grace makes its way on earth" (G. Klein).

3. In Phil. 4:17 Paul links pleonazō with various business terms (eis logon doseōs kai lēmpseōs, in settlement of giving and receiving [of a mutual account], v. 15; cf. Arndt, 479; eis logon hymōn, credited to your account, v. 17; cf. Arndt, 479). pleonazō is also to be understood from this context. With reference to the contribution of the Philippians Paul says: "It is not the gift that I value; what is valuable to me is the interest that is mounting up [pleonazonta] in your account" (JB). The use of perisseuō in v. 18 ("I have more than enough") shows again the particular thrust of pleonazō.

4. Paul prayed that the Lord might grant the Thessalonians to grow (pleonasai) and overflow (perisseusai) in → love for one another (1 Thess. 3:12). pleonazein is thus intensified by perisseuein.

5. pleonazō occurs in the sense of perisseuō in the OT quotation (Exod. 16:18) in 2 Cor. 8:15: "He who gathered much had nothing over", i.e. had no more than was necessary. W. Bauder, D. Müller

→ Fruit, → Seed

G. Delling, pleonazō etc., TDNT VI 263–74; G. Stählin, prokopē etc., TDNT VI 703–19; and "Fortschritt und Wachstum. Zur Herkunft und Wandlung neutestamentlicher Ausdrucksformen", Festgabe für J. Lortz, II, 1957, 13–25.

Guard, Keep, Watch

People only guard things which they think are valuable, whether they are people, prisoners or things. To guard something is to make oneself dependent on what one guards, because it can only be done by sacrificing time and freedom to it. tēreō and phylassō are verbs which express this watching over and guarding. Both were originally used in the former sense, but were then applied figuratively to preserving the law, commandments and traditions. Anyone who keeps such ordinances thereby allows his life and actions to be determined by them.

τηρέω

τηρέω (tēreō), preserve, keep; τήρησις (tērēsis), observance; παρατηρέω (paratēreō), watch (closely), observe; παρατήρησις (paratērēsis), observation.

CL tēreō means: (a) have in view, perceive, observe; then (act.) wait for (the right time or opportunity), lie in wait for (a person); (mid) be on the watch, be on one's guard; (b) guard, watch over, preserve (things, persons, and also ethical values, e.g. loyalty, faith, chastity); (c) pay attention to, obey, comply with (teachings, customs, legal demands). The derivative noun tērēsis (Thuc. onwards) consequently means: (a) guard, custody, detention; (b) prison; (c) (fig.) observance, obeying, fulfilling (of commands, laws). The compound paratēreō (Dem. onwards) is identical with the simple vb. in act. and mid., but the noun paratērēsis (first in Polyb.) is used only for the observance of legal demands.

OT 1. In the LXX → phylassō is much commoner than tēreō, which is found only 38 times – in addition variations in Symm., Theod., Alexandrinus add 6 more cases – of which a good two-thirds come in the translation of the Heb. canonical books, and the remainder in the Apoc. A majority of the passages are in the Wisdom Literature (Prov. has 15), then come the historical books. There is only one example in the prophetic books (Jer. 20:10), interestingly enough in the lit. sense of lying in wait for a person. Like phylassō, though not in the same proportion, tēreō mainly represents the Heb. šāmar, the nuances of which (according to Koehler-Baumgartner, 993 f.) are very much the same as those in the secular meanings of phylassō and tēreō, and also nāṣar. The predominant meaning of tēreō in the LXX is that of religious observance with either God's commands (1 Sam. 15:11; Prov. 19:16) or those of Wisdom (Prov. 3:1) as the object. There is an interesting parallelism between phylassō and tēreō in Prov. 13:3; 16:17; 19:16: he who guards his mouth, his way, keeps the commandment (in each case phylassō) preserves or keeps his life (tēreō). For Dan. 9:4, where God's covenant loyalty – tēreō with diathēkē – is made dependent on the obedience of the community → phylassō. tēreō is also used a few times of the guarding of persons or things, and in Gen. 3:15 of the woman's seed and the serpent.

2. tērēsis is found in the LXX only in apocryphal books. In Wis. 6:18, Sir. 32:23 it is used for the result of the love of wisdom or of the commandments. Otherwise it is used for the guarding of persons, or of the city. paratēreō is found only 6 times in the LXX, generally with the force of waylay, lie in wait for. paratērēsis is found only as a variant reading in Exod. 12:42.

NT 1. There are only 31 instances of phylassō in the NT as against the more than 400 in the LXX, but tēreō is found 70 times to the LXX's 38. Thus the NT prefers the word less used in the LXX. This is particularly noticeable in John (Gospel, 18 times; Letters, 7 times) and Acts (11 times). It cannot be said with certainty whether this is due to this word's being particularly suited to convey a spiritual meaning.

In the NT it means: (a) guard, keep watch (e.g. Acts 16:23; Matt. 27:36); (b) keep (e.g. Jn. 2:10; 12:7; 2 Pet. 2:4); (c) keep blameless, uninjured (e.g. 1 Thess. 5:23; 1 Cor. 7:37; 1 Tim. 5:22); (d) protect (e.g. Jn. 17:15); (e) hold fast (e.g. Rev. 16:15; Eph. 4:3); (f) hold, follow, e.g. the law (Jas. 2:10), the → sabbath (Jn. 9:16), traditions (Mk. 7:9), the commands of Jesus (Jn. 14:15, 21; 15:10, etc.).

2. Of the 70 occurrences in the NT barely a half are found with the last-mentioned meaning, which is also approximately the case with phylassō. It is noteworthy, however, that in contrast to phylassō, with few exceptions (e.g. Mk. 7:9; Jn. 9:16; Jas. 2:10), tēreō does not have the force of keeping Jewish or Judaizing (Acts 15:5) tradition rejected by the Christians (cf. the polemical use of paratēreō in Gal. 4:10 applied to Jewish customs), but that of keeping a new Christian tradition.

This is set out clearly in Christ's final command (Matt. 28:20), where the exalted Christ commands the → church to keep the new righteousness which he had taught, e.g. in the Sermon on the Mount. It is possible that in Matt. 19:17, in his conversation with the rich young man and in contrast to his legalistic righteousness (cf. phylassō), and in Matt. 23:3, where he contrasts the Pharisees' teaching and practice, Jesus in demanding the keeping of the commandments meant the better righteousness (Matt. 5:20) and hence the true understanding of the Mosaic Law. If that is so, Matthew consciously uses tēreō in contrast to its apparent synonym phylassō. The same usage is found in 1 Cor. 7:19, where the keeping (tērēsis) of the commandments of God is to be understood in terms of Christian ethics. In the Pastorals (1 Tim. 6:14; 2 Tim. 4:7), however, tēreō is used like → phylassō of the keeping of the tradition.

In Rev., linked with logos (word), entolē (command), and pistis (faith), tēreō has the force of keeping fast a confession, both in facing false doctrine and in meeting a martyr's death (2:26; 3:3, 8, 10; 12:17; 14:12). All the Johannine passages, whether they are concerned with the keeping of the word or commandments by the church or the individual (e.g. Jn. 8:51; 15:10; 1 Jn. 2:3; 3:22), or with God's or Christ's keeping of the church (Jn. 17:11, 15; 1 Jn. 5:18), have to do with remaining in the church or in Christ. There is a special shade of meaning in Jn. 14:15, 21, 23 f. Here in the setting of Christ's farewell discourse love to him, the revealer, is described as personal and immediate relationship to him. Bultmann points out that "keeping his commandments" or his "word" has here an anti-mystical point (The Gospel of John, 1971, 613 f.).

The reference of paratērēsis (observation) in Lk. 17:20 cannot be established with certainty. Probably the word is used of the observation of apocalyptic signs. There is, however, just the possibility that the keeping of the law is intended.

paratēreō, apart from Gal. 4:10 (see above), is found only with the meaning of lie in wait for (Mk. 3:2 par. Lk. 6:7; 14:1; 20:20; Acts 9:24 – Eng. versions "watch"). H.-G. Schütz

φυλάσσω

φυλάσσω (phylassō), guard, preserve, keep; φυλακή (phylakē), watch, guard, prison; φρουρέω (phroureō), guard, keep in custody, preserve.

CL 1. The etymology of phylassō has not been established. In the act. it means, intrans.: (a) be sleepless, watch, keep guard, e.g. nykta phylassō (Homer), to watch all night; (b) serve as garrison (for or in a city). This leads to the trans. use: guard, provide with a guard, hold in prison; (c) guard, preserve – originally of things, property, persons and then fig. of love, loyalty, respect; (d) watch over, store (in safe keeping); (f) hold in honour (e.g. friendship), obey (an order, oath, law), attend to. In the mid. it has the same force as act. (a), (b), and also means guard for oneself, store, be careful, be on one's guard. In the LXX it has also the force of act. (f).

2. The vb. phroureō, compounded of pro and hora-, to pay attention to something (→ See, art. horaō), when used trans. has the same meaning as phylassō.

OT In the LXX phroureō is found only 4 times, all in apocryphal books, and thus it does not represent any original Heb. word in the text. phylassō, on the other hand, is found well over 400 times, and in a number of the Pseudepigrapha, viz. Eth. Enoch, Aristeas, Test. XII, Sib., and in Philo. No distinction in meaning is made between act. and mid. 378 times it translates šāmar, guard, watch, keep; 10 times nāṣar, follow, obey; and in isolated cases 9 other Heb. verbs. While phylassō is found in almost all the books of the LXX, it is found most commonly in the Pent., apart from Gen., and especially in Deut., in 1–2 Ki. (LXX 3 Ki., 4 Ki.), 1–2 Chr., Pss., Prov., Wis., Sir., Ezek. Its commonest use is for the obedience to and keeping of the law, cultic regulations, the word of God in general or of the covenant. The subject of the vb. can be the whole people of Israel, groups within it, or individuals (Exod. 12:24; Lev. 18:4; Deut. 5:1; Ps. 78[77]:10; Prov. 19:16; Ezek. 11:20). It is easy to trace the development of the concept in the OT from the original thought of fulfilling the covenant obligations (positive or negative) to the inter-testamental idea of keeping the law as the way to salvation (cf. Dan. 9:4 and various passages in 1 and 4 Macc., e.g. 1 Macc. 2:53; 8:26, 28; 4 Macc. 5:29; 6:18; 15:10; 18:7). Hence at the end of this development of meaning the covenant loyalty of God is regarded as dependent on the keeping of the law by the community. ([Tr.] This is undoubtedly the general impression created, but does not do justice to all the evidence. Much in the Jewish prayer-book, or a Midrashic saying like, "It was not for their works that the Israelites were delivered from Egypt, or for their father's works, and not by their works that the Red Sea was cloven in sunder, but to make God a name" [C. G. Montefiore and H. Loewe, eds., A Rabbinic Anthology, 1938, 92] shows that apparently positive remarks about Israel's keeping of the law have to be interpreted in a wider framework.) The use of šāmar in the Qumran literature, above all in the Manual of Discipline and the Damascus Document, shows this tendency predominantly (1 QS 5:2, 9; 8:3; CD 2:18, 21; 3:2 f.; 6:14, 18; 10:14, 16; 16:7; 19:1 f., 9. 28; 20:17, 22; on legalism at Qumran see M. Black, The Scrolls and Christian Origins, 1961, 118–24, 169 ff.). The other meanings of phylassō enumerated under CL are also found in the LXX but much more rarely. To be stressed is the usage found especially in the Pss., of God's protecting actions for his people or the pious (cf. Ps. 12:7[8]; 17:8; 145:20).

NT 1. In the NT phylassō means: (a) keep watch (Lk. 2:8); (b) guard (e.g. Acts 12:4; 23:35); (c) protect, guard (of God or Christ: Jn. 17:12; 2 Thess. 3:3; 2 Tim. 1:12; 2 Pet. 2:5; Jude 24; or of men: Jn. 12:25); in the mid. or with a reflex. pron., beware of, abstain from (Lk. 12:15; Acts 21:25; 2 Tim. 4:15; 2 Pet. 3:17; 1 Jn. 5:21); (d) observe, hold, e.g. the law (Gal. 6:13), the commandments (Mk. 10:20 par. Matt. 19:20, Lk. 18:21), the words of Jesus (Jn. 12:47), the decisions of the apostles (Acts 16:4).

2. Obey, hold: in each of the first two Gospels the word is used once only: Matt. 19:20; Mk. 10:20. In each case it has the contemporary religious sense of keeping the law (see above OT). Although both here and in Lk. 18:21 there is no direct criticism of Jewish observance of the law, the radical demand made by Jesus on the rich young ruler is indirectly a complete rejection of it.

Paul uses it only in the Jewish sense, but the context can give it a particular nuance. In Rom. 2:26 it is anti-legal; in Gal. 6:13 anti-Judaistic.

The same connotation of keeping the law is found in Acts 7:53, where Stephen in his defence denies that the Jews had ever kept the law, i.e. their conception of how the law should be kept was rejected from the standpoint of primitive Christianity. Acts 21:24 approves of the Jewish observance, because the Jewish Christian also did so. Luke shows Paul in agreement with the Jewish Christian standpoint.

The Jewish legacy to primitive Christianity is found in a much more important form when phylassō is used with tradition, the handing on of the Christian message and teaching. In Acts 16:4 Paul and Timothy delivered to the churches of Asia Minor the dogmata, decisions (→ Command), of the original apostles, who represented the one, true church. There is a similar concept in the Pastorals (1 Tim. 5:21; 6:20; 2 Tim. 1:14). The future of the church depends on the disciples of the apostles guarding, working out, making real the inheritance from the apostles. Note 2 Tim. 1:12 where the Lord himself guards it. While Protestants are apt to see here elements leading to Catholicism, it is highly probable that in the position portrayed by Luke and the Pastorals this step of stressing tradition was necessary and unavoidable. phylassō is found frequently in Luke (2:8; 11:21; 12:15) and Acts (12:4; 23:35) in its lit. meaning. It also has a lit. sense in 2 Tim. 4:15; Jn. 12:25; 2 Pet. 2:5.

In Jn. 12:47 the expression "[not to] keep my words" means quite simply not to believe in me, Jesus, as the Revealer sent by God. Belief and keeping Jesus' words are defined in terms of each other.)

3. Protect, guard: 2 Thess. 3:3 deals with preserving the church's faith: God is the One who guards the church from the evil one (NEB). The basic thought of the passage is eschatological; the concrete background is the threat of a rising false doctrine within the church. The position is similar in Jude 24 and Phil. 4:7 (where phroureō, guard [cf. 2 Cor. 11:32], is used as also in 1 Pet. 1:5). The church is commended to the protection of God in its fight against false doctrine. In Jn. 15:21 the church is exhorted to be itself on guard against idols. Jn. 17:11 f. is concerned with the maintenance of the unity of the church and its exclusive relationship to Christ. Here phylassō and tēreō are used together as synonyms; God, or Christ, is the subject. phroureō is used in Gal. 3:23 in a special sense for the role of the law in the history of salvation: "Now before faith came, we were confined [ephrouroumetha] under the law, kept under restraint until faith should be revealed" (RSV).

H.-G. Schütz

4. The noun phylakē means: (a) guard or watch (of the shepherds over their flocks in Lk. 2:8); (b) the place of guarding or prison; Matt. 5:25 par. Lk. 12:58 as a picture of the place of judgment; Matt. 14:3, 10 par. Mk. 6:17, 27, Lk. 3:20 of John the Baptist; Matt. 18:30 again as a picture of judgment in the parable of the unforgiving servant; Lk. 21:12 in the context of warnings about what will happen to Christ's disciples; Lk. 22:33 of Peter's professed willingness to go to prison; Lk. 23:19, 25 of Barabbas; Acts 5:19, 22, 25 of the imprisonment of Peter; Acts 8:3; 22:4; 26:10 of Saul's (Paul's) erstwhile persecution of believers; Acts 12:4 f., 10 of Peter's escape from prison; Acts 16:23, 24, 27, 37, 40 in the accounts of Paul and Silas at Philippi; 2 Cor. 6:5; 11:23 in Paul's account of how Christ has enabled him to triumph over weakness and calamity; Heb. 11:36 in the list of trials that have been overcome by faith; 1 Pet. 3:19 of "the spirits in prison" identified by B. Reicke as the underworld or place of punishment in → hell (cf. The Disobedient Spirits and Christian Baptism, 1946, 116 f.), → also Death, art. thanatos NT 2 (b); Rev. 2:10 of the fate of some of the believers at Smyrna who are exhorted to remain faithful unto death so that they may receive the crown of life; Rev. 18:2 of the fallen city of → Babylon which has become the "haunt" (Arndt, 875; RSV) of every unclean spirit and bird; Rev. 20:7 of the place in which → Satan is cast for a period of a thousand years prior to the final tribulation and his ultimate subjection (→ Chiliasm in the Glossary of Technical Terms); (c) guard, sentinel (Acts 12:10); (d) watch of the night reflecting the Roman practice of dividing the time between 6 p.m. and 6 a.m. into four periods (Matt. 14:25; Mk. 6:48; cf. Josephus, Ant. 18, 356), though Matt. 24:43 and Lk. 12:38 may reflect the Heb. and Gk. practice of having only three watches (Arndt, 875; cf. Josephus, War, 5, 510). Mk. 13:35 uses the common designations opse (late, in the evening), mesonyktion (at midnight), alektorophōnia (at cock-crow), prōi (early, early in the morning), all in the context of the exhortation to watch, "for you do not know when the master of the house will come."

Related words which occur in the NT are: phylakizō, imprison (Acts 22:19); phylaktērion, lit. a safeguard, means of protection, especially an amulet or phylactery (Matt. 23:5, a small box containing scripture texts bound on the forehead and arm during prayer, cf. Exod. 13:9, 16; Deut. 6:8; 11:18; they were regarded as a mark of devotion to the law and also as a protection against demonic influence [Arndt, 876; but see also D. Hill, The Gospel of Matthew, 1972, 310; and J. Bowman, Stud. Ev., I, 1959, 523 ff., who thinks that prayer-bands were not so-called in the time of Jesus and that the reference is a warning against ostentatious wearing of amulets or charms]; they are mentioned in the context of warnings against Pharisaic concern for merely external righteousness); phylax, guard, sentinel (Matt. 27:65D; Acts 5:23; 12:6, 19). C. Brown

γρηγορέω

γρηγορέω (grēgoreō), watch, be on the alert, be watchful.

OT grēgoreō is a late pres. found in Hel. Gk. and is formed from the perf. egrēgora of egeirō (rouse, stir). In the LXX it stands for 'āmaḏ (stand) in Neh. 7:3, and for šāqaḏ (watch) in Jer. 5:6; 38(31):28; Lam. 1:14; Dan. 9:14 (Theod.). It has no Heb. equivalent in Bar. 2:9; 1 Macc. 12:27; Test. Ben. 10:1; cf. Josephus, Ant. 11, 47.

NT Followers of Christ are exhorted to be watchful and alert either to dangers or for opportunities in Matt. 24:42; 25:13; 26:41; Mk. 13:35, 37; 14:38; Acts 20:31; 1 Cor. 16:13; Col. 4:2; 1 Thess. 5:6, 10; 1 Pet. 5:8; Rev. 3:2 f.; 16:15. On nēphō (be sober) → Drunken, Sober. C. Brown

ἀγρυπνέω

ἀγρυπνέω (agrypneō), keep oneself awake, be awake, keep watch, guard, care; ἀγρυπνία (agrypnia), wakefulness.

CL & OT agrypneō is found from Theognis onwards, in papyri, Philo and the LXX where it occurs 11 times (chiefly for šaqaḏ, watch), e.g. Job 21:32; Pss. 101(102):7; 126(127):1. The noun agrypnia occurs in the LXX only in the Apoc. (10 times), e.g. Sir. 34(31):1 f., 20.

NT Jesus charged his disciples to be on the alert (Mk. 13:33; Lk. 21:36). A similar charge is repeated in Eph. 6:18 at the climax of the discourse on the Christian's armour. In Heb. 13:17 obedience to leaders is urged "for they are keeping watch over your souls, as men who will have to give account." The noun occurs only in the plur. in 2 Cor. 6:5 and 11:27 of Paul's "watching" or "sleepless nights" endured for the sake of the church. C. Brown
→ Command, → Law, → Teach

(a). Arndt, 13 f., 166, 822 f., 875 f.; G. Bertram, phylassō etc., TDNT IX 236–44; H. Riesenfeld, tēreō etc., TDNT VIII 140–51.
(b). G. Eichholz, "Bewahren und Bewähren des Evangeliums", in H. Gollwitzer and T. Traub, eds., Hören und Handeln. Festschrift für Ernst Wolf zu seinem 60. Geburtstag, 1962.

Guilt, Cause, Convict, Blame

Whereas → sin is a general word for doing wrong in the sight of God, guilt is a legal and judicial term which implies criminal responsibility in the eyes of a court of law, whether that court is human or divine. This is illustrated by the adj. enochos, a legal term used to indicate that a person accused before a court is guilty. aitia denotes the ground of the charge. On the other hand, the meaning of the group of words connected with elenchō extends well beyond the legal sphere. In the OT and the NT the concept of guilt is personalized and radicalized through its association with Yahweh or the Father of Jesus Christ. → Righteousness; → Forgiveness; → Reconciliation.

αἰτία

αἰτία (aitia), ground, cause, reason, charge; αἴτιος (aitios), responsible, guilty; αἰτίωμα (aitiōma), charge; ἀναπολόγητος (anapologētos), inexcusable; ἀναίτιος (anaitios), innocent; ἄμεμπτος (amemptos), blameless; ἀνέγκλητος (anenklētos), blameless, irreproachable.

CL aitia means the ground or motive of a thought or action; in a causal sense the origin, occasion, of a thing, event or phenomenon. In Gk. philosophy the word occurs for the first time in accounts of the thought of Anaximander (middle of the 6th century B.C.). From the 5th century onwards (e.g. Aristotle) it becomes the established term for the origin, cause, of natural phenomena (cf. Aristot., Phys. 194 b 16; Met. 983 a 26; F. Copleston, A History of Philosophy, II, 1946, 311–9).

Nevertheless, aitia is only seldom used in a good or neutral sense (cf. Liddell-Scott, 44). Usually the word carries the sense of charge, accusation, blame (as in Aesch., Plato), indicating the responsibility and guilt which attaches to an act. Likewise aitiōma, a word not found before Acts, but occurring in classical Gk. from Aesch. in the form aitiama, means a charge against a wrongdoer. aitios means culpable, responsible. The compound adj. anapologētos is used in the same context to indicate the hopelessness of a case for the defence at law; it is found in the 2nd century B.C. (e.g. Polyb.), and means without excuse.

OT 1. The LXX uses aitia consistently. The word occurs 21 times in addition to 3 translations in secondary MSS. Of these 18 are in the Apocrypha without Heb. equivalent (except for Wis. 17:13); 1–4 Macc. account for 13 instances. Apart from 4 Macc. 1:16, where the philosophical concept of causation dominates, every example of aitia in the LXX has to do with some event which belongs to the darker side of life: fighting (2 Macc. 4:42), idolatry (Wis. 14:27), death (Wis. 18:18; 1 Macc. 9:10), sensual pleasure (Susanna 14, Theod.). As in classical Gk., the term is hardly ever used in a good sense, but rather as a technical term in irregular situations or in trials.

2. The other OT examples confirm this. In Gen. 4:13 the Yahwist uses the term 'āwōn, iniquity, in the cry of Cain: "My punishment [LXX aitia] is too great." The culpable act and the punishment as its inevitable consequence are for him causally related (cf. G. von Rad, Old Testament Theology, I, 1962, 266). Job 18:14 contains an aphorism on the inescapable destiny of the wicked to be smitten by a fatal disease. Here the LXX translation differs from the Heb. text, using aitia in its description of death as a kind of majestic stroke of fate. Finally, Prov. 28:17 concludes that "for reason of [Heb. 'āšûq] blood-guilt", i.e. murder, a person must go to the grave, wandering in insecurity.

3. aitios is found only at 1 Sam. 22:22 (apart from 6 examples in the Apocrypha, where it means having become guilty). Here David declares that he "has occasioned the death" of certain priests. anapologētos and aitiōma do not occur in the LXX.

NT In the NT this group of words is not frequent: aitios and aitiōma occur only once each (in Heb. and Acts), aitia 20 times (only in the Gospels, Acts and Heb.).

1. Some texts use aitia in a purely causal sense (for this reason, therefore), stating the reason why something happens. Thus the woman with an issue of blood gave Jesus the reason why she had touched him (Lk. 8:47). Peter inquired the reason for the visit (Acts 10:21). Timothy's mother and grandmother are a ground for a special reminder (2 Tim. 1:6). Similar uses are found in 2 Tim. 1:12; Tit. 1:4; Heb. 2:11. The noun aitios is used in Heb. 5:9 in a positive sense of Christ as the "source" (RSV) of eternal salvation for all who obey him.

2. In a second group of passages aitia is found in connection with legal charges and accusations brought against someone. At Matt. 19:3 the Pharisees asked whether → divorce is lawful "for every cause" as though it were the inevitable consequence of such causes, whereas Jesus' answer makes possible a new beginning for the disordered marriage. In v. 10, however, aitia means a case. Possibly there is an allusion here to a concurrent discussion on the connection between marriage and discipleship which presented a choice between a wife and the Lord. Acts 22:24; 23:28; 25:18, 27 refer to the trials of Paul. In each case the passage is concerned to bring to light the ground of the charges brought against Paul, or to show that they cannot be established. Acts 26:7 uses for such unprovable allegations the noun aitiōma, charge (here only in the NT). aition is used in a similar sense in the story of the disturbance led by Demetrius (Acts 19:40): there is danger that a charge will be laid because of this disorder for which no satisfactory explanation or reason can be given.

3. A third group has to do with the occasion for a death sentence.

(a) The inscription on the cross specified the charge on which Jesus was condemned to death, the "cause" of death (Matt. 27:37; Mk. 15:26). This indicated to the onlooker that the execution was inevitable because of Jesus' claim to kingship. The Gospels, however, testify to a deeper necessity than the immediate human factors, for it sprang from the purpose of God (→ Necessity, art. dei). In Acts 13:28 this "cause" of death is mentioned again in a speech of Paul, and described as unjustified in terms of human justice.

(b) In the report of the trial before Pilate into which are interwoven many legal ideas Pilate pronounces his repeated conclusion that he can find no guilt in Jesus deserving death (in Jn. 18:38; 19:4, 6, aitia; in Lk. 23:4, 14, 22, aition). Hence in the Gospel accounts the demand of the crowd for the death of the innocent one is all the more culpable (→ Cross, art. stauros, NT 1). In a similar sense, cf. the use of → enochos, guilty. (On the trial of Jesus see E. Bammel, ed., The Trial of Jesus, 1970; J. Blinzler, The Trial of Jesus, 1959; D. R. Catchpole, The Trial of Jesus, 1971.)

(c) Acts 28:18 mentions the charge made against Paul of committing a capital crime. Since, however, there was insufficient ground (aitia) for the accusation, the Romans wished to save him from unjust condemnation to death.

4. The words of this group are used in the OT and NT to indicate the responsibility of a man for his action, together with the resultant consequences. The same applies to anapologētos which occurs twice in Paul's letter to the Romans and means the state of being without excuse in a legal sense. In the light of eschatology, the ungodly have no possibility of being excused. They stand under God's destroying wrath (→ Anger; Rom. 1:20). No man is able, under any circumstances, to make an excuse to God (Rom. 2:1). Everyone, whether Jew or Gentile, is deservingly subject to death, and therefore, as the argument of Rom. 2 continues, man is totally dependent on God's free → grace and goodness in Jesus Christ. He took our sentence of death on himself and by this means has truly "excused" us. The theological emphasis given to the theme that Christ "must" suffer in this way is a logical counterpart to the ideas associated with this group of words. F. Thiele

5. The adj. anaitios, innocent, occurs in Acts 16:37 and Matt. 12:5, 7. amemptos means blameless, of the Mosaic covenant (Heb. 8:7) and the heart (1 Thess. 3:13), otherwise only of persons (Phil. 3:6 [cf. Gen. 17:1]; 2:15 [cf. Job 1:1]; Lk. 1:7). The adv. amemptōs occurs at 1 Thess. 2:10; 3:13 v.l.; 5:23. Both adj. and adv. are connected with memphomai, find fault with, blame (Mk. 7:2 v.l.; Rom. 9:19; Heb. 8:8; cf. Arndt, 44, 503). anenklētos means blameless, irreproachable, of Christians who will be presented blameless by Christ on the day of the Lord (1 Cor. 1:8; cf. Col. 1:22). A blameless life is also required of Christian leaders in the present (1 Tim. 3:10; Tit. 1:6 f.). C. Brown

ἐλέγχω

ἐλέγχω (elenchō), bring to light, expose, set forth, convict, convince, punish, discipline; ἔλεγχος (elenchos), proof, evidence, conviction, reproof, correction; ἐλεγμός (elegmos), conviction, reproof, punishment; ἔλεγξις (elenxis), conviction, rebuke, reproof.

CL 1. elenchō is found from Homer onwards (e.g. Il. 9, 552; Od. 21, 424), probably originally (like the noun elenchos, reproach) in the sense of blame, insult; then in the sense of test, examine, enquire into a matter (cf. TDNT II, 473 n. 2). In Plato (Soph. 242b; Grg. 470c; Phdr. 273b, etc.) and Aristotle (Soph.El. 170[a] 24; Eth.Nic. 1146[a] 23), elenchō is used of the logical exposition of the facts of a matter for the purpose of refuting the (usually sophistical) argument of an opponent. Thus the word developed its principal meaning of convince, refute (e.g. Democ., Frag. 60, 222; Zeno, Frag. 41). In Stoicism the concept was transferred from the intellectual argument to the application of philosophical ethics. Epictetus is concerned with correcting the practical principles of living (Dissertationes 1, 26, 17; 2, 1, 32; 2, 14, 20; 2, 26, 4; 3, 9, 13; 3, 23, 33 and often). Philo (Spec. Leg. 3, 54; 4, 6, 40 and often) and Josephus (War 7, 330, 447 and often) spoke of the correction which men receive from their own consciences, the Logos, the truth, or from God. The idea of correction finally appears again in Hellenistic and Jewish literature in contexts which produce the meaning, to accuse, convict (Appian, Bella Civilia 5, 28; Diod. Sic. 13, 90, 4); and elenchō acquired a sense which brought it near to paideuō, or paideia, the basic concept of Gk. education and learning (→ Teach, art. paideuō).

2. The noun elenchos, current from Pindar onwards, has a similar variety of meanings. It means: (a) proof (Demosthenes 4, 15; Plato, Grg. 471e; especially Aristot., Soph.El. 1, 165[a] 2); (b) conviction BGU 1138, 13; Epigrammata Graeca ex lapidibus conlecta, 1878, 814; (c) correction, reproof, censure (Philo, Rev. Div. Her. 76). The nouns elegmos and elenxis, common in the LXX and the NT, are found chiefly in the Hellenistic period, and consequently have as a rule the meaning of conviction or correction.

OT In the LXX elenchō is used in the great majority of cases to render the hiph. of yāḵaḥ: to bring to account, to correct. elenchos generally represents the corresponding noun tôḵaḥaṯ, rebuke, correction. It is worthy of note that the words of this group are found in this sense mainly in the later books of the OT (Job, Pss., Prov.), and in the Apocrypha (Wis., Sir.). elegmos is used in Isa. 37:3 and 50:2 with the meaning of rebuke, reproach, disgrace. At Num. 5:18 f., 23 f., 27 the LXX translates the "water of bitterness" used in the ordeal by the difficult phrase hydōr tou elegmou, water of conviction. elenxis occurs only at Job 21:4; 23:2, where it renders the Heb. śîaḥ, concern, complaint.

1. The historical books occasionally use elenchō in secular contexts: because of a dispute about a well, Abraham complained to Abimelech, king of Gerar (Gen. 21:25); in the quarrel between Jacob and Laban, the kinsmen were to judge (Gen.

31:37) etc. In these cases elenchō refers to the clarification of a practical point at dispute, not an intellectual question (see above, CL 1).

2. In prophetic proclamation the vb. has a legal character, as is shown from its use alongside the terms righteousness and judgment. The task of the priests to pronounce judgment and give advice is clearly presupposed (Hos. 4:4; Ezek. 3:26; cf. Amos 5:10; Isa. 29:21; Mal. 2:7). In a negative sense, the prophetic message of judgment spoke of reproof (Jer. 2:19) and the day of punishment (Hos. 5:9) which Yahweh will bring upon his rebellious people. Positively, it proclaimed salvation in terms of justice for the poor (Isa. 11:3 f.) and the helpful healing instruction which Yahweh will give to the nations (Isa. 2:4; Mic. 4:3).

3. This group of words comes into its own in the Wisdom Literature, chiefly in the sense of correction and punishment. On the one hand, the Psalmist prays for preservation from divine punishment (Ps. 6:1); on the other the correction which comes from Yahweh, or from just men, is regarded as a help and benefit (Ps. 141:5; Job 5:17). This thought is developed particularly in proverbial wisdom. While the ungodly neither accepts nor deserves correction, the wise man is grateful for it, for he recognizes in it the love of Yahweh (Prov. 9:7 f.; 3:11 f.; 29:15). As may be seen from the repeated parallel use of elenchō and paideuō (in Prov. 3:12, Aquila and Symmachus replace elenchei with paideuei; 15:12; Sir. 18:13), or elenchos and paideia (Prov. 6:23), the use of the words of this group in the Wisdom Literature comes close to the Stoic ideal of education and character training (cf. on this G. von Rad, Old Testament Theology, I, 1962, 418–59). The godly man is trained by correction and discipline to follow the right path in life (Prov. 6:23; 5:12 f.; 19:25; Sir. 18:13).

4. On grounds of the exhortation in Lev. 19:17, "You shall reason with your neighbour", correction played an important part in Judaism both as a commandment to love one's neighbour, and as a task which earns merit (Sifra Lev. 19:17; Sanh. 21b; Pes. K. 25, 163 b; cf. SB I 787 ff.). It has a special importance in the Qumran texts. He who observes his brother transgressing the law, must censure him, at first before witnesses (CD 7:2). If this correction achieves nothing, the case must be brought before the whole community which then proceeds to punish the sinner (1QS 3:6).

NT The words of this group are found in the NT in the gospels (especially Jn.), and also in the later epistles (especially the Pastorals). The majority of examples occur in the later writings. Mk. does not use these words and the early example in Paul is at 1 Cor. 14:24.

1. In the Gospel of John, elenchō means, as in the prophetic warnings of judgment, to reveal and convict of sin. It is the negative, reverse side of God's saving work of revelation (Jn. 3:20; 16:8; cf. also Eph. 5:13; Jude 15). The thing revealed is expressed by means of peri with the gen. (Jn. 8:46, sin; 16:8 ff., sin, righteousness and judgment; cf. Lk. 3:19, an illegitimate marriage; Jude 15, deeds of ungodliness).

2. elenchō is found particularly frequently in hortatory passages (e.g. Eph. 5:13). The Pastoral Epistles assign to the leader of the community the task of rebuking church members (1 Tim. 5:20; 2 Tim. 4:2; Tit. 2:15) and of convicting opponents of their error (Tit. 1:9, 13). The corresponding activity is called elegmos in 2 Tim.

3:16, and elenxis in 2 Pet. 2:16. In this connection mention should also be made of the instructions about church order in Matt. 18:15 ff., where it is said that erring church members should first be told privately of their fault, then in the presence of several witnesses and, if this be fruitless, the matter should be laid before the whole church (cf. the corresponding procedure at Qumran, see above OT, 4).

3. It may be seen from the citation of Prov. 3:11 f. at Heb. 12:5 and Rev. 3:19, that the Hellenistic concept of education (see above CL, 1; OT, 3) has also found its way into the NT. In both cases elenchō and paideuō are used in parallel.

4. The interpretation of elenchos in Heb. 11:1 presents difficulties. Its meaning here can be deduced only from its context in the definition of faith given in this chapter. The sentence falls into two parts. The second half is a parallelism, to be compared with the first part: elenchos strengthens hypostasis, and pragmata ou blepomena, things not seen, explains elpizomena, things hoped for. The concepts are unmistakably Hellenistic in character. The purpose of the statement is not so much to encourage subjective assurance of faith, as if faith could give the status of reality to what lies in the future. It is rather to secure a "firm link with objectivity" (O. Michel, Der Brief an die Hebräer, KEK 13, 1966[12], 373). Accordingly, elenchos should be interpreted neither subjectively, as if it denoted absence of doubt, nor in a hortatory sense, as if it meant correction, nor yet in an intellectual sense, meaning evidence. Rather it should be understood in its context in the theology of Heb. in a strictly theological sense, as referring to conviction, about the power of the future world promised by God which is here described in the language of secular Gk. as "things not seen" (on the whole subject see O. Michel, op. cit., 372 ff.; → Faith, art. pistis NT 4; → Form, art. hypostasis NT 2). Heb. 11:1 would then mean: "But faith is the pledge of things hoped for, the conviction of things we cannot see."

H.-G. Link

ἔνοχος

ἔνοχος (enochos), guilty, subject to, liable to, or deserving a thing or penalty; ἐνέχω (enechō), hold fast, be subject to.

CL Gk. literature has the adj. enochos, derived from enechō (Pindar), meaning to hold fast; pass., to be held fast, be subject to (Plato, Xenophon, Isocrates). It is frequently used as a technical legal term: a person is made liable, or subject to a certain penalty under the law. The forum (lawcourt, laws, men or gods) before which he is guilty or liable is usually referred to in the dative (e.g. Xen., Memorabilia 1, 2, 64). Frequently enochos is also used with the gen. of the crime (Plato, Laws 2, 914e) or of the punishment.

OT The LXX has enochos 21 times in the same sense as secular Gk. The term is used in the LXX chiefly to refer to a person who is condemned to → death because of an action incurring blood-guilt. enochos serves to translate Heb. formulae expressing the death penalty (e.g. Gen. 26:11; Exod. 22:2; Lev. 20:9–27, in cases of sodomy, incest, homosexuality, soothsaying, etc. "their blood be upon them"; Num. 35:27; Deut. 19:10; Jos. 2:19, the blood-oath taken by the spies before Rahab). In Isa. 54:17 (LXX) enochos is used of those who incur guilt by engaging in a legal dispute with Israel.

NT The 10 NT examples of enochos follow the same pattern.

1. Matt. 5:21 f. Here, in a threefold progression, the respective courts before which a lawbreaker is arraigned are referred to in the dative: krisis, local court; synedrion, supreme national court; gehenna, → hell (the place of punishment is named at once in the acc. instead of the supreme judge). The lesser or greater degree of guilt is reflected in the nature of the court and the severity of the punishment involved (cf. A. Schlatter, Der Evangelist Matthäus, 1963⁶, 165–71; and also W. D. Davies, The Setting of the Sermon on the Mount, 1964, 236 ff.; D. Hill, The Gospel of Matthew, 1972, 120 ff.; → Curse, art. rhaka; → Wisdom, Folly, art. mōria).

2. Jas. 2:10 uses enochos of the lawbreaker. Every single sin, however insignificant it may appear to be, makes the doer "totally guilty", and therefore liable to → judgment.

3. It is in accordance with OT usages when, in the Matthean and Marcan accounts of the trial of Jesus, the death sentence is pronounced using the term enochos. The high priest regards the evidence of blasphemy (→ Revile) as conclusive in Jesus' case, and declares him "guilty of death" (enochos thanatou estin, Matt. 26:66; cf. Mk. 14:64). The two other occurrences of enochos likewise have a legal character.

(a) Heb. 2:15 explains the significance of the death of Jesus, which frees those who were "condemned" to be slaves (i.e. of the devil and of death).

(b) 1 Cor. 11:27 concludes that he who takes the bread and wine unworthily becomes "guilty" of the body and blood of the Lord present in them. The Lord gave himself up to death for the sake of the brethren; the opposite action, loveless behaviour towards one's neighbour (cf. Matt. 5:21 f.), results in guilt. Here too the term enochos is used of a matter of life and death.

4. Similarly Mk. 3:29 uses enochos with a gen. of the penalty; he who blasphemes against the → Holy Spirit will be guilty of an "eternal sin" (→ Revile, art. blasphēmeō).

F. Thiele

ἄμεμπτος

ἄμεμπτος (amemptos), blameless; ἀμέμπτως (amemptōs), blamelessly; μέμφομαι (memphomai), find fault; μεμψίμοιρος (mempsimoiros), fault-finding; μέμψις (mempsis), reason for complaint.

CL The word amemptos is used most frequently in secular Gk. in the sense of blameless, without reproach. It may be used of persons (Euripides, Demosthenes) and things (Xenophon, Plutarch), in the latter case suggesting perfection. On occasion amemptos was used with the connotation "content", in the sense that one is not characterized by blaming (Xenophon, Cyril). The word occurs in Wis. 10:5, 15; 18:21 in the sense of moral purity.

The vb. memphomai means to blame, to find fault with. With the dat. and acc. of the person it may connote the idea of regarding someone as blameworthy (Herodotus).

The adj. mempsimoiros is used in secular Gk. to characterize one who was apt to find fault (Isocrates, Lucian), while mempsis indicates the ground of, or reason for, complaint or blame (Aeschylus). It is used in Wis. 13:6 of those who failed to see God behind his created works. "For these men there is but small blame."

OT In the LXX amemptos occurs as the translation of several Heb. words meaning clean, pure (bar, zāḵâh, zāḵaḵ, ḥapō), perfect, complete (tām, tāmîm, ṭāhēr, nāqî), to be righteous (ṣāḏaq), and possibly straight, upright (yāšār). The adj. amemptos occurs in parallelism with katharos in Job 11:4 to describe the blamelessness of Job's character. In this instance it stands for the Heb. bar (pure). The vb. zāḵâh is translated by amemptos in Job 15:14 in the LXX. In this verse amemptos occurs in parallelism with dikaios (righteous). In Job 33:9 the Heb. ḥapō is translated by amemptos and qualified by the phrase "I have not transgressed." In Job 2:3 it is difficult to ascertain whether amemptos stands for yāšār or tām. In Job 1:8 the Heb. tām is translated by amemptos in a verse describing Job's blamelessness, and in Job 22:3 it stands for the Heb. ṣāḏaq (be righteous). In most instances the word amemptos connotes moral purity. It was applied also, however, to the heavenly bodies (Job 15:15; 25:5) and Job's doctrine (Job 11:4). The adv. amemptōs occurs in Est. 3:13 in the sense of honourable or well intentioned, with regard to Artaxerxes' efforts to unify his empire.

In Job 33:10 mempsis occurs as the translation of the Heb. tᵉnû'âh (opposition, or occasion for opposition). It is used in parallelism with the phrase "he counts me as his enemy." The sense is that of reason for complaint. In Job 39:7 the word mempsis occurs as the translation of tᵉšû'âh (shout). Since it describes the shouts of a driver to the wild donkey, it may connote the idea of scolding, hence censure. In Job 15:15(A); 33:23; and Wis. 13:6 the word connotes the concept of fault or blame.

NT The word amemptos occurs in the NT in the sense of moral purity in Lk. 1:6, where it is used in the sense of blamelessness with regard to the commandments of the Lord. In Phil. 3:6 Paul uses the word to describe his standing with regard to the law. The connotation of the word in these instances is that the individual is not guilty of disobedience to the laws of God, hence there is no blameworthiness nor susceptibility to charge as far as the law is concerned.

The word is used in a somewhat similar sense in Phil. 2:15 to describe the moral purity of those believers who do not grumble or question. They are further described as without blemish (amōmos). In 1 Thess. 3:13 Paul expresses the desire that the Thessalonian Christians may be "blameless in holiness" at the parousia (cf. Matt. 25:34–40; → Present, art. parousia). This blamelessness is the result of their abounding in love one for another (v. 12).

The adv. amemptōs occurs in 1 Thess. 2:10 and 5:23. In the former verse it describes the activity of Paul among the Thessalonians in regard to there being no cause for censure or blame on his part. In the latter verse Paul uses the word of the effect of the total work of sanctification at the parousia.

The verb memphomai is attested in Rom. 9:19 and Heb. 8:8 as well as the TR of Mark 7:2. In each instance the basic connotation of blame or find fault obtains.

In the TR of Mark 7:2 the word is used of the reaction of the Pharisees to some of Jesus' disciples who were eating with unwashed hands. The implication is that the Pharisees found the disciples open to blame, because they were guilty of violating the Jewish tradition. (→ Baptism, art. niptō; → Hand, art. cheir.)

In Rom. 9:19 the word is used by Paul in a rhetorical question that occurs in an exposition of the sovereignty of God: "Why does he yet find fault?" In the light of God's sovereign inexorable purposes one may raise the question of human responsibility. The word memphomai clearly connotes "guilt" or blameworthiness in this context for Paul's argument is that God's sovereignty does not free sinful men of fault or guilt before God.

The word amemptos is applied to the first covenant in Heb. 8:7 in a negative sense. If the first covenant had been faultless there would have been no need for another.

In Heb. 8:8 memphomai occurs with the dative of the person in a sense similar to the above but in contrast to amemptos (v. 7). The Sinaitic covenant has been described as not being faultless (amemptos). A fault of the old covenant is found in the people to whom it was given (vv. 8, 9) who did not keep it, for "he finds fault [memphomenos] with them" (v. 8). The context does not seem to indicate that the intrinsic nature of the commandments was changed, but rather the mode of reception of the covenant (vv. 8–12, quoting Jer. 31:31–34).

The word memphomai then connotes the act of blaming or finding fault, i.e. to regard an individual or object as having fault or blame.

The word mempsimoiros (lit. finding fault with one's lot [moira]) occurs only once in the NT in Jude 16 in the sense of grumbler, malcontent. T. McComiskey

→ Cross, → Judgement, → Punishment, → Redemption, → Sin

(a). F. Büchsel, elenchō etc., TDNT II 473–76; W. Grundmann, memphomai etc., TDNT IV 571–4; H. Hanse, echō etc., TDNT II 828 (on enechō); R. S. Moxon, The Doctrine of Sin, 1922; C. Ryder Smith, The Bible Doctrine of Sin, 1953; F. R. Tennant, The Concept of Sin, 1912; H. Thielicke, Theological Ethics, I, 1968, II, 1969 (see indexes); N. P. Williams, The Ideas of the Fall and Original Sin, 1929. On the psychological and pastoral aspects of guilt see D. Belgum, Guilt: Where Religion and Psychology Meet, 1963; H. McKeating, Living with Guilt, 1970; J. G. McKenzie, Guilt: Its Meaning and Significance, 1962; K. Rahner, "Guilt and its Remission: The Borderland between Theology and Psychotherapy", Theological Investigations, II, 1963, 265–82; and "Does Traditional Theology Represent Guilt as Innocuous as a Factor in Human Life?", Theological Investigations, XIII, 1975, 133–51; P. Tournier, Guilt and Grace: A Psychological Study, 1962; A. Uleyn, The Recognition of Guilt: A Study in Pastoral Psychology, 1969.

(b). G. Bally, "Schuld und Existenz", Wege zum Menschen, 9, 1960, 305 ff.; M. Boss, Lebensangst, Schuldgefühle und psychotherapeutische Befreiung, 1965²; M. Buber, "Schuld und Schuldgefühle", in A. Sborowitz, ed., Der leidende Mensch, 1960, 106 ff.; G. Condrau, "Angst and Schuld im menschlichen Dasein", Wege zum Menschen 3, 1966, 65 ff.; H. Dombois, ed., Die weltliche Strafe in der evangelischen Theologie, 1959; P. Guilluy, ed., La Culpabilité Fondamentale: Péché Originel et Anthropologie Moderne, 1975; H. Harsch, Das Schuldproblem in Theologie und Tiefenpsychologie, 1964; A. Köberle, "Das Schuldproblem in theologischer und tiefenpsychologischer Sicht", in W. Bitter, ed., Psychotherapie und Seelsorge, 1952, 154 ff.; K. Koch, "Sünde und Schuld", *RGG*³ VI 476 ff.; F. Leist, "Die Grenzen zwischen Tiefenpsychologie und Seelsorge", in W. Bitter, op. cit., 163 ff.; H. Lindinger, "Die Erfahrung von Schuld und Tod beim heutigen Menschen", Wege zum Menschen 4, 1967, 121 ff.; R. Pfisterer, "Die Schuld – Schande oder Chance?", Wege zum Menschen 7/8, 1962, 240 ff.; R. Schneider, Der Mensch vor dem Gericht der Geschichte, 1946; E. Schweizer, "Schuld und Tod in biblischer Sicht", ZNW 27, 1956, 728 ff.; G. Suttinger, "Der schuldiger Täter als psychologisches Problem", Wege zum Menschen 7/8, 1962, 225 ff.

H

Hand, Right Hand, Left Hand, Laying on of Hands

The uses of the word cheir, hand, are many and various. It can mean fig. side, power, handwriting or army. In Biblical usage particular importance is attached to the use of cheir as part for the whole, as a substitute for a person and his activity and dealings. Thus the hand of God stands for his majesty and supreme power in the affairs of men. On the other hand, Jesus and his disciples were delivered into the hands of men. The thought here is of surrender to the power and mercy of their enemies (→ Judgment, art. paradidōmi). Related to this use of cheir is the notion of the right hand, dexia (cheir). This expresses a person's power and authority. To sit at the right hand (en dexia) signifies the possession of equal → power and dignity (→ Glory, art. doxa). Finally, the laying on of hands plays a special part in the NT in commissioning and empowering. This is dealt with in the art. on epitithēmi tas cheiras.

δεξιά	δεξιός (dexios), right; δεξιά (dexia), right hand.

CL dexios which is related to Latin dexter means right. It is possible that there is a connection with dechomai, to receive; dexios would then mean acceptable. Attested from Homer on, it means: (a) right (opposite to left); hē dexia cheir, the right hand, then the right side in general; (b) skilful (opposite to clumsy); (c) lucky. The plur. dexiai can mean contract, because of the handshake which sealed it. The right hand symbolizes power, success, good fortune, loyalty.

This also holds true in the NT. For the right hand in agreement see Gal. 2:9. The angel in the tomb was sitting on the right side (Mk. 16:5; cf. also Jn. 21:6). In the final judgment those who are chosen are summoned to the right hand of the Son of man (Matt. 25:31 ff.).

OT The Heb. yāmîn is the only OT equivalent of dexios. God's right hand is often spoken of symbolically, especially in the Pss. It provides support (Ps. 18:35, MT 18:36) and victory (Ps. 118:15). It even expresses the omnipresence of God which embraces men everywhere (Ps. 139:10). Benjamin, lit. son of the right hand, is interpreted as son of good fortune (Gen. 35:18). The place at a man's right hand is important as a place of honour (1 Ki. 2:19; Ps. 45:9, MT 45:10; Zech. 3:1).

Ps. 110:1 is particularly significant in the light of its use in the NT. The king of Israel, placed by Yahweh at his right hand, perhaps at his accession to the throne, is honoured as God's co-regent, who by war and victory will overthrow the enemies of Israel, and thus of God. (For discussion of background see A. Weiser, The Psalms, 1952, 692–7; A. A. Anderson, The Book of Psalms, II, 1972, 768–72.)

NT In the NT Ps. 110:1 plays an important role in connection with statements about the messiah. The verse is quoted or referred to indirectly 19 times, of which 7 are in the Synoptics, 3 in Acts, 3 in Paul, 5 in Heb. and 1 in Pet. It is only here that dexios has any theological significance. (It occurs altogether 54 times, most frequently in Matt.)

1. Ps. 110:1 was probably interpreted messianically already in pre-NT times. At all events, Jesus expounded it in this sense in Mk. 12:35 ff. par. Matt. 22:41–6, Lk. 20:41–4. For Rab. Judaism the messiah was God's eschatological, political co-regent who would establish a visible kingdom of God on earth. Jesus clearly rejected the political aspects of messiahship and was guarded in his attitude to the title of Son of David (→ Son). But in the final days of his ministry he alluded to him as if to a third person. ([Ed.] The context in Matt. and Mk. is particularly significant, for Jesus' question to the Pharisees about the Christ immediately follows the lawyer's question to Jesus as to which is the great commandment. The reply that Jesus gave was: "You shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your mind" [Matt. 22:37]. He then added the second great commandment and went on to ask, referring to Ps. 110:1: "How is it then that David, inspired by the Spirit, calls him Lord?" [Matt. 22:37]. The implication is that as well as the → Lord whom men are commanded to serve and worship with their whole being there is another Lord who has the same title and sits at the Lord's right hand. The question is put hypothetically, but it also has bearing on who Jesus is and what is his divinely appointed rôle. The hearers were unable to give an answer. In the verses that follow Jesus went on to pronounce judgment on the scribes and Pharisees whose teaching and practice had caused them to miss the significance of what God is saying and doing.)

At his trial (Mk. 14:62 par. Matt. 26:64, Lk. 22:69), although unarmed and ridiculed, Jesus solemnly declared that he was "the Son of man" who will sit "at the right hand of Power" (Dan. 7:13 combined with Ps. 110:1). With this unheard-of claim he demanded recognition that God exercises his power in a way differing radically from that of the world. God works under and indeed by means of conditions of the greatest human powerlessness. The one who will come in judgment at the right hand of God's throne (→ Power, art. thronos) is the → Lamb who was slain (Rev. 5:6).

2. This is the only sense in which the primitive church could speak of Jesus being seated at God's right hand. This is pictured in various ways. Rom. 8:34 lays more emphasis upon the priestly function of the heavenly intercessor. Col. 3:1 stresses the fact that Christ is now hidden in the divine world above. On the other hand, Eph. 1:20 and 1 Pet. 3:22 underline the original meaning of his co-regency. For Heb. especially Jesus' session at God's right hand ("the point in what we are saying" [8:1]) is not the exercise of worldly power but the reign of the One who has offered himself as a sacrifice and has therefore been exalted above all angels (1:3, 13). This sacrifice of himself which has led to his exaltation is the unchangeable source of all the blessings of salvation towards which the tired Christian community must hasten (12:2). However, his session at God's right hand does not yet mean the immediate defeat of all his enemies. This is reserved for the eschatological consummation (10:12; cf. 1 Cor. 15:25).

3. A polemical motive is added in Acts. The proclamation of Jesus' session at God's right hand (2:34) and his exaltation to that position (2:33; 5:31) becomes a word of judgment upon the Jews and their pride in the Law. The one they killed is the messiah! Stephen saw him standing at God's right hand (7:55 f.), "as if to meet Stephen" (J. A. Bengel, Gnomon of the New Testament, 1873, II, 583). That Jesus is standing at God's right hand indicates that he has the role of witness for the defence; he appears before God as a witness on behalf of his own witnesses on earth. The witness stands, the judge sits! C. Blendinger

ἀριστερός, εὐώνυμος

ἀριστερός (aristeros), left; εὐώνυμος (euōnymos), left.

OT The Heb. śᵉmō'l (e.g. Gen. 15:15; 24:9) is normally translated by aristeros. But euōnymos is also used. Significance is attached to which hand Jacob used in blessing in Gen. 48:14. Both the right and left hands are mentioned in Jdg. 16:29 but without any theological significance. But the left is a symbol for folly and ill fortune in Eccles. 10:2.

NT Paul speaks of having "weapons of righteousness for the right hand and the left" (2 Cor. 6:7) in his defence of his ministry. The expression ex aristerōn is used by James and John who wanted the chief places for themselves on the right and left hands of Jesus (Mk. 10:37). By contrast Lk. 23:33 mentions the two malefactors crucified on the right and left hand of Jesus. In all these instances aristeros has a good or at least neutral sense. euōnymos is used in the same contexts in Mk. 10:40 and 15:27; cf. Matt. 20:21, 23; 27:38. It has a neutral sense in Acts 21:3 and Rev. 10:2. But it has a pejorative sense in Matt. 25:33, 41 in the parable of the sheep and the goats which is in keeping with its lit. meaning. For euōnymos means lit. of good name or omen, well-named, thus avoiding the ill-omen attaching to the left. It thus became a euphemism for the left (cf. the secular background in Liddell-Scott, 740, 240). C. Brown

χείρ

χείρ (cheir), hand; πυγμή (pygmē), fist; δάκτυλος (daktylos), finger.

CL cheir is found from Mycenaean Greek (Linear B) on. The hand, the member of the human → body that a man puts to the most active use, serves him both in his work and in defence of himself. His strength and energy are made effective through his hands. Therefore the hand is particularly important.

In secular Gk. the plur. cheires and dynameis (power(s)) can be used synonymously. But the hand does not stand simply as a symbol of power. When it is linked with a personal name, it stands as a substitute for the person himself in action. cheir means handwriting in Hyperides (4th cent. B.C.) and Philodemus (1st cent. B.C.), cf. the related usage in the formula tē emē cheiri, with my own hand (1 Cor. 16:21; Gal. 6:11).

OT 1. The OT speaks of a person's activity as the work of his hand. The hand (Heb. yāḏ) is a symbol of human → power. Thus, to fall into someone's hand means to come into their power (Gen. 32:11, MT 32:12; Jdg. 2:14; Jer. 27:6 f.). In 2 Sam. 18:18 cheir (corresponding to the Heb. yāḏ) means a mark or monument (cf. Isa. 56:5). cheir is likewise a symbol for divine omnipotence (2 Chr. 20:6; Ps. 89:21 [MT 89:22]). God's hand created heaven and earth and with his hand he controls them (Isa. 48:13). For Israel God's hand means salvation and release; but for their enemies, destruction and ruin (Exod. 7:4; 9:3; 1 Sam. 7:13). The hand of the Lord is used in the same way to express God's righteous punishment (1 Sam. 5:6, 11), but also his loving care (Ezr. 7:6; Job 5:18; Ps. 145:16; Isa. 49:16) and his divine protection (Isa. 51:16).

2. Both in figurative language about God and with reference to men the two hands do not have equal status. By comparison with the left hand a higher value is placed upon the right, because it is the one that is active (Exod. 15:6, 12; Ps. 118:15 f.; Isa. 41:13; cf. Matt. 5:30). There is an extraordinary richness about the use of the hand in sign and figurative language. It serves to express displeasure, passionate excitement (Num. 24:10), but also to express humble supplication (2 Chr. 6:12 f.; Ps. 28:2), joy (Ps. 47:1 [47:2]) and sorrow (Jer. 2:37), scornful malicious joy (Ezek. 6:11), solemn oath (Gen. 14:22; 24:2, 9; 47:29; Ezr. 10:19) and loyal citizenship (Prov. 6:1 ff.; 22:26). The sign on the hand (Exod. 13:9, 16; Deut. 6:8; 11:18) is a permanent and picturesque way of expressing constant remembrance of God's saving acts and of his commandments for his people. To fill someone's hand means to install him to priestly office (Num. 3:3). Washing the hands serves not only to fulfil the commandments concerning purification (Exod. 30:18 ff.), but also to signify an affirmation of innocence and a clear conscience (Deut. 21:6; Ps. 26:6; cf. Job 17:9; Ps. 24:4; Matt. 27:24). This richness of meaning which belongs to the concept hand in the OT lives on into Rab. Judaism and continues in the NT.

NT The word cheir occurs 176 times in the NT with a few additional occurrences in variant readings. It appears most frequently in Luke's writings (Lk. 26 times; Acts 45), no doubt because of his preference for OT turns of phrase (especially in Acts).

1. cheir is often found, used literally, in the combination podes kai cheires, feet and hands (Matt. 18:8; 22:13; Lk. 24:39; Jn. 11:44; Acts 21:11). The phrase dia cheiros tinos (also plural), through someone, by someone (e.g. Mk. 6:2; Acts 5:12; 7:25; 11:30) is a Semitism representing the Heb. bᵉyāḏ, by, with. Similarly, eis cheiras translates Heb. lîḏê, to, for. The hands can stand for a person (Acts 17:25). cheir is used 25 times in connection with the laying on of hands (→ epithesis tōn cheirōn).

2. As in the OT, the hand of the Lord means the embodiment of divine power. It is also applied to Christ in Jn. 3:35; 10:28; 13:3. It works in creation (Acts 7:50; Heb. 1:10) and in God's plan of salvation (Acts 4:28; cheir in combination with boulē). It expresses his righteous punishment (Acts 13:11; Heb. 10:31), and also the special care (Lk. 1:66), security and protection (Lk. 23:46; Jn. 10:29) which God grants to all those who trust him. God's hand indicates his wonder-working power with which he accompanies the apostolic proclamation of the gospel (Acts 4:30; 11:21) and is represented as operating "by the hand of an → angel" (Acts 7:35). It also indicates God's hidden wisdom with which he leads his people on earth through suffering (1 Pet. 5:6). Hand, finally, can be a periphrasis for a hostile power, into whose control a man is delivered (esp. Matt. 17:22 par. Mk. 9:31, Lk. 9:44, Matt. 26:45 par. Mk. 14:41; Acts 21:11), but from whose hand he can also be set free (Acts 12:11; 2 Cor. 11:33).

3. cheir is frequently used in connection with the verb ekteinō, to stretch out. Jesus commanded a sick man to stretch out his hand (Matt. 12:13 par. Mk. 3:5, Lk. 6:10). He stretched out his hand to → heal (Matt. 8:3 par. Mk. 1:41, Lk. 5:13; cf. Acts 4:30). Stretching out the hand can be an orator's gesture (Acts 26:1) and a sign indicating the bystanders (Matt. 12:49). It can happen with hostile intent (Lk. 22:53) or refer indirectly to a disciple's death by crucifixion (Jn. 21:18).

F. Laubach

The Jewish (though not OT) practice of ceremonially washing the hands before meals (Mk. 7:1–4) was condemned by Jesus as an instance of scrupulous observance of an outward ordinance of man, practised at the expense of neglecting the word of God (vv. 6 ff.; cf. Matt. 15:8 ff.; Isa. 29:13) and failure to realize that evil comes from the heart (Mk. 7:14–23; cf. Matt. 15:10–20). Mk. 7:3 contains the word pygmē which the RSV deliberately omits on account of the uncertainty of its meaning. Although there are variant readings in some MSS, it is supported by the majority of early MSS. C. E. B. Cranfield suggests that the explanation is to be sought in the Jewish custom of different sorts of ritual washing. Dipping up to the wrist was less serious than plunging up to the wrist. pygmē is a dat. form of the noun meaning "fist". The expression in Mk. pygmē nipsōntai may refer to the former act, or perhaps to washing with a fistful of water. (Cf. The Gospel according to Saint Mark, 1959, 233; and for further suggestions P. R. Weis, "A Note on pygmē," NTS 3, 1956–7, 233 ff.; → Baptism, Wash, art. niptō.) Pilate's act of washing his hands before the crowd (Matt. 27:24) was a public gesture disclaiming responsibility. Although the crowds accepted responsibility for Jesus' blood, the gesture was equally empty, for moral responsibility cannot be disposed of by outward gestures.

The finger (daktylos [in the LXX chiefly for 'eṣba']) is mentioned in Matt. 23:4; Mk. 7:33; Lk. 11:46; 16:24; Jn. 8:6, 8; 20:25, 27. The expression "finger of God" (Lk. 11:20; cf. Exod. 8:19) is paralleled in Matt. 12:28 by → "Spirit of God." "In all likelihood it is Jesus' own phrase by which he defines his mission in terms of the Exodus . . . as he does elsewhere. See on 6:17–49; 9:10–17). The eschatological presence of the Spirit is the presence of the kingdom. See on 10:1–20" (E. E. Ellis, The Gospel of Luke, 1966, 165).

cheirotoneō means to choose (originally elect by raising hands) (2 Cor. 8:19), and appoint (Acts 14:23). cheiropoiētos, made by human hands, underlines the distinction between God's action and man's (Mk. 14:58; Acts 7:78; 17:24; Eph. 2:11; Heb. 9:11, 24).

C. Brown

ἐπιτίθημι

ἐπιτίθημι τὰς χεῖρας (epitithēmi tas cheiras), to lay hands on; ἐπίθεσις τῶν χειρῶν (epithesis tōn cheirōn), laying on of hands.

CL epithesis (from Plato on) means: (a) laying on, application (of things); (b) setting upon, attack (only in the LXX, Aristeas, Philo and Josephus). The phrase epithesis tōn cheirōn, the laying on of hands, occurs only in Philo and the NT. On the other hand epitithēmi tēn cheira or tas cheiras, to lay the hand or hands on someone or something, also occurs in Gk. inscriptions and in the LXX.

Miraculous healings, performed by means of the laying on of hands, are attributed in Hel. literature to Asclepius, Zeus and to other gods and wise men (→ Heal, art. iaomai; TDNT III, 196 ff.).

OT 1. Even though the substantival combination epithesis tōn cheirōn does not occur in the LXX, it probably goes back to the corresponding verbal expression, epitithēmi tas cheiras (Heb. sāmaḵ yāḏayim) in the LXX which has two basic associations in the LXX. Numerically speaking, by far the more important usage of this verbal expression in the LXX is the one which describes how the sacrificer laid his hand on the head of the sacrificial animal. The meaning of this action is seen most clearly in the ritual for the great Day of Atonement (Lev. 16), where the laying on of hands is not an act of blessing but is believed to be a real transference of guilt to the scapegoat. To drive out the goat meant to drive out sin itself. But in the case of the other forms of sacrifice which from the point of view of the history of religions are less primitive, it is to be observed that sacrifice and laying on of hands coincide (so in almost every chapter in Lev.). For to deny that foreign divinities have any power over the people of Israel meant that they now have to commit to Yahweh their evil and allow him to destroy it.

2. Alongside this, though more rare, is the laying on of hands as an act of blessing (Genesis 48:18). It is no doubt closely related to the ritual of laying on of hands on the occasion of a man's installation in an office (Num. 27:18, 23, and frequently in the Pent.). The laying on of hands means, therefore, if one compares the two very different acts of removal of sin and blessing, that there passes to the one on whom hands are laid the particular quality of the one who performs the act. He passes on his special blessing or burdens the scapegoat with the burden which he himself had carried.

3. The two passages which took on the greatest significance for Rab. Judaism were those which dealt with Moses' appointment of Joshua to be his successor (Num. 27:15 ff.; Deut. 34:9). In the former passage, by means of the laying on of hands Moses invested Joshua with his authority. In the latter he invested him with his spirit of wisdom. Rab. Judaism saw here the obligatory model and the origin of its own ordination practice, which was understood as the handing on of the spirit of Moses from the present teacher to the pupil (cf. TDNT VI 962; IX 429; SB I 807; SB II 648–55).

NT In the majority of passages in which it occurs in the NT (altogether 40 times) epitithēmi is connected with the laying on of hands. epithesis tōn cheirōn only appears 4 times.

1. The verbal expression epitithēmi tas cheiras is used predominantly in the NT in connection with miracles of healing (Matt. 9:18; Mk. 5:23; 6:5; 7:32; 8:23; Lk. 13:13; Acts 28:8), performed by Jesus and the apostles as signs that the messianic age had already dawned. The expression also appears in Matt. 19:13, 15 to denote a gesture of blessing the children who were brought to Jesus. As the par. in Mk. 10:16 shows, there is no thought of a magical means of blessing. The gesture of blessing symbolizes, rather, the gracious offer of a share in the kingdom of God made to those who are not of age, i.e. to such as approach God with the attitude of children. (→ Child, art. pais NT 2.)

Acts 8:17 ff.; 9:17; 19:6 belong in the context of the → baptism. The Holy → Spirit is given to those who are baptized and have the apostles' hands laid on them. This may be the idea behind 1 Tim. 5:22. But equally the laying on of hands here could be a gesture accompanying the readmission to fellowship of a penitent sinner or heretic. The possibility of "ordination" also cannot be excluded. Two passages take us directly into the sphere of Jewish ordination: Acts 6:6 where the seven Hellenists were appointed to serve in the daily distribution to their section of the community, and Acts 13:3 where Paul and Barnabas are sent out. Here the thought of authorizing and commissioning to a specific work predominates.

2. The substantival expression occurs once in connection with baptism (Acts 8:17 ff.). On another occasion it denotes one of the elementary doctrines of Christ (Heb. 6:2). Twice (1 Tim. 4:14; 2 Tim. 1:6) it denotes the rite by which Timothy was ordained. According to these two passages, Timothy had conferred upon him through the laying on of hands by the elders or Paul the gift of grace for leading the congregation, preaching the word and teaching or refuting false teachers. It is surmised by those who on literary grounds deny the Pauline authorship of the Pastoral Epistles that the church here, which dates from the beginning of the 2nd cent., is using a historical fiction. Its aim was to give apostolic justification to its understanding of ordination (the conferment of grace for office), which has departed from the Pauline understanding of the free working of the Spirit.

3. It is striking that in every passage, where the laying on of hands appears in connection with ordination or sending out for a particular service, it is always carried out by people who at that moment possess different gifts. In Acts 6:6 the laying on of hands is performed by the apostles; in Acts 13:3 by prophets and teachers; in 1 Tim. 4:14 by the elders; and in 2 Tim. 1:6 by Paul. This suggests that the NT does not yet recognize the power of ordination as being restricted to a particular office, e.g. that of the apostles.

Reference must also be made to the close connection between the laying on of hands and intercessory prayer. This indicates that there is no thought of the transfer of a particular quality, necessary for office, from one office-bearer to another involving the idea of succession. The idea that the gifts of grace are at men's disposal is sharply contradicted by Peter's clash with Simon Magus (Acts 8:18 ff.). It is God himself who equips his servants with his gifts and sends them out. This happens through the prayer of the church. The laying on of hands bears witness to the church's conviction that their prayers which are founded on God's promises have been heard. H.-G. Schütz

→ Apostle, → Bishop, → Serve

(a). Arndt, 106, 169, 736, 888; H. von Campenhausen, Ecclesiastical Authority and Spiritual Power in the Church of the First Three Centuries, 1969; J. G. Davies, He Ascended into Heaven (Bampton Lectures, 1958), 1958; D. Daube, "The Laying on of Hands" in The New Testament and Rabbinic Judaism, 1956; B. S. Easton, "Jewish and Early Christian Ordination", Anglican Theological Review, 5, 1922–23, 308–19; 6, 1923–24, 285–95; abridged in Early Christianity: The Purpose of Acts and Other Papers, 1955, 135–43; A. Ehrhardt, "Jewish and Christian Ordination", Journal of Ecclesiastical History 5, 1954, 125–38; reprinted in The Framework of the New Testament Stories, 1964, 132–50; E. Ferguson, "Laying on of Hands: Its Significance in Ordination" JTS New Series 26, 1975, 1–12; K. Grayston, "The Significance of the Word Hand in the New Testament", in Festschrift B. Rigaux, 1970, 479–87; W. Grundmann, dexios, TDNT II 37–40; D. M. Hay, Glory at the Right Hand: Psalm 110 in Early Christianity, 1973; F. Hahn, The Titles of Jesus in Christology, 1969, especially 129 ff.; J. N. D. Kelly, Early Christian Creeds, 1972[3]; G. W. H. Lampe, The Seal of the Spirit, 1951, 223–31; E. Lohse, cheir etc., TDNT IX 424–38; S. New, "The Name, Baptism, and the Laying on of Hands", in F. J. Foakes-Jackson and K. Lake, The Beginnings of Christianity, V, 1933, 121–40; W. D. McHardy, "Mark 7[3] – A Reference to the Old Testament?", ExpT 87, 1975–76, 119; J. Newman, Semikhah, 1950; J. K. Parratt, "The Laying on of Hands in the New Testament", ExpT 80, 1968–69, 210–14; J. J. M. Roberts, "The Hand of Yahweh", VT 21, 1971, 244–51; H. Schlier, daktylos, TDNT II 20 f.; K. L. Schmidt, pygmē, TDNT III 915 ff.; M. H. Shepherd, Jr., "Hands, Laying on of", IDB II 521 f.; H. P. Smith, "The Laying on of Hands", American Journal of Theology 17, 1913, 47–62; C. H. Turner, cheirotonia, cheirothesia, epithesis cheirōn, JTS 24, 1923, 496–504; P. R. Weis, "A Note on pygmē", NTS 3, 1956–57, 233–36; J. Ysebaert, Greek Baptismal Terminology, 1962.

(b). N. Adler, Taufe und Handauflegung, 1951; and "Die Handauflegung im Neuen Testament bereits ein Bussritus? Zur Auslegung von 1 Tim. 5, 22", Neutestamentliche Aufsätze, Festschrift J. Schmid, 1963, 1 ff.; J. Behm, Die Handauflegung im Urchristentum, 1911; J. Coppens, L'imposition des mains et les rites connexes dans le Nouveau Testament et dans l'Église ancienne, 1925; J. Daniélou, "La Session à la droite du Père," in The Gospels Reconsidered: A Selection of Papers read at the International Congress on the Four Gospels in 1957, 1960, 68–77; J. Galtier, "Imposition des mains", Dictionnaire de Théologie Catholique, VII, 1972, 1302–1425; E. Lohse, Die Ordination im Spätjudentum und im Neuen Testament, 1951; U. Luck, Hand und Hand Gottes. Ein Beitrag zur Grundlage und Geschichte des biblischen Gottesverständnisses (dissertation, Münster), 1959; R. Mayer and N. Adler, "Handauflegung", LTK IV 1343 ff.; S. Morenz, H. D. Wendland and W. Jannasch, "Handauflegung", RGG[3] III 52 ff.; G. Révész, Die menschliche Hand, 1944; O. Weinreich, Antike Heilungswunder, 1909; A. S. van der Woude, yāḏ, THAT I 667–74.

Hard, Hardened

σκληρός

σκληρός (sklēros, hard, rough; σκληρότης (sklērotēs), hardness; σκληρύνω (sklērynō), to be, become, hard; σκληροτράχηλος (sklērotrachēlos), stiff-necked, obstinate; σκληροκαρδία (sklērokardia), hard-heartedness; πωρόω (pōroō), harden, become hard; πώρωσις (pōrōsis), hardness; παχύνω (pachynō), thicken, make insensitive.

The concepts of being or making hard, firm, rigid and thick are expressed in the NT by the word groups sklēros, pōros (pēros) and pachys. The meanings converge with the result that substitutions take place in the course of the transmission of the NT text.

CL 1. sklēros (in secular Gk. from Hesiod on) means dry, hard, rough. From it is formed the noun sklērotēs, hardness. The vb. sklērynō was originally a medical term (first attested in Hippocrates). In the active it means to harden; in the passive, to grow hard. sklērotrachēlos (attested in Aesop and the LXX) means stiff-necked, stubborn, obdurate.

2. pōroō (from Hippocrates on) is derived from pōros, tufa or tuff (porous stone), and means to harden, to form a callus (when broken bones heal), and thus to petrify, to become hard. The word is only used figuratively in the NT. The same is true of the verbal noun pōrōsis, hardening. In almost every NT passage where pōroō and pōrōsis occur, pēroō and pērōsis appear as variants. pēroō means to make lame, to maim; and when used of the eyes, to blind. Correspondingly pērōsis means maiming, and then shortsightedness, blindness. This root is also used figuratively and in this sense means virtually the same as pōroō. As pēroō occurs more frequently in literature, the substitution of the words in the process of copying is easily explained. pōroō doubtless represents the original form of the text.

3. pachynō is derived from pachys, thick, fat (in secular Gk. from Aeschylus on). It originally meant to thicken, to fatten; then by extension to make impervious (to water). Hence figuratively it came to mean to make insensitive, and in the passive, to be insensitive.

OT The most frequent Heb. equivalent for sklēros and its derivatives is qāšâh. ḥāzaq and other vbs. are also used, but these word groups are rare. Hardening, according to the OT understanding, results from the fact that men persist in shutting themselves to God's call and command. A state then arises in which a man is no longer able to hear and in which he is irretrievably enslaved. Alternatively, God makes the hardening final, so that the people affected by it cannot escape from it.

1. In the oldest OT narratives it is always non-Israelites who are hardened. The most important narrative is that of the hardening of Pharaoh (Exod. 4 ff.). After every appeal by Moses and every plague we read, "Still Pharaoh's heart was hardened" (Exod. 7:13, 22; 8:15, etc.). It is God who hardens Pharaoh's heart (in passages attributed to the Elohistic strand). Whole peoples too are hardened by God, e.g. the Canaanites: "For it was the Lord's doing to harden their hearts that they should come against Israel in battle, in order that they should be utterly destroyed, and should receive no mercy" (Jos. 11:20). Non-Israelites were hardened, therefore, only when they came into contact with Israel, for the hardening of the peoples was one of the means God used to fulfil his purpose for Israel.

2. Not until the great prophets is → Israel also seen as a hardened people. This is expressed most strongly in Isa. God's word had come to the priests and prophets in Jerusalem, but they did not want to listen. Hence, God's word became a word of judgment against them, "that they may go, and fall backward, and be broken" (Isa. 28:12 f.). On the occasion of his call Isaiah received the command, "Make the heart of this people fat, and their ears heavy, and shut their eyes; lest they see with their eyes and hear with their ears, and understand with their hearts, and turn and be healed" (Isa. 6:10). God's judgment on his people is not that he no longer speaks to them. Rather his word is still proclaimed with utter clarity. But because the people hitherto have not wanted to listen, from now on they will be unable to. The vineyard which did not want to bear fruit (Isa. 5:1–7) is now unable to, because God has forbidden the clouds to rain on it. God's judgment encompasses the destruction of the people (Isa. 6:11).

3. This contention that it is God himself who mercilessly hardens Israel is an extreme statement. The later prophets do not speak with the same severity. Jeremiah spoke of hardening, but he no longer named God as its cause. For Jeremiah the cause is the obstinacy of the people who give heed to the false prophets, whereas for Isaiah the prophet himself is carrying out God's commission. It is interesting that the LXX softens Isa. 6 by transmitting the command to Isaiah in the indicative: "for the heart of this people is stupefied; and their ears are dull of hearing; and they have shut their eyes, that for a while they may not see with their eyes; and hear with their ears; and understand with their hearts; and return that I may heal them."

The decisive new element is the promise in the later period of God's new → covenant. Then Israel will hear and recognize the Lord (Jer. 31:33 f.), and men will receive a new, no longer a hard, heart and a new spirit (Ezek. 36:26 f.).

4. In the Wisdom Literature the righteous and the godless are constantly contrasted. The latter are characterized in many passages as hardened (Prov. 28:14; 29:1). Here attention is directed more to the guilt occasioned by hardness. Hardening is the continually mounting refusal on the part of man to listen to God's command. It is not, however, inevitable. There is room, therefore, for the appeal, "O that today you would hearken to his voice! Harden not your hearts" (Ps. 95:8). For God's judgment takes place as a result of hardness. No longer is hardness itself a judgment from God as in Isa.

NT All these words are comparatively rare in the NT. They occur throughout the Synoptics (11 out of a total of 26 occurrences), a few times in Acts, in Paul (pōroō and its derivatives, and sklērotēs), in Heb. (sklērynō 4 times) and in Jude and Jas. (sklēros once in each).

1. (a) sklēros is used in its metaphorical sense of things: anemōn sklērōn, strong rough winds (Jas. 3:4); of Jesus' words, sklēros estin ho logos houtos, "this is a hard [unacceptable] saying" (Jn. 6:60). God will punish the ungodly because of all the hard things (some MSS add, words) which they have spoken against him (Jude 15 quoting Eth. Enoch. 1:9). It is also used of people: the kyrios, the master in the parable of the talents, is described in Matt. 25:24 as sklēros anthrōpos, a hard, i.e., hard-hearted man. sklēros is used absolutely in Acts 26:14: "It is hard for you [i.e. difficult; sklēron soi] to kick against the goad." A few ancient MSS and versions also include this phrase in Acts 9:4.

(b) sklērotēs occurs in Rom. 2:5 and describes a human characteristic. By their hard and impenitent hearts the Jews are storing up for themselves the wrath of the coming judgment, on account of their self-righteousness and impenitence.

(c) sklērynō is used transitively with a human subject: "Do not harden your hearts" (Heb. 3:8, 15; 4:7). The appeal of Ps. 95:8 is repeated three times; the community must not forfeit God's promise. With "God" as subject the word occurs in Rom. 9:18: "He hardens the heart of whomever he wills." Exod. 4:21 (the hardening of Pharaoh) is doubtless in the background here. God punishes by abandoning people to their sin (cf. Rom. 1:24, 26, 28).

Heb. 3:13 takes up the appeal of v. 8 in the passive, "that none of you may be hardened by the deceitfulness of sin." In Acts 19:9 it is said of the Jews in Ephesus that some of them were "hardened" at Paul's preaching in the synagogue and openly abused his teaching.

(d) sklērotrachēlos occurs only in Acts 7:51. In his speech Stephen calls the Jews "stiff-necked and uncircumcised in heart and ears," like their fathers always resisting the Holy Spirit, unwilling to listen to God and killing his prophets.

2. (a) pōroō is used metaphorically in all five passages where it occurs. In Mk. 6:52 the word is used of the hardening of Jesus' disciples. "Their hearts were hardened," so that they still did not understand who the Lord was (cf. 8:17). In Jn. 12:40 it refers to the Jews again at whose hand Jesus met with rejection. The word occurs in a proof-text (Isa. 6:9 f.; while it does not follow the LXX, it uses the indicative as in the LXX). The two Pauline passages also refer to the Jews: "the rest [i.e. the non-elect] were hardened" (Rom. 11:7); and "their minds were hardened" (2 Cor. 3:14).

(b) Two passages also apply the verbal noun pōrōsis to the Jews. Jesus is grieved at their "hardness of heart" (Mk. 3:5; cf. Mk. 10:5 par. Matt. 19:8, sklērokardia). Paul states in Rom. 11:25, "a hardening has come upon Israel." In Eph. 4:18 it is said of the Gentiles, "they are darkened in their understanding, alienated from the life of God because of their hardness of heart."

3. Both passages where pachynō occurs (Matt. 13:15; Acts 28:27) quote from Isa. 6:9 f. (here the quotation is used as in the LXX).

4. All these words, including the adj. sklēros, are used in an exclusively metaphorical and theological sense and denote the same idea: the reluctance of men to respond to God. In the NT men who do not open themselves to the gospel are described as hardened. The same can be said of Jews and Gentiles, and also of Jesus' disciples who did not understand the → cross to which they were to become witnesses. The prophetic idea that God hardens men is taken over from the OT (e.g. Rom. 11) without for a moment losing sight of man's personal responsibility (Rom. 2:5). Thus in the NT hardening also describes the inability to hear which renders a man liable to judgment. This applies also to the appeals in Heb. These are meaningful only because hardness is broken down with the promise of forgiveness and a new beginning (cf. 8:9 f.). With the gospel God also gives the ability to understand it (cf. however Heb. 6:4 ff.).

God has "given up" men to their sin (Rom. 1:24). But in Christ he gives a new opportunity of hearing through his Spirit; he fulfils the promises of the OT. Over against hardening, the inability to receive the word of God, stands → faith, the obedient reception of the word. The question whether, despite Christ's coming, the Jews will remain hardened, is grappled with by Paul in his exposition of God's plan of salvation in Rom. 9–11. U. Becker

→ Determine, → Elect, → Heart, → Lead Astray, → Sin

(a). G. L. Archer, A Survey of Old Testament Introduction, 1964, 116; G. C. Berkouwer, Faith and Perseverance, 1958; and Sin, 1971; B. S. Childs, "The Hardening of Pharaoh", Exodus, 1974, 170–75; L. J. Kuyper, "The Hardness of Heart according to Biblical Perspectives", SJT 27, 1974, 459–74; I. H. Marshall, Kept by the Power of God: A Study of Perseverance and Falling Away, 1969; G. von Rad, Old Testament Theology, II, 1965; H. Räisänen, The Idea of Divine Hardening. A Comparative Study of the Notion of Divine Hardening, Leading Astray, and Inciting to Evil in the Bible and the Qur'an, Publications of the Finnish Exegetical Society 25, 1972; K. L. Schmidt and M. A. Schmidt, sklēros etc., TDNT V 1028–31; E. J. Young, The Book of Isaiah, 1965, 253–65.
(b). J. Gnilka, Das Problem der Verstockung Israels nach den synoptischen Evangelien und der Apostelgeschichte, 1961; F. Hesse, Das Verstockungsproblem im Alten Testament. Eine frömmigkeitsgeschichtliche Untersuchung, BZAW 74, 1955; F. Hesse, R. Gyllenberg, J. Moltmann, "Verstockung", *RGG*³ VI 1383 ff.; E. Jenni, "Jesajas Berufung in der neueren Forschung", ThZ 15, 1959, 321 ff.; K. L. Schmidt, "Die Verstockung des Menschen durch Gott: Eine lexikologische und biblisch-theologische Studie", ThZ 1, 1945, 1–17.

Head

κεφαλή

κεφαλή (kephalē), head; ἀνακεφαλαιόομαι (anakephalaioomai), sum up, recapitulate.

CL kephalē, head, attested from Homer on, is related to the Gothic word gibla (Eng. gable) but also to Eng. head. Derivatives from it include kephalaion, main point (Heb. 8:1), sum of money (Acts 22:28); kephalaioō, sum up, late Gk. strike on the head (Mk. 12:4); late Gk. kephalis, little head (Heb. 10:7 "roll" of a book) and anakephalaioomai (see below). In secular Gk. kephalē means:

1. The head of man or beast, the coping of a wall, the capital of a column etc., the source or mouth of a river, the beginning or end of a month, etc. In Plato the "head of a speech" is its conclusion (→ Goal, art. telos).

2. What is decisive, superior. In Gk. anthropology the head takes precedence over all other members; it is, or in it lies, the authoritative principle, the reason (hēgemonikon). If the emphasis is upon the idea of origin, kephalē takes on some of the meanings of archē (→ Beginning). But the head of a community is never referred to as a kephalē (TDNT III 673).

3. kephalē also stands for the life of an individual. As early as Homer it was used in a similar way to psychē (→ Soul). Thus, curses which name the head are directed against the whole person and his life.

OT 1. In the LXX kephalē most frequently translates the Heb. rô'š. Beside kephalē numerous other equivalents for rô'š are to be found: e.g. frequently archē (→ beginning: Ps. 137[136]:6; Isa. 41:4); prōtotokos (→ first; 1 Chr. 5:12), kephalē has the primary meanings we know from cl. Gk.: the head of a man (Gen. 28:11), of a beast (Gen. 3:16), the top of a mountain (Gen. 8:5) or of a tower (Gen. 11:4) etc.

2. The head is particularly important in the language of gesture. It was shaven in times of grief (Ezek. 7:18). The man who was under a vow did not shave it (Num. 6:5; cf. Acts 18:18). It was covered (2 Sam. 15:30) or strewn with ashes (2 Sam. 13:19) as a sign of penitence.

([Ed.] Prov. 25:21 f. states: "If your enemy is hungry, give him bread to eat; and if he is thirsty, given him water to drink; for you will heap coals of fire on his head, and the LORD will reward you" (RSV). The thought is taken up in Rom. 12:20. After urging believers not to avenge themselves, for "Vengeance is mine, I will repay, says the Lord" (Rom. 12:19; cf. Deut. 32:35; Lev. 19:18), Paul declares: "No, if your enemy is hungry, feed him, if he is thirsty give him drink; for by doing so you will heap burning coals upon his head. Do not be overcome by evil, but overcome evil with good." The imagery behind this thought is debated. It has been suggested that it derives from an Egyptian penitential ritual in which live coals were endured as an act of contrition (S. Morenz, "Feurige Kohlen auf dem Haupt," TLZ 78, 1953, 187–92; cf. W. Klassen, "Coals of Fire: Sign of Repentance or Revenge?", NTS 9, 1962–3, 337–50). Morenz suggests that while the rite was probably confined to Egypt, the metaphor was more widely used (cf. W. McKane, Proverbs, 1970, 592). R. B. Y. Scott also suggests "A form of torture; but to return good for evil will be more effective in overcoming enmity, and so the enemy" (Proverbs, 1965, 156). Scott notes similar thoughts in Exod. 23:4 f.; Prov. 20:22; 24:17 f. D. Kidner comments: "The coals of fire represent the pangs which are far better felt now as shame than later as punishment (Ps. 140:10). Cf. Amenemope, chapter 2:19 ff." (Proverbs, 1964, 160, cf. 23). He sees the saying as representing the climax of ideas in Prov. 24:11 f., 17 f., 29. In his use of the text Paul omits the thought of personal reward for the Christian. His concern is that the life of the believer should be free from all thought of revenge, that the enemy might be convicted (though not necessarily converted – for that is God's work) by kindness, and that the way to overcome evil is not to repay in kind (which only leads to bondage to it) but to repay it with good. The repetition of Deut. 32:35 at Heb. 10:30 suggests that it may have had a firm place in early catechetical teaching (cf. M. J. Dahood, CBQ 17, 1955, 19–24). The juxtaposition with Prov. 12:25 represents Paul's gloss on it, and provides an introduction to Paul's teaching on how both Jewish and Gentile believers should regard the governing authorities (13:1).)

3. Via expressions like "per head" (Exod. 16:16, RSV "apiece") and "head by head" (Num. 1:2), the use of kephalē in the LXX was extended to cover the life of the individual. The OT sees man in action as a unity, but in each case it singles out that part of him which is significant. In this case it is the head as source of the life-stream. The head can be used as the equivalent of the person and his whole existence (e.g. 2 Ki. 25:27; Ps. 3:3; Ezek. 9:10; 33:4; 1 Sam. 25:39; cf. Acts 18:6; Matt. 27:25). In Isa. 43:4 kephalē stands for nepeš and denotes the → life of each individual within the people.

4. By comparison with the other nations Israel will be "the head and not the tail" (Deut. 28:13; cf. Isa. 9:14). Thus kephalē in the LXX can denote also the head, i.e. the one who occupies a position of superiority in the community (cf. Jdg. 10:18; 1 Ki. 21:12, Codex A). But "this use does not have the further thought that those ruled by the kephalē are in the relation to it of a sōma" (H. Schlier, TDNT III 675). The head of the statue (Dan. 2:31 f.) only represented one kingdom in and of itself, and does not carry any implications about its relation to the body.

5. In Jewish literature rô'š is used like kephalē in the LXX sometimes in connection with Deut. 28:13 (e.g. Jub. 1:16). The usage does not extend beyond the meanings already mentioned. The head, which the members obey, is a metaphor for unity (Test. Zeb. 9). The word was also used to refer to Adam as the head of created beings (Sl. Enoch 2:22), to the head of those who worship idols (Heb. Enoch 5:6), to the head of the synagogue (the president, Sot. 7:7 f.). This use of rô'š is continued without further development in the Qumran texts.

6. Philo's use of kephalē was seminal. The logos (→ word) is the head of the universe which God has created, its source of life, overlord, ruler. "He stamps the world like a seal, separates species and genera like one who cuts . . . and by means of the heavenly eikōn [→ Image] gives them a part in God" (C. Colpe, *RGG*³ V 343; → Knowledge, art. ginōskō).

7. In contrast to near-eastern and Orphic mythology which saw the whole cosmos encompassed in the head and body of the highest god (→ Time, art. aiōn), Philo represented belief in God as the creator of the cosmos. In certain forms of gnosticism (→ Knowledge), however, the former belief returned and Aion, whose body is the cosmos and from whom as primal man all men take their form, receives the characteristics of the redeemer (sōtēr; → Redemption, art. sōzō). He has this role in gnostic mythological speculation on the basis of his cosmological rank and not on that of any saving work in history. The gnostic use of kephalē very much resembles that of archē. Above all kephalē serves to denote not only the unity of the body, but also the controlling influence over it. The post-Christian Odes of Solomon speak of the head concept of the first man in a manner comparable with that in which the NT speaks of Christ. "For they have become my members and I their head. Praise be to You, our Head, Jesus Christ!" (Od. Sol. 17). (On Hellenistic and gnostic evidence see H. Schlier, TDNT III 676 ff.)

NT 1. In the NT, where kephalē appears 75 times, the word occurs primarily in its basic meaning of the head of a man (Matt. 14:8), of an animal, or of demons (Rev. 17:3). kephalē occurs by far the most frequently in Rev. (19 times) where it refers to those human and animal forms who are characterized by the shape or the ornament of their heads. The head bears the tokens of honour and dignity (Rev. 4:4; 19:12; etc.), but also those of shame (Rev. 13:1). In the passion narrative Jesus' head is frequently mentioned (Matt. 27:29 f., 37; Mk. 15:19, 29; Jn. 19:2, 30). The smiting of Jesus' head stands in marked contrast with the anointing of it (Matt. 26:7; Mk. 14:3; Lk. 7:46) and the promise to faithful disciples that not a hair of their head shall perish (Matt. 10:30; Lk. 21:18; cf. 12:7). The head of Jesus is also mentioned in the resurrection narratives (Jn. 20:7, 12). The head of John the Baptist is mentioned in Matt. 14:8, 11 and Mk. 6:24–28. On the phrase kephalē gōnias, head of the corner Matt. 21:42 par. Mk. 12:10, Lk. 20:17; cf. Acts 4:11; 1 Pet. 2:7; quoting Ps. 118:22, → Rock.

2. The head is mentioned in the NT also in connection with the customs of fasting and penitence (Matt. 6:17; Acts 18:18; Rev. 18:19). As we know from the LXX the shaking of the head signifies that a claim and its consequences have been rejected (Matt. 27:39). With the phrase, "Your blood be upon your heads!" the departing apostle placed upon the Corinthian Jews the responsibility for the rejection of the messiah (Acts 18:6; cf. on this point Matt. 27:25 which is also evidence that kephalē stands for the individual as a whole). The numbering of the hairs of the head (Matt. 10:30) and the saying that "not a hair of your head will perish" (Lk. 21:18) speak of God's promise to preserve those who commit themselves into his hands. In wanting to have his head washed (Jn. 13:9), Peter wanted his whole life to be cleansed. Jesus prohibited swearing by one's head. "Whoever risks his head for something in an oath speaks as if he had power over his own life" (T. Zahn on Matt. 5:36). The rabbis refused to allow anyone to retract an oath by the life of the head (San. 3:2). K. Munzer

3. 1 Cor. 11:2–15 contains a discussion of reasons why women should be required to veil the head during public worship. In Judaism women were always veiled in public (cf. J. Jeremias, Jerusalem in the Time of Jesus, 1969, 358 ff.). E. Käsemann claims that Paul is here trying to introduce into the Corinthian church a custom which was foreign to Greek women (New Testament Questions of Today, 1969, 210; cf. also SB III 427–34). The customs seem to have varied from place to place (cf. W. Ramsay, The Cities of Paul, 1907, 202 ff.; A. Jaubert, "La voile des femmes (I Cor. xi. 2–16)" NTS 18, 1971–2, 424 ff.). But Paul's teaching here may have been influenced by the presence of Jews in Corinth who maintained Jewish practices in their synagogue worship and who may well have looked with a critical eye on what was going on in the church. Immediately before the present passage Paul has urged that no offence be given to Jews, the Greeks or to the church (1 Cor. 10:32), and that the church should follow him in trying to please all men and in being imitators of Christ (1 Cor. 10:33–11:1). The underlying problem was one of freedom in the light of the new and equal standing of the sexes before God. "The Corinthian watch-word 'freedom', which, considered both in itself and in connection with the specific case at issue, seems to be more enlightened than the Pauline reaction to it, suffers from the basic defect of enthusiastic piety; it takes account of freedom exclusively as freedom from burdensome compulsion. The apostle, on the other hand, is concerned here, as always, with the freedom which knows itself to be called to serve and it is just this freedom which he sees threatened where enthusiasm is rattling at the doors of the existing order and proclaiming its allegedly just claims in the name of the Spirit" (E. Käsemann, op. cit., 211). Paul is concerned not only with freedom but with order in society. For him the rôle and relationships of the sexes which are determined by creation are not abolished by salvation. This must be reflected in public worship (cf. A. Jaubert, op. cit., 419 f.). He advances the following arguments for the subordinate role of women and for the veiling of the woman's head which results from it.

(a) The hierarchy of the order: God-Christ-man-woman in which each of the first three members is the head of the following (v. 3). Here head is probably to be understood not as "chief" or "ruler" but as "source" or "origin" (F. F. Bruce, 1 and 2 Corinthians, 1971, 103; cf. S. Bedale, "The Meaning of kephalē in the Pauline Epistles", JTS New Series 5, 1954, 211 ff.). The creation narrative of Gen. 2:21 ff. assigns a priority to man (cf. also Eph. 5:22 ff.; Col. 3:18 f.; 1 Tim. 2:11 ff.). But the Christian knows that Christ has a greater priority as the archetypal man (cf. 8:6; 15:46–49; Col. 1:16), and the head of Christ is God (cf. 3:23; 8:6). F. F. Bruce points out that there is a transition from the sense of head in v. 3 to its literal sense in vv. 4–6 and from now on there is an oscillation between the two senses. He also notes that what Paul has in mind here when he speaks of covering the head is a veil which conceals the whole head including the hair. (The present-day Jewish practice of men wearing a hat in the synagogue appears to reverse the practice here.) Paul argues that for a man to pray with his head covered is to dishonour his head (v. 4, cf. v. 7), because it implies that he is abdicating the sovereignty and dignity given to him by the Creator. But for a woman to pray or prophesy with her head unveiled dishonours her head (v. 5), for this is tantamount to a denial of her relation to man in the ordinances of creation. It is just as dishonourable as if her head were shaven which was a commonly accepted sign of dishonour (cf. the case of Bernice in Josephus, War 2, 313 f.; M. D. Hooker, "Authority on her head: an examination of 1 Cor. xi. 10", NTS 10, 1963–64, 410). Paul's argument at this point has two premises. The one is the propriety of covering the head in the presence of a superior; the other is the constitutional relationship of man and woman which gives a certain priority to the man. Given these two premises the propriety of veiling the woman in worship (which of all times is the most solemn occasion for recognizing the divine ordering of things) logically follows. However, in a situation where the former premise is neither recognized nor understood, the validity of the conclusion no longer has the same weight as it did in Paul's day.

(b) The priority of man in the order of creation in relation to the glory of God (vv. 7–9, 12). The argument is now developed in relation to the concept of → glory. Gen. 1:26 f. states that → man (Heb. 'ādām; Gk. anthrōpos) was made in the → image of God, i.e. male and female together. Here Paul speaks only of the male (Gk. anēr). Perhaps he is reading Gen. 2:18 ff. in the light of Gen. 1:26 f. On the other hand, he also couples together here the concepts of image and glory in a way which goes beyond the Gen. narratives. "For a man ought not to cover his head, since he is the image and the glory of God; but woman is the glory of man" (v. 7). Elsewhere Paul argues that man has fallen short of the glory of God (Rom. 3:23; cf. 1:21), and that the glory of God is revealed in the gospel in the face of Christ (2 Cor. 4:4 ff.) who restores the image of God in man (Col. 3:10). In addition to the priority of man in the created order and the significance of veiling, Paul here has two further premises which are implied in his conclusion. On the one hand, the glory of God should not be veiled in the presence of God, for this would be a contradiction in terms. Hence, the man should not be veiled. On the other hand, woman is the glory of man (for woman was made for man, cf. v. 9). Hence, the glory of man should be veiled in the presence of God (cf. F. F. Bruce, op. cit., 105 f.). Again it may be said that the practical application drawn from these premises depends upon how far they are understood and recognized in a community.

(c) The reference to the angels (v. 10). Here the Gk. texts says: "That is why the woman ought to have authority [exousia] over the head because of the angels." The substitution of "veil" (RSV) is an interpretative gloss which obscures the point. The veil is a sign of the woman's authority. In Christ she has an equal status with men before God. M. D. Hooker (op. cit.) argues that the veil was a sign of this new authority which was denied her in the synagogue. As a woman she may pray or prophesy (v. 5), but she must maintain due regard for her place in the created order. Whereas the man shows his authority by not being veiled, the woman shows hers by wearing a veil. The wearing of the veil manifests both the liberty and the restraint that belongs to the woman in Christ. The liberty (as in all things) derives from freedom in Christ; the restraint (as elsewhere) derives from the ordering of society which has divine sanction.

It seems unlikely that → angels are mentioned here because of possible sexual attraction (cf. Jude 6 and a possible interpretation of Gen. 6:2; Tertullian, On the Veiling of Virgins 7). F. F. Bruce sees the appeal to angels as an argument for propriety in gatherings of the people of God because angels are guardians of the created order (op. cit., 106; cf. G. B. Caird, Principalities and Powers, 1956, 17–22). In the Qumran texts angels were said to be present at meetings of the congregation (1QSa 2:8 f.; cf. 1 QM 7:6). A. Jaubert, however, claims that there is no support for regarding angels as guardians of order in meetings. She stresses the context of worship here and the rôle of angels in worship elsewhere. For angels are charged with the task of transmitting prayers to God (Rev. 8:3). They are the sign of the divine presence (Ps. 131 LXX). Angels enter communion with the congregation (1 QM 12:8; 1 QH 3:19–23). Therefore no offence should be given them (1QSa 2:5–9; 1 QM 7:6; CD 15:15 ff.; cf. A. Jaubert, op. cit., 427). The major premise of the argument is that one should not give offence, and in this particular case to the angels. The minor premise which is implied is that the veil is a sign of a woman's status and authority in the Christian community. Therefore women should be veiled in worship. Again it may be said that, whilst the guiding principles for Paul's recommendation hold good, the continued application of it depends upon the continued acceptance of all the premises of the argument. In a culture where the significance of veiling is no longer understood in the same way, the argument no longer has the same force.

(d) The appeal to custom grounded in the natural order (vv. 13–15). Paul shares the view that it is natural for men to have their hair short, though it may be grown longer on occasion in connection with a vow (Acts 18:18; cf. also Epictetus, 1, 16, 9–14 quoted by C. K. Barrett, The First Epistle to the Corinthians, 1968, 256 f.). The statement that the long hair of the woman is "her pride", "given to her for a covering" (v. 15) does not imply that if she has sufficient hair, she does not need to be veiled. Rather, the veiling of the woman in worship is seen as consonant with nature. The argument cannot be taken to imply scriptural sanction for insisting that man today must have closely cropped hair. What might be regarded as long hair in a male in twentieth-century western society might have passed for short hair in first-century middle-eastern society. On the other hand, unkempt inordinately long hair in a male is generally regarded as degrading (cf. v. 14). Paul's view of the woman's hair as "her pride" may also take up the thought that, just as in the presence of God the glory of man must be veiled (see above (b)), so too must the "pride" of the woman. In each case Paul uses the same word doxa. V. 16 concludes the argument by stating that this is the practice recognized by Paul and the other churches. The passage has been cited in support of the contention that women must wear hats in worship today. If this application were valid, the argument would support not the wearing of hats but veiling in the eastern sense. However, the above discussion has shown that its force depends upon the common understanding of certain premises which were valid in the context of Paul's culture. Where these no longer obtain, the conclusions also no longer obtain, even though the motivating principle of maintaining the liberty of the spirit with due regard to the order of nature and society still holds. C. Brown

4. In Eph. 4 the head is contrasted with the → body (art. sōma): Christ is the head of his body (v. 15). The body is supplied from the head and grows because of it (v. 16). To describe the relationship of the Lord to his people, the → church, Eph. makes use of the concept of the primal man: the church is to grow eis andra teleion, into the perfect or complete man (v. 13). In this picture, Christ is the head, and as head he sustains the whole body. Thus, in v. 15 the head determines the relationship of love and truth in the body of Christ, i.e. the fellowship of those who practise truth and through love grow up into him. The relationship of kephalē to sōma expresses the authority of Christ (cf. Col. 2:10) and the corresponding subordination of the church. It expresses participation and dependence of the body on the head for the gift of life. It also contains "the element of an eschatological orientation of the Church" (H. Schlier, TDNT III 680). The head is always the heavenly goal of the body which cannot be attained except in a body sustained by faith and revelation. Eph. 1:21 f. declares that all powers are now subject to Christ who is "the head of all things for the church." The archē, the principality which previously was so important, is now one of the many subject to Christ. The application to Christ of archē (RSV "beginning") in Col. 1:18 (where he is also said to be "the head of the body, the church") does not contradict this, for here the word stands in polemic juxtaposition to the archai (v. 16). (→ Beginning, art. archē.)
K. Munzer

5. The rare vb. anakephalaioomai, which is found in Aristotle but is more common in late Gk. literature, means to bring something to a kephalaion, to sum up, recapitulate. It is found in the OT only in Theod. and the Quinta to Ps. 71:20. It is used in Rom. 13:9 of the individual commandments which are "summed up in this word, 'You shall love your neighbour as yourself.' " In Eph. 1:10 it occurs in the statement of God's "plan for the fullness of time to recapitulate [anakephalaiōsasthai] all things in Christ, the things in the heavens and the things upon the earth." The RSV translation "unite" stresses the unity implied in the vb. as does J. B. Lightfoot's comment that it implies "the entire harmony of the universe, which shall no longer contain alien and discordant elements, but of which all the parts shall find their centre and bond of union in Christ" (Notes on the Epistles of St. Paul, 1895, 322). The thought of unity has affinity with the use of the vb. in Rom. and is one of the great themes of Eph. (cf. 2:14–22; 4:3 f.). But there may also be the overtone of renewal which is in fact a condition of unity. Christ and his people, both Jew and Gentile, comprise the "one new man" (2:15; cf. 4:13). Moreover, this affects the whole created order. In his body which represents the plērōma (→ Fullness), the heavenly domain of his presence, Christ draws all things to himself, and fills all in all (2:22; cf. 1:10). The church is "the centre, the mid-point from which Christ exercises his invisible lordship over the whole whole" (O. Cullmann, The Christology of the New Testament, 1963², 229). The concept of recapitulation (Lat. recapitulatio; Gk. anakephalaiōsis) features in the thought of Irenaeus (Haer. 5, 29, 2) and other church fathers (cf. H. Schlier, TDNT III 681 f.; Lampe, 106). C. Brown

→ Body, → Church, → Flesh, → Fullness, → Hand

(a). N. Adler, "Head", EBT I 355–60; S. Bedale, "The Meaning of kephalē in the Pauline Epistles", JTS New Series 5, 1954, 211–15; and "The Theology of the Church", in F. L. Cross, ed., Studies in Ephesians, 1956, 64–75; R. W. Crabb, The kephalē Concept in the Pauline Tradition with Special Emphasis on Colossians, Dissertation, San Francisco Theological Seminary, 1966 (microfilm); O. Cullmann, The Christology of the New Testament, 1959; R. H. Fuller, The Foundations of New Testament Christology, 1965; M. D. Hooker, "Authority on her head: an examination of 1 Cor. xi. 10", NTS 10, 1963–64, 410 ff.; G. Howard, "The Head/Body Metaphors of Ephesians", NTS 20, 1973–74, 350–6; E. Käsemann, "A Primitive Christian Baptismal Liturgy", in Essays on New Testament Themes, 1964, 149–68; New Testament Questions of Today, 1969, 410–2; E. Lohse, Colossians and Philemon, 1971, 52 ff.; J. A. T. Robinson, The Body: A Study in Pauline Theology, 1952; H. Schlier, kephalē, anakephalaioomai, TDNT III 673–82; W. O. Walker, Jr., " 1 Corinthians 11:2–16 and Paul's View Regarding Women", JBL 94, 1975, 94–110.

(b). P. Benoit, "Corps, tête et plérôme dans les épîtres de la captivité", RB 63, 1956, 5–44; P. Brunner, "Das Hirtenamt und die Frau", Lutherische Rundschau 8, 1959; H.-J. Gabathuler, Jesus Christus, Haupt der Kirche – Haupt der Welt: Der Christushymnus Kolosser 1, 15–20 in der theologischen Forschung der letzten 130 Jahre, ATHAnt 45, 1965; A. Jaubert, "La voile des femmes (I Cor. xi. 2–16)", NTS 18, 1971–72, 419–30; H. Lietzmann, An die Korinther I/II, revised by W. G. Kümmel, HNT 9, 1969⁵; E. Lohmeyer, Die Briefe an die Kolosser und an Philemon, KEK 9, with supplement by W. Schmauch, 1968¹⁴; H. Schlier, Christus und die Kirche im Epheserbrief, 1930.

Heal

When human well-being and good health are impaired, God is actively involved in the work of restoration, and Christians have the responsibility of sharing in this ministry. The idea of bringing about recovery from bodily or mental sickness is expressed most frequently by therapeuō (cf. Eng. "therapy"), and sometimes by iaomai. therapeuō originally carried the idea of attendance upon superiors, or of cultic service (like thrēskō, which has a related root). But significantly this idea is very rare in the NT, where the whole direction and purpose of such service is changed. Anyone or anything healed, i.e. freed from infirmity and sickness, is spoken of as hygiēs. hygiainō, the related vb., is used for bodily healing only in Lk., where it is synonymous with therapeuō and iaomai. It appears principally in the Pastoral Epistles in connection with sound → teaching.

θεραπεύω — θεραπεύω (therapeuō), heal, cure; θεράπων (therapōn), servant; θεραπεία (therapeia), service, treatment.

CL & OT In profane Greek therapeuō has the meaning to serve, to be in service to (a superior); thus also to serve, in the sense of venerating the gods, i.e. in cultic worship, to care for (e.g. as a doctor), whence finally to cure, usually by medical means.

The LXX frequently uses therapōn for the Heb. 'eḇeḏ, attendant, servant. The use of the vb. seems rather imprecise, even haphazard: twice for yāšaḇ, to sit (Est. 2:19; 6:10); once for 'āḇaḏ (Isa. 54:17); once for ḥālâh (piel), to appease (Prov. 19:6); once for bāqaš (piel), to seek (Prov. 29:26).

NT With regard to the incidence of therapeuō in the NT, it is significant (a) that out of 43 occurrences, no less than 40 are found in the Synoptics and the Acts; (b) that, except in one place (Acts 17:25), therapeuō has exclusively the meaning to heal. This means that in the NT therapeuō is never used in its profane sense to serve (cf. therapeia Lk. 12:42, "household servants"; or therapōn Heb. 3:5, "servant"). The cultic usage for the worship of God is found only in Acts 17:25, where Paul concludes from Isa. 42:5 (cf. Acts 17:24 f.) that God as the Creator of the world and the Lord of heaven and earth does not dwell in temples made by man and therefore cannot be "worshipped" in the sacrificial cult (cf. Acts 7:42 f.). ([F.F.B.] The emphasis of Acts 17:25 is better brought out in the NEB rendering: "It is not because he lacks anything that he accepts service [therapeuetai] at men's hands.")

1. Only in Lk. 4:23 in the proverb "Physician, heal yourself" and in 8:43 (the woman with the issue of blood "could not be healed by anyone") does therapeuō denote healing by ordinary medical means. In the rest of the passages therapeuō is used to describe the miraculous healings wrought by Jesus and his disciples.

(a) In the Gospels the work of Jesus is presented in terms of teaching and working → miracles (Matt. 4:23 f.; 9:35; Lk. 6:18 and passim). Healing plays an essential part in Christ's miraculous work, but the latter must be seen in the context of his teaching if it is to be understood aright. This is especially clear in the composition of the Gospel of Matt., where the two great collections of Jesus' → teaching (chs. 5–7) and of his → miracles (chs. 8–9) are enclosed between the two almost identical verses Matt. 4:23 and 9:35 (Jesus "taught in their synagogues and preached the gospel of the kingdom, and healed all manner of sickness and all manner of disease among the people", therapeuō being used in both places). This emphasizes Christ's twofold office of teaching and healing (cf. H. J. Held in G. Bornkamm, G. Barth and H. J. Held, Tradition and Interpretation in Matthew, 1963, 246).

While Jesus again and again heals the sick (Matt. 4:24; 12:15; 14:14; 15:30 and passim), this does not put him into the category of the Hel. theioi anthrōpoi (divine men), who in their miraculous acts of healing demonstrated their divine abilities. Rather, the Servant of the Lord is → fulfilling the OT prophecies by his healing miracles (Matt. 8:16, 17; cf. Isa. 53:4). The healings do not prove Jesus to be the Christ, but viewed against their OT background they are seen to be Christ's act of obedience and thus a necessary element in his messianic work. This conviction lies behind the many summaries (Matt. 4:24; Mk. 1:34; 3:10 and passim) which emphasize that all who turn to Jesus find healing – a further echo of the OT (cf. Isa. 53). This is why he has power to heal on the → Sabbath (Matt. 12:10; Mk. 3:2; Lk. 6:7; 13:14). In taking up the cause of the helpless Jesus proves himself to be the → Servant of God (Matt. 8:7; 19:2).

(b) In Mk. 6:5, 6 there is the remarkable statement that in Nazareth Jesus could do no mighty work. It is quite clear from most of the detailed accounts of healing that → faith on the part of those concerned is already present before they are healed by Jesus (cf. Matt. 8:8–10, 13; 9:27 ff.; 15:21 ff.; Lk. 8:43 ff.; cf. Mk. 5:34 and passim). Thus after the disciples' failure to heal the lunatic boy (Matt. 17:16), the father confidently turned to Jesus for help, and his faith was vindicated, for the lad was healed (v. 18). Healing is faith's reward, because faith is confident that even when men have done their utmost and failed, the power of God in Christ is inexhaustible. Thus healing does not initiate faith but assumes it (cf. Mk. 6:5 f.). It is not that faith is the power which effects the miracle; it is rather preparedness for the miracle.

(c) Christ healed men not only of bodily infirmities but also of demon possession (Matt. 8:16; Mk. 1:34; 3:10 f.; Lk. 4:40 f. and passim), here too revealing his messianic claims. Satanic powers are subject to his power and word, and by exercising power over the demons through his word, he is utterly different from the ordinary exorcists of his time. As he casts out → demons, we glimpse the splendour of Christ the King.

(d) Jesus also gave his disciples a share in his healing power (Matt. 10:1, 8; Mk. 6:13; Lk. 9:1, 6). They entered into his work not only in the sense of teaching his doctrine, but in the sense of being empowered for the same messianic works which he himself performed. For this, implicit faith is required (Matt. 17:16 ff.), the faith by which the early church experienced the enabling Christ in its midst (cf. Acts 5:16; 8: 7 and passim). In the healings wrought by the disciples the church was given a token of the active presence of its exalted Lord.

2. To summarize: In the NT the stories of healing are not told in order to "prove" the messiahship of Jesus by demonstrating his power over natural laws. "The miracle does not consist in the breaking of the causal nexus of natural law. This does not come within the purview of the NT. The real miracle is victory in the conflict with forces which struggle for mastery over this cosmos. The NT thus looks into the depths of world occurrence" (H. W. Beyer, TDNT III 131). Although the healing miracles, in common with all the miracles in the Gospels, are repeatedly given prominence as outworkings of the Lord's power (cf. Matt. 14:14; 19:2, where therapeuein replaces didaskein), nevertheless they are not regarded as having any importance in their own right.

F. Graber, D. Müller

ἰάομαι

ἰάομαι (iaomai), to cure, to restore; ἴασις (iasis), healing; ἴαμα (iama), healing; ἰατρός (iatros), physician.

CL iaomai (from Homer onwards), to cure, restore, is used in the literal sense as a medical term, and also metaphorically and figuratively: to free from an evil, e.g. ignorance (Sallust) or some intellectual shortcoming; to heal psychological illnesses etc. Likewise the nouns iasis and iama, healing, and iatros, physician, are used both literally and metaphorically.

1. The various types of medical treatment throughout human history can be properly understood only when one is acquainted with the ideas which have been held regarding the different causes of sickness (→ weakness), i.e. what has to be fought against in healing. Apart from external injuries, where the cause is obvious, sicknesses are for primitive man not simply physiological phenomena, the causes and nature of which can be investigated, and which can therefore possibly be cured. Originally sicknesses were ascribed to attacks by external forces (by gods, demons, → sin, → guilt, → magical powers such as a → curse, the ban etc.). To bring about a cure a number of methods were employed: exorcisms (to cast out demons); various magical practices (the earliest beginnings of medicine); influences based on suggestion; or prayers and offerings, in an attempt to appease the deity. Both the sickness and its cure, therefore, were believed to arise from the intervention of a superior will, though this is not to say that the origins of rational medical treatment are to be found only in magic and enchantment. As early as the 3rd cent. B.C. the science of medicine reached its first flowering among the ancient Egyptians. But the honour of having set medical science upon an empirical and rational basis belongs above all to the Greeks (cf. F. Büchsel, TDNT III 195). Already from Homer we learn of the high esteem enjoyed by physicians in general (cf. Il. 2, 514), especially those of Egypt (cf. Od. 4, 220–233), though admittedly he had not reached the point of distinguishing clearly between medicine and magic. The oath of Hippocrates (born 460 B.C.) is a remarkable testimony to the fact that, as medicine in Greece came into its own, there gradually arose a specific code of ethics among physicians (for text and literature see F. Büchsel, TDNT III 196; C. F. H. Henry, ed., Baker's Dictionary of Christian Ethics, 1973, 291).

2. It remains true, however, that in the ancient world no clear line of demarcation can be drawn between rational and magical ideas of reality. In his attempts to cope with life, the man of antiquity came face to face with an immense variety of powers, so complex as to be generally beyond the grasp of our minds, which think exclusively in scientific terms. It follows that the relationship between the origins of medicine as a rational science, and "supernatural" healings attributed to superior powers, is inextricably involved. Thus we constantly find that among different peoples special healing deities were worshipped (in earlier Gk. times e.g. Apollo, later Asclepius; in Egypt e.g. Imhotep; in the Assyrian–Babylonian world Tammuz). Temple-like edifices were built to them and used as healing centres (e.g. the celebrated Asclepieion of Cos or the temple of Epidauros), where priests acted as physicians and ran what can only be described as a healing business. All kinds of offerings were presented, not merely in order to obtain a cure but also as thanksgiving for miraculous cures already obtained. In the ancient world there were numerous accounts of miraculous healing, often embellished to the point of being grotesque. Anything was possible. We even read of tricks being played on the deity in order to obtain a cure, whereupon the deity would avenge himself with a punitive miracle.

Kings were originally chief priests as well, and as such had the gift of healing (cf. the royal customs which still obtained in the Middle Ages, e.g. Shakespeare's Macbeth IV, 3, or Philip the Fair of France: "The King touches you, God heals you"). It is therefore no surprise to read, e.g., that the Emperor Vespasian healed the blind and lame by his touch and with the use of spittle (TDNT III 198).

F. Büchsel sums up the situation when he says that "the gods are doctors and saviours both in a cosmic and universal sense and also in an inward sense. The typically Greek thought form of analogy leads here to a particular conception of divine rule in the world. The gods become mediators between Zeus and men, and as such they dispense healing" (ibid.).

OT 1. In the LXX iaomai stands frequently for the Heb. rāpā', to heal, cure. It is characteristic of faith in Yahweh that he alone is the source of all healing ("I, Yahweh, am your healer", Exod. 15:26; cf. 2 Ki. 5:7). To turn to a physician (let alone another deity) for healing could on occasion be unbelief, distrust of Yahweh, and an offence against the First Commandment (2 Ki. 1; and 2 Chr. 16:12). As sicknesses come from Yahweh himself, he is the only one who can bind up and heal (Job 5:18). For the same reason the OT knows little of the distinction between external ills with an obvious cause (injuries sustained through accident, in war, from animals' bites, etc.), and other ills arising from within (cf. CL above, 1). In every aspect of his life man is dependent on Yahweh alone. This does not mean that demons and other powers have nothing to do with sickness. Rather they are thought of as being in God's service (cf. Exod. 12:23; Hab. 3:5 and passim).

This view of sickness and healing as marks of Yahweh's visitation or of his renewed favour often brings a man – particularly the devout man – into grievous inward conflict (cf. the Book of Job and the Psalms, e.g. Pss. 38; 51; and especially 88). This can lead to rebellion against Yahweh, when the malady is felt to be undeserved (Ps. 73:21; Job 9:17 ff.). And yet the devout man turns in prayer, lamentation and thanks to God alone as the only one who can grant him healing (Ps. 30:3; 103:3; cf. Wis. 16:12).

In spite of this radical attitude to sickness and healing, there are some passages which indicate the use of medical treatment (e.g. 1 Ki. 17:21; 2 Ki. 4:34; 5:13 ff.; 20:7), though the means used here by the prophets are seldom "medical" as we understand the word. These are miraculous cures, carried out in reliance upon the healing power of Yahweh.

In the OT the → priest is not regarded as a healer. His function was restricted to that of a medical officer of health who ascertained that healing had taken place (Lev. 13 f.). The earlier books contain very few references to physicians (cf. Gen. 50:2; Isa. 3:7; Jer. 8:22). These probably go back to Egyptian or later to Greek influences. This situation changed at a much later period (cf. especially Sir. 38). But here too, even though the work of a physician is regarded in a positive light, he is God's servant in the strictest sense. It is God who appoints him and through prayer grants him wisdom for his work (vv. 1 f.; 9–14). An important element in the OT understanding of sickness and healing is the idea that bodily sickness is very closely connected with sin and is therefore a manifestation of God's wrath against specific transgressions (Ps. 32:1 ff.; 38:3 ff.; 39 f. and passim). Here healing becomes a picture of forgiveness, of God's mercy, of his nearness (Isa. 6:10; Ps. 30:3; 41:5; 103:3 and passim).

2. In Judaism, too, medicine was generally held in considerable suspicion, although we do read of rabbis who were also physicians. Judaism shared the ideas which were widespread in relation to miraculous healings. Incantations, invocations and other practices (e.g. the use of spittle in healing) still play a large part (cf. SB I 627; II 15, 17; IV 527 ff.). With few exceptions, the rabbis themselves do not appear in tradition as miraculous healers. "Most closely related historically to the NT tradition" are perhaps "the old biblical materials (Abraham as a miracle-worker in the apocryphal Genesis 20:21 ff.) and the Rab. miracles stories of the Tannaitic period (e.g. R. Hanina ben Dosa according to Ber. 34b)" (O. Michel BHHW II 679; cf. Moore, Judaism, I, 177 f.; II, 235 f.).

NT In the NT iaomai occurs 26 times, of which 20 are in the Synoptic Gospels and Acts; iasis 3 times, all in Lk.; iatros 6 times, all in the Synoptic Gospels, except Col. 4:14 [" Luke the beloved physician"]; iama 3 times, all in 1 Cor. 12. It is clear from these figures that, apart from iama, this word-group occurs chiefly in the Synoptic Gospels and esp. in Lk. (20 times out of a total 38).

1. The use of iaomai corresponds in the Gospels and in Acts to that of → therapeuō. Hence, the remarks made under therapeuō on the theological assessment of healing miracles apply here also. The cures wrought by Jesus and then by his disciples are signs of the incoming → kingdom of God (Lk. 9:2, 11, 42; Acts 10:38 and passim) and are thus the fulfilment of OT prophecy (cf. Isa. 35:3–6; 61:1 f. etc.). "For the Evangelist Jesus is the one upon whom God's Spirit rests, and who brings in the eschatological time of salvation; in his liberating and redeeming work he fulfils God's will, which has already been declared by the prophets . . . in Scripture. A general amnesty for debtors and prisoners, as in the year of release, becomes a picture of the ministry of Jesus" (O. Michel, BHHW II 679 f.).

This is not to deny that the NT shares the view of sickness which was common at that time (cf. Lk. 13:11; Acts 12:23 and passim). As we saw under CL and OT, the miraculous cures wrought by Jesus are not without parallels in the extra-biblical world. In the opinion of many scholars the deeds reported of Jesus and his disciples are not always free from embellishments and accretions of later miraculous detail (cf. Mk. 5:1 ff.; Lk. 22:51; Acts 12:23; 5:15 f. and passim; or the heightened account in Mk. 5:21–43 par. Matt. 9:18–26, Lk. 8:40–56; Lk. 7:11 ff.; Jn. 11:1 ff.). But even though the NT records of healing show all the familiar features (e.g. the helplessness of physicians, Mk. 5:26 ff.; the instantaneous nature of the miracle, Lk. 8:47; the patient's ability to carry his own mattress home, Jn. 5:8 ff., etc.), a comparison with the romantically embellished stories found e.g. in the Gospel of Thomas or in the apocryphal Acts of the Apostles reveals a striking fact. The NT accounts are simple and straightforward. They do not aim to glorify some miracle-worker of the ancient world, or even miracles as such. In most cases, the original account of what took place is still very much in mind, and such events are viewed in the light of Christ's message. Farce, magic and sensationalism are absent. The healings wrought by Jesus are determined by his → word and → faith (Matt. 8:8, 13; 15:28; Lk. 7:7 and passim). They are therefore (for all their similarities) fundamentally different from the healings in the rest of the ancient world. Jesus also breaks through the narrow Jewish doctrine of retribution (i.e. that every sickness must be the result of a certain → sin; cf. Jn. 9:2 ff.), without thereby denying the basic connection between sin and sickness (e.g. Jn. 5:13 f.; cf. Jas. 5:16). The focal point of all the healings is not the miracle but the healer himself, whose authoritative preaching has brought in the dawn of the new age (cf. the repeated statement in Lk. that Jesus healed all: Lk. 6:19; Acts 10:38). "In all the Gospels the power of Jesus is described as an obvious fact, self-evident both to his disciples and to his opponents. What then is meant by the express statement that a special power came forth from him (Mk. 5:30 ff.; Lk. 6:19)? This idea, which has close Hellenistic associations, is meant realistically and is clearly connected with a certain view of the Spirit" (O. Michel, op. cit., 680 f.).

Even though our rational thinking finds certain difficulties in regard to healing miracles, we should beware of resting content with merely psychological explanations. With our modern historical approach we are in danger of missing the real force of the language and of the claims which it makes. For as a rule the real point of a miracle is not the miracle itself but what it reveals of Jesus. "In spite of every analogy, the miraculous healings of Jesus thus occupy a unique position in religious history. They are inseparably connected with the uniqueness of Jesus and with His unparalleled sense of mission" (A. Oepke, TDNT III 213).

2. In 1 Cor. 12 the word iama, healing, occurs 3 times as Paul enumerates the various spiritual gifts. All the apostles were given gifts of healing as well as being commissioned to preach the gospel (therapeuō is used in Matt. 10:18; Mk. 6:13; Lk. 9:1; iaomai in Lk. 9:2; see also Acts, e.g. 2:43). But Paul here makes it clear that healing can also be carried out by individuals whom God has expressly endowed with a spiritual gift for this purpose. The gift of healing is one function among others, all of which are co-ordinated with one another in the church as the body of Christ.

F. Graber, D. Müller

ὑγιής

ὑγιής (hygiēs), healthy, well; ὑγιαίνω (hygiainō), make well again, cure.

CL hygiēs (from Homer onwards) means: (a) lit. healthy (in body), strong, active, sound; (b) metaphorically of good understanding, sensible, shrewd, sober, of good judgment. Likewise hygiainō means to be healthy, to be of sound mind, to be shrewd or sensible. From Aristotle onwards hygiaine was often used in the sense of "farewell!"

In Gk. literature (as early as Homer and especially later in Gk. popular philosophy) hygiēs or hygiainō (frequently in conjunction with logos) is commonly used to describe an idea or opinion as judicious, sensible, i.e. "healthy" as opposed to being false or "sick" (cf. e.g. Plato, Phdr. 242c; Epictetus 1, 11, 28; 3, 9, 5; Philo, Abr. 223; 275).

OT In the LXX hygiēs and hygiainō (about 50 times) are used only in a direct sense (e.g. Gen. 37:14; Isa. 38:21; cf. Lev. 13:10 ff. for miḥyâh, growth of new flesh. Generally hygiaine stands for the Heb. šālôm, used as in later profane Gk. as a greeting in the sense, "Peace be to you" (1 Sam. 25:6; 2 Sam. 18:28; 20:9; also Gen. 29:6; 43:27 f.; Exod. 4:18; cf. 2 Macc. 9:19 and passim).

NT Of the 23 passages in which hygiēs or hygiainō are found in the NT, no less than 12 are in the Gospels and 9 in the Pastoral Epistles. Otherwise the word group is found in the rest of the NT only in Acts 4:10 and 3 Jn. 2.

1. In the Gospels and Acts hygiēs and hygiainō are used without exception in the literal sense of healthy, well.

(a) Generally the well-being is the result of a healing miracle (→ miracle; cf. therapeuō and iaomai) wrought by Jesus (Matt. 15:31; 12:13; Lk. 7:10; Jn. 5:9 ff.) or the disciples (Acts 4:10). → Faith occasions the saving act and so the healing. According to Mk. 5:25 ff., this faith was not always free from magical elements, but the word of Jesus, "Go in peace, and be healed [hygiēs] of your disease", confirms even this unusual miracle.

In all these passages, however, hygiēs and hygiainō do not denote merely a physically healthy condition. Anyone healed through meeting Jesus is a person healed in his entire being by the word of the messiah (Jn. 7:23), i.e. also saved from his sin (cf. Lk. 5:21 ff.). In the healing of the lame, the blind and the deaf (Matt. 15:21; cf. Mk. 7:37; 8:23) the promise of God's coming (Isa. 35:4 ff.) was fulfilled. In these passages, therefore, good health is not the result of medical treatment but indicates a more profound healing, i.e. it is a sign that the age of salvation has dawned.

(b) As in the above passages, hygiainonta in Lk. 15:27 does not mean merely physical well-being (cf. 15:24). Having returned from this period of alienation and come home to his father's house, the prodigal is re-instated to his original status as son, i.e. he has now become well. In Jesus and his healing word man encounters the Father running to meet him and is restored to full health. Thus when faced with those who object to his mingling with the outcasts of society, Jesus justifies his mission with the aphorism: "Those who are well [hygiainontes] have no need of a physician, but those who are sick" (Lk. 5:31). It is quite possible that Jesus is here adopting a popular saying in order to justify his behaviour and to show that he was acting as the messiah (cf. Mk. 2:17, where the word used is ischyontes, the strong). When Jesus called the Pharisees and scribes "those who are well", he may not have intended it to be taken ironically. In this case he was not disputing their "good health", though it must now prove itself in a right attitude to the work of God in Christ (cf. Lk. 15:28–32), lest it degenerate into self-righteousness and is destroyed. ([Ed.] On the other hand an ironical meaning is a natural one in view of what is said about the religious leaders elsewhere in Lk. [5:17, 21, 30, 33; 6:2, 7; 7:30, 36; 10:25–29; 11:37–54; 12:1; 13:33; 14:1 ff.; 15:2; 16:14; 17:20 f.; 19:39].)

2. The metaphorical meaning is found in the Pastoral Epistles, where hygiainō and hygiēs are characteristic terms for "(to be) sound". Thus hygiainein (en) tē pistei, to be sound in the faith (Tit. 1:13; 2:2); hygiainousa didaskalia, sound doctrine (1 Tim. 1:10; 2 Tim. 4:3; Tit. 1:9; 2:1); hygiainontes logoi, the sound words of Jesus Christ (1 Tim. 6:3; 2 Tim. 1:13; cf. logos hygiēs, Tit. 2:8). In this usage the influence of Greek popular philosophy upon the Pastoral Epistles is felt (see above CL). Such a usage is completely absent from the LXX. In the Pastoral Epistles, however, hygiainō, which is nowhere used in the rest of the NT in association with "word" or "doctrine", should not be taken to imply that the message of Christ simply has to be made acceptable to the intellect. Rather, problems such as heresy are to be solved by an appeal to the fixed norms of Pauline doctrine (1 Tim. 1:6 ff.; 6:3; 2 Tim. 4:3 f. and passim; cf. 1 Tim. 1:1 ff.; Tit. 1:1–3 etc.). "The church uses doctrine as such to combat the 'enthusiasm' of the gnostics, and sound doctrine, handed down in its purity, to combat their false doctrine" (W. Schmithals, *RGG*³ V 145). This approach, however, reveals the change which has taken place in the way the message is understood. Whereas in the earlier Pauline epistles the gospel is viewed as something dynamic (cf. his dialectic of wisdom and foolishness), the Pastoral Epistles see it as a fixed body of received doctrine which can be used as a clear-cut standard to counter heresy. ([Ed.] This must not, however, be overstated, for in the same letter which made use of this dialectic Paul could also claim to be handing on the tradition which he received as the basis of faith [1 Cor. 15:8 ff.; cf. 1:18 ff.].) In the Pastoral Epistles false doctrine is opposed not by detailed specific refutation, but with the simple assertion that it does not conform to the doctrinal tradition and so is not "healthy" or "sound". Hence, to be "sound in faith" (Tit. 2:2) means to hold the received apostolic doctrine as normative and binding.

The important place occupied by hygiainō and hygiēs in the Pastoral Epistles has often figured largely in the debate as to the authorship of these epistles (cf. the excursus on 1 Tim. 1:10 in M. Dibelius and H. Conzelmann, The Pastoral Epistles [Hermeneia] 1974; and the survey by W. Kasch in EKL III, 79 f. On the question of authorship see further C. Spicq, Les Épîtres Pastorales, 1947, xxi–ccviii; D. Guthrie, The Pastoral Epistles, 1957, 11–53; J. N. D. Kelly, The Pastoral Epistles, 1963, 1–36.) D. Müller

→ Blind, → Body, → Deaf, Dumb, → Flesh, → Lame, → Leprosy, → Miracle, → Weakness, Sickness, → Work

(a). P. E. Adolph, "Healing, Health", ZPEB III 54–58; H. J. Blair, "Spiritual Healing. An Enquiry", EQ 30, 1958, 147–51; C. J. Brim, Medicine in the Bible, 1936; E. Andrews, "Healing, Gifts of", IDB II 548 f.; J. P. Baker, Salvation and Wholeness, 1973; H. W. Beyer, therapeia etc., TDNT III 128–32; T. W. Crafer, The Healing Miracles in the Book of Acts, 1939; F. N. Davey, "Healing in the New Testament", in The Miracles and the Resurrection, SPCK Theological Collections 3, 1964, 50–63; V. Edmunds and G. C. Scorer, Some Thoughts on Faith Healing, 1956; H. W. Frost, Miraculous Healing, 1951; E. M. B. Green, The Meaning of Salvation, 1965, 218–25; J. A. Hardon, "The Miracle Narratives in the Acts of the Apostles", CBQ 16, 1954, 303–18; R. K. Harrison, "Medicines of the Bible", Canadian Association of Medical Students and Internes Journal, 10, 1, 1951, 17–20; and "Healing, Health", IDB II 541–48; K. Heim, Jesus the Lord, 1959; H. J. Held, "Matthew as Interpreter of the Miracle Stories", in G. Bornkamm, G. Barth and H. J. Held, Tradition and Interpretation in Matthew, 1960, 165–299; W. K. Hobart, The Medical Language of St. Luke, 1882 (but on this subject see also A. Harnack, Luke the Physician, 1907; and H. J. Cadbury, Style and Literary Method of Luke, 1920); D. Johnson, In the Service of Medicine, 1968; R. A. Lambourne, Community, Church and Healing, 1963; M. J. Langford, "The Problem of the Meaning of 'Miracle' ", Religious Studies 7, 1971, 43–52; H. van der Loos, The Miracles of Jesus, NovT Supplements 9, 1965; J. S. McEwen, "The Ministry of Healing", SJT 7, 1954, 133–52; H. N. and A. L. Moldenke, Plants of the Bible, 1952; F. Mussner, The Miracles of Jesus: An Introduction, 1970; H. P. Newsholme, Health, Disease and Integration, 1929; G. von Rad, Old Testament Theology, I, 272–79; A. Oepke, TDNT III 194–215; A. Richardson, The Miracle Stories of the Gospels, 1941; A. Schlemmer, Faith and Medicine, 1957; A. R. Short, The Bible and Modern Medicine, 1953; C. R. Smith, A Physician Examines the Bible, 1950; R. Swinburne, The Concept of Miracle, 1970; M. F. Unger, "Divine Healing", Bibliotheca Sacra 128, 1971, 234–44; A. Vögtle, "The Miracles of Jesus against their Background", in U. J. Schultz, ed., Jesus in His Time, 1971, 96–105; L. D. Weatherhead, Psychology, Religion and Healing, revised ed. 1954; J. Wilkinson, "A Study of Healing in the Gospel according to John", SJT 20, 1967, 442–61; "Healing in the Epistle of James", SJT 24, 1971, 326–45; and "The Mission Charge to the Twelve and Modern Medical, Missions" SJT 27, 1974, 313–28. H. W. Wolff, Anthropology of the Old Testament, 1974, 143–48.

(b). K. Beth, "Heilung", *RGG*³ III 194 ff.; W. Beyer, Gibt es Heilungen von körperlicher Krankheit durch Geisteskraft?, 1921; H. Doebert, Das Charisma der Krankenheilung, 1960; A. Dupont-Sommer, "Exorcisme et guérisons dans les écrits de Qoumrân", Vetus Testament Supplements 7, Congress Volume, 1959, 246 ff.; F. Fenner, Die Krankheit im Neuen Testament, 1930; H. Greeven, Krankheit und Heilung, 1948; H. Haag, ed., Bibel-Lexikon, 1956, 963 f., 1724 ff.; A. Harnack, "Medizinisches in der ältesten Kirchengeschichte", TU 8, 4, 1892; J. Hempel, " 'Ich bin der Herr dein Arzt' (Exod. 15, 26)", TLZ 82, 1957, 809–26; "Heilung als Symbol und Wirklichkeit im biblischen Schrifttum", Nachrichten von der Gesellschaft der Wissenschaften zu Göttingen Philosophisch-historische Klasse, 1958, 3, 237–314; J. Hempel and O. Michel, "Heilen", BHHW II 678 ff.; P. Humbert, "Maladie et médicine dans l'Ancien Testament", Revue d'Histoire et de Philosophie Religieuses, 41, 1964, 1–29; W. Kasch, "Pastoralbriefe", EKL III 79 ff.; J. Leipoldt, Von Epidauros bis Lourdes, 1957; J. Ott, "Die Bezeichnung Christi als iatros in der urchristlichen Literatur", Der Katholik 90, 1910, 454 ff.; J. Scharbert, Der Schmerz im Alten Testament, 1955; F. J. Schierse, "Hat Krankheit einen Sinn?", Stimmen der Zeit 84, 1959, 241–55; W. Schmithals, "Pastoralbriefe", *RGG*³ V, 145.

Hear, Obey

The word hear embraces both physical hearing and the apprehension of something with the mind. Similarly, the Gk. vb. akouō and the noun akoē, as used in the NT, can have both meanings, though originally these words denoted only the former. Various compounds are used to denote apprehension with the mind. eisakouō and epakouō stress attentive listening, while the emphatic forms hypakouō and hypakoē (lit. hear beneath) mean to obey and obedience. The linguistic and conceptual relationship between akouō and hypakouō recurs in Old and Middle Eng. in the use of the same word for both hear and obey. It can still be traced in some modern languages, e.g. Ger. hören and gehorchen. The former includes the latter, and in some contexts can be substituted for it. Conversely, parakouō and parakoē (lit. hear beside) denote inattentive hearing, missing, not hearing, and thus disobedience.

ἀκούω

ἀκούω (akouō), hear, listen, attend, perceive by hearing; ἀκοή (akoē), hearing, the ear, a thing heard, message, teaching, report, rumour; ἀκροατής (akroatēs), hearer; εἰσακούω (eisakouō), obey, pass. to be heard; ἐπακούω (epakouō), listen to, hearken to; ἐπακροάομαι (epakroaomai), listen attentively; παρακούω (parakouō), fail to hear, take no heed; παρακοή (parakoē), disobedience; ἐνωτίζω (enōtizō), pay attention to, hear.

CL 1. akouō (Homer on) means to hear and refers primarily to the perception of sounds by the sense of hearing. The person or thing heard is in the acc.; the person from whom something is heard is in the gen. or else is indicated by the preps. apo, para or ek. An impersonal obj. can also be in the gen. Hearing, however, covers not only sense perception but also the apprehension and acceptance by the mind of the content of what is heard. This led to differences of linguistic usage which are discussed below in connection with Heb. šāma' and which also occur in secular Gk.

The related noun akoē (attested from Homer on) means: (a) hearing, the sense of hearing; (b) the act of hearing; (c) the organ of hearing, the ear; (d) the content of hearing, the message.

2. Hearing plays a part in every religion. The general tendency of the Gk. and Hel. world, however, was to stress the seeing of the divinity (cf. W. Michaelis, horaō, TDNT V 320 f.). It is seldom that one meets in the apocalyptic literature of Hel. mysticism (Apuleius, Corpus Hermeticum, 2nd or 3rd cents. A.D.) hearing as a means through which revelation has been received. On the other hand, the idea that the gods hear and listen is not foreign to paganism. We read of the ears of the gods, and the adj. epēkoos, listening, answering, is applied to the divinity on many Hel. inscriptions.

OT 1. In the LXX akouō or akoē stands consistently for Heb. šāma'. It shares the shades of meaning of the Heb. vb. Here too the primary meaning is that of sense perception (e.g. the hearing of a trumpet, 2 Sam. 15:10). However, apprehension is immediately involved as soon as one receives a statement, piece of news or message (Gen. 14:14). Apprehension demands acceptance, listening (Gen. 4:23; 23:11), understanding (Gen. 11:7; 42:3), and attention to the thing heard ("Listen to . . ." Gen. 3:17; 23:16; Exod. 24:7). Hence, šāma' acquired the meaning of obey. šāma' in this sense is often rendered in the LXX by the emphatic compounds eisakouō, listen, obey (e.g. Gen. 42:21 f.; Exod. 6:12, 30), epakouō, listen (and answer), obey (Jdg. 2:17; cf. 1 Macc. 10:38), and → hypakouō, obey. The noun akoē (Heb. šᵉmû'âh or šēma') denotes the act of hearing (Ps. 17[18]:44), but mostly the content of a message (cf. Exod. 23:1; 1 Sam. 2:24; Isa. 53:1; Jer. 10:22). On God's hearing see 3 below.

2. (a) In biblical revelation hearing has a much greater significance than in the Gk. or Hel. worlds. For God meets man in his word, and man therefore is charged with hearing God's word. This does not exclude God's revelation in the visible sphere; the mental process is not to be separated from the sense perception. Two examples help to clarify this. God revealed himself to Moses in the burning thorn bush (Exod. 3:1 ff.), and in the vision which constituted his call Isaiah saw Yahweh in the temple surrounded by the seraphim singing their praises (Isa. 6:1 ff.). But here, as in other cases of the visible revelation of God's commission, it is connected with the prophetic mission. It takes place through the word, and must be heard and followed. Likewise, the visions which are frequently described in the prophetic writings (e.g. Amos 7–9; Jer. 1:11 ff.) require interpretation. Here too seeing and hearing are a unity. The prominence of hearing in the OT is demonstrated by the frequency of the phrases, nᵉ'um YHWH (thus says the Lord) and wayᵉhî dᵉḇar YHWH (the word of the Lord came). Readiness to hear on the part of those who receive the revelation is expressed in 1 Sam. 3:10: "Speak, for thy servant hears" (cf. O. Procksch, legō, TDNT IV 91–100).

(b) Moses, "with whom the Lord used to speak face to face" (Exod. 33:11), lived in the memory of his people as the model bearer of the divine, verbal revelation. The Decalogue (→ Command) was given to Moses according to Exod. 20:1 ff. and Deut. 5:6 ff. Deut. 5:1 is introduced by the solemn "Hear, O Israel". This šᵉma' yiśrā'ēl also stands as an urgent warning before the command to love God (Deut. 6:4 ff.). Alongside the warning however, we frequently find the complaint that Israel has not heard, but has rebelled. God has not given to Israel "a mind to understand, or eyes to see, or ears to hear" (Deut. 29:4).

The prophetic revelation presupposed that the content of God's will was already known (Mic. 6:8). As bearers of the divine revelation, the prophets warned the people, the nations and even heaven and earth to hear God's word which was coming through themselves (Isa. 1:2, 10; Jer. 2:4; 7:2; 9:20 [MT 9:19]; Mic. 1:2). But equally we hear them complaining that Israel had not heard the voice of its God, nor was willing to do so (Hos. 9:17; Jer. 7:13; Ezek. 3:7). Thus the pre-exilic prophets, in particular, became preachers of → judgment. God lets his judgment fall on a people that will not hear; nor is he any longer willing to hear this people (Isa. 1:15; cf. Ezek. 8:18). Part of this judgment was the hardening that Isaiah was to bring upon the people. They were to be unreceptive to God's revelation: "Hear and hear, but do not understand; see and see, but do not perceive" (Isa. 6:9 ff.). In the catastrophes which overtook Israel, culminating in the destruction of Jerusalem and the Babylonian captivity, the post-exilic prophets saw God's judgment on the people for their unwillingness to hear (Zech. 7:8–14). The prayers of confession of the returning exiles (Ezr. 9; Neh. 9) show that a wide circle of the people shared this view.

Thus Israel became the people of the → law who wished to render the obedience they owed to God by the painstaking fulfilment of his will down to the last detail. For this reason the most important part of the tradition was the Torah, the Law, contained in the Five Books of Moses. Here the strongest emphasis is given to the relation between hearing and doing (Exod. 19:5, 8; Deut. 28:1; 30:11–14). As the divinely commissioned bearers of revelation, the prophets stood beside the law at the centre of religious faith. "The law and the prophets" is in the NT a comprehensive description of the OT writings. To hear them is the task of the pious Israelite (cf. Matt. 22:40; Lk. 16:29). The prophetic writings particularly served to feed the messianic hope. In later Judaism, especially in the apocalyptic literature connected with the book of Daniel (2 Esd., Ad. Dan. etc.), the era of messianic salvation was depicted in increasingly glorious colours (→ Jesus Christ). The Qumran texts also illustrate the strength of this hope.

(c) The tendency to listen to the law was strengthened in later Judaism by the rise of the synagogues (→ Church, Synagogue), with their regular → Sabbath worship alongside the sacrificial worship offered in the Jerusalem Temple. The synagogue became the focal point of the Jewish communities beyond the borders of Palestine. The recitation of the Shema (consisting of the extracts Deut. 6:4–9; 11:13–21; Num. 15:37–41) had a fixed place in their worship. In addition the daily recitation of the Shema was for the pious Jew an obligation of faith and witness. In principle any suitably qualified member of the community was entitled to expound the law in the synagogue services. Nevertheless, the formation of the class of scribes (→ Rabbis) is understandable. Their expositions of scripture were originally handed down orally but later from the 2nd cent. A.D. they were fixed in writing in the Mishnah and the Talmud (→ Glossary of Technical Terms). Thus hearing acquired even greater significance in Judaism, especially since in the rabbinic view the time of revelation was over. Only one echo of revelation remained, the baṯ qôl (daughter of the voice), which God made use of from time to time, but which possessed no binding doctrinal authority for the rabbis (SB I 125 ff.).

3. Just as men hear God, God hears men. It is in this way that the living God differs from idols which have ears but do not hear (Ps. 115; 135:17 etc.). Later Judaism continued this judgment (Wis. 15:15). So the Psalmists pray, "Incline thy ear to me, hear my words" (Ps. 17:6; cf. 31:2; 86:1 etc.). And in the figurative sense the OT often speaks of the ears of God who hears what men say (Num. 12:2) – the cry for help and also the grumbling of his people (Exod. 3:7; Num. 14:27). Alongside akouō the LXX often uses the emphatic eisakouō (e.g. Exod. 16:7, 8, 9, 12).

Not only does God hear prayer, he also answers it. This too can be expressed by šāma' and akouō (Ps. 29:10 LXX). But in these cases we more often find the LXX using the compounds eisakouō and epakouō. The latter is particularly frequent in the language of prayer and also as a rendering of Heb. 'ānâh, to answer, grant a request (cf. eisakouein for Heb. 'ānâh [e.g. Ps. 3:4; 19:1, 6, 9 LXX; Isa. 49:8].

enōtizomai, pay attention to, hear, is derived from ous, ear. It is a biblical word-formation on the basis of Heb. he'ᵉzîn (e.g. Ps. 5:1[2]; 38:12[39:13]), give ear to, from the root 'zn in the hiph. Thus the OT contains a whole range of statements in which the pious Israelite expressed his certainty that God hears and answers prayer. It is put particularly beautifully in Ps. 94:9: "He who planted the ear, does he not hear?" On the other hand, man's guilt can step between God and man and make God's ear → deaf, so that he does not hear (Isa. 59:1 f.).

NT 1. The NT usage of akouō follows essentially that of secular Gk. and the LXX. We find it with the acc. in Matt. 7:24 (hear the word); with gen. in Matt. 2:9 and Mk. 14:64 (hear the king, hear blasphemy); with apo in 1 Jn. 1:5; with ek in 2 Cor. 12:6 (hear from him or me); with para in Jn. 8:40 (hear from God as Creator).

The noun akoē denotes: (a) the sense of hearing (1 Cor. 12:17); (b) the act of hearing (2 Pet. 2:8; also Rom. 10:17; Gal. 3:2, 5, ex akoēs pisteōs, as the result of hearing in faith, so T. Zahn, J. A. Bengel and A. Schlatter); (c) the ear, especially in the plur. (e.g. Mk. 7:35; Acts 17:20); (d) in Matt. 4:24; 14:1 etc. akoē denotes the news (about Jesus). The logos akoēs (1 Thess. 2:13; Heb. 4:2) is the word of proclamation, the message. In the quotation from Isa. 53:1 LXX reproduced in Rom. 10:16 akoē also means message. Hence the akoē pisteōs (Rom. 10:17; Gal. 3:2, 5) is the apostolic message which has faith as its content and is spoken and received as God's word (1 Thess. 2:13). The intensive in the quotation from Isa. 6:9 in Matt. 13:14 is a Hebraism: akoē akousete, by hearing you will hear.

Of the compounds, eisakouō is used of hearing (obeying) by men, 1 Cor. 14:21 (in dependence on Isa. 28:11; Deut. 1:43; on God's hearing see below, 5). parakouō (in secular Gk. from the 5th cent. B.C., rare in the LXX) means in Matt. 5:36 to fail to hear, leave unheeded (cf. Isa. 65:11 LXX). In Matt. 18:17 it means to refuse to hear, to be disobedient. The noun parakoē, disobedience, occurs once in Plato, never in the LXX, and otherwise only in post-Christian usage. It refers in Rom. 5:19 to Adam's disobedience to God; in 2 Cor. 10:6 to the Corinthians' disobedience to Paul, and in Heb. 2:2 to human disobedience to the word of God spoken through angels. enōtizomai has a similar meaning (cf. above OT 3), and occurs in Acts 2:14 of human hearing (cf. RSV "give ear to"). The rare word epakroaomai (from Plato on, not in the LXX) means to listen to (Acts 16:25). The related noun akroatēs, listener (from the 5th cent. B.C.; also Isa. 3:3; Sir. 3:29 LXX) occurs in Rom. 2:13 and Jas. 1:22, 23, 25, where the hearer of the law (or of the word) is contrasted with the doer.

2. (a) The many shades of meaning of akouō become apparent when we ask the theological question how man hears the NT message. The content of this message is → Jesus Christ, the messiah promised under the old → covenant. To those who believe in him are given the fullness of salvation and a new revelation which surpasses that of the OT. This revelation which has been manifested in him is perceived not just through hearing but with all the senses (Jn. 1:14; 1 Jn. 1:1). Essentially, it is a question of hearing and seeing (→ See, art. horaō). Jesus pronounced a blessing on the eyes and ears of those who had become witnesses of the salvation longed for by the pious of former generations (Matt. 13:16 f.; Lk. 10:23 f.). To the disciples sent to him by the imprisoned Baptist Jesus said: "Go and tell John what you hear and see" (Matt. 11:4 par. Lk. 7:22). Alongside his words stand Jesus' mighty acts. On the mount of transfiguration Jesus' disciples saw his hidden glory and heard the voice saying to them: "Listen to him" (Matt. 17:5 par. Mk. 9:7, Lk. 9:35). The shepherds' song of praise in the Christmas story, as well as the confession of the apostles before the Sanhedrin, referred to what they had heard and seen (Lk. 2:20; Acts 4:20).

(b) Not only Jesus' earthly appearance but also the events of Easter and → Pentecost are perceived by hearing and seeing. Paul's crucial vision of Christ (1 Cor. 15:9) is amplified by Acts 22:14, 15. Paul was to be a witness of what he had seen and heard. The gospels tell the same about the other disciples: seeing the risen Christ is bound up with hearing the apostolic commission which Jesus gave to his disciples (Matt. 28:18 ff.; Mk. 16:15; Lk. 24:46 ff.; Jn. 20:21; Acts 1:8). The events of Pentecost whose far-reaching effects in the Christian community we see in 1 Cor. 12–14 were perceived originally through seeing and hearing (Acts 2:33). Paul's revelations and visions, mentioned in 2 Cor. 12:1 ff., are also related to this event. In a trance the apostle heard "things that cannot be told, which man may not utter" (v. 4). Hearing also plays an important part in the visions of Rev. (Rev. 1:10; 5:11, 13 etc.). On the other hand, the mystery of our salvation is unfathomable; what God has prepared for those who love him no eye has seen and no ear heard nor any human heart conceived (1 Cor. 2:9).

(c) The message of Christ is grounded in a crucial revelatory event. The connection with OT revelation is preserved: the gospel has been proclaimed in advance through the prophets in holy scripture (Rom. 1:2). For the receipt of the Christian message faith is required. But faith presupposes hearing, and this in turn rests on preaching (Rom. 10:14 ff.; cf. Ps. 19:4; Deut. 32:21; Isa. 65:1 f.). On the other hand, as Jn. 20:29 implies, seeing is not a necessary condition for faith.

(d) The NT does not distinguish between Jesus' word and that of the → apostles in the sense that "he who hears you hears me" (Lk. 10:16; cf. Matt. 10:40; Jn. 13:20; Gal. 4:14; and also Mk. 9:37; Matt. 18:5; Lk. 9:48). The apostles are fully authorized witnesses of Jesus. The word which Jesus spoke has been reliably handed on by those who heard it (Heb. 2:3). To hear the message is to hear Christ and to hear the word of truth (Eph. 1:13; 4:20 f.) or the word of God (Acts 13:7, 44 etc.). Where this hearing leads to faith, → baptism is the natural consequence (Acts 16:32 f.; 18:8; 19:5).

3. We also find in the NT the OT connection of hearing with doing. In the Sermon on the Mount Jesus appears as the expounder of the will of God revealed in the law. His word is more than the word which was spoken to the men of old (Matt. 5:21). In his teaching the authority given to him is expressed. It is an authority which marks his essential difference from the scribes (Matt. 7:28 ff.; Mk. 1:22). Therefore, in the parable which concludes the Sermon on the Mount the Lord compares the man who hears and does his word with a man who builds his house on rock (Matt. 7:24 ff.). In Lk. 11:28 Jesus pronounces a blessing on those who hear and keep (phylassein, → Guard) his word. Jn. 10:16, 27 refer to the sheep who hear Jesus' voice and follow it. In Rom. 2:13 Paul contrasts the doers of the law with the hearers (akroatai). The mere hearers are unbelieving Jews, who do not let the law point them to Christ; the doers, according to the context, are believing pagans who demonstrate that the works of the law are written in their hearts (2:14 f.; cf. Jer. 31:33). Similarly in Jas. 1:22 f. the doers of the word are contrasted with the hearers. For the NT understands → faith not merely as hearing but as obeying (→ hypakouō, hypakoē). Doing the will of God, therefore, can only come about from this fundamental attitude of obedience.

([Ed.] In Mk. 12:29 f. Jesus cites the Shema (Heb. šᵉma', "Hear") or creed of Israel recited daily by the pious Jew which consisted of Deut. 6:4–9; 11:13–21; Num. 15:37–41. The passages themselves declare that the Israelite was to be in daily, constant remembrance of his obligation to love God with his whole being. The words quoted by Jesus are: "Hear, O Israel: the Lord our God, the Lord is one; and you shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your mind, and with all your strength." The quotation largely follows the LXX, though ischys (strength) is substituted for dynamis (power) and the Heb. text has lēḇāḇ (heart) which is paraphrased in Mk. by two nouns kardia (heart) and dianoia (mind). Jesus quoted the Shema in response to a question by a scribe: "Which commandment is the first of all?" (Mk. 12:28). Matt. 12:24–37 gives a parallel account of the same incident, though omitting Deut. 6:4. Moreover, in both accounts Jesus immediately added of his own accord a second commandment which was not in the Shema but drawn from Lev. 19:18: "The second is this, 'You shall love your neighbour as yourself.' There is no other commandment greater than these" (Mk. 12:31; cf. Matt. 22:39 which adds "On these two commandments depend all the law and the prophets" [v. 40]). Lk. 10:25–40 also contains a discussion of the two great commandments which also brings together Deut. 6:5 and Lev. 19:18. But there are certain significant differences: the occasion is different; in Matt. and Mk. it is Jesus who brings the two OT passages together in response to the scribes' question, whereas in Lk. it is a lawyer in response to Jesus' question; in Matt. and Mk. the centre of interest is the summary of the law, whereas in Lk. it is the practical outworking of the law expressed in the parable of the Good Samaritan that is the centre of interest. Such considerations have led T. W. Manson, The Sayings of Jesus, 1949, 259 f., and C. E. B. Cranfield, The Gospel according to Saint Mark, 1959, 376, to conclude that the two accounts are not parallel or doublets but refer to different occasions. On the debate about the great commandment → Command, art. entolē; → Large, art. megas; → Love.)

4. (a) Hearing the word does not always lead to faith, i.e. to the acceptance of the word of God (Mk. 4:16; Lk. 8:13). Understanding must be added to hearing if the sown seed of the word is to bear fruit (Matt. 13:23; 15:10). The contrary attitude which does not understand the word heard and will not accept it results eventually in hardening (→ Hard). Therefore we find repeatedly in the NT, especially with respect to the Jewish nation, references to the sentence of hardening pronounced in Isa. 6:9 ff. (cf. Matt. 13:13 ff. par. Mk. 4:12, Lk. 8:10; Jn. 12:40; Acts 28:27; Rom. 11:8). In Jn. the Jews are plainly told that such hearing is in reality no hearing (Jn. 5:37; 8:43). This is what Stephen meant when he described the judges at his trial as "uncircumcised in heart and ears", and their subsequent behaviour bore out the accusation (Acts 7:51, 57). Even Jesus' disciples were not protected against failure to understand and hear (Mk. 8:17 f.). Similarly in Heb. believers are urgently warned, with reference to Ps. 95:8, against becoming hardened (Heb. 3:7–11; 4:3–11).

A contrast to this hardening is presented by the receptivity of those whose ears God has opened (Isa. 50:5) and who keep the word in a pure and good heart (Lk. 8:15). It is only to this kind of hearing that the mystery of the kingdom of God is revealed (Matt. 13:11 par. Mk. 4:11, Lk. 8:10). But although such hearing and understanding are God's gift, human activity is by no means excluded. We see this in the numerous and varied calls for attention: "He who has ears to hear, let him hear" (Matt. 11:15; 13:9 par. Mk. 4:9, Lk. 8:8); "Hear and understand" (Matt. 15:10); "Take heed what you hear" (Mk. 4:24); "He who has an ear, let him hear what the Spirit says to the churches" (Rev. 2:7, 11, 17, 29; 3:6, 13, 22).

(b) Jn. 5:25, 28 deals with hearing at the time of consummation; the dead in their graves will hear the voice of the Son of God, awakening some to the resurrection of life and others to judgment. The raising of Lazarus, whom Jesus called out of his grave with a loud voice (Jn. 11:43), is the anticipation of this final event.

5. Less is said in the NT about God's hearing than in the OT. The ears of God are mentioned twice in references to OT passages: Jas. 5:4, cf. Isa. 5:9; and 1 Pet. 3:12, cf. Ps. 34:16. Rev. 9:20 takes the statement that idols do not hear from the OT. But God hears those who are pious and do his will (Jn. 9:31). Believers may be confident that God hears their prayers when they are in accordance with his will (1 Jn. 5:14). Stephen's speech (Acts 7:34 quoting Exod. 3:7) refers to Israel's being heard in Egypt. epakouō occurs in the NT only in the quotation from the LXX of Isa. 49:8 (2 Cor. 6:2). eisakouō is used in the NT in the sense of to hear and answer only in the pass. In Lk. 1:13 and Acts 10:31 it refers to the hearing of the prayers of Zechariah and Cornelius. In Matt. 6:7 Jesus criticizes those who like the Gentiles hope to succeed in making their prayers heard by the multiplication of words. Heb. 5:7 deals with the hearing of Jesus' prayers. On several occasions Jesus expressed the certainty that God hears prayer (Matt. 7:7–12; Lk. 11:5–13; Jn. 16:23 f.). Heb. 5:7 f. speaks of the prayers Jesus offered "in the days of his flesh . . . with loud cries and tears" (referring to Gethsemane, cf. Matt. 26:36–46 par. Mk. 14:32–42, Lk. 22:40–46), adding that Jesus "was heard for his godly fear". Heb. sees the answer to these prayers in Jesus' exaltation as "the source of salvation to all who obey him" as high priest after the order of → Melchizedek (vv. 9 f.). This confirms the assurance, expressed in the story of Lazarus, that God always heard and answered Jesus (Jn. 11:41). Correspondingly, Jesus always heard God as his Father, and as mediator passed on the revelation which he had heard from his Father (Jn. 8:26, 40; 15:15). Christ's relationship with his Father has its deepest roots in this mutual hearing. W. Mundle

ὑπακούω

ὑπακούω (hypakouō), listen, obey; ὑπακοή (hypakoē), obedience; ὑπήκοος (hypēkoos), obedient.

CL & OT The vb. hypakouō, to listen to, answer, obey (which is derived from akouō) was used in secular Gk. from Homer on with the dat. of the person or thing, and also (as in the LXX) with the gen. of the person. The specialized meaning to open (to answer a request for entrance) occurs in Xenophon, Plato and other writers. The noun hypakoē, obedience, is rare and appeared late in secular Gk. (6th cent. A.D.). The adj. hypēkoos, obedient, is attested from the 5th cent. B.C. The LXX uses hypakouō mostly to render Heb. šāma'. Obedience is shown to men (Gen. 16:2; 22:18), to wisdom (Sir. 4:15; 24:22), and to God (e.g. Jer. 3:13, 25). In Isa. 50:2; 66:4 hypakouō translates Heb. 'ānâh, answer. In Isa. 65:24 (with the v.l. ek-) it denotes God's answer to human crying. The noun hypakoē also means an answer (2 Sam. 22:36, the only instance in the LXX). The adj. hypēkoos, obedient is used in Deut. 20:11 of subject peoples, and in Prov. 4:3; 13:1 of a son's obedience to his father.

NT 1. In Acts 12:13 hypakouō means to open in the sense of "answering the door". Elsewhere the word group (vb. 21 times, noun 15, most frequently in Paul) denotes obedience. The pattern of this obedience is Jesus Christ of whom it is said that he was obedient unto death on the cross (Phil. 2:5, 8). Through his obedience, which stands in contrast to Adam's disobedience, "the many" have been made righteous (Rom. 5:19). Heb. has a similar thought. Through his suffering Jesus learned obedience; thus he has become the source of eternal salvation to those who obey him (5:8 f.). His obedience to his Father does not exclude his being the Lord whom the demonic powers and the forces of nature obey (Mk. 1:27; 4:41 par. Matt. 8:27, Lk. 8:25).

The apostle Paul, on the other hand, sought to bring every thought captive in obedience to Christ; Christ is the highest authority over human reason (2 Cor. 10:5). The obedience we render to Christ is the obedience of faith. As an apostle to whom has been committed the preaching of the glad good news Paul made it his aim to establish this obedience among the nations (Rom. 1:5; 16:26). He has this obedience in view in Rom. 15:18 and 16:19. It includes submission to the apostle through whom Christ speaks (2 Cor. 7:5; 13:3; 10:5 f.; Phlm. 15). It is obedience to the preaching which brings righteousness (Rom. 6:16 f.), and to the truth (1 Pet. 1:22). 1 Pet. 1:2 and 14 also refer to this obedience: Christians are "children of obedience", because this obedience must embrace their whole lives.

2. The use of the noun corresponds to that of the vb. Apart from Phil. 2:8, where it refers to Christ, the adj. hypēkoos also occurs in 2 Cor. 2:9 and Acts 7:39. Paul found in the Philippians (Phil. 2:12) the obedient attitude which he had expected from the Corinthians (2 Cor. 2:9). He had to warn the Thessalonians to have nothing to do with those who would not obey the apostolic instructions (2 Thess. 3:14). Besides those who obey the message of faith (Acts 6:7) there are those who refuse to obey the gospel (Rom. 10:16; 2 Thess. 1:8). Beneath all this lies the understanding of faith as an act of obedience. Moreover, obedience to Christ cannot be separated from obedience to his messengers and to the message they proclaim. Such obedience must work itself out in the life of the Christian. Christians are hindered by obeying the sinful passions of the body (Rom. 6:12). From obedience to the Lord it follows that one must submit willingly to earthly authorities, parents and masters; and these too must of course acknowledge the Lord Christ as the highest authority (Eph. 6:1–9; Col. 3:18–20). As an example and a warning from the OT, Acts 7:39 mentions the Israelites who refused obedience to Moses (Num. 14:3 f.). In contrast, Heb. 11:8 names Abraham as an example of believing obedience (cf. Gen. 12:1–8). W. Mundle

→ Command, → Disciple, → Faith, → Law, → See, → Word

(a). D. Bonhoeffer, The Cost of Discipleship, 1959⁶; R. Bultmann, Jesus and the Word, 1934, 53–75; Theology of the New Testament, I, 1952, 314 ff.; D. Daube, Civil Disobedience in Antiquity, 1972; C. H. Dodd, Gospel and Law, 1951; J. Horst, ous, TDNT V 543–59; G. Kittel, akouō, TDNT I 216–25; R. N. Longenecker, "The Obedience of Christ in the Theology of the Early Church", in R. Banks, ed., Reconciliation and Hope (Leon Morris Festschrift), 1974, 142–52; W. Michaelis, horaō TDNT V 315–82; P. S. Minear, The Obedience of Faith, SBT Second Series 19, 1971; H. R. Moehring, "The Verb akouein in Acts 9, 7 and 12, 9", NovT 3, 1959, 80 ff.; C. F. D. Moule, "Obligation in the Ethic of Paul", in W. R. Farmer, C. F. D. Moule and R. R. Niebuhr, eds., Christian History and Interpretation: Studies Presented to John Knox, 1967, 389–406; O. Procksch, legō, TDNT IV 91 ff.; R. Schnakenburg, The Moral Teaching of the New Testament, 1965; A. Stöger, "Obedience", EBT II 616–20.
(b). H. von Campenhausen, "Recht und Gehorsam in der ältesten Kirche", ThBl 20, 1941, 279 ff.; R. Deichgräber, "Gehorsam und Gehorchen in der Verkündigung Jesu", ZNW 52, 1961, 119 ff.; E. von Dobschütz, "Die fünf Sinne im Neuen Testament", JBL 48, 1929, 378 ff.; J. Gnilka, "Zur Theologie des Hörens nach den Aussagen des Neuen Testaments", Bibel und Leben 2, 1961, 71 ff.; S. Gross, "Der Gehorsam Christi", Geist und Leben 29, 1956, 2–11; R. Gyllenberg, "Glaube und Gehorsam", ZSTh 4, 1937, 547 ff.; E. Kamlah, "hypotassesthai in den neutestamentlichen 'Haustafeln' ", in O. Böcher and K. Haacker, eds., Verborum Veritas. Festschrift für Gustav Stählin, 1970, 237–44; J. Kaufmann, Der Begriff des Hörens im Johannesevangelium, Dissertation, Gregorian University, Rome, 1969–70; O. Kuss, "Der Begriff des Glaubens im Neuen Testament", ThG 27, 1935, 695 ff.; K. Lammerts, Hören, Sehen und Glauben im Neuen Testament, 1966; W. Mundle, Der Glaubensbegriff des Paulus, 1932, 29 ff.; K. H. Schelkle, Die Passion Jesu in der Verkündigung des Neuen Testaments, 1949; A. Schlatter, Der Glaube im Neuen Testament, 1927⁴, 611 f.; Gottes Gerechtigkeit, 1935, 316 f.

Heart

καρδία

καρδία (kardia), heart; καρδιογνώστης (kardiognōstēs), knower of hearts; σκληροκαρδία (sklērokardia), hardness of heart.

CL kardia was used in secular Gk. in literal and metaphorical senses. On the one hand, it denoted the heart as an organ of the body and the centre of physical life (particularly in Aristotle). On the other hand, it was regarded as the seat of the emotions and the source of spiritual life in general. Used in specific senses with reference to nature, it meant the pith of wood and the seed of plants. kardia also had the general sense of centre, the innermost part (of men, animals or plants).

Especially in Homer and the tragedians, kardia received a considerably extended range of meaning. It not longer indicated merely the centre of the body but also the intellectual and spiritual centre of man as a whole.

(a) kardia, the seat of the emotions and feelings, of the instincts and passions. In this context the Greek thought of emotions like joy and sadness, courage and cowardice, strength and fear, love, hatred and anger (Homer, Il. 21, 547).

(b) Homer, in particular, brought together the heart and reason without clearly separating thought and feeling. (Il. 21, 441). From this point it is only a short step to seeing the heart as the centre of man's will and as the seat of his power of decision (Il. 10, 244).

OT The OT uses lēḇ and lēḇāḇ for heart. lēḇ occurs in the older strata and lēḇāḇ does not appear until Isa. The OT also uses heart in the two meanings, lit. and metaphorical. The LXX renders lēḇ predominantly by kardia, more rarely by dianoia (mind) and psychē (soul). The nuances of the concept are as clearly recognizable here as in the OT. kardia occurs predominantly in a general sense, referring to the whole man.

1. Viewed as a bodily organ, the heart is the seat of strength and of physical life (Ps. 38:10[11]; Isa. 1:5). When the heart is strengthened by food the whole man is revived (Gen. 18:5; Jdg. 19:5; 1 Ki. 21:7).

2. In the metaphorical sense lēḇ is the seat of man's spiritual and intellectual life, the inner nature of man. Here the close connection between spiritual and intellectual processes and the functional reactions of the heart's activity is particularly clearly seen. This explains the close contact between the concepts lēḇ and nepeš (→ Soul) which can even be used interchangeably (cf. Jos. 22:5; 1 Sam. 2:35; Deut. 6:5). In the OT lēḇ is also the seat of man's feeling, thinking and willing:

(a) The heart is the seat of the emotions, whether of joy (Deut. 28:47) or pain (Jer. 4:19), of tranquillity (Prov. 14:30) or excitement (Deut. 19:6), etc.

(b) The heart is the seat of the understanding and of knowledge, of rational forces and powers (1 Ki. 3:12; 4:29[MT 5:9]), as well as fantasies and visions (Jer. 14:14). But folly (Prov. 10:20 f.) and evil thoughts also operate in the heart.

(c) The will originates in the heart, also the carefully weighed intention (1 Ki. 8:17) and the decision which is ready to be put into effect (Exod. 36:2).

lēḇ, however, means less an isolated function than the man with all his urges, in short, the person in its totality (Ps. 22:26[27]; 73:26; 84:2[3]). It is "a comprehensive term for the personality as a whole, its inner life, its character. It is the conscious and deliberate spiritual activity of the self-contained human ego" (W. Eichrodt, Theology of the Old Testament, II, 1967, 143). Here OT usage contrasts with that of secular Gk., for there the heart, with all its differentiations of meaning, has only one function within the system of spiritual and intellectual processes.

3. Since the idea of responsibility is particularly related to the heart, "that which comes out of the heart is quite distinctively the property of the whole inner man, and therefore makes him, as a consciously acting ego, responsible for it" (W. Eichrodt, op. cit., 144). Since, in the OT, the only corrective to this responsibility of man is to be found in Yahweh, the heart is also the organ through which man, either as godly or as disobedient, meets God's word and acts. It is the seat of awe and worship (1 Sam. 12:24; Jer. 32:40); the heart of the godly inclines in faithfulness to the law of God (Isa. 51:7), that of the ungodly is hardened and far from God (Isa. 29:13). It is in the heart that conversion to God takes place (Ps. 51:10, 17[12, 19]; Joel 2:12).

4. The kidneys (Heb. kᵉlāyôṯ; Gk. nephros, only in plur.; in the NT only Rev. 2:23, citing Jer. 11:20) are frequently mentioned in close connection with the heart. They are – in the metaphorical sense – the seat of the deepest spiritual emotions and motives (Ps. 7:9[10]; 26:2; Jer. 17:10; 20:12; cf. 1 Sam. 24:5[6]; 25:31; lēḇ, → conscience), so secret that men cannot fathom them. Only God is able to search and test them.

5. (a) Philo and Josephus use "heart" exclusively as a bodily organ, the central part of physical life, without clearly defining the seat of the inner life. Philo leaves open the question of whether the hēgemonikon, the controlling reason, is to be found in the heart or in the brain, though he shows many echoes of OT usage. The metaphorical sense, which predominates in the OT, drops very much into the background, especially in Josephus.

(b) On the other hand, Rab. Judaism – like the OT – can speak of the heart as the centre of life, even of life before God, of the good and evil thoughts that dwell in the heart, but also of the worship of God which the heart offers (prayer; cf. e.g. Sifre Deut. 41). (On Philo, Josephus and Rab. Jud. see J. Behm, kardia, TDNT, III 609 ff.)

NT The NT use of kardia coincides with the OT understanding of the term, just as much as it differs from the Gk. The meaning of heart as the inner life, the centre of the personality and as the place in which God reveals himself to men is even more clearly expressed in the NT than in the OT. In passages where OT would have used heart in the sense of person, NT often uses the personal pronoun (e.g. Matt. 9:3; 16:7; 21:25, 38; 2 Cor. 2:1). Nevertheless kardia occurs in 148 passages in the NT: in Paul 52 times; the Synoptics 47; Acts 17; Catholic Epistles 13; Heb. 10; Jn. 6 and Rev. 3 times.

1. (a) kardia as the centre of physical life and man's psychological make up. kardia occurs relatively seldom in the sense of the bodily organ, the seat of natural life (Lk. 21:34; Acts 14:17; Jas. 5:5). By contrast, it more frequently denotes the seat of intellectual and spiritual life, the inner life in opposition to external appearance (2 Cor. 5:12; 1 Thess. 2:17; cf. 1 Sam. 16:7). The powers of the → spirit, → reason, and → will have their seat in the heart in the same way as the movements of the → soul, the feelings, the passions and the instincts. The heart stands for man's ego. It is simply the person ("the hidden person of the heart", 1 Pet. 3:4).

(b) kardia as the centre of spiritual life. The most significant instances of kardia in the NT occur in those passages which speak of man's standing before God. The heart is that in man which is addressed by God. It is the seat of doubt and hardness as well as of faith and obedience.

A striking feature of the NT is the essential closeness of kardia to the concept nous, mind. nous can also have the meaning of person, a man's ego. Heart and mind (noēmata, lit. thoughts) can be used in parallel (2 Cor. 3:14 f.) or synonymously (Phil. 4:7). In such cases the element of knowledge is more heavily emphasized with nous than with kardia, where the stress lies more on the emotions and the will (R. Bultmann, Theology of the NT, I, 1952, 222). Thus it is the person, the thinking, feeling, willing ego of man, with particular regard to his responsibility to God, that the NT denotes by the use of kardia.

2. Sin marks, dominates and spoils not only the physical aspects of natural man, not only his thinking and willing, feeling and striving as individual elements, but also their source, man's innermost being, his heart. But if the heart has been enslaved by sin, the whole man is in bondage. Evil thoughts come from the heart (Mk. 7:21 pár. Matt. 15:19). Shameful desires dwell in the heart (Rom. 1:24).

The heart is disobedient and impenitent (Rom. 2:5; 2 Cor. 3:14 f.), hard and faithless (Heb. 3:12), dull and darkened (Rom. 1:21; Eph. 4:18). Referring to his opponents, Jesus quoted the prophet Isaiah, "Your heart is far from me" (Mk. 7:6; par. Matt. 15:8). Equally he rebuked his disciples for their lack of faith and their hardness of heart (Mk. 16:14; cf. Lk. 24:25, 32). Neither can the Gentiles excuse themselves before God, for they carry in their hearts the knowledge of what is good and right in God's sight (Rom. 2:15; → Covenant, art. diathēkē; → God, art. theos NT 4(b)).

"The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately corrupt; who can understand it?" Jeremiah's complaint (17:9) voices the view of the NT also. No man can understand his heart, let alone change it. Man without God lives under the power of sin, which has taken up its abode in his heart and from this vantage point enslaves the whole man.

3. God alone can reveal the things hidden in the heart of man (1 Cor. 4:5), examine them (Rom. 8:27) and test them (1 Thess. 2:4). Because corruption stems from the heart it is there that God begins his work of renewal. kardia is "the place where God deals with man . . . that part of a man . . . where, in the first instance, the question for or against God is decided" (Gutbrod). Just as the heart is the seat of faithlessness, it is also the seat of faith (Rom. 10:6–10). In Rom. 2:5 the human heart is described as ametanoētos, impenitent. Hence "it is apparent that penitence (metanoia, change of mind) is a matter of the "heart" (kardia) (Bultmann, op. cit., I, 221). Conversion takes place in the heart and is thus a matter of the whole man. God's word does not simply capture the understanding or the emotions, but it pierces the heart (Acts 2:37; 5:33; 7:54).

This conversion of the heart to → faith is not achieved through the will or desire of the human heart (1 Cor. 2:9), but solely because God opens a man's heart (Acts 16:14) and lets his light illumine the heart (2 Cor. 4:6). God bears his witness to man by sending into his heart the Spirit of his Son (2 Cor. 1:22). When this Spirit takes up his dwelling in the heart, man is no longer a slave to sin, but a son and heir of God (Gal 4:6 f.). God pours his love into his heart (Rom. 5:5). Through faith Christ can take up residence in the heart (Eph. 3:17).

4. The heart of man, however, is the place not only where God arouses and creates faith. Here faith proves its reality in obedience and patience (Rom. 6:17; 2 Thess. 3:5). Here the word of God is kept (Lk. 8:15). Here the peace of Christ begins its rule (Col. 3:15). God's grace strengthens and establishes the heart (Heb. 13:9). The NT describes a heart directed unreservedly to God as a "pure heart" (Matt. 5:8; 1 Tim. 1:5). This purity of heart is based solely on the fact that the blood of Christ cleanses it (Heb. 10:22; cf. 1 Jn. 1:7), and Christ dwells in it by faith (Eph. 3:17).

5. Two further related words which occur in the NT must be mentioned here.

(a) kardiognōstēs is unknown to secular Gk. and to the LXX, and occurs in the NT only in Acts 1:24 and 15:8 and later in patristic writings. It describes God as the knower of hearts. The fact that God sees, tests and searches the hidden depths of the human heart is commonly stated in both the OT and the NT (1 Sam. 16:7; Jer. 11:20; 17:9 f.; Lk. 16:15; Rom. 8:27; 1 Thess. 2:4, Rev. 2:23, cf. above OT, 3). This belief in the omniscience of God is expressed succinctly by the adj. kardiognōstēs.

(b) sklērokardia, unknown in secular Gk., occurs in the LXX in Deut. 10:16; Sir. 16:10; Jer. 4:4 (Heb. equivalent 'orlāṯ lēḇāḇ). Otherwise it is found only in the NT (Mk. 10:5 par. Matt. 10:8; Mk. 16:14; similarly Rom. 2:5) and in patristic writers. Hardness of heart is the closedness of the self-centred man to God, his offer and demands, and also to his fellowmen. The natural man has a stony heart, turned against God and his neighbour, until God's intervention gives him a new, obedient heart (cf. Ezek. 36:26 f.). T. Sorg

→ Body, → Hard, → Head, → Man

(a). J. B. Bauer, "Heart", EBT I 360–63; C. A. Briggs, "A Study of the Use of lēḇ and lēḇāḇ in the Old Testament", in Semitic Studies in Memory of A. Kohut, 1897, 94–105; R. Bultmann, Theology of the New Testament, I, 1952, 220–27; F. Baumgärtel and J. Behm, kardia etc., TDNT III 605–14; R. C. Dentan, "Heart", IDB II 549 f.; R. Jewett, Paul's Anthropological Terms, 1971; A. R. Johnson, The Vitality of the Individual in the Thought of Ancient Israel, 1949; L. J. Kuyper, "The Hardness of Heart according to Biblical Perspective", SJT 27, 1974, 459–74; J. Pedersen, Israel, I–II, 1926, 99 ff.; K. Rahner, Theological Investigations, III, 1967, 321–52; D. M. Stanley, " 'From his heart will flow rivers of living water' (Jn. 7:38)", Cor Jesu, I, 1959, 507–42; H. W. Wolff, Anthropology of the Old Testament, 1974, 40–58.
(b). J. M. Bover, "Das heilige Herz Jesu im Neuen Testament", Zeitschrift für Askese und Mystik 13, 1938, 285–301; G. E. Closen, "Das Herz des Erlösers in den heiligen Schriften des Alten Bundes", Zeitschrift für Askese und Mystik 18, 1943, 17–30; J. Doresse, "Le Coeur", Études Carmélitaines 29, 1950, 82–97; B. de Gerardon, "Le coeur, la bouche, les mains. Essai sur un schème biblique", Bible et Vie Chrétienne 1, 4, 1953, 7–24; A. Guillaumont, "Les sens du noms du coeur dans l'antiquité", Le Coeur: Études Carmélitaines 29, 1950, 41–81; P. Joüon, "Locutions hébraïques avec la préposition 'al devant lēḇ, lēḇāḇ", Biblica 5, 1924, 49–53; M. Koehler, Le Coeur et les Mains, 1962; F. H. von Meyenfeldt, Het Hart (lēḇ, lēḇāḇ) in Het Oude Testament, 1950; F. Nötscher, Gotteswege und Menschenwege in der Bibel und in Qumran, Bonner Biblische Beiträge 15, 1958; G. Pidoux, L'Homme dans l'Ancien Testament, 1953; H. Rahner, Cor Salvatoris, 1954, 19–45; H. Rusche, "Das menschliche Herz nach biblischem Verständnis", Bibel und Leben 3, 1962, 201 ff.; N. Schmidt, "Anthropologische Begriffe im Alten Testament", EvTh 24, 1964, 374–88; F. Stolz, lēḇ, THAT I 861–67.

Heaven, Ascend, Above

Man has always contrasted heaven with his earthly environment (→ Earth). To the physical relationship there has also corresponded a metaphysical one. As well as being a spatial term, heaven became a general expression for everything that has power over man, the domain of gods and spirits. The Gk. word ouranos includes both aspects, the firmament and the abode of God (cf. the difference between sky and heaven in Eng.). Sometimes it is replaced by the purely formal anō, above (in opposition to katō, below; → Hell). The vb. anabainō is used in a purely technical sense, especially of the ascent to the temple mountain, to the sanctuary, and also of Jesus' exaltation and ascension (→ Height).

ἀναβαίνω ἀναβαίνω (anabainō), go up, mount up; καταβαίνω (katabainō), descend; μεταβαίνω (metabainō), pass over.

CL anabainō is found from Homer on. The root-word, bainō, which is absent from the NT, means to go, walk (the NT substitutes erchomai; → Come). The compound anabainō indicates movement towards a destination: to go up, mount up, ascend, grow up. The spatial meaning predominates; one climbs a mountain, mounts a platform, goes upstairs. If the destination is a holy place, the going up involves performance of some cultic act. A man goes up to the temple (situated on a higher level) to pray; the mystic is promised ascent to the world of the gods, heaven or Olympus (Mithraic Liturgy 10, 22).

OT In the LXX anabainō most frequently renders 'ālâh (go up, ascend, climb) and is used particularly of going up to the mountain of God, the sanctuary and Jerusalem (Exod. 34:4; 1 Sam. 1:3; 2 Ki. 19:14). In Gen. 28:12 Jacob's dream pictured a "ladder", or more precisely a ramp or stair-like pavement, which, in accordance with the ancient concept of the world, led up to the gate of heaven. This was the place where intercourse between the earth and the upper divine world took place. God's messengers were going up and down, "fulfilling divine commands or supervising the earth" (G. von Rad, Genesis, 1961, 279; → Babylon). In Jon. 2:7 descent into the underworld signifies condemnation and death, and ascent signifies pardon and life.

NT 1. The NT retains the basic spatial sense: to climb a mountain, or go up to Jerusalem for the Passover (Lk. 2:4; 18:10; Jn. 7:8 ff.; Acts 3:1; Gal. 2:1). anabainō occasionally denotes the growth of plants (Matt. 13:7; so also occasionally in the LXX, cf. Gen. 41:5), and metaphorically the rise of ideas (Lk. 24:38; 1 Cor. 2:9) and the ascent of prayers to God (Acts 10:4).

2. The specific cultic connotation fades in the Synoptics behind a more general spiritual meaning. When Jesus came up out of the water of the Jordan or climbed a mountain, his ascent was the prelude to some action on the part of God. Thus Jesus received the → Spirit after his baptism, cf. also instances of prayer, teaching, healing and calling (Matt. 3:16 par. Mk. 1:10; Matt. 5:1; 14:23; 15:29; Mk. 3:13; Lk. 9:28).

3. Jn. uses anabainō as a fixed expression for the ascent of the Son of man (similarly Acts 2:34; Rom. 10:6 f.; Eph. 4:8). In this sense the vb. is complemented by katabainō, descend. Both concepts describe a movement which originates from heaven and is directed towards the earth, and vice versa. The stress is not on some kind of journey to heaven; the decisive element is Jesus' going from and to God. This is naturally expressed in the spatial categories of the ancient world concept. Christ, as the pre-existent Logos (→ Word), bridges the gulf between heaven and earth and becomes man (Jn. 3:13; cf. Prov. 30:4; Jn. 6:33, 38, 41 f.). With his elevation on the cross he ascends "where he was before" (Jn. 6:62). His descent reveals the Father's love; his ascent God's sovereign power. In his descent Jesus is the revealer; in his ascent the perfecter through whom his people receive the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of the Son (Jn. 20:17). In his descent and ascent he bridges the gulf between God and the world, between light and darkness. Some scholars see in this a background of gnostic ideas, but if so they are ignored in the presentation of Jesus as the Word become flesh (Jn. 1:14; → Height, art. hypsoō). (On this cf. L. Morris, The Gospel according to John, 1971, 222 ff. with R. Bultmann, The Gospel of John, 1971, ad loc., and Theology of the New Testament, I, 1952, 37, 166 ff.)

The → Son stands in a permanent relationship to the → Father, which is described with the help of the vision of the ascending and descending angels (Jn.

1:51; cf. Gen. 28:12). Thus in the earthly presence of the Son of man descent and ascent are repeated, in that his thoughts are derived from the Father and his acts are directed to the Father.

4. (a) metabainō (pass over) is used in Jn. to describe the passage from death to life. As Jesus crossed the frontier in his elevation on the cross, so man does in the obedience of faith. The believer passes over into the risen Christ's sphere of life (Jn. 5:24; 13:1; 1 Jn. 3:14).

(b) katabainō also denotes the eschatological arrival of the kyrios (→ Lord) and the heavenly → Jerusalem (1 Thess. 4:16; Rev. 3:12; 21:2, 10). But already God's good and life-giving gifts are coming down to us, above all his trustworthy word that we should be a kind of first fruits of his creatures (Jas. 1:17 f.). Similarly Jesus is the living bread which has already come to us from God himself and been made a present reality (Jn. 6:50, 58). B. Siede

5. The ascent and descent of Christ is referred to in Eph. 4:8 ff. in connection with a discussion of unity and gifts in the church. V. 8 alludes to Ps. 68:18 [LXX 67:19; MT 68:19]: "Therefore it is said, 'When he ascended on high he led a host of captives, and he gave gifts to men' " (RSV). There are, however, certain obvious differences from the Ps. The latter is in the 2nd per. sing. and refers to receiving and not giving gifts: "Thou didst ascend the high mount leading captives in thy train, and receiving gifts among men, even among the rebellious, that the LORD God may dwell there" (RSV). The verse "alludes to the homage before God when, returning from a war, he has occupied his throne to receive the voluntary or enforced gifts of homage rendered to him" (A. Weiser, The Psalms, 1962, 488). E. K. Simpson relates it specifically to David's capture of the Jebusite fortress (2 Sam. 5:6 f.) which became his capital, → Jerusalem, and the ascent of the ark there (cf. 2 Sam. 6:15 f.; also Ps. 24). The idea of giving rather than receiving gifts is supported by the Syriac version of the OT (the Peshitta) and the Targum or Aramaic paraphrase of the Pss., where the passage is interpreted of Moses' ascent of Sinai to receive the law. (This may have been influenced by the reference to Sinai in the preceding verse. In later Judaism Pentecost was regarded as the anniversary of the giving of the law.) Eph. 4:8 is probably best regarded not as a direct quotation from the OT as a prophecy of the bestowal of gifts, but as an interpretative gloss on the Ps. explaining what God is doing now in contrast with the situation described in the Ps. The introductory words "Therefore it is said" render the Gk. dio legei, lit. "therefore ... says", with the subject understood. The same expression occurs again in Eph. 5:14 introducing a quotation which is not to be found in scripture (cf. also Rom. 15:10; 2 Cor. 6:2; Gal. 3:16). It is possible that "scripture" should be supplied as subject as in Rom. 10:11. But as neither Eph. 4:8 nor Eph. 5:14 are verbatim quotations it seems more likely that "God" (or the Spirit) is to be understood as the subject and what follows is what God is now saying to the church. In other words, the Ps. has now to be read in the light of the descent and ascension of Christ which has brought about a reversal of the situation in which the victors received gifts from the vanquished.

The argument goes on to state that the words "he ascended" imply that "he had also descended into the lower parts of the earth" (v. 9). The latter may be taken as either (i) Hades (→ Hell; cf. Acts 2:25–35; cf. Ps. 16:10); (ii) the tomb (→ Bury); or (iii) the earth, the gen. being a gen. of definition. The ascent is fulfilled in the resurrection and ascension (cf. Phil. 2:8), the ultimate purpose of which is "that he might fill all things" (v. 10; cf. 1:23; Col. 2:9; → Fullness). The gifts that are then enumerated as the result of the ascension might at first sight appear as an anticlimax. They are seen in terms of the gift to the church of apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors and teachers (v. 11). But in the context of the argument God's ultimate purpose for mankind is growth in personal maturity in Christ (vv. 12–16, cf. 1 ff.). These gifts are directly related to that growth, for they carry on the ministry of Christ to the church (cf. v. 7).

For further discussion of this passage see F. F. Bruce, The Epistle to the Ephesians, 1961, 81 ff.; E. K. Simpson and F. F. Bruce, The Epistles to the Ephesians and the Colossians, 1957, 91 f.; B. Lindars, New Testament Apologetic, 1961, 52 ff., who sees Eph. 4:8 as an instance of midrash pesher deliberately modifying the text; cf. also E. E. Ellis, Paul's Use of the Old Testament, 1957, 144. C. Brown

ἄνω

ἄνω (anō), above, upwards, up; ἄνωθεν (anōthen), from above; κάτω (katō), below, downwards, down.

CL anō, lit. above, upwards, earlier in time. It can describe land or mountains in contrast to the sea, or the sky and heaven in comparison with the earth, or even the earth in contrast to the underworld (F. Büchsel, anō, TDNT I 376; Liddell-Scott, 169).

OT Judaism emphasized strongly the contrast between above and below, i.e. between heaven as God's sphere and the earth as man's. On the other hand, there is a parallelism between what exists above and what exists and happens on earth. Thus, as heaven cannot exist without the twelve constellations, earth cannot exist without the twelve tribes. Similarly God studies the Torah in heaven as men do on earth (SB II 116). In this case, that which is above is prior in time.

Stimulated by Hel. ideas, Philo worked out an extensive speculation on above and below (cf. Rev. Div. Her. 70; Gig. 22; Som. 1, 139). But this did not prove significant either for Jud. or the NT. Philo saw the upper and lower worlds as divided into levels. The lowest level is the material, and on the highest God stands. The sky forms as it were a spiritual material, the transitional level between the upper and lower worlds. (For examples of gnostic cosmology see W. Foerster, Gnosis: A selection of Gnostic Texts, I, 1972; II, 1974.)

NT In the NT there are no cosmological speculations which set God and the world in radical opposition, attributing the latter to some other deity. God is the Creator and Lord of the whole world. Nevertheless, there is a contrast in so far as a distinction is drawn between the holy God and the sinful world.

Jesus lifted up his eyes, i.e. towards heaven, where God dwells according to the ancient world concept (Jn. 11:41; cf. Acts 2:19). In contrast to his enemies who are "from below [katō]", from this sinful → world, he is "from above [anō]" i.e. from God, to whom he will return (Jn. 8:23; cf. 13; cf. L. Morris, The Gospel according to John, 1971, 446 f.).

In Gal. 4:25 f. there is a reference to → "Jerusalem above," which is free and is the mother of Christians, in contrast to the present Jerusalem, which, with her children subject to the law, is in slavery.

The "upward call" which Paul presses towards is the call of God in Jesus Christ (Phil. 3:14). Correspondingly Paul encourages his readers to "seek the things that are above". This is more narrowly defined by a reference to the fact that Jesus Christ is seated at the right hand of God (Col. 3:1 f.; → Hand, art. dexios). On anōthen → Birth, art. gennaō. H. Bietenhard οὐρανός

οὐρανός (ouranos), heaven; οὐράνιος (ouranios), heavenly; ἐπουράνιος (epouranios), heavenly; οὐρανόθεν (uranothen), from heaven.

CL ouranos, heaven, possibly related to an Indo-European root meaning water, rain, means that which moistens or fructifies. The related adj. ouranios means what is in heaven, comes from heaven, or appears in the heavens, i.e. heavenly. But it can also mean what is appropriate to a god, i.e. divine, and can even stand for god or the deity. On the other hand, it can mean simply that which belongs to the firmament or sky. epouranios means in heaven, belonging to the divine heaven.

1. ouranos is found in Gk. from Homer on meaning the vault of heaven, the firmament. Viewed as that which embraces everything, ouranos is divine. In pre-Homeric religious myth Uranus (in its Latinized form) derived from the → earth, Ge, which he impregnated in a holy marriage. According to the myth, Uranus was castrated and deposed as a god by Cronus the son of Uranus and Ge. But the image of the god Uranus remained alive until imperial times. In Orphic mythology heaven derived from the upper half of the cosmic egg. According to Homer, the (brazen, iron) heaven rests on pillars which Atlas carries. In heaven dwell the → gods, the immortal ouranioi or epouranioi, above all Zeus. One also finds in Gk. writing the idea of a heavenly garment.

In the Gk. enlightenment the old mythological concepts dissolved; ouranos became simply the firmament, and ouranios was applied to phenomena appearing in this firmament. In Plato heaven can be equated with the → all, the cosmos (→ Earth). The starry heavens viewed as the dwelling place of the gods became the starting point for the investigation of existence and absolute knowledge. Hence Plato used ouranios to denote what really is and what is truly coming to be. The Stoics understood heaven as the outermost layer of the ether, and then also as the directing world principle. In Gk. the expression "earth and heaven" can denote the whole world. (See further H. Traub, TDNT V 498 ff.)

2. In gnostic systems the ouranioi, the heavenly ones, have a body and are transitional beings of a supernatural nature. (See further TDNT V 501; W. Foerster, op. cit., see indexes.)

OT 1. The OT concepts of heaven. (a) In the OT concepts of heaven there are many links with ancient oriental ideas. The underworld (→ Hell, art. hadēs), → earth (art. gē) and heaven together form the cosmic building. The scant references suggest the picture of the flat disc of the earth, surrounded by the ocean, above which heaven or the firmament forms a vault like an upturned bowl or a hollow sphere. Above this there is the heavenly ocean (Gen. 1:8; Ps. 148:4–6). According to the ancient oriental view, there are many other heavenly spheres beyond the firmament which is visible from the earth. Such concepts are echoed in the expression "the heaven of heavens" (Deut. 10:14; 1 Ki. 8:27; Ps. 148:4). The OT, however, lacks a single, definitive and comprehensive cosmogony (→ Creation; and cf. A. Heidel, The Babylonian Genesis, 1963²).

The OT understanding of the world is throughout sober and rational, even if there are occasional echoes in poetical language of ancient mythological ideas. Thus heaven is said to have windows (Gen. 7:11; 2 Ki. 7:2) through which the waters restrained by the firmament can pour. Heaven rests on pillars (Job 26:11) or on foundations (2 Sam. 22:8). It is like a pitched → tent (Isa. 40:22; 44:24; Ps. 104:2). It is an unrolled scroll (Isa. 34:4; → Book, art. biblos) and can be torn (Isa. 64:1 [MT 63:19]). Together with the earth and the water under it, the heavens make up the universe (cf. Exod. 20:4; Ps. 115:15–17). But there is no word for universe in Heb. It is compared to a → house in which the heavens are like a loft (Ps. 104:3; Amos 9:6). In addition to the firmament, the air above the earth can also be called the heavens (e.g. Gen. 1:26; 6:7; → Demon, Air, art. aēr).

(b) Above the firmament there are the storehouses of snow, hail (Job 38:22), wind (Jer. 49:36; Job 37:9; Ps. 135:7), and likewise the waters (Ps. 33:7; Job 38:37) which return to heaven when it has rained (Job 36:27; Isa. 55:10).

(c) In the sense of horizontal expanse it is possible to speak of the four ends of heaven (Jer. 49:36; Zech. 2:6[10]; 6:5; Dan. 7:2). Man cannot ascend to heaven (Deut. 30:12; Prov. 30:4). The attempt to build a tower whose top will reach to heaven is arrogant folly which is punished (Gen. 11:4 ff.; → Babylon).

(d) Heaven is the embodiment of permanence (Deut. 11:21; Ps. 89:29[30]). On the other hand, prophetic preaching also refers to judgment on the heavens (Jer. 4:23–26; Isa. 13:13; 34:4; 50:3; 51:6); God's judgment is a cosmic catastrophe. Isaiah speaks of the creation of a new heaven (Isa. 65:17; 66:22).

(e) The "host of heaven" means the stars (Gen. 2:1; Deut. 4:19; Jdg. 5:20), or supernatural spiritual beings (1 Ki. 22:19; Job 1:6 ff.; → Spirit). This host is under a commander (Jos. 5:14); it has fiery horses (2 Ki. 2:11; 6:17). Under Assyrian influence the host of heaven became the object of worship, a practice against which the prophets protested (e.g. 2 Ki. 17:16; 21:3). In Deut. 4:19 the host of heaven is assigned to the peoples of the world for worship (cf. NEB).

(f) In the OT, however, heaven is never accorded any ruling function. This is shown, for example, in the fact that the stars in the firmament are merely lights which serve to divide up the calendar (Gen. 1:14). They are not, therefore, considered to be gods, or the manifestations or vehicles of gods. The ancient oriental viewpoint has, in this respect, been radically demythologized. Astrological ideas which elsewhere were richly developed in the East appear only on the periphery (Deut. 18:9 ff.; Isa. 47:13; Jer. 10:2).

(g) Ancient oriental concepts also lie behind the correspondence between the heavenly and the earthly, especially in the case of things which have a sacral value. Thus, in the priestly view, the Tabernacle was built following a heavenly model (Exod. 25:9, 40). Ezekiel speaks of a scroll which already pre-existed in heaven (Ezek. 2:9 ff.; cf. Isa. 34:5 on God's sword). The future, i.e. the whole eschatological order of salvation, is prefigured and already exists or has happened in heaven, so that it precedes the earthly event (Zech. 2 f.). The → "Son of man," as the personification of the eschatological people of God, is already present in heaven (Dan. 7:13 ff.).

2. Yahweh and heaven. (a) More important for faith than these cosmological concepts is the statement that Yahweh created the heavens and the earth, i.e. the whole universe (Gen. 1:1; cf. Isa. 42:5; Ps. 33:6). Like the whole creation, the firmament and the heavens praise Yahweh (Ps. 19:1[2]). The heavenly beings praise Yahweh because of his acts, for everything that happens on earth reveals God's glory (Ps. 29:9; → Glory, art. doxa).

(b) Many interpret passages like Jdg. 5:4 f., Deut. 33:2 and Hab. 3:3, to mean that in an earlier period Yahweh was conceived as dwelling on Sinai from which he came and intervened in history, while later people believed that Yahweh dwelt on Zion (Amos 1:2; Isa. 8:18). But religious interest did not centre on Yahweh's dwelling, but on the God who deals with Israel and the nations. So apparently contradictory statements can stand side by side. In 1 Ki. 8:12–13 Yahweh is said to dwell in the darkness of the Holy of Holies, i.e. in the → Temple. 1 Ki. 8:27, on the other hand, says that the whole of heaven could not contain him.

(c) As Israel entered into deeper contact with Canaanite religion, it took from the cult of Baal an important expression which it assimilated to its own faith in Yahweh. Yahweh was now described as the God or king of heaven, and this title became in fact very popular (Ezr. 5:11 f.; 6:9 f.; 7:12, 21, 23; Dan. 2:18 f., 28, 37, 44; cf. Gen. 11:5; 24:3; Ps. 29:10). It could now be said that Yahweh, like the Canaanite gods, rides on the clouds (Deut. 33:26; Ps. 68:4[5]; cf. 18:10[11]; Isa. 19:1). As king of heaven, Yahweh had built his palace upon the heavenly ocean (Ps. 104:3). Like the Ugaritic father god, El, Yahweh was imagined as enthroned in heaven, surrounded by heavenly beings and taking → counsel with them (1 Ki. 22:19 ff.; Isa. 6:3 ff.; Job 1:6 ff.; Ps. 82:1; Dan. 7:9 ff.). It is remarkable how forcefully and how freely such originally foreign views could be accepted in Israel and transferred to Yahweh. The gods of the Canaanite pantheon had become Yahweh's servants. So Yahweh is the only God in heaven above and on earth below (Deut. 4:39; 10:14).

(d) This view of Yahweh as enthroned in heaven eventually obliterated completely the old view of the God of Sinai: Yahweh came down from his dwelling above the firmament (Exod. 24:9 ff.) to Sinai (Exod. 19:18). Above all according to the theology of Deut., Yahweh dwells in heaven and speaks from there (Deut. 4:36; 12:5, 11, 21; 26:15; etc.). Only his "Name" (šēm;→ Name) dwells on earth, according to this view, and that only in the → Temple in → Jerusalem. Further reflection still is revealed in the statement that all heaven cannot contain Yahweh (1 Ki. 8:27; Ps. 113:5 f.). Neither the visible nor the invisible world could enclose Yahweh, for they were after all both created by him. But in any case he is superior to them and does not allow himself to be confined in any way in them.

(e) Just as Yahweh is in heaven, his → Word which remains eternally has its place in heaven (Ps. 89:2[3]; 119:89). The godly man, praying in his need, complains that Yahweh is hidden (Lam. 3:4), and asks him to rend the heavens and come down (Isa. 64:1 [MT 63:19]). Yahweh who dwells in heaven is invoked in prayer (Deut. 26:15; 1 Ki. 8:30), while the suppliants raise their hands to heaven (Exod. 9:29, 33). The same thing happens at the taking of an oath (Deut. 32:40).

(f) It is possible for Yahweh to take chosen people to himself in heaven (Gen. 5:24; 2 Ki. 2:11; cf. Ps. 73:24). This is a particular favour and honour, for on the OT view heaven is not otherwise the place where the dead or the soul go (cf. → Hell, art. hadēs).

3. The LXX and late Judaism. (a) With few exceptions, ouranos in the LXX (667 times) always occurs as the rendering of šāmayim. It is in the plur., 51 times, a usage introduced through the LXX but unknown in secular Gk. It may be explained as translation Gk. (for the Heb. šāmayim is plur.) and as a plur. of completeness (above all in the Pss.). In later writings the frequency of the plur. increases considerably, indicating that the ancient oriental conception of several heavens had begun to have an effect (2 Macc. 15:23; 3 Macc. 2:2; Wis. 9:10; Tob. 8:5, etc.).

In Judaism the tendency to avoid the use of God's name became increasingly stronger (cf. Exod. 20:7). In its place substitutes were used, among them "heaven" (1 Macc. 3:18 f.; 4:10 f.; 12:15; Pirke Aboth 1:3, 11). Later even heaven was replaced (e.g. by māqôm, place). ouranios only occurs 9 times in the LXX, for the God of Israel (1 Esd. 6:15; → Lord, art. kyrios), his power (Dan. 4:23; → Might, art. exousia), the angels as a heavenly army (4 Macc. 4:11; cf. Lk. 2:13), and the children of God (2 Macc. 7:34). epouranios only occurs 7 times in the LXX.

(b) Contact with the intellectual climate of the ancient East resulted in a variety of cosmological speculations in pseudepigraphic and Rab. writings. In them apocalyptists and Rabbis undertake journeys to heaven and give revelations about things on the other side, but no generally binding doctrines about these things were ever arrived at. Some apocalyptic writings know only of one heaven (Eth. Enoch, 4 Esd., Syr.Bar.). Others speak of three heavens (Test. Lev. 2 f., according to the original text), of five heavens (Gr. Bar.). Sl. Enoch, Test. Abr., and Rab. tradition speak of seven heavens. A further result of eastern influence is the doctrine that everything corresponds to an archetype and pattern in heaven, and that all earthly existence and events are prefigured in heaven (→ anō). Astronomical instruction is given allegedly as revelations from the → angels (Eth. Enoch 72–82; Jub.). But also we are shown all meteorological phenomena (rain, sun, etc.) coming from heaven, where they are kept in store-houses. Angels are set over both as controllers and supervisors.

(c) In certain writings → Paradise is located in heaven, either in the third (Sl. Enoch 8:1–8; Ass. Mos. 37), or especially in Rab. tradition in the seventh. Even → hell (art. gehenna) can be located in heaven. After death the righteous go to heavenly dwelling-places.

There are many traditions about the heavenly Jerusalem. Speculation was particularly concerned with God's throne in heaven (in connection with Ezek. 1 f.; Exod. 24:9–11; 1 Ki. 22:19 ff.; Isa. 6:1 ff.; Dan. 7:9 f.) and with the → angels in heaven, their names, classes and functions. It was believed that God was worshipped in a heavenly cultus, the archangel Michael sacrificed on a heavenly altar, and the heavenly beings sang songs of praise.

Finally, → Satan is also to be found in heaven. In connection with OT traditions he is viewed as the → accuser of men before God (cf. Job 1 f.), and also as an evil power opposed to God. Jewish traditions about the heavenly treasure-houses are important (→ Possessions, art. thēsauros). In them are kept, e.g., the good works of men, and also the heavenly → books and tablets on which are written the fate of earthly beings. Also recorded are the → rewards and punishments that await the last → judgment.

(d) Philo combined Gk. and OT ideas. The ouranos noētos, the immaterial heaven of conceptual thinking present only in idea (Spec.Leg., 1, 302; Op.Mund. 29; Decal. 102), must be distinguished from the ouranos aisthētos, the tangible heaven which must not be deified (Op. Mund., 117). The visible heaven depends on both spiritual and earthly things. Heaven actualizes the unity of the whole cosmos. Philo speaks of the heavenly man as ouranios, a copy of God (Op.Mund., 82). In so far as every man is a part of him, every man is also an inhabitant of heaven. Correspondingly Philo can talk about heavenly and earthly virtues. (See further H. Traub, TDNT V 502 f.)

NT In the NT ouranos occurs 272 times; most frequently in Matt. (82 times) especially in the phrase basileia tōn ouranōn, the → kingdom of heaven. ouranos occurs 34 times in the writings of Luke (of which 26 are in Acts); 18 times each in Mk. and Jn.; 21 times in Paul and 52 in Rev. Apart from Matt., it occurs mostly in the sing. ouranios occurs only 9 times, of which 7 are in Matt. in the phrases "your heavenly Father" (5:48; 6:14, 26, 32; 23:9) and "my heavenly Father" (15:13; 18:35). Behind this there lies an Aram. phrase which is translated in other passages (e.g. 18:19) by "my [your] Father in heaven." epouranios is found 18 times in the NT, of which 11 are in Paul, 6 in Heb. and one in Jn. In contrast to the very limited use of ouranios, epouranios is the adj. which was clearly preferred and which later prevailed.

1. Conceptions of the world. (a) The NT also presupposes ancient eastern world views. Rev. makes the most statements about heavenly beings and objects, but the interest is not cosmological but theological and soteriological. There is clearly no attempt to give definitive instruction about the geography of heaven as in certain Rab. writings (cf. above OT 3). In this context it is striking that there is never any mention of several heavens but only of one. The only passage in the NT which, in agreement with Rab. teaching, speaks of three heavens is 2 Cor. 12:2–4, but we are not given any more precise information (cf. P. E. Hughes, Paul's Second Epistle to the Corinthians, 1962, 432 ff.). As in the OT, the expression "heaven and earth" means the universe (Matt. 5:18, 34 f.; 11:25; 24:35; Lk. 12:56, etc.). Occasionally a reference to the sea is added, giving rise to a tripartite formula (Acts 4:24; 14:15; Rev. 14:7). Since, according to this world picture, heaven is "above" (→ anō), people raise their hands or their eyes towards it (Mk. 6:41 par. Matt. 14:18, Lk. 9:16; Mk. 7:34; Lk. 18:13; Jn. 17:1; Acts 1:11; 7:55; Rev. 10:5). The air can also be called heaven (Matt. 6:26; 16:2; 8:20; Mk. 4:32; Lk. 8:5; Acts 10:12; 11:6). In heaven, i.e. the firmament, are set the stars (→ Sun, Moon, Stars) which in eschatological discourse about the parousia fall to the earth (Mk. 13:25 par. Matt. 24:29; Lk. 21:25; Rev. 6:13; 8:10; 9:1; 12:4 → Present, art. parousia). Portents are seen in heaven (Rev. 12:1, 3; 15:1; → Miracle, art. sēmeion). Jesus refused to perform a miracle from heaven (Mk. 8:11 f. par. Matt. 16:1). On the other hand, the beast (→ Animal), as → Antichrist, performs such miracles (Rev. 13:13).

(b) There are → angels in heaven as messengers and servants of God (Matt. 18:10; Mk. 12:25; 13:32 par. Matt. 24:36; Eph. 3:15; Rev. 12:7; 19:1). They come from and return to heaven (Matt. 28:2; Lk. 2:15; 22:43; Gal. 1:8). They appear in the visions of John (Rev. 10:1; 18:1 etc.). → Satan is thrown out of heaven so that he may no longer → accuse Jesus' disciples (Lk. 10:18; Jn. 12:31; Rev. 12:12; cf. Isa. 49:13 LXX). At this, heaven and the martyrs in heaven rejoice (Rev. 18:20; 11:12; 7:14). It is at this point that a development begins in cosmological thinking which leads eventually to a fundamental difference between the late Jewish apocalyptic and the Christian views of heaven. Since Satan has been banished from heaven as the consequence of Jesus Christ's saving work, everything dark and evil vanishes from heaven, with the result that it becomes a world of pure light (thus in the post-NT writings which deal with the heavenly realm, e.g. Asc. Isa.). Where evil powers in heaven are mentioned, the reference is primarily to the air or to the firmament (Eph. 2:2; 3:10; 6:12; Acts 7:42). Their sphere of influence, therefore, is entirely this side of God's realm of light.

(c) In agreement with the OT it is stated that God created heaven and earth (Acts 4:24; 14:15; 17:24; Rev. 10:6; 14:7), and that he will re-create them (2 Pet. 3:13; Rev. 21:1). The present heaven is passing away like the earth (Mk. 13:31 par. Matt. 24:35, Lk. 21:32; Heb. 12:26; 2 Pet. 3:7, 10, 12; Rev. 20:11), but Jesus' words remain (Mk. 13:31 par. Matt. 24:35, Lk. 21:33). God is Lord of heaven and earth (Matt. 11:25; Acts 17:24; Matt. 5:34; Acts 7:49; cf. Isa. 66:1).

(d) God is said to dwell "in heaven", but there is never any evidence of reflection on the difficulties inherent in this statement. Occasionally God is referred to by the OT expression "God of heaven" (Rev. 11:13; 16:11). Heaven itself is God's throne (Matt. 5:34), and God's throne is said to be in heaven (Acts 7:49; Heb. 8:1; Rev. 4 f.). It follows from this (in correspondence with Rab. terminology, see above OT 3 (c)) that heaven can be used as a substitute for → God (Matt. 5:10; 6:20; Mk. 11:30; Lk. 10:20; 15:18, 21; Jn. 3:27), especially in Matt. in the expression "the kingdom of heaven" (3:2, 4:17; etc.; → Kingdom).

It is more important theologically that God is called → "Father in heaven" (Matt. 5:16, 45; 6:1, 9; 7:11, 21; 10:32 f.; 12:50): in Christ God turns towards man. Because God is in heaven his revelation takes place from heaven (Matt. 11:27). At Jesus' baptism and at other crises in his earthly ministry God's voice was heard from heaven (Mk. 1:11 par. Matt. 3:17, Lk. 3:22; Jn. 12:28; cf. Heb. 12:25). The seer heard voices from heaven (Rev. 10:4, 8; 11:12; 14:13; 18:4; 21:3), and the Holy → Spirit came down from heaven (Mk. 1:10 par. Matt. 3:16, Lk. 3:21; Acts 2:2; 1 Pet. 1:12). But in the same way God's wrath goes forth from heaven: in the form of the fire of judgment (Lk. 17:29; cf. 9:54; Rev. 20:9), and in general upon all the ungodliness and unrighteousness of men (Rom. 1:18).

(e) According to Acts 14:17, God gives rain and fruitful seasons ouranothen, from heaven, implying both the physical and spiritual source. The only other occurrence of the word is in Acts 26:13, where it is used as an alternative to ek tou ouranou, from heaven (cf. Acts 9:3; 22:6). In period of drought heaven is considered to have been shut up at God's command (Lk. 4:25; Jas. 5:17 f.; Rev. 11:6).

(f) The NT also speaks of treasures of salvation in heaven. → Rewards (art. misthos) are in heaven (Matt. 5:12 par. Lk. 5:23). There is treasure in heaven (Matt. 6:20). The → names of the disciples are recorded in heaven (Lk. 10:20; cf. Heb. 12:23). Their → inheritance is there also (1 Pet. 1:4). Christians have a building (2 Cor. 5:1 f. oikodomē; cf. → House) and their citizenship or their home

(Phil. 3:20) in heaven. There is mention of a heavenly → Jerusalem which is the Christians' true home (Gal. 4:26; Heb. 12:22; Rev. 3:12; 21:2; 10), and even of a → temple in heaven (Rev. 11:19; but cf. 21:22).

2. Christological statements. (a) The statements about heaven are particularly important when they stand in relation to → Jesus Christ. At his baptism the heavens opened, the Holy → Spirit descended upon him and God the Father acknowledged him (Matt. 3:16 f.; cf. above 1 (d)): the eschatological events began in Jesus and in him God was near. Heaven was open above him because he himself was now the door of heaven and of God's house (Bethel) on earth (Jn. 1:51; cf. Gen. 28:12). Jesus taught his disciples to pray that God's will would be done on earth as in heaven (Matt. 6:10; → Prayer, art. proseuchomai). When Jesus gave authority to Peter or to the disciples, their actions were valid in heaven, i.e. with God (Matt. 16:19; 18:19; → Bind; → Open).

Because their guardian angels behold God's face, Jesus taught that little ones come under his special protection (Matt. 18:10; → Large, art. mikros). The Dead Sea Scrolls witness to belief in angels sharing in the community's worship (1QSa 2:9 f.) and in their rôle as guardians of the meek and needy (1QH 5:20 ff.; cf. D. Hill, The Gospel of Matthew, 1972, 275). The Jesus of Nazareth who stood before the Sanhedrin will sit at God's right hand (→ Hand, art. dexios) and come with the clouds of heaven (Mk. 14:62 par. Matt. 26:64, Lk. 22:69; cf. Ps. 110:1; Dan. 7:13). At the parousia the sign of the Son of man will appear in heaven (Matt. 24:30; → Son, art. hyios tou anthrōpou). The Son of man will gather his → elect from one end of heaven to the other (Mk. 13:27 par. Matt. 24:31; cf. Deut. 4:32; Zech. 2:6[10]). All power in heaven and on earth has been given to the Risen One (Matt. 28:18). He is the → Lord (art. kyrios) who has been raised to God's throne and to whom everything on earth and in heaven will pay homage (Phil. 2:10). He bestows the Holy Spirit from heaven and displays wonders and signs in heaven (Acts 2:17 f., 32–36). The Christian community is waiting for him to come to judge and to save (Phil. 3:20; 1 Thess. 1:10; 4:16; 2 Thess. 1:7). The disciple's task is to wait for the coming of the Lord, not to look up into heaven (Acts 1:10 f.). Heaven must receive Christ until the parousia (Acts 3:21). As the → Lamb (art. amnos) who has been exalted to God's throne, Christ has the power to open the sealed book and thus to set in motion the final phase of the world's history (Rev. 5:3, 5 f.). Therefore the whole of creation praises him (Rev. 5:11 ff.). This means, moreover, that Christ does not belong to the realm of the world, but to the realm of God. As the One who has come from heaven and returned there, Jesus Christ reveals himself as the true → bread (art. artos) from heaven, by means of which God bestows eternal life (Jn. 6:31 f., 38, 41 f., 50 f.; cf. Exod. 16:4, 13–15).

(b) As in the OT (Exod. 25:9), the earthly sanctuary in Heb. is a copy of the heavenly one. But as such it is only a shadow and the heavenly sanctuary is the only true and real one. This heavenly sanctuary is still, eschatologically speaking, to come (Heb. 8:5; 9:23 f.). Since Christ has entered the heavenly sanctuary, he has shown himself to be the true High → Priest (8:5). The Christian's calling to → faith is also epouranios (3:1; cf. Phil. 3:14). So too are the gifts, the eschatological salvation which Christians have tasted (6:4; 9:28). The homeland of the pilgrim people of God (11:16) and their Jerusalem, viewed as an eschatological → goal, are likewise epouranios, heavenly (12:22).

According to Heb., Jesus' exaltation (1:3; 8:1; → Height) signifies the fulfilment of his high priestly office. He has passed through the heavens and has been raised higher than they (4:14; 7:26; 9:11, 23 f.), since he has reached the very throne of God. There he has performed his real, true priestly service (8:1 f.), at the same time fulfilling and surpassing that of the OT. One cannot say in detail what cosmological perspectives underlie this statement. However, it seems clear that God is thought of here as not dwelling in heaven, i.e. not within his creation to which heaven of course belongs, but above or beyond the heavens. This idea is the outcome of reflection, although even here God's transcendence over his creation is still expressed in spatial terms.

(c) Certain special emphases are to be found in Eph. and Col. Christ is not only the agent of → creation (cf. 1 Cor. 8:6): primitive Christianity had no special belief in creation apart from belief in Christ. Christ was before anything created came to be, and he himself was not created (Col. 1:16). Christ is the instrument, the agent and the goal of creation; without him nothing can exist. Special emphasis is laid on the fact that everything, including the heavenly powers, was created "in Christ" and has been reconciled through him (Col. 1:15–23). The very heavenly powers were created solely for Christ (Col. 1:16; cf. 1 Cor. 15:24: Christ will destroy the heavenly powers). Christ is → head over all principalities and powers (cf. Col. 2:20). (On the background ideas see R. P. Martin, Colossians: The Church's Lord and the Christian's Liberty, 1972, 4–20.)

It is the exalted Christ who has penetrated all the heavenly spheres and come down to earth. He has broken through the barrier erected by the evil powers which isolated men from God (Eph. 1:10; 4:9; cf. Pss. 67:18[LXX]; 68:18[MT]; Rom. 9:5). Similarly Eph. 1:23 and 4:10 apply to Christ the OT statement that Yahweh fills heaven and earth. This is a consequence of the thought of Eph. 1:10 (cf. Col. 1:16, 20) that every created thing has its goal in Christ and has no independent existence apart from him. → Creation is strictly related to the redeemer and to → redemption. Creation and redemption, therefore, cannot be sundered in the gnostic fashion. Admittedly there are echoes of gnostic thought in the statement that heaven is filled with demonic powers which enslave men (Eph. 1:10–23; Col. 1:16 f.). The passages quoted, however, show equally that everything is understood as referring strictly to Christ (Col. 1:20), and creation is envisaged from the standpoint of redemptive history (Col. 1:16 f.).

Christ's exaltation (Phil. 2:9 f.) is expressed in Eph. 1:10 by means of the image of the primal man with → body and → head. Everything is bound together under Christ as head, whether on earth or in heaven (i.e. all the members of the body, the complete → "all"). There is no other realm but that of Christ. Eph. 3:15 puts it somewhat differently: heaven and earth are realms in which there are races or tribes (cf. Eth. Enoch 69:4; 71:1; 106:5; cf. the Rab. expression "higher families" for the angelic world) whose Father is God.

3. (a) In Jn. the word ouranos, heaven, only occurs in the sing. This is an indication that both gnostic and Jewish speculations about the heaven are absent. God's will to save and the salvation effected by Jesus Christ determine the statements about heaven. Jesus comes from heaven and returns there. In principle the Son of man who has come down from heaven has much to say about heaven (epourania) and the plans of God concealed there. But such statements would call forth an even smaller response of faith than those he makes about God's present activity on earth (Jn. 3:12 f., 31 f.).

(b) 1 Cor. 15:40 refers to the bodily form of heavenly beings – whether stars or angelic powers. Christ, the pre-existent, risen and coming One, is the heavenly → man, whose image, i.e. whose bodily form, Christians will receive at the parousia (1 Cor. 15:48 f.). All beings, even the heavenly ones, will bow the knee before the risen and exalted Jesus Christ (Phil. 2:10 f.). God has raised Jesus to his right hand, en tois epouraniois (from ta epourania, a circumlocution for heaven), i.e. in heaven, and thus blessed Christians with spiritual blessing (Eph. 1:3, 20). For spiritually they have already risen with Christ and been exalted to heaven (Eph. 2:6; cf. Ps. 110:1). The manifold wisdom of God will be made known to the principalities and powers in heaven (Eph. 3:10; the same phrase as above): the saving work of Christ has cosmic significance. According to 2 Tim. 4:18, Christ's kingdom is epouranios, i.e. it possesses heavenly authority and glory, and it is therefore superior to every temptation and persecution which the apostle has to suffer. H. Bietenhard

→ Angel, → Demon, → Hand, → Height, → Hell, → Kingdom, → Myth, → Satan

(a). K. Barth, CD III 3, 369–531; J. S. Bonnell, Heaven and Hell, 1956; P. G. Bretscher, "Exodus 4:22–23 and the Voice from Heaven", JBL 87, 1968, 301–11; R. Bultmann, The Gospel of John, 1971; J. G. Davies, He Ascended into Heaven: A Study in the History of Doctrine (Bampton Lectures, 1958), 1958; W. Eichrodt, Theology of the Old Testament, I, 1967, 186–209; T. H. Gaster, "Heaven", IDB II 551 f.; D. K. Innes, "Heaven and Sky in the Old Testament", EQ 43, 1971, 144–48; J. N. D. Kelly, Early Christian Creeds, 1951; R. Koch, "Ascension", EBT I 37–42; K. Lake, "The Ascension" and "The Mount of Olives and Bethany" in F. J. Foakes Jackson and K. Lake, eds., The Beginnings of Christianity, V, 1923, 16–22, 475 f.; A. T. Lincoln, "A Re-Examination of 'the Heavenlies' in Ephesians", NTS 19, 1972–73, 468–83; W. A. Meeks, "The Man from Heaven in Johannine Sectarianism", JBL 91, 1972, 44–72; J. Michl, "Heaven", EBT I 363–69; W. Milligan, The Ascension and Heavenly Priesthood of our Lord, 1898; H. Odeberg, The View of the Universe in the Epistle to the Ephesians, Lunds Universitets Årsskrift N. F. Avd. 1, Band 29, Nr. 6, 1934; G. von Rad and H. Traub, ouranos, TDNT V 497–543; J. Schneider, bainō, TDNT I 518–23; C. Schoonhoven, The Wrath of Heaven, 1966; U. Simon, Heaven in the Christian Tradition, 1958; W. M. Smith, The Biblical Doctrine of Heaven, 1968; and "Heaven", ZPEB III 60–64; L. I. J. Stadelmann, The Hebrew Conception of the World, 1970, 37–125; H. B. Swete, The Ascended Christ: A Study in the Earliest Christian Teaching, 1910; G. Widengren, The Ascension of the Apostle and the Heavenly Book, 1950.

(b). G. Bertram, "Die Himmelfahrt Jesu vom Kreuz", Festgabe für A. Deissmann, 1927, 187–217; H. Bietenhard, Die himmlische Welt im Urchristentum und Spätjudentum, WUNT 2, 1951; H. Diels, "Himmels- und Höllenfahrten von Homer bis Dante", Neue Jahrbücher des klassischen Altertums, 50, 1922, 239–52; R. Eisler, Weltman telund Himmelszelt, 1910; T. Flügge, Die Vorstellung über den Himmel im Alten Testament 1937; G. K. Frank, Himmelund Hölle, 1970; H. Gebhardt, "Der Himmel im Neuen Testament", Zeitschrift für kirchliche Wissenschaft und kirchliches Leben 7, 1886, 555–75; H. Grass, Ostergeschehen und Osterberichte, 1970⁴; J. Haecke, J. Schmid, J. Ratzinger, LTK V 352–58; J. Heller, "Himmelund Möllenfahrt nach Römer 10, 6–7", EuTh 5, 1972, 478 ff.; R. Holland, "Zür Typik der Himmelfahrt", ARW 23, 1925, 207–220; F. H. Kettler, "Enderwartung und himmlischer Stufenbau im Kirchenbegriff des nachapostolischen Zeitalters", TLZ 79, 1954, 358 ff.; A. Klawek, "Der Himmel als Wohnung der Seligen im neutestamentlichen Zeitalter", Collectanea Theologica, 13, 1932, 111–24; G. Lohfink, "Der historische Ansatz der Himmelfahrt Christi", Catholica, 17, 1963, 44 ff.; E. Lohmeyer, Das Evangelium nach Matthäus, KEK Sonderband, 1962³, 75 ff.; W. Michaelis, "Zur Uberlieferung der Himmelfahrtgeschichte", ThBl 4, 1925, 101–109; A. Oepke, "Unser Glaube an die Himmelfahrt Christi", Luthertum, 5, 1938, 161–86; G. Schille, "Die Himmelfahrt", ZNW 57, 1966, 183 ff.; H. Schlier, Christus und die Kirche im Epherbrief, BHTh 6, 1930; H. Westphal, "Jahves Wohnstätten", ZAW Beiheft 25, 1908, 251–73.

Height, Depth, Exalt

βάθος

βάθος (bathos), depth; βαθύς (bathys), deep.

CL 1. bathos is related linguistically to bēssa (Doric bassa), valley floor, cleft. There is also a close connection with abyssos, bottomless (lit. unfathomable; → Hell).

2. bathos expresses distance from the speaker, but not only downwards. It can be horizontal or even upwards. bathos, therefore, denotes the extension of a thing in any spatial dimension (cf. bathos trichōn, length of hair). In military usage bathos indicates the number of men standing behind one another. It is frequently used in conjunction with → hypsos to denote the full extent of an object in every dimension. Figuratively, bathos expresses: (a) the completeness, intensity, fullness or greatness of an object (especially in conjunction with hypsos), or of a human quality (wisdom, understanding, soul); and (b) inscrutability and hiddenness.

The derived adj. bathys has the same shades of meaning as the noun. The neut. form used as a noun, to bathy, means that which is deep-seated, that which comes from the bottom of the heart.

3. Hel. and especially gnostic religion took up the figurative meaning in speaking of the depth of deity and of → God as depth (Tert., Adv. Val. 1; Iren., Haer. 1, 21, 2; Hippol., Haer. 5, 6, 4; cf. H. Schlier, TDNT I 517). This last expression indicates that God was thought of primarily as a-personal and not as "Thou" or "He", as something static and inscrutable and not as the Living One, the Self-Revealing.

OT 1. In the OT (LXX) bathos is used chiefly as equivalent of Heb. m^{e}ṣûlâh. In its lit. meaning bathos is used only of the depth of the sea (Exod. 15:5; Neh. 9:11; Zech. 10:11). In its fig. sense bathos always denotes that which is separated from God. bathos, therefore, stands for the inner need of the man troubled by guilt and → sin (Ps. 130[129]:1) and for the external need of pressing circumstances (Ps. 69:2,14[68:3,15]). bathos expresses the most extreme separation from God (the depths of the sea, Jon. 2:4; Mic. 7:19) in passages where the frontier between literal and figurative meanings is fluid. In Ezek. bathos stands for taḥtî and thus for the underworld (cf. 26:20; 31:14, 18; 32:18 f., 24). Here, too, bathos expresses separation from God. Heb. ma'^{a}maqqîm, depths, is also rendered in the LXX bathos (Isa. 51:10 etc.), while the adj. bathys is used for the words in the 'āmōq group (cf. Job 11:8; 12:22; Ps. 63[64]:6; Prov. 18:4).

2. It is significant that Heb. t^{e}hôm is not rendered bathos but abyssos (→ Hell). English versions nevertheless translate it by deep (cf. Gen. 1:2; Job 28:14). While bathos always contains the idea of separation from God, abyssos suggests a final, primeval, terrible and mysterious depth.

3. The Qumran texts speak of the depth of the mysteries of God (1QS 11:19; 1QM 10:11).

NT bathos appears 8 times in the NT; the adj. bathys 4. The literal sense occurs only in the Synoptics: depth of soil (Matt. 13:5 par. Mk. 4:5), the depth of the sea (Lk. 5:4). bathys is used figuratively in 2 Cor. 8:2 (deep poverty) to underline the extremity of the poverty. Elsewhere we find a figurative meaning related, not to the OT, but to Hel. and Rab. usage.

1. Rom. 11:33 and 1 Cor. 2:10 speak of the depth of God or the depth of the knowledge of God. This refers to the unfathomable nature of the ways and judgments of God, as opposed to the mere superficiality of human insight. But it also suggests the richness of the ways and means available to God in the pursuit of his plan of salvation. It is important that God is not reduced here to an impersonal "It". God is not described as the ultimate ground of all being, but as the One who has revealed himself in Jesus Christ in whom are hidden the ultimate mysteries. bathos reflects, therefore, the paradox of unveiling and veiling which is Christian → revelation.

2. Similarly, in Eph. 3:18 bathos occurs in conjunction with other spatial terms in order to express the comprehensiveness of God's grace and of salvation in Christ. Christian faith should not be satisfied with the fragmentary or the superficial.

3. On the other hand, in Rom. 8:39 bathos is linked with hypsōma (cf. Isa. 7:11), and clearly describes some kind of power which oppresses mankind. In astrology bathos is the part of heaven below the horizon from which the stars rise. Powers emanating from the stars are perhaps intended here. What is theologically decisive, however, is the statement that even the powers (of the stars) of the deep have been defeated by the power of the love of God in Jesus Christ – a statement of great relevance even today.

4. Of the four occurrences of the adj. bathys in the NT, only Rev. 2:24 is of theological significance (cf. Lk. 24:1; Jn. 4:11; Acts 20:9). Here the deep things of Satan are referred to, in parallel with the deep things of God. This takes up a slogan from a gnosticizing movement. What is meant is participation in all the ungodliness of this world (in order to "prove" the more effectively the power of grace and of salvation in Christ). To plunge into such depths, however, does not mean control over these powers but surrender to them and the consequent loss of salvation.

J. Blunck

ὕψος

ὕψος (hypsos), high; ὑψηλός (hypsēlos), high, exalted, proud; ὕψωμα (hypsōma), height, the exalted; ὕψιστος (hypsistos), highest, most exalted.

CL 1. hypsos, attested from Aeschylus on, denotes primarily extension upwards in space, height (only of things, not of people); figuratively (a) the superiority and exaltation of a thing or person over another; (b) unattainability. In the case of people hypsos could take the negative sense of → pride. In conjunction with → bathos, it denotes the complete dimensions and aspects of an object.

2. The adj. hypsēlos, attested from Homer on, was also originally spatial in meaning: high (buildings, plants, position), and was used figuratively in both a positive (sublime) and a negative sense (pompous, high-sounding). Secular Gk. had many compounds of hypsēlos, but none came into the NT. Instead, there is a new formation, hypsēlophroneō, to think highly (of oneself), to be proud (only 1 Tim. 6:17).

3. hypsōma is first attested in late Gk. after the translation of the LXX, meaning height, exaltation, what is exalted. It was always used in figurative senses, e.g. in Plutarch as an astrological term for the closest approach of a star to the zenith (opposite, tapeinōma) (Arndt, 858).

OT In the LXX hypsos stands for a variety of Heb. words (qōmâh, mārôm, gāḇah).

1. (a) It is used literally to denote the height of an object (the dark, Gen. 6:15 [LXX 6:16]; a mountain, 2 Ki. 19:23; Ps. 95 [LXX 94]:4; the Temple, Ezr. 6:3; a tree, Ezek. 31:14).

(b) Used absolutely, hypsos often denotes the heavenly realm (→ Heaven), the realm of God, that which is closely related to God (Heb. mārôm: Pss. 68:19 [LXX 67:18]; 102:20 [LXX 101:19]; 144[LXX 143]:7; Isa. 40:26; cf. Isa. 7:11; also frequently in the Qumran texts). It is thus the opposite of → bathos (that which is separated from God). Thus both hypsos and hypsistos (e.g. Gen. 14:18 f.; Ps. 17 [18]:13) can be simply a substitute for → God himself. (On hypsistos see Arndt, 858.)

(c) In relation to men, hypsos in Isa. 2:17 stands for human pride. In 1 Macc. 10:24 it has the sense of encouragement.

2. (a) The adj. hypsēlos occurs in the LXX in as great a variety of meanings as in secular Gk. (60 times for Heb. bāmâh; 43 times for derivatives of the root gāḇah; 31 times for rûm; 19 for nāṭâh). Used as a noun, it acquired special significance. More emphatic than hypsos, it denotes the realm of God (Ps. 93[LXX 92]:4; Lam. 1:13), the place where God dwells (Isa. 33:5, 16; 57:15). The Spirit from on high (Isa. 32:15) is the Spirit of God.

(b) However, in a remarkable reversal of this usage, the word is also used to translate Heb. bāmôṯ, the Canaanite shrines and pagan high places (Jer. 19:5; 2 Chr. 14:2; 17:6; Ezek. 6:3).

NT 1. hypsos in the spatial sense occurs only in Rev. 21:16 in the description of the measurements of the new Jerusalem. Similarly hypsēlos is used literally in Matt. 4:8; 17:1; Mk. 9:2 and Rev. 21:10, 12 of mountains and walls. In these contexts the dimensional aspect is uppermost, but there are symbolic overtones.

2. (a) In accord with OT usage, both words serve to denote the realm of God or his dwelling (Lk. 1:78) to which Jesus is exalted (Eph. 4:8 citing Ps. 68:19, → Heaven, art. anabainō; Heb. 1:3; cf. Ps. 110:1) to sit at God's right → hand interceding for men (cf. Heb. 9:24). Even in the figurative meaning the spatial concept – in accordance with the ancient view of the world – still remains in the background (→ Heaven). But it is not primary, for it has been transcended by the non-spatial. This is seen most clearly in Heb. 7:26. hypsēlos here acquires the meaning of the wholly other in contrast to what man and the cosmos can conceive.

In gnostic systems the thought is of the place, the sanctuary of God, beyond the heavenly spheres, which are filled with → angels and powers. This may be compared with the Epistle to the Hebrews where the exaltation of Christ is pictured in terms of the Day of Atonement ritual (cf. chs. 9–10 with Lev. 16). Having penetrated these heights, the high-priest Jesus Christ has been installed to exercise his sovereignty. In this exaltation he experiences fulfilment because of his obedience in suffering, which reached its climax in Jesus' sacrifice of himself on the cross (→ hypsoō). "But, above all, the doctrine of the sanctifying sacrifice on the cross is fitted into a scheme of thought in which the going up to heaven is the really important event. In the Epistle to the Hebrews this going up to heaven corresponds to the High Priest's going into the Sanctuary. This however cannot be done without a sacrifice. Thus the sacrifice on the cross opens to the new High Priest the way to heaven" (E. Schweizer, Lordship and Discipleship, 1960, 72).

(b) Lk. 24:49 speaks of power from on high. Here likewise hypsos is a periphrasis for → God and stands on the same footing as Rab. formulae for avoiding the Divine Name. The same is true of hypsistos, the Highest (e.g. Lk. 1:32, 35, 76; Acts 7:48). Acts 13:17 also reflects OT ideas (cf. Exod. 6:6). The arm is an expression of the might and power of God. Describing this arm as hypsēlos, raised, stretched out, is a vivid way of expressing the idea that God's power is not in repose but in action.

3. (a) In Jas. 1:9 hypsos appears in contrast with tapeinōsis (→ Humility, art. tapeinos), and is therefore best rendered "exaltation" (RSV; cf. "high position", Arndt, 858). The passage refers to the salvation already given and yet still to come in Christ which paradoxically reverses all human relationships and in the faith exalts those who are lowly. The poor man (which in Jas. is a religious term virtually synonymous with Christian) is to hold fast here and now to this eschatological exaltation by faith.

(b) On the other hand, since this exaltation is not something the Christian earns for himself for a quality which he possesses in himself but is Christ's gift to him, he can be commanded not to think of himself as hypsēlos (Rom. 11:20) but to associate with the lowly (Rom. 12:16). Since exaltation is the work of God, every personal desire for exaltation is an abomination to him (Lk. 16:15).

4. The NT use of hypsōma probably reflects astrological ideas (see CL 3), and hence denotes cosmic powers. Rom. 8:39 and 2 Cor. 10:5 are both concerned with powers directed against God, seeking to intervene between God and man. They are possibly related to the stoicheia tou kosmou, the elemental powers of this world, (cf. Col. 2:8, 20). However high and mighty they may seem, they are to be strenuously resisted (2 Cor. 10:5) in the knowledge that not even they can separate the Christian from Christ (Rom. 8:39). J. Blunck

ὑψόω

ὑψόω (hypsoō), exalt, raise; ὑπερυψόω (hyperhypsoō), raise above all heights.

CL For etymology → hypsos. The idea of exaltation played an important role in the myths which were a part of the religious background of the OT. This is illustrated by the concept of exaltation in the Babylonian creation epic, Enûma Elish (c. 1000 B.C.; cf. A. Heidel, The Babylonian Genesis, 1963²; ANET, 60–72) which begins "When above the heaven had not (yet) been named". The mythological introduction to the work describes the struggle of the Babylonian god Marduk with the gods of chaos (the sea-dragon, Tiamat, and the primal usurper of divine sovereignty, Kingu). The victorious Marduk created the material world out of the divided halves of Tiamat and men out of the blood of Kingu. He is therefore raised in the assembly of the gods to the position of sovereignty over the world. He then correspondingly raises his earthly representative, Hammurabi, and installs him as ruler over men.

A text from the Egyptian king myth (14th cent. B.C.) which belongs to the coronation liturgy of the god-king, also related how pharaoh Thut-mose III was raised by the sun god Rê himself to the realm of light, and there crowned and installed as the god's son (cf. ANET, 373 ff.).

The significance of exaltation is different in the Babylonian myths of Adapa (A. Heidel, op. cit., 147–53; ANET, 101 ff.) and Etana (ANET, 114 ff.). Adapa was the man who worked his way up to heaven and could not obtain the food of life there. The enterprise foundered on the punitive justice of the gods, who reduce man to the confines appointed to him. In the myth of Etana, Etana tried in vain to reach Ishtar's throne in heaven on the back of an eagle which was under an obligation to him. His aim was to achieve immortality without dying. Both myths involve an attempt at exaltation through man's own efforts, whereas in the Babylonian creation myth and the Egyptian king myth the exaltation is the work of the gods.

OT hypsoō occurs 150 times in the LXX, standing 94 times for the Heb. rûm and its derivatives, 19 for gāḇah and its derivatives (9 out of 13 in Ezek.), 12 each for gāḏal and nāśā'. hyperhypsoō occurs about 50 times, and has a Heb. equivalent in only 4. The basic meaning is exalt (Pss. 18 [LXX 17]:46; 27 [LXX 26]:5, 6; 30 [LXX 29]:1; 34 [LXX 33]:3; 57 [LXX 56]:5, 11; 108 [LXX 107]:5; Exod. 15:2; Ezek. 28:2), be high (Pss. 89 [LXX 88]:13; 61 [LXX 60]:2); then by extension to stretch out (mostly of the hand, Isa. 23:4), to be loud (to raise the voice, Isa. 37:23; 52:8), to grow (Ezek. 31:4, 10), to bring up (Isa. 14:26), to be beautiful (Isa. 4:2; Ps. 89 [LXX 88]:16; EVV exalt, extol), to praise (Pss. 107 [LXX 106]:32; 118 [LXX 117]:28; EVV to exalt, extol). In the OT God alone has the right to exalt (and also to bring low, 1 Sam. 2:7). Man always runs the risk, therefore, of overreaching himself by self-exaltation. Thus in a few passages hypsoō acquires the meaning to be proud, haughty, presumptuous, arrogant (Pss. 37 [LXX 36]:20; 131 [LXX 130]:1, 2; Ezek. 28:5).

For the LXX, exaltation no longer has the same meaning as in the Babylonian and Egyptian myths. Nor does it have the same meaning as in the dualistic redemption teaching of Hel. syncretism, where in a mystical and mythological system the concept of exaltation achieved decisive importance (cf. especially the excellent essay by G. Bertram referred to in the bibliography). The following LXX usages are theologically significant.

(a) The exaltation of the righteous, i.e. of all those who in their extreme need through poverty, oppression, or deprivation of rights (→ Humility, art. praÿs) seek help from Yahweh alone (cf. Pss. 37 [LXX 36:34]; 89 [LXX 88:17]; 112 [LXX 111:9]). "In so far as it speaks of the exaltation of men, the LXX is concerned with a sociological question which as such is drawn into the light of revelation" (G. Bertram, op. cit., 71). The righteous man who encounters God experiences exaltation in his every-day circumstances lifting his life to a new plane. Thus the righteous man is promised a positive transformation of his present situation through Yahweh's intervention.

(b) The exaltation of God by the individual worshipper or the congregation. Behind this in the background is the liturgy for the festival of the god's enthronement in the Egyptian king myth which is important for the origin of the concept, but is no longer of any real significance. In the LXX the exaltation of God has already become a liturgical formula by which worshippers pay homage to God (e.g. Ps. 99 [LXX 98]:5, 9), and in which they acknowledge their loyalty to Yahweh as cosmic Lord above all other gods (cf. Ps. 97 [LXX 96]:9). Personal piety, however, also expresses itself by means of this liturgical formula: "magnify the Lord and let us exalt his name" (Ps. 34 [LXX 33]:3). In the OT the exaltation of Yahweh includes the exaltation of his people. The instalment of the earthly ruler in the enthronement Psalm corresponds to it (cf. Bertram, 50; cf. Ps. 148:14).

(c) Self-exaltation, i.e. the exaltation that man seeks to bring about in independence of the God who claims his obedience and provides for his needs (cf. Ps. 75 [LXX 74]:4, 5). By exalting himself and in self-gratification relying on his own strength, man places himself in opposition to God and calls forth Yahweh's humbling intervention (Ps. 75 [LXX 74]:7; Isa. 2:11, 17).

To sum up, the LXX, in so far as it relies on the MT, has taken over the concept of exaltation from the latter's religious environment, but has consistently demythologized it. Exaltation is a means of expressing God's saving activity in the realm of earthly affairs and of testifying to man's gratitude in worship and praise. Negatively it expresses man's disobedient self-assertion.

2. The apocalyptic writings of post-canonical Jewish literature were much more receptive to mythological ideas. Recalling Moses' ascent to the mountain of God, temporary exaltation, understood realistically or ecstatically, became in the apocryphal tradition the vehicle of divine revelations (cf. Eth.Enoch 39:3; 52:1; 89:52; 90:31; 2 Esd. 14:9, 49; Gr.Bar. 2 ff.).

The righteous are promised a place in → heaven at a final exaltation (Dan. 7:22; Syr.Bar. 13:3). Enoch's translation in the books associated with his name, during which he received his revelations close to God, plays a special role in this context. As son of man he is exalted to the highest heaven to the lord of spirits (Eth. Enoch 70 ff.).

The way of the righteous as it is described in Wis. 2: 10–20; 3: 7–10; 4:10 and 5: 1–5 is also particularly worth mentioning. The ungodly do violence to the righteous man because he boasts of knowing God. He is ill-treated and killed so that God may demonstrate whether he is his son. God exalts him, and men do not understand. At the final judgment the righteous will oppose his adversaries to their terror, and will receive the kingdom of glory. "The way of the righteous one depicted here is even in many details the way which Jesus has actually gone" (E. Schweizer, Lordship and Discipleship, 1969, 30).

3. Exaltation was understood differently in the mystery religions. Through the mysteries the way to exaltation was revealed to the soul, a way which the redeemer had trodden already. This way lead to a personal exaltation with the rebirth of the devotee. Here too exaltation received soteriological significance: it was the path to redemption which could be anticipated in ecstatic experience (→ Knowledge, art. ginōskō CL 2; on this subject see G. Wagner, Pauline Baptism and the Mystery Religions, 1967).

NT hypsoō occurs 20 times in the NT. It means to make great, as in Paul's speech in Acts 13:17 (the God, who made the people of Israel great in Egypt); to exalt (12 times as a contrast to bring low). The theologically important passages are those in which hypsoō denotes the exaltation of Jesus (6 times: Jn. 3:14; 8:28; 12:32, 34; Acts 2:33; 5:31).

1. Behind the sayings on self-abasement and self-exaltation (Matt. 23:12; Lk. 14:11; 18:14) lies the basic form of the two-part OT Jewish māšāl (cf. Job 22:29;

Prov. 29:23; Sir. 3:18; and also OT 1 (a)). The righteous, lowly, humble and suffering man is promised exaltation as a → reward. This teaching acquired a new significance in the context of the message of Jesus. Jesus put the whole of human life once more on the basis of obedience towards God (→ Hear). In so far as the Pharisees ascribed respect and honour to themselves, they were denying God the obedience of service. The true disciple must be ready to follow Jesus along the path of humility to suffering (cf. Lk. 14:27), in order selflessly to serve the despised, his neighbour. He is promised exaltation at the resurrection (Lk. 14:13 f.) and the fulfilment at the eschatological judgment of the promises made in the beatitudes (Matt. 5:1–12). This still future exaltation means justification before God in the final judgment on the ground of discipleship. However, the immediate present already takes on a new form for the disciple in anticipation. The man who exalts himself is the man who, having attempted to secure his life, will lose it in God's eschatological judgment (cf. Lk. 17:33; cf. also Lk. 1:52; 10:12, 15 par. Matt. 10:15). In their exhortations, therefore, 1 Pet. 5:6 and Jas. 4:10 warn Christians to submit to God (or to his → hand), in order to share in exaltation in the future → glory.

2. (a) The first christological statements, following the description of the way of the righteous in Israel, clearly see the resurrection and the exaltation of Jesus together. This is particularly plain in Acts 2:33 and 5:31 which describe as exaltation Jesus' resurrection and his installation as Lord (cf. 2:36). As these passages suggest a different emphasis to the Lucan theology of the ascension in Acts 1, we must be dealing here with earlier tradition. According to this tradition, the Easter event was the decisive event for salvation, because in it the crucified One was installed as Lord and Christ, i.e. exalted (Acts 2:36). Jesus' exaltation signifies the completion of God's action in his → anointed and at the same time the beginning, continuance and the expected fulfilment of Christ's Lordship over church and world.

(b) The concept of exaltation also occurs in the hymn quoted by Paul in Phil. 2:5–11 (2:9 hyperhypsōsen). Jesus' humiliation (vv. 6–8) is contrasted with his exaltation (vv. 9–11). His exaltation is the consequence of his obedience in suffering and consists in his designation as sovereign, not only over the community of believers but over the whole universe. In granting to Jesus the new name of → Lord (Kyrios), believers acknowledge in his exaltation Christ's victory, i.e. a transfer of authority over the universe (cf. Col. 1:19, 20). (On Phil. 2:5–11 → Empty, art. kenos; → Form, arts. morphē and schēma.) Similar statements expressed in different language occur frequently in the NT: e.g. Rom. 1:4 "designated [horisthentos] Son of God" (→ Determine, art. horizō); 1 Tim. 3:16 "taken up [anelēmphthē] in glory". In this exaltation (1 Tim. 3:16) "Jesus is 'vindicated'. This is also the oldest comment in which the Easter events constitute the justification of the way of Jesus. They demonstrate that Jesus was 'the Righteous One' " (E. Schweizer, op. cit., 65). Justification resulted in the victorious return to the Father and in the enthronement of the Saviour. "Here even more than in Phil. 2:9–11 it is emphasized that his dominion is so all-embracing that it has welded heaven and earth together again" (E. Schweizer, op. cit., 66).

(c) The concept of exaltation plays an important part in the christology of Jn., where it is used, as frequently in the OT, in parallel with glorification, doxazō (→ Glory, art. doxa; e.g. Jn. 17:5 see above OT 1). The idea of exaltation plays a similar part in the christology of Heb., although the word hypsoō itself is not used (cf. 2:7 "crowned"; 1:9 "anointed"; 1:13; 10:12; 12:2 "seated at the right hand of God"; 5:5). Jn. takes over the idea of the exaltation of the righteous, as it had already appeared in the LXX but where it had been understood historically in terms of this world, or psychologically. But more particularly Jn. takes over the form of the idea present in Jewish apocryphal writing (Eth.Enoch, 2 Esd., Jub., Syr. Bar). and in Rab. literature, and corrects it. The object of this correction is to show that there is only one exaltation, the exaltation of Christ (3:14; 8:28; 12:32, 34). Like anabainō (→ Heaven), hypsoō is a periphrasis for the return of the revealer from the world to his heavenly home (cf. R. Bultmann, The Gospel of John, 1971, 152 f.). If, with E. Schweizer, we accept that Jesus saw himself as the → Son of man, in order in this one term to embrace the double nature of his activity as of this world in humiliation and suffering and as exalted in full authority and glory (op. cit., 41), then Jn. uses this idea consistently and already describes the crucifixion as the exaltation of Jesus (Jn. 3:14; 8:28; cf. 12:34). In a unique ambiguity the concept of exaltation is applied both to the physical act of being lifted up on the cross and to the exaltation to new glory, power and honour. This can only be understood on the basis of Jn.'s view of Jesus' death as the ultimate consequence and goal of his obedience. This means that in the eyes of the world, his goal is nothing more than the lifting up on the cross. "Yet they do not suspect that by 'lifting him up' they themselves make him their judge. The double-meaning of 'lifting up' is obvious. They lift Jesus up by crucifying him; but it is precisely through his crucifixion that he is lifted up to his heavenly glory as the Son of Man. At the very moment when they think that they are passing judgment on him he becomes their judge" (Bultmann, op. cit., 350). By contrast, the believer recognizes in Jesus' obedience unto death his complete oneness with the Father, and thus knows that the crucifixion is the return of the Son to glory, and redemption for the believer (Jn. 12:32). The lifting up on the cross, therefore, is the beginning of exaltation into the glory of the Father. The Johannine teaching on exaltation is Jn.'s counterpart to the realistic presentations of the ascension in the synoptics.

(d) The statements about the humiliation of God in Jesus Christ and his exaltation have affinities with views from the OT, from extra-canonical and Rab. Jewish writings and from gnostic thought. In the NT as in the OT exaltation is, however, understood not in terms of myth but of history. Despite the great variety of christological statements and developments in the NT, there is one essential concern which is contained in the concept of the exaltation of Jesus and is preserved in all the NT writings. It is that the crucified is the One whom God has called to life to be Lord of the dead and of the living (Rom. 14:9), who has conquered every power and dominion including sin and death, so that under his Lordship the company of believers may go on its way comforted. D. Müller

→ Heaven, → Hand, → Hell

(a). K. Barth, "The Exaltation of the Son of Man", CD IV 2, 3–377; G. Bertram, hypsos etc. TDNT 602–20; O. Cullmann, The Christology of the New Testament, 1959; E. Lohse, Colossians and Philemon, Hermeneia, 1971; G. H. C. Macgregor, "Principalities and Powers: the Cosmic Background to Paul's Thought", NTS 1, 1954-55, 17–28; K. H. Schelkle, "Exaltation", EBT I 242 f.; H. Schlier, bathos, TDNT I 517 f.; E. Schweizer, Lordship and Discipleship, 1960; P. H.

Vaughan, The Meaning of 'bāmâ' in the Old Testament: A Study of Etymological Textual and Archaeological Evidence, Society for Old Testament Study Monograph Series 3, 1974. On passages in the Psalms see the commentaries by A. A. Anderson, I–II (New Century Bible, 1972) and A. Weiser (Old Testament Library, 1962).
(b). G. Bertram, "Der religionsgeschichtliche Hintergrund der Erhöhung in der LXX", ZAW 68, 1956, 57 ff.; H. Bleienstein, "Der erhöhte Christus", Geist und Leben 27, 1954, 84–90; J. Daniélou, "La session à la droite du Père", in The Gospels Reconsidered: A Selection of Papers read at the International Congress on the Four Gospels in 1957, 1960, 68–77; W. Thüsing, Die Erhöhung und Verherrlichung Jesu im Johannesevangelium, Neutestamentliche Abhandlungen 21, 1, 1960; A. Vergote, "L'exaltation du Christ en croix selon le quatrième évangile", Ephemerides Theologicae Lovanienses 28, 1952, 5–23.

Hell, Abyss, Hades, Gehenna, Lower Regions

In speaking about the ultimate fate of the dead the Bible makes use of a variety of concepts. In some cases they are simply taken over under outside religious influence, but in others there has been a subsequent characteristic transformation. There is no unified picture of an unambiguously formulated doctrine, and the power of → death must also be seen in the light of the victory of the → cross. hadēs is the temporary abode of the dead, to which they are banished. It is not clear whether the rare term katōteros stands for the depths of the human world, threatened by death, or the depths of the realm of the dead itself. Judaism is the source of the two terms abyssos and gehenna. abyssos means a particular place of terror which constitutes a refuge for demons; gehenna is the eschatological fiery hell to which the ungodly will be eternally condemned at the last → judgment. → Heaven; → Life; → Paradise; → Time.

ἄβυσσος ἄβυσσος (abyssos), abyss, pit, underworld.

CL & OT abyssos is really an adj., meaning bottomless, unfathomable. Used by itself with the noun gē (earth) understood, it means a bottomless place, hence abyss. In late Gk. the word stood for the primal deep, the primal ocean, the realm of the dead, the underworld.

It occurs about 25 times in the LXX, mostly to translate Heb. *t*ehôm*, the primal ocean (Gen. 1:2), deep waters (Ps. 42:7 [LXX 41:7]), the realm of the dead (Ps. 71:20 [LXX 70:20]). Rab. Judaism also maintained the meaning primal flood for *t*ehôm*. However, the word also stands for the interior of the earth, where bodies are found which cause uncleanness. The abyss also came to stand for the prison of fallen spirits (Eth.Enoch 10:4 ff.; 18:11 ff.; Jub. 5:6 ff.).

NT In the NT abyssos is the prison for → demons (Lk. 8:31; Rev. 9:1 f.). It is closed, but the smoke of subterranean fires rises from it (Rev. 9:1 f.). It is ruled by a prince – not → Satan (Rev. 9:11). Weird creatures emerge from it (Rev. 9:3 ff.), as does the beast (→ Animal; → Antichrist, Rev. 11:7; 17:8). Satan is bound in it for the thousand years' reign (Rev. 20:1, 3).

Rom. 10:7 f., following the LXX of Ps. 106:26 (MT 107:26), uses the word to describe the realm of the dead. It is impossible for a living man to descend into the abyssos. H. Bietenhard

ᾅδης

ᾅδης (hadēs), Hades, the underworld, the realm of the dead.

CL The etymology of the word hadēs is uncertain. It either comes from idein (to see) with the negative prefix, a-, and so would mean the invisible; or it is connected with aianēs, and would have meant originally gloomy, gruesome.

hadēs occurs in Homer (in the form of Aïdēs) as the proper name of the god of the underworld (Il., 15, 188), while in the rest of Gk. literature it stands for the underworld as the abode of the dead who lead a shadowy existence in it (cf. Hesiod, Theog. 455; Homer, Od. 4, 834). After Homer it can mean the grave, death. Only gradually did the Gks. also attach to the concept the ideas of → reward and → punishment. The good and the righteous were rewarded in hadēs, the wicked and the godless received a variety of punishments there. In cl. Gk. it is also spelled Aïdēs (Ionic), Aïdas (Doric).

OT 1. In the LXX hadēs occurs more than 100 times, in the majority of instances to translate Heb. šᵉ'ôl, the underworld which receives all the dead. It is a land of darkness, in which God is not remembered (Job 10:21 f.; 26:5; Ps. 6:5; 30:9 [LXX 29:9]; 115:17 [LXX 113:25]; Prov. 1:12; 27:20; Isa. 5:14). These concepts cannot be squared exactly with that of the grave of the ancestors, the family burial place, where the dead are to be found. What is decisive is the theological statement that Yahweh does not remember the dead, that they are cut off from him and outside his activity in history (Ps. 88:5, 11[LXX 87:5, 11]). They also stand outside the cult and its influence. In death there is no proclamation or praise (Ps. 88:11 [LXX 87:11]; Isa. 38:18). The dead are unclean and therefore, in sharp contrast with surrounding religions, Israel's dead enjoyed no sacral worship. There was no cult of the dead, and necromancy was expressly forbidden (Deut. 18:11). The exceptional case of 1 Sam. 28:7 ff. and the mention of the raising of a dead boy (2 Ki. 4:32 ff.) suggest that there was no rigid divide between dead and living. But no one in Israel could comfort himself with the hope of one day being reunited with the departed. The shades themselves suffer under their decay (Job 14:21 f.).

On the other hand, šᵉ'ôl not only lies on the border of life in the beyond. It also penetrates the circle of the living on every side, through illness, weakness, imprisonment, oppression by enemies and by death. Thus the psalmist in his prayers can say that he has already in a sense been in šᵉ'ôl, but has been rescued by Yahweh. It was possible also for Israel to equate with šᵉ'ôl the → wilderness, or at least to attribute the qualities of death to it (Jer. 2:6, 31). Wherever the voice of Yahweh is not heard or he abandons a man, there the reality of → death and šᵉ'ôl begins (Job 12:24 ff.). Dying, therefore, is not a bio-physical process; it is the disintegration or ending of the life-relationship with Yahweh. Nevertheless, Yahweh's power does not cease at the frontier of the realm of the dead (Amos 9:2; Ps. 139:8 [LXX 138:8]), although he is not concerned about the realm of the dead. "The realm of the dead remained an indefinable third party between Yahweh and his creation" (G. von Rad, Old Testament Theology, II, 1965, 350). Only exceptionally did faith (Job 14:13–22) or the poetic imagination (Isa. 14:9 ff.; Ezek. 32:20 ff.) concern themselves with the realm of the dead. There are only isolated hints at hope beyond death (Job 19:25–27; Ps. 49 [LXX 48]; 73:23 ff. [LXX 72:23 ff.]). So at the frontiers of the OT there appears the hope of → resurrection (→ Death, OT 2; cf. H. H. Rowley, The Faith of Israel, 1956, 150–76).

2. In Rab. Judaism, under Persian and Hel. influence, the doctrine of the immortality of the → soul appeared, and this altered the concept of hadēs. The earliest attestation of this doctrine is Eth.Enoch 22. This chapter is closely related to Lk. 16:22 ff. (cf. also Eth.Enoch 51:1; 102:5; 103:7; 2 Macc. 6:24): reward and punishment begin, after death, in hadēs. According to Josephus (Ant. 18, 14; cf. War 2, 163; 3, 375; SB IV 1166, 1182 ff.), this was the position of the → Pharisees and the Essenes, in contrast to that of the → Sadducees. A later view states that the souls of the righteous, after death, enter heavenly blessedness, while the souls of the ungodly are punished in hadēs. hadēs thus lost its role as the resting place of all souls and became a place of punishment for the souls of the ungodly (cf. Eth.Enoch 63:10; Pss.Sol. 14:6 f.; 15:11; Gr. Bar. 4).

Under the influence of the doctrine of the → resurrection hadēs lost its role as the eternal resting place of souls and became a preparatory, temporary resting place for souls until the resurrection (cf. Eth.Enoch 51:1; Test.Ben. 10; Sib. 4:178–190; 2 Esd. 5:45). 2 Esd. 7:78–100 attempts to establish a compromise between the doctrines of immortality and of the resurrection. According to this, the souls of the righteous enjoy for a time in the beyond a foretaste of the blessedness which will be theirs after the resurrection. The ungodly, on the other hand, receive a foretaste of the punishment that awaits them after the last judgment. This compromise did not prevail in Judaism.

NT In the NT hadēs occurs 10 times, and that only in Matt., Lk., Acts and Rev. In the other writings other terms occur (→ abyssos; → gehenna).

1. Hades lies within the earth, so that one has to go down to it (Matt. 11:23; Lk. 10:15; cf. Matt. 12:40 kardia tēs gēs, the heart of the earth). It is a prison (phylakē, 1 Pet. 3:19; Rev. 20:7). Like a city or town it has → gates (Matt. 16:18), and is locked with a key which Christ holds in his hand (Rev. 1:18). The gates "will not close to imprison (in death) those who belong to the messianic community" (D. Hill, The Gospel of Matthew, 1972, 261). On the other hand, Rev. 20:14 seems to indicate that Hades, like → death, may be thought of as a person. At the resurrection Hades must give up its dead again (Rev. 20:13). So it is not an eternal but only a temporary place or state. According to Acts 2:27, 31 and Lk. 16:23, 26, all the dead are in Hades. According to other passages, only the spirits of the ungodly are in Hades (1 Pet. 3:19; Rev. 20:13 f.). According to Rev. 20:4, the martyrs will rise and reign with Christ for a thousand years (→ Number; → Glossary of Technical Terms, art. Chiliasm).

2. A NT innovation, by comparison with Judaism, is the fact that Jesus has risen to an eternal life (Heb. 7:16). He has taken the power of death and the devil from them (Heb. 2:14), and is Lord of the dead and of the living (Rom. 14:9). Through faith in Christ ideas are transformed: Hades cannot affect the church (Matt. 16:18 f.; 1 Pet. 3:19 ff.; 4:6; Rev. 1:18). Anyone who dies is united with Christ (Phil. 1:23; 2 Cor. 5:8) – even though naked, i.e. without a body (2 Cor. 5:2 f.) – or is in the heavenly Jerusalem (Heb. 12:22), or under the heavenly altar (Rev. 6:9) like the martyrs, or before God's throne (Rev. 7:9; 14:3). Christ has preached to the spirits in prison (1 Pet. 3:19 ff.; 4:6). The saving work of Jesus Christ embraces the dead, and nothing is beyond the grace of Christ.

3. The fact that in the NT there is no description of ideas about the beyond must be connected with this emphasis on the all-embracing dominion and grace of Christ. There is no doctrine of the beyond or any geography of the beyond. This is in sharp contrast to certain Rab. Jewish and also Christian writings down to Dante's Divine Comedy. Perhaps, however, it was the very silence of the NT about the details of the beyond and of the temporary state which excited the curiosity of the pseudo-pious and led to dissatisfaction with placing one's hope in Christ alone. The idea that the statements of scripture have to be enlarged upon by human imagination indicates a lack of faith. A contributory factor here is the substitution of the Gk. doctrine of the immortality of the soul in place of the NT doctrine of the resurrection of the dead (1 Cor. 15). This comes about in unreflective Christianity which fails to ask whether the belief is grounded in the NT or in pagan Gk. thought.

H. Bietenhard

γέεννα

γέεννα (gehenna), Gehenna, hell.

OT The word gehenna does not appear in the LXX or Gk. literature. It is the Gk. form of the Aram. gēhinnām, which in turn goes back to the Heb. gē hinnōm. This originally denoted a valley lying to the south of Jerusalem (today, Wadi er-Rabâbi), the valley of the son (or sons) of Hinnom (Jos. 15:8; 18:16; Isa. 31:9; 66:24; Jer. 32:35; 2 Chr. 33:6). (See L. H. Grollenberg, Atlas of the Bible, 1957, 96, 114 f., 152.) Child sacrifices were offered in this valley (2 Ki. 16:3; 21:6). Josiah had it desecrated (2 Ki. 23:10). According to Jer. 7:32; 19:6 f., it will be the place of God's judgment.

Jewish apocalyptic assumed that this valley would become, after the final judgment, the hell of fire (Eth.Enoch 90:26 f.; 27:1 ff.; 54:1 ff.; 56:3 f.). Hence the name gehenna came to be applied to the eschatological hell of fire in general, even when it was no longer localized at Jerusalem (e.g. 2 Esd. 7:36; Syr.Bar. 59:10; 85:13, Sib. 1:103). In time gehenna became simply the place of punishment and so attracted the corresponding ideas about Hades (→ hadēs). gehenna thus became a temporary place of punishment (until the final judgment). At about the end of the 1st cent. A.D. or the beginning of the 2nd the doctrine of a fiery purgatory arose among the Rabbis. All those in whose cases merit and guilt are equally balanced go to gehenna. There they are purified and, if they do penance, inherit paradise. Alongside this we find the concept of an eschatological Gehinnom judgment, limited in time, after the last judgment (SB IV 1022–1118).

NT For the NT gehenna was a pre-existent entity (Matt. 25:41), a fiery abyss (Matt. 13:42, 50). It was the place of eschatological punishment after the last judgment, punishment of eternal duration (Matt. 25:41, 46; 23:15, 33). Body and soul are judged in it (Mk. 9:43, 45, 47 f.; Matt. 10:28). It was also to be distinguished from Hades which houses the souls of the dead before the last judgment. The same punishment will overtake → Satan and the → demons, the beast (→ Animal) from the abyss, the false → prophet, → death and Hades (Matt. 25:41; 8:29; Rev.

19:20; 20:10, 14f.). In contrast with later Christian writings and ideas, the torments of hell are not described in the NT, "If they are mentioned, it is only to rouse consciences to fear of the wrath of the heavenly Judge" (J. Jeremias, TDNT I 658; cf. Matt. 10:28; Lk. 12:5). Neither does the NT contain the idea that Satan is the prince of gehenna, to whom sinners are handed over for punishment.

H. Bietenhard

κατώτερος | κατώτερος (katōteros), lower.

CL & OT katōteros is the comparative of katō, under. In the LXX it stands for taḥtôn and occurs mostly in the Pss. to denote any area in which life is threatened, or the realm of the dead itself (Pss. 62[63]:9; 85[86]:13; 87[88]:6; 138[139]:15).

NT In the NT the word occurs only in Eph. 4:9 (Christ descended) eis ta katōtera merē tēs gēs, "into the lower parts of the earth".

The following questions arise: Is the comparative katōteros here used in the sense of the superlative (into the lowest regions of the earth) or of the positive (into the regions of the earth, which lie below; so Radermacher, see bibliography)? Is gēs a gen. of apposition? In that case the expression would mean, the lowest parts, namely the earth. If gēs is a partitive gen. the expression would mean the lowest parts of the earth. Funk § 167, following F. Büchsel, TDNT III 641, takes it to mean the regions under the earth. Does katōteros correspond to the expression which occurs in the OT, the lowest (regions) of the earth, which can refer to the earth itself (Ps. 139:15 [LXX 138:15]) and also to Hades, lying under the earth (Ps. 63:9 [LXX 62:9]; Tob. 13:2)? According to a Rab. tradition (attested around A.D. 250 in R. Jehoshua b. Levi), one of the names for Gehinnom (→ geenna) was lowest land, lowest earth (Heb. 'ereṣ hattaḥtîṯ, cf. Erub. 19a; SB IV 1023 f.). Hence the phrase, the lower parts of the earth, could be a rendering of this Heb. expression.

It is possible that Eph. was dependent on an older Jewish exposition of Ps. 68:18 [LXX 67:18]. Moses ascended into heaven to receive the Torah and to transmit it to men (SB III 596). This exposition was then applied to Christ. The ascent of which the Ps. speaks is to be referred to the same person (Christ) who previously descended (→ Heaven, art. anabainō for alternative exegesis of Eph. 4:8). Then the question arises whether "he descended" and "the lower parts of the earth" must not refer to the death of Jesus. Jesus' death belongs to his full manhood. Anyone who dies, according to the Jewish view, goes into the realm of the dead; and this realm of the dead lies under the earth (→ hadēs). So this passage would not imply an actual battle with Hades which the redeemer had to fight, but only the entering of the dead Jesus into the realm of the dead (F. Büchsel, TDNT III 641; → Flesh, NT 2 (a)).

If the view is correct, that Jesus became man in such a way that he took man's final destiny upon himself and had to descend into the realm of the dead, light is thrown on the statement of Eph. 1:20–23. The "all in all" which he fills means the highest → heights and the lowest depth (the realm of the dead). It also means that he has thus received power over all beings, in particular over the spirits.

Other passages in Eph. which deal with Jesus' death speak only of an event on earth (Eph. 5:2, 25). In any case, even if it is the death of Jesus and his related entering into Hades that the passage has in mind, this latter idea is emphasized. Moreover, no weight at all is attached to the spatial concept. Ultimately it matters little whether the earth itself or regions lying beneath its surface are meant here. What is important is the fact that Christ is the exalted One and conqueror of all powers and dominions, and that as such he gives → gifts to his church. In modern exposition the reference of this passage to the descensus ad inferos ("he descended into hell" in the Apostles' Creed) is almost without exception rejected (cf. J. N. D. Kelly, Early Christian Creeds, 1972³, 378–88 for the historical background of the idea). H. Bietenhard

→ Death, → Demon, → Fire, → Gate, → Heaven, → Judgment, → Satan

(a). J. S. Bonnell, Heaven and Hell: A Present-Day Christian Interpretation, 1956; S. G. F. Brandon, The Judgment of the Dead: An Historical and Comparative Study of the Idea of a Post-Mortem Judgment in the Major Religions, 1967; and Man and his Destiny in the Great Religions, 1962; H. Buis, The Doctrine of Eternal Punishment, 1957; and "Hell", ZPEB III 114 ff.; F. Büchsel, katō etc, TDNT III 640 ff.; R. Bultmann, "Polis and Hades in Sophocles' Antigone", Essays Philosophical and Theological, 1953, 22–35; W. Eichrodt, "The Underworld", Theology of the Old Testament, II, 1967, 210–28; T. H. Gaster, Thespis, 1950; and "Dead, Abode of the", IDB I 787 f.; J. Jeremias, abyssos, TDNT I 9 f.; geenna, TDNT I 657 f.; hadēs, TDNT I 146–49; J. N. D. Kelly, Early Christian Creeds, 1972³, 378–88; J. Kürzinger, "Descent into Hell", EBT I 202–6; F. Loofs, "Descent to Hades (Christ's)", ERE IV 654–63; J. A. MacCulloch, "Descent to Hades (Ethnic)", ERE IV 648–54; and The Harrowing of Hell, 1930; J. Michl, "Hell", EBT I 369 ff.; B. Reicke, The Disobedient Spirits and Christian Baptism, 1946; S. S. Smalley, "The Eschatology of Ephesians", EQ 28, 1956, 152–7; L. I. J. Stadelmann, The Hebrew Conception of the World, 1970; H. Vorgrimler, "Christ's Descent into Hell: Is it Important?", Concilium, I 2, 1966, 75–81.
(b). C. Barth, Die Errettung vom Tode in den individuellen Klage- und Dankliedern des Alten Testaments, 1947; G. Beer, "Der Biblische Hades", in Theologische Abhandlungen zu Ehren H. J. Holtzmanns, 1902; A. Bertholet, Die israelitischen Vorstellungen vom Zustande nach dem Tode, 1899; and "Zu den babylonischen und israelitischen Unterweltvorstellungen", Festschrift Paul Haupt, 1926, 8–18; H. Bietenhard, Die himmlische Welt im Urchristentum und Spätjudentum, 1951; and "Kennt das Neue Testament die Vorstellung vom Fegefeuer?", ThZ 3, 1947, 101 ff.; P. Dhorme, "Le séjour des morts chez les Babyloniens et les Hébreux", RB 4, 1908, 59–78; E. Ebeling Tod und Leben nach den Vorstellungen der Babylonier, I, 1931; J. Felten, Neutestamentliche Zeitgeschichte, II, 1925³, 227–42, 258–63; J. Gnilka and J. Ratzinger, LTK V 445–49; G. K. Frank, Himmel und Hölle, 1970; F. C. Grant, W. von Soden, H.-J. Kraus, B. Reicke, "Hölle", *RGG*³ III 400 ff.; A. Grillmeier, "Der Gottessohn im Totenreich", ZTK 71, 1949, 1–53, 184–203; and in LTK V 450–55; J. Kroll, Gott und Hölle, 1932; A. Lods, La Croyance à la Vie Future et le Culte des Morts dans l'Antiquité Israélite, 1906; G. Quell, Die Auffassung des Todes in Israel, 1925; T. Sartory and G. Sartory-Reidick, In der Hölle brennt kein Feuer, 1968; SB III 596 f.; IV 2, 1016 ff.; K. Schilder, Wat is de Hel?, 1930; F. Schwally, Das Leben nach dem Tode, 1892; C. Spicq, "La révelation de l'enfer dans la Sainte Écriture", in G. Bardy et al., L'Enfer, 1950, 91–143; K. Tallquist, Sumerisch-akkadische Namen der Totenwelt 1934; P. Volz, Die Eschatologie der jüdischen Gemeinde im neutestamentlichen Zeitalter, 1934, 256–72, 309–32.

Herb, Plant, Grass

λάχανον

λάχανον (lachanon), herb, vegetable; βοτάνη (botanē), plant; ἄνηθον (anēthon), dill; ἡδύοσμον (hēdyosmon), mint; κύμινον (kyminon), cummin; πήγανον (pēganon), rue; χόρτος (chortos), grass, hay.

CL In secular Gk. lachanon, related to lachainō (dig), denotes garden herbs and vegetables, as opposed to wild plants (Epicrates, Plato). botanē, from boskō (graze), is used of pasture, herbs, weeds. anēthon means dill, the plant Anethum graveolens, employed in seasoning. hēdyosmon is mint (Mentha viridis, M. longifolia) derived from hēdys, sweet, pleasant, and osmaomai, smell. kyminon, cummin, is the aromatic seed of Cuminum cyminum, grown for flavouring dishes; used proverbially of a skinflint prepared to saw the tiny seed in half (Sophron). pēganon is rue, the culinary and medicinal herb Ruta graveolens. chortos means an enclosed feeding space; by extension, pasturage; and so fodder, grass, hay.

OT Four of the above terms appear in the LXX, but with one exception only in the literal sense. (a) lachanon as in secular Gk. stands for edible herbs and vegetables. (b) botanē translates dešeʾ (grass), from a Heb. verb meaning to sprout abundantly (Gen. 1:11; Jer. 14:5); ʿēśeḇ (cultivated plants) in Exodus (e.g. 9:22); and ḥāṣîr (herbage in general, Job 8:12). (c) kyminon transliterates the Heb. kammōn, cummin (Isa. 28:25, 27). (d) chortos nearly 50 times renders the Heb. ʿēśeḇ, seed-bearing annuals springing up after rain: grass, weeds, vegetables, cereals. The character of chortos inspires metaphors and similes. Defeated enemies are like down-trodden grass (4 Ki. 19:26); men flourish like sprouting grass (Ps. 71:16) and as suddenly wilt (Ps. 101:4, 11), for human life is transient (Isa. 40:6).

NT 1. Primary Meanings. In the NT lachanon is consistently used for herbs (Lk. 11:42) and chortos for grass (Matt. 14:19) or the early grasslike blades of crops (Matt. 13:26). Jesus deplores the Pharisees' concern for tithing insignificant herbs (lachanon) like mint (hēdyosmon), rue (pēganon), dill (anēthon), and cummin (kyminon), to the neglect of weightier matters (Matt. 23:23; Lk. 11:42), and in excess of the law's requirements (Deut. 14:22–23).

2. Extended Meanings. (a) In Rom 14:2 Paul refers to certain converts from Judaism eating only vegetables (lachanon) because their feeble grasp of Christian liberty keeps them from disregarding either Jewish dietary laws or the possibility that shop-meat has been associated with pagan sacrifices. (b) In Heb. 6:7 responsive believers are likened to fertile land heavy with crops (botanē). (c) Human life is transitory like chortos (grass) (Jas. 1:10, 11; 1 Pet. 1:24, quoting Isa. 40:6, 7). chortos (hay), possible but poor building material, illustrates unsatisfactory Christian service (1 Cor. 3:12). God's care over short-lived grass guarantees his far greater concern for human needs (Matt. 6:30). → Fullness, art. chortazō.

N. Hillyer

G. Bornkamm, lachanon, TDNT IV 65 ff.; H. N. and A. L. Moldenke, Plants of the Bible, 1952; A. E. Rüthy, Die Pflanze und ihre Teile, 1942; W. Walker, All the Plants of the Bible, 1957.

Hide, Conceal

Both vbs. dealt with here have the same primary meaning, to hide. But whereas kalyptō is used more in the sense of to cover or conceal, the more frequently used vb. kryptō means to hide away, make secret. However, the meaning cannot always be precisely distinguished. In theological use they occur in contexts chiefly concerned with man's ability to see and experience, on the one hand, and the will and activity of God, on the other. Often they are used in passages asserting that God will make himself, or what is hidden, open to human experience or sight.

καλύπτω

καλύπτω (kalyptō), cover, hide, conceal; ἀνακαλύπτω (anakalyptō), uncover, unveil; κατακαλύπτω (katakalyptō), cover up, veil; κάλυμμα (kalymma), veil, covering.

CL & OT kalypto, to conceal, cover (attested from Homer in classical Gk., but rare in Attic prose), is found in later Gk. in both lit. and fig. senses. In the LXX it stands for the Heb. kissâh (piel), and is used of the cloud which covered Sinai and of the darkness which covers the earth (Exod. 24:15; Isa. 60:2). In Ps. 32:5 the word is used of concealing; in Ps. 85:2 of God's covering of sin in forgiveness. The word is frequent in Pss. (e.g. 31:5; 43:15; 84:2) and Ezek. (e.g. 7:18; 16:8; 24:7 f.).

anakalyptō, used for Heb. gālâh, to disclose, uncover, reveal, is related in meaning to apokalyptō (→ Revelation). It is attested in cl. Gk. from the 5th cent. B.C. In the LXX it is used in Job 12:22 of the uncovering of hidden depths shrouded in darkness; in 33:16 of the uncovering of the mind (nous) of men. In Isa. 47:3 Babylon, addressed figuratively as a virgin, is threatened with the uncovering of her nakedness (aischynē) as a divine punishment, while in Jer. 13:22 Judah is similarly threatened with the lifting of her skirts (a symbol of humiliation).

katakalyptō, to hide, cover up, attested in cl. Gk. from Homer, is found in Exod. 26:34 and Num. 4:5 of the covering of the ark with a curtain. In Isa. 6:2 the seraphim cover their faces and their feet with their wings. In the mid. meaning, to cover oneself, Tamar is said in Gen. 38:15 to have veiled her face, i.e. like a prostitute. The rare verbal adj. akatakalyptos, unveiled (Lev. 13:45), occurs in the NT only in 1 Cor. 11:5, 13 (→ Head).

kalymma, veil, covering, attested in cl. Gk. from Homer, is used in Exod. 34:34–35 of the veil worn by Moses to cover his face. In Num. 4:6, 8, 12 etc. the word (along with katakalymma) is used of the cloths with which the holy objects like the ark of the covenant, the altar, the altar vessels etc. were kept from being touched or seen. To look at them or touch them could mean death (Num. 4:15, 20).

NT 1. The words of this group are relatively rare in the NT and are found only in Matt., Lk., 1 and 2 Cor. 1 Pet and Jas. (a) In the lit. sense kalyptō is found at Matt. 8:24 (the ship is covered by the waves); Lk. 8:16 (no one covers a lamp with a vessel); and Lk. 23:30 (people will say to the hills, "Cover us!").

(b) A fig. use is found in the general statement, "There is nothing covered that will not be revealed" (Matt. 10:26 = Lk. 12:2). Lk.'s version has here the intensified form synkekalymmenon, while the parallel tradition in Mk. 4:22 = Lk. 8:17 has → krypton. The statement allows of various applications; but in the context it refers here to the commission given by Jesus to his → disciples. The word told to them in secret is to be proclaimed publicly from the rooftops (Matt. 10:27).

2. In 1 Cor. 11:1–6 Paul deals with the question of women's veils. This is the only place in the NT where the mid. katakalyptesthai to veil oneself (twice, in vv. 6–7), and the adj. akatakalyptos, unveiled (vv. 5, 13), are found. Paul demands that a → woman wear a veil when praying or prophesying in church (vv. 4–5; cf. the women "who prophesied" in Acts 21:9). This requirement is in keeping with the strict Jewish and Oriental sense of what is fitting, according to which it would be unthinkable for a woman to appear in public without a veil (v. 13). The Gk. custom was probably not uniform, but the church in the international city of Corinth was scarcely a purely Greek church. Paul wishes this custom to be observed not only in Corinth but also in the other churches (v. 16). Because, however, of the variety of circumstances, this was not by any means the case (A. Oepke, TDNT III 563). The puzzling thing is the ground for this ruling given in v. 10 (over and above the reference in v. 13 to what is fitting): the women are to have an "authority" on their head. The authority (exousia) refers to the head-covering, the veil (Old Latin texts translate it velamen); but the odd expression exousia is not adequately explained (cf. W. Foerster, exousia, TDNT II 570 f.). Just as difficult are the words "because of the angels". Are the angels the guardians of the natural order (vv. 8, 9; cf. Gen. 2:21 ff.)? Or is the veil a protection against fallen angels who might wish to lead the women astray? Attempts have been made to find a background for such an interpretation in Gen. 6:1 ff., where it is recorded that the "sons of God" (the reference is to angelic powers) took to wife the daughters of men. Jewish literature of the NT period expanded this story further (Eth.Enoch 6; Syr.Bar. 56; Test.Reub. 5). The brevity of Paul's reference makes it difficult to be certain of the correct interpretation. (For further discussion of this whole passage → Head, NT 3.)

3. (a) The word kalymma, covering, is found 4 times in the NT, all in 2 Cor. 3:13–16. Here Paul makes reference to Exod. 34:33–35, where it is recorded that Moses put a veil over his face, because the Israelites feared the divine radiance which came from it (Exod. 34:30; cf. Num. 4:15, 20). Paul disregards the fear motive. He interprets the passage to mean that Moses put on the veil in order that the Israelites might not see the end of the temporary radiance. The passing → glory (doxa) of the old covenant is contrasted with the eternal glory of the new (v. 11). This veil remains unlifted, we read in vv. 14 f., up to the present day when the "old covenant" is read. It lies over the minds of the Jews who cannot grasp the true meaning of the old covenant as a pointer to Christ. Just as Moses removed the veil when he went in to God (Exod. 34:34), so will the veil be removed from Israel when they are converted to the Lord, i.e. when they allow themselves to be ruled by the → Spirit (v. 16; cf. v. 17, ho de kyrios to pneuma estin, the Lord is the Spirit). (On this whole passage see P. E. Hughes, Commentary on the Second Epistle to the Corinthians, 1962, 107–34; W. C. van Unnik, "With Unveiled Face", NovT 6, 1963, 153ff.)

(b) The same context contains in vv. 14 and 18 the only NT instances of the vb. anakalyptō. There is no question as to the meaning to unveil, uncover. But the exegesis of v. 14, which says that the veil remains over the reading of the "old covenant", is difficult. The AV translates, "until this day rèmaineth the same vail untaken away"; the RSV, "it remains unlifted, because only through Christ is it taken away" (reading a comma after menei, "remains"). P. Bachmann interprets the words mē anakalyptomenon as an acc. absolute and translates: "without it being revealed that (hoti) it (i.e. the "old covenant" as a way of salvation) has been done away in Christ" (Der Zweite Brief des Paulus an die Korinther, 1922³, 168). In any case the thought which Paul wishes to convey is that for Christians the veils have been removed which would prevent them from seeing "the light of the gospel of the glory of Christ" (4:4, 6). This is clear from v.18, where he goes on to give expression to the assurance of Christian faith: "We all, with unveiled [anakekalymmenō] face, beholding the glory of the Lord" (cf. H. D. Wendland, Die Briefe an die Korinther, NTD 7, 1963, 157 ff.). The effect of this beholding is that the beholders are changed by the Lord, who is the Spirit (v. 17), into the likeness of the one whom they behold (→ See).

In contradiction to the statement of 2 Cor. 3:18 stands the verdict which, according to 2 Cor. 4:3, opponents pass upon the Pauline gospel: the Pauline gospel is "veiled" (kekalymmenon). In other words, it is obscure or contradictory. Paul throws back the criticism in his opponents' teeth by saying that it is veiled for those who are perishing, for those who are unable to see the light of the gospel, because they have been blinded by Satan (2 Cor. 4:4). This judgment agrees with the remarks about the unbelieving Jews which have been made in 2 Cor. 3:13.

4. In 1 Pet. 4:8 the readers are exhorted to love on the ground that love covers (kalyptei) a multitude of → sins. In Jas. 5:20 the same grounds are given in an exhortation to bring back a sinner from the error of his way (cf. also 1 Clem. 49:5; 2 Clem. 16:4). Probably what we have here is a catch-phrase which had its origin in Prov. 10:12 (Heb. text). The epistles of Clement interpret it in the sense of "justification by works": love wins for him who practises it the forgiveness of his sins. Another interpretation is possible, and more in keeping with the language used. → Love covers up, by means of the → forgiveness which it instils, a multitude of sins in others.

W. Mundle

κρύπτω

κρύπτω (kryptō), hide, conceal; ἀποκρύπτω (apokryptō), hide; κρυπτός (kryptos), hidden, secret; ἀπόκρυφος (apokryphos), hidden; κρυφαῖος (kryphaios), and κρύφιος (kryphios), hidden.

CL 1. kryptō, to hide, conceal, fig. to keep secret, is attested in cl. Gk. from Homer. From the Hel. aorist ekrybēn (common in the LXX, e.g. Gen. 3:8) is derived the vb. krybō, which has the same meaning (found in the NT only in the form periekryben, she kept herself hidden [Lk. 1:24]). The derivative apokryptō (Homer) has the same meaning. It is not possible to draw an absolute distinction between its range of meaning and that of the similar vb. → kalyptō, to hide. The same may be said of the adjectives kryptos and apokryphos, hidden (Homer and 5th cent. B.C. respectively). The group also includes the adv. kryphē, secretly (in the NT at Eph. 5:12 only), and the adj. kryphaios, hidden, which is found only in biblical usage (Jer. 23:24; Lam. 3:10; in the NT only at Matt. 6:18, par. to en tō kryptō, in secret, vv. 4, 6). The noun kryptē, vault, cellar, hidden corner (attested from 3rd cent. B.C.), is found in the NT only at Lk. 11:33.

2. The hiddenness of the deity is not emphasized greatly in Gk. and Hel. religion. Although the Hymn to Isis from Andros (1st cent. B.C.) speaks of the secret (apokrypha) symbols of Hermes, and Iamblichus (3rd cent A.D.) mentions ta krypta, the hidden things, of the goddess Isis (cf. Arndt, 93, 455; A. Oepke, kryptō, TDNT III 961–6), the Hel. mystery religions are no exception. The most one can say is that the word apokryphos, hidden, plays a great part in books of magic and astrological texts. The biblical doctrine of God, with its awareness of his transcenddence and its emphasis on the unapproachability and hiddenness of God, is largely foreign to Gk. and Hel. religion.

OT 1. In the LXX kryptō is found in the lit. sense of to hide (e.g. Gen. 3:8, 10) as well as in the fig. sense of to keep secret (e.g. Gen. 18:17; 1 Sam. 3:17, 18). It represents various Heb. roots with the same basic meaning, e.g. ḥāḇā', to hide, conceal (Gen. 3:8, 10; 1 Sam. 14:11), kḥd (piel), to hide, conceal (1 Sam. 3:17; cf. A. Oepke, TDNT III 967). apokryptō, to hide, usually has the fig. meaning (Isa. 40:27; Wis. 6:22). The adj. kryptos is used in both the lit. and the fig. senses (2 Macc. 1:16; Deut. 29:29). apokryphos, hidden, is used in Isa. 45:3, 1 Macc. 1:23 and Dan. 11:43 of secret treasures. The expression en apokryphō, in secret, is also found (e.g. Deut. 27:15; Ps. 10:8).

2. (a) The hiddenness and unapproachability of God is depicted impressively in the OT in the story of the call of → Moses. Moses is not allowed to approach the God who has revealed himself to him in the burning bush, but turns his face away (LXX apestrepsen); he is afraid of God's face (Exod. 3:6; → God, OT 2). Similarly the people do not dare to approach God at Sinai; Moses alone dares to go forward into the darkness (Exod. 20:21).

The same basic concept is found in later writings. In the secret place of thunder God hears his people's cry of distress (Ps. 81:7). At the consecration of the temple Solomon declared that God wishes to dwell in darkness (1 Ki. 8:12). This also applies in the fig. sense to God's hidden guidance: the painful misfortunes of Israel are regarded as judgments of God in which his comfort remains hidden (Hos. 13:14). The God of Israel is a hidden God, and yet he remains the saviour. He hides his face in wrath, but he returns to his people with everlasting → grace (Isa. 45:15; 54:8). Though Israel's way may be hidden from God, it is not cut off from the comfort of the Lord who gives power and strength to the weary (Isa. 40:27, 29).

(b) God hides himself from men, but man cannot hide from God. God is the Lord who fills heaven and earth (Jer. 23:24). Everywhere man is surrounded by God's presence; God's eye sees even in the darkness, nothing is hid from Him (Ps. 139:7–12, 15; Sir. 39:19). To flee from God, as the case of Jonah shows (Jon. 1:3), is therefore a hopeless quest. Above all, human sin is not hidden from God (Jer. 16:17). There is no gloom or darkness where evildoers can hide themselves (Job 34:22; Sir. 17:15, 20). Sinful man is therefore threatened by God on every side. Before this terrible God he must creep into the earth's recesses (Isa. 2:10). To him God is like a bear lying in wait or a lion in hiding (Lam. 3:10). And so Job complains that God hides his face from him like an enemy (Job 13:24). Similarly the psalmists complain that God hides his face from them and is far from them (Pss. 10:1; 44:24); but man's sin is not hidden from God (Ps. 69:5). The awareness of personal guilt and distance from God finds strong expression in the Pss. All the more urgent, therefore, is the plea made to God by the righteous: "Hide not thy ear from my cry" (Lam. 3:56). Finally, the sighing of the righteous cannot remain hidden from God (Ps. 38:9). He therefore must stand before God with his sin and confess it; if he does not hide it, he can obtain God's forgiveness (Ps. 32:5). He asks this forgiveness also for hidden faults (Ps. 19:12). The psalmists know of the gracious God in whose goodness they may find refuge (Ps. 27:5; 31:19–20). One of the effects of this attitude of faith and trust is the desire to hide God's commandments in one's heart, i.e. to be their guardian (Ps. 119:11, 19).

(c) Thus in the OT expression is given in a variety of ways to the tension between the hiddenness of God and his → revelation. As the hidden God, he reveals what is hidden, the hidden things which concern the future (Dan. 2:22; Sir. 42:19; 48:25). This opens up the way which leads to Jewish apocalyptic which has its beginning in the book of Daniel. God is revealed also in his judgments, as the righteous → judge who brings to light what is hidden (Eccl. 12:14; 2 Macc. 12:41). Thus he reveals to Abraham the coming judgment on Sodom. Here it is hinted, but not explicitly said, that he is the gracious God whose wrath does not continue for ever (Gen. 18:23–33).

3. In Judaism of the NT period, the apocalyptic literature which continues the tradition of the book of Daniel concerns itself a great deal with the hidden things, especially in so far as they have to do with the future. In the Book of Enoch the "Son of Man" (→ Son, art. hyios tou anthrōpou), the "chosen one", will reveal all the treasures of what is hidden, and all secrets of wisdom will proceed from the thoughts of his mouth (Eth.Enoch 46:3; 51:3). The Qumran texts speak of a secret knowledge of the will of God which remains hidden to outsiders and is attainable only by the sect-community by way of the law and the prophets (1QS 4:6; 9:17; 11:6; 1QH 5:25; 8:10 f.). Even in Rab. Judaism the awareness of the hiddenness of God and his mysteries does not totally disappear (SB I 578 f., 659 f.), but it is balanced by the conviction of the pious Jew that the full and valid → revelation of God has been given him in the → law. The Jew, as characterized by Paul, possesses in the law "the embodiment of knowledge and truth" (Rom. 2:20); this fits him to be a guide to the blind and a light to those who are in darkness (cf. Rom. 2:17–20).

NT 1. In the NT kryptō occurs 19 times, and apokryptō 4 times. In the parallel passages, Matt. 11:25 = Lk. 10:21, Matt. uses kryptō and Lk. apokryptō. Of the adjectives, kryptos occurs 17 times; apokryphos 3 times (Mk. 4:22; Lk. 8:17; Col. 2:3); kryphaios twice (Matt. 6:18, v.l. en tō kryptō). The sayings in Matt. 10:26 and Lk. 12:2 (8:17) are variations of the one in Mk. 4:22, "There is nothing hidden that shall not be made manifest." The parallelism of the sayings indicates that no clear line of distinction can be drawn between the meanings of the words above mentioned, nor indeed between them and the related → kalyptō (cf. Lk. 23:30 with Rev. 6:16). The words are often used in their lit. sense: Matt. 13:44 mentions the treasure hidden in a field, while in the parable of the talents the unfaithful servant hides his money in the earth (25:18, 25). Similarly the woman hides the leaven in the flour (Matt. 13:33 enekrypsen; cf. Lk. 13:21). In a reference to Exod. 2, Heb. 11:23 records the hiding of the child Moses after his birth.

2. Of theological significance are the sayings which deal with the hiddenness of revelation and of the revelatory work of God. The → revelation which God gives through Jesus to babes remains hidden from the wise and prudent (Matt. 11:25 par. Lk. 10:21). The hiddenness of revelation corresponds to the hiddenness of the → kingdom of heaven. This is the message of the parables of the leaven and of the hidden treasure (Matt. 13:33, 44). Just as the kingdom is hidden, so must the disciples' almsgiving, prayers and fasting, be done in secret; the Father who sees in secret will → reward them. Jesus emphasized this in the face of a type of piety which sought to make a display of itself (Matt. 6:4, 6, 18). The passion predictions of Jesus indicate that for the disciples the divine plan remains for the present hidden; it is not revealed to them until after the resurrection (Lk. 18:34; cf. Mk. 9:32; Lk. 9:45). Similarly it is Jerusalem that failed to recognize the salvation which Jesus desired to bring her: the things that made for her peace remained hidden from her eyes (Lk. 19:42).

The saying in Matt. 10:26 gives rise in v. 27 to the commission to the disciples to spread the message: this is the way in which what has been hidden is to be made known. This is the interpretation that Matthew gives to the purpose of parables: they are intended to express what has been hidden since the foundation of the world (Matt. 13:35, quoting Ps. 78:2). The message is not to be spread by word alone, but also by the works of the disciples. The city set on a hill cannot be hid, and a light is not placed under a bushel or in a hidden corner, but on the lampstand, so that all may see it (Matt. 5:14 ff.; Lk. 11:33).

The Gospel of John says that Joseph of Arimathea was a secret (kekrymmenos) disciple (19:38) for fear of the Jews. In contrast to this, Jesus confessed at his trial before the high priest: "I have said nothing secretly" (Jn. 18:20). His task has been to manifest the Father's → name before men (Jn. 17:6). In apparent contradiction to this attitude, Jn. 7:8–10 records that Jesus did not go up to Jerusalem, although his brothers who did not believe in him urged him to do so. It was at the time of the Feast of Tabernacles (7:2 ff.). He did not go to this festival, because his time was not yet fulfilled. He went, but not until later and then secretly (vv. 8, 10). According to Jn. 8:59 he hid from the Jews and left the temple when they tried to stone him. When the Jews decided to put him to death, he no longer went about openly among them, but went into hiding (11:54, apēlthen, he went away). The reason for this is given in Jn. 10:17, 18. Men cannot and must not be allowed to take his life from him at their volition; Jesus gave it up on his own resolve, when his hour had come, (Jn. 7:8; 13:1; 17:1). His action was determined by the relationship of love with his heavenly Father with whom he is one (Jn. 10:17, 30). The hiddenness of Jesus serves to expose his lack of dependence upon man, and his majesty and union with God. It does not mean that the revelation of Christ is intended to remain hidden to all, for Jesus is the → light of the world (Jn. 8:12). But it is given only to the disciples (Jn. 17); unbelievers are subject to the judgment of total blindness (9:39).

3. (a) Paul declares that the apostolic message is the hidden wisdom of God which God has ordained from all eternity for our glory (1 Cor. 2:7, apokekrymmenēn). It has its origin in divine → revelation (Rom. 16:25; 1 Cor. 2:10; Gal. 1:12). Its content is Christ whom God has made → wisdom for us (1 Cor. 1:30); the Spirit-inspired message brings us knowledge of God (1 Cor. 2:10 f.).

(b) Ephesians and Colossians carry these ideas still further. The message is the secret hidden since the beginning of the world to former generations, but now revealed to the saints (Col. 1:25 ff.), and the holy apostles and prophets (Eph. 3:5 ff.). It proclaims to us the Christ present in Christians and his unsearchable riches (Col. 1:27; Eph. 3:8). In this Christ are hidden all the treasures of wisdom; thus OT language about hidden treasures (see above OT 1) is interpreted as referring to Christ (Col. 2:3). Not only, however, does Christ bestow knowledge; he is also the hidden life of the Christian. Christians are buried with him in → baptism, and raised by faith to a new life. This life is hid with Christ in God (Col. 2:12; 3:3). Therefore they can take no part in the "hidden things of shame" (2 Cor. 4:2), in the works of darkness which take place in secret and yet cannot remain hidden (Eph. 5:12; cf. 1 Tim. 5:25).

(c) In 1 Peter Christian women are called to a life with Christ: their holiness of life is to be evident from the fact that they do not adorn themselves with costly outward finery, but that their adornment is the "hidden person of the heart with the imperishable jewel of a gentle and quiet spirit" (1 Pet. 3:4). The mark of this hidden person who conducts his or her life with Christ is a life of hope, submission and fear of God (vv. 2, 5, 6).

4. (a) Paul describes the believing Christian in Rom. 2:29 as a "Jew inwardly [en tō kryptō]." Through the → Spirit who has been given to Christians in faith and guarantees their status as children of God (Rom. 8:15 ff.; Gal. 4:6), they have received a circumcision of the → heart. This circumcision "made without hands" (Col. 2:11 f.) means that in → baptism they share in Christ's burial and resurrection (cf. Rom. 6:3 ff.). Thus they become members of the true people of God. "For we are the true circumcision, who worship God in spirit, and glory in Christ Jesus, and put no confidence in the flesh", Paul writes to the Philippians (Phil. 3:3). The Jew who is one outwardly (en tō phanerō, Rom. 2:28) only relies on the circumcision of the flesh. This circumcision proves that he is a member of the Jewish people, → Israel "according to the flesh" (1 Cor. 10:18). In contrast to this is the "Israel of God" (Gal. 6:16), the church of Christ, to which the Christian may belong as a member of the true people of God, as "a Jew inwardly", even without belonging outwardly to the Jewish people.

(b) Rev. 2:17 speaks of the "hidden manna", the gift of the heavenly world. Manna was the secret food provided by God which Israel received from heaven on her journey through the wilderness (Exod. 16:4; → Bread, art. manna). In Jewish expectation (Syr.Bar. 29:8) it was to be given to Israel anew at the end of the ages. This gift will be received by "him who conquers", who retains through all trials his loyalty to God. Ultimately this gift is Christ himself: he is the → bread of God which comes down from heaven (Jn. 6:33 ff.).

(c) From all this it is clear that language about the hiddenness of God and of divine things is connected with the NT's forward look into the future. God is the judge who will bring into judgment the secrets of men (Rom. 2:16), and will bring to light the hidden things of darkness and reveal the purposes of the heart (1 Cor. 4:5), just as the Spirit of God already at work in Christians discloses the secrets of the heart (1 Cor. 14:25).

(d) Revelation takes up OT prophecies (Isa. 2:10 f.; Jer. 4:29; Hos. 10:8) and describes how on the day of judgment the kings and great men of the earth will have to hide in caves and clefts of the rocks: they will cry out to the mountains and rocks, "Fall on us and hide us from the face of God and from the wrath of the Lamb" (Rev. 6:15; cf. Lk. 23:30).

5. The idea of judgment is only one side of NT expectation concerning the future. First and foremost the NT looks forward to the coming Lord: when Christ, the hidden life of Christians, shall appear, then they will appear with him in glory (Col. 3:3 f.). Then that knowledge which is here enjoyed only in part and which cannot lift the veil of God's hiddenness will no longer be obscure. It will no longer be a matter of seeing "in a mirror dimly" (1 Cor. 13:12), but will be turned into sight, face to face. To see the → face of God is here no longer a ground for fear, but the fulfilment of the Christian's joyful hope.

6. (a) The word "apocryphal" has passed into common usage because of the so-called apocryphal literature (→ Glossary of Technical Terms). This consists of secret, hidden writings, which were not read out in church. The way was paved for the appearance of this literature by the fact that in the NT period the authority of → Scripture, or the Scriptures, was already established, while the question of which writings belonged to the authoritative, "canonical" Scriptures was not yet fully resolved. In 1 Cor. 2:9, for instance, Paul cites a passage which is not to be found in our biblical texts, though it bears some resemblance to Isa. 64:4 (cf. also 65:17). According to some of the early Fathers (Origen on Matt. 27:4; Ambrosiaster on 1 Cor. 2:9; and Jerome on Isa. 64:4), it was in the Apocalypse of Elijah which has not come down to us except in a fragment which does not contain the words. It was frequently quoted especially by gnostic writers and was ascribed to Jesus by Act.Pet. 39 and Gos.Thom. 17. In Jude 14 the prophecy of Enoch is mentioned, and a passage is cited from the apocryphal Apocalypse of Enoch (Eth.Enoch 1:9). The mention of Jannes and Jambres, the magicians who opposed Moses (2 Tim. 3:8) likewise presupposes the use of an apocryphal tradition (TDNT III 990). In the canonical tradition their names are not mentioned (cf. Exod. 7:10 ff.). Later, from Jerome onwards (c. 380 A.D.), the title "Apocrypha" was limited to those books included in the LXX and the Latin Vulgate which was based on it which do not appear in the Heb. canon of the OT. The designation of these books as apocryphal did not however settle finally the question of their canonicity. At the Council of Trent (Session IV, 1546) the Roman Catholic Church pronounced them canonical (cf. H. Denzinger, Enchiridion Symbolorum, 1957[31], §§ 783 f.). Luther declared them to be "good and useful to read", and with some reservation included them in his translation of the Bible. The Church of England recognized that the Church reads them "for example and instruction of manners; but yet doth it not apply them to establish any doctrine" (Article VI). In the Reformed Churches of the Calvinistic tradition they were generally rejected; but the attitudes of the various churches were not uniform. (See further The Cambridge History of the Bible, I–III, 1963–70 [see indexes]; B. M. Metzger, An Introduction to the Apocrypha 1969[3]; R. H. Charles, ed., The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, I–II, [1913] 1963.)

It is important to note the distinction between the apocryphal literature and apocalyptic writings, the subject of which is revelations about the events of the last days (→ Glossary of Technical Terms, art. Apocalyptic; → Revelation).

(b) In addition to the OT Apocrypha there is a body of NT Apocrypha, consisting of those writings which are related to the NT either by literary form or by date of origin. These include Apocryphal gospels and books of Acts, like the Gospel according to the Hebrews, the Gospel according to the Egyptians, the Gospel of Thomas, the Acts of Peter, Paul, John and Thomas, spurious Epistles like that of Paul to the Laodiceans, books of revelation like the Apocalypse of Peter. (For critical edition see E. Hennecke and W. Schneemelcher, eds., New Testament Apocrypha, I–II, 1963–65.) Recent discoveries at Nag Hammadi in Upper Egypt in 1946 have enriched our knowledge of this literature. These writings which arose particularly in gnostic circles and which are fictional and wildly imaginative in content, were sometimes rejected from the outset by the church, and sometimes after a period of vacillation. (For texts see R. M. Grant, Gnosticism: An Anthology, 1961; and W. Foerster, Gnosis: A Selection of Gnostic Texts, I, 1972; II, 1974.) To the NT Apocrypha are sometimes (but mistakenly) reckoned the Apostolic Fathers (1 and 2 Clement, the Shepherd of Hermas, the Didache and other writings [cf. J. B. Lightfoot, The Apostolic Fathers, I–V, 1889–90, one-volume ed., 1891 revised; C. C. Richardson, ed., Early Christian Fathers, 1953]). These books are close to the NT in time, and to some extent in content. The fact that some of them are to be found in ancient MSS of the Bible indicates that for a time there was uncertainty as to whether they belonged to the NT. W. Mundle

→ Knowledge, → Revelation

(a). B. Altaner, Patrology, 1960, 47–96; S. Barabas, "Apocrypha, Modern", ZPEB I 213 ff.; R. Bultmann, "Adam, where art Thou?", in Essays Philosophical and Theological, 1955, 119–32; and "Concerning the Hidden and Revealed God", in Existence and Faith, 1964, 25–38; The Cambridge History of the Bible, I, ed. P. R. Ackroyd and C. F. Evans, 1970; II, ed. G. W. H. Lampe, 1969; III, ed. S. L. Greenslade, 1963; R. H. Charles, Religious Developments between the Old and New Testaments, 1914; R. H. Charles, ed., The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, I–II, (1913) 1963; O. Eissfeldt, The Old Testament: An Introduction, 1965, 560–668; M. S. Enslin, "Apocrypha, NT", IDB I 166–69; C. T. Fritsch, "Apocrypha", IDB I 161–66; E. J. Goodspeed, Modern Apocrypha, 1956; R. K. Harrison, Introduction to the Old Testament, 1970; and "Apocrypha", ZPEB I 205–10; E. Hennecke and W. Schneemelcher, eds., New Testament Apocrypha, I–II, 1963–65; M. R. James, The Apocryphal New Testament, 1924 and reprints; R. McL. Wilson, "Apocryphal New Testament", ZPEB I 210–13; B. M. Metzger, An Introduction to the Apocrypha, 1969³; A. Oepke, kalyptō, TDNT III 556–92; A. Oepke and R. Meyer, kryptō, TDNT III 957–1000; R. H. Pfeiffer, History of New Testament Times with an Introduction to the Apocrypha, 1957; D. S. Russell, The Method and Message of Jewish Apocalyptic 200 B.C.–A.D. 100, 1964; D. M. Scholer, Nag Hammadi Bibliography, 1949, 1969, 1971; C. C. Torrey, The Apocryphal Literature, 1945; W. C. van Unnik, "With Unveiled Face", NovT 6, 1963, 153 ff.

(b). A. Böhlig and P. Labib, Koptisch-gnostische Apokalypsen aus Kodex V von Nag Hammadi, 1963; J. Göttsberger, "Die Hülle des Mose nach Ex. 34 und 2 Kor. 3", BZ 16, 1924, 1 ff.; SB III 427 ff.

For works on gnosticism → bibliography under Knowledge.

Hinder, Prevent, Forbid

Hindrances may take a variety of forms. They may be solid and physical (like rocks) or psychological (like lack of insight). We may meet them suddenly all at once or as a continuing impediment. They may affect a particular plan or our whole being. The Gk. vbs. enkoptō and kōlyō correspond to this variety of meanings. enkoptō denotes a temporary (originally military) obstacle. kōlyō, on the other hand, generally signifies a human obstacle which frequently affects the whole person, and in the NT specifically the relationship of the individual to God.

ἐγκόπτω

ἐγκόπτω (enkoptō), hinder, thwart; ἐγκοπή (enkopē), hindering, hindrance; ἐγκοπὴν διδόναι τινί (enkopēn didonai tini), hinder something.

CL & OT The vb. enkoptō, composed of en- (in) and koptō (to strike), originally meant to knock in or cut into. The meaning hinder arose out of its military use. During a retreat the road might be cut into (i.e. broken up), in order to delay the pursuing enemy. The noun enkopē therefore denoted originally merely a temporary hindrance (cf. proskomma, → Offence), and only very late (1st cent. B.C.) a permanent impediment. The vb. is followed by the dat. (in the NT by the acc., by analogy with kōlyō). A following infin. is frequently in the gen. (to be translated in the NT almost as a consecutive by "so that"; Funk § 400, 4; cf. Rom. 15:22). The following infin. is frequently accompanied by mē or mē ou, according to whether the expression is used positively, negatively or interrogatively, a usage which seems to us pleonastic (Funk § 429; cf. Gal. 5:7). Neither vb. nor noun occurs in the LXX. The vbs. of hindering in the OT do not have the special nuances of enkoptō.

NT The noun occurs once, and the vb. 5 times (3 times in Paul and once each in Acts and 1 Pet.). In the NT these words indicate an occurrence which hinders progress in the realm of → faith or in the Christian life, bringing it to a standstill, if not permanently at least for the moment. Such a hindrance is always of a kind that can be overcome.

The → proclamation of the → gospel could thus have been hindered, if Paul had allowed himself to receive money from the churches which came into being as the result of his preaching (1 Cor. 9:12). This hindrance was not of permanent consequence, but in particular cases was nontheless considerable. Therefore, Paul waived his rights (exousia) which in themselves could not be contested. Again, Paul's mission in Rome was only delayed by the fact that he had to complete projects which he had begun in other places (Rom. 15:22). Paul wanted to go to Thessalonica, but the visit was repeatedly hindered by → Satan (1 Thess. 2:18). It is no longer possible to determine what hindrances Paul classified as Satan's work. It might have been an illness (2 Cor. 12:7; cf. on this point Phil. 2:25–30) or the machinations of the Jews (1 Thess. 2:15 f.).

In Gal. 5:7 the Christian life is compared to a race, the running of which is hindered by false teachers. The true way of faith has been endangered by sectarian, legalistic, gnostically inclined Jewish Christians (so W. Schmithals and K. Wegenast; see bibliography), because they have perverted the gospel (1:7) and threaten to destroy the unity of the church (4:17).

Insufficient → knowledge (art. ginōskō; cf. B. Reicke, see bibliography) can also act as a hindrance to men's prayers (1 Pet. 3:7). The trouble here is that, under the influence of prevailing pagan custom, men have tended to despise their wives instead of recognizing them as partners. The passage has nothing to do with the common prayers of married couples, nor with marriage as a hindrance to prayer. Similar concepts of hindering occur in 1 Cor. 13:1 and 11:20–29 (where the vb. is not used). In the former it is a lack of love which hinders effective preaching, and in the latter a selfish lack of brotherly consideration which prevents the proper celebration of the → Lord's Supper.

The Aram. and Syriac versions and also the misleading ref. to Job 19:2 and Isa. 43:23 (which have enkopon and not enkopēn poiein) have resulted in the erroneous translation of enkoptō as "weary" in Acts 24:4 (KJV, Moffatt). However, the basic meaning of enkoptō makes good sense: "In order not to hinder you any further [i.e. by this long speech from carrying out of your administrative duties]" (cf. F. F. Bruce, The Acts of the Apostles, 1952², 421; E. Haenchen, The Acts of the Apostles, 1971, 653). Burden, delay or detain are also possible translations (G. Stählin, TDNT III 855; Arndt, 215). C. H. Peisker

κωλύω

κωλύω (kōlyō), hamper, hinder, prevent, restrain, forbid.

CL The vb. kōlyō is attested from Pindar on. Although its etymology is obscure (possibly from kolos, stunted), it originally meant to cut short, and then to hinder, etc. It is used with a separative gen.: kōlyō tina tinos, hinder someone in something (cf. Acts 27:43). In the NT the gen. is frequently replaced by apo (Funk §180, 1; cf. Lk. 6:29). As in the case of enkoptō, a following infin. is often in the gen., in the NT always without mē (Funk § 429). There are familiar idioms such as ti kōlyei, why not? and ouden kōlyei, proceed by all means (so far as I am concerned).

OT The vb. occurs approximately 33 times in the LXX. In 20 of these instances there is no Heb. equivalent, as the passages occur in the Apocrypha. It also occurs in a few Jewish Pseudepigrapha (Gr.Enoch, Aristeas, Test.XII) and in Philo and Josephus. The LXX employs kōlyō most frequently to translate Heb. kālā' (8 times); it stands also for māna' (3 times), and once each for šûḇ (hiph.) and 'āzar. The basic meaning is to hinder (cf. Ezek. 31:15; Job 12:15). It is used mostly in the sense of to restrain, withold. The objects of this action can be people (Gen. 23:6; Num. 11:28; Ps. 119:101) and things (wind, water, Eccl. 8:8; Ezek. 31:15; Job 12:15). The subject may be God (1 Sam. 25:26; Ezek. 31:15) or men (Moses, Num. 11:28; the writer, Pss. 40:10; 119:101).

kōlyō can denote holding back in secular contexts, where a man is the subject and things are prevented, refused, denied or withheld (Gen. 23:6; Test. Sim. 2:12). But it can be used in a religious sense, both with regard to its cause and effect. In this case it is God, one of his servants or the righteous man who does the witholding. Here kōlyō refers especially to the relationship of the people or of an individual to God.

NT kōlyō occurs 23 times in the NT of which 12 are in Lk. and Acts. Luke's use of the word is significant. Besides a purely secular use in connection with tax evasion (Lk. 23:2), he has also a theological use. In Acts 16:6 Paul is prevented by the Holy Spirit from preaching the gospel in the Roman province of Asia. By this comment Luke intends to demonstrate God's leading along the road towards Europe. Here kōlyō is used as a synonym for enkoptō.

1. (a) From the point of view of the object, the hindering relates mostly to people: soldiers are prevented from killing Paul (Acts 27:43); children are prevented from coming to Jesus (Mk. 10:14 par. Matt. 19:14, Lk. 18:16); Paul was prevented from going to Rome (Rom. 1:13) and from continuing his mission (1 Thess. 2:16). 1 Cor. 14:39 seems to be an exception, as it refers to speaking in tongues. Even so, people are directly involved.

(b) Such hindrances can stem directly from a person: a Roman centurion (Acts 24:23; 27:43); disciples or a baptizing church (Mk. 10:14 par.); circumstances (Rom. 1:13); or death (Heb. 7:23).

(c) The answer to the question, "What is hindered?" indicates clearly the dominant theological use of the vb. Most frequently it is the preaching of the gospel that is hindered (Acts 16:6; Rom. 1:13; 1 Thess. 2:16; in the widest sense, 1 Cor. 14:39). Since service is also a form of proclamation, Lk. 6:29 (cf. Mk. 14:39; Matt. 26:42) belongs to this context. Comparison of Lk. 11:52 with Matt. 23:13 reveals how the two evangelists interpreted Jesus' condemnation of the experts in the law: "But woe to you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! because you shut the kingdom of heaven against men; for you neither enter yourselves, nor allow those who would enter to go in" (Matt.); "Woe to you lawyers! for you have taken away the key of knowledge; you did not enter yourselves, and you hindered those who were entering" (Lk.). Writing for Gentile readers, Lk. omits the words "kingdom of heaven", and interprets the denunciation in terms of witholding → knowledge.

2. It is striking that both Paul (e.g. Rom. 1:13) and Luke (cf. Acts 16:6) see the ultimate origin of hindrances affecting Christians not in the actions of the people concerned but in God himself (or the → Spirit of God, or Jesus). However, a disciple's own decisions and actions (whether in his dealings with his fellow men, or more particularly in his marriage relationship) clearly affect whether his faith is able to grow and develop, or whether it is constricted and hindered (cf. 1 Cor. 9:4, 7 ff.; 1 Pet. 3:7). The same applies to the church as a whole.

This leads to the question of witholding → baptism. As early as the 1st cent., when enquiries were made whether there were any obstacles in the way of a candidate for baptism, kōlyō became the technical term for the refusal of baptism (O. Cullmann, Baptism in the New Testament, 1950, 75), and Mk. 10:14 par. Matt. 10:13 ff., Lk. 18:15 ff. were used in argument against scruples over infant baptism (Cullmann, op. cit., 76 ff.; cf. Tertullian, De baptismo, 18). This may be due to the use of kōlyō in connection with baptism in the NT (Acts 8:36; 10:47; 11:17) and in early Christian baptismal texts (Gos.Eb.; Epiph., Haer. 30, 13, 8; Pseudo-Clement, Homilies 13, 4, 1; 13, 11, 2). C. H. Peisker

(a). K. Aland, Did the Early Church Baptize Infants?, 1963; O. Cullmann, Baptism in the New Testament, 1950; J. Jeremias, Infant Baptism in the First Four Centuries, 1960; and The Origins of Infant Baptism: A Further Study in Reply to Kurt Aland, 1963; G. Stählin, kopetos etc., TDNT III 830–60.

(b). J. Jeremias, "Mc. 10.13–16 Parr. und die Übung der Kindertaufe in der Urkirche", ZNW 40, 1941, 243 ff.; B. Rehm, Die griechisch-christlichen Schriftsteller der ersten vier Jahrhunderte, 1953; B. Reicke, Die Gnosis der Männer nach 1 Petrus 3, 7, BNZW 21, 1957², 296 ff.; W. Schmithals, "Die Häretiker in Galatien", ZNW 47, 1956, 25 ff.; K. Wegenast, Das Verständnis der Tradition bei Paulus und in den Deuteropaulinen, WMANT 8, 1962, 36 ff.

Holy, Consecrate, Sanctify, Saints, Devout

The expressions "holy" and "the holy" denoted at the beginning of the history of religion power (mana), taboo, and then, generally the sphere of divine power which man felt to be superior and threatening. The opposite of the holy was the profane, the sphere of human life outside the realm of the holy. The roots of religion lie in the efforts to separate the holy by means of cultic and ritual processes from the desecration and contamination caused by the profane. The Greeks used three different word-groups to denote the holy. hieros, with its numerous derivatives, denotes the essentially holy, the taboo, the divine power, or what was consecrated to it, e.g. sanctuary, sacrifice, priest. In contrast, hagios – the most frequent word-group in the NT – contains an ethical element. The emphasis falls on duty to worship the holy. hosios also points in this direction. On the one hand, it indicates divine commandment and providence; on the other, human obligation and morality.

ἅγιος

ἅγιος (hagios), holy, sacred; ἁγιάζω (hagiazō), make holy, consecrate, sanctify; ἁγιασμός (hagiasmos), holiness, consecration, sanctification; ἁγιότης (hagiotēs), holiness; ἁγιωσύνη (hagiōsynē), holiness; ἁγίασμα (hagiasma), sanctuary; ἁγιαστήριον (hagiastērion), sanctuary.

CL There is no certain etymology for hagios. It is related to hazomai (from hagiomai) which is not found in the LXX or the NT, meaning to stand in awe of the gods or one's parents, e.g. Apollo (Homer, Il. 1, 21), and also to respect, e.g. of Zeus who respects those who stand under the protection of Pallas (Aesch., Eumenides 1002). Used metaphorically, it occurs in the expression: "it does not fill me with dread of death" (Eur., Orestes 1116). Negatively, it means to be filled with holy anger (Eur., Frag. 348). Accordingly, the adj. hagios would suggest less the taboo than the holy which was worthy of worship. hagios is not found in Homer, Hesiod or the tragedians who use the related hagnos (→ Pure) in a sense which corresponds very closely with the OT qāḏôš. Its connection with hagios is uncertain and perhaps improbable (cf. TDNT I 88).

hagios is found from Hdt. on, e.g. the shrine (hiron) of Aphrodite is holy (2, 41); an oath is also holy (Aristot., Mirabilia 834b 11). People, too, can be described as holy (Aristoph., Birds 522; despite TDNT I 88). Hellenism used the word as an epithet describing oriental gods (Isis, Serapis, Baal; TDNT I 89), whence it was also transferred to Gk. gods.

Beside hagios we find hagizō, consecrate, from which by extension hagiazō is formed. The latter, with its derivatives hagiasma, sanctuary, holiness, hagiasmos, holiness, hagiastērion, sanctuary, occurs chiefly in the LXX. The late nouns hagiotēs and hagiōsynē, holiness (also chiefly in the LXX), are derived from hagios. hagios was not particularly frequent in Gk. apart from the LXX. It was doubtless used as the equivalent of Heb. qāḏôš, because it expressed, in contrast to → hieros, not the holy in and of itself, but the challenge to worship which issues from the holy.

OT In the LXX only hagiazō, hagiasma, and hagios play any part. hagiasmos (without a clear Heb. equivalent), hagiastērion (4 times [3 times for Heb. miqdāš]), hagiotēs (only 2 Macc. 15:2) and hagiōsynē (5 times) are also found. The word-group serves predominantly to translate Heb. qāḏôš and its derivatives. In addition there are the (rare) occurrences of nāzîr, Nazirite, to be considered.

The decisive element in the OT concept of the holy, in contrast to the profane (ḥōl; cf. ḥillēl, defile), is not so much the awesome divine power. Rather, through certain places, objects or occasions men enter into relatively direct contact with the divine power which can be awesome, if men treat it in a profane way (1 Sam. 6:20). The basic idea is not that of separation (though this is favoured by some scholars, cf. N. H. Snaith, The Distinctive Ideas of the Old Testament, 1944, 24 ff.), but the positive thought of encounter which inevitably demands certain modes of response. Although Heb. worship was particularly concerned with this encounter, the sphere of the holy was wider than the cult. The holy is therefore a pre-ethical term. On the other hand, it is a concept which posits ethical values. This ethic is not the first stage of human morality, but the expression of the holiness of Yahweh in a world of both similar and different sacred practices. For example, sexual intercourse is in no way immoral. But compared with sacred practices, it is a profane act which therefore makes one impure for coming into contact with the holy (1 Sam. 21:4 ff. [MT 5 ff.]; Exod. 19:15).

1. (a) The word group does not occur frequently in the oldest sources. Yahweh is once called "this holy God" by the Philistines, because they were exposed to great disaster when they did not show proper respect for the ark of the → covenant (1 Sam. 6:19 f.). Although the OT mentions many cultic centres, only twice are places described as holy (Gilgal-Jericho, Jos. 5:15) or as holy ground (Exod. 3:5, the call of Moses; → God, OT 2). 2 Ki. 4:9 takes us out of the sphere of the cultus. The Shunammitess recognized Elisha, the man of God, as holy, i.e. like Samson full of sacred power (Jdg. 13:7; 16:17).

(b) The use of the vb. to make holy, or sanctify, is more uniform in the context of its setting than the noun and the adj. A man sanctified himself, when he had been temporarily excluded from the life of the community by uncleanness (2 Sam. 11:4), or when he came into contact with God (theophany, Exod. 19:10 ff.; holy war, 1 Sam. 21:5 ff.; family sacrifice at which Yahweh was the highest-ranking relative, 1 Sam. 16:5). One could also sanctify people (1 Sam. 7:1, to the priesthood) or things (Jos. 6:19, Jdg. 17:3 etc., silver; 1 Ki. 8:64, the temple forecourt) and thus place them at God's disposal. It is important also to mention that the LXX translates the expression "a Nazirite to God" (Samson, Jdg. 13:7; 15:17) by "a holy one of God." As Num. 6:1 ff. shows, the case of the Nazirite is a special form of consecration.

(c) One can only surmise that the rise of the great royal sanctuaries (Jerusalem, Bethel) occasioned in turn an extension of the use of the word holy. Little is known of this process. 1 Sam. 21:4 mentions holy bread; Jer. 11:15 holy sacrificial flesh. Part of the piety of the Pss. probably belongs here. The Psalmist speaks of Yahweh's holy → temple (Ps. 5:7 [MT 8] and often), of the holy hill (3:4 [MT 5]; 15:1), of holy Zion (2:6), of the holy court (29:2 LXX, RSV "array"), and also of holy heaven (20:6 [MT 7]), or the holy height from which Yahweh hears (102:19 [MT 20]), and correspondingly of his holy throne (47:8 [MT 9]). Yahweh is terrible and holy (99:3). None of the gods is holy as he is, for none casts down the exalted and raises the humble as he does (1 Sam. 2:2).

2. Prophetic polemic was scarcely directed against objects and practices which are described as holy. This is possibly connected with the wider application of the term holy. This is illustrated by the thought expressed in Ps. 24:3 f.: "Who shall stand in his holy place? He who has clean hands and a pure heart, who does not lift up his soul to what is false, and does not swear deceitfully." This suggests that, from the outset, self-consecration in the cult and the holy were never purely ritualistic matters but were concerned with one's way of life.

(a) This is clearly the case in Amos. 2:7 and 4:2. Hos. 11:9 has perhaps a similar message. Yahweh, the Holy One in the midst of his people, is nonetheless not a destroyer or demon, even when the people had been guilty of great profanity. The Holy One intends purification through a devastating catastrophe. His purpose is not destruction, but a new future for Israel. The use of the term is vividly illustrated in Isa. After the thrice-repeated "holy" of the heavenly attendants Isaiah acknowledged himself to be a man of unclean lips, whereupon his guilt was taken away and his sin covered (6:3–7). The passage contains the special Isaianic expression "the Holy One of Israel" which is used particularly in two contexts. (i) Instead of leaning on the Holy One of Israel, the people have relied on horses and chariots (31:1; cf. 30:15; 10:20). But as the Holy One, Yahweh himself intends to obtain justice in war for his people. (ii) The sinful people, laden with guilt, has despised the Holy One of Israel (1:4; cf. 30:12 f.) and will therefore be smitten by him.

(b) Another aspect of holiness occurs in the Deuteronomic formula "the holy people." In so far as the people are holy to Yahweh, their God (Deut. 7:6; 14:2, 21; 26:19), the formula explains their separation from the practices and cult objects of foreign religions (e.g. 14:21, not eating what dies of itself; 7:5, destroying altars, Asherim, graven images, etc.). As, in the last analysis, it is the whole Torah that distinguishes Israel from the foreign nations, Deut. 26:18 f. declares that through keeping the whole Torah Israel will become a people holy to Yahweh. The underlying thought here finds particularly fine expression in the "Law of Holiness" (Lev. 17–26). Lev. 19 which probably combines groups of laws of different kinds is headed, "You shall be holy for I am holy" (v. 2; cf. also 20:7).

(c) Jeremiah made very little use of the word group. However, Jer. 1:5 is important: Yahweh consecrated Jeremiah from his mother's womb to be a prophet to the nations. The words occur much more frequently in Ezek. Special mention may be made of the phrase to show oneself holy before someone. With the exception of Ezek. 28:22 (judgment on Sidon), it always refers to the house of → Israel (i.e. Judah). The clearest example is Ezek. 36:23. Yahweh's → name has been profaned through the scattering of the people, and the exiles have contributed to its further profanation. But when Yahweh gathers his people from the four corners of the earth, he will manifest himself in them before all the nations as the Holy One, and the nations will acknowledge that he is Yahweh. This means that they will recognize Yahweh as God, even if he were not their own God.

(d) If the manifestation of holiness here means the salvation of Judah, the same idea is plainly expressed in Isa. 40–55 especially in the title "the Holy One of Israel." The Holy One, the Creator of Israel (45:11; cf. 43:15), who will redeem Israel out of slavery like a kinsman (43:14), is at the same time the Creator of the world and the Lord of the nations (40:25). As such he is sufficiently removed from his people to punish them without bias, but he is also sufficiently powerful, after the punishment, to create something utterly new. Therefore nations will run to the Holy One of Israel, because he will glorify Israel (55:5).

3. By far the most extensive occurrences of the word group are to be found in the cultic, ritual texts which many scholars trace back to the exilic and post-exilic periods (Exod. 25–Num. 10; Ezek. 40–48; and parts of 1 and 2 Chr.).

(a) Everything which belongs to the realm of the cultus is holy. There are numerous holy occasions (e.g. the great → feasts, new moons, → sabbaths, year of jubilee). All the objects which serve the cultus are also holy (e.g. → temple, tent and ark, altars and their equipment, → first fruits, anointing oil, → incense). In the ritual of the oath, holy → water is used (Num. 5:17). The temple has holy → money (Exod. 28:2 ff.); the priests have holy garments (Exod. 28:2 ff.); the high priest a breast plate with the inscription "Holy to Yahweh". Sometimes holiness can be thought of almost physically: it is transferred by contact (Exod. 29:37; 30:29) and improper contact can be fatal (Num. 4:15, 20). Similarly uncleanness is also transferable (Hag. 2:11 ff.). As purity is the proper characteristic of everything that is holy (→ Pure), it is the duty of everyone who takes part in the cultus to be pure (to sanctify oneself). Whoever is unclean must quickly take steps to purify himself. There are also holy people (→ priests, → Levites, Nazirites) and the holy anointing of the Davidic kings (Ps. 89:20 [MT 21]; cf. 1 Sam. 24:6 [MT 7]). A distinction can be drawn between the holy and the holiest. The sense of this distinction, however, is less a gradation of the holiness which derives from God than a gradation of human dealings with the Holy One.

(b) An important factor for understanding this strictly ordered cultic holiness, which for the most part must have been priestly knowledge, is that it received its significance, not from itself, but from a changed awareness in the post-exilic period. This awareness was stamped, on the one hand, by a passionate determination to be obedient, and, on the other, by the experience of catastrophic guilt which demanded the most meticulous care in dealings with the Holy One. This care does not contradict Hos. 6:6 ("I desire steadfast love and not sacrifice"), but is the ancient cultic means of letting the → fear of Yahweh be the beginning of all wisdom.

(c) Three additional details should be noted. (i) Occasionally the term hagioi, holy ones, saints, stands for heavenly companions of God (e.g. Dan. 7:21 ff.; in a different sense 7:18). (ii) Only rarely are the members of the holy nation called saints or holy. In a late wisdom Ps. saints are mentioned in parallel to those who fear Yahweh (34:9 [MT 10] → Convert; cf. 16:3, where the context is unfortunately corrupt). In Dan. 7:18 they are those who stand by their God in the war between Yahweh and the world powers, and receive the kingdom. (iii) On only three occasions is Yahweh's → Spirit called holy (Ps. 51:11 [MT 13]; Isa. 63:10 f.). In Isa. 63:10 f. the Spirit referred to is the Spirit whom God put among his people in the exodus but whom Israel has grieved through rebellion.

4. (a) Inter-Testamental Judaism introduced no real innovations into this scheme of holiness, apart from the fact that the Scriptures were now also called holy (1 Macc. 12:9; → Writing). Insignificant as this change might appear, it was nevertheless revolutionary. For from now on the Scriptures were to form the new pivotal point for the system of holiness in Judaism, thereby replacing the → temple. This process was, admittedly, only completed in the Rab. writings with their theory of the Holy Spirit as the Spirit who speaks in the Scriptures (TDNT VI 382 f., 385 f.). Hence, the pupils of the scribes (the holy → People) and those who obeyed the Torah were in particular regarded as holy (SB II 691 ff.). Meanwhile, as it was not the system of temple holiness that played the decisive role in every-day life but the exposition of the Torah in terms of wisdom determined by the scribes, holiness focussed more and more upon daily life. Nevertheless, temple holiness which was commanded in the Scriptures and which became a kind of religious rule was not neglected.

(b) An important feature was the slow development of the term "the saints" for the members of the Jerusalem cultic community. 1 Macc. 1:46 is significant: Antiochus' men wanted to profane the sanctuary and the saints, i.e. those who were true to the law and had by their suffering demonstrated that they steadfastly belonged to Yahweh. The same situation of suffering no doubt lies behind Tob. 12:15: the holy ones (angels) present to God the prayers of the saints.

(c) The book of Enoch and the Qumran corpus indicate a further extension of the term. Eth.Enoch 48:8 f. pronounces judgment on the mighty ones of the earth who will be delivered into the hands of the elect. "As straw in the fire so shall they burn before the face of the holy: As lead in the water shall they sink before the face of the righteous, And no trace of them shall any more be found." The context shows that it is suffering that qualifies the righteous as holy who will be vindicated in due course (cf. v. 7).

(d) In Qumran the community saw itself as the eschatological, priestly community of the saved in which the ordinances of purification which were originally obligatory only for the priests were made binding for all the members. The concept of holiness plays a big part in the Qumran texts especially in expressions of self-designation. The community described itself as "the saints of his people" (e.g. 1QM 6:6), God's "holy people" (1QM 14:12), "men of holiness" (1QS 8:13 etc.), and the "remnant of holiness" (1QS 8:21). It is the eschatological temple, "a House of Holiness for Israel, an Assembly of Supreme Holiness for Aaron" (1QS 8:5 ff.). Its members formed a unity with the heavenly community of → angels who were likewise called "Holy Ones" (cf. 1QS 11:8, 1QH 11:12). Thus there prevailed at Qumran a priestly concept of holiness in which the temple cult was replaced by special ways of obedience to the Torah such as washing, cultic meals, and especially observance of the calendar (1QS 9:3 ff.).

NT When we leave the realm of the OT and enter that of the NT, two facts stand out. First, God is only seldom described as holy (Jn. 17:11; 1 Pet. 1:15 f.; Rev. 4:8; 6:10), and Christ is only once called holy in the same sense as God (Rev. 3:7; cf. 1 Jn. 2:20). The concept of holiness in the NT is determined rather by the Holy → Spirit, the gift of the new age.

Secondly and following from this, the proper sphere of the holy in the NT is not the cultus but the prophetic. The sacred no longer belongs to things, places or rites, but to the manifestations of life produced by the Spirit. But since prophecy did not readily lend itself to the building up of a corporate consciousness, as time went on use was made of the holy priesthood (→ Priest) and the royal priesthood of all the saints. Hence cultic, sacral conceptions of holiness were again extensively taken up in the early church.

1. (a) A number of passages remain entirely within the framework of OT tradition: God's → name is called holy (Lk. 1:49), also his → covenant (Lk. 1:72; cf. 1 Macc. 1:15, 63), his → angels (Mk. 8:38; Lk. 9:26; Acts 10:22; Jude 14; Rev. 14:10), his attendants (Eph. 2:19; Col. 1:12; 1 Thess. 3:13; Rev. 18:20), the → Prophets (Lk. 1:70), and the → Scriptures (Rom. 1:2), especially the → law (Rom. 7:12). Matt. 23:17, 19; 24:15; 27:53 and Lk. 2:23 are concerned entirely with the Jewish cultus.

(b) The synoptic tradition introduces the specifically NT emphasis. Jesus was addressed by the demons as "the Holy One of God" (Mk. 1:24; Lk. 4:34). In the LXX this title occurs only in Jdg. 13:7 and 16:17 and means that the bearer has been filled by the holy. This expression indicates that Jesus was endowed at his → baptism with the Holy → Spirit and was driven into the wilderness for forty days by the Spirit, like one of the ancient prophets or a Nazirite, before he performed his first miracle (Mk. 1:21 ff.). We find probably the same concept in Lk. 1:35: "the child to be born will be called holy, the Son of God." As Samson was a holy one of God from his mother's womb (Jdg. 13:7), Jesus was holy from his conception, i.e. filled by the Holy Spirit (cf. Mk. 6:20 of John the Baptist).

A somewhat different, but analogous, idea can be recognized in Acts 4:27 (cf. 3:14), where Jesus is called God's "holy servant" (→ Son of God, art. pais theou). The inhabitants of Jerusalem have rejected him, as they had always denied and killed the prophets in the past (7:51 f.). In all these cases holy means belonging to God and authorized by God. Hence, resistance to Jesus is equivalent to resistance to God. H. Seebass

(c) The first petition of the Lord's Prayer contains the words: "Hallowed be thy name [hagiasthētō to onoma sou]" (Matt. 6:9; Lk. 11:2). The vb. appears only here and at Matt. 23:17, 19 in the Synoptic Gospels. "To 'hallow' the name (i.e. the nature of God as known through his self-revelation in history) means, not only to reverence and honour God, but also to glorify him by obedience to his commands, and thus prepare the coming of the Kingdom" (D. Hill, The Gospel of Matthew, 1972, 136). J. Jeremias links the petition with the Kaddish, an ancient Aramaic prayer which formed the conclusion of the synagogue service and which he believes Jesus knew from childhood. Jeremias reconstructs the prayer as follows: "Exalted and hallowed be his great name in the world which he created according to his will. May he let his kingdom rule in your lifetime and in your days and in the lifetime of the whole house of Israel, speedily and so on. And to this say: amen" (The Prayers of Jesus, 1967, 98). According to Jeremias, the first two petitions of the Lord's Prayer make entreaty for the revelation of God's eschatological kingdom. "Every accession to power by an earthly ruler is accompanied by homage in words and gestures. So it will be when God enters upon his rule" (ibid.; cf. Rev. 4:8; 11:17; 22:20; cf. 1 Cor. 16:22; Ezek. 36:23). The petitions are a cry from the depths of distress. From a world enslaved by evil, death and Satan, the disciples are to lift their eyes to the Father and cry out for the revelation of his glory, knowing in faith that he will grant it. According to Ernst Lohmeyer, the sanctification prayed for is both positive and negative. "First, it means the abolition of everything in the sensory realm contradictory to God's holiness – for the only one who is holy in his being and his actions is the one who, like the angels in the service of God, matches his actions with his being and his being with his actions. So, secondly, it means the elevation and therefore the consummation of all human and historical being in the holiness of God: 'You must be perfect as your heavenly Father is perfect.' This process of sanctification also leads beyond itself, for its ultimate end is not the sanctification of the world through God, but the sanctification of God through the world. Even the world and mankind are only elements in the process of sanctification in which God sanctifies himself" (The Lord's Prayer, 1965, 73; cf. Matt. 5:48; Hab. 2:14; Num. 14:21; Isa. 11:9). C. Brown

2. (a) In the Pauline epistles those who name Jesus as their Lord are called hoi hagioi, the saints. This was primarily not an ethical expression but a parallel to concepts like "called" (Rom. 1:7; 1 Cor. 1:2; 2 Cor. 1:1), "elect" (Rom. 8:33; Col. 3:12) and "faithful" (Col 1:2). It implies association with the Holy Spirit. Christ is their sanctification as well as their righteousness and redemption (1 Cor. 1:30), and thus the One in whom they become holy to the true God. "You were washed, you were sanctified, you were justified in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ and in the Spirit of our God" (1 Cor. 6:11; cf. 2 Thess. 2:13; 1 Pet. 1:1 f.). From the resurrection on, Jesus is the Christ in the power which operates according to the Spirit of holiness (Rom. 1:4). Holiness is a condition of acceptance at the parousia and of entering upon the inheritance of God's people (Col. 1:12; Acts 20:32; 26:18). In all these cases holiness implies a relationship with God which is expressed not primarily through the cultus but through the fact that believers are "led" by the Holy Spirit (Rom. 8:14). As in the OT, holiness is a pre-ethical term. At the same time, as in the OT, it demands behaviour which rightly responds to the Holy Spirit.

(b) Sanctification is like the growth of fruit which results in eternal life (Rom. 6:19–22; cf. 1 Thess. 4:3–7). Spiritual, rational worship is the offering of oneself as a living, holy sacrifice, acceptable to God (Rom. 12:1). The saints are not simply "nice" and worthy people. They are those who are called, and an essential aspect of sanctification is love for all the saints (Eph. 1:15), standing by them in need (Rom. 12:13), and not profaning the sacred by bringing disputes with fellow-believers before secular authorities, but allowing the saints to judge them (1 Cor. 6:1 f.). In Paul's judgment, a non-Christian marriage partner does not profane the Christian. On the contrary, the non-Christian partner is sanctified by the Christian, just as the children of the marriage are also sanctified (1 Cor. 7:14). Because it is God himself who sanctifies (1 Thess. 5:23), bearing fruit unto sanctification is all the more important (Rom. 6:22; cf. Phil. 2:12–16).

3. (a) Heb. presents a highly specialized aspect of holiness. Christ, as the high priest, is the one who sanctifies his people (13:12; 2:11), and officiates in a sanctuary not made with hands (9:24; 8:2). The division of Israel's earthly sanctuary (ta hagia) into Holy Place and Holy of Holies (9:2 f.) shows that ultimate access to the sanctuary has not yet been achieved. But Christ has entered the sanctuary once for all with the gift of his blood and has achieved eternal redemption (9:12; 10:14). His self-offering makes absolute the animal sacrifices of the temple. By the will of God "we have been sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all" (10:10). But Heb. warns us, "since we have confidence to enter the sanctuary" (10:19), not to defile the blood of the covenant, through which each one has been sanctified; "for we know him who said, 'Vengeance is mine, I will repay.' And again, 'The Lord will judge his people' " (10:29 f.; cf. Deut. 32:35 f.). Therefore we are to strive for peace with all men and the holiness without which no one can see God (12:14). Conversely, the holy brethren (3:1) are to recognize the discipline which God applies as a help, for God disciplines in order that we may win a share in his holiness (hagiotēs, 12:10; cf. Prov. 3:11 f.).

(b) 1 Pet. is particularly significant in the further development of the concept. To the idea of sanctification by the Spirit (1:2) there is added the blunt warning, "As obedient children, do not be conformed to the passions of your former ignorance, but as he who has called you is holy, be holy yourselves in all your conduct" (1:14 f.; cf. Lev. 19:2). This is continued in 2:5: "and like living stones be yourselves built into a spiritual house, to be a holy priesthood, to offer spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God through Jesus Christ." Thus the dynamic of the outpouring of the Spirit is here restated in terms of the holy functions of the priesthood.

H. Seebass

(c) Believers are again seen as → priests in Rev. 1:6, 5:10 and 20:6: But Rev. also depicts the future abode of Christians as the holy city, the new → Jerusalem (21:2, 10; 22:19). The most significant feature of Jerusalem was the fact that it contained the → temple, the focal point of meeting between God and man. But in the new Jerusalem there is no temple, "for its temple is the Lord God the Almighty and the Lamb" (21:22). These pictures present both a continuity with the divinely appointed institutions of Israel and a radical break with the historic Israel. It has been argued that to see the church in such institutional terms represents an institutionalizing of the dynamic, charismatic character of the primitive Christian community. In so doing the church was guarding itself against the type of excesses which befell the church at Corinth. But the use of this imagery has a more significant function. On the one hand, its application to the church means that the historic institutions in Israel are now obsolete. On the other hand, the use of the concepts of priest, temple and holy city in this dynamic and spiritual way affords a perspective to the suffering, persecuted church which enables it to see its situation and role in terms of God's purposes.

(d) In the Fourth Gospel the adj. hagios is used only of the → Father (Jn. 17:11 in the high priestly prayer of Jesus in the address "Holy Father"), the → Spirit ("this is he who baptizes with the Holy Spirit", 1:33; the → "advocate" or "paraclete", 14:26; "He breathed on them, and said to them, 'Receive the Holy Spirit' ", 20:22), and the → Son (6:69). This latter passage occurs in Jn.'s account of Peter's confession. In Jn. Jesus is not confessed as the Christ (cf. Matt. 16:16; Mk. 8:29; Lk. 9:20) with all its Jewish overtones, but as the "Holy One of God [ho hagios tou theou]" (cf. L. Morris, The Gospel According to John, 1971, 388 ff.). The expression is rare. It occurs in the NT only in the address of the demoniac at Capernaum (Mk. 1:24; Lk. 4:24; cf. Pss. 16:10; 106:16). Although Jn. was thoroughly aware of Jewish christology (1:39 ff., 49 ff.; 4:25; 10:36; 12:13; 20:31; cf. C. H. Dodd, The Interpretation of the Fourth Gospel, 1953, 228 ff.; E. M. Sidebottom, The Christ of the Fourth Gospel, 1961, 70 f.), he apparently refrains from giving an accepted christological title here. Nevertheless, the fact that he uses the epithet "holy" elsewhere only of the Father and the Spirit sets Jesus with God and not man. The expression "the Holy One" strikingly occurs in the only instance of hagios in the Johannine epistles: "But you have been anointed by the Holy One, and you all know" (1 Jn. 2:20). The reference is evidently to the Holy Spirit, but the context closely links this with the Father and the Son (cf. vv. 22 ff.).

The vb. hagiazō occurs 4 times in Jn. and is absent from the Johannine epistles. In the first instance it denotes the special consecration of Jesus to do the will and work of the Father, but its goal is that men might also be consecrated to do God's will. As such, it extends the use of the adj. In reply to the Jews who were about to stone him for blasphemy ("because you, being a man, make yourself God", 10:33; cf. Lev. 24:16), Jesus pointed to the extension of the word "God" to men in the OT (10:34; cf. Ps. 82:6) but carefully avoided the title "God" for himself. Instead, he asked: "Do you say of him whom the Father consecrated [hēgiasen] and sent into the world, 'You are blaspheming,' because I said, 'I am the Son of God'?" (10:36), and went on to claim to be doing the work of the Father. In the high priestly prayer Jesus prayed: "Sanctify [hagiason] them in the truth; thy word is truth. . . . And for their sake I consecrate [hagiazō] myself, that they also may be consecrated [hēgiasmenoi] in truth" (17:17, 19). Leon Morris draws attention to the use of hagiazō in the LXX for the sanctifying of priests (e.g. Exod. 28:41; 29:1, 21) and sacrifices (e.g. Exod. 28:38; Num. 18:9). "He set Himself apart for the doing of the Father's will, and in this context this must surely mean death. It points us to Calvary and all that Calvary means. This is connected with the disciples in two ways. It is 'for their sakes.' He dies for them, to do for them that which they could not do for themselves. And further it is 'that they themselves also may be sanctified in truth.' He dies with a view to the disciples being sanctified, being set apart for God" (op. cit., 731 f.; cf. also E. C. Hoskyns, The Fourth Gospel, ed. F. N. Davey, 1947², 502 ff.). On → truth see Jn. 1:17 and 3:21; cf. L. Morris, op. cit., 293 ff. Doing the will of God is also doing the truth (cf. Ps. 119:142 LXX). To do this, men need to be consecrated, as the context of all these pronouncements in Jn. make clear. C. Brown

ἱερός

ἱερός (hieros), holy; ἱερατεία (hierateia), priestly office or service; ἱερατεύω (hierateuō), hold or perform the office of a priest; ἱερουργέω (hierourgeō), perform holy service, act as a priest; ἱεράτευμα (hierateuma), priesthood; ἱεροπρεπής (hieroprepēs), befitting a holy person or thing; ἱεροσυλέω (hierosyleō), rob temples; ἱερόθυτος (hierothytos), devoted, sacrificed to a divinity; ἱερεύς (hiereus), priest; ἀρχιερεύς (archiereus), high priest; τὰ ἱερά (ta hiera), sacrifice; ἱερωσύνη (hierōsynē), priestly office, priesthood; τὸ ἱερόν (to hieron), sanctuary, temple.

The words derived from hieros not only form a common group philologically, but are also related internally in their meaning. They are therefore treated all together in the CL section. In the OT and NT sections, the reader is referred to the article on Priest for words connected with priesthood.

CL hieros is that which is determined, filled or consecrated by divine power. In contrast to → hagios, holy, → hosios, devout, pious, and semnos, revered, august (→ Godliness, art. sebomai), all of which contain an ethical element, hieros denotes what is holy in and of itself, quite apart from any ethical judgment. It is not used of the gods themselves, but of their activities. The expression hieron genos athanatōn, holy race of immortals (Hesiod, Theog. 21), reflects the idea that the race of the immortals represents in the universe the realm of the absolutely holy. Thus hieros means: (a) what belongs to the sphere of the gods; (b) what has been sanctified by the gods; (c) what has been consecrated to the gods.

1. (a) Among objects described as holy are the head of Zeus (Homer, Il. 15, 39) and his bed (Hesiod, Theog. 57), the abode of the gods (the snowy regions of Olympus, Aristoph., Nubes 270), the scales of Kronos (Homer, Il., 16, 658), the bow of Hercules (Soph., Phil. 943), and the chariot of Achilles to whom the son of Kronos had granted divine horses (Homer, Il. 17, 464).

(b) The gods sanctified, e.g., the light (Hesiod, Works 337), the air, night and day (Homer, Il. 8, 66; 11, 194), the earth (Soph., Phil. 706), fruitful ground (Aristoph., Nubes 282), the rivers and streams poured out by Zeus (Homer, Od. 10, 351), the threshing-floor, because it is sacred to Demeter (Homer, Il. 5, 499), the fish consecrated to Poseidon (Homer, Il. 16, 407), and also cities like Ilium, Pergamum, Thebes, Athens, islands like Euboea and even the Hellespont. Similarly, people are said to be hieroi, because they possess a trait which comes from the gods. This is illustrated by phrases like hieron menos Alkinooio or hierē is Tēlemachoio (Homer, Od. 7, 167; 2, 409); Alcinous received his power from Zeus and Telemachus his might from Athene. In Pindar, Pyth. 5, 97, kings are called hieroi, because they received their sovereignty from the gods. But Democritus said of the poet that he writes through divine afflatus and sacred inspiration, met' enthousiasmou kai hierou pneumatos (Frag. 18). From the time of Augustus (63 B.C.–A.D. 14) the Roman emperor was addressed by the title hieros. Not only his person but everything connected with him came to be counted as hieros, because it had been sanctified by the gods, e.g. the hiera grammata, the imperial decrees (cf. G. Schrenk, TDNT III 225).

2. (a) The thought of consecration to the gods leads into the realm of the cultus which was the decisive general factor in determining the meaning of hieros, as a glance at its compounds demonstrates. Even if everything which is called hieros does not belong directly to the cultus, it nevertheless remains associated with it. This remains true, when the choruses in the theatre are called hieroi, for they convey a divine message (Aristoph., Ranae 674, 686), when non-cultic songs consecrated to the gods are hieroi, and the circle in which justice is administered is called hieros (Homer, Il. 18, 504). Again, hieros can similarly be used of people, especially of those who have been initiated into the mysteries (cf. Aristoph., Ranae 652, anthrōpos hieros).

(b) ta hiera, lit. the holy things (rarer in the sing.), denotes above all the sacrifice (e.g. Homer, Il. 1, 147), and occasionally the sacrificial animal (Homer, Il. 2, 420). In post-Homeric times it frequently denoted the omens which accompanied the sacrifice. ta hiera was more commonly used for cultic objects (images, vestments, sacred utensils etc.), cultic actions, and for the cultus in general (e.g. Hdt., 1, 172; cf. 3 Macc. 3:21).

(c) to hieron has predominantly the meaning of sanctuary, cultic centre. In contrast to naos, temple building, and to temenos, sacred area (→ Temple), it is a more general term which can denote the temple building, the sacred area, and also the sacred grove as the local cultic centre.

(d) hierōsynē is not particularly frequent and means priesthood, in the sense of office, service and living. In contrast, hierateia means priestly activity, the office, but this too is not very frequent. The related vb. hierateuō, perform the office of a priest, was not used until a later period. The vb. hierasthai, to be a priest, is more ancient and both words are derived from it. The related adj. hieratikos occurs frequently and generally denotes anything priestly. hierateuma is found only in the LXX (→ Priest).

3. hierourgeō, perform sacred rites, hieroprepēs, befitting the sacred, hierosyleō, rob a temple or commit sacrilege, and their derivatives need no further explanation. But further comment is necessary on hierothytos and especially hiereus and archiereus.

(a) hierothytos means devoted, offered to a god, sacrificed, and is a specifically cultic term. The plur. ta hierothyta means the sacrifice or sacrificial flesh. In a metaphorical sense it occurs in Pindar, Frag. 78, of human sacrificial death as an offering to the gods.

(b) hiereus means priest, sacrificer, diviner. In Homer it occurs in par. to mantis (Il. 1, 62; 62, 221). In so far as the priest is skilled in dealing with the sacred he is also a soothsayer who can give information on things to do with the gods.

A → sacrifice did not necessarily have to be offered by a priest. The head of the family could carry out the family sacrifice, the chief of the tribe the tribal sacrifice, and the magistrate the sacrifice for the city. Isoc. laid down the ideal, tēn basileian hōsper hierōsynēn pantos andros einai nomizousin, "they believe that kingship, like priesthood, belongs to every man" (2, 6). But the great and important cultic centres required continuous care and therefore an official priesthood which lived in accordance with temple rather than family tradition. Even if the work of the priests included dealing with many sacred objects, their most obvious and appropriate activity was nevertheless the slaughter of the sacrifices. Hence, hiereuō, to sacrifice, has also the meaning of slay and kill (Il. 2, 34; Procopius Gazaeus 2, 25).

(c) archiereus as a title occurs first in references to non-Gk. high priests (Hdt. 2, 142, of Egyptian high priests of high rank after the king; cf. the Greek titles hierapolos, chief priest, hierarchēs, president of sacred rites, high priest). Plato used it in connection with his ideal state (Laws 12, 947a); the archiereus was to stand annually at the head of all the officiating priests.

In the Hel. period under the Seleucids there were official archiereis for the satrapies of the day. The chief priests of the great sanctuaries carried the same title. Even under the Ptolemaic kings archiereis are sometimes mentioned. Under the Romans the system of the Seleucids was continued. The provincial high priest of the imperial cult was called archiereus tou Sebastou (tōn Sebastōn). At the head stood the emperor himself as pontifex maximus. From Polyb. (3rd–2nd cents. B.C.) on, archiereus was translated by the Lat. pontifex. Over and above these, the title archiereus was also granted to local high priests and to the heads of religious communities, in so far as these were centred on a sanctuary.

OT In the LXX the following words form a unified group, for they all go back to the Heb. kōhēn, in form the participle of kāhan, to be a priest, serve as priest (its etymology is uncertain and does not add anything to our understanding of the word): hierateia, hierateuō, hierateuma, hieratikos (without Heb. equivalent), hiereus, hierourgeō (without Heb. equivalent), hierourgia (without Heb. equivalent), hierōma (without Heb. equivalent), hierōsynē, archierasthai (without Heb. equivalent), archierateuō (without Heb. equivalent), archiereus, archierōsynē (without Heb. equivalent). If one ignores completely peripheral words (e.g. hierosyleō and its derivatives in 1 and 2 Macc.; hierodoulos in 1 Esd.), these form the overwhelming majority of instances, the only exceptions being hieros (6 times for Heb. equivalents) and hiereia (2 Ki. 10:20 for Heb. ʿaṣārâh, a solemn assembly for Baal).

hieros did not fit the Jewish concept of holiness prevailing at the time of the translation of the LXX, because it meant what is holy in and of itself apart from any ethical element, whereas since the exile only what conformed to the Torah could to the Jewish mind be holy. Even the temple in Jerusalem was not generally called to hieron until the strongly Hel. writings of the LXX (also Philo and Josephus; exceptions are 1 Chr. 29:4; cf. 1 Chr. 9:27; 2 Chr. 6:13). The word-group could, however, be used for the priest and his activities, for this was essentially a matter of the cultus for which, according to the law, no one else could be qualified. For hiereus, hierateia and hierateuma see the discussion under → Priest.

NT 1. In the NT most of the words in the group occur only rarely.

(a) hierothyton (only 1 Cor. 10:28) is the meat (→ Flesh) which had been slaughtered in the pagan cult. The fact that some Christians continued to eat it, knowing its origin, caused questions of → conscience at Corinth which Paul sought to resolve by directing the church to the glory of God and concern for others (1 Cor. 10:31 ff.).

(b) hieroprepēs, befitting a holy person or thing, worthy of reverence (only Tit. 2:3) corresponds with the "preference for solemn and cultic style" in the Pastorals (TDNT III 254). The context suggests that the nearest parallel usage would be one like Plut., On the Education of Children 14p. 11c, where it is hieroprepestaton to accustom boys to the truth. Thus in Tit. 2:3 the older women in the congregation should be conformed to propriety in their behaviour.

(c) hieros, sacred, holy, occurs in 2 Tim. 3:15 in a similarly solemn context of the "sacred writings." Similar formulae are frequent in Philo and Josephus (cf. TDNT III 227). Although the word was otherwise not popular, it could perhaps be used more easily of the Scriptures because they possessed a sacred quality all their own. In a comparison (1 Cor. 9:13) Paul uses ta hiera in its usual sense of sacred actions.

(d) hierosylos, temple robber, one who commits sacrilege. In Acts 19:37 Paul and his companions were defended by the town clerk of Ephesus against the charge of being sacrilegious and blasphemers against pagan temples. Paul was accused of teaching that "gods made with hands are not gods" and thus of undermining both trade and the temple of Artemis (Acts 19:26 f.). The related vb., hierosyleō, rob temples (Rom. 2:22), apparently alludes to a problem frequently aired in Rab. discussion. To what extent was it permissible to do business in pagan-temple utensils and property, although they were ritually unclean? Under certain circumstances such dealings were allowed, if they contributed to the damaging of the pagan cult. Paul seems to be rejecting such devious practices (cf. O. Michel, Der Brief an die Römer, 1955[10] ad loc.). ([Ed.] The verse may also allude to the practice of some Jews of removing gold and silver idols from shrines for private profit (cf. Josephus, Ant. 4, 8, 10.)

(e) hierourgeō, perform holy service, act as a priest with regard to something. In Rom. 15:16 Paul makes metaphorical use of the language of the cultus; the Gentiles must now offer sacrifice to the true God. A sacrifice can only be acceptable, if it fulfils all the conditions for acceptance. The only true offering is the gospel. Paul has been ordained, therefore, not as priest but as hierourgōn of the gospel, in order to give correct instruction in offering sacrifice.

2. to hieron and hiereus/archiereus occur more frequently. to hieron is, almost without exception, a technical term for Herod's temple (exceptions: any sanctuary, 1 Cor. 9:13; the temple of Artemis, Acts 19:27). The most important difference between it and naos (→ Temple) is that to hieron is never spiritualized. It always means the structure with its walls, gates, porticos, courts and buildings. The pinnacle (Matt. 4:5; Lk. 4:9) of the hieron, which never denoted the temple itself, was perhaps the South-East corner of the outer wall, below which the ground fell away steeply into the Kidron valley. Lk. 3:37 and Mk. 12:4 ff. refer to the court of the women; Acts 3:8 to the court of the men; Mk. 11:15 perhaps to the outermost court, that of the Gentiles. Jn. 10:23 mentions Solomon's portico, one of the great colonnades which surrounded the court of the Gentiles and in which teaching took place (Mk. 11:27–13:1; Matt. 21:23–24:1; Lk. 20:1–21:38; Jn. 5:14; 7:14, 29; 8:20; Acts 3:11; 5:12, 21, 25, 42), and also prayer (Acts 2:46; Lk. 18:10). Three points are of theological importance.

(a) The Gospels make it clear that Jesus was frequently in the temple and that he did not condemn the form of piety which made use of it. According to Mk. 13:1 ff. and par. Matt. 24:1, Lk. 21:5, he announced the destruction of the temple with sorrow. When he drove the money-changers and dealers in animals out of the the court of the Gentiles and forbade anyone to carry merchandise through it (Matt. 22:12 ff.; Mk. 11:15 ff.; Lk. 19:45 ff.), he justified his action by saying that the temple was God's house set apart for prayer but men have made it a den of robbers (cf. Isa. 56:7; Jer. 7:11). It has become a house of trade (Jn. 2:16). Jesus did not seek to free himself from the obligations of the religion of his fathers which was held together by the temple. Nevertheless, he did not hesitate to purify it with the authority of the one who, when the material temple was destroyed, would in three days build the true naos (Jn. 2:19; cf. Mk. 14:58; Acts 6:14). The idea of a special holy place is now superfluous.

(b) The earliest Jewish Christians followed Jesus by using the temple for their prayers (Lk. 24:53; Acts 2:46).

(c) The evangelist Luke shows a particular interest in Jesus' devotion to the temple (2:46), and in that of the early Christians and even in that of Paul, the apostle of the Gentiles (Acts 21:26 ff.; 22:17; 24:12, 18, 25:8). He does this to prove that the Christians are the true people of God and have been unjustly accused by the Jews.

3. For hiereus and archiereus which belong to the same group → Priest.

H. Seebass

ὅσιος

ὅσιος (hosios), holy, devout, pious; ὁσιότης (hosiotēs), holiness, devoutness, piety; ἀνόσιος (anosios), unholy.

CL In Gk. literature the earliest form of word of this group is hosiē. It stood for what was in accordance with divine direction and providence. "It is not in accord with divine appointment to contrive evil one against another" (Homer, Od. 16, 423). hosiēs pleon eipein (Emp. 4, 7) means to say more than is required of one. More particularly hosios can mean the obligations laid on men in ritual and ceremonies, e.g. burial rites. The adj. hosios (found, like hosiotēs, from Plato on) therefore has the general sense of sanctioned or allowed by divine or natural law. hosios is seen in perspective when it is compared, on the one hand, with dikaios (→ Righteousness). Thus ta hosia kai dikaia (Plato, Politics 301d) means what is established by human agreement and divine ordinance. On the other hand, it may be compared with → hieros which, as a cultic ritual taboo or as what has been sanctified through the sanctuary, stands in contrast with the profane even when it has been consecrated to a god. Thus kosmein tēn polin kai tois hierois kai tois hosiois (Isoc., 153b) means to adorn the city with sacred and profane buildings.

Used of people, hosios means pious, religious; of actions, pure, clean (Emp., 4, 2, the mouth; Aesch., Cho. 378, the hands; cf. 1 Tim. 2:8). To describe the gods, it is used late and very rarely along with dikaios (CIG 3830).

OT hosios is used predominantly to translate Heb. ḥāsîḏ (a poetical word, occuring chiefly in the Pss.). ḥāsîḏ denotes the man who readily accepts the obligations which arise from the people's relationship to God, "the loyal, the pious one" (Koehler-Baumgartner, 319). It is related to ḥeseḏ which denotes the loyal, loving-kindness of Yahweh for Israel within his → covenant (cf. W. Eichrodt, Theology of the Old Testament, I, 1961, 232–9). The earliest occurrence (Deut. 33:8) in the blessing of Levi describes the fellowship of the Levites as "thy ḥāsîḏ", because Levi has proved loyal when tested by God. But ḥāsîḏ occurs most frequently in the plur. and means the congregation gathered for worship (e.g. Ps. 85:8[9]) serving God (Ps. 79:2). "Gather to me my faithful ones [ḥ^{a}sîḏay], who made a covenant with me by sacrifice!" (Ps. 50:5). The gentile nations are not ḥāsîḏ, and within the people of God the ḥ^{a}sîḏîm are contrasted in the liturgical Ps. 15 with those declared guilty. Even in the context of strict observance of the → law, ḥāsîḏ can have the sense of trusting. Because Yahweh forgives sins, everyone who is ḥāsîḏ towards him prays to him (Ps. 32:6; cf. 52:9 f.[10]). It can also mean that whoever trusts in his integrity (LXX hosiotēs) is righteous (Prov. 14:32).

ḥ^{a}sîḏîm as the name of a particular group within Jud. does not occur until the time of the Maccabees (1 Macc. 2:42; 7:13; 2 Macc. 14:6). This group seems to have lived in accordance with apocalyptic tradition and therefore to have observed the law particularly strictly. The absence of the word in the Qumran documents is, however, striking. Clearly it was not a self-designation of the community but a name attached to it by those outside. ([Tr.] There are grounds for thinking that the term dropped out of use, when this group split into two or more parties.)

God is twice described as hosios. In Deut. 32:4 it translates yāšār, upright; God observes the decrees which he himself has made. In Ps. 145:17 it stands for ḥāsîḏ. God supports the fallen, satisfies the hungry and is near to those who pray to him (cf. also Wis. 5:19). God takes hosiotēs as an invincible shield (see below on Rev. 15:4). ta hosia (Deut. 29:19[18], šālôm), are correspondingly, the kindnesses which one expects from God, and in Isa. 55:3 (plur. of ḥeseḏ) the successes which David could expect from God (David as a witness to the power of God among the nations).

NT 1. In the NT hosios is a rare word (8 occurrences, of which 5 are in quotations; hosiotēs twice; anosios twice). The most important OT use (hosioi, the congregation) does not appear. The members of the Christian community are not ḥ^{a}sîḏîm, but chosen ones (eklektoi; → Election, art. eklegomai) and saints (→ hagios). Only in the more strongly Hel. writings is there occasional use of hosios (e.g. Lk. 1:75, of Jewish piety) and the negative anosios (1 Tim. 1:9, where the law is said to have been laid down for the unholy; cf. 2 Tim. 3:2). Eph. 4:24 mentions hosiotēs as one of the qualities of the new man.

2. God is twice called hosios in quotations. The hymn of Rev. 15:3, 4 goes back to Ps. 145:17 and its context (God alone is hosios). Rev. 16:5 recalls Deut. 32:4; God is equally dikaios (just in judgment) and hosios (holy in judgment), when he condemns evildoers.

3. The use of hosios in Heb. 7:26 is unique. Here the word is used absolutely in the way in which elsewhere it can be used only of God. As high priest (archiereus), Christ is completely hosios, utterly without sin and utterly pure, so that his offering is sufficient once for all. Acts 2:27 and 13:35 (quoting Ps. 16:10) make a different point. God's promise, not to let his Holy One (hosios; cf. Heb. ḥāsîḏ) see destruction, was not fulfilled in David. It has only now been fulfilled in Christ. By virtue of the → resurrection Jesus is the true ḥāsîḏ, although he was condemned by the religious authorities as a religious criminal. Hence, he is also heir to the kindnesses which David was to expect from God (Acts 13:34, quoting Isa. 55:3), and has been given authority to judge all nations (Acts 17:31). H. Seebass

→ Lord, → Priest, → Sacrifice, → Serve, Deacon, Worship, → Temple

(a). E. H. Askwith, The Christian Conception of Holiness, 1900; J. G. Davies, "The Concept of Holiness", London Quarterly Review 185, 1960, 36–44; W. Eichrodt, Theology of the Old Testament, I, 1961; II, 1967 (see index); J. H. Elliott, The Elect and the Holy, Supplements to NovT 12, 1966; G. Fohrer, History of Israelite Religion, 1973; F. Hauck, hosios, TDNT V 489–93; O. R. Jones, The Concept of Holiness, 1961; L. E. Keck, "The Poor and the Saints in Jewish Christianity and Qumran", ZNW 57, 1966, 54 ff.; J. Muilenburg, "Holiness", IDB II 616–25; S. Neill, Christian Holiness, 1960; M. Noth, "The Holy Ones of the Most High", The Laws in the Pentateuch and Other Studies, 1966, 215–28; R. Otto, The Idea of the Holy, 1923; E. Pax, "Holy", EBT I 372–75; O. Procksch and K. G. Kuhn, hagios etc., TDNT I 88–115; G. von Rad, Old Testament Theology, I, 1962, 203–7 and 271–79; H. Ringgren, The Prophetical Conception of Holiness, 1948; and Israelite Religion, 1966; J. C. Ryle, Holiness, (1879) 1952; D. S. Shapiro, "The Meaning of Holiness in Judaism", Tradition 7, 1, 1965, 46–80; G. Schrenk, hieros etc., TDNT III 221–32; N. H. Snaith, The Distinctive Ideas of the Old Testament, 1944, 21–50; N. Walker, "The Origin of the 'Thrice-Holy' ", NTS 5, 1958–59, 132 f.; A. S. Wood, "Holiness", ZPEB III 173–83.
(b). R. Asting, Die Heiligkeit im Urchristentum, 1930; W. W. von Baudissin, Studien zur semitischen Religionsgeschichte, II, 1878; H. Bardtke, "Heilig und Profan", EKL II 52 ff.; J. Dillersberger, Das Heilige im Neuen Testament, 1926; J. Hänel, Die Religion der Heiligkeit, 1931; B. Häring, Das Heilige und das Gute, 1950; E. Issel, Der Begriff der Heiligkeit im Neuen Testament, 1881; K. Koch, "Die Eigenart der priesterschriftlichen Sinaigesetzgebung", ZTK 55, 1958, 36 ff.; G. Lanczkowski et al., "Heilig", *RGG*³ III 146 ff.; F. J. Leenhardt, La Notion de Sainteté dans l'Ancien Testament, 1929; O. Schilling, Das Heilige und das Gute im Alten Testament, 1956.

Hope, Expectation

Of the various terms which express hope or expectancy, the most frequently used and the richest in meaning in NT Gk. are the noun elpis, the vb. elpizō and their derivatives. Both words denote, on the one hand, the act of hoping, but both include also the idea of the object hoped for. Thus ta elpizomena means the good things hoped for, and elpis the object of good hope as well as the act of hope. The other words, which are dealt with in a second article, form a group because of their common derivation from the stem dok- or dek-, to receive, accept, and have an essentially narrower range of meaning. The noun apokaradokia denotes a longing, almost impatient expectancy. prosdokaō and prosdokia imply fearful anticipation of something (catastrophe, war). prosdechomai, beside its frequent meaning, to take up, accept, can also mean wait for, expect, and is therefore also treated here.

ἐλπίς

ἐλπίς (elpis), expectation, hope; ἐλπίζω (elpizō), expect, hope; ἀπελπίζω (apelpizō), expect back; προελπίζω (proelpizō), hope in advance.

CL elp-, the stem of elpis, elpizō, was formed from the root vel* (cf. Lat. velle, to wish) by extension with p (also retained in Lat. voluptas, desire). In secular Gk. elpis does not correspond with our word hope, since it is a general word for the anticipation of future events of all kinds, of good (hope) or evil (fear). A synonym of prosdokia, expectation, it can be used to denote hope by the addition of adjs. like agathē, glykeia, hilara (good, bright, joyful). The vb. elpizō means not only hope, but also expect, suppose, think.

Living hope as a fundamental religious attitude was unknown in Gk. culture. Admittedly Theognis said, "As long as you live by honouring the gods, hold on to hope!" and Horace called fides (faith, loyalty) the companion of spes (hope). But in the final analysis men had to stand without hope before the hostile forces of guilt and death. Sophocles' chorus lamented, "The highest remains, never to be brought to life." Seneca called hope the definition of "an uncertain good". But deification and immortality promised by the mystery religions were human pipe dreams. (For further examples see R. Bultmann, elpis, TDNT II 518 ff.)

OT 1. Hope in the Heb. OT. (a) Heb. has four main vbs. meaning to hope: (i) qāwâh (connected with qāw, stretched out, plumbline), to be stretched out towards, to long after, wait for (with God as obj. 26 times); (ii) yāḥal, to wait, long (for God, 27 times); (iii) ḥāḵâh, to wait (for God, 7 times); (iv) śāḇar, to wait, hope (for God, 4 times). The four corresponding nouns are not much in evidence (they are used in 9 passages of hope in God). The most common is tiqwâh (17 times). Various forms of beṭaḥ which has more the meaning of trust and security are also translated by elpis in the LXX (see 2 below). Hoping as an act stands in the foreground and occurs in promises and exhortations, but most of all as a confession of assurance, especially in the Pss. The Heb. vbs. of hoping are closely connected with those of trust (→ Faith, art. pistis).

(b) Of 146 passages in which vbs. or nouns describe hoping, half do so in a secular sense. In these it is an expectation combined with certainty and tension, directed towards some definite desired object or event still lying in the future. Whether the certainty supporting such an expectation is valid and has an objective basis, or whether it is grounded in a subjective and erroneous assessment is an open question. What characterizes the judgment of this secular hope is the fact that in many passages, despite its personal intensity, it is described as futile. Prov. in particular emphasizes that the fool's hope (i.e. that of the godless) will come to nothing (11:7).

(c) The testimony of the OT to hope in God. This hope is often the subject of the OT even where the terms do not occur. In formal structure it resembles secular hope (see above), but is essentially different in content, basis and effects. In the 73 passages in which the hope of the faithful of Israel is expressed through the vb. or noun Yahweh is named as the object of hope. "To hope in Yahweh", "to wait for Yahweh" are expressions created by the OT writers. Those Babylonians whose prayers have come down to us never called their gods their "Hope". But an Israelite could pray, "Thou, O Lord, art my hope" (Ps. 71:5). Jeremiah spoke of "Thou hope of Israel" (14:8; 17:13). Thus Yahweh was the object, embodiment and guarantor of his people's hope. People wait for his name (Ps. 52:9 RSV mg.), for his word of forgiveness (Ps. 130:5), his arm (Isa. 51:5), his salvation (Gen. 49:18).

In eschatological passages the content of the hope is not expressed in abstract terms but in the form of a vision. For this reason the words of hope seldom occur there (but see Isa. 25:9; 42:4; 51:5; Hab. 2:3). The horizon of hope in the OT stretches far beyond what the majority of witnesses could see in terms of personal hope for their individual lives. It embraces Yahweh's coming in glory, his reign over a new → earth, the → conversion of Israel and the nations, and the new → covenant, based on the → forgiveness of sins. An important element in the maintenance of a pure hope was the struggle of the classical → prophets against false prophets, with their false hope and dreams of salvation. A glance at the prophetic writings and the Pss. shows that Israel, throughout a history so frequently marked by judgment in the shape of different calamities, repeatedly looked to God for the continuation of his gracious dealings with them (cf. Hos. 12:7; Jer. 31:17; Isa. 40:31; Ps. 40:1). Such hope, therefore, was a gift of God (Ps. 62:5, "my hope is from him"; Jer. 29:11, "to give you a future and a hope"). Wherever, humanly speaking, the future seemed a dead end, prophets of judgment like Hosea, Jeremiah and Ezekiel opened up the divine perspective of a new beginning (cf. Hos. 2; Jer. 29:1 ff.; 31:31–34; Ezek. 36;37). In the Pss., where in a lament fearful pleading is followed by statements of joyous hope, form critics explain the latter as "priestly oracles of salvation", promises of salvation from God mediated to the worshipper by a priest.

(d) (i) As a subjective attitude, the hope of faith, like secular hope, is a concrete personal expectation. Despite the "not yet" of the realization of salvation, it looks forward confidently though not without tension. However, Yahweh, for whom it waits, is not like us men. Since he knows, promises and brings to pass what the future holds for his people, hope attains unparalleled assurance in the realm of revelation. Despite everything which at present runs counter to the promise, the one who hopes trusts God for his faithfulness' sake not to disappoint the hope he has awakened through his word (Isa. 8:17; Mic. 7:7; Ps. 42:5).

(ii) Hand in hand with confident anticipation of God's gracious dealing goes submission to the sovereign rule of the Almighty. The time and manner of fulfilment are left to him. Therefore hope and the → fear of God are parallel in many Pss. (e.g. 33:18; 147:11; cf. Prov. 23:17, 18). To the one who fears the Lord a future and hope are promised.

(iii) Through confidence and humility hope becomes a patient, persevering waiting which can endure anxiety.

(iv) Waiting for God does indeed make men "still" but not inactive. It demonstrates the new strength (Isa. 40:31) they have received by the overcoming of temptation and by actions directed towards the hoped for future. During the siege Jeremiah bought a field to bear witness to the word of the Lord that "houses and fields and vineyards shall again be bought in this land" (32:6 ff.).

2. LXX and Rab. Judaism. (a) The LXX uses elpizō primarily to translate vbs. of trusting: (a) 46 times for bāṭaḥ, to feel safe, to rely; (b) 20 times for ḥāsâh, to take refuge, to hide; (c) 16 times for yāḥal, to wait; (d) only twice for qāwâh, to wait anxiously. This last is translated a further 26 times by hypomenō (→ Patience), which means to hold out rather than expect. This marked rapprochement with the vbs. of trusting distinguishes LXX usage from that of secular Gk. and prepares the way for the NT understanding of elpizō.

(b) The whole of post-OT Judaism is characterized by a variety of eschatological expectations, directed in the first place towards the coming of the messiah and the restoration of the kingdom of Israel. These hopes were often disappointed. Men rose with messianic claims and set the enthusiasm of the people ablaze. But sooner or later all these movements collapsed. This explains the pessimistic streak which accompanied the eschatological expectations of the Rabbis. God's kingdom could only come when Israel was completely obedient to the law. But this gave rise to an element of uncertainty: who could really say what complete obedience was? This made the individual's personal hope uncertain too: who could say that God was really pleased with him? The Pss. Sol., on the other hand, contain the messianic hope, and in the books of the Maccabees the resurrection of the body is attested as a hope. (See further R. Bultmann and K. H. Rengstorf, TDNT II 523–30; S. Mowinckel, He That Cometh, 1959, 261–450; → Jesus Christ.)

(c) In contrast to this pessimistic view the community of Qumran continued to affirm that there was hope for men and that this hope was founded in God's saving actions. Nevertheless, this hope was only valid for the → elect of God.

(d) In Hel. Judaism the messianic hope retreated behind the idea of the immortality of the → soul (see especially Philo who hoped only for the moral consummation of the individual soul).

NT 1. Occurrence. It is a remarkable fact of NT usage that elpizō and elpis play no great role in the Gospels. Only the vb. appears, once each in Matt. (quotation from the OT, Matt. 12:21 = Isa. 42:4) and Jn. (5:45), and three times in Lk. (6:34; 23:8; 24:21), in the sense of subjective expectation. The main emphasis on hope is found in the Pauline writings (19 out of 31 occurrences of the vb.; 36 out of 51 of the noun), and of these particularly in Rom. (4 and 13 occurrences respectively). Also prominent are the occurrences in the literature indebted to the Pauline tradition: 1 Pet. (2 and 3 times) and Heb. (1 and 5 times). In Acts both vb. and noun (2 and 8 times) are used particularly of the "hope of Israel" which is interpreted as hope in the resurrection.

apelpizō: the suffix ap- (apo) negatives the meaning of the simple vb., hence apelpizō means to cease to hope, to give up hope, to doubt. In the NT it occurs only in Lk. 6:35. Here, however, we have a departure from the meaning that can be demonstrated elsewhere, and the word means, to hope in return: lend, expecting nothing in return (cf. Vulg. nihil inde sperantes).

proelpizō: to hope before, only in Eph. 1:12. The "before" means either, if "we" embraces the Jewish Christians: we hoped in Christ before Gentile Christians received faith and hope; or it denotes the messianic hope which the Jews had before Christ's coming.

2. Meaning. In the NT the words never indicate a vague or a fearful anticipation, but always the expectation of something good (cf. prosdokia agathou). Where the vb. is followed by a prep. (eis tina, epi and en tini), the latter refers to the object on which the hope is set. In many passages elpis denotes not the personal attitude but the objective benefit of salvation towards which hope is directed (thus Gal. 5:5; Col. 1:5; Tit. 2:13). Where vb. or noun are used absolutely without further qualification the reference is usually to the eschatological fulfilment (thus Rom. 8:24; 12:12; 15:13; Eph. 2:12 etc.; → Goal, art. eschatos).

3. The revelation of Christ as a new situation. All the NT witnesses are agreed that through the coming of the promised Christ the situation described in terms of hope in the OT has been fundamentally altered. In the Redeemer the world's day of salvation has broken in as God's great "today". What was previously future has now in him become present for faith: → justification, personal relationship to God as his → child, the indwelling of the Holy → Spirit, the new → people of God comprising believers from → Israel and the nations. The presence of salvation is most strongly emphasized in the realized eschatology of Jn. Therefore the word elpis does not occur there. Its absence from Rev. is for a different reason. The thoroughly visionary picture of the end and of the foreground of the parousia replaces the abstract. Because of the new situation the hope of the NT is reshaped as regards both content and basis. However, since the "today" of salvation is only apparent to faith, it acquires a double aspect: to the "now" one has to add "not yet" (1 Jn. 3:2), to the "having" (→ Fellowship, art. echō) and "being in Christ" one has to add hope in him and looking for him.

4. Hope, faith and love. Hope is such a fundamental part of the Christian position that this can be described as rebirth to a "living hope" (1 Pet. 1:3). In paganism there were, of course, ideas of a metaphysical future, but no hope providing comfort and freedom from the fear of death (Eph. 2:12; 1 Thess. 4:13). The significance of elpis is further clarified by the fact that, along with pistis (→ Faith) and agapē (→ Love), it forms part of the primitive Christian triad (the three fundamental elements of the Christian life, e.g. 1 Thess. 1:3; 1 Cor. 13:13). None of them can exist without the others. There can be no hope without faith in Christ, for hope is rooted in him alone. Faith without hope would, by itself, be empty and futile (1 Cor. 15:14, 17).

5. The essential features of NT hope are given decisive shape by three factors.

(a) Its content. It is never ego-centric, but always centred on Christ and on God. Its heart is not the blessing of the individual but the universal kingly rule of God, in which he will be "all in all" (1 Cor. 15:28). Resurrection does not mean the resumption of a life en sarki, in the → flesh, nor even kata sarka, according to the flesh, but the fulfilment of the life received through the new → birth, en pneumati, in the → Spirit, kata pneuma, according to the Spirit (cf. Rom. 8). For "the last Adam became a life-giving spirit" (1 Cor. 15:45). In the realm of the word elpis, its content is defined as: → salvation (1 Thess. 5:8), → righteousness (Gal. 5:5), → resurrection in an incorruptible body (1 Cor. 15:52 ff.; Acts 23:6; 24:15), eternal → life (Tit. 1:2; 3:7), seeing God and being conformed to his likeness (1 Jn. 3:2 f.; → Image), the → glory of God (Rom. 5:2) or simply doxa (Col. 1:27; cf. 2 Cor. 3:12, the abiding doxa of NT service).

(b) Its basis. This does not rest on good works (→ law) but on the gracious work of God in Jesus Christ. He is therefore called "our hope" (1 Tim. 1:1; Col. 1:27, "Christ in you, the hope of glory"). This Christ is no stranger to the community of hope but the One whom they recognize in the gospel as the crucified and risen Lord and whose presence they know through the Spirit. Thus their hope is in the "future of the One who has come" (Kreck). With the gift of his own Son for all God gives the certainty that he will give us everything with him through our transfer into the Christian community (Rom. 8:32). Because Christ has risen as the → "first fruits", we shall also all rise (1 Cor. 15:20 ff.). The Coming One is the Exalted One, whom God has already set over all things and given to the church as its head (Eph. 1:22).

(c) Its nature as a gift. As elpis agathē (good hope), hope is a gift of the Father's grace (2 Thess. 2:16) like faith, and is therefore aroused through the message of salvation (Col. 1:23) in which we receive our call. In this klēsis (→ Call, art. kaleō) the goal of hope in all its riches gives enlightenment (Eph. 1:18), and hope unites those who have been called (Eph. 4:4). Through the power of the Holy Spirit we receive a superabundance of hope (Rom. 15:13), for he is given us as the → first fruits (Rom. 8:23). His indwelling in believers is the guarantee of their resurrection (Rom. 8:11).

6. The characteristics of hope as a subjective attitude. One cannot separate hope as a personal attitude from the objective content of hope, since hope is not a theoretical knowledge about a promised future salvation but a function of a living faith.

(a) It is always a confident, sure expectation of divine saving actions. Without shutting its eyes to the needs and judgments in the foreground of the parousia, hope looks at the coming city of God. pistis and elpis are most closely connected (see NT above, 4). Faith gives "substance" to our hope (Heb. 11:1 NEB) or is the "assurance of things hoped for" (on this verse → Form, art. hypostasis). In Rom. 4:18 → Abraham's faith is presented as faith par' elpida ep' elpidi, "in hope against hope", i.e. against what human judgment of the future declared to be impossible he set the hope given him through God's promise. Faith and hope have in common the fact that their object is still invisible and unprovable (cf. Rom. 8:24 ff. ho ou blepomen, elpizomen, "we hope for what we do not see"). But, like faith, NT hope carries unconditional certainty within itself (see 5(a)–(c)). Therefore, confessions of hope can be introduced by pisteuomen, "we believe" (Rom. 6:8), pepeismai, "I am sure" (Rom. 8:38), pepoithōs, (I am) "certain" (Phil. 1:6). Certain that God's promises of salvation will be realized, the Christian glories in his hope, i.e. he gratefully praises God's grace (Rom. 5:2, kauchōmetha ep' elpidi, "we rejoice on the basis of our hope"; cf. Heb. 3:6, to kauchēma tēs elpidos, "pride in our hope").

(b) elpis and agapē. Like faith and hope, agapē (→ Love) and hope are also essentially related in the NT. If 1 Cor. 13:7 states that love "hopes all things", Col. 1:4, 5 speaks of "the love which you have for all the saints, because of the hope. . . ." Paul calls the Christians in Thessalonica his "hope and joy" (1 Thess. 2:19), and says in 2 Cor. 1:7, "our hope for you is unshaken". NT hope extends both heart and vision. The church, as it waits for the redemption of the body, even feels solidarity with the whole ktisis (→ Creation) as it lies in travail, and hopes for it (Rom. 8:20–23; on this passage see M. Black, Romans, 1973, 121 ff.).

(c) NT hope is a patient, disciplined, confident waiting for and expectation of the Lord as our Saviour. To hope is to be set in motion by the goal ahead, awaiting in this movement towards the goal. It demonstrates its living character by the steadfastness with which it waits, by hypomonē (→ Patience, art. hypomenō), by the patient bearing of the tension between the now, as we walk (for the moment) dia pisteōs, by → faith (2 Cor. 5:7), and our future manner of life (cf. Rom. 8:25; 1 Thess. 1:3). This waiting is something active, for it involves overcoming. Although the waiting may be painful, this too is reckoned positively as "travail" which announces "rebirth" (Matt. 24:8). Therefore those who hope are comforted and confident (2 Cor. 5:8; 2 Thess. 2:16; 1 Thess. 4:18). Hoping is disciplined waiting. Therefore, in 1 Pet. 1:13 the warning, "set your hope fully upon the grace . . .", is preceded by "gird up your minds", i.e. be ready for the onslaught. To this context belongs the fundamental renunciation of all calculations of the future, the humble recognition of the limits set to our knowledge, the submission of our wishes to the demands of the battle for life to which we have been appointed. The goal of our hope calls us to "watch and pray". The man who competes for an earthly → crown makes the necessary sacrifices (1 Cor. 9:25). Hope becomes the motive for personal purity (1 Jn. 3:3), spurs us on to strive for holiness (Heb. 12:14) without which no man can see God. Filled with the longing to return home to his Lord, the apostle seeks his glory in pleasing him (2 Cor. 5:8 f.). Hope requires us to hold fast our confession of it without wavering (Heb. 10:23) and to be ready to give an answer to anyone who asks us to give an account of our hope (1 Pet. 3:15). Finally, however, NT hope is a joyful waiting (Rom. 12:12; → Patience, art. hypomenō). It gives courage and strength. It protects the inner man as a helmet protects the head (1 Thess. 5:8). As a ship is safe when at anchor, our life is secured by hope which binds us to Christ, our great High Priest who has entered the sanctuary (Heb. 6:18 f.). E. Hoffmann

ἀποκαραδοκία

ἀποκαραδοκία (apokaradokia), eager expectation; ἐκδέχομαι (ekdechomai), expect, wait for; ἐκδοχή (ekdochē), expectation; ἀπεκδέχομαι (apekdechomai), wait, wait eagerly; προσδέχομαι (prosdechomai), receive, welcome; προσδοκάω (prosdokaō), wait for, look for, expect; προσδοκία (prosdokia), expectation.

CL & OT While ekdochē (Heb. 10:27 f.) and prosdokia (Lk. 21:26; Acts 12:11 f.) are only used of fearful anticipation, apokaradokia appears twice in Paul in confessions of hope. The word does not occur in pre-Christian Gk., but the use of the simple vb. karadokeō (wait for) is widespread in Hel. Gk. It is formed from the noun to kara, the head, and dechomai, accept. In apokaradokeō the prefix apo- (according to Bertram) strengthens a negative element. This would make the meaning: to anticipate something longingly but anxiously (cf. the negative effect of apo- in apelpizō, to doubt; apoginōskō, to give up; apeipon – aor. of apolegō, to forbid, renounce). The compounds of dechomai formed with ek-, apo- and pros-, and prosdokaō, mostly denote patient waiting for a future goal.

NT 1. In the NT apokaradokia only occurs in Rom. 8:19 and Phil. 1:20. Luther translated Rom. 8:19 as "anxious waiting". The Gk. fathers, however, interpreted the noun without any negative tinge as "intense anticipation", "strong and excited expectation". At all events, the emotional force of eschatological expectancy is strongly emphasized here. NEB therefore translates Phil. 1:20 as "I passionately hope". Rom. 8:19 ascribed to the ktisis, → creation, a longing for the revelation of the children of God. It is they alone who know that the creation has been subjected to decay ep' elpidi, "in hope". Hope, → elpis, does not remove the tension from apokaradokia, but frees it from fear and uncertainty. So the two words can stand together (Phil. 1:20) and bear witness to the fact that the power of expectation does not lie in strength of feeling but in the certainty which God has given and which is peculiar to hope.

2. ekdechomai, apekdechomai, prosdechomai. The words formed from the stem men- are rare in the NT, occurring once each (perimenō Acts 1:4, object: the promise of the Father, i.e. the Holy Spirit) and anamenō (1 Thess. 1:10, object: the Son). hypomenō means to await only in the LXX, but not in the NT (but cf. hypomonē in Rev. 3:10, "the word of patient endurance"; → Patience). The words formed with the roots dek- and dok-, however, occur frequently in this sense.

(a) ekdechomai means await, wait for. In this sense it occurs 6 times, of which three are in secular contexts (Acts 17:16; 1 Cor. 11:33; 16:11), one in a comparison (Jas. 5:7 of the farmer who waits for the fruit of the fields) and two refer to waiting for the eschata, the last things (Heb. 10:13; 11:10). Christ, seated at the right → hand of the Father, is waiting for the moment when his enemies will be made his footstool (cf. Ps. 110:1). And → Abraham was waiting for the city with sure foundations (a picture of heaven as a world of blessedness and perfect communion with God).

(b) apekdechomai (8 times, of which 6 are in Paul and 1 in Heb. and 1 in 1 Pet.). The word does not occur in the LXX. The prefix ap/apo emphasizes the distance between the state of waiting and the time of fulfilment of what is hoped for. Through it the one who is waiting is compelled to persevere. NEB renders the word in Gal. 5:5 "eagerly wait". But generally it is only the context which implies the manner of waiting. In terms of content the expectation is directed towards the returning Lord (Phil. 3:20), who will prove himself to be our "Saviour" as he transforms our bodies, towards our entry into the full riches of sonship through the resurrection of the body (Rom. 8:23), and therefore towards dikaiosynē, → righteousness, in the last judgment (Gal. 5:5). Since the human and the non-human creation share equally in the effects of the fall and in salvation, creation's anticipation of freedom from the curse of death is directed ultimately towards the entrance into glory of the children of God (Rom. 8:19). The children of God, aware of the nature of hope (Rom. 8:24), are waiting di' hypomonēs (v. 25), in patient endurance of the suffering of the present age.

(c) prosdechomai means I accept, but mostly I wait (14 times, of which 7 are in secular contexts). Where it is used of the expectations of faith it denotes (i) the messianic expectation of Israel (Lk. 2:25, 38: Simeon was waiting for the consolation of Israel; Anna spoke to those who were waiting for the salvation of Jerusalem), and (ii) the eschatological goal of salvation (resurrection, Acts 24:15; mercy in the judgment, Jude 21; the incomparable glory that will come with the epiphany, Tit. 2:13).

3. prosdokaō, I wait, wait for, look for someone or something, expect, occurs 16 times, of which 5 are in sayings, 2 in 2 Pet. In Matt. 11:3 par. Lk. 7:9 f. it appears in the Baptist's question about the expected messiah. In Matt. 24:50 it is used of Jesus' parousia, which comes unexpectedly. 2 Pet. 3:13 identifies the goal of expectation as "new heavens and a new earth in which righteousness dwells", and v. 12 as the inbreaking of the day of God. Those who wait are at one and the same time the speudontes, which some interpret as those who strive (thus C. Maurer TDNT VI 726) and are zealous (Arndt, 771) some as those who hasten the day through their holy conduct. E. Hoffmann

→ Fullness, → Present, → Promise

(a). Advisory Commission, World Council of Churches, Christ the Hope of the World, 1954; A. Barr, " 'Hope' (elpis, elpizō) in the New Testament", SJT 3, 1950, 68–77; J. B. Bauer, "Hope", EBT I 376–79; E. Brunner, Our Eternal Hope, 1954; R. Bultmann, Theology of the New Testament, I, 1952, 319–23, 344–47; R. Bultmann and K. H. Rengstorf, elpis, TDNT II 517–35; G. B. Caird, W. Pannenberg, I. T. Ramsey, J. Klugmann, N. Smart, and W. A. Whitehouse, The Christian Hope, SPCK Theological Collections 13, 1970; H. Conzelmann, Outline Theology of the New Testament, 1969, 184–91; E. H. Cousins, ed., Hope and the Future of Man, 1973; W. M. Cunningham, "The Theology of Hope: An English Language Bibliography", Canadian Journal of Theology, 15, 1969, 131–37; W. J. Dalton, " 'So that Your Faith May Also Be Your Hope in God' (1 Peter 1:21)", in R. J. Banks, ed., Reconciliation and Hope (Leon Morris Festschrift), 1974, 262–74; F. J. Denbeaux, "Biblical Hope", Interpretation 5, 1951, 285–303; J. E. Fison, Christian Hope, 1954; T. F. Glasson, His Appearing and his Kingdom: The Christian Hope in the Light of its History, 1953; K. Hanhart, "Paul's Hope in the Face of Death", JBL 88, 1969, 445–57; B. C. Hanson, Hope and Participation in Christ: A Study in the Theology of Barth and Pannenberg, Dissertation, Princeton Theological Seminary, 1971; F. Kierstiens, "The Theology of Hope in Germany Today", Concilium 6, 9, 1970, 101–11; W. G. Kümmel, Promise and Fulfilment, 1961; and "Eschatological Expectation in the Proclamation of Jesus", in J. M. Robinson, ed., The Future of Our Religious Past: Essays in Honour of Rudolf Bultmann, 1971, 29–48; M. D. Meeks, Origins of the Theology of Hope, 1974; P. S. Minear, Christian Hope and the Second Coming, 1954; "Time of Hope in the New Testament", SJT 6, 1953, 337–61; and "Hope" IDB II 640–43; C. Maurer, prosdokaō, TDNT VI 725 ff.; J. Moltmann, Theology of Hope, 1967; Hope and Planning, 1971; Theology and Joy, 1973; and The Experiment Hope, 1975; P. H. Monsma, "Hope", ZPEB III 198 ff.; C. F. D. Moule, The Meaning of Hope, 1963; G. O'Collins, "The Principle and Theology of Hope", SJT 21, 1968, 129–44; J. A. T. Robinson, Jesus and his Coming, 1957; and In the End, God, 1968²; H. Sasse, "Some Thoughts on Christian Hope", Reformed Theological Review, 26, 1967, 41–54; H. Schlier, "On Hope", The Relevance of the New Testament, 1968, 142–55; H. C. Snape, "Man's Future on Earth and Beyond; The Christian Hope Today", The Modern Churchman, 7, 1963, 84–92; D. Stewart, "In Quest of Hope: Paul Ricoeur and J. Moltmann", Restoration Quarterly 13, 1970, 31–52; G. Vos, "Eschatology in the Psalter", Princeton Theological Review 18, 1920, 1–43; D. E. H. Whiteley, The Theology of St Paul, 1964, 233 ff.; D. D. Williams, "Tragedy and the Christian Eschatology", Encounter 24, 1963, 61–73; W. Zimmerli, Man and His Hope in the Old Testament, 1971.

(b). H. Bardkte, H. Conzelmann, E. Schlink, "Hoffnung", *RGG*³ III 415 ff.; G. Bertram, apokaradokia, ZNW 49, 1958, 264 ff.; P. A. H. de Boer, "Études sur le sens de la racine qwh", Oudtestamentische Studien, 10, 1954, 225–46; J. van der Ploeg, "L'espérance dans l'Ancien Testament", RB 61, 1954, 481–507; W. Grossouw, "L'espérance dans le Nouveau Testament", RB 61, 1954, 508–32; W. Grundmann, "Überlieferung und Eigenaussage im eschatologischen Denken des Apostels Paulus", NTS 8, 1961–62, 12–26; C. H. Hunzinger, "Die Hoffnung angesichts des Todes in Wandel der paulinischen Aussagen", in Leben angesichts des Todes. Helmut Thielicke zum 60. Geburtstag, 1968; W. D. Marsch, ed., Diskussion über die "Theologie der Hoffnung", 1967; E. Neuhäusler and P. Engelhardt, "Hoffnung", LTK V 416 ff.; J.-H. Nicolas, "Valeur de l'espérance enseignée par l'Écriture", Dictionnaire de la Spiritualité, 1960, 1209–16; P. Otzen, " 'Gute Hoffnung' bei Paulus", ZNW 40, 1958, 283 ff.; A. Pott, Das Hoffen im Neuen Testament, 1915; G. Sauter, Zukunft und Verheissung, 1965, and "Erwägungen zum Begriff und Verständnis der Hoffnung heute", EvTh 8/9, 1967, 406 ff.; J. Schreiner, "Die Hoffnung der Zukunftsschau Israels", in F. Hoffmann et al., eds., Sapienter Ordinare. Festschrift für E. Kleineidam, 1969, 29 ff.; H. Schwantes, Schöpfung der Endzeit, 1963; E. Schweizer, "Gegenwart des Geistes und eschatologische Hoffnung bei Zarathustra, Spätjüdischen Gruppen und den Zeugen des Neuen Testaments", in W. D. Davies and D. Daube eds., The Background of the New Testament and its Eschatology, In Honour of Charles Harold Dodd, 1956, 482–508 (reprinted) in Neotestamentica, 1964, 153 ff.); T. C. Vriezen, "Die Hoffnung im Alten Testament", TLZ 78, 1953, 577 ff.; C. Westermann, Theologia Viatorum 4, 1952, 19 ff.; and "Das Hoffen im Alten Testament", in Forschung am Alten Testament, ThB 24, 1964, 219 ff.

House, Build, Manage, Steward

οἶκος

οἶκος (oikos), house, dwelling-place; οἰκία (oikia), dwelling, house; οἰκέω (oikeō), dwell, inhabit; κατοικέω (katoikeō), inhabit; κατοικητήριον (katoikētērion), dwelling place, habitation; κατοικίζω (katoikizō), settle; ἐνοικέω (enoikeō), live in, dwell in; οἰκεῖος (oikeios), belonging to the house, member of the household.

CL oikos is attested as early as Mycenaean Gk. and has been handed down from Homer on. It means both the dwelling place and the structure. oikia, from Herodotus on, denotes the dwelling, the house. Originally the two words were differentiated in meaning, in that oikia denoted the dwelling place, and oikos the whole house, the premises, the family property, and even the inhabitants of the house. This original distinction was maintained in Attic law, where oikos meant the inheritance and oikia the house itself. Later, particularly after the LXX, the distinctions were not maintained and the words were used synonymously.

In popular speech oikos meant any kind of house, but frequently also a particular house and even a temple. In such cases the divine name attached to oikos indicated the god to whom the temple was dedicated. But the word was also used in the metaphorical sense. It denoted the family, the property and other similar concepts connected with the house itself.

The vb. oikeō, which belongs to oikos and oikia, occurs frequently in Gk. from Homer on, and also in the LXX. Used intrans. it means to have one's dwelling, dwell; trans. to inhabit, occupy.

OT 1. oikos and oikia appear very frequently in the LXX chiefly to translate the Heb. bayiṯ. Both words denote the building (the house, and also palace or temple). But because Heb., like Gk., has no word for the small social unit which we call the family, bayiṯ (and hence LXX oikos) acquired, in addition to its original meaning of dwelling place, that of household (those bound together by sharing the same dwelling place), in a broader sense that of family and clan, and even that of the still bigger tribal unit (e.g. the house of Judah). When Ps. 127:1 says that God must build the house if it is to endure, it refers both to the communal lot of those who dwell under one roof, and also to their heirs and descendants (2 Sam. 7:11 f., 16, 18 f., 25–29) who are obliged to give one another unconditional protection (the father's house).

2. Used with God's name, oikos, as in secular Gk., means the temple, the sanctuary: oikos theou (house of God) or oikos kyriou (house of the Lord). Both expressions are common. Beside criticism of the idea that anyone could build God a house (2 Sam. 7:5 f.; 1 Ki. 8:27; Isa. 66:1) we find sincere expressions of joy at the privilege of being able to be in the house of the Lord, especially in the Pss. (e.g. 23:6; 26:8; 27:4; 52:8[10]); 84:4, 10[5, 11]; 92:13[14]; 122:1). To this feeling corresponds the longing for God's house on the part of those who are prevented from being there (cf. Ps. 42:4[5]).

3. It is questionable whether, in the OT, the idea of the "house of God" is transferred from the → temple to the congregation worshipping there, in the same way that a transference of meaning has taken place from "house" (dwelling place) to "family" (community). All the statements about the house of God remain firmly attached to the earthly sanctuary. The only verse which expressly lies behind the NT understanding of the congregation as the "house of God" (Num. 12:7 = Heb. 3:2, 5) does not refer directly to the temple but to the land in which Yahweh (through his people) has settled and therefore reigns. It is more conceivable that an extended use of "house of David" for the people of God prepared the way for the idea that the community was "God's house" and "God's building" (cf. the promise to rebuild "the booth of David that is fallen" [Amos 9:11; Acts 15:16]).

4. Going beyond the OT we find that in various phrases in the Qumran documents "house" denotes the Qumran community which understood itself as a temple or sanctuary (1QS 5:6; 8:5, 9; 9:6; CD 3:19). On the whole subject → Temple; → Holy; cf. B. Gärtner, The Temple and the Community in Qumran and the New Testament, Society for New Testament Studies Monograph Series 1, 1965.

NT In the NT, oikos and oikia, which are virtually used as synonyms, have the same range of meaning as in secular Gk. and in the LXX. Nevertheless, they occur in a number of characteristic phrases peculiar to the NT (see below 4 (b)–(f) and 5). In these oikos appears far more frequently.

1. The most frequent use of both oikos and oikia is in the lit. sense of house (e.g. Matt. 2:11; 7:27–7; 9:7; Mk. 7:30) and in the simple metaphorical sense of family, household (e.g. Matt. 13:57; Mk. 6:4; Jn. 4:53; 1 Cor. 1:16; 16:15; 2 Tim. 1:16; 4:19) (cf. Arndt, 559 f., 562 f.).

2. Passages which use oikos theou for the → temple are self-explanatory (Mk. 2:26 par. Matt. 12:4, Lk. 6:4; Matt. 21:13 par. Mk. 11:17, Lk. 19:46 = Isa. 56:7; Jn. 2:16 f.; Lk. 11:51). The only question which one has to ask about Acts 7:46–50 is whether there is here a criticism of Solomon's building of a house (v. 47) in its contrast with David's request to be allowed to make God a tent dwelling (skēnōma v. 46; → Tent). The statement, illustrated by the quotation from Isa. 66:1, that "the Most High does not dwell in houses made with hands" (v. 48) has been thought to support such an interpretation, according to which Solomon's building of the temple was a deviation from the true worship of God. (Cf. E. Haenchen, The Acts of the Apostles, 1971, 285 ff. who points out that Judaism did not represent Yahweh as dwelling in the temple but only his name. Nevertheless, Stephen's words would have had a blasphemous ring for Jews.)

3. The passages which speak of "the house of Israel," "the house of Jacob," or "the house of Judah" (Matt. 10:6; 15:24; Acts 2:36; Heb. 8:8, 10 citing Jer. 31:31 ff.; Lk. 1:33; Acts 7:42–43 citing Amos 5:25–27) are linked with the metaphorical sense of house, family, race (cf. also "house of David" Lk. 1:27, 69; 2:4) which they extend in the direction of the people of God. In this they are following the example of the OT, as the frequent references to the OT in these illustrations show.

4. (a) The NT designation of the Christian community as the house of God which is "an integral part of the primitive Christian kērygma" (O. Michel, TDNT V 126), goes beyond the OT model. This meaning of house may have had several roots. There are the OT concepts of God's proprietary rights over his people (expressed there, admittedly, more through the images of the vine, the vineyard and the plantation, Hos. 10:1; Isa. 5:7; Jer. 2:21; Ps. 80:8 ff.[9 ff.]; cf. 1 Cor. 3:6 ff.), but which apply equally in the case of the house (→ People; → Generation). Gnostic ideas of a "heavenly building", identical with the heavenly body of the primal man and redeemer may also have exercised an influence if they were earlier than the NT (→ Body; → Head; cf. also O. Michel, TDNT V 122 f.). Further, one must take into consideration the fact that the Qumran documents also see the community as a holy house, built on the foundation of truth (1QH 7:8 f.).

(b) In its exposition of Num. 12:7, Heb. 3:1–6 is linked to the OT in its terminology. But it extends the thought. Moses and Christ are contrasted: Moses as "faithful in all God's house as a servant", Christ as the "son" and the "builder" of the house and, as such, superior. Whatever sense "house" may have had in Num. 12:7 (all Israel as God's people or God's "royal household"; so T. J., cf. O. Michel, Der Brief an die Hebräer, KEK 13, 1966[12], 96), for the writer of Heb. it meant that the Christian community (→ Church) is "God's house," as 3:6b demonstrates. "We are his house, if we hold our confidence and pride in our hope firm to the end" (RSV mg.).

(c) What is important in this connection is not only that God or Christ is regarded as the builder of the house. In contrast to Philo, it is not the individual, the "pure soul" that is seen as God's house, but the Christian community as a whole which is designated as such (cf. O. Michel, TDNT V 123–30). Moreover, the passages in which Paul speaks of the body as the temple of the Holy Spirit (1 Cor. 3:16; 6:19) and which are undoubtedly connected with the idea of the house of God, are not to be understood purely individualistically. They deal objectively with the Christian community and the problems which arise from the fellowship.

(d) Eph. 2:19–22 shows that the ideas contained in the terms "house of God" and "temple of God" naturally run into one another. Here, no less than six different derivatives of oikos (nevertheless, not oikos itself) are used to describe the spiritual reality of the community under the metaphor of the temple and of the building. They are paroikos (v. 19, stranger, → Foreign), oikeios (v. 19, members of the household; cf. Gal. 6:10), epoikodomeō (v. 20, build on; cf. 1 Cor. 3:10, 12, 14; 1 Pet. 2:5 v.l.; Acts 20:32 t.r.; Col. 2:7; Jude 20), oikodomē (v. 21, building, structure; cf. 4:12, 16, 29; → oikodomeō below), synoikodomeō (v. 22, build together), and katoikētērion (v. 22, dwelling-place; cf. Jer. 9:10; Rev. 18:2). In 1 Pet. 2:4 f. the images again overlap. Christians are exhorted to allow themselves to be built up as spiritual stones into a spiritual house (→ oikodomeō), in order to present spiritual sacrifices to God as (and here the picture changes) a spiritual priesthood. When 1 Pet. 4:17 reckons that the judgment will begin with the house of God, the natural assumption is that the Christian community is the house of God. Similarly, 1 Tim. 3:15 expressly identifies "the house of God" with "the church of the living God, the pillar and bulwark of the truth".

(e) Given the figurative use of the terms, it was inevitable that many related concepts and images would be introduced to elucidate the truth concerning the Christian community which is expressed in the phrase "the house of God". There is the idea of the foundation (1 Cor. 3:10–12; Eph. 2:20; 2 Tim. 2:19; → Firm, art. themelios), of Christ as the corner stone (Acts 4:11; Eph. 2:20; 1 Pet. 2:4) and Christians as living stones (1 Pet. 2:5; → Rock), of the pillars (1 Tim. 3:15) and above all of the temple (1 Cor. 3:16 f.; 6:19; 2 Cor. 6:16; Eph. 2:21; → Temple), All these passages and concepts, as well as all the derivatives of oikos, must be taken into account in one's interpretation.

(f) It is strange, however, that the concept of the house of God remains confined to the idea of a spiritual building and is not extended in the sense of the family, the other metaphorical meaning of oikos, which could have been used in the sense of the family of God. Probably the phrase "the house of God" was, through OT thought, too closely linked to the sanctuary for such an extension to be possible.

5. (a) What could be conveyed by the idea of the family of God had, in fact, already come into being in the primitive Christian community through the house churches. The household as a community (the family included the slaves, according to the ancient concept of it) formed the smallest unit and basis of the congregation. The house churches mentioned in the NT (Acts 11:14; 16:15, 31, 34; 18:8; 1 Cor. 1:16; Phlm. 2; 2 Tim. 1:16; 4:19) no doubt came into being through the use of the homes as meeting places. The gospel was preached in them (Acts 5:42; 20:20), and the Lord's supper was celebrated in them (Acts 2:46). The conversion of the head of the house brought the whole family into the congregation and – however it is to be understood – into the faith (Acts 16:31, 34; 18:8; cf. Jn. 4:53 where, as an exception to the rule in this connection, we find oikia and not oikos).

The NT also speaks of the → baptism of whole households in the same way (1 Cor. 1:16; Acts 16:15; cf. Acts 16:33; perhaps also Acts 18:8). The question whether one may conclude from these indications that the primitive church practised infant baptism is discussed in the articles on Baptism.

(b) The formation of the house churches, which can be explained on the basis of the missionary situation, was of the greatest significance for the spreading of the gospel. With them the early church took over the natural order of life, without falling into idealization of the house churches. The way in which the Gospels take up Micah's prophecy of the end-time (Mic. 7:6 = Matt. 10:35 f. par. Lk. 12:53) indicates that the primitive community had to reckon with the disruption of the family for the sake of the gospel. Those who take this upon themselves are promised "now in this time" new "houses and brothers and sisters and mothers and children" (Mk. 10:29 f. par. Matt. 19:29, Lk. 18:29 f.). The place of the disrupted family is taken by the family of God, the Christian community.

6. In Jesus' word of revelation in Jn. 14:2 the disciples are promised that many dwelling places are ready in the Father's house, into which the disciples will be received when the Lord returns. Rab. and gnostic parallels (cf. also Eth.Enoch 45:3), which suggest the idea of the right to a heavenly dwelling, help to explain the expression oikia tou patros mou, "my Father's house". Two factors ought, however, to warn us against an over-hasty mythological localization of the concept: (a) the linking of the promise of a dwelling to the return, and thereby to the fulfilment of the kingdom of God, and (b) the similarity of the expression to the idea of the house of God (oikos theou and naos theou) and the related thought of the right of sanctuary (cf. A. Schlatter, Der Evangelist Johannes, 1930, 292).

7. (a) The vb. oikeō occurs in the NT both in the lit. and in the metaphorical sense. 1 Cor. 7:12 f., which deals with the living together of the Christian and non-Christian partners in mixed marriages, belongs to the former category. 1 Tim. 6:16 stands on the borderline between lit. and metaphorical meanings: God "dwells in unapproachable light". Jewish and Hel. ideas (see the whole verse) are combined in this statement of the unutterable beauty of God. In the metaphorical sense oikeō is used in describing the inner processes in man (5 passages out of 8): the phrase "sin . . . dwells in me" (Rom. 7:20; cf. 7:18) depicts the old man, while the truth about the new man is testified to in the sentence, repeated like a confession of faith, "the Spirit of God dwells in you" (Rom. 8:9, 11; 1 Cor. 3:16). katoikizō occurs in the same sense in Jas. 4:5.

(b) The compound katoikeō occurs more frequently in the NT than oikeō. Intrans. it means dwell; trans. inhabit. Beside the widespread use of the word in its lit. meaning, it also is used for the possession of a man by God, by Christ or by ungodly powers. Demons "dwell" in a man (Matt. 12:45 par. Lk. 11:26); but to believers God's purpose is "that Christ may dwell in your hearts through faith" (Eph. 3:17). Col. 2:9 can say of Christ that "in him the whole fullness of deity dwells bodily" (cf. Col. 1:19) and thus express in language which has affinities with gnosticism the complete union between Christ and God (but → Fullness, art. plēroō, NT 5 (b)).

The noun katoikētērion, dwelling place, home, which has its origins in the LXX, occurs in connection with the great picture of the Christian community as the spiritual building and temple (Eph. 2:19–22).

(c) A further compound, enoikeō, dwell in, indwell, is only used in the metaphorical sense in the NT, in fact similarly to katoikeō. God himself will dwell among men (2 Cor. 6:16 citing Lev. 26:11 f.), and the Holy Spirit dwells in believers (Rom. 8:11; 2 Tim. 1:14). But the word of Christ (Col. 3:16) and faith (2 Tim. 1:5) may also be said to dwell in men. On the other hand, the same may be said of sin (Rom. 7:17).

(d) The adj. oikeios occurs from Hesiod on and means "belonging to the house". In the NT it is only used as a noun meaning member of the household. The lit. meaning appears in 1 Tim. 5:8. In the other two passages it is determined by the understanding of the congregation as the house of God (see above 4). Eph. 2:19 assures the Gentiles that they are no longer strangers (paroikoi; → Foreign) but members of the household (oikeioi – note the play on words!), accepted into the full fellowship of the house of God, i.e. the Christian community. Gal. 6:10 reminds the Christian of his duty to do good to all, but has him begin specifically with "those who are of the household of faith," the members of the family of God.

J. Goetzmann

οἰκοδομέω oikodomeō, build, build up; oikodomē, the process of building, a building; epoikodomeō, build on something, build further; synoikodomeō, build together with.

CL The vb. oikodomeō, attested from Hdt. on, means to build, build up, and is used in many ways in the lit. sense, but also in the fig. The noun oikodomē, building up, building, occurs frequently in Koine Gk.; it meant originally the process of building.

OT In the LXX oikodomeō stands for Heb. bānâh and occurs frequently (almost 350 times). It is used in most cases in the lit. sense for the erection of a building. oikodomē, on the other hand, occurs very rarely and almost entirely in later writings (17 passages; for Heb. words only 4 times in Chr. and Ezr.).

The metaphorical use of oikodomeō, which occurs particularly in Jer., is interesting. To "plant" and to "build" go together; they are God's work and have their opposites in God's → judgment to "break down" and "pluck up" (Jer. 1:10; 24:6). It is God himself who will rebuild Israel (Jer. 31:4; 33:7). He does his work by putting his words in the mouths of the prophets (Jer. 1:9 f.). He leads the peoples into the fellowship of the people of Israel and thus "builds them up" (Jer. 12:14 ff.). This OT use of the concept particularly influenced Paul's usage. A further element in the OT, which became effective in the NT, is the recognition that men cannot build a house for God (Isa. 66:1; → oikos).

NT 1. The apocalyptic-messianic use of oikodomeō in the gospels (only one passage in Jn.) is linked to this recognition. At the same time it also takes over from the OT the traditional opposition of build and → destroy (katalyein). Such usage occurs in Mk. 14:58, and par. Matt. 26:61; Jn. 2:19 ff.; and also Matt. 16:18. Jesus' enigmatic saying, which was used to prove the accusation against him at his trial, speaks of destroying the temple that is made with hands and in three days building another, not made with hands (Mk. 14:58). Jn. 2:19 ff. interprets this in terms of the → resurrection and even alters oikodomēsō ("I will build"), which was probably the original word, to the ambiguous egerō ("I will raise", v. 19). Since that time Mk. 14:58 has stood in the shadow of this interpretation, although this passage – independent of Jn. 2:19 ff. – can be understood perfectly well as a prophecy of the erection of the new temple, the eschatological community. Moreover the promise to Peter in Matt. 16:18 agrees with such an understanding. Even if the question has to remain open, whether the fut. oikodomēsō refers in both passages to the parousia of the Son of Man (cf. Mk. 13:26 f.; → Present) or to the power of Christ's resurrection and of Pentecost to build up the community, there is an ultimate reference to the community (→ Church) as the eschatological "building of God".

2. The usage of Acts is also to be seen against its OT background. Acts 15:16 refers to Amos 9:11 and perhaps to Jer. 12:15 ff. and promises the eschatological restoration of the people of Israel. Acts 9:31 and 20:32 have "a typically ecclesiastical ring" (O. Michel, TDNT V 139) without any reference to the action of the messiah.

3. The most important passages for the understanding of the concept occur in Paul's letters, where, moreover, almost all the occurrences of the noun are to be found. However, the verbal use is more important. oikodomē has the meaning of a building only in 1 Cor. 3:9 and 2 Cor. 5:1 (see below, 5); otherwise it denotes the process of building and has the same meaning as the vb.

(a) The term describes the apostolic activity (2 Cor. 10:8; 13:10; 12:19) against the background of OT models (cf. Jer. 1:10; 24:6; especially the opposition of "destroy" and "build up"). 1 Cor. 3:5–17 also belongs here. In this passage Paul combines two images, that of planting and that of building, in order to illustrate the process of building the "temple of God" (the Christian community; v. 16) in one great allegory.

(b) Apart from the activity of the apostle, oikodomeō is used to describe the growth (→ Grow) and expansion of the community through the Spirit. "oikodomē denotes the goal of knowledge, yet also the inner growth of the community and the content and purpose of its liturgical life and its meetings" (O. Michel, TDNT V 141). Therefore, there is one rule which applies to everything which happens within the community: it must serve to build up the community (1 Cor. 14:12, 17, 26; Rom. 14:19; 15:2; 1 Thess. 5:11; Eph. 4:29). Thus the → gifts of → grace and offices are judged according to what they contribute to the building up of the community (1 Cor. 14:3–5; Eph. 4:12). Paul scolds the Corinthians: "Knowledge puffs up, but love builds up" (1 Cor. 8:1). The enthusiasts in Corinth probably had a slogan, "Knowledge builds up," which Paul is here correcting. Similarly in 1 Cor. 10:23 Paul corrects the Corinthian slogan, panta exestin, "All things are lawful", by urging people to ask themselves whether their actions are conducive to building up the community.

(c) It is striking that the positive use of the word always refers to the community. Paul uses sharp words (cf. 1 Cor. 14:19) to criticize the man who speaks in a tongue on his own to "edify [oikodomei] himself" (1 Cor. 14:4). Edification which is not aimed at serving others is self-centred and pointless.

4. While 1 Cor. 3 mixes the images of planting and building, a further image appears alongside that of building in Eph. 4:12, 16, the image of the → body of Christ. This hints at gnostic ideas and leads to the thought that the building grows (like an organism). The same idea of the building "growing" (the corner stone of which, Jesus Christ has indeed already been put in position; → Rock) appears in Eph. 2:19 ff. (cf. also Ps. 118:22 f.; Matt. 21:42; Mk. 12:10 f.; Lk. 20:17; Acts 4:7; 1 Pet. 2:7). To be built into this growing building, on which God himself is building, means to be put in as a "living stone" (1 Pet. 2:5). All these passages are concerned with the unity and holiness of the temple of God, the Christian community.

5. 2 Cor. 5:1 is the only passage where oikodomē is used as an anthropological term in a sense which, at least at first sight, is individualistic. The transient tent of the earthly body is here contrasted with an eternal oikodomē, prepared by God, not made with hands.

6. The compounds synoikodomeō (build together; pass. be built into [Eph. 2:22]) and epoikodomeō (build on something, build further) underline once again by the prepositions used the idea of fellowship which is contained in the concept of "building up". Believers are rooted and grounded in Christ (Col. 2:7). The Christian community is built up together in the co-operation of all the participants (1 Cor. 3:10–4), and in unity with apostles and prophets (Eph. 2:20), to become the one holy community of the Lord.

J. Goetzmann

οἰκονομία

οἰκονομία (oikonomia), management, office; οἰκονόμος (oikonomos), steward; οἰκονομέω (oikonomeō), manage, administer, plan.

CL oikonomia, attested from Xen. and Plato on, denoted primarily the management of a household, but was soon extended to the administration of the state (the title of one of Xen.'s books), and finally was used for every kind of activity which results from the holding of an office.

oikonomos (from Aesch. on) was used of people, and has a more concrete meaning. It denotes the house-steward, and then by extension the managers of individual departments within the household, e.g. the porter, the estate manager, the head cook, the accountant, all domestic officials who were mostly recruited from among the slaves. Similarly, oikonomeō means to manage as a house-steward, order, regulate.

OT The occurrence of the words in the LXX does not give much help towards understanding the NT concept. oikonomia only occurs in Isa. 22:19, 21, and then in the original meaning of administration, office. oikonomos appears somewhat more frequently and is likewise used in the technical sense of the word for a court official, chiefly the royal palace governor ('al habbayiṯ, e.g. Eliakim in 2 Ki. 18:18, 37; 19:2; Isa. 36:3, 22; 37:2; cf. also 1 Ki. 4:6; 16:9; 18:3; Est. 1:8; 8:9).

NT In the NT, too, the word-group does not appear at all frequently: oikonomia occurs 9 times, oikonomos 10 times and oikonomeō only once (Lk. 16:2). Nevertheless, something like a specific NT usage has been established which has two main different aspects.

1. (a) The words are used in their technical sense to denote the occupation of household and estate managers and their tasks (Lk. 12:42; 16:1 ff.; cf. the use as a title with the name in Rom. 16:23, "Erastus the city treasurer" [cf. H. J. Cadbury, "Erastus of Corinth", JBL 50, 1931, 42–58]). Gal. 4:2 also belongs in this category. Here oikonomos is used to describe man's age of minority before the sending of Christ, but it also serves within the metaphor as the designation of an occupation, in order to clarify a legal concept: "But he is under guardians [epitropous] and trustees [oikonomous] until the date set by the father" (RSV). In Lk., the only gospel in which oikonomos and oikonomia appear, oikonomos is used alternately with doulos, slave (Lk. 12:42 ff.; cf. par. Matt. 24:45 ff.). Admittedly all the passages in Lk. occur in parables, so one can on this ground speak in a certain sense of a metaphorical use of the words.

([Ed.] Interesting light on the parable in Lk. 16:1–17 has been shed by J. D. M. Derrett, "The Parable of the Unjust Steward", NTS 7, 1961, 198–219, reprinted in Law in the New Testament, 1970, 48–77. Making extensive use of Jewish laws and customs in the light of later sources, Derrett puts forward a rationale of the parable. The Mosaic Law forbade the taking of interest on loans from fellow Jews [Exod. 22:25; Lev. 25:36; Deut. 23:19 f.]. The Pharisees who had considerable business concerns found ways of evading the intention of the law without transgressing the letter. They argued that the law was concerned with protecting the destitute and not with business enterprises for mutual profit. So long as a man had some of the commodity which he wished to borrow he was not destitute. The bills in the parable preserve the letter of the law by not mentioning interest but only the amount to be repaid in terms of commodities. The steward who was legally entitled to act in his master's name saw an opportunity to make provision for his future needs by ingratiating himself with his master's debtors. He simply cancelled the interest and got the debtors to sign new notes stating the original amount of principal to be repaid. The master was quick to appreciate the shrewdness of the move. For it not only helped to feather the unjust steward's nest, but it also put the master right in the eyes of the law. By forfeiting the illegal exorbitant interest he was at least conforming to the requirements of the law. In its context the parable is a reminder to the disciples to exercise stewardship of this world's goods [→ Possessions, art. mamōnas], so that when mammon fails "they" [i.e. the poor, or possibly even God] may receive them "in the eternal habitations" [v. 9]. The following verses emphasize the point that while wealth is not to be sought for its own sake, wise and diligent stewardship of it in the master's service is important. Faithful stewardship in this determines whether God will entrust to the disciple true riches [vv. 10 f.].)

(b) The position is similar in the rest of the NT. In 1 Cor. 4:1 Paul uses oikonomos metaphorically to describe the apostolic task and, just as in the gospels, alongside doulos. Also as in the gospels (Lk. 12:42; 16:10 f.; Matt. 25:21 ff.; cf. Lk. 19:17 ff.), 1 Cor. 4:2 names faithfulness as the essential requirement in a steward. In the same way Tit. 1:7 requires that "a bishop, as God's steward, must be blameless." In 1 Pet. 4:10 all the members of the community, as recipients of the gifts of grace, are called "stewards of God's varied grace."

(c) To understand the concepts of oikonomia and oikonomos one must refer to their roots in the concept of the house, as it is in the NT (→ oikos). God's people, God's community, is his house, which he builds up through the work of those he has called to the task, to whom he entrusts the stewardship of the house. They are not to look upon these household affairs as their own; they are merely stewards of the gifts entrusted to them and have to give an account of their stewardship (Lk. 16:2; cf. the parable of the pounds, Lk. 19:11 ff., cf. Matt. 25:14 ff., which must be taken into account in the explanation of the concept, even though oikonomos does not appear in them). In addition to the gifts of the Spirit (1 Pet. 4:10) it is above all the → gospel which is thought of as something entrusted to stewards. Thus in 1 Cor. 4:1 Paul introduces himself and his fellow-workers as "servants of Christ and stewards of the mysteries of God." Likewise in 1 Cor. 9:17 Paul calls the preaching of the gospel a "commission" (oikonomia) from which he cannot withdraw. Col. 1:25 and Eph. 3:2 perhaps also belong in this category. In these passages the divine office committed to the apostle is under discussion. Admittedly there could be some doubt in both cases whether the meaning here is not "plan of salvation" (see below, 2).

2. The use of the word oikonomia moves in a second direction in the sense of God's plan of salvation. This meaning, related to salvation history, could have arisen on the basis of the breadth of meaning of the Gk. word (see above, 1), which can denote the plans and arrangements of the authorities as well as measures through which the help of heavenly powers can be obtained (e.g. in the magical papyri referred to by O. Michel, TDNT V 152). In Eph. it is used for God's plan of salvation, which was hidden from eternity in God (Eph. 3:9), and now, in the fullness of time, has been realized in Christ (Eph. 1:10). The soteriological sense of the concept figured alongside other uses in the later patristic literature (e.g. Justin, Dial. 30, 3; 45, 4; Irenaeus, Haer. 1, 10, 3; 4, 33, 7; see Lampe, 940–3).

3. The first and second meanings of the term are nevertheless not completely independent. Because God allows his plan of salvation to be proclaimed through men (1 Cor. 4:1; cf. the use of mystērion, → secret, here and in Eph. 3:9), the work of the oikonomos is rooted in the divine oikonomia. Just as → time has its function in God's plan, a definite period of time is given to the steward, even though he may not himself know how long it is (Lk. 12:46). At the end of it he must render his account. Thus on the basis of God's plan of salvation → time itself is a gift entrusted to men, to be used (Col. 4:5; Eph. 5:15 f.) and managed responsibly.

J. Goetzmann

→ Body, → Church, → Priest, → Serve, → Temple, → Tent

(a). S. Aalen, " 'Reign' and 'House' in the Kingdom of God in the Gospels", NTS 8, 1961–62, 215–40; K. Aland, Did the Early Church Baptize Infants?, 1963; A. Badawy, Architecture in Ancient Egypt and the Near East, 1966; J. E. Crouch, The Origin and Intention of the Colossian Haustafel, 1972; J. D. M. Derrett, Law in the New Testament, 1970, 48–77; N. Hillyer, " 'Spiritual Milk . . . Spiritual House' ", TB 20, 1969, 126; J. Jeremias, Infant Baptism in the First Four Centuries, 1960; and The Origins of Infant Baptism: A Further Study in Reply to Kurt Aland, 1963; O. Michel, oikos etc., TDNT 119–59; J. Pedersen, Israel: Its Life and Culture, I-II, 1926, 46–96; J. Reumann, "Oikonomia-Terms in Paul in comparison with Lucan Heilsgeschichte", NTS 13, 1966–67, 147–67; E. H. Robertson, "The House Church" in Basileia, Festschrift for W. Freytag, 1961², 366 ff.; H. G. Stigers, "House", ZPEB III 217–21 (discusses structure of houses in the east); R. de Vaux, "Family Institutions", Ancient Israel, 1961, 19–61.
(b). H. Brattgard, Im Haushalt Gottes, 1964; G. Delling, "Zur Taufe von 'Häusern' im Urchristentum", NovT 7, 1965, 285 ff.; E. Friedel, "Der neutestamentliche oikos-Begriff in seiner Bedeutung für den Gemeindeaufbau", in Festschrift for M. Mitzenheim, 1961; H. Galley, "Das 'Haus' im Neuen Testament", Evangelisch-Lutherische Kirchenzeitung 15, 1961, 201 ff.; E. Jenni, bayit THAT I 307–13; E. Käsemann, Leib und Leib Christi, 1933; E. Stauffer, "Zur Kindertaufe in der Urkirche", Deutsches Pfarrerblatt, 1949, 152 ff.; A. Strobel, "Der Begriff des Hauses im griechischen und römischen Privatrecht", ZNW 56, 1965, 91 ff.; P. Vielhauer, Oikodomē. Das Bild vom Bau in der christlichen Literatur vom Neuen Testament bis Clemens Alexandrinus, 1940; P. Weigandt, "Zur sogenannten 'Oikosformel' ", NovT 6, 1963, 49 ff.

Humility, Meekness

πραΰς

πραΰς (praÿs), gentle, humble, considerate, meek; πραΰτης (praÿtēs), gentleness, humility, considerateness, meekness; πραϋπαθία (praÿpathia), gentleness; ἐπιεικής (epieikēs), mild, yielding, gentle, kind, forbearing; ἐπιείκεια (epieikeia), mildness, forbearance, gentleness, graciousness.

CL praÿs (from Homer on) is etymologically linked with the Gothic frÿon to love, frionds, friend, and means friendly, mild, gentle. The noun praÿtēs (from Thuc. on) and praÿpathia, derived from praÿpatheia, means gentle, mild friendliness. The virtually synonymous epieikēs, and the noun epieikeia are derived either from eikos, becoming, decent, or from eikō, to yield, give way, and mean (from Homer on) the proper way of life, or (from Thuc. on) forbearance, indulgence, mildness.

Words from the praÿs group are used of things (e.g. mild words, soothing medicine, actions and feelings), animals (tame) and people (benevolent). It is a quality shown by friends, while stern harshness may be expected from an enemy.

epieikēs, together with its derivatives, was originally an expression for the balanced, intelligent, decent outlook in contrast to licentiousness. Then it was used for a considerate, thoughtful attitude in legal relationships which was prepared to mitigate the rigours of justice, with its laws and claims, in contrast to the attitude which demands that rights, including one's own, should be upheld at all costs.

Both concepts are opposed to unbridled anger, harshness, brutality and self-expression. They represent character traits of the noble-minded, the wise man who remains meek in the face of insults, the judge who is lenient in judgment, and the king who is kind in his rule. Hence they appear often in pictures of the ideal ruler and in eulogies on men in high positions.

In Gk. and Hel. philosophy both concepts express social virtues and ideals of high value. Aristot. considered that they were the happy mean between passion and lack of feeling (TDNT VI 646).

OT 1. epieikeia is found 10 times in the LXX and epieikēs, including the adv., 6 times, without any real Heb. equivalent. They are used to describe God's gracious gentleness in his rule (1 Sam. 12:22; Ps. 86:5; Wis. 12:18), and also the actions of a king (2 Macc. 9:27), of a prophet (2 Ki. 6:3), and of the pious (Wis. 2:19).

2. praÿs, found 19 times in the LXX, translates 'ānî (3 times), poor, afflicted, humble; and more generally its later variant 'ānāw, poor, humble, meek. The fact that the LXX can translate 'ānāw (21 times in the OT) and 'ānî (65 times in the OT) also by penēs and ptōchos (→ Poor) and → tapeinos shows that the Heb. terms had a much wider connotation which is not satisfied by any of the LXX renderings. The poor were those in Israel who were without landed property. They were wrongfully restricted, disinherited, and deprived of the fullness which God willed (→ Poor, art. penēs, OT 3). Hence they were often the victims of unscrupulous exploitation (Isa. 32:7; Ps. 37:14; Job 24:4). In a general sense 'ānî denotes the defenceless, those without rights, the oppressed, those who are cheated, exploited and cursed (cf. Pss. 9 and 10).

Yahweh, however, takes the part of the 'ānî (Exod. 22:21–24; Deut. 24:14 f.), as do the prophets (Isa. 3:14 f.; Amos 2:7; 8:4; Zech. 7:10) and the wisdom literature (Prov. 14:21; 22:22; 31:9, 20). Since Yahweh is the God of those without rights (Pss. 25:9; 149:4; 34:2[3]), he hears and comforts those who find no mercy among their fellow-men (Isa. 29:19; Job 36:15) and will finally reverse all that is not now in their favour (Isa. 26:6; Pss. 37:11; 147:6). Hence 'ānî and particularly 'ānāw change their meaning from those who are materially poor, and become the self-chosen religious title of those who in deep need and difficulty humbly seek help from Yahweh alone, or have found it there (e.g. Pss. 40:17[18]; 102[102:1], title; Zeph. 2:3; 3:12; Isa. 41:17; 49:13; 66:2). In the Qumran texts they are used generally of the community members (→ Poor, art. ptōchos, OT 5). Hence the word is sometimes used with the meaning meek, humble, modest (Num. 12:3; Eccl. 6:8).

In the messianic passages of the OT God's king is depicted as the helper of all who have been deprived of their rights and of all the needy (Pss. 45:4[5]; 72; Isa. 11:4; 61:1). The term 'ānî is never applied to God, but in Zech. 9:9 (cf. Num. 12:3; Sir. 45:4) it is a title of honour given to the messiah. As he rides the animal used by the socially insignificant, his way leads to the poor and those deprived of their rights. ([Ed.] Although rulers of Israel had ridden asses at an earlier period in history [Jdg. 5:10; 10:4; 12:14; 2 Sam. 16:2] the horse was the appropriate mount for the mighty [but note the scorn of the war-horse in v. 10; cf. Isa. 2:7; 31:1]. The ass was the appropriate mount for one who comes on a mission of peace [cf. J. G. Baldwin, Haggai, Zechariah, Malachi, 1972, 165 f.].)

The sense of 'ānî is transformed in a number of passages, including Zech. 9:9, which the LXX renders by praÿs and thus substitutes for the more passive Heb.

concept a Hel. act. and ethical meaning. A positive lack is transformed into the praiseworthy virtue of "gentleness" or "humility". This is the dominant concept in Sir. 1:27; 4:8; 10:28 etc., and Josephus Ant. 19, 7, 3; 3, 6, 7; 5, 2, 12; 6, 1, 2; 7, 6, 1. ([Tr.] However, since the 2nd and 3rd of the Sir. passages are found in the Heb. original with this meaning, it shows that the Hel. concept had influenced Palestinian Heb. by the early 2nd cent. B.C.)

NT The words are found in the NT in Paul, Jas., 1 Pet., Acts (once epieikeia) and Matt. (3 times praÿs). Clear OT influence is found only in Matt. For the rest, Hel. concepts are dominant. How far NT thought is based on the LXX and its OT background is not clear. Attention may be drawn to two points.

1. Both praÿtēs and epieikeia are marks of Christ's rule. In contrast to the representatives of a political messianism Jesus repudiated the use of force to bring about the rule of God. His activity on earth is that of the OT king who brings salvation without using force or war (Matt. 11:29; 21:5 = Zech. 9:9). Since, however, Matt. 11:29 has Sem. thinking behind it (cf. Isa. 42:2 f.; 53:1 ff.; Zech. 9:9; cf. TDNT V 993, n. 289), praÿs here suggests 'ānî, in the Heb. sense, and so stresses the human humility of the messiah. Luther saw him as a "Beggar-king" who had no means of enforcing his rights and who ultimately had to suffer all manner of injustice. In 2 Cor. 10:1 Paul mentions praÿtēs and epieikeia as characteristics of Jesus' attitude to men during his life on earth, and holds them out as an example to the church.

2. The words now express an attitude demanded of the Christian, though they are applied also to non-Christians (Acts 24:4, where epieikeia is used by the Jewish spokesman Tertullus in addressing the procurator Felix; 1 Pet. 2:18, of masters of slaves). They stand in the lists of virtues as concrete expressions of Christian love (Gal. 5:23; 1 Tim. 6:11; 1 Pet. 3:4) and of "the wisdom from above" (Jas. 3:17). They state the rule for the way in which Christians and non-Christians should live together (Phil. 4:5; Tit. 3:2). They also apply in dealing with Christians who have committed sins (1 Cor. 4:21; Gal. 6:1; 2 Tim. 2:25), and in the midst of enmity and persecution (1 Pet. 3:16). Christians should set an example of this (Jas. 3:13), especially → bishops (1 Tim. 3:3).

([Ed.] praÿs occurs in the third Beatitude: "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth" (Matt. 5:5). David Hill suggests that they are the same as the poor (v. 3) and that since the vb. klēronomeō appears in Deut. 4:1, 16:20, and Ps. 68:36 (LXX) with reference to possessing the land of Israel, the thought here is of possessing or inheriting the new promised land (The Gospel of Matthew, 1972, 111). Just as obedience and righteousness are, for the Deuteronomist, the conditions of entrance into the promised land, so humble obedience to the teaching contained in the Beatitudes is the condition of entering the new land of God's kingdom. The verse takes up the theme of Ps. 37:11. Hill notes that the Ps., the themes of which are close to the whole series of the Beatitudes, was taken by the Qumran sect as a prophecy in process of fulfilment through the establishment of their messianic community (4QpPs37; cf. op. cit., 112). The Beatitude promises that those who are now oppressed and despised and have nothing to call their own (like Israel prior to the conquest of Canaan) will enter the → inheritance of God's rule upon earth. At the same time it is a veiled statement about Jesus himself.)

When the NT advocates praÿtēs, it does not imply an attitude dependent solely on the human will. It is a sign of salvation: of "calling" (Eph. 4:2), election (Col. 3:12), and the work of the Holy Spirit (Gal. 5:23). It is not a virtue in the Hel. sense, but a possibility of life and action given by God. It is not an aspect of human temperament. It comes about when men are linked with Christ and are conformed to his → image. W. Bauder

ταπεινός

ταπεινός (tapeinos), lowly, humble; ταπεινόω (tapeinoō), make low, humble; ταπείνωσις (tapeinōsis), abasement, humiliation; ταπεινόφρων (tapeinophrōn), humble-minded; ταπεινοφροσύνη (tapeinophrosynē), lowliness of mind, humility.

CL tapeinos was originally used (from Pindar in the 5th cent. B.C. on) with the sense of low-lying. Metaphorical uses were soon developed: (a) low socially, poor, of little social position and influence (Hdt., 5th cent. B.C. onwards), powerless, unimportant; (b) as a result of one's social standing, with slavish outlook, a synonym of not free; (c) despondent, downcast (Thuc., 5th cent. B.C. onwards; cf. Eng. "I'm feeling down"); (d) in Socratic and post-Socratic ethical teaching the word was separated from its social links, but retained a depreciatory connotation. Men should avoid the two extremes of arrogance, provocation and pride (hybris), and of grovelling, servile behaviour and base flattery. (e) Occasionally the word is used with a good connotation in individual, social, ethical and religious contexts. Where this is so, it does not mean humble, but unassuming (in Xen.), obedient, conforming one's behaviour to the righteous laws of the gods (Aesch., Plato). In all these uses there remains the memory of the original physical meaning of below, low, in comparison with that which is above or higher.

The vb. tapeinoō (from Hippocrates, 5th cent. B.C. onwards) represents in all its varieties of meaning the various shades of meaning of the adj.: to level, humble (socially, politically, economically), harm, make small, make humble, discourage (with fate or life as subject), make one obedient, or self-effacing, make a person obey a regulation (of the reason) (and also the appropriate pass. forms). The reflex. form with heauton and the mid. (from Diod.Sic., 1st cent. B.C. onwards used also for mental states) meaning humble oneself, demean oneself, are used normally only in a derogatory sense. Yet Philodemus of Gadara (1st cent. B.C.) demands that those who humbled themselves, should be comforted and lifted up (TDNT VIII 4) and Plut. (1st cent. A.D.) mentions the custom of humbling oneself before the gods by covering the head during sacrifice and prayer (TDNT VIII 5).

tapeinotēs (Thuc., 5th cent. B.C. onwards) is found only in secular contexts apart from Sir. 13:20. It generally conveys the experience of humiliation, lowliness, and powerlessness, while tapeinōsis (from Plato, 5th–4th cents. B.C. onwards) suggests rather the process of humiliation, etc.

The compounds with phronein, think, judge, be disposed, are the vb. tapeinophronein, the adj. tapeinophrōn, and the noun tapeinophrosynē. They first occur in secular literature in the 1st and 2nd cents. A.D. (Josephus, Plutarch, Epictetus), always with a depreciatory connotation: e.g. to think poorly, ill; to be ill-disposed, faint-hearted, or weakly; to have a servile mind. The LXX, however, which does not use the noun, has the vb. (which means be humble, modest) once in Ps. 131(130):2 for the MT quieten the mind, and the adj. once in Prov. 29:23, meaning lowly in spirit in a good sense. The opposite in both passages and in Sir. 13:20 (see above) is → pride, insolence and arrogance.

OT The fundamental difference between the Gk. and the biblical use of these words has already been indicated. In the Gk. world, with its anthropocentric view of man, lowliness is looked on as shameful, to be avoided and overcome by act and thought. In the NT, with its theocentric view of man, the words are used to describe those events that bring a man into a right relationship with God and his fellow-man (cf. TDNT VIII 11 f.).

1. tapeinos and its cognates are found about 270 times in the LXX, the adj. 66 times, the vb. c. 160 times, and tapeinōsis 40 times. For the compounds see above. They represent 7 Heb. roots: by far the most common is 'ānâh (86 times), to oppress, afflict, humble (→ praÿs); šāpal (42 times), to become low, be abased; kāna' (15 times), be subdued, humbled; dāḵā', dāḵâh (13 times), crush, humiliate; dal, dālal (7 times), low, insignificant, helpless, downcast; šāḥaḥ (6 times), bow down, crouch; yiggâh (5 times), vex, grieve. 'anāwâh (derived from 'ānâh), humility, the attitude of the mind of the one who bends down, occurs only 4 times (Prov. 15:33; 18:12; 22:4; Zeph. 2:3).

2. In its translation of these Heb. concepts the LXX uses the full range of meaning of this word-group and adds a few variants of its own; e.g. to humble a woman in a sexual sense (2 Sam. 13:12; Deut. 21:14; Ezek. 22:10 f.); to rape (Gen. 34:2, etc.); to bow one's soul, i.e. fast (e.g. Lev. 16:29; Isa. 58:3). But above all the words occur in expression of belief in what Yahweh has done. It is God himself by his acts in history who brings down the proud and arrogant, and chooses and rescues the humiliated. This recognition is expressed in a number of ways.

(a) The prophets expressed it in warnings of judgment (cf. Amos 2:6b, 7 with 2:6a, 13 ff.; 8:6 with 8:7 f.; Isa. 2:9, 11, 17; 5:15; 10:33 f.; 14:32, against the Philistines; Zeph. 2:3, Ezek. 21:26[31]) and in promises (Zeph. 3:12; Ezek. 17:24; Isa. 49:13; 53:8 ["In his humiliation his judgment was taken away", LXX]; Isa. 54:11; 66:2b; 26:6).

(b) The historical books see it in events. This is shown in their general theological attitudes and in their corresponding choice of language (Jdg. 4:23; 6:15 ff., choice of Gideon; 1 Sam. 1:11, 16, Hannah's prayer, and 2:7 ff., her song of praise; 7:13; 18:23 ff.; 2 Sam. 22:28, in David's thanksgiving for victory; 1 Chr. 17:10, in the promise given to David, 1 Ki. 8:35 par. 2 Chr. 6:26; cf. Ps. 18:27 ([MT 28; LXX 17:28]). These speeches, prayers and songs have a common characteristic theme.

(c) The Pss. and Lam. repeat it in their certainty expressed in their prayers (e.g. Pss. 10:17 f. [LXX 9:38 f.]; 25:18 [LXX 24:18]; 31:7 [MT 31:8; LXX 30:8]; 34:18 [MT 34:19; LXX 33:19]; 38:8, 22 [MT 38:9, 23; LXX 37:9, 23]; 44:19, 25 f. [MT 44:20, 26 f.; LXX 43:20, 26 f.]; 51:17 [MT 51:19]; 74:21 [LXX 73:21]). There is the frequent parallelism with → poor. In Ps. 82 [LXX 81] the relationship of v. 3 with vv. 5ff. shows that the gods are incapable of giving justice to the lowly, and so God himself must judge (v. 8). Other examples are Pss. 90:3 [LXX 89:3], where dakkā', meaning crushed matter, dust, is translated by tapeinōsis; 102:15–20 [MT 102:16–21; LXX 101:16–21], especially v. 17; 113:5–9 [LXX 112:5–9], a song of praise; 116:10 [LXX 115:1], cf. with v. 1 [LXX 114:1 f.], a hymn of thanks; 119 [LXX 118]; 50, 67, 71, 75, 92, the law of God comforts in lowliness; 107 [LXX 106]; 131:2 [LXX 130:2], 136:23 [LXX 135:23], a hymn of thanks; 138:6 [LXX 137:6], cf. 113:5–9; 142:6 [MT 142:7; LXX 141:7]; Lam. 1:5b, 8b, 12c, 20; 2:5c, 18, 20; 3:32–34 (cf. with vv. 31, 37 f.); Isa. 25:1–5.

(d) Proverbs in the wisdom literature speak of humility as the fruit of experience and as a rule for life: e.g. cf. Job 5:11 with 8:12, 21 (LXX and Vulg. only, not MT); Prov. 3:34 (the LXX is more explicit than the MT); 11:2, cf. v. 1; 15:33 (MT "humility"), par. to "the fear of the Lord" (the LXX has tapeinos only in some MSS, but cf. 16:2 where it is lacking in the MT); in 16:19 tapeinōsis is par. to praÿthymos, gentleness; 18:22; 2:4, the LXX translates humility [MT] by wisdom; cf. also 25:7; 29:23; Eccles. 10:6; Sir. 7:11; 10:15 ff.; 11:12 f.

3. The members of the Qumran sect called themselves the → poor, and in the Community Rule virtuous humility is mentioned along with loving kindness (the opposites of anger and grumbling), truth, right thinking, faithfulness, unity and patience as the great virtue of the community (1QS 2:24; 4:3; 5:3, 25). But this attitude stands alongside a hatred for the ruling sons of darkness (1QS 9:22; 11:1). Humility is the proper attitude before God: "his iniquity shall be expiated by the spirit of uprightness and humility" (1QS 3:8) and man's humility submits to God's chastisement (1QH 17:22); "his flesh . . . is made clean by the humble submission of his soul to all the precepts of God" (1QS 3:8).

4. Apocalyptic literature sees in humility the eschatological attitude to which the promise of the reward and the help of God are addressed (Test.Gad. 5:3; 2 Esd. 8:47–54).

5. For the rabbis, humility also had a high place in the scale of virtues that men should attempt to attain (cf. SB I 191–194). A humble spirit was regarded as the characteristic sign of the Jew (cf. especially the polemic against the pride of the Gentiles, Pirke Aboth 5:21). Jesus' teaching indicates the discrepancy between this high theoretical claim and arrogant Rab. and Pharisaic practice (Matt. 23:1 ff.; Lk. 18:9–14). They were humble among themselves, but they considered ignorance of the → law as due either to sin or to God's disfavour. They equated human effort with God's grace, and so had a faulty concept of God and of themselves.

NT Members of the word-group are found 34 times in the NT: tapeinos 8 times, tapeinoō 14 times, tapeinōsis 4 times, the compound tapeinophrōn once, and the noun tapeinophrosynē 7 times (only in Acts and the epistles). Their distribution is: Matt. 4 times, Lk. 7 times, Acts twice, Rom. once, 2 Cor. 4 times, Eph. once, Phil., 4 times, Col. 3 times, Jas. 4 times, 1 Pet. 4 times. Thus no members of the word-group are found in Mk., the Johannine writings or epistles other than those mentioned above.

1. In Matt. and Lk. the words are closely linked with the proclamation of the eschatological breaking-in of the kingly rule of God. This is the new element in the frequent use of OT and Jewish texts. Lk. introduces the theme already in the introductory chs. of his Gospel. The mother of Jesus in the Magnificat praised the grandeur of God in OT phrases (1 Sam. 1:11; cf. Ps. 113:5–9), "for he has regarded the low estate of his handmaiden" (Lk. 1:48), where handmaiden, i.e. slave, interprets low estate (cf. v. 38). "He has . . . exalted those of low degree" (Lk. 1:52; cf. 1 Sam. 2:7; Job 5:11; Ps. 75:7[8]; Ezek. 21:26[MT 21:31]). The work of John the Baptist (Lk. 3:1 ff.) is then presented as preparing for the coming of God, and in accordance with the prophecy of Isa. 40:3 ff.: "every mountain and hill shall be brought low" (Lk. 3:5).

He who thus came went the way of humility (Matt. 11:29, see below). He could, therefore, (a) in his warning against desire for status (Lk. 14:11; cf. Mk. 10:15; Matt. 18:4; 1 Pet. 5:5; Prov. 3:34; 25:7), (b) in his controversy with the Pharisees (Lk. 18:14), and (c) in his attack on them and the scribes (Matt. 23:12), promise that he who humbles himself (tapeinoun heauton) will be exalted at the last by God. (The passive is used to avoid the mention of God's name.) At the same time he threatened the proud with the last judgment, each time using the same proverb (cf. 1 Sam. 2:7; 2 Sam. 22:28; Ezek. 21:26[31]; Sir. 7:11) but giving it in the eschatological situation a quite new meaning (A. Dihle, RAC III 748).

The foundation of this promise, admonition and warning is found in Jesus' own way of life, as he interpreted it in his invitation in Matt. 11:28 ff. He is "meek" (prayÿs) and "lowly in heart" (tapeinos tē kardia). The two thoughts stand in parallel and show that Jesus was submissive before God, completely dependent on him, and devoted to him, and at the same time humble before men whose servant and helper he had become (Lk. 22:27; Mk. 10:45; Matt. 20:28; cf. W. Grundmann, TDNT VIII 20). That is why he can call those who labour and are heavy laden to himself and offer them eschatological rest as they follow him; contrast Sir. 51:23–30 with its call to follow simply the ethical example set by the teacher of the law (cf. A. Schlatter, Der Evangelist Matthäus, 1963[6], 386 ff.). "The highest dignity of Jesus and his willingness to accept the cross . . . are one" (J. Schniewind, Das Evangelium nach Matthäus, NTD 8, 1960[9], ad loc.). See also Phil. 2:6 ff. below.

Matt. 18:1–5 with its teaching on humility shows that Jesus' call to discipleship should not be confused with ethical attainment. The demand to humble oneself like the child placed among the disciples does not mean that one should make oneself lower than one actually is. Rather, one should know, like the child, how lowly one really is. Humility is to know how lowly we really are before God. At the same time the use of the word "child" is a reminder of the → Father in → heaven. This kind of humility and lowliness are joy and bliss (J. Schniewind, ad loc.; cf. J. Jeremias, The Parables of Jesus, 1963[2], 190 f.), for they permit one to share in the royal rule of heaven.

2. (a) The central position of the Saviour's invitation in Matt. corresponds to that of the hymn to Christ in Phil. 2:6–11 in Paul's letters. In the description of Jesus Christ's work from his self-emptying (v. 7 → Empty, art. kenos), through his self-humbling (v. 8c gives Paul's decisive addition to the hymn he had taken over), to his exaltation by God, all the main lines of the OT proclamation of God's sovereign control of history come into focus as they find their fulfilment. Here God stands by his word. At the same time the self-humiliation of Jesus Christ inaugurates the new life under his rule (vv. 10 f.). It is the basis of tapeinophrosynē, humility (v. 3), willingness to serve, conforming to his example; cf. also v. 5, "have this mind among yourselves . . . ." The meaning of self-humiliation is doubly defined in Jesus Christ. On the one hand, he became obedient unto death, even the uttermost shame of the cross. On the other hand, he had no other support than the incredible promise of the faithfulness of God (cf. Pss. 22; 25:18; 31:17 [MT 31:8]; 90:3; 119:50, 92, 150; and especially Isa. 53:7–12, cf. H. W. Wolff, Jesaja 53 im Urchristentum, 1952³, 98 f.).

(b) Acts 8:35 expounds Isa. 53:7 f., quoted from the LXX, as referring to the humiliation and exaltation of Jesus Christ (cf. H. W. Wolff, op. cit., 90 ff.).

(c) Paul understood his apostolic service to be one of following the Lord, who gave him strength through his own exaltation won through self-humiliation (Phil. 4:12 f.). Hence Paul knew "how to be abased" (tapeinousthai). This probably refers to being hungry and in need, suffering want and affliction (cf. 2 Cor. 11:23–29; 12:7–10). It may also include the physical work which, his enemies insinuated, was a penance for some hidden sin, but which Paul defended on the grounds that it enabled him to proclaim the gospel without charge (2 Cor. 11:7) and build up the church by his teaching. (For use of the vb. in the sense of "confess one's guilt" cf. A. Schlatter, op. cit., 545.) Acts faithfully conveys Paul's understanding of his apostolic service in the statement, "serving the Lord with all humility and with tears and with trials" (Acts 20:19). Paul recognized God's action both in humbling him through the failures (2 Cor. 12:21) which were manifest in the continuing strife (v. 20) and immorality (v. 21c) of the Corinthians, and in comforting those who were humbled by strife and inner fears (2 Cor. 7:5 f.; cf. Isa. 49:13). In the midst of the difficulties of his service Paul was supported by the → hope that the coming Lord would transform our body of humiliation (to sōma tēs tapeinōseōs hēmōn, Phil. 3:21; "our lowly body" RSV), i.e. our mortal body and make it like his glorious body.

(d) In three passages in Paul's letters words from this group are used with their original derogatory sense, in each case ironically in a polemical context. In 2 Cor. 10:1 Paul quotes the taunt of his opponents that he was so "feeble" (tapeinos), when he was "face to face" with them (NEB), but was bold when far away. In Col. 2:18, 23 he warns against the opponents who take pleasure in self-abasement, worship of angels and asceticism, each time using tapeinophrosynē.

(e) Paul's exhortation to humility is also rooted in the effective reality of Christ. Rom. 12:16 (cf. v. 1) warns against haughtiness and recommends, "give yourselves to humble tasks" (RSV mg.) or "associate with the lowly" (RSV tx., NEB) – depending on whether tois tapeinois is taken as neut. or masc. Similarly Eph. 4:2 (cf. v.1) and Col. 3:12 (cf. v.1) enjoin willingness to serve (in each case tapeinophrosynē; RSV; "meekness"; NEB "gentleness") which unites the church and holds it together (see above OT 3, on the community Rule at Qumran). Both passages use tapeinophrosynē parallel to praÿtēs (→ praÿs NT), and the latter speaks of putting on willingness to serve like a garment (cf. below on 1 Pet. 5:5).

3. The exhortations in Jas. and 1 Pet. do not add anything new to the OT and Pauline calls to humility. Jas. 1:9 f. speaks of the socially low, the poor, in contrast to the rich. Those who belonged to them could boast of their exaltation, while the rich, paradoxically, should boast that they were subject to death (tapeinōsis, cf. v. 10c). Both statements were made in the light "of the coming transformation of the world" (M. Dibelius, Der Brief des Jakobus, KEK 15, 1956⁸, ad loc.). Jas. 4:6b, par. 1 Pet. 5:5c, is a quotation from Prov. 3:34 (LXX), which promises God's favour to the humble. Both draw the conclusion (Jas. 4:10 par. 1 Pet. 5:6): "Humble yourselves before the Lord and he will exalt you" (cf. Gen. 16:9; Sir. 2:17). Since no literary dependence between the two letters can be demonstrated, the similarity points to "a common Christian exhortation" (TDNT VIII 19; cf. M. Dibelius, op. cit., 30). 1 Pet. 5:5 contains the metaphor of putting on clothing: "Clothe yourselves, all of you, with humility [tapeinophrosynē]" (cf. Jn. 13:4).

4. Gradually the concept of "humility" in the church was reduced from an eschatological expectation and a manner of life consistent with it to a term describing an inclination to penance and fasting, and their practical expression, especially in 1 Clem. and Hermas (cf. TDNT VIII 25 f.). H.-H. Esser

→ Empty, → Grace, → Love, → Patience, → Poor, → Pride

(a). A. A. Anderson, The Book of Psalms, I–II, 1972; G. Bornkamm, "On Understanding the Christ-hymn (Philippians 2:6–11)", Early Christian Experience, 1969, 112–22; W. Grundmann, tapeinos, TDNT VIII 1–26; B. Häring, The Law of Christ, I, 1961; II, 1963; F. Hauck, penēs, TDNT VI 37–40; F. Hauck and E. Bammel, ptōchos, TDNT VI 865–82; F. Hauck and S. Schulz, praÿs, TDNT VI 645–51; D. Kidner, Psalms 1–72, 1973; and Psalms 73–150, TC, 1975; R. Leivestad, " 'The Meekness and Gentleness of Christ' II Cor. x. 1", NTS 12, 1965–66, 156–64; M. Maher, " 'Take my yoke upon you' (Matt. xi. 29)", NTS 22, 1975–76, 97–103; W. Michaelis, praÿpatheia, TDNT V 939; C. F. D. Moule, "The Manhood of Christ", in S. W. Sykes and J. P. Clayton, eds., Christ, Faith and History, 1972, 95–110; H. Preisker, epieikeia, TDNT II 588 ff.; A. Stöger, "Humility", EBT II 385–90; A. Weiser, The Psalms, 1962.

(b). A. Dihle, "Demut", RAC III 735 ff.; R. A. Gauthier, Magnanimité, l'Ideal de la Grandeur dans Philosophie païenne et dans la Théologie chrétienne, 1951; A. Gelin, Les Pauvres de Jahvé, 1953; L. Gilen, "Die Demut des Christen nach dem Neuen Testament", Zeitschrift für Askese und Mystik 13, 1938, 266 ff.; A. von Harnack, "Sanftmut, Huld und Demut in der alten Kirche", in Festschrift for J. Kaftan, 1920, 113–29; E. Kamlah, Die Form der katalogischen Paränese im Neuen Testament, WUNT 7, 1964; E. Käsemann, Die Legitimität des Apostels, 1956; E. Kutsch, 'ānāwâh (Dissertation, Mainz), 1960; H.-J. Kraus, Die Psalmen, I–II, BKAT 15, 1972[4]; E. Larsson, Christus als Vorbild, 1967; J. Leipoldt, "Vom Kinde in der alten Welt", in Reich Gottes und Wirklichkeit, Festschrift for E. Sommerlath, 1961, 343 ff.; R. Mehl, "Sanftmut", RGG[3] V 1363 f.; G. Mensching, E. Kutsch, A. Benoit, R. Mehl, "Demut", RGG[3] I 76–82; R. North, " 'Humilis corde' in luce Psalmorum", Verbum Domini 28, 1950, 153–61; S. Rehrl, Die Wortgruppe zu griechisch tapeinos und das Problem der Demut in der profan-griechischen Literatur im Vergleich zu Septuaginta and Neuen Testament, 1961; and Das Problem der Demut in der profanischen Literatur im Vergleich zu LXX und Neuen Testament, 1961; H. Rosman, "In omni humilitate", Verbum Domini 21, 1941, 272–80; O. Schaffner, Christliche Demut, 1959; A. Schlatter, Jesu Dienst, 1904; F. Sinner, Die christliche Demut, 1925; G. Strecker, Der Weg der Gerechtigkeit, FRLANT 82, 1962, 173 f.; K. Thieme, Die christliche Demut, 1906; W. C. van Unnik, "Zur Bedeutung von tapeinoun tēn psychēn bei den apostolischen Vätern", ZNW 44, 1952–53, 250 ff.; S. Wibbing, Die Tugend- und Lasterkataloge im Neuen Testament, BZNW 25, 1959; and "Demut", EKL I 862 ff.; H. W. Wolff, Jesaja 53 im Urchristentum, 1952[3].

Hunger, Thirst, Food, Taste, Eat, Drink

Eating and drinking are basic to human life. In the world of the ancient east, which suffered frequently from famines and droughts, they assume a particular importance. Five different groups of words are examined here. Man's need of sustenance is denoted by the vbs. peinaō, to hunger (cf. limos, hunger), and dipsaō, to thirst. Satisfaction of hunger is denoted by esthiō, to eat, and in a specialized sense by geuomai, to taste, enjoy. The thing eaten is brōma, food. pinō, with its numerous derivatives, denotes drinking. As time went on all these words acquired metaphorical significance and were used to express spiritual nourishment or the lack of it.

πεινάω

πεινάω (peinaō), hunger; διψάω (dipsaō), to thirst; δίψος (dipsos), thirst; λιμός (limos), hunger, famine.

CL 1. peinaō means to hunger; dipsaō, to thirst; the corresponding nouns are limos, famine and its effect, hunger, and dipsos, thirst. The range of meaning of these words is not limited to physical want, but extends to the intellectual and spiritual life (from Plato and Xenophon). They express a passionate longing for something without which one cannot live, e.g. freedom, honour, fame, wealth, praise, enlightenment. This desire is often emphasized by bracketing hunger and thirst together.

2. The ancients attributed famine to the wrath of the gods. Vegetation gods and cults were therefore supposed to guarantee the provision of food (cf. the Canaanite Baals). In the later mystery religions these old fertility gods satisfied men's hunger for enduring eternal → life.

It was the task of rulers (e.g. the pharaohs of Egypt) to protect their subjects against hunger. But every case of hunger and thirst presented an obligation to help whoever was in need.

3. Gk. philosophers generally attempted to educate their adherents to free themselves from enslavement to the needs of the body. Thus the Stoics sought to make themselves independent of all the vicissitudes of life by the practice of asceticism, and the gnostics to free themselves from a sensual attachment to the world through the denial of the body (which belongs to material world, alienated from God), in order to attain to the realm of the spirit.

OT 1. In the LXX peinaō mostly translated the Heb. rā'ēḇ, to be hungry, but also 'āyēp̄, to be weary, faint or exhausted, and yā'ēp̄, to be weary or faint. limos stands consistently for rā'āḇ, hunger; dipsaō and dipsos mostly for formations from the root ṣāmē' thirst(y), but also for ṣiyyâh, to be dry, and 'ayēp̄, weary, faint. While peinaō and dipsaō or dipsos each occurs about 50 times in the LXX, limos is attested over 100 times. limos denotes acute lack of food, famine; peinaō stresses long drawn-out hungering.

2. Hunger and thirst are reckoned as the worst forms of lack, and of the two thirst is even more distressing than hunger in the sun-drenched east. Among the causes is failure of the rains with consequent failure of the harvest (1 Ki. 17:1), so that one can even speak of the thirst of the land. Hunger and thirst are also connected with war, wanderings in the desert (Ps. 107:5), idleness (Prov. 19:15), and particularly godlessness (Ps. 34:10; Isa. 65:13; Sir. 40:9). God sends hunger and thirst as a → judgment and as a salutary means of → humbling the godless attitudes of men (Deut. 32:24; 2 Sam. 24:13; Ezek. 5:15 f.; as a punishment in → hell they are not mentioned before 2 Esd. 8:59). In times of famine Israel sought help in more fertile → Egypt (Gen. 12:10; 41:53 ff.; 42:1 ff.). But it was in times of need (e.g. during the wandering in the wilderness, and in the land of Canaan) that Israel learned that God was her real Saviour from need (Exod. 16:3 ff.; 17:3 ff.; cf. 1 Ki. 8:37 ff.). Yahweh takes up the cause of the hungry who belong to the dispossessed → poor (1 Sam. 2:5). While judgment is pronounced on those who are filled, there is the promise of salvation for the hungry (Ps. 107:36 ff.; 146:7; Isa. 65:13). God demands from the devout a corresponding attitude to the poor (Isa.

58:7, 10; Ezek. 18:7, 16), among whom even their enemies must not be overlooked (Prov. 25:21).

3. This word group is occasionally used metaphorically of thirst for God (Ps. 42:2; 63:1; 143:6) and of striving after wisdom (Sir. 51:24). Amos 8:11–13 speaks of a hungering after the word of God alongside an actual famine: God can in the end withhold everything as a punishment. Several passages directed to the Jewish people during the Babylonian exile have particular significance. Though at present discouraged (Isa. 40:27–31) and poor (41:17 f.; 49:9 f.; 55:1), they will be allowed by God to return home. He will transform the arduous route through the desert into an oasis journey (Isa. 41:19; 43:20; 48:21, as at the exodus), and their wasted homeland itself into a "garden of salvation" (Ezek. 34:29; cf. Isa. 35:1, 6 f.). This material well-being includes the idea of spiritual salvation (Isa. 44:3; Jer. 31:12).

4. (a) In Philo Gk. and Jewish elements are mingled together. On the one hand, he encourages moderation and the discipline of the body in order to concentrate on the more important matter of satisfying the soul (Spec.Leg. 2, 201). On the other hand, he calls hunger the "most insupportable of all evils" (Spec.Leg. 2, 201; cf. TDNT VI 14).

(b) In Rab. Judaism hunger and thirst no longer come within the sphere of God's promises, but merely serve as inducements to better keeping of the law (e.g. Pss. Sol. 5:1–12; 10:1–6; 13:7–10). The Rabbis still only understood times of need as punishing or at best purifying, misfortunes which one attempted to counter by good works (cf. SB II 643 f.; IV 536–558).

NT Of the terms discussed peinaō occurs most frequently in the NT (about 25 times), chiefly in the synoptics and especially in Matt. Of the 16 occurrences of dipsaō in the NT, 9 are in the Johannine writings (Jn. and Rev.). limos is used by a variety of authors, but only 12 times in all.

OT and NT take man's physical need very seriously. But it is not only the stomach (→ Belly) but the whole man that needs to be satisfied. External well-being and inner salvation are most closely related. This explains the fact that many NT statements about hunger and thirst show a peculiar ambiguity, making it scarcely possible to distinguish the literal from the metaphorical.

1. The NT also speaks of famines (Lk. 4:25; Acts 7:11). They are among the terrors of the end time (Matt. 24:7 par. Mk. 13:8, Lk. 21:10; Rev. 6:8; 18:8; cf. Syr.Bar. 27:6), and the occasion of special measures of assistance (Acts 11:28). Hunger can move a man to → conversion, where questions about food raise questions about faith (Lk. 15:14, 17).

2. (a) Lk., in particular, depicts Jesus as the advocate of the poor and hungry (Lk. 1:53 = Ps. 107:9; Lk. 6:21), understanding hunger in the broadest sense. Believers should not fear hunger, as if there were no God to help them. The present order of things is questionable. In the future order God will act on behalf of the needy. Therefore, Jesus calls them → blessed already in view of the coming day of God, when he will bestow the → gifts of the time of salvation. For those who can expect nothing from this world, and direct all their hope towards God, there will be no more hunger (Lk. 6:21). There is no promise, however, for those who are satisfied in this world. On the contrary, they are threatened with the prospect of mourning and weeping (Lk. 6:25). Thus the Lucan Beatitudes and Woes (Lk. 6:21, 25) contrast the present hunger and deprivation of the poor, for whom is the promise of divine help and future salvation, with the future hunger of those who are at present satisfied and rich, for whom there will be condemnation without promise (cf. Lk. 16:19–31, the rich man and poor Lazarus; on this see J. D. M. Derrett, "Dives and Lazarus and the Preceding Sayings", Law in the New Testament, 1970, 78–99).

(b) The Beatitude of Matt. 5:6 understands hunger as "hunger and thirst for righteousness." In contrast to the self-righteousness of Jewish legalism "hunger for righteousness" means the felt need and consequent longing for divine righteousness (cf. Matt. 6:10, third petition of the Lord's Prayer, "Thy will be done . . ."). According to Matt., those who hunger are the same as those who believe and long for the kingdom of God (6:33). Their promised filling begins with the coming of Jesus and continues until everything else is theirs as well.

(c) Hunger and thirst in the Johannine writings have a double meaning. Natural thirst (Jn. 4:13) and physical hunger (6:1 ff.) convey the longing for life in general. Jesus seizes upon this longing in order to show that it is only through contact with himself, the life-giver, that it is satisfied (4:14 f.; 6:35, "I am the bread of life"; alluding to Exod. 16:3 ff., 7:37). But what is promised in all the sayings about the satisfaction of hunger and thirst is only fully received in God's new world. Then all the physical and spiritual needs of earth will be ended (Rev. 7:16; 21:6; 22:17 = Isa. 49:10; 55:1; cf. Lk. 1:53; 6:21 par. Matt. 5:6).

3. The description in the gospels of Jesus himself having to suffer hunger and thirst serves to show the Son of God in his humanity. After 40 days of fasting hunger became for Jesus a temptation from the devil to use his authority as Son of God to satisfy his own need through a miracle (Matt. 4:2; Lk. 4:2; cf. Mk. 1:12 f.). Only in obedience to God's word was he able to stand firm, for "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceeds from the mouth of God" (Matt. 4:4; cf. Lk. 4:4; Deut. 8:3). He cursed the fig-tree which did not satisfy his hunger for fruit (Matt. 21:18 f. par. Mk. 11:12 ff.; → Fruit, art. sykē) and thereby demonstrated in parabolic fashion how a curse will fall upon all who do not bear the fruit of → righteousness. On the cross he thirsted though he offered himself as the living water to satisfy all thirst (Jn. 19:28; cf. Ps. 69:21; → Gall).

4. For the sake of their calling the disciples shared Jesus' poverty. Jesus defended their action of plucking ears of corn on the → sabbath (Matt. 12:1–8 par. Mk. 2:23–28, Lk. 6:1–5). Hunger and thirst were also among the deprivations that Paul had to undergo for the crucified Christ, in contrast to the enthusiasts in Corinth who fallaciously believed that they already enjoyed full possession of all the good things of the coming world (1 Cor. 4:8; 2 Cor. 11:27). When they assembled for worship, the latter pitilessly took no notice of the hungry among them (1 Cor. 11:21, 34). Hunger and thirst are not necessarily signs of God's disfavour. They may afflict, but they cannot separate from the love of God (Rom. 8:35). If Paul nevertheless was able to overcome them, he did so not on the basis of asceticism or superior knowledge, but through Christ alone (Phil. 4:12).

5. Hunger and thirst are occasions for the exercise of love. Their satisfaction is reckoned among the works of mercy which are set up as a standard at the judgment of the world (Matt. 25:35, 37, 42) and which should include one's enemy (Rom. 12:20 = Prov. 25:21 f.; → Head). We have to remember also that in those who hunger and thirst Jesus Christ himself meets us incognito (Matt. 25:37, 42), "disguised in the uniform of misery" (Matthias Claudius; cf. Acts 11:28 ff.).

W. Bauder

βρῶμα

βρῶμα (brōma), food; βρῶσις (brōsis), eating, consuming, food; βρώσιμος (brōsimos), eatable; γάλα (gala), milk.

CL brōma (from Hippocrates on) and brōsis (from Homer on) both mean: (a) what is eaten, food; (b) eating (as a process); rarely, in the metaphorical sense, the food of immortality.

OT In the LXX both words translate almost exclusively the Heb. word group connected with the vb. 'ākal, to eat. They mostly mean food, and only rarely eating as a process (e.g. Jer. 15:3). eis brōsin is a frequent phrase meaning "for food" (of men: Gen. 1:29; 2:9; 3:7; 9:3; etc.; of animals: Gen. 1:30; Jer. 7:33; 19:7; etc.).

God, who has assigned food to both men and beasts (Gen. 1:29 f.; 2:16; 9:3), also looks after his people's food throughout their history (cf. Ps. 78:18, 30; Gen. 41:35 ff.). The food, which God gives, is an expression of the righteousness which he has also given (Jon. 2:23 LXX).

This group of concepts does not occur in the LXX in the metaphorical sense for spiritual or supernatural food (nevertheless Deut. 8:3 points in this direction; → Bread, art. manna).

NT brōma occurs in the NT 17 times, of which 10 are in Paul: (a) in its literal sense, food (e.g. Matt. 14:15; Mk. 7:19; Rom. 14:15, 20; 1 Cor. 8:8, 13); (b) in the metaphorical sense (e.g. Jn. 4:34; 1 Cor. 3:2; 10:3). brōsis (11 times) is used (a) for the act of eating (e.g. Rom. 14:17; 1 Cor. 8:4; 2 Cor. 9:10; Col. 2:16); (b) as the synonym of brōma both literally (Heb. 12:16) and metaphorically (Jn. 4:32; 66:27, 55); (c) exceptionally of an insect that consumes (Matt. 6:19).

1. The literal use. In the NT, as in the OT, food is seen as God's gift which should be asked for daily ("give us this day our daily bread"; → Bread, art. epiousios) and received thankfully (1 Tim. 4:4). Ascetic and ritual tendencies, which classed certain foods as taboo, are rejected by the NT as false teaching (Col. 2:16 f.; 1 Tim. 4:3 ff.; Heb. 13:9; cf. Heb. 9:10). No food is unclean as such (Mk. 7:18 f.; cf. Acts 10:14 f.), and no food therefore possesses any special significance for our relationship to God (1 God. 8:8; cf. 1 Cor. 6:13). It is not the observance of particular commands or prohibitions concerning food which decides our participation in God's salvation; the → kingdom of God is realized in righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Spirit (Rom. 14:17).

Christians can be commanded to avoid a particular food (meat offered to idols), however, if a brother by eating will be plunged into a conflict of → conscience, because his conscience is still prisoner of the idea that the use of this food is something prohibited and offensive to God (Rom. 14:15, 20; 1 Cor. 8:13). Out of love for the tempted brother for whom Christ died the Christian who is "strong" in → knowledge must be able to forego a particular food. The possibility of sinning, however, does not lie in the food offered to the idol (1 Cor. 8:4) but in the man himself (cf. 1 Cor. 10:27).

2. brōma is used figuratively in contrast to gala, milk, in 1 Cor. 3:2. True proclamation of the word is always attuned to the receptivity of the hearer. But since faith involves a process of maturing, the "babe" in the faith cannot yet "digest" the deepest truths of divine wisdom. It is too strong meat for him.

The heavenly food mentioned in 1 Cor. 10:3 is the manna which in a miraculous way kept the people of Israel alive when earthly food was lacking. This food is interpreted typologically with reference to the Lord's Supper (→ art. pinō NT 4 (a) below; → Bread, art. manna; → Lord's Supper).

Food is also referred to metaphorically in Jn. 4:32. Jesus startlingly described the work that he did in fulfilment of his → Father's commission as the food (brōsis; v.l. brōma) on which he lived. Jesus' actions, indeed his whole life, constitute a revelation which does not have its origin in himself but which he receives from his Father. His work is none other than the living out of this revelation. Jesus' description of his work (vv. 32, 34) as his food means that he has come "not only for this service, but indeed through this service" (R. Bultmann, The Gospel of John, 1971, 195).

brōsis is mentioned three more times in Jn. in connection with feeding on Christ. "Do not labour for the food which perishes, but for the food which endures to eternal life, which the Son of man will give to you; for on him has God the Father set his seal" (Jn. 6:27). "For my flesh is food indeed, and my blood is drink indeed" (Jn. 6:55). Christ himself is now the food. "Jesus gives the bread of life in that he is the bread of life" (R. Bultmann, op. cit., 227). The man Jesus becomes, as Christ, "the bread which came down from heaven" (Jn. 6:41). To eat this bread is another way of describing what it is to believe in Jesus, "for he who comes to me shall not hunger, and he who believes in me shall never thirst" (Jn. 6:35).

H. Kropatschek

γεύομαι

γεύομαι (geuomai), taste, partake of, enjoy, experience.

CL & OT geuomai (root geus, gys; cf. Lat. gustare, Ger. kosten, to taste) means to taste, and hence figuratively to partake of, enjoy, and experience. In the OT the word occurs in the figurative sense only in Ps. 34:8 ("Taste and see that the Lord is good"); Job 20:18; and Prov. 31:18. Otherwise it is always used literally (cf. Gen. 25:30; 1 Sam. 14:24 ff.; Jon. 3:7). In the OT the figurative meaning expresses the element of experience. It translates the Heb. ṭā'am, taste, perceive.

NT In the NT geuomai occurs 15 times (of which 10 are in the Gospels and Acts) and is used as in secular Gk. and in the LXX.

1. Taste is used in a literal sense in (e.g.) Matt. 27:34; Jn. 2:9; Acts 10:10; and Col. 2:21. The Colossian church was distracted by a "philosophy" (Col. 2:8) which "made use of terms which stemmed from Jewish tradition, but which had been transformed in the crucible of syncretism to be subject to the service of 'the elements of the universe.' It is this service which they are now supposed to express. Since the angelic powers are in charge of the order of the cosmos and the course of the stars, their sacred seasons and times must be observed and the regulations, codified in a list of taboos, must be followed" (E. Lohse, Colossians and Philemon, Hermeneia, 1971, 116). By setting apart areas of life as controlled by demonic powers, this group at Colossae was in effect calling in question the victory of Christ over the whole world. Col. counters this by asking: "If with Christ you died to the elemental spirits of the universe, why do you live as if you still belonged to the world? Why do you submit to regulations? 'Do not handle, Do not taste, Do not touch' (referring to things which all perish as they are used), according to human precepts and doctrines? These have indeed an appearance of wisdom in promoting rigour of devotion and self-abasement and severity to the body, but they are of no value in checking the indulgence of the flesh" (Col. 2:20–23).

The parable of the great banquet concludes with the pronouncement: "For I tell you, none of those men who were invited shall taste my banquet" (Lk. 14:24). Here Jesus himself is speaking through the master in the parable pronouncing the rejection of those who rejected the invitation to the messianic banquet on account of worldly concerns. The literal sense of "taste" symbolizes participation in the → kingdom of God.

2. The figurative sense. 1 Pet. 2:3 takes up the words of Ps. 34:8, when it says, "For you have tasted the kindness of the Lord." The readers are urged to put away malice, guile, insincerity and slander (2:1) and grow up in a way appropriate to those who have been "born anew" (1:23). "Like newborn babes, long for the pure spiritual milk, that by it you may grow up to salvation" (2:2; → Birth; → Conversion). In view of the connection of the passage with Ps. 34, E. G. Selwyn suggests that its force is best brought out if it is rendered: "if you have responded to the Psalmist's words, 'taste and see that the Lord is good', i.e. if you have taken the initial step of adherence to Christ" (The First Epistle of St. Peter, 1946, 157). The word "if [ei]" is to be understood in the sense of "seeing that" (RSV "for"; cf. 1:17; Funk §§ 371 f.). Selwyn also suggests that Ps. 34 lies behind the thought of 1 Pet. at numerous points (cf. v. 10 with 1:15 ff.; v. 5 with 1:17 and 2:4; vv. 13–17 quoted verbatim in 3:10 ff.; v. 23 with 1:18, 13; and v. 20 with the epistle passim). He conjectures its use in the church of Asia Minor as part of a catechetical document, a persecution document or a baptismal hymn.

Ps. 34:8 may also be reflected in Heb. 6:4 ff.: "For it is impossible to restore again to repentance those who have once been enlightened, who have tasted the heavenly gift, and have become partakers of the Holy Spirit, and have tasted the goodness of the word of God and the powers of the age to come, if they then commit apostasy, since they crucify the Son of God on their own account and hold him up to contempt." It is not clear whether the author is thinking specifically of the forgiveness of sins, the gift of salvation, the Holy Spirit, or Christ himself. I. H. Marshall thinks it unlikely that the Holy Spirit is meant in view of the following reference to him, and that it is most probable that salvation is in mind (Kept by the Power of God, 1969, 137). He suggests that the emphasis in tasting is not that of taking a sip, as Calvin thought. (In Heb. 2:9 Christ tasted death in the sense that he experienced its bitter taste to the full.) The amount consumed is not the point, but the fact of experiencing what is eaten. The Christians to whom this is addressed have already experienced something of the future age, the world that is to come. If in this experience believers thus receive a foretaste, the passage is an instance of the characteristic tension between the "already" and the "not yet" in the life of the Christian.

On the expression "to taste death" (already present in ancient Jewish literature, cf. SB I 751 ff. on Matt. 16:28) compare 1 Sam. 15:32; Sir. 41:1 (the bitterness of death). The promise of Mk. 9:1 and Lk. 9:27 that some would see the coming of the kingdom (or the Son of man coming in his kingdom, Matt. 16:28) without tasting death, i.e. without dying, is to be explained by the expected nearness of the event. It was an expectation which (Adolf Schlatter suggested) itself experienced "by God's ruling not only fulfilment but also expansion and modification." ([Ed.] However, the passage has also been understood to refer to the transfiguration which in fact took place shortly after, the resurrection, and also to the coming of the Son of man in judgment on Jerusalem [on Matt. 24:34 par. → Generation].)

The statement of Heb. 2:9 that Jesus "tasted death for every one" sees his death as an act of salvation. His condemnation as a sinner does not spare man from physical death, but takes away his fear of death, because through it death's power of eternal destruction was broken (cf. vv. 14 f.). Similarly, Jn. 8:52 contains the promise: "Truly, truly, I say to you, if any one keeps my word, he will never taste death."

E. Tiedtke

ἐσθίω ἐσθίω (esthiō), eat.

CL Along with drinking, eating is necessary for the maintenance of physical life (cf. Homer, Od., 2, 305; cf. Lk. 24:41). Eating is pleasant, but indulgence is a vice (cf. Xen., Mem. 2, 1, 24 ff.: "You should always be concerned about the pleasure you find in eating and drinking. . . . My friends, she said, call me Eudaimonia [prosperity, good fortune, happiness, personified as a divinity], but those who hate me . . . Kakia [badness, personified]"). Those who seek their pleasure in eating and drinking (cf. Xen., Mem. 2, 1, 9), should understand that the gods do not give what is really good and beautiful without effort and diligence (Xen., Mem. 2, 1, 28: "If you wish the earth to bear you a rich harvest, you must do the earth service"; cf. Lk. 17:7 f.). Over and above the physical, men have sought to commune with the deity through sacramental meals and foods, and so obtain a share in the divine and immortal powers of life or even in the deity itself. The early Christian writer, Ignatius of Antioch, spoke of "breaking one bread, which is the medicine of immortality and the antidote that we should not die but live for ever in Jesus Christ" (Eph. 20). For this use of food in non-Christian religions see R. Bultmann, The Gospel of John, 1971, 223 f. On the purely physical level the two extremes are gluttony (cf. Homer, Od. 21, 69) and asceticism (cf. Apuleius, Metamorphoses 11, 23).

OT All food in the OT is understood as the gift of God, whether it is the produce of man or whether it grows naturally (Deut. 14:4). This places man under obligation to God and under his direction (Gen. 3:2 f.). Thus, abstinence from or consumption of certain foods (Lev. 7:23 ff.; cf. the fruit of "the tree of the knowledge of good and evil", Gen. 2:17) are tests of man's obedience to God. Disobedience (Gen. 3:6) can bring punishment (Gen. 3:17). But in general, the satisfaction of man's need of food is traced to God (Ps. 22:26); not having enough to eat or being unable to eat (Ps. 102:4, 9 f.; cf. Acts 9:9) is seen as a sign of God's anger and punishment (cf. Hos. 4:10). The righteous and the devout do not need to worry about their food (Ps. 127:2; Isa. 3:10; cf. Matt. 6:25), for their relationship with God is in order (Eccl. 9:7). After the meal God should be praised (Deut. 8:10), and not forgotten (Deut. 6:11 f.). Since eating is not something the man should do in isolation but is an expression of relationship with God, one must share one's bread with the hungry (Isa. 58:7; cf. Lk. 16:19 f.). One can eat and drink to God's glory (Exod. 24:11; cf. 1 Cor. 10:31) and make ritual sacrifices of food to him (Lev. 2:3, 6, 9 ff.). In later apocalyptic thought one can eat and drink with God and so be in fellowship with him (cf. Joseph and Aseneth 8:5; 15:4). At the consummation of time those who have been hungry will eat their fill, and manna in abundance will once again fall from above (Syr.Bar. 29:6 ff.). On vegetarian asceticism see Test.Jud. 15:4, where Judah is said not to have tasted wine or meat even in his old age (cf. Rom. 14:21). Isa. 22:13 describes the irresponsible behaviour of those who care for nothing but eating and drinking (cf. Matt. 24:38; Lk. 12:19; 1 Cor. 15:32; Livy 26, 13; Hdt. 2, 193; Diod.Sic. 2, 23; The Gilgamesh Epic, ANET, 90; the Egyptian proverb, ANET, 415; A Song of the Harper, ANET, 467; see E. J. Young, A Commentary on Isaiah, I, 1969, 103).

NT 1. The various traditions about John the Baptist (Mk. 2:18; Matt. 11:18; Mk. 1:6) recount that he fasted and lived abstemiously. Despite Matt. 11:19, it is no longer possible to determine whether the historical Jesus in fact differed from the Baptist on this point, even though the gospels recount how Jesus cultivated table fellowship with others as well as with his disciples (Mk. 14:18). This is seen as an expression of fellowship (Lk. 13:26), and in Luke's theology as an expression of genuine eye-witness testimony (Acts 10:41). He ate with the Pharisees (Lk. 7:36) and with sinners (Mk. 2:16).

The mode of life of the primitive Christian church, however, was by no means ascetic (Mk. 2:19). A feature was the joyful common meals (Acts 2:46; cf. Lk. 15:23; but cf. also 1 Cor. 11:20 ff.). Ritual prohibitions were rejected (Gal. 2:12; Mk. 7:1 ff.). The mistaken conclusion that table fellowship with Jesus guaranteed acceptance in the kingdom of God is countered in Lk. 13:26 ff.; cf. Matt. 7:21 ff.; 25:41; Lk. 6:46. The complaint that Jesus was eating with tax collectors and sinners is met in Mk. 2:16 f. by the statement that Jesus had not come to call the righteous, but sinners (see below under pinō, 3 (a)). Table fellowship symbolizes fellowship in general. Even Luke's account of the distant parousia retains the significance of table fellowship in the kingdom of God (Lk. 14:15; 22:30). The stories of the feedings in Mk. 6:34 ff. and 8:1 ff. are part of the → miracle stories which glorify Jesus' power and greatness (par. Matt. 14:13–21, Lk. 9:10–17, Jn. 6:1–13, and Matt. 15:32–39).

2. Eating is discussed in the context of mission in so far as the missionary is entitled to support (1 Cor. 9:14; Matt. 10:10; Lk. 10:7). The command to work belongs among the exhortations to the church; for whoever will not work should not eat (2 Thess. 3:10).

3. Eating and drinking became a particular problem in Corinth. Certain groups there sought to prove their "strength" and "freedom" by deliberate participation in sacrifices to idols (1 Cor. 10:14 ff.). Paul had to point out to them that one can have communion either with God or with idols and demons, but not with both. They are mutually exclusive (1 Cor. 10:20 ff.). There was also the further question whether it was permissible to buy and eat meat that had been sacrificed to idols and was now offered for sale in the market. Paul answered this question in the affirmative (v. 25), but with the proviso that one has to take into account the "weak" (1 Cor. 8:9 ff.; 10:32; cf. Rom. 14 f.). Even the → Lord's Supper gave rise to a crisis in Corinth. For in the absence of the apostle certain irregularities, the precise nature of which are no longer clearly recognizable, endangered the common meal. W. Schmithals suggests that there was an attempt to replace by a secular meal the sacramental meal that had been handed down to them, since a meal which had the Crucified One as its content was considered shocking and, in the light of their new-found strength, nonsense (Gnosticism in Corinth, 1971). This resulted in Paul reasserting the death of the Lord in the centre of the feast (1 Cor. 11:26). G. Bornkamm suggests that the Corinthians in no sense wanted to do away with the Lord's Supper, but on the contrary saw it as so highly important that the preceding meal became a matter which one could conduct according to one's own pleasure and for one's own enjoyment (Early Christian Experience, 1969, 146 ff.). The abuses in Corinth may also be interpreted as a failure of the church to understand itself at the Lord's Supper as the → body of Christ (cf. 1 Cor. 6:15; 10:16; 11:29; 12:27), because the meal was being profaned as in the description in 1 Cor. 11:21 (cf. 1 Cor. 5:11). In practice it was threatened with replacement by a straightforward meal to satisfy hunger. The expression to idion deipnon, "his own meal", denotes a meal utterly separated from Christ – not only from the crucified Christ (cf. to idion sōma, "his own body" [1 Cor. 6:18; 7:4]). Perhaps idion, own, belonging to the individual, for oneself, belonged to the Corinthians' terminology and referred to the falsely understood strength and freedom (cf. 1 Cor. 7:7). At all events it is not, as is frequently assumed, a question of a private meal of individuals which Paul contrasted with the common celebration of the Lord's Supper, in which all the members of the church, both rich and poor, ought to take part.

4. (a) Another question is raised by Jn. The true → bread (Jn. 6:32) is Jesus himself (vv. 35, 48). Coming to him, i.e. faith in him, ensures eternal life (v. 27), whereas ordinary food has no lasting effect (vv. 49 f.). Verses 51 ff. go beyond what has been said before in that they further define eating, which previously meant faith as eating Jesus' sarx, flesh (→ the Lord's Supper).

(b) The eating of the Book of the Revelation (Rev. 10:9; cf. Ezek. 3:1 ff.) means the real appropriation of the revelation, the content of which (cf. ch. 12 ff.) is described as "sweet" (denoting victory) and "bitter" (symbolizing struggle).

(c) In Heb. 13:10 it is not clear whether the altar refers to the Lord's Supper, Jesus' cross, an unrealistic doctrine of the Lord's Supper (cf. O. Michel, Der Brief an die Hebräer, KEK 13, 1966[13]), or simply means that every non-Christian sacrificial meal is to be rejected. F. F. Bruce suggests that "altar" here means "sacrifice". It is a case of metonymy, as when we say that someone keeps a "good table", meaning thereby "good food" (The Epistle to the Hebrews, 1964, 399 f.).

G. Braumann

πίνω

πίνω (pinō), drink; ποτίζω (potizō), water, give to drink; ποτήριον (potērion), cup; πόμα (poma), a drink; πόσις (posis), drinking, a drink; πότος (potos), drinking, i.e. revelry.

CL 1. pinō (Homer onwards) means to drink; the compound katapinō (Hesiod, Hdt. on) strengthens the meaning of the simple vb.: to drink up, swallow (e.g. of the earth soaking up water, Plato, Crit. 111 D). The related vb. potizō (Hippocrates on) has the trans. meaning: to enable someone to drink; to allow to drink, to give to drink, to water (of animals). The noun hē posis (Homer on) denotes (a) the act of drinking (Hdt. 1, 172); (b) what is drunk, the drink (Jn. 6:55). to poma (Pindar) and to poton (Homer on, not in the NT) have the same meaning, drink, while ho potos (Xenophon) means drinking together, revelry (in the NT only 1 Pet. 4:3). potērion (Alcaeus, Sappho on), finally, is the drinking vessel, the cup or goblet, and plays an important role in the NT texts on the Lord's Supper.

2. Drinking satisfies thirst and refreshes (Nestor to Machaon after they have survived a battle: "Now drink . . ." [Homer, Il. 14, 5]). In popular opinion it was considered a pleasure (but he asked him whether he knew the good in order to show him, should he say something about these, that is food and drink, that they can sometimes be evil [Xen., Mem. 3, 8, 2]). It can become a passion (Ought one not first to investigate who controls gluttony and the desire for drink? [Xen., Mem. 3, 6, 1]). In philosophical discussions a similar view of life runs up against criticism (Will not those who have given themselves up to gluttony and the desire for drink probably enter the species of the ass and similar beasts? [Plato, Phd. 81, 2]). But the Greeks were not only familiar with drinking as a means of satisfying a physical thirst or providing a physical pleasure. Over and above this, it had a special place in the mystery religions especially in sacral meals (cf. TDNT VI 137 f.). Drinking, above all of water, supplies real, supernatural powers and life-giving knowledge (Eth.Enoch. 22:9; Od.Sol. 6:18: for all recognized one another in the Lord and were redeemed through the eternal immortal water; Corp.Herm. 1, 29: and they were fed from the immortal water). kai doiē soi ho Osiris to psychron hydōr, "and may Osiris give you the cold water" is a wish often repeated on funerary inscriptions (see E. Rohde, Psyche, [1907] II, 391; cf. also R. Bultmann, The Gospel of John, 1971, 178–87, 302–6; Arndt, 664).

OT In the vast majority of cases (215 times) the LXX translates the qal of šāṭâh, to drink, by pinō, while potizō renders the hiph. of šāqâh, to give to drink, water.

1. In view of frequently occurring shortages of → water, thirst (Exod. 17:1 ff. → art. peinaō) and drinking (1 Ki. 17:3 f.) are of particular significance in the OT world. The Lord proclaimed his sovereignty and mystery in asking Job: "Who has cleft a channel for the torrents of rain, and a way for the thunderbolt, to bring rain on a land where no man is, on the desert in which there is no man; to satisfy the waste and desolate land, and to make the ground put forth grass?" (Job 38:25 ff.). Rain transforms eastern lands into a "watered garden" (cf. Isa. 55:10), while the lack of it causes almost all vegetation to wither and results in catastrophic famines (1 Ki. 18:2 ff.). Closely connected with the shortage of water is the presence of bad and undrinkable water (Exod. 15:23).

2. The ability to satisfy thirst is attributed to God. "Thou visitest the earth and waterest it, thou greatly enrichest it; the river of God is full of water; thou providest their grain, for so thou has prepared it" (Ps. 65:9). Drink was not understood as a → gift of creation put at man's disposal once and for all at the creation, but as a gift which is continually received anew from God and is the cause of thanksgiving (Exod. 15:22 ff.; Jdg. 15:18). Correspondingly, thirst which cannot be quenched was understood as God's anger and punishment (Isa. 5:13). When the quenching of thirst is taken for granted, God has been forgotten (Jer. 2:6). In responsibility to him Israel had to handle water carefully (Ezek. 34:18 ff.), and not only because it was felt to be a particular blessing of the cultivated land.

3. Used figuratively, drinking can stand for the way God's gifts and judgments come to men. According to whether it is the cup of his wrath (cf. Jer. 25:15 ff.; Isa. 51:17; Ps. 60:3; 75:8) or his gracious gift (Ps. 116:13; cf. also Isa. 55:1), the drink leads to destruction or to salvation. Equally figuratively, Amos 8:11 speaks of thirst for the word of God which can be quenched only if God wills.

NT The NT speaks of drinking and eating in a variety of connections. Five groups of ideas can be distinguished: 1. practical piety; 2. the attitude of John the Baptist and Jesus; 3. table fellowship; 4. the Lord's Supper; 5. the Johannine water of life.

1. (a) Like eating, drinking is referred to literally. The interesting thing about the use of the word to drink is the way the relationship between a man and his neighbour and a man and God is presented. Eating and drinking, like dress, are relativized (Matt. 6:25 ff., 31 par. Lk. 12:29); life itself is more important. God can be relied on to take care of these matters. Seeking the kingdom of God and his righteousness (Matt. 6:33; cf. Lk. 12:31) should hold a man's interest, and then these questions of daily living, to which eating and drinking belong, settle themselves. There is no eschatological element here, and the argument remains on the level of popular wisdom (cf. SB I 436). One can rest all one's cares on God.

(b) Observance of the distinction between clean and unclean foods belongs to the old → covenant (Acts 10:14; → Animal; → Bird). Peter's vision in which this distinction was abolished symbolizes the abolition of Jewish exclusiveness and the inclusion of the Gentiles in the → people of God.

(c) The materialistic attitude is rejected which looks no further than this life (1 Cor. 15:32; cf. Lk. 12:19; → esthiō OT). Those who are given to eating and drinking and fail to recognize this situation and responsibility towards God (Matt. 24:48 ff.; Lk. 12:19), will nevertheless be called to account (Matt. 24:38 ff.; cf. Lk. 17:27 ff.).

2. (a) This underlines the fact that eating and drinking are not to be seen as ends in themselves, or as pleasures for the self-indulgent, but in the light of responsibility to God and men. Paul saw the problem in terms of the church. Although the Christian has complete freedom to eat and drink what he likes (1 Cor. 9:4), he is bound to take account of his neighbour (Rom. 14:21). The question is seen christologically in Matt.: in the poor to whom a drink is given (potizō) Christ himself is encountered (Matt. 25:37, 42). Lk. 10:7 gives a practical directive for mission.

(b) The problem is understood eschatologically by John the Baptist. The seriousness of imminent events cast its shadow over the present age (Mk. 1:5 f.). Therefore John neither ate nor drank (Matt. 11:18 f. par. Lk. 7:34; on John see C. H. H. Scobie, John the Baptist, 1964).

(c) The behaviour of the "Son of man" is depicted as a direct contrast to this for he both ate and drank (ibid.). A number of stories refer to the eating and drinking of Jesus and the disciples. Jesus also ate and drank with sinners (Mk. 2:16; cf. Lk. 5:30, 33). A clear eschatological motivation is lacking ([Ed.] unless we see in Jesus' actions his reinterpretation of the messianic banquet). Perhaps Jesus, in contrast to John the Baptist, waited for the imminent events with joy rather than with pessimistic seriousness and for this reason put himself on the side of the sinners.

3. (a) Drinking takes on a deeper significance when, along with eating, it expresses the unity which exists among those who share in a meal. Thus there will be those who will call upon the fact that they have eaten and drunk with Jesus in order to claim a place at his side in eternity (Lk. 13:26). But Jesus will reply that he never knew them (v. 27; cf. Matt. 7:21 ff.; 25:41; Lk. 6:46). For the relationship was merely formal. On the other hand, the disciples are promised that they will eat and drink at Jesus' table (Lk. 22:30). This deeper meaning also lies behind Lk. 5:30: by eating with sinners the disciples, like Jesus, stand on their side. Lk. brings an important qualification by inserting the words "to repentance" (Lk. 5:32; cf. Mk. 2:16 f.). Jesus did not come "to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance."

(b) The request of the sons of Zebedee to sit at Jesus' side in eternity has an apocalyptic-eschatological character (Matt. 20:20; Mk. 10:35–37; cf. Lk. 22:24 ff.), but it is striking that Jesus' answer is in no way apocalyptic or eschatological. It points rather to his death: the cup is understood as the cup of suffering, the → baptism as the baptism of death (Matt. 20:22; Mk. 10:38). The "cup" of suffering is mentioned again in Matt. 26:39; Mk. 14:36; Lk. 22:42; cf. Jn. 18:11. Jesus requested his Father to let the cup of suffering (potērion) pass from him. In the OT the cup is a symbol of judgment and retribution (cf. Ps. 75:9; Isa. 51:17 f.; Jer. 25:15 ff.).

4. (a) Drinking is referred to figuratively in 1 Cor. 10:4 (cf. Exod. 17:6; Num. 20:11). Some think that Paul may be alluding in v. 3 f. to the → Lord's Supper as a saving event which is already anticipated pneumatically in the time of Moses (cf. the twice used word pneumatikos in v. 4 [lit. "spiritual", "pertaining to the spirit"; →Spirit]). Thus the allusion would be not figurative or parabolic but real and actual. This means therefore that there is a real identity between the ancient and the new saving events and not merely an analogy (E. Käsemann, "The Pauline View of the Lord's Supper", in Essays on New Testament Themes, 1964, 113 f.; but cf. R. Bultmann, Theology of the New Testament, I, 1952, 36). However it is not certain how this drinking from Christ is to be understood. W. Heitmüller saw in it an affinity with the mystery cults: "The food and drink are Jesus Christ" (RGG[1] I, 40). H. von Soden understood it as the drink which comes from Christ as its source, that is, the drink that Christ gives: "Christ gives the drink, not Christ is the drink" (Sakrament und Ethik bei Paulus, 1931, 264).

([Ed.] This division of opinion is reflected among English-speaking scholars. E. E. Ellis writes: "The Old Covenant like the New, had a food and drink in which Christ was [typically] present" [Paul's Use of the Old Testament, 1957, 131]. He takes pneumatikos in v. 4 to mean "in its typical or prophetic significance", and links this up with the use of typoi, v. 6 ["examples", "types"] and typikōs, v. 11 ["typologically", "as an example or warning", Arndt, 837; → Image, art. typos]. But A. T. and R. P. C. Hanson both reject the idea of typology in the sense of a similar situation prefiguring Christ in some kind of allegorical way, and say that the rock really was Christ present with his people [A. T. Hanson, Jesus Christ in the Old Testament, 1965, 21; R. P. C. Hanson, Allegory and Event, 1959, 79 f.].)

(b) The same uncertainty occurs with respect to 1 Cor. 10:16f. V. 16 is no doubt a tradition taken over by Paul (Käsemann, op. cit., 109 ff.), which explained the cup (potērion) as a sharing (not fellowship) in the body and blood of Christ. V. 17 is no doubt an expansion of the tradition by Paul. While Käsemann claims that, "In Christ one is at the same time the body of Christ" (Leib und Leib Christi, 1933, 168), H. Schlier maintains that "Paul is only saying that this body of the church belongs to Christ, is his possession" (Christus und die Kirche im Epheserbrief, 1930, 41).

(c) The same question arises in the words which interpret the Lord's Supper tradition in Paul's account (1 Cor. 11:23–26). Is the eating and drinking of bread and wine identical with sharing in the exalted Christ or only a pointer to the earthly Christ, in so far as his death is the ground of our salvation?

The synoptics connect the Lord's Supper with the Passover meal (Matt. 26:17; Mk. 14:12; Lk. 22:7, 15). This raises the critical question of the original meaning of the Lord's Supper. Is it to be understood against a Hellenistic background and therefore not as a means of realizing the presence of Jesus, instituted by Jesus himself? Or is it to be understood as an interpretation of the death of Jesus in its significance for the salvation of the church? → Lord's Supper; → Feast, art. pascha.

5. Jn. 4:10 ff. raises the question of the → water of life (v. 11). Ordinary water quenches the thirst only for the time being (v. 13). (The kingdom of God and eating and drinking are two different things [Rom. 14:17; cf. Col. 2:16].) But the water which Jesus gives bestows eternal life (v. 14). One must therefore come to Jesus (Jn. 7:37; cf. Isa. 55:1), i.e. have faith in him (on the imperative form cf. R. Bultmann, Theology of the New Testament, II, 1955, 23). While the gift here is Jesus himself (cf. also Jn. 6:51 ff.), in Jn. 7:36 it is related to the Spirit as the Spirit of Christ.

G. Braumann

→ Bread, → Fast, → Feast, → Lord's Supper, → Wine

(a). J. Behm, brōma, TDNT I 642–45; geuomai, TDNT I 675 ff.; esthiō, TDNT II 689–95; J. Behm and G. Bertram, dipsaō etc., TDNT II 226–29; A. C. Bouquet, Everyday Life in New Testament Times, 1954, 69–79; R. Bultmann, The Gospel of John, 1971; L. Goppelt, peinaō, TDNT VI 12–22; and pinō, TDNT VI 135–60; D. R. Hall, "St. Paul and Famine Relief: A Study in Galatians 2:10", ExpT 82, 1970–71, 309 ff.; E. W. Heaton, Every Day Life in Old Testament Times, 1956, 81–115; N. Hillyer, " 'Spiritual Milk . . . Spiritual House' ", TB 20, 1969, 126; J. C. Hurd, Jr., The Origin of 1 Corinthians, 1965; J. Jeremias, The Eucharistic Words of Jesus, 1966²; J. P. Lewis, "Food", ZPEB II 581–87; J. F. Ross, "Food", IDB II 304–8; and "Drink", IDB I 871 f.; H. Schlier, gala, TDNT I 645 ff.; W. Schmithals, Gnosticism in Corinth, 1971.

(b). E. Bammel and F. Schmidt-Clausing, "Fasten", *RGG*³ II 881 ff.; O. Böcher, "Ass Johannes der Täufer kein Brot (Luk. vii. 33)?", NTS 18, 1971–72, 90 ff.; W. Nauck, "Speisevorschriften", EKL III 1080 f.; E. Siglmayr and R. Rendtorff, "Speiseverbote", *RGG*³ VI 230 ff.; G. Strecker, Der Weg der Gerechtigkeit, 1962.

I

I Am

ἐγὼ εἰμί

ἐγὼ εἰμί (egō eimi), I am; ἐγώ (egō), I.

CL The egō eimi formula does not occur in classical literature, and there are scarcely any relevant parallels in later periods. But the wider context, particularly of the Near East, demands special attention, not because of any direct influence on the NT, but because of similarities of content and form. An emphatic "I"-style can be demonstrated in ancient India: I was Manu and I Sūrya, I am Kaksivat . . . I compel Kutsa, the son of Arjuna; I am Kavi Usanas, look at me! (cf. E. Schweizer, Egō eimi, 1965², 16). The Mandaean analogies are particularly interesting: I am the life, that was from of old . . . I am the glory, I am the light (Ginza 207, 34 ff.); I am the first glory (Ginza 592, 26; cf. Schweizer, op. cit., 37, and C. K. Barrett, The Gospel According to St. John, 1955, 242). However, the history of the traditions in the Mandaean texts is disputed and Christian influence cannot be excluded. Probably the "I-am" sayings belong to the older strata and not to later interpretation. In terms of content, some scholars hold that the "I-am" statements are not intended to be mere metaphors: vine, light and water are not images or figures of speech, but actual substances understood mythologically (cf. Schweizer, op. cit., 12 ff.).

OT 1. In the OT the Heb. words for "I", 'anî and 'ānōḵî, are very common. But statistics are of little consequence in the LXX, since it translates the Heb. equivalents mechanically by egō, "regardless of whether it is emphatic or unemphatic, necessary or superfluous in Greek, or used of God or men" (Schweizer, op. cit., 23). As a result, egō eimi in the LXX is not an exclusively religious formula.

2. Nevertheless, certain "I"-formulae are noteworthy. The so-called self-presentations are important in this connection, in which Yahweh makes himself known as the promised saving God of the fathers (Gen. 15:7; 17:1; 28:13; 35:11; cf. also the opening of the Decalogue, "I am the Lord your God, who . . ." [Exod. 20:2]; and egō eimi ho ōn "I am the existing One" [Exod. 3:14 LXX]). This self-presentation was necessary in the polytheistic world of the ancient orient; it sought to secure the trust of the recipient of the revelation in this one God alone. In terms of content, God is the one who acts in history. In the passages in Ezek. where God is speaking the Heb. phrase recurs: 'anî YHWH ("I [am] Yahweh"; cf. Ezek. 33:29; 36:36; 37:6, 13; 39:28). In Deut. God's action in history is demonstrated in the dialectic of judgment and salvation, and on this basis obedience and honour are due to God as the only God (Deut. 32:39 ff.). According to D. Daube, the expression 'anî hû' ("I [am] he"; cf. Deut. 32:39; Isa. 40:10, 13 etc.) "can hardly signify 'I am this or that', referring back to some previous attribute. In the Old Testament it appears in the sense of 'I am the Absolute' or the like, and this application certainly prepared the ground for the egō eimi of the Messianic Presence" (The New Testament and Rabbinic Judaism, 1956, 327). The most universal and clearest expression of this power of Yahweh over nature and history is to be found in the passages in Isa., where Yahweh declares: "I am the Lord, who made all things, who stretched out the heavens alone, who spread out the earth" (44:24); "I am the first and the last; besides me there is no god" (44:6; cf. 43:11; 45:5, 22). A similar "I"-style, when God is speaking, occurs in Jewish and Christian apocalyptic literature (Eth.Enoch 108:12; Apoc.Abr. 9:3; Jub. 24:22).

3. egō, uttered by men, occurs in the first-person speeches of the prophets (e.g. in the Servant Songs, Isa. 48:12; 49:1 ff.; cf. 50:4 ff.; 61:1) and in the wisdom literature (Prov. 8). Later the apocalyptic writers were fond of using the "I"-style, and frequently did so to convey secret revelations (cf. Dan. 7:15, 28; Sl.Enoch 39:2). The Damascus Rule from Qumran also speaks in the style of wisdom: "Hear now, my sons, and I will uncover your eyes that you may see and understand the works of God" (CD 2:14).

NT In the NT egō and egō eimi differ in significance in Jn., the synoptic tradition, Rev. and Paul.

1. The "I am" Sayings in Jn. egō eimi occurs as a fixed formula in the pronouncements in Jn. These "I am" sayings are to be distinguished from those in which Jesus uses the emphatic "I" (cf. Jn. 7:29; 9:39).

(a) The Johannine usage is typified by its formal structure: first there is the "I am" which is followed by a visual picture which can be further qualified by an adj. or a participle. The sentence structure raises the question whether the "I" is the subject or the predicate. If the "I" is the subject, we have to ask what it is that the predicate answers. R. Bultmann distinguishes the following types of "I am" pronouncements (The Gospel of John, 1971, 225 f.). (i) The presentation formula replies to the question, "Who are you?" (cf. Gen. 17:1; Aristophanes, Plutus 78: "I am in fact Plutus"). (ii) The qualificatory formula answers the question, "What are you?" (cf. Epictetus, Dissertationes 4, 8, 15 f.; Ezek. 28:2, 9). The reply to such a question is "I am such and such . . ." or "I am the sort of man who. . . ." (iii) In the identification formula the speaker identifies himself with another person, power or object. Thus the Egyptian god Rê identifies himself with Chepre: "I am he who arose as Chepre" (Altorientalische Texte, 1; cf. Jn. 11:25; 14:6). (iv) The recognition formula differs from the others in that the "I" is the predicate. It answers the question, "Who is so and so?" with the answer "I am". Bultmann submits that "In the egō-eimi statements Jn. 6:35, 41, 48, 51; 8:12; 10:7, 9, 11, 14; 15:1, 5 we clearly have recognition formulae, even if in the source they were perhaps intended as presentation or qualificatory formulae" (op. cit., 226).

(b) A further question is the meaning of the visual picture in the pronouncement. One view is that we are dealing with similes, parables, metaphors or allegories, when Jesus says, "I am the bread of life"; "I am the light of the world"; "I am the good shepherd" etc. Thus Jesus is compared with a shepherd and his followers with sheep. Another view is that Jesus is in reality the embodiment of the shepherd and his followers the sheep (cf. the Johannine alēthinos, true, genuine, real, in Jn. 1:9; 4:23, 37; 6:32; 7:28; 8:16; 15:1; 17:3; 19:35; 1 Jn. 2:8; 5:20). Some exegetes favour this interpretation on the grounds of the religious background material (see above CL), context and detailed exegesis, although parabolic and allegorical elements cannot be excluded. Thus, Jesus would not only be compared with a shepherd; he is the shepherd in the fullest sense of the term. He is not only compared with a vine. The vine cannot show who and what Jesus is; rather the true vine is Jesus and no other (Jn. 15:1). Jesus is not only like a door. He is the door; this reality, this divine truth, applies to no one but him.

(c) This interpretation suggests a polemical situation which prompts the question: Against whom are these pronouncements directed? Some scholars think that the Johannine pronouncements arose out of a situation in which various people other than Jesus were designated as the vine, the shepherd etc. These have been identified with gnostic redeemer figures (cf. R. Bultmann, op. cit., 367–70 on the shepherd, and 530 ff. on the vine which he identifies with the mythical tree of life). Thus the Johannine pronouncements would repudiate their claims and declare that the → bread of life, the → light of the world, the door → (Gate), the → shepherd etc. are Jesus alone. ([Ed.] However, the idea of a gnostic background for these pronouncements has been rejected by numerous authorities on Johannine thought. Thus, B. Lindars maintains that the categories of thought in Jn. 15 are moral and not gnostic [The Gospel of John, 1972, 487]. R. E. Brown holds that the OT and Judaism supplied the raw material for the teaching about the door, the shepherd and the vine [The Gospel According to John, I, 1966, 397 f.; II, 1971, 669–72]. See also L. Morris, The Gospel According to John, 1972, ad loc.; and R. Schnackenburg, The Gospel According to St. John, I, 1968, 543–57, Excursus VI on "The Gnostic Myth of the Redeemer and the Johannine Christology".)

(d) The sources and traditions behind the "I am" sayings are disputed, and can be further determined only by closer exegesis of the individual passages. For further discussion see C. H. Dodd, The Interpretation of the Fourth Gospel, 1953; and Historical Tradition in the Fourth Gospel, 1963; the works listed above and the numerous journal articles that they refer to.

(e) Jesus is the → bread of life, in that he is what he gives (Jn. 6:35, 41, 48, 51). This bread of life, i.e. Jesus himself, provides eternal → life (6:47). It comes from → heaven (v. 51), and access to it is through → faith (v. 47). Jesus is the → light of the world (→ Earth, art. kosmos), and in following him one has the light of life (the light is defined by means of the gen., Jn. 8:12). The bread of life is identical with the light of life. In contrast to all others Jesus is the door (→ Gate, art. thyra); for Jesus gives access to salvation (10:7, 9). The saying about the "good" → shepherd has the same meaning: this real, unique shepherd is Jesus who gives his life for the sheep (→ Lamb, Sheep) and saves them (10:11). He knows his sheep and they know him. This is not in the weakened sense of being aware of, or having a theoretical knowledge of, but in the sense of being intimately related to (vv. 8, 14). Anyone who has questions about the → resurrection should turn to Jesus. For there is no resurrection outside his person; it is personified in him (11:25). Anyone who asks where, what or who is the way, the truth and the life will not only find an explanation in Jesus' teaching; Jesus himself is that which these terms refer to (14:6). Jesus is the true, heavenly vine; between him and ourselves there exists a real union (15:1, 5).

(f) In the judgment of the present writer, the "I am" sayings are not to be regarded as parabolic pictures designed to illustrate the significance of Jesus, so that one could grasp the intended reality on the basis of the picture. It is rather the reverse. It is Jesus himself who determines the meaning of the picture.

G. Braumann

2. egō and egō eimi in the Remaining NT Writings. (a) The Synoptic Gospels. (i) The account of Jesus' walking on the water (Matt. 14:22–23; Mk. 6:45–52; cf. Jn. 6:15–21) suggests a theophany containing OT and Hel. motifs. The phrase "and he meant to pass by them" (Mk. 6:48c) is reminiscent of Yahweh's passing before Moses on Sinai (Exod. 33:18 ff.) or before Elijah on Horeb (1 Ki. 19:11 ff.). It expresses the "strange sublimity" of God's appearance (E. Lohmeyer, Das Evangelium des Markus, KEK 1/2, 1967[17], ad loc.). Meanwhile the disciples in the boat are in a state of panic-stricken fear and think that the suddenly appearing figure is a ghost (Mk. 6:49), a frequent motif in Hel. stories of the sea. Mk. impressively contrasts the disciples' opinion, "It is a ghost", with Jesus' revealing reply, "Take heart, it is I [egō eimi]; have no fear" (Mk. 6:50). Only this self-revelation of Jesus convinces them of the reality of the appearance; the unrecognized figure makes himself known as the disciples' trusted helper and master (cf. Lohmeyer, ad loc.).

(ii) Each of the six antitheses of the Sermon on the Mount (Matt. 5:21–48) distinguishes Jesus' message from what was said to the men of old by the provocative formula egō de legō hymin, "but I say to you." This formula, which has no parallel in Rab. teaching (G. Eichholz, Auslegung der Bergpredigt, BSt 46, 1965, 70), is not intended to replace OT law by a new law. Rather the "I say to you" marks Jesus as the lawful and true expositor of the Torah. In contrast to the scribes with their abbreviations and casuistic distortions, Jesus goes back to the original meaning of the Torah, to the will of God. By so doing he brings the Torah's demands to bear once more (cf. G. Strecker, Der Weg der Gerechtigkeit, 1962, 146). The egō de legō hymin is directed in the name of God against contemporary Judaism's misrepresentations of his will. To this extent Matt. understands the antitheses not as a contradiction but as the fulfilment of the original intention of the Torah (Matt. 5:17).

(iii) Similarly, the emphatic egō of Jesus in his appeal to the weary and burdened to come to him (Matt. 11:28–30) is directed against the unlawful claims of the rabbinic teachers of the law who burdened men with their innumerable prohibitions. Jesus calls those who labour under the burden of the Pharisaic law to come under his "yoke" which offers rest and refreshment. "Because Christ's law, in contrast to the rules of the Pharisees, leads to rest, it can be called chrēstos, good, useful, although according to its content it is harder; and in so far as Jesus' load already gives anapausis, rest, it can be called light, although its demands are weightier" (G. Strecker, op. cit., 174; cf. M. Maher, " 'Take my yoke upon you' (Matt. xi. 29)", NTS 22, 1975–76, 97–103; → Burden).

(iv) In the synoptic apocalypse Jesus warns against people who will arise in his name and lead many astray by the use of the words egō eimi (Matt. 24:5; Mk. 13:6; Lk. 21:8), the "technical formula for the self-revelation of Christ" (TDNT

II 353). Here the early Christian church separated itself from those who unlawfully and for dishonest ends claimed the authority of Jesus. On the other hand, at his examination before the Sanhedrin, Jesus answered the High Priest's question, "Are you the Christ?" with the words egō eimi (Mk. 14:61 f.). In the early Christian church there was clearly discussion about the identity of the messiah (cf. Jn. 1:20) and Jesus. Jesus answered the question about his messiahship in the affirmative and, according to Mk.'s account (14:64), was promptly condemned to death for blasphemy by the Jewish authorities. (See further D. R. Catchpole, The Trial of Jesus: A Study in the Gospels and Jewish Historiography from 1770 to the Present Day, 1971.)

(v) Finally, the risen Christ led his disciples to recognize his identity with the crucified Jesus through the use of the egō eimi formula (Lk. 24:39). Seeing his hands and feet and touching him was proof of the reality of the resurrection which overcame the disciples' doubts (vv. 38, 41). In the closing scene of Matt. (28:16–20) the risen Christ announced the power he had received from God ("All authority in heaven and on earth has been given to me", v. 18) and, by means of the "I-am" formula, promised his presence with the disciples until the end of the age.

(b) Revelation. In Rev. the egō of Christ's sayings and the egō of the pronouncements of God occur side by side. The reason for this lies in the almost identical positions that the writer attributes to Christ and God vis-à-vis the world, so that sometimes the same egō-sayings can appear on the lips of both Christ and God. In Rev. 1:8 God is the subject of the sentence, "I am the Alpha and the Omega, who is and who was and who is to come", while in Rev. 1:17 f. the Son of man speaks, "I am the first and the last, and the living one." Both verses are derived from Isa. 44:6. The first and the last corresponds to the Alpha and the Omega. The most complete identification of Christ and God is expressed at the end of Rev. The subject of the sentence in Rev. 21:6, "I am the Alpha and the Omega, the beginning and the end," is God; in Rev. 22:13 it is Jesus. (In the latter case the words "the first and the last" are inserted after Alpha and Omega, the first and last letters of the Gk. alphabet.)

(c) Paul. Alongside of Paul's autobiographical use of "I" (e.g. Gal. 1:13 ff.) is the egō of Rom. 7:7 ff. which raises special problems. Three interpretations may be mentioned. (i) Some scholars see a tension here with the description that Paul gives in Phil. 3:6 of his life under the law as a Jew which he describes as "blameless". The description in Rom. 7 is marked by conflict, strife and failure to keep the law. Hence, they claim that the egō here is not autobiographical ([Ed.] although it may be pointed out that the description of Paul's former life as "blameless" in Phil. 3:6 implies no more than what passed for "blameless" among the Jews). (ii) The best known exegesis of Rom. 7 is that of the Reformers which applied the egō generally to the life of every Christian and the dialectic of simul justus et peccator (i.e. that believer was justified and a sinner at one and the same time). But some think that this overlooks the development of thought from ch. 7 to ch. 8, where Paul makes unambiguously positive statements about the Christian's present life in the Spirit (cf. the nyni or nyn in Rom. 3:21 and 8:1). ([Ed.] Nevertheless, it may be noted that the conflict described in Rom. 7:21–25 between "the law of God" which the egō delights in and serves with the mind and "the law of sin" which the egō serves with the flesh is presented in the present tense. Moreover, it may be asked whether the unbeliever does actually delight in "the law of God" in this way.) (iii) An alternative view is represented by a number of modern exegetes, including G. Bornkamm, H. Conzelmann and W. G. Kümmel. This sees Paul in Rom. 7 as looking back from the Christian's standpoint over the human existence under the law which Christ went through and overcame. In ch. 8 he describes what is now intended for the Christian through the Spirit. It is only to Paul as a believer that the hopeless inner strife and wretchedness of man under the law becomes apparent. Thus, the egō of Rom. 7 embraces Paul's own judgment, the standpoint of Judaism under the law and the conflict of the man who wishes to assert himself. ([Ed.] For further discussion see M. Black, Romans, 1973, 100–108; G. Bornkamm, "Sin, Law and Death (Romans 7)", Early Christian Experience, 1969, 87–104; H. Braun, Röm. 7, 7–25 und das Selbstverständnis der Qumran Frommen, 1963; R. Bultmann, "Romans 7 and the Anthropology of Paul", Existence and Faith, 1960, 147–57; C. E. B. Cranfield, Romans, I, ICC, 1975, 340–370; E. Fuchs, "Existentiale Interpretation von Röm. 7, 7–12 und 21–23", Glaube und Erfahrung, 1965; H. Jonas, "Philosophical Meditation on the Seventh Chapter of Paul's Epistle to the Romans", in J. M. Robinson, ed., The Future of Our Religious Past: Essays in Honour of Rudolf Bultmann, 1971, 333–50; E. Käsemann, An die Römer, HNT 8a, 1974³, 190–204; K. Kertelge, ZNW 62, 1971, 105–14; W. G. Kümmel, "Röm. vii und die Bekehrung des Paulus", Untersuchungen zum Neuen Testament 17, 1929; O. Kuss, Der Römerbrief, I, 1963, 462–85; C. L. Mitton, "Romans vii reconsidered" ExpT 65, 1953–54, 78 ff., 99 ff., 132 ff.; J. I. Packer, "The Wretched Man in Romans VII", StudEv II, 1964, 621–27; O. J. F. Seitz, "Two Spirits in Man: An Essay in Biblical Exegesis", NTS 6, 1959–60, 82–95; E. W. Smith, "The Form and Background of Romans 7, 24–25a", NovT 13, 1971, 127–35).

H.-G. Link

(a). W. J. P. Boyd, " 'I am Alpha and Omega' (Rev. 1:8; 21:6; 22:13", StudEv, II, 1961, 326 ff.; R. E. Brown "EGŌ EIMI – 'I AM", The Gospel According to John, I 1966, 532–38; R. Bultmann, The Gospel of John, 1971, 225 ff.; H. Conzelmann, An Outline Theology of the New Testament, 1969, 349–52; D. Daube, "The 'I am' of the Messianic Presence", The New Testament and Rabbinic Judaism, 1956, 325–29; W. D. Davies, "Matthew 5:17, 18", Christian Origins and Judaism, 1962, 31–66; P. B. Horner, The "I am" of the Fourth Gospel, 1971; W. Manson, "The EGŌ EIMI of the Messianic Presence in the New Testament", in Jesus and the Christian, 1967, 174–83; D. M. Stanley, " 'I Am the Genuine Vine' (John 15:1)", The Bible Today, 8, 1963; 484–91; E. Stauffer, egō, TDNT II 343–62.

(b). H. Becker, Die Reden des Johannesevangeliums und der Stil der gnostischen Offenbarungsrede, FRLANT 68, 1956; R. Borig, Der wahre Weinstock, 1967; C. Colpe, "Traditionsüberschreitende Argumentation zu Aussagen Jesu über sich selbst", in G. Jeremias et al., eds., Tradition und Glaube, Festgabe K. G. Kuhn, 1971; G. Eichholz, Auslegung der Bergpredigt, BSt Neue Folge 46, 1965, 70 f.; A. Feuillet, "Les egō eimi christologiques du Quatrième Évangile", Recherches de Science Religieuse, 54, 1966, 5 ff., 213 ff.; A. Hajduk, "Egō eimi bei Jesus und seine Messianität", Communio Viatorum 6, 1963, 55 ff.; A. Jaubert, "L'Image de la Vigne (Jean 15)", in Oikonomia (O. Cullmann Festschrift), 1967, 93–99; E. Norden, Agnostos Theos, 1926²; K. Rudolf, Die Mandäer, 1960; S. Schulz, Komposition und Herkunft der Johanneischen Reden, 1960, 70–131; B. Schwank, " 'Ich bin der Wahre Weinstock' (Joh. 15, 1–17)", Sein und Sendung 28, 1963, 244–58; E. Schweizer, Egō eimi. Die religionsgeschichtliche Herkunft und theologische Bedeutung der johanneischen Bildreden, zugleich ein Beitrag zur Quellenfrage des vierten Evangeliums, FRLANT 56, (1939) 1965²; G. Strecker, Der Weg der Gerechtigkeit, 1962; W. Zimmerli, "Ich bin Jahwe", Gottes Offenbarung, ThB 19, 1963; H. Zimmermann, "Das absolute egō eimi als die neutestamentliche Offenbarungsformel", BZ 4, 1960, 54–69, 266–76.

Image, Idol, Imprint, Example

The word image suggests a visual or mental representation. It may refer to the object that is seen or to the mental representation of it that the observer forms in his mind. Since the concept is a complex one, it is not surprising that various words are used in Gk. and that these tend to merge and overlap. The terms used are: charaktēr, image, mark or stamp, formed by impressing a pattern; idea, appearance, in Plato's philosophy the archetypal forms which underly the entities in our material world, in logic the class or kind (the term is important in Gk. philosophy, but is not found in the NT); eikōn, replica, likeness, image; eidōlon, image, outline, a form which generally lacks substance and does not possess the same degree of reality as eikōn; in biblical Gk. it signifies an image of a god, an idol. Other related concepts are typos, visible impression, copy, image, form, figure, type (→ Type, Pattern); and homoiōma, likeness, image, appearance (→ Like). apaugasma, effulgence, radiance, reflection; hypodeigma, proof, example, model; and paradeigmatizō, expose to public disgrace, make an example of, are also discussed in this article.

εἴδωλον

εἴδωλον (eidōlon), image, idol; εἰδωλόθυτον (eidōlothyton), meat offered to idols; εἰδωλεῖον (eidōleion), temple of an idol; κατείδωλος (kateidōlos), full of idols; εἰδωλολάτρης (eidōlolatrēs), idolater, worshipper of idols; εἰδωλολατρία (eidōlolatria), idolatry, worship of idols.

CL eidōlon is used by Homer for the phantoms and shades in Hades (Il. 5, 451; Od. 4, 796). It can also mean any unsubstantial form, an image reflected in a mirror or water, an image or idea in the mind. Apart from Polybius 31, 3, 13–15, it was not generally used for the images of the gods in cl. Gk. (→ eikōn).

OT Although eidōlon is used to render some 15 Heb. terms in the LXX, it refers without exception to the images of the heathen gods and the deities represented by them. They include gillûlîm, idols (always in a disdainful sense, e.g. Lev. 26:30; Deut. 29:16 [17]; Ezek. 6:4 ff., 13; 36:17 f., 25; 37:23); and t^{e}rāpîm, idols (again used disdainfully, perhaps connected with the idea of perishing, Gen. 31:19; 34 f; → Israel, art. Iakōb, OT). To express the image of God in man, even where the Heb. word is also applied to an idol, the term → eikōn is used. This Hel.-Jewish usage reflects Jewish contempt for heathen polytheism. eidōleion and eidōlion are also Hel.-Jewish terms and are contemptuous expressions for the temples of heathen idols (Ezr. 1:7 [LXX 1 Esd. 2:10]; Bel 9; 1 Macc. 10:83; 1 Cor. 8:10). Similarly eidōlothyton means meat offered to idols (4 Macc. 5:2; cf. 1 Cor. 8:1, 4, 7, 10; 10:19, 28 t.r.; Acts 15:29; 21:25; Rev. 2:14, 20; Did. 6:3).

The prohibition against serving other gods and the prohibition against making eidōla are linked already in the Decalogue (Exod. 20:3 f.; Deut. 5:7 f.). The depreciation of images based on this prohibition leaves its traces everywhere in the OT. This does not imply, however, that there is no reality behind the heathen idolatrous worship. Idols are bdelygmata, abominations, behind which stand daimonia (→ Demon), demonic powers, with which one cannot come into contact without moving God to wrath (Deut. 32:16 f., 21). In 2 Chr. 24:18 the worship of idols is equated with that of the Asherim, i.e. of the powers behind the idols.

Israel often succumbed to the temptation to open the doors to these powers, especially when the rise of the Assyrian and Babylonian empires gave the impression that their gods were more powerful than the God of Israel (Isa. 36:19 f.). Jer. 44:15–19 and Ezek. 8 give graphic and terrible pictures of how widely heathen idol worship had spread in Israel in their day. The prophetic message to Israel was that the misfortune which had overtaken the people was God's punishment for falling away from Yahweh and compromising with the heathen cultus (Isa. 10:11; Jer. 9:13–16; Ezek. 8:17 f.). The call to repentance combined a demand for right behaviour towards one's neighbour (Amos 5:14 f.; Hos. 4:1 ff.; Isa. 1:15 ff.) with the demand to turn away from false gods (Hos. 14:8[9]). The prophets never grew tired of stressing to the people how impotent and vain (mataios, → Empty) were the idols (Ezek. 8:10; 1 Chr. 16:26; 2 Chr. 25:15). For they are merely the creation of men's hands which cannot hear or see, or do anything (Hos. 8:4 f.; 13:2; Jer. 14:22; Hab. 2:18 f.; cf. Ezek. 8:10; 2 Chr. 11:15). The sharpest polemic against the cult images in an exilic setting occurs in Isa. 40:18 ff.; 44:9–20; 46:1 f. The making of the idols is described in language that renders them ludicrous; and the power of Yahweh who moulds history is contrasted with them (Isa. 45–48). He will destroy the false gods (Jer. 10:10–15; Ezek. 6:4 ff., 13; Mic. 1:7), and men will throw away their idols on the day of God's judgment (Isa. 2:18 ff.).

This thought also appears in the polemic of late Judaism against idols and polytheism (e.g. Wis. 14:15; the letter of Jeremiah in Bar. 6; and the story of Bel, Ad. Dan. 14). Even though the gods of the heathen are looked on as nonentities, contact with them is regarded as defiling (Ezek. 37:23). Houses defiled by the presence of idols had to be ritually cleansed (1 Macc. 13:47). The thought that demonic powers stand behind heathen idolatry lived in Rab. Judaism (SB III 48–60). Hence the pious Jew was strictly forbidden to eat meat offered to idols (SB III 54, 377 f.).

In the Qumran texts "idol" is used metaphorically for the sins which, as "idols of the heart" (cf. Ezek. 14:4), hinder men in their service of God (Heb. gillûlîm in 1QS 2:11, 17; 4:5; 1QM 4:15, 19; 1Q22 1:7; 4Qflor 1:17; CD 20:9; cf. A. R. C. Leaney, The Rule of Qumran and its Meaning, 1966, 134 f.).

NT The NT continues the usage of the LXX. A sign of this is that hierothyton, meat offered in sacrifice, found in secular Gk., occurs only in 1 Cor. 10:28 (on the lips of one who may be a pagan), while elsewhere we have eidōlothyton (Acts 15:29; 21:25; 1 Cor. 8:1, 4, 7, 10; 10:19; Rev. 2:14, 20). But there are also new word formations not found in the LXX. In Acts 17:16 it is said that Athens was kateidōlos. On the analogy of katadendros, rich in trees, it is best to translate it "full of idols." Linked with latreia, service or worship of God (cf. Rom. 9:4; → Serve) we find the compounds eidōlolatrēs, idolater (4 times) and eidōlolatria, idolatry (7 times). From the NT these words passed into early Christian literature.

1. The NT continues not merely the vocabulary of the OT but also its condemnation of the worship of false gods. The fact that this word-group is not found in the Gospels indicates that in Palestine the controversy had ceased to be of importance. As soon as the apostolic preaching moved into the non-Jewish, Hellenistic world it immediately revived. Turning to the "living and true God" (1 Thess.

1:9) was impossible without a turning away from idols and pagan worship. Their retention was a sign of lack of repentance (Rev. 9:20).

Paul's arguments in Rom. 1:18–32 are particularly concerned with this controversy. He showed himself a Jew in his stress on the nothingness of the idols, but he recognized the demonic powers behind them to which a man subjects himself when he participates in the heathen cultus. That is why eidōlolatria is one of the serious sins against which Christians have repeatedly to be warned (1 Cor. 5:10 f.; 10:7, 14). In the lists of sins it is frequently mentioned, and stands linked with pharmakeia, sorcery (→ Magic), and pleonexia, → covetousness (cf. Gal. 5:19 ff.; Eph. 5:5; Col. 3:5; Rev. 9:20 f.; 21:8; 22:15). According to Jesus, mammon (→ Possessions) is also a false god (Matt. 6:24).

2. From this basic attitude to idols it followed that Christians were debarred from eating the meat of animals that had been offered in heathen → sacrifice. The NT texts are consistent in this matter. According to Acts, the apostles were unanimous that Gentile Christians should refrain from sacrificial meat, called in this context alisgēmata, pollutions (Acts 15:20, 29; 21:25). This prohibition adopted at the apostolic council was justified by a reference to Jewish practice (15:21), as we find also in Paul (1 Cor. 10:32). It presupposes that in this matter Jews and Christians were basically in agreement.

In 1 Cor. 8 and 10 the practical problems that sprang from this basic attitude are examined in detail. In ch. 8 Paul argues with those in Corinth who maintained that the eating of such meat was harmless for they realized that the false gods had no real existence (1 Cor. 8:1–6). Some scholars identify this group with gnostics (cf. W. Schmithals, Gnosticism in Corinth, 1971). Presumably the teachers of false doctrine combatted in Rev. argued in the same way (Rev. 2:14, 20). Paul agreed that idols had no real existence (1 Cor. 8:4), but expected that those who realize this would out of love show consideration to those who did not; they must not cause these to eat such meat (1 Cor. 8:9–13).

Paul gives the underlying reasons for his attitude in ch. 10. Basing himself on Deut. 32:17, he explains that demons stand behind the idols. → Fellowship with Christ, which Christians enjoy in the Lord's Supper, excludes communion with these powers. Christians should not challenge the Lord. If they do, they will bring down his judgment on them (1 Cor. 10:7–10, 14–22). Christians were under no obligation to enquire fearfully whether the meat bought in the market (generally near the temple) or served at a meal came from a sacrifice. If, however, it was pointed out that it was sacrificial meat, then, out of regard for the → conscience of the one who pointed it out, Christians ought not to eat it, even if their own → conscience (perhaps on the strength of Ps. 24:1) permitted it (1 Cor. 10:25–30). The OT roots of the NT faith are particularly clearly visible in this consistent condemnation of pagan worship and this attitude to sacrificial meat.

W. Mundle

εἰκών

εἰκών (eikōn), image, likeness, form, appearance.

CL eikōn, derived from eoika, which has a present force, meaning to be similar, like (from the rare eike, attested by Homer, meaning it seemed good, it appeared) means image, copy: (a) a painting, statue, figure on a coin, figure of a god; (b) comparison, simile; (c) image, likeness, semblance, representation. In Gk. thought an image shares in the reality of what it represents. The essence of the thing appears in the image, e.g. the god is himself present and operative in his image (cf. magic and miracles performed through images).

OT eikōn is used for 5 different Heb. words including pesel (Isa. 40:19 f.), t^{e}bûnâh (Hos. 13:2), d^{e}mût (Gen. 5:1), and semel and sēmel (Deut. 4:16; 2 Chr. 33:7), but it occurs chiefly for ṣelem (Gen. 1:26 f.; 5:1, 3; 9:6; 1 Sam. 6:11; 2 Ki. 11:18; Pss. 39 [38]:6; 73 [72]:20; Ezek. 7:20; 16:17; 23:14; Dan. 2:31) and ṣ^{e}lēm (Dan. 2:31, 34 f.; 3:1–18). It has no Heb. equivalent in Wis. 2:23; 7:26; 13:13, 16; 14:15, 17; 15:5; 17:21; Sir. 17:3.

Already in the early period of belief in Yahweh associated with Moses images were strictly prohibited (Exod. 20:4; Deut. 27:15). For the image was not the full reality and would only confuse Israel's relationship with the true God (Deut. 4:16; 2 Ki. 11:18). Among Israel's neighbours the image of a god served as a means of controlling the god. It was a source of power in the priest's hand in his dealings with the deity (cf. K. H. Bernhardt, Gott und Bild, 1956). In the Babylonian exile Israel learnt to mock the making of idols (Isa. 40:19 f.) but also to be terrified by them (Ezek. 7:20; 8:5; 16:17; 23:14). Both lines of thought can be traced in Dan. 2 and 3.

In contrast, Israel's relationship with God is based on his → covenant and → word. Religious images can reveal nothing of his nature (→ eidōlon). Only man can be called the image (ṣelem) of God (Gen. 1:26 f.; 5:1 ff.; 9:6). The goal and purpose of the image of God in man is dominion over the world. "God set man in the world as a sign of his own authority, in order that man should uphold his – God's – claims as Lord" (G. von Rad, Old Testament Theology, I, 1962, 146; cf. Ps. 8:5 f.; Sir. 17:3 f.). The OT knows nothing of man losing this image through the fall. ([Ed.] This question was debated by Karl Barth and Emil Brunner in Natural Theology, 1946, where Brunner accused Barth of maintaining that the image was obliterated by sin. Brunner held that the material aspect of the image which was bound up with man's original righteousness was in fact lost. But the formal aspect, man's rational nature, his capacity for culture, and his humanity, remain, and this provides a basis for natural theology. To this Barth replied that Brunner's argument was irrelevant to establishing a natural theology, for the knowledge of God can only come from God himself and this has nothing to do with man's formal capacities. Subsequently Barth modified his teaching on the divine image, without, however, taking Brunner's point. Referring to the plural subject in Gen. 1:26 ["Let us make man in our image, after our likeness"], Barth observes: "The relationship between the summoning I in God's being and the summoned divine Thou is reflected both in the relationship of God to the man whom he has created, and also in the relationship between the I and the Thou, between male and female, in human existence itself" [CD III, 1, 196]. Barth understands the image in terms of the mutual relations between man and woman which in turn reflects the relationship of Yahweh to Israel and Christ to the church [cf. CD III 1, 183 ff., 201 ff., 322].)

The idea of the fall marring the image of God is implied in Wis. 2:23 (cf. Wis. 13–15). Rabbinic Judaism did not question the imago Dei (image of God) in principle. But the possibility was considered that through an individual's sin it might be diminished or even lost (cf. G. Kittel, TDNT II 392 ff.).

NT In Matt. 22:20; Mk. 12:16; Lk. 20:24, eikōn is used of the emperor's image on the denarius. These coins were hated by pious Jews, both because of their implied breach of the second commandment and because it was an image of a foreign ruler. (On this passage see J. D. M. Derrett, "Render unto Caesar . . ." in Law in the New Testament, 1970, 313–38; F. F. Bruce, "Render to Caesar", in The Zealots and Jesus, ed. C. F. D. Moule and E. Bammel [forthcoming]; → Caesar.)

In Rev. the image of the beast (13:14; → Animal; → Number) is a cultic image (perhaps that of the emperor, or Nero redivivus [cf. R. H. Charles, The Revelation of St. John, ICC, I, 1920, 360]). Worship of it means apostasy. The classical world knew of images of the gods which spoke and moved (Rev. 13:15); cf. Charles, op. cit., 361).

In Heb. 10:1 eikōn signifies the true form of the good things to come which has appeared in Christ, in contrast to the law which is a mere shadow of these things. In 2 Cor. 4:4 and Col. 1:15 Christ is said to be the image or likeness of God. There is no difference here between the image and the essence of the invisible God. In Christ we see God (cf. Jn. 14:9). By participating in Christ man has once more gained the image of God (Rom. 8:29) which man was intended to be (1 Cor. 11:7). Christ realized man's destiny to be God's image which was marred through sin. In communion with Christ we are transformed into his image. Paul can speak of this transformation as a present happening (2 Cor. 3:18; Col. 3:10), and also as a yet future, eschatological event (1 Cor. 15:49; Phil. 3:21). "Like all the gifts in which Christians share, the eikōn is an aparchē [first fruits, → Sacrifice] . . . This means that it now is, and yet that it is still to be" (G. Kittel, TDNT II 397).

O. Flender

χαρακτήρ

χαρακτήρ (charaktēr), impress, stamp, reproduction, representation, outward appearance, form.

CL & OT charaktēr (Aeschylus onwards) is a noun derived from charassō, notch, indent, and means one who sharpens, scratches, and later one who writes in stone, wood or metal. Thence it came to mean an embosser and a stamp for making coins, and from this, looking to the result, the embossed stamp made on the coin, character in writing, style. Finally, it came to mean the basic bodily and psychological structure with which one is born, which is unique to the person and which cannot be changed by education or development, though it may be hidden or effaced. Hence, it also means individuality, personal characteristics. In Philo the human soul is called the charaktēr of divine power and the Logos is entitled the charaktēr of God (cf. Leg. All. 3, 95–104; Ebr. 133, 137; Rer. Div. Her. 38; Plant. 18; Det. Pot. Ins. 83).

This concept cannot really be found in the OT, though it reminds us slightly of the passages about the imago Dei. The word is found in the LXX (e.g. Lev. 13:28), but without a specific theological meaning (for Heb. ṣāreḇeṯ, scar).

NT charaktēr is found only once in the NT. Christ is the charaktēr tēs hypostaseōs autou, "the very stamp of his [God's] nature" (Heb. 1:3 RSV), i.e. the One on whom God has stamped or imprinted his being. This means that the NT use is entirely different from our modern concept of character which develops itself by a will that seeks to conform to principles. Similarly, when Heb. 5:8 declares that Jesus learnt obedience through what he suffered, there is no thought of our concept of character-formation. It is probably linked with the Son's obedience to the Father tested in temptation (O. Michel, Der Brief an die Hebräer, KEK 13, 1966[12] ad loc.). The Son possesses the stamp of God's nature just as he is the → apaugasma tēs doxēs tou theou, "the effulgence of God's splendour" (NEB). He who sees and recognizes him, sees and knows the Father (Jn. 14:7 ff.); cf. also → eikōn tou theou, the image of God.

The context of Heb. 1 makes it clear that the writer's purpose was to stress the glory of the Son who had entered history and the uniqueness of the revelation of God in the unique One. In v. 3 we have probably an early hymn, as in Phil. 2:6 ff. and 1 Tim. 3:16. The Son who controls the beginning and the end (v. 2) stands in a unique relationship (a) to God whose effulgence (→ apaugasma) and stamp (charaktēr) he is; (b) to the universe which he upholds; and (c) to the church which he has purified from sins. The Epistle is equally concerned with the pre-existent, the historical and the glorified Christ in whom we have our true High → Priest. Commenting on the word charaktēr, F. F. Bruce writes: "Just as the image and superscription on a coin exactly correspond to the device on the die, so the Son of God 'bears the very stamp of his nature' (RSV). The Greek word charaktēr, occurring only here in the New Testament, expresses this truth even more emphatically than eikōn, which is used elsewhere to denote Christ as the 'image' of God (II Cor. 4:4; Col. 1:15). Just as the glory is really in the effulgence, so the substance (Gk. hypostasis) of God is really in Christ, who is its impress, its exact representation and embodiment. What God essentially is, is made manifest in Christ. To see Christ is to see what the Father is like" (Commentary on the Epistle to the Hebrews, NLC, 1964, 6). J. Gess ἀπαύγασμα (apaugasma), radiance, effulgence, reflection.

| ἀπαύγασμα |

apaugasma may be translated either as effulgence, radiance (in the act. sense) or reflection (in the pass. sense). It derives from augazō, to shine forth, or to illuminate (2 Cor. 4:4). diaugazō is found in 2 Pet. 1:19 in the first meaning. The cognate noun augē, radiance, is rendered at Acts. 20:11 by dawn, or daybreak, i.e. when the sun shines forth.

CL apaugasma is found only in Hellenistic writers who use the noun with the meanings noted above. It is not attested before the Wisdom of Solomon, but a Stoic influence on Philo's use of the term has been suspected. Philo says that what God breathed into Adam was "an effulgence" [apaugasma] of his blessed, thrice-blessed nature" (Spec.Leg. 4, 123; cf. Philo in Op.Mund. 146). In Plant. 50 (cf. Mut. Nom. 181; Som. 1, 71, 115, Migr.Abr. 71) Philo uses apaugasma as a synonym of → eikōn and mimēma meaning "reflection". The same sense is attested in Plutarch, Mor. 83d, 934d. Of special interest for the NT background is the use of cognate terms in the Isis aretalogies, found at Cyme. Isis confesses: egō en tais tou hēliou augais eimi, "I am in the beams of the sun". Isis is also praised as enlightener of the world and an emanation of God.

OT The most significant text is Wis. 7:25 f., where divine wisdom is hailed as "a breath of the power of God, and a pure emanation of the glory of the Almighty . . . she is a reflection of eternal light [apaugasma . . . estin phōtos aidiou], a spotless mirror of the working of God, and an image of his goodness [eikōn tēs agathotētos autou]." In this setting wisdom is hypostatized as a source of light whose shining forth (apaugasma) is understood as "effulgence" or "reflection" (RSV). The former meaning finds support in the view that, since wisdom is praised for her active role in uniting man and God, the sense of "radiance" is better. But most scholars prefer "reflection", though with hesitation.

NT The single text to be considered is Heb. 1:3: hos ōn apaugasma tēs doxēs kai charaktēr tēs hypostaseōs autou, where there are several echoes of the Wis. tribute. In Heb. the verse stands in a doxological, possibly hymnic tribute to the cosmic Christ who is described as either the radiance of the divine doxa as the sunlight conveys the brightness and intensity of the sun (Kittel: we may compare for this sense, Philo, Som. 1, 239), or God's reflection in a way comparable with the thought of Christ as the eikōn, "image" or mirror (Wis. 7:26) or the morphē (RSV "form") of God (→ Form, arts. morphē and hypostasis). Either way, the verse is a piece of wisdom christology that interprets Christ as the supreme and final revelation of the Father. On balance, the act. sense of "radiance" is to be chosen in preference to "reflection". R. P. Martin

ὑπόδειγμα

ὑπόδειγμα (hypodeigma), proof, example, model.

CL The classical form is paradeigma (much preferred to hypodeigma by Phrynichus, Eclogae 4). In Hellenistic Greek hypodeigma means an example (with paradeigma as a synonym, Plutarch, Agesilaus, 15, 4) with a transferred sense of demonstration, sample, pattern or model (→ typos is a synonym), in either the good sense of a model to copy or as a warning example of what to avoid.

The main occurrences of the noun are in Polybius, used of examples seen in soldiers (3, 17, 8), in Hannibal's speeches (3, 111, 6) or a rhetorical "proof" in a speech (6, 54, 6). Liddell-Scott (1878) cite inscriptions that have pros hypodeigma aretēs ("for example of virtue"), a usage paralleled in Plutarch, De Marcello, 20, 1 ("examples of civic virtues").

Philo has an important discussion of the Levitical tabernacle as a model of the divine plan (Leg.All. 3, 102) which Moses glimpsed and Bezalel constructed (Som. 1, 206; Vit.Mos. 2, 76; "the shape of the model" (ho typos tou paradeigmatos; see too Leg.All. 3, 108).

OT The occurrences of the noun are in Ezek. 42:15 (RSV "temple area", where LXX has the "ground-plan of the house"); Sir. 44:16, Enoch was "an example of repentance": 2 Macc. 6:28, 31, the Maccabean martyrs are a "noble example", as in 4 Macc. 17:23.

NT The usage divides between the two meanings given in the LXX: (a) a "figure" or "copy", a meaning restricted to Heb. 8:5; 9:23. The Levitical furnishings and service function as a "copy" (RSV) of their heavenly counterparts which, for the author, alone have substantial reality; (b) "example" in the twofold way of either issuing a call to imitation, as in Jn. 13:15 and Jas. 5:10; or in the bad sense serving as a warning, as in Heb. 4:11 and 2 Pet. 2:6. R. P. Martin ὑπογραμμός ὑπογραμμός (hypogrammos), lit. under-writing, outline, copy, example.

The word is late. Philo uses it in the sense of outline, as a near-synonym of skia, shadow (frag. 7). The commonest use of the noun (cf. the vb. hypographō) is for the faint outlines of letters which were traced over by pupils learning to write, then also of the sets of letters written at the top of a page or other piece of writing material to be copied repeatedly by the learner on the rest of the page (cf. Clem. Alex., Strom. 5, 8, 49, 48). It is this sense which is applied metaphorically in 1 Pet. 2:21 to the example left by Christ for his disciples to follow, especially in his patient endurance of undeserved suffering. (→ Scripture, Writing NT 1 (b) (end).)
F. F. Bruce

παραδειγματίζω παραδειγματίζω (paradeigmatizō), expose to public disgrace, make an example of.

The compound verb is more frequently found than the simple deigmatizō to expose, exhibit, make public (Matt. 1:19 v.l.; Col. 2:15). The prefix para- has an intensive force, so the vb. comes to mean to expose to public disgrace.

CL The vb. is late Gk. In Polybius the chief meanings are to make a public example of someone, such as Aristomachus the tyrant (2, 60, 7), the people of Rhodes (29, 19, 5), or the revolt of the Aravacae (35, 2, 10). See too Plutarch, Mor. 520b, in the sense of to make oneself infamous or "a sorry spectacle". In the meaning of example in the good sense, there are several illustrations in the papyri (e.g. P.Oxy. II, 237, "following a most illustrious example").

OT The vb. is understood as to "hang publicly" (Num. 25:4 LXX) as a method of execution which involves public exposure. The same meaning is seen in Ezek. 28:17 and Dan. 2:5; and also in 3 Macc. 7:14 (of the apostate Jews who deserve to be put to a shameful death) and in Mordecai's prayer in the Gk. additions to Esther (following 4:17).

NT The only texts to use the verb are Matt. 1:19 (v.l. where the stronger verb paradeigmatizō is weakly attested) and Heb. 6:6. Rejection of Christ by apostasy means that he is crucified anew and put to open disgrace. Apostates and lapsi expose him to public shame in that act of denial. The association of the vb. with anastauroō (crucify again) may be a reminiscence of the fate of the leaders of the Jewish apostasy at Baal-peor who were "hung up" before Yahweh (Num. 25:4, see above). R. P. Martin

→ Follow, → Form, → Like, Equal, → Mark, Brand, → Type, Pattern

On eidōlon and cognates:
Arndt, 220; F. Büchsel, eidōlon etc., TDNT II 375–80; J. C. Hurd, Jr., The Origin of I Corinthians, 1965; Liddell-Scott, 384 f.

On eikōn:
(a). K. Barth, CD III 1, 182–206; G. C. Berkouwer, Man: The Image of God, 1962; D. Cairns, The Image of God in Man, 1953; H. von Campenhausen, "The Theological Problem of Images in the Early Church", Tradition and Life in the Church, 1968, 171–200; W. Dürig, "Image", EBT II 392 ff.; D. J. A. Clines, "The Image of God in Man", Tyndale Old Testament Lecture, 1967, TB 19, 1968, 53–103 (contains extensive review of other writers on the subject); W. Eichrodt, Theology of the Old Testament, II, 1967, 122–31; F. Horst, "Face to Face. The Biblical Doctrine of the Image of God", Interpretation 4, 1950, 259–70; P. K. Jewett, Man as Male and Female: A Study in Sexual Relationships from a Theological Point of View, 1975; G. Kittel, G. von Rad, H. Kleinnecht, eikōn, TDNT II 381–97; A. R. C. Leaney, "Conformed to the Image of His Son" NTS 10, 1963–64, 470–79; J. M. Miller, "In the 'Image' and 'Likeness' of God", JBL 91, 1972, 289–304; T. W. Overholt, "The Falsehood of Idolatry", JTS New Series 16, 1965, 1–12; R. H. Pfeiffer, "Images of Yahweh", JBL 45, 1926, 211–22; N. W. Porteous, "Image of God", IDB II 682–85; R. Prins, "The Image of God in Adam and the Restoration of Man in Jesus Christ", SJT 25, 1972, 32–44; G. von Rad, Old Testament Theology, I, 1962, 212–19; J. F. A. Sawyer, "The Meaning of b^{e}ṣelem '^{e}lōhîm ('In the Image of God') in Genesis I–II", JTS New Series 25, 1974, 418–26; S. G. Wilson, "Image of God", ExpT 85, 1973–74, 356–61; H. W. Wolff, Anthropology of the Old Testament, 1974, 159–66.

On the role of images and symbolism in revelation and religious knowledge see E. R. Bevan, Symbolism and Belief, 1938; G. Cope, Symbolism in the Bible and in the Church, 1959; F. W. Dillistone, ed., Myth and Symbol, SPCK Theological Collections 7, 1966 (includes papers by P. Tillich, M. Eliade, I. T. Ramsey and others); T. Fawcett, The Symbolic Language of Religion, 1970; S. Hook, ed., Religious Experience and Truth: A Symposium, 1962; E. L. Mascall, Words and Images, 1957; and Theology and Images, 1963.
(b). K. H. Bernhardt, Gott und Bild, 1956; E. Brunner, "Der Ersterschaffene als Gottes Ebenbild", EvTh 11, 1951–52, 298 ff.; W. Dürig, Imago, 1952; F. Eltester, Eikōn im Neuen Testament, BZNW 23, 1958; J. B. Frey, "La Question des Images chez les Juifs à la Lumière des Récentes Découvertes", Biblica 15, 1934, 265 ff.; H. Gross, "Die Gottebenbildlichkeit des Menschen", in Lex Tua Veritas. Festschrift für Hubert Junker, ed. H. Gross et al., 1961, 89–100; J. Hempel, Das Bild in Bibel und Gottesdienst, 157; P. Humbert, " 'L'Imago Dei dans l'Ancien Testament", Études sur le Récit du Paradis et de la Chute dans la Genèse, 1940, 153–75; J. Jervell, Imago Dei. Gen. 1:26 f. im Spätjudentum, in der Gnosis und in den paulinischen Briefen, FRLANT 28, 1960; L. Koehler, "Die Grundstelle der Imago-Dei-Lehre, Gen. 1:26", ThZ 4, 1948, 16 ff.; J. Konrad, Abbild und Ziel der Schöpfung. Untersuchungen zur Exegese von Genesis 1 und 2 in Barths Kirchlicher Dogmatik III, 1, 1962; E. Larsson, Christus als Vorbild, 1962; E. Lohse, "Imago Dei bei Paulus", in Libertas Christiana (Festschrift F. Delikat), Beiträge zu Evangelischer Theologie 26, 1957; K. L. Schmidt, "Homo Imago Dei im Alten Testament und Neuen Testament", Eranos-Jahrbuch 15, 1947–48, 154 ff.; H. Schrade, Der verborgene Gott, 1949; G. Söhngen, "Die biblische Lehre von der Gottebenbildlichkeit des Menschen", Münchener Theologische Zeitschrift 2, 1951, 42 ff.; J. J. Stamm, "Die Imago-Lehre von Karl Barth und die alttestamentliche Wissenschaft", in Antwort. Festschrift für Karl Barth, ed. E. Wolf et al., 1956, 84–98; and Die Gottebenbildlichkeit des Menschen im Alten Testament, 1959; C. Stange, "Das Ebenbild Gottes", TLZ 949, 79 ff.; W. Vischer, "Du sollst dir kein Bildnis machen", in Antwort, 764–72; T. C. Vriezen, "La Création de l'Homme d'après l'Image de Dieu", Oudtestamentische Studiën 2, 1943, 87–103; C. Westermann, "Bild", BHHW I 249 ff.; H. Wildberger, "Das Abbild Gottes", ThZ 21, 1965, 245–59, 481–501.

On charaktēr:
(a). Arndt, 884; J. Geffcken, "Character", ExpT 21, 1909–10, 426 f.; Liddell-Scott, 1977; U. Wilckens and G. Kelber, charaktēr, TDNT IX 418–23; R. Williamson, Philo and the Epistle to the Hebrews, Arbeiten zur Literatur und Geschichte des hellenistischen Judentums, 4, 1970, 74–80.
(b). F. J. Dölger, Sphragis, Studien zur Geschichte und Kultur des Altertums 5, 3/4, 1911; F. W. Eltester, Eikōn im Neuen Testament, BZNW 23, 1958, 52 ff.; A. Körte, "CHARAKTĒR", Hermes 64, 1929, 69–86.

On apaugasma:
(a). G. Kittel, augazō, apaugasma, TDNT I 507 f.; G. von Rad, Wisdom in Israel, 1972; J. M. Reese, Hellenistic Influences on the Book of Wisdom, 1970. Commentaries on Hebrews by F. F. Bruce (NLC, 1964); H. W. Montefiore (BNTC, 1964); J. Héring (1970).
(b). R. Deichgräber, Gotteshymnus und Christushymnus in der frühen Christenheit, 1967; F. W. Eltester, Eikōn im Neuen Testament, 1958; A. J. Festugière, "L'arétalogie d'Isis de la Korè Kosmu", Revue Archéologique 6, 1949, 376–81; J. Jervell, Imago Dei, 1960 (on the theological aspects); C. Larcher, Études sur le Livre de la Sagesse, 1969; B. L. Mack, Logos und Sophia. Untersuchungen zur Weisheitstheologie im hellenistischen Judentum, 1973; P. Roussel, "Un nouvel hymne à Isis", Revue des Études Grecques 42, 1929, 137–68; A. Salač, "Hymne isiaque de Kume", Bulletin de Correspondance Hellénique 51, 1927, 378–83; W. Schencke, Die Chokma (Sophia) in der jüdischen Hypostasenspekulation, 1913; C. Spicq, L'Épître aux Hébreux, I–II, 1952–53; K. Wengst, Christologische Formeln und Lieder des Urchristentums, 1972.

On hypodeigma:
Arndt, 851; E. K. Lee, "Words Denoting 'Patterns' in the New Testament", NTS 8, 1961–62, 166–73; Liddell-Scott, 1878; H. Schlier, hypodeigma, TDNT II 32 f. Commentaries on Hebrews by F. F. Bruce (NLC, 1964); H. W. Montefiore (BNTC, 1964); C. Spicq, I–II (1952–53).

On paradeigmatizō:
Arndt, 619; Moulton-Milligan, 481 f.; H. Schlier, paradeigmatizō, TDNT II 32. Commentaries on Hebrews by F. F. Bruce (NLC, 1964); C. Spicq, I–II (1952–53); A. T. Hanson, Studies in Paul's Technique and Theology, 1974, 4 ff.; G. E. Mendenhall, The Tenth Generation, 1973, 105–121.

Incense, Myrrh

λίβανος

λίβανος (libanos), λιβανωτός (libanōtos), frankincense; θυμίαμα (thymiama), incense; θυμιάω (thymiaō), burn incense; θυμιατήριον (thymiatērion), censer.

CL (a) In secular Gk. libanos is the frankincense-tree, Boswellia carterii, of India, Arabia, and Somalia; and, by extension, the tree's aromatic gum frankincense, for which the derivative libanōtos is also used (Herodotus).

(b) thymiama (incense) is the general term for fragrant substances (i) burned with sacrifices or for fumigation purposes, or (ii) used in embalming. The vb. thymiaō (from thyō, offer in sacrifice) means to burn so as to produce smoke, and more particularly to burn incense or to fumigate. The related noun thymiatērion is the censer.

OT (a) Apart from one instance of libanōtos (1 Chr. 9:29), the LXX always uses libanos for the Heb. l^{e}ḇônâh (white, the colour of the gum when first solidified). Brittle, glittering, and bitter to the taste, frankincense produced a gratifying if expensive fragrance when burned (Cant. 3:6; 4:6, 14). Besides being an ingredient of the special incense constantly used in OT worship, pure frankincense was burned with showbread (Lev. 24:7) and cereal-offering (Lev. 2:2), but not sin-offerings Lev. 5:11).

(b) thymiama (incense) and its verb thymiaō occur frequently for the Heb. q^{e}ṭōreṭ (sweet smoke) and qiṭṭēr or hiqṭîr (make sacrifices smoke). thymiatērion in the LXX always means censer (2 Chr. 26:19; Ezek. 8:11; 4 Macc. 7:11). The holy incense was a special compound reserved for the divine service (Exod. 30:34–35) and used to strict instructions (Lev. 16:12–13; cf. Lev. 10:1–11). Morning and evening the high priest burned incense before the veil of the holy of holies (Exod.

30:7, 8). On the Day of Atonement he entered the holy of holies carrying burning incense, the fumes of which provided an atonement (Heb. kpr, cover) for him as he approached the mercy-seat (Lev. 16:12–13; cf. Num. 16:46). Rising incense smoke symbolized praise (Isa. 60:6) and prayer (Ps. 141:2), worship fragrant to God. In the messianic age converted Gentiles will gladly bring abundant incense to the Temple (Isa. 60:6), indicative of their newly begun worship of God.

NT 1. Primary Meanings. (a) The frequent part played by incense in Jewish worship is reflected in the many OT references. In the NT, however, libanos occurs only twice (Matt. 2:11; Rev. 18:13) and has its literal meaning of frankincense. In Rev. 8:3, 5 libanōtos unusually means not frankincense but censer, the vessel for carrying incense.

(b) thymiaō (burn incense) occurs only in Lk. 1:9–11, together with the noun thymiama. In the second Temple the daily offering of incense devolved upon ordinary priests. One "new to the incense", i.e. one without the privilege before, was chosen by lot (Mishnah Yoma 2.4). Zechariah was carrying out this duty for the only time in his life when he had his vision. thymiatērion appears once (Heb. 9:4) and is translated not as censer (so always in the LXX) but as altar of incense.

2. Extended Meanings. (a) libanos (frankincense), brought to the infant Jesus (Matt. 2:11), symbolizes both his divinity and his priestly office of intercession (Heb. 7:25). The bringing of frankincense by Gentiles to the messiah was a Jewish expectation (Isa. 60:6). In Rev. 8:3, 5 the association of one and the same censer (libanōtos) with intercession and judgment shows the potency of Christian prayer in fulfilling God's purposes.

(b) Apart from Lk. 1:10, 11 thymiama occurs only in Rev. 5:8; 8:3, 4, where incense in the heavenly temple represents the prayers of the saints.

N. Hillyer

σμύρνα

σμύρνα (smyrna), myrrh; μύρον (myron), ointment, perfume.

OT Myrrh is a gum which comes from the Commiphora myrrha which grows in Somaliland, Ethiopia and Arabia and which exudes from the trunk and branches giving a pleasant fragrance. The LXX uses smyrna to translate the Heb. mōr or môr. In Exod. 30:23 it is an important ingredient in the anointing oil used in the consecration of the tabernacle and the priests. In Ps. 45(44):8 its fragrance is mentioned in connection with the oil of gladness with which God anoints his chosen king. It is also mentioned in Cant. 3:6; 4:6, 14; 5:1, 5, 13; Sir. 24:15; cf. Est. 2:12.

The word translated as myrrh in Gen. 37:25; 43:11 is the Heb. lōṭ (Gk. staktē), probably meaning laudanum, as at the time myrrh may not have been introduced. It was an item of trade and was regarded as a worthy gift.

NT smyrna was among the gifts brought to the infant Jesus brought by the Gentile Magi (Matt. 2:11). Here and elsewhere outside the Bible it is mentioned together with incense (cf. TDNT IV 264; VII 458). The gifts might have been interpreted as a fulfilment of Ps. 72(71):10 f. (cf. SB I 83 f. for rabbinic messianic interpretation of this passage and also Ps. 68:31 f.).

At the burial of Jesus Nicodemus brought a mixture of myrrh and aloes weighing a hundred pounds (Jn. 19:39). The large amount was probably an expression of honour. Jn. 19:40 indicates that the practice was followed of laying the spices (arōmata) between the clothes in which the body was wrapped (cf. also Mk. 16:1; Lk. 23:56; 24:1). This attempt to preserve the body of Jesus suggests that none of those involved expected an immediate resurrection.

The passive participle of the vb. smyrnizō occurs in Mk. 15:23 in the reference to the "wine mingled with myrrh" which was offered to Jesus by the soldiers prior to the crucifixion. This is often taken to be an anodyne given to condemned prisoners to blunt their consciousness (cf. San. 43a). However, W. Michaelis thinks that this was just a drink given by the soldiers to the exhausted (TDNT VII 459). But → Gall, Poison, Wormwood.

The word myron is probably best translated as ointment or perfume (cf. Matt. 26:7, 12; Mk. 14:3 ff.; Lk. 7:37 f., 46; 28:56; Jn. 11:2; 12:3, 5; Rev. 18:13).

C. Brown

(a). Arndt, 531, 766; H. F. Beck, "Incense", IDB II 697 f.; G. W. van Beek, "Frankincense and Myrrh", BA 23, 1960, 70–95; K. Galling, "Incense Altar", IDB II 699 f.; M. Haran, "The Use of Incense", Vetus Testamentum 10, 1960, 113–29; W. Michaelis, libanos, libanōtos, TDNT IV 263 f.; and smyrna etc., TDNT VII 459 ff.; H. N. and A. L. Moldenke, Plants of the Bible, 1952; W. E. Shewell-Cooper, "Myrrh", ZPEB IV 326; J. A. Thompson, "Incense", ZPEB III 274 ff.; L. E. Toombs, "Incense, Dish for", IDB II 698 f.; J. C. Trever, "Myrrh", IDB III 478 f.
(b). F. Blome, Die Opfermaterie in Babylonien und Israel, 1934; M. Löhr, Das Räucheropfer im Alten Testament, 1927; I. Löw, Die Flora der Juden, I–IV, 1926–34 (see index); A. Schmidt, Drogen und Drogenhandel im Altertum, 1924.

Inheritance, Lot, Portion

The idea of inheritance in the Bible is a reminder that God has not intended man to lead an autonomous, isolated, self-sufficient existence. Man's life has an allotted place in the great movement of history. God has given him both gifts and responsibilities to be exercised with regard to others. The Gk. word klēros, inheritance, and other words related to it are used to express that which is received from the past. But they also look forward to the future. In its deepest, theological sense the believer's inheritance is something which comes from God himself. In the OT it has a physical dimension in the shape of the promised land. In the NT it is a spiritual inheritance which comes through the → kingdom of God and the promise of eternal → life. Like the → covenant, the concept of inheritance expresses a fundamental relationship between God and man. It depicts God's desire to give his people a secure abode. On the other hand, this group of words by itself does not convey how men may enter into this inheritance. The word meros, part, is also included here, because it involves the idea of sharing.

κλῆρος

κλῆρος (klēros), inheritance, lot; κληρόω (klēroō), cast lots, determine by lot; κληρονομέω (klēronomeō), inherit; κληρονομία (klēronomia), inheritance; κληρονόμος (klēronomos), inheritor, heir; συνκληρονόμος (synklēronomos), fellow heir.

CL klēros is derived from klaō, break. In the first instance it means a lot. Used from Homer on it meant originally the fragment of stone or piece of wood which was used as a lot. Lots were drawn to discover the will of the gods. Since land was divided by lot, probably in the framework of common use of the fields, klēros came to mean a share, land received by lot, plot of land, and finally inheritance. The vb. belonging to this is klēroō, to draw lots, apportion by lot. klēronomia compounded from klēros and nemō, allot, is first the activity of dividing by lot, then the portion so divided, the inheritance. The klēronomos is one who has been given a klēros, the inheritor. synklēronomos is a fellow heir, and klēronomeō means be an heir, inherit.

OT 1. Lots (Heb. gôrāl) were drawn in the OT also to discover God's will. The high priest wore the lots, Urim and Thummim, in the breastplate of judgment attached to the ephod (Exod. 28:30; Lev. 8:8). He discovered the will of God by their means (Num. 27:21; Ezr. 2:63; Neh. 7:65). According to the Blessing of Moses (Deut. 33), the discovery of God's will and the teaching of his law (tôrâh) belong together (vv. 8, 10). A linguistic link between tôrâh and the vb. yārâh, to throw, i.e. cast lots to ascertain God's will, has been suggested, but many authorities question this and numerous derivations have been put forward (cf. Koehler-Baumgartner, 403). All heathen and magical oracles and oracular methods were an abomination to Yahweh and were denied to Israel by divine decree (Deut. 18:9–14). Guidance by lots was permitted only when carried out in obedience to God. But even there God could refuse to give an answer (1 Sam. 14:37; 28:6), or forbid the casting of lots (according to some interpretations of Ezek. 24:6; but cf. RV, RSV, NEB). On the other hand, God could reveal himself to the heathen through the casting of lots and other means of divination (Jon. 1:7; Ezek. 21:21 [MT 21:26]). (On the Urim and Thummim see H. L. Ellison, "Urim and Thummim", ZPEB V 850 ff.; J. Lindblom, "Lot-Casting in the Old Testament", Vetus Testamentum 12, 1962, 164 ff.; I. Mendelsohn, "Urim and Thummim", IDB IV 739 ff.; E. Robertson, "The Urim and Thummim; What were they?", Vetus Testamentum 14, 1964, 67 ff.; R. de Vaux, Ancient Israel, 1961, 350 ff.)

There are numerous examples of the casting of lots in Israel. In Jos. 7:14 and 1 Sam. 14:41 lots were used to discover the one under the ban. Saul was chosen as king by lot (1 Sam. 10:20 f.). In Chr. and Neh. lots were cast for priestly office and to choose who was to live in Jerusalem (cf. 1 Chr. 24:5 f.). In NT times priestly functions in the Temple were fixed by lot and lots continued to be cast over the goats (Lev. 16:8) on the Day of Atonement (SB II 596 f.). Lots could be used in legal actions (Prov. 18:18). Captives and booty could be divided by lot among the victors (Joel 3:3 [MT 4:3]; Obad. 11; Nah. 3:10; Ps. 22:18 [MT 22:19]). Even in a later, more sophisticated period it was recognized that God controlled the lot (Prov. 16:33).

2. Of special significance is the relationship of casting lots and the settlement of the land. Two different conceptions emerge in the OT.

(a) The one is clearly derived from cultic circles. It maintains that the land is Yahweh's inheritance (e.g. 1 Sam. 26:19; Jer. 2:7; Ezek. 38:16; Joel 1:6; Pss. 68:9 [MT 68:10]; 79:1) in which he lives and should be worshipped (Jos. 22:19; Exod. 15:17). The idea that the land is God's property is found generally in the cultic systems of Israel's neighbours and appears in the Baal cultus. It is, however, very difficult to derive the OT concept from its Canaanite background. "The notion that Yahweh is the true owner of the land can be traced to the very oldest commandments of Yahweh, and was evidently current at a time when syncretism with the features of Canaanite religion had not even begun to appear" (G. von Rad, The Problem of the Hexateuch and Other Essays, 1966, 88). In the OT the landowner is no mythical deity like Baal linked with the soil, but the God who acts in history, who brought his people out of → Egypt, and chose them from among the other peoples (Deut. 32:8 f.; 1 Ki. 8:51, 53). Hence, we frequently find the statement that not merely the land but also Israel itself is God's heritage (e.g. Deut. 9:26–29; 2 Ki. 21:14; Isa. 19:25; 47:6; Jer. 10:16 = 51:19; Mic. 7:18; Joel 2:17 f.; Pss. 33:12; 74:2). It is also expressed by saying that Israel is God's property (s^{e}ḡullâh, Exod. 19:5; Deut. 7:6; 14:2; 26:18). Sometimes it is not clear whether Israel or the land is meant, for land and people belong so closely together by God's appointment (cf. 2 Sam. 14:16, cf. Joel 3:2 [MT 4:2]).

(b) However, the other, more historical idea is the predominant conception in the OT. The land is Israel's heritage which had been promised by God already to → Abraham and the patriarchs and was given to Israel through conquest. Under Joshua, Israel took possession of the land from God, conquering it and dividing it by lot (e.g. Num. 26:52–56; Jos. 13:19). The → Levites also had their cities apportioned to them by lot (1 Chr. 6:54–81 [MT 6:39–65]). The conclusion to the division of the land is given by Jos. 21:43 ff. Since the land is God's, God's regulations should control it. Israel is called to keep God's → commandments, in order to live and remain in the land (Deut. 30:15–20; Jos. 22:1–5; cf. Jer. 7:1–7).

The recurring statement that the priests and Levites have "no portion or inheritance with their brothers; the Lord is their inheritance" (Deut. 10:9; 18:1 f.; 12:12; Num. 18:20; Jos. 13:14, cf. Ezek. 44:28) calls for special attention in this context. In the first instance it states a regulation for the Levites' livelihood, giving them a share in the offerings and cultic gifts. Yet through the example of the Levites Israel is to learn that God's people must not seek safety and security through the land but only in the Lord and giver of the land, Yahweh.

The affirmations of faith in the Pss. that God is the comfort and portion of the one who prays contain the same thought (73:25 f.; 142:5 [MT 142:6]; Lam. 3:24). "The Lord is my chosen portion and my cup; thou holdest my lot. The lines have fallen for me in pleasant places; yea, I have a goodly heritage" (Ps. 16:5 f.). In the last analysis, such affirmations of faith go back to the promise to → Abraham to whom God promised not merely descendants and land, but also that he himself would be his shield and exceeding great reward (Gen. 15:1 RV). This promise was fulfilled in the conquest, but was not exhausted by it.

The message of the post-exilic prophets links these two groups of statements, showing that God stands by his promises. Even though the people have been exiled the land and its mountains remain theirs. The Lord will give it anew to his people (Ezek. 36 f.). Once again it will be divided by lot (Ezek. 45:1; 47:13 f.; 48:29; Isa. 49:8). Aliens also will receive their portion (Ezek. 47:22 f.).

The OT statements may have many strata and may frequently interlock, but there is always a link between the conquest and the lot. Moreover, it always testifies to Yahweh's action in history among his people whom he chose and to whom he gave the land by lot. According to Jos. 13–19, it was divided by lot among the tribes after Israel had conquered it at God's command. After the death of Joshua the allotted land had to be claimed by conquest from the Canaanites (Jdg. 1:3). The land was always seen as a possession and heritage given by God. This explains also the regulations for the sabbatical year and the year of jubilee (Lev. 25) providing for the restoration of property and slaves, for the land is Yahweh's property and is therefore subject to his claims and regulations.

3. The terms used in the OT to express these ideas are gôrāl, lot; yāraš, to possess; and especially naḥ^{a}lâh, possession, inheritance, heritage. The LXX renders gôrāl almost always by klēros. For naḥ^{a}lâh it uses mainly klēros, lot, portion, and klēronomia, inheritance. yāraš and its derivatives are represented by klēronomeō inherit, acquire, obtain, come into possession of, klēros and klēronomia.

For the other Heb. concepts (e.g. ḥēleq, portion, share; s^{e}gullâh, property; ḥeḇel, portion of ground), the LXX uses also meris, share, periousios, one's own, chosen, especial, schoinisma, piece of land measured by a measuring-line, an allotted piece of land. Clearly the concept naḥ^{a}lâh, inheritance, best represents the relationship of Israel to the land given it by God, because it gives expression to the element of having received a present, to the inalienable vocation, and above all to the plan and the action in history behind it.

4. What is the difference between klēros and klēronomia? Sometimes both terms are used interchangeably for naḥ^{a}lâh (e.g. Num. 18:23 f.; 32:18 f.; Jos. 17:4; cf. Jdg. 2:9). However, klēros, which meant originally lot, stresses more the individual piece of land allotted by lot, whereas klēronomia points more to the fact of inheritance with all its connotations already mentioned. klēros may be used in the plural, but klēronomia is never so used. klēronomia has the richer associations in the context of salvation history.

5. In late Judaism gôrāl came to be used for the individual's fate in the last day (cf. already Isa. 57:6; Dan. 12:13), more or less in the sense of the heritage of the righteous. The rabbis spoke of inheriting the land (cf. Ps. 37:9, 22, 29), the coming age, future reward, the garden of Eden, and also Gehenna (→ Hell). Here we meet the thought of rewards (SB I 829, 981; IV, 2 1116).

6. In the Qumran writings gôrāl, lot, assumes a central position. Here it denotes the fate predestinated by God (1QS 2:17; 1QM 13:9), signifying either that one belongs to God, the sons of light, the spirits of knowledge, etc., or to Belial, the sons of darkness and its spirits. Hence it has the meaning of adherents, party (1QS 2:2, 5; 1QH 3:22, 24 f.; 1QM 1:1, 5, 11; 4:2; 13:2–5). From this comes almost the meaning class, rank (1QS 1:10; 2:23; CD 13:12). "To cast the lot" often means to determine a person's fate or even to judge (1QS 4:26; 1QH 3:22). When the term naḥ^{a}lâh is used, it has overtones of double predestination and the eschatological outlook of the Qumran community (1QS 4:15 ff.; 1QH 14:19; 17:15), though sometimes it bears the OT meaning (1QM 10:15; 19:4).

An important concept for the NT background is the belief that the community shared in the lot of the holy ones, i.e. → angels (1QS 11:7 f., 1 QH 3:21 f.; 11:11 f.; 1QSb 4:25 f.). Angels were believed to be present in the camp of the community (1QM 7:6; 12:1 f.; 1QSa 2:8 f.). But the elect on earth could also be called holy ones (e.g. 1QSb 4:23) and similarly the community "the people of the saints of the covenant, instructed in the laws and learned in wisdom . . . who have heard the voice of Majesty and have seen the Angels of Holiness" (1QM 10:10 f.; cf. Vermes, Scrolls, 136 f.). Behind this lies the idea that the earthly community is incorporated into the community of the angels, and has thus obtained the spiritual riches belonging to the angels.

The reception of novices was made dependent on "the decision [lot] of the Council of the Congregation" (1QS 6:16, cf. 18, 21). Though the word "lot" is used, it is doubtful whether casting of lots is really meant, though this is found in CD 13:4 and 1QS 5:3 (cf. A. R. C. Leaney, The Rule of Qumran and its Meaning, 1966, 166 f.). Nor is it clear whether the testing of the novices was believed to reveal how God had determined their lot in heaven. For that could be recognized by a man's behaviour on earth (CD 20:3 f.).

NT klēros occurs in 10 passages in the NT.

1. klēros in the lit. sense of lot. All four Gospels state that the soldiers cast lots for Jesus' garments at the crucifixion (Matt. 27:35; Mk. 15:24; Lk. 23:34; Jn. 19:24; cf. also Barn. 6:6). Jn. sees it explicitly as a fulfilment of Ps. 22:18 [21:19] ("they divide my garments among them, and for my raiment they cast lots"). It represents the ultimate degradation of a human being. The Psalm is an expression of desolation (on its significance in connection with Jesus' passion → God, art. theos NT 6 (d)). But in it the Psalmist recognizes that it is God who is in control and who alone can give help: "But thou, O Lord, be not far off! O thou my help, hasten to my aid" (Ps. 22:19). The Gospel accounts of the passion see God himself behind the events and Jesus as the one who fulfils the descriptions of the Psalmist.

Acts 1:26 records that the final decision as to which of the two candidates, Joseph called Barsabbas, who was surnamed Justus, or Matthias, should fill Judas' place among the twelve → apostles, was determined by lot. Both candidates met the necessary qualifications of being a member of the company who had followed Jesus throughout his earthly ministry and of being a witness of Jesus' resurrection (Acts 1:21 f.). The lots were cast following the prayer: "Lord, who knowest the hearts of all men, show which one of these two thou hast chosen to take the place in this ministry [diakonia] and apostleship [apostolē] from which Judas turned aside to go to his own place" (Acts 1:24 f.). Earlier Judas is referred to as having been "numbered among us, and was allotted his share [klēros] in this ministry [diakonia]" (v. 17). Here klēros is used in its other main sense. There is a profound sense of divine overruling throughout. The vb. used in Acts 1:26, edōkan (lit. "they gave" lots) rather than the expected ebalon ("they cast"), has given rise to the suggestion that the matter was put to a vote (cf. F. J. Foakes Jackson and K. Lake, eds., The Beginnings of Christianity, I IV, 1933, 15). This seems to be the interpretation of the Western text of Acts. But "to give a lot" is a Heb. idiom (F. F. Bruce, The Acts of the Apostles, 1952², 80). E. Haenchen points out that in this procedure "The human factor is excluded: it is God who is choosing" (The Acts of the Apostles, 1971, 162). On the procedure cf. 1 Sam. 14:41 LXX; 1 Chron. 26:14; Prov. 16:33; SB II 596.

klēroō occurs once in the NT. Lit. it means to appoint by lot. It occurs in Eph. 1:11 in the clause en hō eklērōthēmen (lit. "in whom our lot is cast", cf. Arndt, 436). The RV, however, takes the vb. in the sense of 2 below: "in whom we were made a heritage, having been foreordained, according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his will". prosklēroō means allot, assign, and in the pass. to be attached to, join. It is in this latter sense that it is used in Acts 17:4, where it has lost its etymological overtones.

2. klēros and klēronomia as inheritance. With the meaning share, inheritance, klēros is found 4 times in the NT. klēronomia is found 14 times; klēronomos, heir, 15; synklēronomos, fellow heir, 4; klēronomeō, inherit, 18 times; and kataklēronomeō, give as an inheritance, once. The words occur in the Synoptic Gospels, the Pauline Epistles, 1 Pet., frequently in Heb., and once in Rev. Apart from klēros in the sense of lot, the whole group is absent from the Johannine writings. In Lk. 12:13 klēronomia has the basic secular sense of inheritance. Elsewhere (and perhaps even here) it has theological overtones influenced by the OT. kataklēronomeō occurs in Paul's review at Pisidian Antioch of salvation history in his reference to the seven Canaanite nations whose land God gave Israel as an inheritance (Acts 13:19; cf. Deut. 7:1; Jos. 14:1).

(a) The concept of inheritance has soteriological and eschatological dimensions. It is linked with God's historical saving acts. The idea of possession of the promised land passes beyond its first fulfilment in history to its later historical fulfilment in Christ and beyond that to the future final fulfilment at the end of time. It is in this way that the eschatological tendency found already in the OT is worked out. The essential thought is that of inheriting the promise to which believers are called. According to various different strata of NT witness, the object of this promise, the naḥ^{a}lâh in the OT, is the kingdom of God (1 Cor. 6:9; 15:50a; Gal. 5:21; Eph. 5:5; Matt. 25:34; Jas. 2:5). In the Beatitudes, Jesus puts side by side the promise of the kingdom of heaven and that of inheriting the → earth (gē; Matt. 5:5; cf. 5:10). By this he indicated that the promised land of the OT is replaced by the all-embracing concept of the → kingdom of God. This kingdom embraces all those promises the fulfilment of which is yet future. This is shown when we look at the other things promised as an inheritance in the NT: eternal life (Matt. 19:29; Lk. 18:18; Tit. 3:7); salvation (Heb. 1:14); the imperishable (order) (1 Cor. 15:50b); an inheritance, imperishable, undefiled, unfading, kept in heaven (1 Pet. 1:4); the → blessing (Heb. 12:17; 1 Pet. 3:9); the → promises (Heb. 6:12; 10:36); or as in Rev. 21:7 "these things" (RV, NEB "all this"). In these statements OT thought is retained and at the same time transformed (Rom. 4:13 ff.; Heb. 6:17; cf. Acts 7:5; 13:19).

(b) This inheritance, however, is not merely future. It can be recognized already now in faith (Eph. 1:18). According to Heb. 11:7, → Noah inherited the righteousness which comes by faith. In Eph. 1:11–14 we are told that "we have been given our share in the heritage" (NEB v. 11; cf. section 1 above) and have the guarantee of this inheritance in the Holy Spirit whom we have received. The first at least of the Beatitudes suggests that the poor in spirit already possess the kingdom of heaven even though its full realization, like that of the remaining Beatitudes, lies in the future (Matt. 5:3; cf. Lk. 6:20; → Poor).

(c) The fact that salvation is future and yet present comes from our being inheritors through Jesus Christ (Eph. 1:11 f.) and his death (Heb. 9:15). He who has come and will come again, has brought us the inheritance. Indeed, he is the inheritance and the kingdom (cf. the OT statements about the heritage of the Levites and the expressions of faith in Pss.). Through him we are fellow-heirs (Rom. 8:17).

The parable of the tenants of the vineyard (Matt. 21:33–41 par. Mk. 12:1–12, Lk. 20:9–19; cf. Isa. 5:1–7) shows Jesus as the heir, and introduces the OT concept of the → remnant. Yahweh has chosen Israel as his people. It is his vineyard and inheritance. He gave it the land, but it had been disobedient. Now there was only a remnant. This remnant, repeatedly referred to by the prophets, is ultimately a single individual, Jesus, the Son. But through him the remnant grows into a great multitude of believers who are fellow-heirs. Thus the rich young ruler should have become an heir with him of eternal life (Matt. 19:16–30, par. Mk. 10:17–31; Lk. 18:18–30).

Alongside the witness of the Synoptics is that of Paul who gives special prominence to the connection between the promise to → Abraham and the church as the heir in Christ. In Rom. 4:13 Paul declares that "through the righteousness of faith" the promise to Abraham that he should inherit the world becomes ours. In the faith that we share in Christ we become heirs. If this depended on the → law and not on Christ, "faith is made void [kekenōtai]" (Rom. 4:14 RV). He who is Christ's is Abraham's offspring and so his heir (Gal. 3:29; cf. 4:1, 7; Tit. 3:7).

Heb. develops this testimony. By an oath to Abraham God promised salvation "to the heirs of the promise" (6:17; → Swear). They already have the future inheritance, but only in hope (6:18). They inherit it as did Abraham "through faith and patience" (6:12). The one who has opened the way to this promise is Jesus (6:20). He is the son and heir (1:2, 4). The stress in Heb. is rather different from that in Paul. The future nature of the heritage and the need to hold fast to the promise are more strongly emphasized, but the basic concept is the same. In Heb. 11:7, just as in Paul, faith is seen as believing and acting on the word of God. It is by this that Noah became "an heir of the righteousness which comes by faith" (cf. Rom. 4:3; Gal. 3:6; Gen. 15:6).

Jas. 2:5 echoes the teaching of the Synoptics. It treats the question of the heirs of the kingdom, even though the relationship to Jesus, through whom we become heirs, is not expressed. "Has not God chosen those who are poor in the world to be rich in faith and heirs of the kingdom which he has promised to those who love him?" There is a firm link between → election, → promise and inheritance throughout the NT.

(d) Since Jesus is the heir and also the one who has given himself for us, we cannot have this inheritance except in relation to him. This involves practical obedience (Heb. 11:8), and demands patient endurance (Heb. 6:12). Without it we shall not inherit the kingdom of God (Gal. 5:21; 1 Cor. 15:50a). In his parable of the final judgment (Matt. 25:31–46) Jesus shows how this relationship to him involves love in our dealings with others through whom he comes to us (cf. the parable of the Good Samaritan [Lk. 10:25–37]). Jesus' conversation with the rich young ruler also shows that eternal life can be inherited only in the obedience of faith, by those who follow Jesus (Matt. 19:29; Mk. 10:29; cf. Lk. 18:29).

Because Jesus has appointed us as heirs, we are not merely fellow-heirs with him but also joint heirs with each other (1 Pet. 3:7). This involves our relationship with others (1 Pet. 3:9), as is shown in the two parables mentioned in the previous paragraph and also in the one of the unforgiving servant (Matt. 18:23–35; cf. 6:15). This obedience in faith is neither work to acquire merit (as with the rabbis) nor a burden (as the rich young ruler imagined). It is the concomitant of faith which is required to possess the salvation of God and his Son (1 Jn. 5:12; 2:23; 2 Jn. 9; → Possessions). Jesus' call to follow him is in itself a gift of eternal life, the kingdom of God and fellowship with him. Col. 3:24 speaks of receiving "the inheritance as your reward." But the passage makes it clear that this is not earned as of right but a gift of God which is still to be appropriated. As Paul puts it in Gal. 3:18: "God gave it to Abraham by a promise."

(e) Finally, the NT makes it clear that the inheritance of the promise is not only for God's chosen people → Israel. Through Christ the Gentiles have become fellow-heirs with them. Paul stresses again and again that in Christ all believers without distinction are children of God and inheritors of the promise (Gal. 3:23–29; cf. 4:30; Rom. 4:13 f.). This sharing in the inheritance by the Gentiles is clearly expressed in Eph., Col. and Acts. In Eph. 3:6 the Gentiles are fellow-heirs in Christ through the gospel. Eph. 1:3–14 contains an exposition of how the church received its inheritance in Christ. He is the ground and instrument of the whole of God's plan of salvation [oikonomia, v. 10]. The election of all believers before the foundation of the world is based on him (v. 4). In him they have redemption through his blood (v. 7), standing as sons, and hence a share in the inheritance, to the praise of his grace. The Gentiles share in it; cf. the change of "we" (v. 11 f.) to "you" (v. 13) and the stressed "also", suggesting Paul's identification of himself with the Jewish people and the inclusion of Gentile believers alongside of Jewish believers in the Ephesian church (cf. also Eph. 2:1–3:6).

According to Acts 26:15–18, Paul was commissioned by the risen Lord to open the eyes of the Gentiles, that they may turn from darkness to light that they may receive forgiveness of sins and an inheritance (RSV "place", klēros not klēronomia) among those who are sanctified by faith in Christ. The language perhaps recalls that of the Qumran community with its idea of the community of the last days sharing with the holy ones (→ angels) in light (cf. Acts 20:32; Eph. 1:18). The "holy ones" in the Qumran texts can, however, also mean the community of the last days, and the term "holy ones" or "saints" (hagioi) was applied to the early church (→ Holy). However we understand this, the passage contains the revolutionary thought that the Gentiles obtain a share in this "lot" through faith in Jesus Christ. Col. 1:12 also perhaps contains another reminder of Qumran concepts. The Gentile church in Colossae has a "share in the inheritance [merida tou klērou] of the holy ones in light" (cf. 1QS 11:7, 8; but the expression is found already in the LXX, e.g. Deut. 10:9; Num. 18:20; Ps. 15:5, where, however, klēronomia stands instead of klēros). For the walk in light see Ps. 56:13 (MT 56:14); Isa. 2:5; 60:1 ff. See further E. Lohse, Colossians and Philemon, 1951, 35 ff. On meris → meros.

OT and Qumran phraseology is found also in Acts 8:21, when John and Peter have to deny Simon Magus "part or lot in this word" i.e. the gospel. The expression is here a formula of excommunication (E. Haenchen, op. cit., 305, who notes formal resemblance with Deut. 12:12; 14:27; Ps. 77:37 LXX). In Acts 17:4 the term prosklēroō has become so weakened that we may accept RSV rendering, "Some of them . . . joined Paul and Silas"; yet behind this watered down linguistic usage there is the thought that a great many of the devout Greeks and some leading women in Thessalonica had through God obtained a share in the promised heritage and had been placed in it. In 1 Pet. 5:3 the plur. klēroi (RSV "your charge") probably means the local church in its several parts or districts (fixed by lot?).

E. G. Selwyn takes it to refer to "spheres of pastoral care" and notes a possible allusion to Deut. 9:29 (The First Epistle of Peter, 1947², 231).

(f) We can probably best explain John's omission to use the concept of inheritance by the stress of his witness on the present nature and universality of salvation in Christ rather than on the eschatological fulfilment of salvation history. Since he is battling against the unbelief of the Jews, it is more important for him to stress what the church possesses in Christ than what it is to inherit. Perhaps Rev. 21 summarizes best what the NT has to say about the inheritance: the kingdom of God, the eternal glory without death, suffering and sin, God himself the Father and ourselves his sons through faith in Christ – that is the inheritance, not merely for the individual, but also for the whole church. J. Eichler

μέρος

μέρος (meros), part, share, portion, lot; μερίς (meris), part, portion.

CL From 5th cent. B.C. meros is found in secular Gk. with many shades of meaning. It could be said to supersede moira, lot, portion, part, share, which though very frequently found from Homer on, came to be confined to the power of the deities to determine fate. Moira was, in fact, the goddess of fate. meros means a part, e.g. of the body, a landscape, a territory, especially, in the plur., a locality, or party. Metaphorically it means a share, a concern, a social class; in Koine Gk. also business. It often stands in adverbial phrases with prepositions: ana meros, apo merous, ek merous, kata meros (cf. meros ti), the meanings of which can no longer be sharply separated with absolute certainty. We find examples of "one after another", "partly", "specially", and "partially" for each of them.

OT In the LXX meros represents a number of Heb. words, especially qāṣeh and its cognates. Here too it means a part (ḥ[a]mîšîṯ, Gen. 47:24). Its commonest use is to express locality: e.g. border (Exod. 16:35; Jos. 18:19 f.), area of land (Jos. 2:18; 1 Sam. 30:14), end, edge (Jos. 13:27; 15:2). When things are being described, meros means side (e.g. Exod. 26:26 f.; 32:15). In Prov. 17:2 it is a share in an inheritance, and in 2 Macc. 15:20 a place.

meris also stands for several Heb. nouns, especially ḥēleq (e.g. Gen. 14:24; 31:14; Deut. 10:9; 12:12; 18:1, 8; 32:9; Jos. 14:4; 15:13; Pos. 50[49]:18; 73[72]:26; 119[118]:57; 142[141]:5), ḥelqâh (e.g. Gen. 33:19; 2 Sam. 2:16; 14:30), mānâh (e.g. Exod. 29:26; Lev. 7:33 [23]), and m[e]nāṯ (e.g. Neh. 12:44, 47; 13:10).

NT In the NT meros means a part of the body, an estate, or dress (Lk. 11:36; 15:12; Jn. 19:23), the side of a boat (Jn. 21:6), a party, e.g. of Pharisees or Sadducees (Acts 23:6, 9). Often it denotes a district or place (Matt. 2:22; 15:21). The meaning of "the lower [or lowest] parts of the earth" (Eph. 4:9) is uncertain. It could mean Jesus' descent among the dead in death (F. Büchsel, TDNT III 641), or his coming down to the earth (M. Dibelius, An die Epheser, HNT 12, 1953³ ad loc.). In spite of Büchsel's impressive argument an element of uncertainty remains.

meros means occupation or trade in Acts 19:27, and case or matter in 2 Cor. 3:10; 9:3. In the story of the feet washing, Jesus says to Peter: "If I do not wash you, you have no part in me" (NEB, better: "you are not in fellowship with me", Jn. 13:8). This sharing is enjoyed by the Christian, if he is a living member of the body, the church (1 Cor. 12:27; Eph. 4:16; → Body; → Fellowship). One can also have one's share or place with the hypocrites and godless (Matt. 24:51; Lk. 12:46). It depends on which group one is a member of whether one has a share in the first resurrection and the tree of life (Rev. 20:6; 22:19) or in the lake that burns with → fire, the second → death (Rev. 21:8).

meros is used adverbially in the expression apo merous (Rom. 11:25) of the "partial hardening" (NEB) that has come upon Israel. This rendering preserves the Gk. better than the RSV: "a hardening has come upon part of Israel" (→ Hard; cf. also O. Glombitza, "Apostolische Sorge. Welche Sorge treibt den Apostel Paulus zu den Sätzen Rom. 11, 25 ff.?", NovT 7, 1965, 312–18). apo merous means "on some points" (Rom. 15:15), "in part" (2 Cor. 1:14) and "for a while" and "to some degree" (2 Cor. 2:5) (cf. Arndt, 507). The precise shade of meaning is determined by context. ana meros means "one after the other" (1 Cor. 14:27). ek merous means "individually" (1 Cor. 12:27), and "in part" (1 Cor. 13:9 f., 12), where Paul is stressing the incomplete, fragmentary and transitory character of → knowledge in contrast with → love. When the perfect comes, the imperfect will pass away (1 Cor. 13:10). en merei means "with regard to" (Col. 2:16), and kata meros (Heb. 9:5) "point by point".

meris means part, in the sense of a district (Acts 16:12) and share or portion in Lk. 10:42; Acts 8:21 (cf. Deut. 12:12); 2 Cor. 6:15 ("What accord has Christ with Belial? Or what has a believer in common with an unbeliever?"); and Col. 1:12 (→ klēros, NT 2 (e)). W. Mundle

→ Covenant, → Earth, Land, World, → Israel, → Levite

(a). Arndt, 435 f., 506 f.; O. J. Baab, "Inheritance", IDB II 701 ff.; E. M. Blaiklock, "Inheritance" ZPEB III 277 ff.; A. M. Brown, The Concept of Inheritance in the Old Testament (Dissertation, Columbia, New York) 1965; F. Büchsel, katō, TDNT III 640 ff.; W. D. Davies, The Gospel and the Land: Early Christianity and Jewish Territorial Doctrine, 1974; J. Herrmann and W. Foerster, klēros, TDNT III 758–85; J. D. Hester, "The 'Heir' and Heilsgeschichte: A Study of Gal. 4, 1 ff.", in Oikonomia. Festschrift O. Cullmann, 1967, 118–25; and Paul's Concept of Inheritance, SJT Occasional Papers, 9, 1968; M. Noth, The Laws of the Pentateuch and Other Studies, 1966; W. Pesch, "Inheritance", EBT II 394–98; G. von Rad, Theology of the Old Testament, I, 1962, 296–305; and "The Promised Land and Yahweh's Land", in The Problem of the Hexateuch and Other Essays, 1966, 79–93; J. Schneider, meros, TDNT IV 594–98.
(b). J. Benzinger, Hebräische Archäologie, 1927³, 392 ff.; P. Diepold, Israels Land BWANT 95, 1972; F. Dreyfus, "Le thème de l'héritage dans l'Ancien Testament", Revue des Sciences Philosophiques et Théologiques 42, 1958, 3–49; G. Hölscher, Geschichte der israelitischen und jüdischen Religion, 1922; G. Lanczkowski, "Los", *RGG*³ IV 451; F. Nötscher, Biblische Altertumskunde, 1940, 133 ff.; SB I 829; II 596; III 625; H. H. Schmid, yāraš, THAT I 778–81.

Israel, Jew, Hebrew, Jacob, Judah

'Ισραήλ | 'Ισραήλ (Israēl), Israel; 'Ισραηλίτης (Israēlitēs), Israelite; 'Ιουδαῖος (Ioudaios), Jew; 'Ιουδαϊκῶς (Ioudaikōs), Jewish; 'Εβραῖος (Hebraios), Hebrew (noun); 'Εβραϊς (Hebraïs), Hebrew (fem. adj.).

OT 1. Etymology and First Occurrence. The name Israel (Heb. yiśrā'ēl) is formed from the noun 'ēl (God) and a verbal predicate. An explanation of it is given in

Gen. 32:28 in the context of the story of Jacob (→ Iakōb) wrestling with God: "Your name shall no more be called Jacob, but Israel, for you have striven with God and with men, and have prevailed" (cf. Hos. 12:4). Hence, the name has been interpreted to mean He who strives with God, the vb. being śārar, to rule, or śārâh, contend, fight. This interpretation seems to be supported by the story. However, elsewhere 'ēl is never the object in proper names, but is always the subject. Hence, the interpretation God strives has also been put forward. 'ēl is a generic name for → God in Heb., as contrasted with the proper name Yahweh. (For further discussion of suggested explanations see G. A. Danell, Studies in the Name Israel in the Old Testament, 1946, 22–28.)

For the personal history of Israel → Iakōb. Israel was used as a personal name (e.g. Gen. 50:2; Exod. 1:1; 1 Chron. 1:34). But it was also used as a tribal and national name: "the sons of Israel" (Lev. 1:2; Jdg. 2:4); "the → house of Israel" (Exod. 40:38; 1 Sam. 7:2; Isa. 46:3), a term specifically applied to the northern kingdom (1 Ki. 12:21; Hos. 5:1; Amos 5:1; Mic. 1:5), but which was also used as a title of honour for the southern kingdom (Isa. 5:7; Jer. 10:1) (cf. Koehler-Baumgartner, 407 f.). The earliest external reference to the Israelites outside the OT occurs in an inscription on a pillar set up by Merneptah, king of Egypt, c. 1220 B.C., to celebrate his victories. In it he boasts: "Israel lies desolate; its seed is no more" (cf. D. Winton Thomas, ed., Documents from Old Testament Times, 1958, 139, see also plate 8; text also in ANET, 376 ff.). In the opinion of C. Virolleaud, Israel occurs as a personal name at Ugarit (Le Palais Royal d'Ugarit, V, 1965, 69, 3).

Judah (Heb. yᵉhûḏâh) occurs as a geographical term to denote the mountainous desert region south of Jerusalem (Jos. 20:7; 21:11; Jdg. 1:16; Ps. 63:1). The tribe which settled there bore the name of Judah, the son of Jacob and Leah (Gen. 29:35). The precise etymology is uncertain, though Gen. 29:35 suggests a link with yāḏâh, praise, in Leah's remark on the birth of her son, "'This time I will praise the Lord'; therefore she called his name Judah." The three first root letters (yhw) could contain the divine name. The Heb. words yᵉhûḏî and yᵉhûḏîṯ (fem.), Judaean, and the Gk. Ioudaios, Jewish, Jew and Ioudaia, Judea refer particularly to the place of origin.

Hebrew (Heb. 'iḇrî; Gk. Hebraios) is an old word of uncertain meaning. The Hebrews no doubt belong linguistically and in reality to the Habiru people who are frequently mentioned in Babylonian, Ugaritic and Egyptian texts of the mid 2nd cent. Like the Accadian Khabiru and the Egyptian root 'pr, the biblical word is a legal term. It denoted people of equal social standing without regard to their ethnic origins (their personal names derive from a variety of linguistic areas), who, not having a permanent home or possessions, entered the service of the settled population on a contractual basis (servants in Egypt, 1 Sam. 14:21). In closely knit groups, forerunners of the tribes, these nomadic shepherds penetrated the arable land. The native Canaanites perhaps called them the 'ēḇer people, the "outlanders" (e.g. Gen. 14:13), because they had come from 'ēḇer, from the (land) beyond, i.e. from the eastern and southern steppes. Hence, the word Hebrew was used by other peoples in the old stories sometimes in a derogatory manner, sometimes by Israel in dealings with foreigners in a self-deprecating manner (Gen. 40:15; 43:32; Exod. 1:15–19; 2:11–13; 3:18, God of the Hebrews; 1 Sam. 4:6, 9; 13:3, 19; 29:3). Certain passages are sometimes taken to imply that the term Hebrew was used for a dependent, economically weak people, a group contrasting with those in Israel who were free (Exod. 21:2; Deut. 15:12; Jer. 34:9, 14).

2. Israel and Judah in the Course of History. (a) Early history. After the occupation of the land by the house of Joseph the small band of tribes (the sons of Leah?) expanded into a league of twelve tribes (→ People, art. phylē), a cultic, non-political community of those whom the God of Israel had chosen (Jos. 24). Under the pressure exerted by the Philistines, the defence forces of the individual tribes were no longer sufficient. Saul, having been elected king (1 Sam. 9–12), demanded military service, united the tribes politically (at least in the north), and thereby founded a state to which was transferred the name of the sacral twelve tribe league, Israel. This double basis in religion and politics set up at the very outset a tension which was to run through and determine Israel's history.

Israel, the northern state, exercised autonomy in religion and politics for a good 200 years after David's united kingdom was split following the death of Solomon. The God of Israel was worshipped at the sanctuaries of Bethel and Dan. In 733 and 722 Assyria defeated Israel (cf. 2 Ki. 15–17). (Israel was also called Ephraim by the contemporary prophets, e.g. Isa. 7:1–9, after the central region associated with the name of the younger of the two sons of Joseph [Gen. 40:50 ff.]. Ephraim and Manasseh were counted as tribes equal with the tribes descended from the sons of Jacob.) As the result of deportations and the mingling of the remainder of the inhabitants with newly settled people (which had the express intention of producing a cultural and religious syncretism) there arose the Assyrian province of Samaria (→ Samaritan).

Judah, the kingdom which David had created from the southern tribes, survived the northern kingdom by about one and a half centuries, partly no doubt on account of its dynastic basis and its more skilful politics. Under Babylonian overlordship things went much better for Judah than formerly for the northern kingdom under Assyria. Thus under the Persians the division of Judah could be reversed.

The southern kingdom received important theological support. Isaiah, continuing the line of earlier court prophets, glorified the → Davidic dynasty in Zion. By taking over the name Israel for the southern kingdom after the fall of the northern kingdom, he defined theological hopes in accordance with actual political circumstances. The sphere of salvation was narrowed down to the remnant, Judah. At the same time, the state of Judah acquired a new worth through the old name with its traditional associations (cf. Isa. 24–28).

By contrast with this Zionism with its accent on Judah's present, Jeremiah presented a theology of dispersion which was open to God's future. He retained the name Israel for the northern kingdom which had already been destroyed a century ago. Without prejudice to Josiah's attempt to restore the state of Israel (2 Ki. 23), Jeremiah proclaimed that the old Israel was finished. Nevertheless, God would one day recreate from it his people. They would be a community which, as in olden times so now in the end-time, would once again be stateless (cf. 3:11 ff.; 31; 37:7 ff.). On the pattern of the time of → Moses, God would draw up a new → covenant with them, this time writing the commandments in their hearts (Jer. 31:31–34). These hopes for Israel meant, however, that Jeremiah had to announce judgment and destruction for the state of Judah which he loved and for which he pleaded before God (Jer. 14 ff.). The human and political defences had to fall to make room for God's new creation.

(b) Israel before God in prophetic theology. God's relationship to Israel is expressed in a variety of metaphors: God is → father, → king, saviour (→ Redemption), guardian, refuge, comforter, dew. Correspondingly, Israel is a → son, bride, wife (→ Woman), → possession, vineyard, and → vine. These mostly personal terms indicate a relationship of partnership. God lets his beloved son know both what he does for him and what he requires of him (Deut. 10:12; also Mic. 6:8). Through such instruction, which is a wider concept than either → commandment or → law, Israel became the people that dwelt alone (Num. 23:9). It was distinguished and separated from all other peoples (Deut. 4:5–10). In the holy land of Israel this holy people was to live for the holy God in holiness (Lev. 11:44 f.; 19:2; 20:26; → Holy). Israel's → election was at the same time a commission. Although the least significant of the peoples (Deut. 7:7), Israel still had to be for them a prince and a light, a witness to God by his very existence (Isa. 43:8 ff.). Election meant loneliness, difference, renunciation, readiness to → suffer (Isa. 52:13–53:12), and a heavy → burden.

Israel continually ran the risk of falling back into Canaanite cults, succumbing to the temptations of her environment, and of wanting to be like the other peoples. This meant that the relationship of trust could be damaged from the human side, but not destroyed. For the covenant with Israel remained irrevocable for God's sake. To make this fact certain beyond all doubt, use was made of concepts taken from the realm of law: God will not abandon his legal claim on Israel (Amos 9:1 ff.); nor will he publish a bill of → divorce (Isa. 50:1). Lest his name be blasphemed among the heathen for faithlessness, God remained true to the oath which he swore to the fathers (Ezek. 20:9, 14, 22; Deut. 7:8). Even → judgment is a sign of his faithfulness. Through God's servants the → prophets of Israel (Ezek. 38:17) who intercede to the point of self-immolation (Exod. 32:32; Jer. 30 f.), Israel is warned, and threatened and comforted. But in all this we have only different forms of the same invitation to repentance. God's own faithfulness to the covenant makes it possible for Israel to be purified and the covenant relationship renewed. The hope of the restoration of the whole of Israel does not rest on Israel's righteousness but on God's love to the fathers (Exod. 32:11–14; Deut. 9:5), and his freedom which chose Israel contrary to all expectations (Ezek. 16:59–63).

(c) The struggle for Israel in the post-exilic period. Shortly after the return of the exiles from Babylon the prophets announced a turning point in the coming of salvation (cf. Hag. 2:20–23; Zech. 6:9–15). But three generations later Ezra and Nehemiah saw in these semi-political dreams a danger to Israel's continued existence. The latter left to the Persians the management of political relations and concentrated on the internal building up of the covenant community in Jeremiah's sense on the basis of Holy Scripture. What had hitherto been the privilege of the priests now became a common possession (cf. Neh. 8).

From the time of Alexander the Great (356–323 B.C.) onwards Judaism lived under the influence of the pervading Hel. culture. However, as soon as adaptation to the environment threatened to lead to the abandonment of their particularity, resistance movements arose, principally on religious grounds. The successful Maccabean rebellion which broke out in 168 B.C. led once again, under the Hasmoneans, to a compromise between self-consciousness and openness to the environment. This is shown by the coins with their bilingual inscriptions.

In the following period, after Pompey had captured Jerusalem and reduced the area (63 B.C.) the half-Jew Herod (37–4 B.C.; cf. Josephus, Ant. 14, 9, 2), reigned as king by favour of Rome, and procurators exploited and provoked the Jews. The distinction between the Jews and the surrounding nations became progressively sharper, until under the leadership of the Zealots there occurred a series of bloody conflicts with the Romans and the friends of Rome. This is illustrated by the inscriptions on the coins of the period: the revolutionary coinage of the years 66–70 and 132–135, partly overstampings of Roman coins, are inscribed in the old Heb. script as an indication of the return of Israel's original times in the present end-times. The inscriptions are more programmes than descriptions of reality: "Shekel of Israel", "Salvation of Zion", "For the freedom of Jerusalem", "First year of the salvation of Israel", "Second year of the freedom of Israel". The Roman inscription, however, runs: "Judaea capta" ("Conquered Judah"). (On the coins of the period see G. L. Archer, "Coins", ZPEB I 901–11; A. Reifenberg, Ancient Jewish Coins, 1947²; and Israel's History in Coins from the Maccabees to the Roman Conquest, 1953; L. Kadman et al., The Dating and Meaning of Ancient Jewish Coins, 1958; E. Stauffer, Christ and the Caesars, 1955; → Possessions: Coins in the Bible and Theological Issues.)

After the exterminations of Jews of the dispersion under Trajan (A.D. 98–117) and the failure of the messiah Simon Bar Kokhba ("son of a star", cf. Num. 24:17) in A.D. 132, at the peak of the conflict, not only were those who remained faithful to the instruction to be exterminated, but the name of the people was to be obliterated. Hadrian decreed that Jerusalem should be a Roman colony to be known as Aelia Capitolina (after himself and Jupiter) and the land Syria Palaestina (Land of the Philistines).

Nevertheless, even under the most difficult conditions, remnant Jewish communities repeatedly migrated back. At first they even managed to maintain a certain cultural standing, as the Palestinian Talmud and the ruins of synagogues bear witness. Their overlords changed: Romans, Arabs, Crusaders, Turks and British came and went. In 1948, under the pressure of the terrible situation of the Jews and with the approval of world public opinion, there arose once again a state with the ancient name of Israel.

NT The inter-Testamental period and the NT era witnessed an intense struggle over the identity of the true Israel in the face of foreign rule, the competing groups within Judaism and the emergence of the church.

1. Israel and its Environment. Despite the many strata within it, Judaism was a relatively unified whole compared with the other peoples. As bearers of revelation in the struggle against the heathen even the early Jesus-groups recognized themselves as naturally on the side of Israel, or rather as belonging to Israel. Hence, the rise of the Christian church must be seen against the background of the competing groups within Judaism which were concerned with the identity and destiny of Israel.

(a) Israel's Hel. environment, with its striving for cultural unity, exercised on Judaism, especially in the dispersion, a powerful attraction. In good times it was possible to take over not only the language but also many Hel. manners, so long as they were not connected with a pagan cult and therefore incompatible with Jewish principles. This openness and recognition of the nations was expressed theologically in the acceptance of the first stages of a messianic humanity among them, "sons of → Noah" (who kept the principal commandments of Gen. 9:4; cf. Acts 15:28 ff.; Sanh. 56a–b) and the pious among the nations (Hullin 92a; Baba Kamma 38a). Through mission which had its theological roots in the universal claim of the one God who desires the salvation of all the nations (cf. the Songs of the Servant of Yahweh in Isa. 41 f. and 49), the tension between Israel and the nations was removed by the anticipation of the reunion expected in the end-time (Pesahim 87b; cf. 1 Cor. 12:13; Gal. 3:28).

Thus post-exilic Judaism became a missionary religion, ready to accept anyone who confessed the one God of Israel (→ One, art. heis). Success was great, especially among women who were not → circumcised but only baptized. About one in ten of the inhabitants of the Hel. Mediterranean world was a Jew, not by birth but by belief (cf. Sib. 3, 271; 1 Macc. 15:22 f.; Philo, Flacc. 45 f.; Leg.Gai. 281–283; Josephus, War 2, 19, 2; Ant. 14, 7, 2; Acts 2:9–11).

But this very openness, which was what the best among the nations found attractive about Judaism, also gave rise to hatred and persecutions. In times of crisis the position of Jews before the law worsened and enmity led to pogroms (like the persecutions under Trajan, A.D. 115–117). Jews were faced with the choice either of giving up their Jewishness and adopting the pagan gods and the cult of the emperor, or of renouncing the privilege of cultural and political equality. The result was that those who remained faithful to their community withdrew into a kind of ghetto existence, involving a separation that was neither national nor racial but completely religious in character. In order not to further the worship of idols, dealings with pagans were limited or, as in the 18 regulations which were introduced by the Shammaites before the rebellion of A.D. 66 (Shabbath 17a–b), almost completely prevented. As the theology of the Talmud shows, Pharisaism, based on the OT, made the whole of Israel immune to the damaging influences of Hel. anti-Jewish culture and gave it a self-consciousness which supplied the power to survive as a community for thousands of years amid the hatred and persecution of a hostile environment.

(b) The use of the terms relating to the Jews was determined by these conflicts. The word Hebrew (noun and adj.) has the most neutral meaning. It denotes in particular the language and the script, and then also the people who use them. In worship the Bible was read sentence by sentence in the Heb. original and then translated into current Aram. in the form of the Targums. Where it is used without any special significance, Hebrew frequently means the current Aramaic (Josephus Ant. 2, 13, 1; cf. also Hebraïs the Hebrew [language], Acts 21:40; 22:2; 26:14; Hebraïsti, in Hebrew, Jn. 5:2; 19:13, 17, 20; 20:16; Rev. 9:11; 16:16). In place of the ancient Heb. characters square characters were employed (even among the copyists of sacred texts), which developed out of the Aram. state script. The ancient Heb. script, used for the inscriptions on revolutionary coinage, was expressly rejected by Pharisaic teachers. Especially when used by foreigners the word Hebrew can serve to denote the land (Tacitus, Histories 5, 5) and its people (Test. Jos. 12:2 f.; 13:3; Jub. 47:5 f.). Since language, education and the structure of theology are largely determined by the fact of belonging to a particular cultural sphere, the word of differentiation (cf. Acts 6:1) could sometimes in the conflict acquire an apologetic or a polemical tone. Paul emphasized in 2 Cor. 11:22 and Phil. 3:5 his Heb.-speaking origins and affiliations as something positive. In the sayings about Hebrews in the gnostic Gospel of Philip (especially 1 and 46) everything Hebrew is devalued as an obsolete preliminary to true faith.

Judah, Jew, Jewish and Judaism are more terms with a political and sociological colouring. They denote in the first instance membership of the nation (Tacitus, Histories, 5, 5), but then also people who turn to Judaism (Dio Cass., 37, 17) and live according to Jewish customs (cf. Ioudaïkos, Jewish in Tit. 1:14, of myths; with the adv. Ioudaïkōs and vb. ioudaïzō, live as a Jew, Gal. 2:14). To this context belongs the noun first coined by the LXX, Ioudaïsmos, Judaism, as a way of life and faith (Gal. 1:13 f.; cf. 2 Macc. 2:21; 8:1; 14:38; 4 Macc. 4:26; Arndt, 380). This usage was taken over by the Jews themselves, especially in dealings with foreigners (Elephantine Papyri; 1 Macc. 3:34; 8:23 ff.; Tob. 1:18). But Jew also occurs as a self-designation on the coins of the Hasmonean period, in Philo and Josephus. In the NT it is used of individuals and in the plur. of groups, occurring some 194 times with almost every shade of meaning, of which 79 instances are in Acts, especially from ch. 13 on, 71 in Jn., 24 in Paul, but only 11 in the Synoptic Gospels (see 2 (e) below). Occasionally, especially in exegetical contexts, the word has a respectful sense (Megillah 12b–13a; Midrash Est. 2:5[93a]; Sib. 5, 249). But the word Jew was often used by Gentiles as a contemptuous term of abuse (Midrash Lam. 1:11[55a]). The Gentile world did not understand the peculiarity and necessary separation of the Jewish people (Ad.Est. 13:12 ff. [LXX after 4:17]). Because they could not take part in the Gentile cults and social life, they were regarded as godless, haters of foreigners, and even as haters of men in general (3 Macc. 3:4 ff.; Josephus, Ap. 2, 121–124, 145–150; Megillah 13b; Midrash Est. 3:8[95b], a warning against Jews; BGU 1079). Alexandrian writers, in particular, spread horrific tales about the history and worship of the Jews which were readily believed and copied (Manetho, Chairemon, Lysimachus, Apion; cf. Josephus, Ap. 1, 219–2, 150; Tacitus, Histories, 3–5; Ann. 2, 85). Contempt for Judaism (Cicero, Pro Flacco, 28; Pliny, Nat.Hist. 13, 4; Juvenal, Satires 14, 96–106) also resulted in hatred which worked itself out in bloody persecution (Philo, Flacc. 41–96; Leg.Gai. 120–139).

Intensified by such anti-Jewish attitudes on the part of others, Judaism's consciousness of itself as Israel developed. This is the most pregnant of the theological concepts consistently used within the community. It occurs frequently in the NT (68 times), most often in Paul (17 times, of which 11 are in Rom.), then 12 in Matt., 12 in Lk. and 15 in Acts, rarely in Mk. and Jn. (twice and 4 times respectively). Israēlitēs occurs 5 times in Acts (always as a form of address; cf. 2:22; 3:12; 5:35; 13:16; 21:28), 3 times in Paul (Rom. 9:4; 11:1; 2 Cor. 11:22) and once in Jn. (1.47). Each time it refers to Jews as members of the people of God. The world was created for Israel's sake (2 Esd. 7:11; Gen. R. 12[8d]). Israel is God's possession (Aboth 6:10) and the first-born (Pss.Sol. 18:4). It owes its special character solely to the gift of instruction (Exod. R. 30[89d]). Even if Israel is despised in this world (Lev. R. 32[122a]), suffering is itself a sign of the love of God (Pss.Sol. 18:4; Midrash Cant. 1:5[87b]) who is with them even in dispersion (Megillah 29a). God stands by his promises (Makkoth 24a–b). He will gather all those who have been scattered (Eth.Enoch 90:33; Test. Jos. 19 f.; Eighteen Benedictions, especially the 10th request; for text → Prayer, art. proseuchomai OT 5). They will possess the land (Matt. 5:5; → Inheritance), and all Israel has a share in the world to come (Sanhedrin 11:1).

2. The Struggle over Israel within Judaism. (a) Israel in the Hel. period. Post-exilic Judaism was divided geographically between the homeland and the dispersion. Parallel with this was the cultural division between Hebrews and Hellenists. But there were also Jews of the dispersion who emphasized their connection with the Heb. (or Aram.) language and culture and separated themselves from Jews who were more open towards Hel. culture. There were synagogues of the Hebrews in Rome and Corinth (cf. also Trypho in Justin, Dial. 1, 3). On the other hand, there were in Jerusalem Jewish groups who in language and perhaps also in customs were Hellenists (2 Macc. 4:13; Acts 6:1; 9:29).

Those who lived in Israel retained close links with those who lived in the dispersion. Jerusalem was supported materially by the latter in the form of the temple tax (cf. the alms for Jerusalem in 2 Cor. 8 f.), while remaining itself a religious focal point with its pilgrim festivals and regular embassies sent out to Jewish communities. However, there was no common political action, either during the rebellions in Israel or the persecutions in the dispersion.

From the sociological point of view Israel was divided into several classes: priests, Levites, Israelites, proselytes (mostly of equal standing with the Israelites [cf. CD 14:3–6]), subordinate temple slaves and the offspring of illegitimate marriages (Ezr. 8:20; TJ Horayoth 3:5; Yebamoth 8:5). However, because the question of how Israel could continue to exist before God in this period was interpreted in a variety of ways, there arose groups which all maintained that they were the true community (e.g. Sadducees, baptists, apocalyptists, Pharisees, and Zealots). Membership of these groups no longer depended on origin but on the decision of the individual to accept a particular doctrinal opinion. The boundaries of the parties were fluid, and it was possible to transfer from one to another. Thus Josephus tried different groups (Life 10 ff.), and disciples of John transferred their allegiance to the Jesus group (Jn. 1:38–40).

These groups were themselves further divided into sub-groups. Thus, within the Pharisees there was a Zealot wing, hostile to foreigners, and a missionary wing friendly towards Rome (the parties of Shammai and Hillel; cf. Shabbath 31a). Similar splits arose also among the followers of Jesus (Gal. 1 f.; 1 Cor. 1:12; 3:4; 2 Cor. 11).

The idea of election, the continued existence of Israel and the formulation of instruction in purity were hammered out in continuous debate over points of doctrine and constant conflict. The passion with which the struggle for Israel's reality was fought is a sign of the vitality of the prophetic spirit in this period.

(b) Polemic. The course of this conflict was bitter. It was of the kind that could only come about among brothers disputing a common heritage. The fight had been going on for a long time according to rules handed down in the different schools before the Jesus movement arose and entered the debate.

The methods of polemic were various. Opponents were denounced in forthright language, as can be seen by the use in the NT of terms like hypocrite (Matt. 23:13; cf. Ass.Mos. 7) and generation of vipers (1QH 3:12–18; Matt. 3:7). Wholesale appeal was made to history, as when Paul saw the behaviour of the Jews, "who killed . . . the Lord Jesus", as typical of their treatment of the prophets (1 Thess. 2:14 f.). An opponent's positive points could be assertively transformed into negatives (cf. the sons of darkness, 1QS 1:10; 1QM 1:1; the law in Paul, Gal 3:10–13; Rom. 4:13 ff.; the devil and lies instead of God and truth, 1QS 2:4 f.; 1QM 1:1; CD 6:1; 1QH 5:26 f.; 7:12; 1QpHab 10:9 f.; Jn. 8:41–44; Rev. 3:9). Cf. also Paul's interpretation of current Jewish attitudes in the light of the Scriptures in 2 Cor. 3:4–18 and Gal. 4:21–31. Such polemic had the air of prophetic denunciation: Israel is stubborn (CD 1:14 quoting Hos. 4:16) and godless (Test.Lev. 14:4). God has hidden his face from Israel (CD 1:3). In the process Judah, in particular, became a negative concept (CD 4:3; 4:11; 8:3, the princes of Judah have become like those who remove the bounds, quoting Hos. 5:10). This exegesis was also applied to disloyal members of the community (CD 19:26 f.), so that the speakers sound almost like Gentile opponents of Judaism. In line with this, Paul, the missionary to the Gentiles, took up the arguments of the Gentile-Jewish polemic (1 Thess. 2:14–16). We meet the sharpest form of the polemic in the Johannine writings, which in their generalizing usage seem to separate themselves entirely from the Jews.

Jewish writing remains so polemically involved that dangerous misunderstandings are unavoidable, where the different sides are considered in isolation. After the destruction of the temple feelings were so intense that opposing positions were treated as non-existent. Thus the Talmud is almost completely silent about its opponents. The last step is legal separation through the introduction of the petition on heretics into the Eighteen Benedictions: "May the Nazarenes and heretics disappear in a moment; they shall be erased from the book of life and not be written with the faithful" (cf. Berakoth 28b–29a). This legal act of formal exclusion is presupposed in Jn. 9:22 and 12:42.

(c) The remnant and Israel as a whole. The positive side of such polemic was an apologetic presentation of one's own position. Each individual group relied on the fact that it was the separated → remnant of Israel which would lead to the eschatological community of the saved. A sign of this is the frequent use in these contexts of the prep. "out of" (Heb. min, "from", in the sense of separation from something; e.g. a plant root to spring from Israel, CD 1:7; raised from Aaron, from Israel, CD 6:2 f.; those few who have departed, CD 8:16, 40). The self-consciousness arising from this separation expresses itself in such self-designations as "the house of truth", "house of holiness", "house of steadfastness" (1QS 5:5 f.; 8:5–9; 9:5; CD 3:19).

It is striking, however, that everyone refrains from simply identifying his group with the eschatological total-Israel. Thus 1 Cor. 10:18 lacks a corresponding "Israel according to the spirit". The nearest approach to this is the "community of the new covenant" (1QpHab 2:3; CD 6:19; 8:21; cf. 1 Cor. 11:25; 2 Cor. 3:6; Lk. 22:20). Even if primarily one's own group is intended, an open attitude towards a future gathered Israel is retained (1QSa 2:12). Separation from Israel is election for Israel (1QS 5:5 f.; 8:5; 9:5; Test. 8:2). The community of the remnant realizes its commission to call the entire people to repentance. The natural way of belonging to Israel by descent (the child of a Jewish mother is a Jew) enters into tension with being a Jew through obedience (which particularly in the case of men demands a decision to learn and to fulfil the commandments). This was never devalued but remained a basic tenet. The goal was an eschatological community in a renewed form, as it was already foreshadowed in the present in the groups and as the community at Sinai represented all future communities which are already included in it (Deut. 29:15; cf. Pesahim 10:5). The community of the remnant is a → light for the whole community (Test.Lev. 14:3; cf. Matt. 5:14). For their sakes the whole of Israel will be saved in the end (Test.Sim. 6:2, 5; 7:2; Test.Ben. 10:11; cf. Rom. 11:26; Sanhedrin 11:1). The clearest expression of hope for the whole of Israel occurs in prayers which frequently conclude with a reference to the whole of Israel (Gal. 6:16; Eighteen Benedictions; Berakoth 60b; Shabbath 12b; the Ahabah spoken before the Shema; and often in the canticle Yigdal). The remnant of the elect in the NT also hoped for the salvation and the re-establishment of Israel as one people (Mk. 13:27; Lk. 24:21; Acts 1:6). The expected judgment will be carried out through the twelve disciples, whose → number indicates the totality of Israel (Matt. 19:28; Lk. 22:30).

Out of this belonging together in the hope of Israel on the basis of common Scriptures there resulted a mutual sense of responsibility in every conflict, just as the prophet was the accuser and intercessor at one and the same time and took his people's sufferings on himself. Internal Jewish polemic followed directly from the affirmation of Israel; it sought the realization of the complete Israel.

(d) The Messiah and Israel. All the groups were united in the belief that Israel's hope would be realized in individual figures who would usher in the eschatological salvation. It was in the time of most extreme need that people hoped that God would make himself known to them, and lead them out of their obscurity and ambiguity. All these many attempts at messianic realization found people ready to believe in them, and all ended in apparent catastrophe: from the Teacher of Righteousness at Qumran (Num. 24:17; the star from Jacob applied to the Teacher, CD 7:18 f.), from John and Jesus via the messianic pretenders reported by Josephus (War 2, 4, 1–3), to the Zealot leaders (Josephus, War 5, 1, 1–2) and Bar Kokhba. Only two groups survived the catastrophe: the → Pharisees, from whose tradition Rabbi Johanan ben Zakkai excluded all messianic or Zealot tendencies at Jamnia (A.D. 70); and the Jewish believers in Jesus who stressed their eschatological, messianic beliefs over against the Pharisees. The messianic belief of the earliest stratum of NT tradition can, therefore, be considered representative of a thoroughly Jewish outlook at the time of the second temple.

Each group took and applied key statements from the Jewish scripture to the person who for them represented Israel. This representative is the elect one among the community of the elect, the righteous one among the righteous, the son among the sons, the servant among the servants (Isa. 53), who takes Israel's suffering on himself. The Son of man, the figure of judgment representing the people of Israel in Dan. 7:13 (→ Son of God) was now referred to the messiah. As God constantly speaks to Israel, he also speaks to the Christ. As Israel is enabled in a unique way to hear and to obey, the Christ is also (Jn. 5:19, 36; Matt. 5:17; 11:27). Terms can therefore also be applied to him which in the Heb. Scriptures denoted Israel; e.g. the vineyard, the vine (Jer. 2:21; Ps. 80:8 f.; 2 Esd. 5:23; Jn. 15:1–8), the corner stone (Matt. 21:42; Mk. 12:10 f.; Lk. 20:17; Acts 4:11; Eph. 2:20; 1 Pet. 2:6–8; cf. Ps. 118:22 ff.; → Rock); the dove, metaphor for Israel (Ps. 68:13;

2 Esd. 5:26; → Bird), descends on Jesus at his baptism (Matt. 3:16; Mk. 1:10; Lk. 3:22).

In all the groups history was polemically interpreted. Past history and especially contemporary events were adapted in the manner of a pesher (cf. CD, 1QS, 1QM, and the passion narrative in the NT). The connection of Israel and the messiah runs through the entire NT which is a consistent, urgent, infinitely varied pesher seeking to prove that to be consistent with itself Judaism must recognize Jesus as the messiah (cf. especially Lk. 2:30–32, 38; 24:21, 24, 44; → Jesus Christ). According to Luke, faith in Jesus is nothing but the legitimate extension of Pharisaic belief (Acts 1–5; 28:20, 23). In every apparent antithesis the messiah stands in continuity with Israel as its fulfilment (Matt. 5:17). According to Jn. 1:47, no one is a "true son of Israel" until he has recognized Jesus as Israel's messiah, the fulfilment of ancient promises and the renewal of the old covenant which has never been revoked. In Rev. the conversion of the Jews is presented as the high point of the eschatological victory (7:1–8).

The messiah and Israel stand inseparably together. Whoever does not decide for this elect One opposes him. Whoever refuses to trust him (cf. faith in the Teacher, 1QpHab 8:1–3, with faith in Jesus throughout the NT) has thereby decided against Israel. He has lost his descent from Abraham (Jn. 8:49) and belongs to the synagogue of Satan (Rev. 3:9). He is a son of darkness, a member of the community of Belial (CD 4:13, 16; 8:2; 1QH 4:10–16). Nevertheless, both the one who evinces such trust (even though it should be proved false) and the one who refuses it stand within Judaism.

Israel and its Scriptures are the critical principle by which every messianic pretender must be judged: the messiahs of Qumran were expected from Aaron and Israel (CD 6:2 f.; 1QSa 2:11–21); the messiah Jesus from the patriarchs (Rom. 1:3; 9:5; Matt. 1:1–17 par. Lk. 3:23–38; Matt. 11:2–6; Jn. 5:39; cf. Sanhedrin 93b, 98b; Shabbath 63a). This was the only way in which Israel could protect herself against excess in spirit and prophecy, against the majority of messianic pretenders and against overhasty solutions of the problems of her existence. The witnesses of the NT also knew that the reality of Israel is the touchstone of christology. Therefore they clung passionately to Israel as the basic foundation of the Christ event. Therefore, there emerges from the NT itself the sharpest opposition to any abandonment of Israel (Rom. 9–11; Jn. 4:22). Only in living union with Israel is → Jesus the Christ. Without this historical reality he dissolves into an idea, a gnostic myth, and a docetic speculation. Hence in the case of the messiah Jesus, → baptism and → Lord's Supper are the feasts of Israel. The → cross he bore was a sharing in the suffering of Israel. Although Jewish Christians engaged in the dialogue within Judaism found themselves cut off because of him from their Jewish brethren, the NT demonstrates that Jesus, the Jew and Hebrew, represents Israel completely in his person. He is bound up with Israel from first to last.

(e) Mission. This identification of the bringer of salvation with Israel entails consequent missionary activity among Jews. As Jesus turned exclusively to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, his messengers were to go only into the towns of Israel (Matt. 10:5 f.; 15:24). Paul, the Jewish missionary (1 Cor. 9:20), also demonstrated the priority of Judaism in salvation history (Rom. 1:16) by always going first of all to the Jews (Acts 13:14; 41:1), and always acknowledging that he was a Jew (2 Cor. 11:22; Phil. 3:5; Acts 22:3). Despite the failures of his Jewish mission he held fast to Israel, his people (cf. Acts 28:20). On the basis of the Jewish Scriptures Paul demonstrates in Rom. 9–11 in a kind of commentary-cum-anthology of OT teaching that it is just Israel's present hardening which is causing the message of Christ to come to the Gentiles who thus acquire a share in Israel's salvation. In the end-time which is imminent the whole of Israel will be saved by God himself (Rom. 11:26). An anticipatory sign of this undiminished faithfulness of God is Jewish Christianity, the faithful remnant of Judaism, represented by Paul himself. The question may be asked whether Paul's removal of the barrier between Israel and the Gentiles did not hasten the division of Israel, even though this was not his intention.

The position of the various NT writers vis-à-vis Judaism is revealed in their use of terms. Thus in Paul Jew is used 24 times, very often in opposition to → Greek, Gentile, and mostly in a positive sense. Israel (17 times) stands for either the historic people or the eschatological whole Israel but significantly not for Paul's own community. In the Synoptics as a whole, Israel stands for the people and also the land (e.g. Matt. 20:1, 21:1). It is used in preference to Jew. Matt. contains the expression "house of Israel" (Matt. 10:6; 15:24 f.; cf. Acts 7:47; Heb. 8:8; 10:2). Jew is used particularly in the phrase "King of the Jews" (Matt. 27:11, 29, 37; cf. 42; Mk. 15:2, 9, 12, 18, 26; Lk. 23:3, 37 f.; Jn. 18:33, 39; 19:3, 19, 21) and almost without exception on the lips of Gentiles with somewhat deprecating overtones (Matt. 2:2; 28:15; Mk. 7:3; Lk. 7:3; 23:51). The use of the word Israel in general clearly maintains the connection with the reality and hope of Israel. In Acts Israel is used more frequently in the account of the Palestinian church (11 out of 15 passages; cf. 28:20 with 1:6; 2:36), while Jew is used more frequently in the narrative of Paul's missionary journeys (68 out of 79 passages). This corresponds to Hel. usage. In Jn. it is clear from the few but fundamental passages where Israel is used (1:49 and 12:13 of Jesus as king; 1:31 as the one to be revealed through John), that the writer is still within the sphere of the whole of Israel, even though his polemic is extremely sharp. This is expressed in the Johannine use of Jew (70 times), which can indeed be used neutrally of the people or the religious community (e.g. 4:9; 18:35) and as in the Synoptics (King of the Jews, 18:33; 19:19 ff.). But mostly it has the effect of expressing aloofness or, especially where it denotes the ruling classes (e.g. 1:19; 7:11; 18:12), sharp rejection. While the Synoptics, especially Matt., distinguish Jesus' opponents according to the groups they belong to, Jn. speaks in a general way of the Jews. In Rev. Jew has a positive sense. But it is not applied to the community which does not believe in Jesus (2:9; 3:9). Israel is the true eschatological people of God (2:14; 7:4; 21:12).

3. From the Gentile Mission to the Gentile Christian Church. Only when those to whom the Jewish mission was originally addressed overwhelmingly rejected the offer did the mission to the Gentiles arise (Acts 13:46). The tradition therefore had to be restated to meet the demands of missionary practice among Gentiles. The history of Israel which had been so prominent in addressing the Jews (cf. Acts 2:17–36; 3:22–26; 7:2–53) was dropped from the instruction given, because the people did not have the preparation necessary to understand it. (The revelation on Sinai is not mentioned in any confession of faith.) But despite this reduction, God's encounter with the Gentiles remained rooted in the historical experience of Israel in the teaching of the Jewish missionaries to the Gentiles. The Jesus-covenant is the extension of the Sinai covenant (cf. Rom. 9–11; 1 Cor. 11:25; 2 Cor. 3:6 ff.; Gal. 4:24 ff.; Heb. 8:8 ff.; 10:16 ff.). In terms of world history the Christ-event became the inclusion of the nations in the Sinai event.

Because of mounting internal tensions and disappointment over the attitude of the dispersion, the position of Jewish Christians in the land of Israel became continually more difficult. Step by step they were transformed from a competing group to the independent opponents of the Pharisees who now represented orthodox Judaism. From A.D. 70 onwards Jewish Christians saw their own way of faith as something distinct from that of the synagogue in the Jewish community. Legal separation from the synagogue (above 2 (b)) meant exclusion from every area of communal life (Tosefta Hullin 2:21 ff.).

The path of Gentile Christianity turned from Judaism and led into Gentile anti-Semitism, which was on the increase after the catastrophe. The prophets' criticism of Israel was misunderstood as anti-Jewish and repeated irresponsibly. Even when the words were kept their meaning was distorted to imply the opposite, and this served to sharpen Gentile hatred of Jews. In place of living and healthy dialogue between the groups there arose what was more like a dogmatizing monologue.

In Clement of Rome (perhaps a Jewish Christian, shortly before A.D. 100) one can still trace a nearness to the world of the Heb. Bible and to Judaism (cf. 1 Clem. 4:13; 8:3; 29:2 f.; 31:2–4; 43; 55:6). But Ignatius of Antioch, a Gentile Christian, writing c. A.D. 115, at the time of the persecutions under Trajan, expressed the opinion that a Christian must necessarily be an opponent of Jews (Mag. 8; 10:3). Barnabas and Justin, both Gentile Christians, wrote during and after the war against Bar Kokhba. Barnabas uses the word Israel mostly in connection with his exegesis of the Bible against Israel (sometimes historical, often typological, 4:15; 6:7; 8:1–3; 11:1; 12:2, 5; 16:5), but he does not yet dare to take over this word for the → church. Justin, on the other hand, asserts boldly: "We are . . . the true spiritual Israel" (Dial. 11, 5; cf. 100, 4; 123, 9). Their own Bible remains obscure to the Jewish people, because they do not listen to the voice of the Lord. Only the church possesses true insight (Barn. 8:7; 10:12; Just., Dial. 9, 1; 33, 1 f.). Israel has a greatness beyond time, which has never belonged to the Jews but always to Christians (the contesting of the covenant, Barn. 4:6). The way of Barnabas and Justin became the way of the church. After the council of Nicaea (A.D. 325) it was finally stated that church and synagogue have nothing in common (cf. Eusebius, Vita Constantini 3, 18). R. Mayer

'Iακώβ | 'Iακώβ (Iakōb), Jacob; 'Iάκωβος (Iakōbos), James; 'Iουδαία (Ioudaia), Judea; 'Iούδας (Ioudas), Judah, Judas, Jude.

OT Jacob was the second son of Isaac and Rebekah and grandson of the patriarch Abraham. He was favoured by his mother, while Isaac was partial to his other son Esau. Early in his life Jacob obtained the birthright due his brother Esau by giving him "a mess of pottage" in return for the birthright. This transfer of birthright is illustrated in the Nuzi material where the rights of primogeniture allowed for transferal of privilege to another (cf. ANET, 219 f.). According to the Deuteronomic legislation, the right of the first-born included a double portion of the paternal estate (Deut. 21:17), and most probably involved leadership of the clan as well (Gen. 27:29).

The subterfuge by which Jacob obtained the blessing of Isaac was initiated and encouraged by Rebekah (Gen. 27:5–17). The blessing (Gen. 27:27–29) apparently was regarded as having the validity that a last will and testament has in contemporary practice. This too is illustrated in the Nuzi material where the last words of a dying father were upheld in litigation before witnesses (ANET, 220).

The deception led to Jacob's flight to the home of his uncle Laban. As he stopped for the night at Luz, Jacob had a dream of a ladder reaching to heaven (Gen. 28:10–17). In the → dream the Lord spoke to Jacob reiterating the promise given earlier to Abraham (Gen. 12:7; 13:15, 16; 15:17–21; 17:1–8; 24:7). Not only did the reiteration of the promise include the affirmation that the land would belong to the descendants of the patriarchs (Gen. 28:13), but that they and their descendants would be the vehicle by which God's favour would extend to the Gentiles (28:14).

Jacob's dramatic encounter with the Lord led to his calling the site Bethel (i.e. "house of God") and that site continued to be known as Bethel throughout the OT tradition. Jacob was hired by Laban and in return for seven years of labour he was to receive Laban's daughter Rachel as his wife. Laban however deceived Jacob into marrying his other daughter Leah and Jacob continued to work for seven more years that he might marry Rachel.

Leah became the mother of Jacob's sons Reuben, Simeon, Levi, Judah, Issachar and Zebulun.

Rachel, however, did not bear children immediately and, in keeping with the prevailing custom frequently cited in the Nuzi material (ANET, 220), gave a concubine, Bilhah, to her husband. Bilhah became the mother of Dan and Naphtali. At length Rachel gave birth to two sons, Joseph and Benjamin. Jacob also had two sons, Gad and Asher, by Zilpah, Leah's maid.

Relations between Jacob and Laban and his family became strained due in part to Jacob's increase in wealth (Gen. 31:1, 2), and a separation was effected by Jacob. On hearing of Jacob's departure Laban pursued him. When he reached Jacob he berated him for several things including the alleged theft of the family gods (Gen. 31:30), which, in reality, Rachel had taken and secreted in the camel's saddle. The possession of the family gods (t^{e}rāpîm), according to the Nuzi material, designated the one who had the right to the paternal estate. After a mutual agreement that they would not again interfere with one another Jacob resumed his journey. (On the background of this period see E. A. Speiser, "New Kirkuk Documents Relating to Family Laws", Annual of American Schools of Oriental Research 13, 1930, 1–73; C. H. Gordon, "Biblical Customs and the Nuzu Tablets", BA 3, 1940, 1–12; and "The Patriarchal Narratives", JNES 13, 1954, 56–59.)

In a dramatic event at the river Jabbok Jacob wrestled with a man whom he identified as God (Gen. 32:30). It was during this experience that Jacob's name was changed to Israel (→ Israēl). The site of the encounter was named Peniel ("face of God") by Jacob.

As the homeward journey continued, Jacob encountered Esau (Gen. 33:1–4) whose approach he had heard of earlier (Gen. 32:6). A reconciliation was effected by the two brothers which seems to have been an enduring one.

After an unfortunate experience with the clan of Shechem (Gen. 34), Jacob removed to Bethel but not before he had all the images of foreign deities removed from his household. After the images were buried under an oak at Shechem the Lord appeared to Jacob and the terms of the Abrahamic covenant were again affirmed.

On the journey from Bethel Jacob suffered the loss of his wife Rachel, who died while giving birth to Benjamin. This tragedy was soon followed by the death of his father Isaac (Gen. 35:29) and the banishment of his son Joseph to Egypt (Gen. 37).

Joseph rose to power in Egypt and his wisdom and foresight led to his overseeing the storage of food in Egypt. This propitious act enabled the Egyptians to have provisions while many in the surrounding areas were ravaged by famine. The famine struck Canaan and Jacob sent his sons to Egypt to obtain food. He kept his youngest son Benjamin with him, however. Alleging that they were spies, Joseph required them to bring Benjamin to Egypt to prove their word and, hence, their innocence. After bringing Benjamin to Egypt, Joseph identified himself as their brother and arranged to have Jacob brought to Egypt as well. Jacob lived in Egypt for 17 years. When he was near death he exacted from Joseph the promise that he would bury him in Canaan. He adopted Joseph's sons, Ephraim and Manasseh (Gen. 48: 1–6) and pronounced a → blessing on them as well as his own sons (Gen. 48:8–49:27). Jacob died at the age of 147 years and was buried with his ancestors in the cave of Machpelah (Gen. 50:1–13).

The name Jacob became an eponym for Israel and occurs frequently with that connotation in the OT (Num. 23:7, 10, 23; Psa. 14:7; Isa. 48:20; Amos 3:13 etc.).

The patriarch Jacob is frequently cited in the OT in connection with the acts of God on his behalf. God is frequently described as the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob (Exod. 3:6, 15) and the covenant given to the patriarchs is cited in the same connection (2 Ki. 13:23). Malachi assured the people that the love shown by God to Jacob had not been withheld from them with the words, "I have loved Jacob but I have hated Esau" (Mal. 1:2, 3). Typical of the way in which the intertestamental literature maintains the covenantal aspects of the name Jacob is the citation in 2 Macc. 1:2 where it is affirmed that God will remember his covenant with the patriarchs.

Iakōbos (James) is the Hellenized form of Iakōb. This form is used frequently by Josephus for the name of the patriarch Jacob.

NT In the NT Iakōb denotes both the patriarch Jacob and the father of Joseph (Matt. 1:15, 16). Aside from the citation of the name Jacob in the genealogies of Matt. and Lk. (Matt. 1:2, 15 f.; Lk. 3:34), several allusions are made to events in Jacob's life by the NT writers. In Jn. 4:5, 6, 12 reference is made to a plot of ground that Jacob gave to Joseph which was the site of Jacob's well (Gen. 33:19; 48:22). Stephen in Acts 7 refers to several events in the life of Jacob (vv. 8, 12, 14) and the writer of Hebrews cites Jacob in Heb. 11, specifically in his relationship to the → promise given to → Abraham (v. 9) and as an example of → faith (v. 21). The transfer of the birthright is cited by the writer of Hebrews (12:16, 17) who uses Esau's selling of his birthright as a warning to his readers not to put off repentance.

In Rom. 9:6–13 Paul cites the events surrounding the birth of Jacob and Esau in a passage explicating the fact that God's work of election is not based on works (v. 11). Paul in this passage refers to the purposes expressed in the words spoken by God before the births of Jacob and Esau, "the elder shall serve the younger" (Gen. 25:23). He quotes Mal. 1:2, 3 in this connection as well. Allusion is made to Jacob's dream at Bethel in John 1:51 where Christ transfers the image of the ladder to himself.

"The God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob" is an expression that occurs in the NT as well as the more singular expression, "The God of Jacob". In his defence of his teaching on the resurrection Jesus used the formula "The God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob" to illustrate that God was the God of the living (Matt. 22:32; Mark 12:26; Luke 20:37). The same expression was used by Peter (Acts 3:13) in its specific connection with the patriarchs, "the God of our fathers" in speaking to Jews. The appellation "God of Jacob" in Acts 7:46 is used as an appellation for God and seems to reflect the language of Ps. 132:5.

Jacob is mentioned along with the patriarchs Abraham and Isaac in Matt. 8:11 where their fellowship in heaven is the reward of the people of faith. Jacob is used as an eponym of the Jewish nation in Luke 1:33 and Rom. 11:26 (the latter being a free quotation from Isa. 59:20). T. McComiskey

Ἰούδα	Ἰούδα (Iouda), Judah; Ἰούδας (Ioudas), Judah, Judas.

OT The word Iouda in the NT, LXX and secular Gk. represents the Heb. word yᵉhûḏâh (Judah). The meaning of the word is uncertain but probably means "praised" (Gen. 29:35; → Israēl, OT 1).

In the OT Judah was the fourth son of Jacob. His mother was Leah. He seems to have held great influence among his brothers as evinced by their acquiescence to his wish that Joseph be sent to Egypt (Gen. 37:26, 27) and by his acting as spokesman for them in Egypt (Gen. 43:3–10; 44:16–34). Judah figures prominently in the blessing of Jacob where he was promised a position of honour among his brothers, as well as the prospect of sovereignty and dominion realized in a future king (Gen. 49:10 RSV).

Several others in the OT also bore the name Judah (Ezr. 3:9; 10:23; Neh. 11:9; 12:8, 36). The name Judah continued to be born by the tribe of which Jacob's son was the progenitor. The tribe does not seem to have distinguished itself greatly in the history of Israel, although it did comprise a vanguard in a strategic encounter with the Canaanites (Jdg. 1:1–7).

The territory occupied by the tribe of Judah consisted mainly of highland country in the area of Canaan westward from the Dead Sea. The territory extended to the Mediterranean Sea and was bounded on the north by the tribal territories of Benjamin and Dan. The Negev formed the southern boundary.

The rôle of the tribe of Judah in the period of the united monarchy seems to have been no different from that of any other tribe. However, when the division of the monarchy occurred the southern kingdom became known as the kingdom of Judah, although elements in the tribe of Benjamin remained loyal to the house of David as well.

The history of the kingdom of Judah was threatened by internal and external difficulties. Not all her kings were wise, but several made positive contributions to her welfare. During the reign of Uzziah (767–739 B.C.) the fortunes of Judah as well as of Israel were greatly enhanced by the quiescence of Assyria on the world scene. This period of affluence, however, was characterized by an internal sickness, for the → covenant stipulations were being violated leading to societal wrongs that the eighth century prophets warned would lead to her downfall. Under Hezekiah (716–686 B.C.) a serious Assyrian incursion came to an end with the withdrawal of the Assyrian forces. While Hezekiah's foreign policy was, at times, unwise (Isa. 30:15) his contribution to the kingdom of Judah was generally commendable.

Following Hezekiah's reign the fortunes of Judah began to suffer again. The burgeoning Assyrian influence in Syro-Palestine ultimately led to the defeat of Judah. Nebuchadnezzar extracted tribute from Judah some time after his rise to power in 605 B.C., but successive attacks ultimately led to the end of Judah as a kingdom in 587 B.C.

NT In Matt. 2:6 Iouda occurs in the sense of the territory of Judah in a quotation from Micah 5:2. The reference is to Bethlehem of Judea (Matt. 2:5) which was located in the territory of Judah. In Luke 1:39 Iouda occurs in the expression eis polin Iouda. Since Luke invariably uses Ioudaia for the province it seems more likely that Iouda here is a town now unknown.

In Heb. 7:14 reference is made to the descent of Christ from the tribe of Judah, a tribe which had no priestly prerogatives. The point is made that the Levitical priesthood was unable to achieve perfection for its adherents, hence the need for another priest. This represents a change in the law (v. 12), for Christ did not descend from the tribe of Levi which, according to the law, was the tribe from which the priests were to be chosen.

In Heb. 8:8 the house of Judah is cited along with the house of Israel to represent the whole nation. The reference here is to the two kingdoms of the divided monarchy and occurs in a quotation from Jer. 31:31–34 where the new covenant is predicted.

The tribe of Judah is cited in Rev. 5:5; 7:5 as well. In the former, Christ's descent from the tribe of Judah is reflected in the appellation "Lion of the tribe of Judah" (→ Animal). In Rev. 7:5, the tribe of Judah is cited along with other tribes with whom the group numbering "a hundred and forty-four thousand" is associated (→ Number, art. chilias NT 4).

Ioudas occurs as the name of several individuals in the NT. (1) The fourth son of Jacob (Matt. 1:2, 3; Luke 3:33, 34). (2) An ancestor of Christ (Luke 3:26). The spelling here however is Ioda (Joda RSV). He is the son of Joanan. (3) An ancestor of Christ (Luke 3:30) who was the son of Joseph. (4) Judas, surnamed the Galilean, who participated in an insurrection during a tax census under Quirinius (Acts 5:37). See also Josephus (Ant. 18). (5) Judas of Damascus (Acts 9:11) who gave Saul of Tarsus (Paul) lodging after Saul's vision on the road to Damascus. It was there that Ananias was to go to find Saul. (6) Judas, a brother of Jesus (Matt. 13:55; Mark 6:3). This Judas is considered by some to be the same as Jude, the author of the NT epistle. (7) Judas, the son of James, one of the twelve apostles (Luke 6:16; Acts 1:13). He was one of the group who engaged in prayer in an upper room after the ascension of Christ. (8) Judas Iscariot, the son of Simon, who betrayed Jesus. The meaning of Iscariot is not clear. It may have been a Hellenization of the Heb. "man of Qerioth". He is cited first in the accounts of the choosing of the twelve (Matt. 10:4; Mark. 3:19; Luke 6:16). His betrayal of Jesus (John 13:26–30) was decisively carried out after Jesus said to him, "What you are going to do, do quickly" (RSV). After an unsuccessful effort to atone for his wrong by returning the money paid him for his treachery Matthew records that Judas hanged himself (27:5; → Akeldama; cf. B. Gärtner, Iscariot, Facet Books, 1971). (9) Judas Barsabbas was one of the two chosen to accompany Paul and Barnabas to Antioch (Acts 15:22). Judas Barsabbas was chosen along with Silas by the Jerusalem Council to substantiate the council's decision. T. McComiskey

→ Abraham, → Babylon, → Egypt, → Election, → Greek, → Jerusalem, → Jesus Christ, → Levite, → People, → Pharisee, → Priest, → Prophet, → Sadducee, → Samaritan, → Temple

(a). Y. Aharoni, The Land of the Bible: A Historical Geography, 1967; W. F. Albright, From the Stone Age to Christianity, 1957²; Yahweh and the Gods of Canaan, 1968; Archaeology and the Religion of Israel, 1953³; The Biblical Period from Abraham to Ezra, 1963; and The Archaeology of Palestine, revised ed. 1960; A. Alt, Essays on Old Testament History and Religion, 1966; B. W. Anderson, Understanding the Old Testament, 1957; G. L. Archer, "Hebrew Language", ZPEB III 66–76; M. Avi-Yonah, Encyclopedia of Archaeological Excavation in the Holy Land, I–IV, 1976–; L. Baeck, The Pharisees, 1957; S. W. Baron, A Social and Religious History of the Jews, I–XV, 1952–73²; J. Bright, A History of Israel, revised ed. 1972; and "Hebrew Religion", IDB II 560–70; F. F. Bruce, Israel and the Nations, 1963; M. Buber, Two Types of Faith, 1951; and The Prophetic Faith, 1960; D. R. Catchpole, The Trial of Jesus: A Study in the Gospels and Jewish Historiography from 1770 to the Present Day, 1971; H. Cazelles, "The Hebrews", in D. J. Wiseman, ed., Peoples of Old Testament Times, 1973, 1–28; G. A. Danell, Studies in the Name Israel in the Old Testament, 1946 (see also the review by I. Engnell in Symbolae Biblicae Upsalienses 7, 1946); W. D. Davies, The Gospel and the Land: Early Christianity and Jewish Territorial Doctrine, 1974; J. D. M. Derrett, "Cursing Jesus (I Cor. xii. 3): The Jews as Religious 'Persecutors' ", NTS 21, 1974–75, 544–54; S. Dubnov, History of the Jews, I–IV, revised by M. Spiegel, 1967–71; W. Eichrodt, Theology of the Old Testament, I, 1961, II, 1967; O. Eissfeldt, The Old Testament: An Introduction, 1965; I. Epstein, Judaism, 1945; and The Jewish Way of Life, 1946; L. Finkelstein, ed., The Jews: Their History, Culture and Religion, I–IV, 1949; G. Fohrer, History of Israelite Religion, 1973; W. Förster, Palestinian Judaism in New Testament Times, 1964; E. R. Goodenough, Jewish Symbols in the Graeco-Roman Period, I–XIII, 1953–65; J. van Goudoever, "The Place of Israel in Luke's Gospel", NovT 11, 1966, 111 ff.; L. Goppelt, Jesus, Paul and Judaism, 1964; F. C. Grant, Ancient Judaism and the New Testament, 1960; and Roman Hellenism and the New Testament, 1962; M. Grant, Herod the Great, 1971; 1962 L. H. Grollenberg, Atlas of the Bible, 1956; A. Haldar, "Israel, Names and Associations of", IDB II 765 f.; A. T. Hanson, Studies in Paul's Technique and Theology, 1974; R. K. Harrison, A History of Old Testament Times, 1957; and Introduction to the Old Testament, 1970; M. Hengel, Judaism and Hellenism, I–II, 1974; S. Herrmann, A History of Israel in Old Testament Times, 1975; H. W. Hoehner, Herod Antipas, 1972; E. Jacob, Theology of the Old Testament, 1959; A. Jeffrey, "Hebrew Language", IDB II 553–60; J. Jervell, Luke and the People of God: A New Look at Luke-Acts, 1972; J. Jocz, The Jewish People and Jesus Christ, 1949; E. Käsemann, "Paul and Israel", New Testament Questions of Today, 1969, 183–87; Y. Kaufmann, The Religion of Israel, 1961; H.-J. Kraus, Worship in Ancient Israel, 1966; G. Lindeskog, "Israel in the New Testament", Svensk Exegetisk Årsbok 26, 1961, 57 ff.; J. McKay, Religion in Judah under the Assyrians, 732–609 B.C., SBT Second Series 26, 1973; I. H. Marshall, "Palestinian and Hellenistic Christianity: Some Critical Comments", NTS 19, 1972–73, 271–87; A. D. H. Mayes, Israel in the Period of the Judges, SBT Second Series 29, 1974; G. F. Moore, Judaism in the First Centuries of the Christian Era, I–III, 1927–30; J. Morgenstern, "Israel, Social and Economic Development of", IDB II 766–70; S. Mowinckel, He That Cometh, 1956; J. Munck, "Israel and the Gentiles", Paul and the Salvation of Mankind, 1959, 247–81; and Christ and Israel

1967; M. Pearlman, The Maccabees, 1973; J. H. Negenman, New Atlas of the Bible, ed. H. H. Rowley, 1969; M. Noth, The History of Israel, 1960²; and The Laws of the Pentateuch and Other Studies, 1966; S. Pancaro, "The Relationship of the Church to Israel in the Gospel of St. John", NTS 21, 1974–75, 396–405; J. Pedersen, Israel, Its Life and Culture, I–II, 1926, III–IV, 1940; J. B. Pritchard, Ancient Near Eastern Texts Relating to the Old Testament, 1955²; G. von Rad, Old Testament Theology, I, 1962, II, 1965; G. von Rad, K. G. Kuhn, W. Gutbrod, Israēl etc., TDNT III 357–91; O. S. Rankin, Jewish Religious Polemic in Narrative, Poetry, Letters and Debate, (1956) 1969; P. Richardson, Israel in the Apostolic Church, 1969; H. Ringgren, Israelite Religion, 1966; C. Roth and G. Wigoder, eds., Encyclopaedia Judaica, I–XVI, 1971–72; L. Roth, Judaism: A Portrait, 1960; H. H. Rowley, "Israel, History of", IDB II 750–65; The Missionary Message of the Old Testament, 1945; From Joseph to Joshua, 1951; The Faith of Israel, 1956; From Moses to Qumran, 1963; Men of God: Studies in Old Testament History and Prophecy, 1963; The Servant of the Lord and Other Essays, 1965²; and Worship in Ancient Israel, 1967; S. Safrai, M. Stern et al., The Jewish People in the First Century: Historical Geography, Political History, Social, Cultural and Religious Life and Institutions, I, 1974; S. Sandmel, We Jews and Jesus, 1965; S. Sandmel, ed., Old Testament Issues, 1969; E. Schürer, A History of the Jewish People in the Time of Jesus Christ, I, 1–2, II, 1–3, 1885–90; Vol. I revised by G. Vermes, F. Millar and M. Black, 1973; C. H. H. Scobie, "North and South: Tension and Reconciliation in Biblical History", in J. R. McKay and J. F. Miller, eds., Biblical Studies: Essays in Honour of William Barclay, 1976, 87–98; M. H. Shepherd, Jr., "The Jews in the Gospel of John. Another Level of Meaning", Anglican Theological Review, Suppl. Series 3, 1974, 95–112; I. Singer, ed., The Jewish Encyclopedia, I–XII, 1901–6; J. N. Sevenster, The Roots of Pagan Anti-Semitism in the Ancient World, 1975; A. N. Sherwin-White, Roman Society and Roman Law in the New Testament, 1963; R. A. Stewart, Rabbinic Theology, 1961; W. B. Tatum, "The Epoch of Israel: Luke i–ii and the Theological Plan of Luke–Acts", NTS 13, 1966–67, 184–95; H. St. J. Thackeray, Josephus: The Man and the Historian, 1967; D. W. Thomas, ed., Documents from Old Testament Times, 1958; J. A. Thompson, "Israel, Religion of", ZPEB III 354–72; S. van Tilborg, The Jewish Leaders in Matthew, 1972; V. A. Tscherikover, Hellenistic Civilization and the Jews, 1959; R. de Vaux, Ancient Israel: Its Life and Institutions, 1961; G. Vermes, Jesus the Jew, 1973; C. Vriezen, An Outline of Old Testament Theology, 1958; and The Religion of Ancient Israel, 1967; M. Weipert, The Settlement of the Israelite Tribes In Palestine, 1971; A. L. Williams, Adversus Judaeos: A Bird's Eye View of Christian Apologiae until the Renaissance, 1935; D. J. Wiseman, Illustrations from Biblical Archaeology, 1958; H. W. Wolff, Old Testament Anthropology, 1974; G. E. Wright, The Old Testament against its Environment, 1950; God Who Acts, 1952; Biblical Archaeology, 1962²; and The Old Testament and Theology, 1969; G. E. Wright ed., The Bible and the Near East, Essays in Honour of William Foxwell Albright, 1961; S. Zeitlin, The Rise and Fall of the Judean State, I–II, 1967–69.

(b). M. Avi-Yonah, Geschichte der Juden im Zeitalter des Talmud in den Tagen von Rom und Byzanz, 1962; O. Bächli, Israel und die Völker, AThANT 41, 1962; K. Bernhardt, Schalom. Studien zur Glaube und Geschichte Israels. A. Jepsen zum 70. Geburtstag, AzTh Reihe 1, 46, 1971; H. Bietenhard, "Kirche und Synagoge in den ersten Jahrhunderten", ThZ 4, 1948, 174 ff.; E. Bickermann, Der Gott der Makkabäer, 1937; N. A. Dahl, Das Volk Gottes, 1941; N. A. Dahl and G. Schrenk, "Der Name Israel", Judaica 6, 1950, 161 ff.; P. Diepold, Israels Land, BWANT 95, 1972; E. Dinkler, "Prädestination bei Paulus", in W. Schneemelcher, ed., Festschrift für Günther Dehn, 1957, 81–82; W. Eckert, N. P. Levinson and M. Stöhr, eds., Antijudaismus im Neuen Testament? Abhandlungen zum christlich-jüdischen Dialog, 2, 1967; W. Eichrodt, Israel in der Weissagung des Alten Testaments, 1951; W. Förster, Die jüdische Frage, 1959; J. B. Frey, Corpus Inscriptionum Judaicarum, 1958; V. Fritz, Israel in der Wüste, Marburger theologische Studien 7, 1970; L. Fuchs, Die Juden Ägyptens, 1924; K. Galling, Die Erwählungstradition Israels, 1928; A. George, "Israël dans l'oeuvre de Luc", RB 75, 1968, 481–525; G. Gerlemann, yisrā'ēl, THAT I 782–85; N. N. Glatzer, Geschichte der talmudischen Zeit, 1937; E. Grässer, "Die antijüdische Polemik im Johannesevangelium", NTS 10, 1964–65, 74–90; J. H. Grolle, Gesprek met Israël, 1949; M. Hengel, Die Zeloten, 1961; Israel und die Kirche. Eine Studie im Auftrag der General-Synode der Niederländischen Reformierten Kirche, 1961; and "Die Begegnung von Judentum und Hellenismus im Palästina der vorchristlichen Zeit", in O. Böcher and K. Haacker, eds., Verborum Veritas. Festschrift für Gustav Stählin, 1970, 329–48; J. Janssen, Juda in der Exilzeit, FRLANT 69, 1956; J. Juster, Les Juifs dans l'Empire Romain, 1914; H.-J. Kraus and R. R. Geis, eds., Versuche des Verstehens. Dokumente jüdisch-christlicher Begegnung aus den 1918–1933, 1966; H. Kremers, Das Verhältnis der Kirche zu Israel, 1964; M. Krupp, Vergesse ich dein Jerusalem, 1962; J. Leipoldt, Antisemitismus in der alten Welt, 1933; G. Lindeskog, Die Jesusfrage im neuzeitlichen Judentum, 1938; F. W. Marquardt, Die Juden im Römerbrief, TheolStud 107, 1971; W. D. Marsch and K. Thieme, Christen und Juden, 1961; W. Maurer, Kirche und Synagoge, 1953; O. Michel, "Spätjüdisches Prophetentum", in Neutestamentliche Studien für Rudolf Bultmann, 1954, 60 ff.; "Polemik und Scheidung", in Festschrift für W. Freytag, 1959, 185 ff.; "Das Judentum Jesu", Deutsches Pfarrerblatt 60, 1960, 465 ff.; Der Brief an die Römer, KEK 13, 1966[12]; and "Jesus der Jude", in H. Ristow and K. Matthiae, eds., Der historische Jesus und der kerygmatische Christus, 1962[2], 310–16; C. Müller, Gottes Gerechtigkeit und Gottes Volk. Eine Untersuchung zu Römer 9–11, FRLANT 86, 1964; M. Noth, Die israelitischen Personennamen im Rahmen der gemeinsemitischen Namengebung, 1928; and Das System der zwölf Stämme Israels, 1930; A. Oepke, Das neue Gottesvolk, 1950; G. von Rad, Das Gottesvolk im Deuteronomium, 1929; L. Ragaz, Israel, Judentum, Christentum, 1943[2]; G. Rosen, Juden und Phönizer, 1929; L. Rost, Israel bei den Propheten, 1937; and Die Vorstufen von Kirche und Synagoge im Alten Testament, 1938; H. H. Schaeder, Esra der Schreiber, 1930; A. Schlatter, Synagoge und Kirche bis zum Barkochba-Aufstand, 1966; R. Smend, "Zur Frage der altisraelitischen Amphiktyonie", EvTh 31, 1971, 623 ff.; G. Schrenk, Der göttliche Sinn in Israels Geschick, 1943; and "Was bedeutet 'Israel Gottes'?", Judaica 5, 1949, 81 ff.; M. Simon, Verus Israel, Étude sur les Relations entre Chrétiens et Juifs dans l'Empire Romain, 1948; V. Solovjov, Das Judentum und die christliche Frage, 1884; J. J. Stamm, Der Staat Israel und die Landverheissungen in der Bibel 1961[2]; P. Tillich, Die Judenfrage, ein christliches und ein deutsches Problem, 1953; W. Trilling, Das wahre Israel. Studien zur Theologie des Matthäus-Evangeliums, 1964[3]; T. C. Vriezen, Die Erwählung Israels nach dem Alten Testament, 1953; W. Zimmerli, Israel und die Christen, 1964.

J

Jerusalem

'Ιερουσαλήμ	'Ιερουσαλήμ (Ierousalēm), and 'Ιεροσόλυμα (Hierosolyma), Jerusalem; Σιών (Siōn), Zion.

CL Ierousalēm and Siōn are proper nouns, unknown in early secular Gk. The form Hierosolyma was used for the city in the Roman province of Judea and Hierosolymitēs for an inhabitant of Jerusalem by Strabo, Dio Cassius and Jewish Hel. writers like Philo and Josephus. Hel. Judaism of the dispersion took advantage of this rendering of the Heb. name to liken it to Gk. hieros, holy, in order to distinguish the city as the hiera polis of Judaism.

OT 1. The Israelites found Jerusalem as the name of the original Canaanite city-state (cf. Jos. 10:1) and took it over. The etymology has only recently been explained. This Canaanite name means something like "Foundation of Salem", i.e. of a god who, according to Ugaritic texts, embodied the twilight. His sanctuary was in this settlement, which originally was situated on the hill Zion. In later history Jerusalem remained the name of the whole of the expanding settlement. Even after David had seized it, the city retained its name. But it was also called City of David, a term which was later used only of the old city, however. Sometimes, therefore, Zion, Jerusalem and the City of David are synonymous (cf. 2 Sam. 5:6 ff.; 1 Ki. 8:1; 1 Chr. 11:4 ff.; 2 Chr. 5:2).

2. The etymology of the name Zion (Heb. ṣiyyôn) cannot be explained with certainty. Some think, on the basis of related Syr. and Arab. roots, that it is possible to discover the meaning barren mountain. A different etymological derivation might give the meaning mountain fortress, stronghold. All that is certain is that it derives from Canaan's pre-Israelite period and represents a description of the terrain, a geographical name. From the earliest times Zion was the name of the south-east hill, site of the original Jebusite fortress and of the ancient Canaanite settlement of Jerusalem (Jos. 10 and the historical reminiscence of Ezek. 16:2 ff.), which are referred to synonymously as early as the second millennium B.C. The name of the city in Jdg. 19:10 f. and 1 Chr. 11:4 is Jebus, derived from the proper noun Jebusite, the name also given to the inhabitants by the Amarna letters (1400–1350 B.C.). But the city never made this name its own, and it did not prevail.

3. (a) In the OT writings y^{e}rûšālayim occurs as the name of the city far more frequently than ṣiyyôn (660 times and 154 respectively). In the canonical texts the LXX transcribes the Heb. original as Ierousalēm (fem.) and in the Apocrypha occasionally as Hierosolyma (neut. plur.). While in the canonical texts, in accordance with the Heb. original, the inhabitants are described as enoikountes Ierousalēm (Isa. 5:3; Zech. 12:10), as hyioi Ierousalēm, sons of Jerusalem (Joel 3:6; cf. Zech.

9:9, thygater Ierousalēm, daughter of Jerusalem), we meet in the Apocrypha the new term Hierosolymitēs (e.g. Sir. 50:27; 4 Macc. 4:22; 18:25; cf. Mk. 1:5; Jn. 7:25).

(b) As a neutral city, belonging neither to Judah nor Israel and yet lying exactly between the two territories, Jerusalem was an ideal capital for King → David. Since he captured it with an army of mercenaries it remained independent, at the same time King David's private possession (cf. 2 Sam. 5:6–10).

M. Noth, however, sees the bringing of the ark of Yahweh into the temple in Jerusalem (2 Sam. 6) as the decisive act for the further significance of the city (M. Noth, The Laws in the Pentateuch and Other Studies, 1966, 29 ff., 132–44, 250–54). This act gave to the Jerusalem → temple the role of the old amphictyonic central sanctuary, which was to achieve very great importance in Israel's hopes for the future. Only the original transfer of the ark to the Jerusalem temple could explain why Jerusalem, a Canaanite city, with its peculiar independent position as seat of the Davidic dynasty, should become the cultic centre of → Israel. Even after the northern kingdom's break with the south, Jerusalem retained its central theological significance for both kingdoms (1 Ki. 12:27, 28). "Even though the sanctuary in Jerusalem became a cultic centre for the tribes on account of the presence of the Ark, this shrine itself became more and more a central holy place, gaining as such an importance of its own" (Noth, op. cit., 142). Yahweh of hosts, who once was enthroned above the ark (2 Sam. 6:2), is now the one "who dwells on Mount Zion" (Isa. 8:18), on the "mountain of the house of the Lord" (Isa. 2:2 f.; Mic. 4:1 f.).

G. Fohrer, on the other hand, disputes the continued influence of amphictyonic ideas (TDNT VII 302 ff.). After its transfer the ark no longer played an essential rôle and the recognition of Jerusalem by the Israelites (1 Ki. 12:26 ff.) was a Deuteronomistic construction or to be attributed to the annexation of Israel by Josiah (cf. Jer. 41:5).

Whatever the truth may be, in the early history of Israel Jerusalem, as the royal capital, was the centre of the political kingdom and honoured as such. As temple city of the centralized cult, the city was still a spiritual and religious centre, much visited even after the dissolution of the political unity. The holy city (Isa. 48:2; 52:1) became more and more the focus of theocratic hopes. Historical experiences, but also theological reflection, strengthened and extended the idea of the inviolability and indestructibility of the temple city (cf. Isa. 36 ff.; 2 Ki. 18 ff.; 2 Chr. 32; Jer. 7:4). During the exile, in particular, it was the embodiment of every longing (Ps. 137). From here it was only a short step to join the name of the city with eschatological expectations (Jer. 31:38 ff.). It was expected that Jerusalem would become the focus for the whole world, to which all the Gentiles would stream (Jer. 3:17), and which would then be called "a house of prayer for all peoples" (Isa. 56:7). In all this complex of ideas Jerusalem and Zion are frequently used together.

(c) When the prophets came to speak about the conditions which they themselves could observe in Jerusalem, however, a different picture was revealed. Jerusalem had fallen away from God and become a prostitute. The worship of idols and disregard of God's commandments were rife in the city. The kings and the citizens along with them were going their own political ways, unconcerned about the will of God (cf. the relevant passages in Isa., Jer., Mic., Ezek.). Hence, the prophets announced to the city the → judgment of God (cf. e.g. Jer. 6:22 ff.; Isa. 32:9 ff.), judgment which could not be prevented because the corrupt people would not turn and repent (Jer. 4:3 f.). Foreign peoples and kings would carry out the judgment, which would result in a cleansed and purified Jerusalem (Isa. 40). It was Yahweh's intention to do good to Jerusalem once again (Zech. 8:15), and at the end of the age the city "shall be holy and strangers shall never again pass through it" (Joel 3:17 [4:17 MT]). The eschatological Jerusalem was always thought of, however, only as an improved, renewed earthly city; never as supernatural and heavenly. Therefore the nations could go on pilgrimage to it and accept a new way of life (Isa. 2:2 ff.), and turn to Yahweh (Jer. 3:17). From Jerusalem streams of blessing would pour out into the world (Ezek. 47:1 ff.). From this sanctified city Yahweh would reign over the whole world (Isa. 24:23). Here would be his throne (Jer. 3:17).

4. (a) The name Siōn was at first not used by the Israelites. Only later did prophets and poets take up the name again. In so doing they extended or shifted its meaning. On the one hand, Zion together with Jerusalem could be applied to the whole expanded city, and Zion could be equated with Judah (e.g. Jer. 14:19; Ps. 69:35) and occasionally even with Israel (Isa. 46:13; Ps. 149:2). On the other hand, Zion was no longer reckoned as the south-east hill but included the north-east hill with the temple buildings on it (cf. Ps. 2:6; 20:2). Yahweh is God on Zion (Ps. 99:2; 135:21) and (according to Jer. 8:19) the Lord of hosts dwells on Mount Zion. The inhabitants of Zion (like the inhabitants of other cities) were called sons or daughters of Zion (e.g. 2 Ki. 19:21; Pss. 9:4; 149:2; Isa. 1:8; 3:16 f.; Zech. 9:9).

(b) If one examines the use of this loan-word one finds it particularly frequently where the emphasis is on the cultic location as a sacral focus where the presence of Yahweh is felt. "Going up to Zion" is the same thing as "going to the Lord" (Jer. 31:6). It is in Zion that Yahweh dwells (Ps. 9:11).

5. (a) The use of the names in early Judaism does not differ from that of the OT. Jerusalem/Zion was the beloved city, towards which one turned one's face, in whatever part of the world, during the daily times of prayer. One went there on pilgrimage, whenever possible at the great festivals, and wished to die and be buried there. Huge sums of money flowed to Jerusalem from the dispersion in the form of temple tax, with the help of which the sacrificial ritual was maintained.

(b) Eschatological ideas developed. Alongside the concept that the earthly city would be the scene of Yahweh's victory (2 Esd. 13:25 ff.; Sib. 3:663 ff.) there developed in the apocalyptic literature a belief in the heavenly, pre-existent Jerusalem (Syr.Bar. 4:2 ff.), descending to earth at the end of the age (2 Esd. 10:27, 54; 13:36). According to another conception, it remains in heaven as the place in which the righteous will eventually dwell (Sl.Enoch 55:2). The new Zion/Jerusalem will be of unimaginable beauty (Tob. 13:16 ff.), inhabited by vast multitudes (Sib. 5:251 f.), ruled over by God himself (Sib. 3:787); the focus of this gigantic city is the new temple, to which → gifts are brought (Tob. 13:10 f.).

NT 1. (a) In the NT the name Jerusalem occurs 139 times. As in the LXX we meet in the NT the two forms Ierousalēm (76 times) and Hierosolyma (63 times). While Matt., Luke (in Lk. and Acts) and Paul in Gal. use both forms, Mk. and Jn. use only the Hel. form, and Paul, on the contrary (in Rom. and 1 Cor.), Heb. and Rev. use only the transcribed Semitic form. The name is completely absent from the Pastoral and Catholic Epistles.

(b) The name Zion occurs only 7 times in the NT: Rom. 9:33 and 1 Pet. 2.6 (citing Isa. 28:16); Rom. 11:26 (citing Isa. 59:20; cf. Ps. 14:7). In Matt. 21:5 and Jn. 12:15, likewise citing the OT (cf. Zech. 9:9; Isa. 40:9; 62:11), we are dealing with the inhabitants who are addressed as the daughter of Zion. Only Heb. 12:22 and Rev. 14:1 use the name independently.

2. (a) In the Synoptics and Acts Jerusalem frequently denotes simply the place, in order to locate an event (Lk. 13:4), to name the starting point or destination of a journey (Lk. 10:30), or to emphasize the importance of an event because even the inhabitants of the capital have become aware of it (Mk. 1:5; Matt. 4:25; Lk. 6:17).

(b) However, a theologically significant idea is often linked with the use of the geographical name. To the theocratically minded Jew Jerusalem is God's choice as focus of the world. This theocratic conception means that it is not men but Yahweh alone who rules. He exercises his sovereignty through two institutions: the priesthood, or the Zadokite high priest, and the scribes, the Rabbis. Thus, according to Ps. 48:2, Jerusalem is "the city of the great King" (Matt. 5:35), where the temple stands in which the true and only valid sacrificial service can be maintained. Therefore, people go to Jerusalem (Lk. 2:22 ff.), to "the holy city" (Matt. 4:5; 27:53), because it is there that the house of God is situated (cf. Lk. 2:46, 49), which is indissolubly linked to the theocratic institution of the priesthood.

The other theocratic institution, the spiritual authority which knows and expounds the scriptures and therefore the will of God, is also situated in Jerusalem. The priests who supervise the correct performance of the ritual and the scribes who are responsible for the proper observance of the → law, are the representatives of these two establishments. Therefore "scribes from Jerusalem" appear in different parts of Palestine in the fulfilment of their duties (Mk. 3:22; 7:1).

(c) Because Jerusalem has this theocratic significance, it plays a decisive role in the events of the passion. Jesus had to go to Jerusalem in order to fulfil his mission there at the centre of the world of OT Jewish faith (Matt. 16:21; Lk. 9:31). There he confronted the two theocratic institutions: the priests as functionaries of the cult (cf. Lk. 19:45 ff.) and the scribes as keepers of the Mosaic tradition (Matt. 23). Therefore, it was not a matter of no significance where Jesus suffered, died, was buried and rose again. His sacrifice only made sense and was only effective in Jerusalem (Mk. 10:33 f.). But the paradox consists in the fact that the sacrifice was rejected by the theocratic institutions while accepted by God, as the accounts of the resurrection testify (cf. also Mk. 8:31). Hence, Jerusalem is once described as the home of the opponents of Jesus, who are seeking to kill him (Mk. 11:18). From the theological point of view, however, Jerusalem is the setting in which the institutions of the Jewish faith, the cult and the law, are taken up in Jesus' actions (Mk. 11:15–17) and teaching (Mk. 11:18) and are judged by God himself in the crucifixion. "As a place of prayer the temple should reflect the attitude that a man has nothing to achieve or offer to God; consequently it should be open to all men. In this way the whole principle of legalism is fully overcome" (E. Schweizer, The Good News according to Mark, 1971, 233).

3. Jerusalem is particularly important in the theology of Luke. "At the beginning (1:5–25) and at the end (24:53) [of Luke's Gospel] there are references to events which took place in the temple. The promise given to the ancient people of God is fulfilled in the history of Jesus and His Church. The true Israel assembles in the holy place" (E. Lohse, TDNT VII 331). Acts goes further in this direction, in that Jerusalem is the place which "links the history of Jesus with the beginning of that of the community, cf. Ac. 10:39; 13:27, 31" (E. Lohse, TDNT VII 335). Hence, Jesus' disciples, to whom he had appeared after his resurrection, remained at his express command in Jerusalem (Lk. 24:49, 52), to wait for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit (Acts 1:4; 2:1 ff.). In accordance with their commission they proclaimed the divine events to all peoples beginning from Jerusalem (Lk. 24:47; Acts 5:20 f.). They took over the functions both of the scribes and of the servants of the temple (Lk. 24:53; Acts 2:46; 3:1 ff.; 5:25, 42), by offering praise to God in the temple as the true daily sacrifice. The city remains the focus of the world and the city of God's people. The so-called apostolic council gathered within its walls (Acts 15:1 ff.; 21:18). Emissaries went out from Jerusalem (Acts 8:14; 11:22, 27) and returned there (19:21; 21:15).

4. One must mention, however, another train of thought in the Synoptics which corresponds to the OT prophetic message (see above OT 3 (c)) that Jerusalem is the evil city. It kills the messengers of God (Matt. 23:37 ff. par. Lk. 13:34 ff.). A prophet is nowhere more in danger than in Jerusalem (Lk. 13:33). The city does not recognize what belongs to its peace (Lk. 19:42). Its inhabitants have not wanted to be gathered (Matt. 23:37). Therefore, it comes under judgment (Lk. 19:43 f.) which will be carried out by means of foreign peoples (Lk. 21:20). Jerusalem will be destroyed (Matt. 23:38; Lk. 21:24). Therefore the discerning should weep (Lk. 23:28 ff.). The judgment of Jerusalem begins when the veil in the temple is torn in two (Matt. 27:51 par. Mk. 15:38) and the graves outside the city open (Matt. 27:52 f.). But something new arises from the ruins. Jesus will return to the destroyed city and be greeted with the cry which welcomes the messiah (Matt. 23:39, citing Ps. 118:26).

5. (a) In Jn. Jerusalem is not only the scene of the passion but also the place where Jesus reveals his → glory. Many deeds and miracles take place in the city. Jn. alone records that Jesus quite frequently came from Galilee to Jerusalem (2:13 ff.; 5:1 ff.; 7:10 ff.; 12:12 ff.). Finally, for Jn. Jerusalem is also the place where the change from the old to the new → covenant took place.

(b) Paul was born at Tarsus (Acts 21:39; 22:3), but revisited it after his conversion (Acts 9:30; 11:25). W. C. Van Unnik holds that Jerusalem was the scene of his boyhood and upbringing (Tarsus or Jerusalem: The City of Paul's Youth, 1962). For Paul too Jerusalem is the centre of Christendom but in a different sense from the Synoptics and Acts. The gospel went out from Jerusalem (Rom. 15:19), and has brought into being a new unity between Gentiles and Jews, the ekklēsia (cf. Eph. 2:14; → Church). Paul emphasizes his agreement with the apostolic council in Jerusalem (Gal. 2:1 ff.). But he does not view this as the highest authority. If he seeks out the apostles (cf. Gal. 1:18–20), it is out of brotherly love and respect; for they preceded him chronologically (Gal. 1:17 f.). But he received his commission and instructions like the others from the Lord himself (Gal. 1:1; 2:2). Because the Gentile Christians have received a share in the spiritual blessings of the original church in Jerusalem, it is natural for Paul that the Jerusalem church should be rendered "service in material blessings" in the form of financial help (Rom. 15:27).

The objection that this "service for Jerusalem" (v. 31) was a kind of tax corresponding to the Jewish temple tax is weakened by the fact that Paul expects only freewill gifts as each individual sees fit (1 Cor. 16:2; 2 Cor. 8:7 f.; 9:7). We must, rather, view this as, on the one hand, the legitimation of the Gentile Christian churches towards Jerusalem and, on the other hand, the external documentation of the interdependence of Gentile Christianity and the original Jerusalem church (cf. also 2 Cor. 8:14 f.; 9:12; → Poor, art. ptōchos NT 4(a)). On the place of Jerusalem in Paul's apostolic strategy and eschatological thinking see F. F. Bruce, "Paul and Jerusalem", TB 19, 1968, 3–25. Commenting on Rom. 11:26 (cf. Isa. 59:20 f.), "the Deliverer shall come out of Zion, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob", Bruce writes: "Not only did the gospel first go out into all the world from Jerusalem; Jerusalem (if this reading of Paul's language is correct) would be the scene of its glorious consummation" (op. cit., 25).

(c) In Rev. Jerusalem is described (albeit without mention of the name) as the historical scene of the passion (11:8) and as involved in the events of the end. As the wicked city ("which is allegorically called Sodom and Egypt") it will be "trampled over", while the temple and those who worship in it will be saved (11:1 ff.; cf. Lk. 21:24). In 14:1 the OT name for the temple hill, Mount Zion, is used and it is stated that at the end of the age the prophecy of Joel 2:32 (3:5 MT) will be fulfilled on Mount Zion.

6. Apart from the topographical uses of the name indicated so far, there also occurs in the NT the idea of the heavenly Jerusalem.

(a) In Gal. 4:26 Paul speaks of Jerusalem above (hē anō Ierousalēm) which, according to an allegorical interpretation, is the free woman who has given birth to believers (→ Abraham, arts. Sarra, Hagar and Isaak). In Jewish apocalyptic tradition heavenly Jerusalem was the pre-existent place where God's glory was always present. For Paul it was also the place of freedom from the law. This "Jerusalem above" forms a sharp contrast to "present Jerusalem" (hē nyn Ierousalēm), the earthly city which, equally on the basis of an allegory, is called the mother of unbelievers (v. 25; → Parable, art. parabolē NT 9).

(b) Heb. 12:22 speaks of Ierousalēm epouranios, heavenly Jerusalem, within which Mount Zion is situated. "But this place is not just the goal of the pilgrimage of the people of God which has no abiding city on earth (13:14). The community has already come to Zion, the heavenly Jerusalem. The new Jerusalem is the city in which the new diathēkē has been made through the blood of Jesus" (E. Lohse, TDNT VII 337; → Covenant).

(c) In Rev. 3:12; 21:2 "new Jerusalem" is described as a heavenly city. At the end of the age it will descend from heaven as the bride of the exalted Christ, and receive as its citizens all those who have been marked as conquerors (3:12). This beautiful city (21:2, 10 f.) which has descended to earth is of vast extent (v. 12 f.). But one thing is absent from it: the temple, "for its temple is the Lord God the Almighty and the Lamb" (v. 22). This view forms a contrast with Jewish expectation in which it is the temple which marks the focal point of heavenly Jerusalem.

→ David, → Israel, → Temple, → Solomon H. Schultz

(a). Y. Aharoni, The Land of the Bible: A Historical Geography, 1967; M. Avi-Yonah, Jerusalem, 1960; E. Bevan, Jerusalem under the High Priests, 1924; F. F. Bruce, "Paul and Jerusalem", TB 19, 1968, 3–25; M. Burrows, "Jerusalem", IDB II 843–66; G. Dalman, Sacred Sites and Ways: Studies in the Topography of the Gospels, 1935; L. Gaston, No Stone on Another: Studies in the Significance of the Fall of Jerusalem in the Synoptic Gospels, 1970; G. Fohrer and E. Lohse, Siōn, Ierousalēm etc. TDNT VII 292–338; R. Furneaux, The Roman Siege of Jerusalem, 1973; J. Jeremias, Jerusalem in the Time of Jesus, 1969; K. Kenyon, "Excavating Jerusalem", BA 27, 1964, 34–52; Jerusalem: Excavating 3000 Years of History, 1967; and Digging up Jerusalem, 1974; C. Kopp, The Holy Places of the Gospels, 1963, 249–417; J. Munck, "Paul and Jerusalem", Paul and the Salvation of Mankind, 1959, 182–308; A. Negev, ed., Archaeological Encyclopedia of the Holy Land, 1972; M. Noth, "Jerusalem and the Israelite Tradition", The Laws in the Pentateuch and Other Studies, 1966, 132–44; A. Parrot, The Temple of Jerusalem, 1957; J. B. Payne, "Jerusalem", ZPEB III 459–95; N. W. Porteous, "Jerusalem-Zion: the Growth of a Symbol", Living the Mystery, 1967, 93–111; J. M. Roberts, "The Davidic Origin of the Zion Tradition", JBL 92, 1973, 329 ff.; J. Simons, Jerusalem in the Old Testament, 1952; G. A. Smith, Jerusalem: The Topography, Economics and History from the Earliest Times to A.D. 70, I–II, 1908; A. Stöger, "Jerusalem", EBT II 409–19; W. C. van Unnik, Tarsus or Jerusalem: The City of Paul's Youth, 1962.

(b). A. Alt, "Jerusalems Aufsteig", ZDMG 1925, 1 ff.; R. Bach and W. Schmauch, "Jerusalem", EKL II 257 ff.; H. Bardtke, "Der Tempel von Jerusalem", TLZ 11, 1972, 801 ff.; E. Fascher, "Jerusalems Untergang in der urchristlichen und altkirchlichen Überlieferung", TLZ 89, 1964, 81 ff.; H. Gese, Vom Sinai zum Zion, 1974; H. Guthe, "Jerusalem", RE VIII 666–93; and Die griechisch-romischen Städte des Ostjordanlandes, 1918; J. Jeremias, "Lade und Zion", in H. W. Wolff, ed., Probleme biblischer Theologie. G. von Rad zum 70. Geburtstag, 1971; M. Join-Lambert, Jérusalem Isaraélite, Chrétienne, Musalmane, 1958; H. Kosmala, "Jerusalem", BHHW II 820 ff.; M. Krupp, Vergesse ich dein Jerusalem, 1962; E. Lohmeyer, Galiläa und Jerusalem, FRLANT 52, 1936; F. Maas and J. Weigelt, "Jerusalem", *RGG*³ III 593 ff.; T. Maertens, Jérusalem cité de Dieu, 1954; W. Schmauch, Orte der Offenbarung und der Offenbarungsort im Neuen Testament, 1956, 81–121; K. L. Schmidt, "Jerusalem als Urbild und Abbild", Eranos Jahrbuch 18, 1950, 207–48; J. Schreiner, Sion-Jerusalem, Jahwes Königssitz. Theologie der heiligen Stadt im Alten Testament, 1963; E. Stauffer, Jerusalem und Rom im Zeitalter Jesu Christi, 1957; O. H. Steck, Friedenvorstellungen im Alten Jerusalem, Psalmen, Jesaja, Deuterojesaja, 1972; L.-H. Vincent, "Les noms de Jérusalem", Memnon 6, 1913, 88–124; L.-H. Vincent and F.-M. Abel, Jérusalem Recherches de Topographie, d'archéologie et d'histoire, I Jérusalem antique, 1912; II Jérusalem nouvelle, 1914–24; L.-H. Vincent and A.-M. Stève, Jérusalem de l'Ancien Testament, I, Archéologie de la Ville, 1954; II–III Archéologie du Temple. Évolution historique et monumentale de la Ville, 1956.

Jesus Christ, Nazarene, Christian

The name Jesus Christ actually consists of a proper name, Jesus, and title, Christ, which are linked in a new and unique way. It is thus a formula which expresses the faith of the earliest Christians in Jesus of Nazareth as their Master and Lord, Saviour-King and the universal Redeemer promised by God to his people Israel. This formula achieved a permanent central significance for all subsequent generations of Christians as an appropriate statement of the object of their faith. In view of this, it is necessary to deal first with the name Jesus and the related historical and theological questions. We shall then turn to the title, Christ, ascribed to Jesus of Nazareth by his disciples, and finally focus on Jesus of Nazareth as the Christ.

Ἰησοῦς	Ἰησοῦς (Iēsous), Jesus.

OT Iēsous is the Gk. form of the OT Jewish name Yēšua', arrived at by transcribing the Heb. and adding an -s to the nom. to facilitate declension. Yēšua' (Joshua) seems to have come into general use about the time of the Babylonian exile in place of the older Yᵉhôšûa'. The LXX rendered both the ancient and more recent forms of the name uniformly as Iēsous. Joshua the son of Nun, who according to the tradition was Moses' successor and completed his work in the occupation of the promised land by the tribes of Israel, appears under this name (cf. Exod. 17:8–16; 24:13; 32:17; 33:11; Num. 11:27 ff.; 13:8; 14:6–9, 30–38; 27:18; 21 ff.; Deut. 31:3, 7, 8, 14 f., 23; 34:9; and the Book of Joshua. It is the oldest name containing the divine name Yahweh, and means "Yahweh is help" or "Yahweh is salvation" (cf. the vb. yāša', help, save). Joshua also appears in one post-exilic passage in the Heb. OT (Neh. 8:17) as Yēšua' the son of Nun, and not as in the older texts, Y^ehôšûa'.

Among Palestinian Jews and also among the Jews of the dispersion the name Jesus was fairly widely distributed in the pre-Christian period and in the early part of the Christian era. According to Aristeas 48 f. (2nd cent. B.C.; more exact dating disputed), it was borne by two of the Palestinian scholars who were engaged on the translation of the Heb. Pentateuch into Gk. in Alexandria. We are probably led further back still, chronologically, by Jesus ben Sirach, the author of the Book of Sirach (Ecclesiasticus) in the Apocrypha (cf. Sir. 50:27). The Jewish historian Flavius Josephus, who lived in the 1st cent. A.D. and came from a Palestinian priestly family, names no fewer than 19 bearers of the name Jesus in his voluminous writings in Gk. These come both from the ancient and the recent history of his people and about half were contemporaries of "Jesus the so-called Christ" whom he also mentions (Ant. 20, 9, 1). The name also occurs about this time, however, in numerous non-literary Jewish texts, among them inscriptions on graves (at Leontopolis or Tell el-Yehudieh north east of Cairo, ZNW 22, 1923, 283) and on ossuaries from the neighbourhood of Jerusalem. Some of these are written in Heb. or Aram., others in Gk. One Aram. example bears the name Yēšua' bar Y^ehôsēp̄, Joshua son of Joseph (E. L. Sukenik, Jüdische Gräber Jerusalems um Christi Geburt, 1931, 19 f., see also the illustrations).

NT 1. The NT readily fits into this picture which shows the name Jesus widely spread among the Jews at the time of Jesus of Nazareth and his disciples. Thus in Luke's genealogy of Jesus (3:29) it is borne by one of his ancestors, without the fact being noted as anything extraordinary. Col. 4:11 mentions a Jewish Christian Jesus, who according to the custom of the time and perhaps also as a Roman citizen bore a second non-Semitic name, Justus. In the light of what has already been said it is natural that Joshua should also appear in the NT as "Jesus" (Acts 7:45; Heb. 4:8). There are fairly clear indications that even Barabbas, the Zealot between whom and Jesus Pilate asked the people to choose, had Jesus as his first name. The textual tradition of Matt. 27:16 f. makes clear that the connection of the name with this man was felt at a relatively early period to be a difficulty; at least it is suppressed by the majority of MSS, including some ancient and valuable ones. Examples of similar interference with the original text can be seen, or are probable, in a whole range of other NT passages, among them those where the combined tradition no longer shows the name Jesus (cf. alongside Lk. 3:29; Acts 7:45; 13:6; Col. 4:11 especially Mk. 15:7; Phlm. 23 f.; cf. A. Deissmann, in G. K. A. Bell and A. Deissmann, eds., Mysterium Christi, 1930, 18 ff.). The motive here is clearly deep reverence for the name Jesus; it is felt that it can be permitted to no one other than Jesus as "the pioneer and perfecter of our faith" (Heb. 12:2). Reverence for the name Jesus had as its logical outcome – and that very rapidly – the almost general renunciation on the part of Christians of its further secular use. But it is no less significant that by the end of the 1st cent. the name Jesus had become uncommon as a personal name among the Jews too. In its place the OT name Y^ehôšûa' reappeared with a wide distribution, accompanied by Iasōn as the Gk. equivalent among the Jews of the dispersion among whom, in the course of assimilation, the name had already been taken up for a long time (cf. Aristeas 49; Josephus Ant. 12, 10, 6). In the same context belongs the fact that Talmudic Judaism soon accustomed itself, when it was obliged to name Jesus of Nazareth, to referring to him as Yešû and not as Yēšua'. Although the reason for this may lie in the purely external fact that the Christians referred to their Lord as Yešû (giving up the a' of the basic Heb. form), it is also an expression, not only of Jewish antipathy, but also of how far this name, among all names, had become unique to the Christians.

2. According to Matt. 1:21 and Lk. 1:31, Jesus' name was determined by heavenly instruction to the father (Matt.) or the mother (Lk.). Matt. in this context also gives an interpretation of the name Jesus. In passing, it describes the future task of Mary's son as to "save his people from their sins." This interpretation is certainly connected with the meaning of the name Y^ehôšua' (formed from the divine name and šua', from the root yš') which, as we have shown, has a continuing life in the Gk. Iēsous: "Yahweh is our help" or "Yahweh is our helper" (see M. Noth, Die israelitischen Personennamen im Rahmen der gemeinsemitischer Namengebung, 1928, 154). That the meaning of the name was thoroughly well known at this period is attested by the Alexandrian Jewish exegete and philosopher of religion, Philo, when he interprets Joshua's name as follows: Iēsous sōtēria kyriou, Jesus means salvation through the Lord (Mut.Nom. 121). Although OT passages like Ps. 31 (30 LXX):8; 130(129 LXX):8 may therefore have influenced the form of Matt.'s words in the narrowing of salvation to the forgiving of the people's sins, their originality is obvious: they attribute to Jesus what was formerly reserved for God. The same understanding of the name Jesus and a corresponding testimony probably lies behind Lk. 2:11, where the → angel of the Lord on the night of Jesus' birth announced him to the shepherds as sōtēr, saviour. In this regard one must not overlook the fact that it is particularly in Lk. that witness is borne to Jesus as the saviour of sinners (cf. Lk. 15) and that the angel's message (2:11) no doubt looks back to Lk. 1:76. In both places, each completely independent of the other, we have before us a very early christology, with a similar theological approach to Phil. 2:9. It is clear that as far as they are concerned the name Jesus already contains, in the form of a promise, what is later fulfilled in the title Lord applied to the risen and glorified Jesus of Nazareth for the salvation of all mankind. This is clearly something quite different from Barn. 12:8 ff. with its typological interpretation of certain traits in the biblical picture of Joshua with reference to Jesus of Nazareth, even though it is on the ground that both have the same name in Gk. In the former case we are in the presence of early kerygmatic tradition; in the latter of theological and apologetical reflection. K. H. Rengstorf

Ναζαρηνός

Ναζαρηνός (Nazarēnos), Ναζωραῖος (Nazōraios), Nazarene, from Nazareth.

1. Since there were many bearers of the name Jesus it was necessary to distinguish between them by means of some additional name. It is therefore quite within the bounds of the ordinary that Jesus is sometimes denoted in the gospels as the son of Joseph (Lk. 3:23; 4:22; Jn. 1:45; 6:42) or even as the son of Mary (Mk. 6:3). The latter is evidently after the death of Joseph. This form of distinction nevertheless may carry more local colouring. Alongside it and beyond it the designation of Jesus as Nazarēnos or Nazōraios achieved importance and lasting significance. In the textual tradition the two designations are sometimes mixed. This compels the conclusion that for the writers there was no difference in meaning between them. Nevertheless their juxtaposition requires a few comments.

2. Mk. consistently used Nazarēnos (1:24; 10:47 v.l. Nazōraios; 14:67; 16:6). Lk. 4:34 no doubt depends on Mk. 1:24 and the Gospel contains Nazarēnos at one other point in the material peculiar to itself (24:19 with v.l.). Otherwise, especially in Acts, Luke consistently uses Nazōraios (Lk. 18:37; Acts 2:22; 3:6; 4:10; 6:14; 22:8; 26:9) and by this procedure expresses the fact that for him the two words mean the same. Matt. (2:23; 26:71) and Jn. (18:5, 7; 19:19, i.e. only in the passion narrative) only have the second form. Apart from the Gospels and Acts, neither word occurs in the NT. As far as their sense is concerned, for Matt. (cf. 2:23 with 21:11), Luke (Acts 10:38) and Jn. (1:45) they clearly mean that the Jesus thus referred to came from Nazareth in Galilee. The geographical connection of the two words with Galilee is supported in different ways by Matt. 26:69; 26:71; and Acts 24:5; 1:11. As a term to denote Christians in Gk. areas (Acts 24:5), Nazōraios seems to have disappeared quite early in favour of Christianos (Acts 11:26), while it was retained in this sense in Jewish areas and survives today in Heb. noṣrî as a designation for one who believes in Jesus. There have been similar sounding terms for Christian elsewhere in the Near East from ancient times on. Nevertheless, they do not necessarily rest on the direct influence of Jewish Christian or even of Jewish tradition, but result from the fact that the Syrian church took over Nazōraios from NT Gk. as a loanword into its own language and passed it on to its non-Christian environment.

3. The linguistic connection of both words with the place name Nazaret, Nazareth or Nazara (Matt. 4:12; Lk. 4:16) in Matt., Lk. and Jn. has been frequently and strongly contested from M. Lidzbarski on. It is now clear that the thesis that Nazareth the place is a pure invention because a place name was necessary to correspond to Nazōraios in the Jesus tradition can no longer be entertained. The name has appeared as nṣrṯ initially in a Jewish inscription, probably from a synagogue, in Caesarea, dated from the period after Hadrian, so that there is at last a piece of early Jewish evidence for the existence of the place as a Jewish settlement (M. Avi-Yonah, "A List of Priestly Courses from Caesarea", Israel Exploration Journal 12, 1962, 137 ff.). But the philological derivation of Nazōraios from Nazareth by H. H. Schaeder, now also supported by Ruth Stiehl, still fails to find unanimous agreement. Recently a new root has been found for the use of Nazōraios in a piece of Haggadic theologizing, conceptually thoroughly refined, and connected on the one hand with Isa. 42:6 ff.; 49:6 ff. and on the other with Isa. 11:1. It is thought, to do justice to the facts, that on the one hand the word refers to Christians (they are those who are kept) and on the other to Jesus (he is the nēṣer, the "shoot from the stump" of Isa. 11 with all its implications for the future) (B. Gärtner).

Nevertheless, it should be regarded as methodologically questionable to wish to explain Nazōraios without reference to Nazarēnos. The most likely solution is that we have in both words the same assertion in the form of a derivation from nṣrt, the only difference being that in Nazarēnos we have a pure Gk. formation, whereas in Nazōraios an additional Aram. element is used which expresses belonging (cf. Ruth Stiehl).

But however the problem of the relationship of the two designations to the place name may or may not be resolved, the contexts almost unanimously reveal that both words in the NT have essential undertones of dissociation and at the same time contempt. The best commentary one can refer to is Nathaniel's rhetorical question to Philip, "Can anything good come out of Nazareth?" (Jn. 1:46). At all events, for all the witnesses, Jesus' origins in Nazareth are a sign of his lowliness. Nobody understood this as well or emphasized it as unmistakably as Jn., when in his account the description of Jesus as Nazōraios found its place in the inscription for his cross on the initiative of the Roman procurator (19:19). Here finally, so to speak, the reader's attention is once again drawn to the fact that Jesus' origins in a place without status or prestige in the surrounding world formed a glaring contrast to the claim with which he had appeared before them. K. H. Rengstorf

Χριστός

Χριστός (Christos), Christ; χρίω (chriō), spread, (in biblical Gk.) anoint; Μεσσίας (Messias), Messiah.

Christ is derived via the Lat. Christus from the Gk. Christos, which in the LXX and the NT is the Gk. equivalent of the Aram. mᵉšîḥā'. This in turn corresponds to the Heb. māšîaḥ and denotes someone who has been ceremonially anointed for an office (→ Anoint). The Gk. transliteration of mᵉšîḥā' is Messias, which like Iēsous is made declinable by the added -s. The word messiah, however, occurs only twice in the Gk. NT, only in Jn. 1:41; 4:25. On both occasions it is translated, no doubt by the evangelist himself, as Christos. On both occasions it refers to Jesus of Nazareth. The LXX does not use the foreign word but, like the NT (with the exception of the passages mentioned), consistently employs the corresponding Gk. word. The word, therefore, was not first coined by the Christians. In using it the NT authors and their sources were clearly taking over a word and concept which were already available and current in the pre-Christian period. This state of affairs is borne out by, among other things, the OT apocryphal and pseudepigraphal writings.

CL The Gk. word comes from chriein, to rub lightly, spread (over something) and requires, apart from its use in the NT, more precise information about what is used. It can be done with oil, as for example with a human body after bathing (as early as Homer), but also with poison, as in the preparation of arrows for battle (also Homer), paint, whitewash (cf. also however Jer. 22:14), or even cosmetics. Basically the word describes a thoroughly secular, everyday process, and has no sacral undertones at all. Naturally this is true for Gk. ears also of the verbal adj. christos derived from it. It characterizes an object or a person as rubbed or smeared with whitewash, cosmetics, paint etc., and in given cases anointed. It is anything but an expression of honour. Where it refers to people, it even tends towards the disrespectful. This is certainly the reason why, on the one hand, in non-Christian circles Christos, in its reference to Jesus, was soon confused with the Gk. name Chrēstos (pronounced Christos with long i), and why, on the other hand, the Jewish translator of the Bible, Aquila, thought it right in his Gk. version of the OT to render māšîaḥ or mᵉšîḥā', not by christos but by ēleimmenos from aleiphein which, unlike chriein, always means to → anoint. In any case, the meaning of the root is an essential condition for christos, as used of Jesus of Nazareth, to have been able so disproportionately quickly and so completely to acquire the character of a proper name. Nevertheless, one must not overlook in this connection the fact that the Heb. vb. māšaḥ, for which chriein is the LXX equivalent, seems to be fundamentally connected with fat or oil in the sense of to grease (with oil) (E. Kutsch, Salbung als Rechtsakt im Alten Testament und im alten Orient, BZAW 87, 1963, 9 f.).

OT 1. In the OT two office bearers are expressly described as māšîaḥ i.e. as anointed (with oil): the high priest as the one responsible for the official cult (→ Priest) and the → king. The reason for this pairing lies in the fact that in both cases the anointing, corresponding to its character as a legal act, is as essential for the conferring of the authority connected with the office as it is for the resulting responsibility before God as the God of Israel. However, only the figure of the king has to be reckoned as messianic in the sense of specific messianic expectation. This is not altered by the fact that in the documents from Qumran (on the basis of Zech. 4:1 ff., 11 ff.) there is once again talk of the coming of two men anointed of the Lord (see further below) and that in the NT picture of Jesus as messiah alongside the kingly features expressly priestly features are not lacking (→ Priest).

2. The expectation is ultimately related to the idea of the kingship and the sovereign kingly rule of God on the basis of the OT revealed faith. The varying judgments on the monarchy in 1 Sam. 8–11 notwithstanding, it is difficult not to come to the conclusion that the institution of the monarchy, when it came to it, binds on the king for the time being a special responsibility for the things of God. This is clear from the censures which the pious historians of the OT passed on individual kings of Israel or Judah, according to whether or not they had ruled and lived consistently with faith in God as the one true God. The crucial factor is no doubt the element of responsibility in the affairs of God on the basis of transferred power. This must be so if, after the Davidic kings to whom must be ascribed considerable significance for the development of the messianic expectation, like Saul before them, a foreigner such as the Persian king Cyrus (Isa. 45:1) can be described as God's anointed, i.e. māšîaḥ. He, like them, is one of God's chosen instruments in the pursuit of God's universal aim of the salvation of all people through the people he has made his own possession. Recognition of the divine freedom implied here is all the more essential, as the expectation of a messianic, kingly saviour figure was clearly associated from an early date with the tribe of Judah (Gen. 49:8 ff.).

A far-reaching influence on the development of the idea of the messiah as a historical figure of increasingly supernatural dimensions was the increasingly vivid memory of the magnificent and successful period of → David's rule, the first king from Judah (cf. Isa. 9:2–7 [MT 1–6]; 11:1 ff.; Mic. 5:2–6 [MT 1–5]). Whether and how far we have also to reckon with influence on the expectation from the pre-Davidic priest-kings of → Jerusalem, which David captured and made his capital (2 Sam.

5:6 ff.; 6:1 ff.), cannot be decided with certainty. Nevertheless, it may be acknowledged that there are certain "sacral" elements in the OT picture of the messiah, as in that of later Judaism, which would be best explained on this basis. However this may be, it cannot seriously be doubted that the dominant motif in the idea of the messiah is the kingly one, and that all other motifs are secondary to it.

3. It is all the more important to emphasize this because, with respect to the practice of anointing in Israel in the early period, it is necessary to make careful historical and terminological distinctions. According to recent investigations (especially those of E. Kutsch), although the anointing of the king and the anointing of the high priest (or originally of all the priests?) are similar in form, their life-setting was entirely different. The background of both was ancient oriental custom. Nevertheless, the anointing of the Judaic kings seems to have been (even and precisely when it was performed by representatives of the people; cf. 2 Sam. 2:4 ff.; 5:3) essentially associated with the gift and with the solemn ritual transfer of authority, power and honour (Heb. kāḇôḏ; Gk.; doxa; → Glory). The anointing gave the one anointed a position of power and the right to exercise it. It also brought him corresponding respect, together with honour and on occasion also wealth. On the other hand, there is much to support the idea that the anointing of the priests was first and foremost a cultic purification with the object of enabling the priests to conduct valid worship.

4. In this context it is worthwhile considering further the description of the Persian king Cyrus as the anointed of God (Isa. 45:1), even though he had clearly not been anointed as king in accordance with (Israelite) Judaic custom. We see here a sublimation of the concept which makes it independent of the external act by transferring the entire weight on to God's appointment of the one designated by the anointing. In this case the anointed one is no more and no less than the one chosen in a special way by God and placed under his command. God's anointed is thus dependent on God as well as integrated into his plan in obedience to his will. This helps to explain why the Judaic kings (contrary to the pattern of ancient sacral monarchies elsewhere) together with the OT Jewish messiah never themselves acquired divine features even in the so-called Enthronement Psalms, such as Pss. 2 and 110. As the Lord's anointed, they remained in their kingship as dependent on God as they were utterly responsible to him (cf. on Saul, 1 Sam. 12:3, 5; 24:6–11; cf. also 9:1 ff. with 15:10 ff.; on David, 2 Sam. 19:22; 23:1; cf. also 1 Sam. 16:1 ff. with 2 Sam. 11–12; on Zedekiah, Lam. 4:20; on Cyrus, see above). On the other hand, it follows from this that at any given moment the king, i.e. the actual reigning monarch of Judah from the house of David, can be introduced in the Pss. as God's anointed without further special explanation (Pss. 18:50; 20:6; 28:8; 84:9; 89:38, 51; 132:10, 17; cf. also 1 Sam. 2:10; Hab. 3:13). However, in this context also belongs the fact that → David (cf. 2 Sam. 3:18; 7:5), and his successors (→ Solomon, 1 Ki. 3:7 ff.; 8:28 ff.; later kings not mentioned by name Ps. 89:39; cf. Pss. 86:2, 4, 16; 143:2), and even a post-exilic claimant like Zerubbabel (Hag. 2:23; cf. Zech. 3:8) are called the → servants of God. This is thoroughly consistent with what has already been said. Son (Ps. 2:7; 89:26 f.) and servant, in so far as they serve to describe the relationship of the anointed one to God, are not mutually exclusive. From God's point of view they belong inseparably together. However, it must be stressed that, because in the text before us it is impossible to recognize kingly features, it is very difficult to give a precise answer to the question whether or not the Servant Songs (Isa. 43:1 ff.; 49:1 ff.; 50:4 ff.; 52:13 ff.) refer to a kingly figure as messiah. Hence, scholars are less and less inclined to allow an essential connection with the expectation of a future saviour king. They tend to explain them, as far as their original intention is concerned, in other ways (cf. → Son of God, art. pais theou). On the other hand, there is a basis for it in the idea of responsibility under the claims of God among his people if even a prophet like Elisha (1 Ki. 19:16; cf. however also Isa. 61:1) can appear in the ranks of the anointed, and if this idea as such persisted until the Christian era (1QM 11:7; CD 2:12 f.).

5. It has been rightly pointed out that the OT exhibits no clear developments of the messianic expectation. All that can be demonstrated is the presence of the expectation as such in the passages already referred to and in others extending via Jer. 23:5 ff. and Ezek. 34:23 f.; 37:24 f. (cf. 17:22 f.) to Haggai and Zechariah. Until this point they exhibit a strange uniformity. (The "branch of David" introduces a kind of golden age, but does it in the latter days, to a certain extent in the form of the establishing of the kingly rule of God.) It is not until the Hel. period that this is overtaken by a sharp materialization of the concept in the direction of the expectation of an eschatological Jewish national ideal ruler figure who would nonetheless transcend national frontiers. It seems that the colours at least in part were taken from the picture of the Maccabees and Hasmoneans and introduced into the older expectation orientated towards the memory of David. We see this most clearly in Pss. Sol. 17:21 ff.; 18:5 ff. Here the specific concept of the messiah also appears in fixed form. Significantly its association with the Davidic tradition did not have the result that the messiah could only be imagined as coming from the line of David. A notorious example of one who was no descendant of David is Simeon ben Kosebah, whom no less a person than the leading Rabbi Akiba greeted as Bar Kokhba, the "star out of Jacob" promised in Num. 24:17 and thus identified him as messiah (c. A.D. 132; T. J. Taanith 4:8:68d; 48 ff.; Euseb., H.E. 4, 6, 2; on Bar Kokhba see S. Abramsky in Encyclopaedia Judaica IV 227–39). His collapse, which severely shook messianism, may nevertheless have contributed to the fact that in Judaism's liturgical texts the hope of a messiah from the line of David has persisted to this day, even if the expectation as such has undergone drastic transformations. The latter, however, lie outside the scope of the present study.

6. However, the expectation of a Davidic messiah represents only one type of messianism in the period between the exile and A.D. 135. Altogether it took a variety of forms. It was influenced not only by → Moses (cf. Deut. 18:15 ff.) and → Elijah (Sir. 48:10; cf. K. H. Rengstorf, Das Evangelium nach Lukas, NTD 3^{15}, 1972, on Lk. 9:51 ff.) but also in apocalyptic texts and traditions (Eth.Enoch, 2 Esd.) by the idea of a son of man (cf. Dan. 7:13 ff.; → Son of God etc., art. hyios tou anthrōpou) as a bringer of salvation who is sometimes also thought of as preexistent. Even the expectation of a messianic high priest is not lacking. The brightness of this hope is reflected very impressively in the texts that have been found by the Dead Sea. It is they which leave no doubt that the messianic hope with which Jesus and the primitive church were faced was anything but unified and unambiguous. This is a fact of great significance for judging correctly what is represented in the NT as messianism.

NT 1. Christos in the NT (→ art. Iēsous). The decisive feature of the NT against the background of contemporary messianic expectation is summed up in the thesis that the combined NT witness to Jesus of Nazareth, however varied in details, is consciously christological. Wherever the NT is concerned with Jesus, it is concerned with him as Christ, i.e. as Messiah. This includes the fact that, for the whole of the NT, messianism no longer stands under the sign of expectation but under that of fulfilment. Everywhere the Christ event is spoken of in the perfect or past tense. The writings do indeed look into the future as well, sometimes very intensively. But the One who is awaited comes as the One who has already come. He is not someone unknown; he is as well known to those who await him as they are to him (cf. Jn. 10:14).

2. It is significant that the essential unity of the proclamation of Christ with the title messiah is established, objectively as well as subjectively, with the least ambiguity in the witness of John which, however, comes relatively late in the NT. It is attested particularly in Jn. 1:41 and 4:25. In both passages messiah and Christ are expressly equated (cf. OT 2 above). Both passages lead to the conclusion that we must ascribe to Palestinian Jews the fact that in the messiah the central concept in Jewish messianic expectation has become the possession of the developing Hel. church. It has found its way into the language of their worship and preaching, and has established itself there. No doubt the transmission of this faith came about through the transmission of confessional and catechetical summaries of the message about Jesus. These were originally formulated in Aram. or Heb. on the territory of the primitive church. Subsequently they were translated into Gk. as the mission to the Gk. churches extended beyond the boundaries of Palestinian Jewry. The best illustration of the process lies in 1 Cor. 15:1 ff. Here we have the text of the gospel which Paul had transmitted to the Corinthians and which he himself had previously received. Along with everything else we find Christos without the article. Despite many hesitations, this reference to the messiah without the def. art. must stem from the usage of contemporary Palestinian Jews (see further 1 Cor. 15:12 ff., 16 f., 20, 23; cf. Gal. 2:20 f.; 3:16; 5:1; 1 Cor. 5:7; Rom. 5:6, 8; 6:4, 9; 8:10, 34; and also 1 Pet. 2:21; 3:18; cf. K. H. Rengstorf, Die Auferstehung Jesu, 1967[5], 129 ff.). The influence of the LXX can be eliminated, for almost all that occurs there is the phrase christos kyriou, the Lord's, i.e. God's, anointed. Consequently, the Christian faith in Jesus, so far as it is expressed as faith in Christ, has to be traced back to the earliest Palestinian Christianity. In the Gk. churches, therefore, the word christos, when linked with Jesus, completed relatively quickly the transition from an adj., which it is essentially, to a proper name. And in the process it retained its traditional reference to Jesus' status. Therefore, wherever it appears, even as part of the name it refers to the majesty of Jesus.

3. The occurrence of Christos (without any art.) in the fragment of earlier kerygma taken up by Paul in 1 Cor. 15:3–5 gives us a glimpse of a unique fact. The tradition of the primitive church which may be seen here, certainly one of the oldest fragments of tradition in the whole of the NT, finds no contradiction between Jesus' violent death on the → cross (cf. 1:18 "For the word of the cross . . .") and the name of Christ ascribed to him. This is all the more remarkable, because it seemed natural to the contemporaries of the early Christians that the collapse of a messianic pretender was the decisive proof of the spuriousness of his own claims and of the hopes centred on him by his followers (cf. Acts 5:36 f. with Mk. 15:29 par. Matt. 27:17 and the later judgment of the "son of the star", Simeon ben Kosebah, as the "son of lies"). We find the same situation as in the fragment quoted in other pre-Pauline passages incorporated by the apostle into his own proclamation, e.g. Rom. 4:25 (where paredothē certainly refers to the death of Jesus and not to Judas' betrayal), or Rom. 3:25 (with its reference to Jesus' blood as a sin offering). To mention nothing else, the same line is followed by all four NT evangelists when they take over as part of the kerygma (most clearly in Jn. 18:36 f.; 19:19 ff.) the inscription on the cross (cf. Matt. 27:37; Mk. 15:26; Lk. 23:36). This was intended to expose Jesus as pseudo-king of the Jews, i.e. as pseudo-messiah, but the evangelists make it an involuntary proclamation of Jesus as messiah by his enemies, because that was what God willed. This is expressed in the kerygma with the help of the idea that Jesus, just because he was messiah/Christ, and not despite the fact, had to suffer and die. Thus God expressly determined things in this way with regard to Jesus' messiahship. This is attested by the primitive formula of Lk. 24:26, the predictions of suffering in the synoptic gospels (→ Suffer), the Johannine sayings of Jesus like Jn. 3:14; 12:34, and not least by Jesus' farewell discourse in Jn. (Jn. 14–16; see further below). The clear impression we receive from all these passages is that, when it represented itself as the community of Jesus, the primitive church intended to represent itself simply as the messianic community. For in its preaching of Jesus as messiah it was at the same time interpreting itself messianically in relation to its life, its historical origins and its aims. If at a relatively early date Christians began to consider themselves as the → Israel of God (Gal. 6:16), i.e. the true Israel, as distinct from Israel according to the → flesh (1 Cor. 10:18), the rational and spiritual roots for this lie in the messianism that has just been outlined. The messianism which was already to hand and which was linked with Jesus was, therefore, neither spiritualized nor re-interpreted. Rather, it was taken up and set out on a large scale. Paul attests the same for the Gk. churches when in 1 Cor. 15:25 he leaves the last event before the end in the form of the kingly rule of the Christ/messiah. Naturally further passages in the Synoptic Gospels which in any case were not intended for Jewish readers, form comparisons with Jesus as → king. Examples are the parable of the royal wedding (Matt. 22:1 ff.), the parable of the judgment of the world (Matt. 25:31 ff.: the Son of man is king, vv. 31, 34, 40), and also a saying like Lk. 22:25 f. which explains the particular nature of Jesus' kingship in terms of his disciples' self-sacrifice in the service of others.

The most surprising fact is the part played by Jesus' messiahship in the latest of the four Gospels, Jn. The crucial question throughout the whole book is always that of a correct understanding of Jesus' kingship, beginning with the conversation between Jesus and Nathanael (Jn. 1:47 ff.; but cf. before that 1:19 f., 41, 45) via 6:1 ff. and 12:12 ff. (to mention but two passages) to the dialogue between Pilate and Jesus (18:33 ff.) and that between Pilate and the chief priests (19:21 f.). In the discussion with the Samaritan woman Jesus discloses his messiahship (4:25 f.). One will not be mistaken if one recognizes in the solemn Iēsous Christos the confessional formula of John's own church (17:3; cf. 1:17; 20:31; cf. further 1 Jn. 2:22; 4:2; 5:1; 2 Jn. 7). In this formula the second word has lost nothing of its predicative character, and therefore ought really to be written with a small initial letter. Here the primitive christological inheritance is preserved in all its splendour and without any contraction. Jn. clearly lacks all the traditional illustrative material which characterizes the picture of Christ in Rev. (the lion of the tribe of Judah, 5:5; the shoot of David, 22:16; etc.). But that does not alter the fact that here too at the turn of the century full continuity in christology is maintained with the primitive Palestinian church. This was decisive for the impending attempts at conceptual formulations of the catholic faith in Christ.

